No. 72—985. The appellant in this appeal is the California Bankers Association, an association of all state and national banks doing business in California. The Association challenges the constitutionality of the recordkeeping provisions of Title I, as implemented by the regulations, on two grounds. First, the Association contends that the Act violates the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment because there is no rational relationship 43 between the objectives of the Act and the recordkeeping required, and because the Act places an unreasonable burden on the Association's member banks. Second, the Association contends that the recordkeeping requirements of Title I violate the First Amendment right of privacy and anonymity of the member banks' customers.

No. 72—1196. This appeal was filed on behalf of a number of plaintiffs in the original suit in the District Court: on behalf of the Security National Bank, on behalf of the American Civil Liberties Union as a depositor in a bank subject to the recordkeeping requirements, and as a representative of its bank customer members, and on behalf of certain bank customers. The appeal first challenges the constitutionality of the recordkeeping requirements of Title I of the Act and the implementing regulations, as does the appeal in No. 72—985, supra. Second, the appeal challenges the constitutionality of the foreign financial transaction reporting requirements of Title II of the Act and the implementing regulations. These recordkeeping and foreign reporting requirements are challenged on three grounds: first, that the requirements constitute an unreasonable search and seizure in violation of the Fourth Amendment; second, that the requirements constitute a coerced creation and retention of documents in violation of the Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination; and third, that the requirements violate the First Amendment rights of free speech and free association.

No. 72—1073. In this appeal, the Secretary of the Treasury, as appellant, challenges that portion of the District Court's order holding the domestic financial transaction reporting requirements of Title II to violate the Fourth Amendment. The Government contends *1509 that the District Court erred in holding these provisions of Title II to 44 be unconstitutional on their face, without considering the actual implementation of the statute by the Treasury regulations. The Government urges that since only those who violate these regulations may incur civil or criminal penalties, it is the actual regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, and not the broad authorizing language of the statute, which are to be tested against the standards of the Fourth Amendment; and that when so tested they are valid.

For convenience, we will refer throught the remainder of this opinion to the District Court plaintiffs as plaintiffs, since they are both appellants and appellees in the appeals filed in this Court.

III

We entertain serious doubt as to the standing of the plaintiff California Bankers Association to litigate the claims which it asserts here. Its complaint alleged that it is an unincorporated association consisting of 158 state and national banks doing busines in California. So far as appears from the complaint, the Association is not in any way engaged in the banking business, and is not even subject to the Secretary's regulations which it challenges. While the District Court found that the Association sued on behalf of its member banks, the Association's complaint contains no such allegation. The Association seeks to litigate, not only claims on behalf of its member banks, but also claims of injury to the depositors of its member banks. Since the Government has not questioned the standing of the Association to litigate the claims peculiar to banks, and more importantly since plaintiff Security National Bank has standing as an affected bank, and therefore determination of the Association's standing would in no way avoid resolution of any constitutional issues, we assume without deciding that 45 the Association does have standing. See Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 189, 93 S.Ct. 739, 746, 35 L.Ed.2d 201 (1973); Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 739, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 1368, 31 L.Ed.2d 636 (1972); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 428, 83 S.Ct. 328, 335, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963).

We proceed then to consider the initial contention of the bank plaintiffs that the recordkeeping requirements imposed by the Secretary's regulations under the authority of Title I deprive the banks of due process by imposing unreasonable burdens upon them, and by seeking to make the banks the agents of the Government in surveillance of its citizens. Such recordkeeping requirements are scarcely a novelty. The Internal Revenue Code, for example, contains a general authorization to the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe by regulation records to be kept by both business and individual taxpayers, 26 U.S.C. s 6001, which has been implemented by the Secretary in various regulations.[19] And this *1510 Court has been 46 faced with numerous cases involving similar recordkeeping requirements. Similar requirements imposed on the countless businesses subject to the Emergency Price Control Act during the Second World War were upheld in Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948), the Court observing that there was 'a sufficient relation between the activity sought to be regulated and the public concern so that the government can constitutionally regulate or forbid the basic activity concerned, and can constitutionally require the keeping of particular records, subject to inspection . . ..' Id., at 32, 68 S.Ct., at 1392. In United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 61 S.Ct. 451, 85 L.Ed. 609 (1941), the Court held that employers subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act could be required to keep records of wages paid and hours worked:

'Since, as we have held, Congress may require production for interstate commerce to conform to (wage and hour) conditions, it may require the employer, as a means of enforcing the valid law, to keep a record showing whether he has in fact complied with it.' Id., at 125, 61 S.Ct., at 462.

[2] [3] We see no reason to reach a different result here. The plenary authority of Congress over both interstate and foreign commerce is not open to dispute, and that body was not limited to any one particular approach to effectuate its concern that negotiable instruments moving in the channels of that commerce were significantly aiding criminal enterprise. The Secretary of the Treasury, authorized by Congress, concluded that copying and retention of certain negotiable instruments by the bank upon which they were drawn would facilitate the detection and apprehension of participants in such criminal 47 enterprises. Congress could have closed the channels of commerce entirely to negotiable instruments, had it thought that so drastic a solution were warranted; it could have made the transmission of the proceeds of any criminal activity by negotiable instruments in interstate or foreign commerce a separate criminal offense. Had it chosen to do the latter, under the precise authority of Darby or Shapiro, supra, it could have required that each individual engaging in the sending of negotiable instruments through the channels of commerce maintain a record of such action; the bank plaintiffs concede as much.[20]

[4] The bank plaintiffs contend, however, that the Act does not have as its primary purpose regulation of the banks themselves, and therefore the requirement that the banks keep the records is an unreasonable burden on the banks. Shapiro and Darby, which involved legislation imposing recordkeeping requirements in aid of substantive regulation, are therefore said not to control. But provisions requiring reporting or recordkeeping by the paying institution, rather than the individual who receives the payment, are by no means unique. The Internal Revenue Code and its regulations, for example, contain provisions which require businesses to report income payments to third parties (26 U.S.C. s 6041(a)), employers to keep records of certain payments made to employees (Treas.Reg. s 31.6001 et seq.), corporations to report dividend payments made to third parties (26 U.S.C. s 6042), cooperatives to report patronage dividend payments (26 U.S.C. s 6044), brokers to report customers' gains and losses (26 U.S.C. s 6045), and banks to report payments of interest made to depositors (26 U.S.C. s 6049).

48 In Darby an identifiable class of employer was made subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act, and in Shapiro an identifiable class of business had been *1511 placed under the Price Control Act; in each of those instances, Congress found that the purpose of its regulation was adequately secured by requiring records to be kept by the persons subject to the substantive commands of the legislation. In this case, however, Congress determined that recordkeeping alone would suffice for its purposes, and that no correlative substantive legislation was required. Neither this fact, nor the fact that the principal congressional concern is with the activities of the banks' customers, rather than with the activities of the banks themselves, serves to invalidate the legislation on due process grounds.

[5] [6] [7] The bank plaintiffs proceed from the premise that they are complete bystanders with respect to transactions involving drawers and drawees of their negotiable instruments. But such is hardly the case. A voluminous body of law has grown up defining the rights of the drawer, the payee, and the drawee bank with respect to various kinds of negotiable instruments. The recognition of such rights, both in the various States of this country and in other countries, is itself a part of the reason why the banking business has flourished and played so prominent a part in commercial transactions. The bank is a party to any negotiable instrument drawn upon it by a depositor, and upon acceptance or payment of an instrument incurs obligations to the payee. While it obviously is not privy to the background of a transaction in which a negotiable instrument is used, the existing wide acceptance and availability of negotiable instruments is of inestimable benefit to the banking industry as well as to commerce in general.

Banks are therefore not conscripted neutrals in transactions 49 involving negotiable instruments, but parties to the instruments with a substantial stake in their continued availability and acceptance. Congress not illogically decided that if records of transactions of negotiable instruments were to be kept and maintained, in order to be available as evidence under customary legal process if the occasion warranted, the bank was the most easily identifiable party to the instrument and therefore should do the recordkeeping. We believe this conclusion is consistent with Darby and Shapiro, and that there is a sufficient connection between the evil Congress sought to address and the recordkeeping procedure it required to pass muster under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.[21]

*1512 [8] 50 The bank plaintiffs somewhat halfheartedly argue, on the basis of the costs which they estimate will be incurred by the banking industry in complying with the Secretary's recordkeeping requirements, that this cost burden alone deprives them of due process of law. They cite no cases for this proposition, and it does not warrant extended treatment. In its complaint filed in the District Court, plaintiff Security National Bank asserted that it was an ‘insured’ national bank; to the extent that Congress has acted to require records on the part of banks insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or of financial institutions insured under the National Housing Act, Congress is simply imposing a condition on the spending of public funds. See, e.g., Steward Machine Co. v. Davis, 301 U.S. 548, 57 S.Ct. 883, 81 L.Ed. 1279 (1937); Helvering v. Davis, 301 U.S. 619, 57 S.Ct. 904, 81 L.Ed. 1307 (1937). Since there was no allegation in the complaints filed in the District Court, and since it is not contended here that any bank plaintiff is not covered by FDIC or Housing Act insurance, it is unnecessary to consider what questions would arise had Congress relied solely upon its power over interstate commerce to impose the recordkeeping requirements. The cost burdens imposed on the banks by the recordkeeping requirements are far from unreasonable, and we hold that such burdens do not deny the banks due process of law. [22]

[9] 51 The bank plaintiffs also contend that the recordkeeping requirements imposed by the Secretary pursuant to the Act undercut a depositor's right to effectively challenge a third-party summons issued by the Internal Revenue Service. See Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440, 84 S.Ct. 508, 11 L.Ed.2d 459 (1964); Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517, 91 S.Ct. 534, 27 L.Ed.2d 580 (1971); Couch v. United States, 409 U.S. 322, 93 S.Ct. 611, 34 L.Ed.2d 548 (1973). Whatever wrong such a result might work on a depositor, it works no injury on his bank. It is true that in a limited class of cases this Court has permitted a party who suffered injury as a result of the operation of a law to assert his rights even though the sanction of the law was borne by another, Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070 (1925), and conversely, the Court has allowed a party upon whom the sanction falls to rely on the wrong done to a third party in obtaining relief, Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U.S. 249, 73 S.Ct. 1031, 97 L.Ed. 1586 (1953); Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 31 L.Ed.2d 349 (1972). Whether the bank might in other circumstances rely on an injury to its depositors, or whether, instead, this case is governed by the general rule that one has standing only to vindicate his own rights, e.g., Moose Lodge v. Irvis, 407 U.S. 163, 166, 92 S.Ct. 1965, 1968, 32 L.Ed.2d 627 (1972), need not now be decided, since, in any event, the claim is premature. Claims of depositors against the compulsion 52 by lawful process of bank records involving the depositors' own transactions must wait until such process issues.

*1513 Certain of the plaintiffs below, appellants in No. 72—1196, including the American Civil Liberties Union, the Security National Bank, and various individual plaintiff depositors, argue that if 'the dominant purpose of the Bank Secrecy Act is the creation, preservation, and collection of evidence of crime . . . (i)t is against the standards applicable to the criminal law, then, that its constitutionality must be measured.' They contend that the recordkeeping requirements violate the provisions of the Fourth, Fifth, and First Amendments to the Constitution. At this point, we deal only with such constitutional challenges as they relate to the recordkeeping provisions of Title I of the Act.

[10] We see nothing in the Act which violates the Fourth Amendment rights of any of these plaintiffs. Neither the provisions of Title I nor the implementing regulations require that any information contained in the records be disclosed to the Government; both the legislative history and the regulations make specific reference to the fact that access to the records is to be controlled by existing legal process.

Plaintiffs urge that when the bank makes and keeps records under the compulsion of the Secretary's regulations it acts as an agent of the Government, and thereby engages in a 'seizure' of the records of its customers. But all of the records which the Secretary requires to be kept pertain to transactions to which the bank was itself a party. See United States v. Biswell, 406 U.S. 311, 316, 92 S.Ct. 1593, 32 L.Ed.2d 87 (1972). The fact that a large number of banks voluntarily kept records of this sort before they were required to do so by regulation is an indication that the records were thought useful to the bank in the conduct of its 53 own business, as well as in reflecting transactions of its customers. We decided long ago that an Internal Revenue summons directed to a third-party bank was not a violation of the Fourth Amendment rights of either the bank or the person under investigation by the taxing authorities. See First National Bank v. United States, 267 U.S. 576, 45 S.Ct. 231, 69 L.Ed. 796 (1925), aff'g 295 F. 142 (SD Ala.1924); Donaldson v. United States, supra, 400 U.S., at 522, 91 S.Ct., at 538. '(I)t is difficult to see how the summoning of a third party, and the records of a third party, can violate the rights of the taxpayer, even if a criminal prosecution is contemplated or in progress.' Id., at 537, 91 S.Ct., at 545 (Douglas, J., concurring).

[11] Plaintiffs nevertheless contend that the broad authorization given by the Act to the Secretary to require the maintenance of records, coupled with the broad authority to require certain reports of financial transactions, amounts to the power to commit an unlawful search of the banks and the customers. This argument is based on the fact that 31 CFR s 103.45, as it existed when the District Court ruled in the case, permitted the Secretary to impose additional recordkeeping or reporting requirements by written order or authorization; this authority has now been deleted from the regulation; [23] plaintiffs thus argue that the Secretary could order the immediate reporting of any records made or kept under the compulsion of the Act. We, of course, must examine the statute and the regulations as they now exist. Hall v. Beals, 396 U.S. 45, 48, 90 S.Ct. 200, 201, 24 L.Ed.2d 214 (1969) (per curiam); Thorpe v. Housing Authority, 393 U.S. 268, 281 n. 38, 89 S.Ct. 518, 526, 21 L.Ed.2d 474 (1969). Even if plaintiffs were correct in urging that we decide the case on the basis of the regulation as it existed at the time the District Court ruled, their contention would be without merit. Whatever the Secretary might have authorized 54 under the regulation, he did not in fact require the reporting of any records made or kept under the compulsion of the Act. Indeed, *1514 since the legislative history of the Act clearly indicates that records which it authorized the Secretary to require were to be available only by normal legal process, it is doubtful that the Secretary would have the authority ascribed to him by plaintiffs even under the earlier form of the regulation. But in any event, whether or not he had the authority, he did not exercise it, and in fact none of the records were required to be reported. Since we hold that the mere maintenance of the records by the banks under the compulsion of the regulations invaded no Fourth Amendment right of any depositor, plaintiffs' attack on the recordkeeping requirements under that Amendment fails.[24] That the bank in making the records required by the Secretary acts under the compulsion of the regulation is clear, but it is equally clear that in doing so it neither searches nor seizes records in which the depositor has a Fourth Amendment right.

[12] [13] [14] 55 Plaintiffs have briefed their contentions in such a way that we cannot be entirely certain whether their Fifth Amendment attack is directed only to the reporting provisions of the regulations, or to the recordkeeping provisions as well. To the extent that it is directed to the regulations requiring the banks to keep records, it is without merit. Incorporated banks, like other organizations, have no privilege against compulsory self-incrimination, e.g., Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43, 74—75, 26 S.Ct. 370, 378—379, 50 L.Ed. 652 (1906); Wilson v. United States, 221 U.S. 361, 382—384, 31 S.Ct. 538, 545—546, 55 L.Ed. 771 (1911); United States v. White, 322 U.S. 694, 699, 64 S.Ct. 1248, 1251, 88 L.Ed. 1542 (1944). Since a party incriminated by evidence produced by a third party sustains no violation of his own Fifth Amendment rights, Johnson v. United States, 228 U.S. 457, 458, 33 S.Ct. 572, 57 L.Ed. 919 (1913); Couch v. United States, 409 U.S., at 328, 93 S.Ct., at 615, the depositor plaintiffs here present no meritorious Fifth Amendment challenge to the recordkeeping requirements.

Plaintiff ACLU makes an additional challenge to the recordkeeping requirements of Title I. It argues that those provisions, and the implementing regulations, violate its members' First Amendment rights, since the provisions could possibly be used to obtain the identities of its members and contributors through the examination of the organization's bank records. This Court has recognized that an organization may have standing to assert that constitutional rights of its members be protected from governmentally compelled disclosure of their membership in the organization, and that absent a countervailing governmental interest, such information may not be compelled. NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488 (1958). See Pollard v. Roberts, 283 F.Supp. 248 (ED Ark.), aff'd per curiam, 393 U.S. 14, 89 S.Ct. 47, 21 L.Ed.2d 14 (1968).

[15] Those cases, however, do not elicit a per se rule that would forbid such disclosure in a situation where the governmental interest would override *1515 the associational 56 interest in maintaining such confidentiality. Each of them was litigated after a subpoena or summons had already been served for the records of the organization, and an action brought by the organization to prevent the actual disclosure of the records.[25] No such disclosure has been sought by the Government here, and the ACLU's challenge is therefore premature. This Court, in the absence of a concrete fact situation in which competing associational and governmental interests can be weighed, is simply not in a position to determine whether an effort to compel disclosure of such records would or would not be barred by cases such as NAACP v. Alabama, supra.[26] The threat to any First Amendment rights of the ACLU or its members from the mere existence of the records in the hands of the bank is a good deal more 57 remote than the threat assertedly posed by the Army's system of compilation and distribution of information which we declined to adjudicate in Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1, 92 S.Ct. 2318, 33 L.Ed.2d 154 (1972).

IV

We proceed now to address the constitutional challenges directed at the reporting requirements of the regulations authorized in Title II of the Act. Title II authorizes the Secretary to require reporting of two general categories of banking transactions: foreign and domestic. The District Court upheld the constitutionality of the foreign transaction reporting requirements of regulations issued under Title II; certain of the plaintiffs below, appellants in No. 72—1196, have appealed from the portion of the District Court's judgment, and here renew their contentions of constitutional infirmity in the foreign reporting regulations based upon the First, Fourth, and Fifth Amendments. The District Court invalidated the Act insofar as it authorized the Secretary to promulgate regulations requiring banks to report domestic transactions involving their customers, and the Government in No. 72—1073 appeals from that portion of the District Court's judgment.

As noted above, the regulations issued by the Secretary under the authority of Title II contain two essential reporting requirements with respect to foreign financial transactions. Chapter 3 of Title II of the Act, 31 U.S.C. ss 1101—1105, and the corresponding regulation, 31 CFR s 103.23, require individuals to report transportation of monetary instruments into or out of the United States, or receipts of such instruments in the United States from places outside the *1516 United States, if the instrument transported or received has a value in excess of $5,000. Chapter 4 of Title II of the Act, 31 U.S.C. ss 1121, 1122, and the corresponding regulation, 31 CFR s 103.24, generally 58 require United States citizens, residents, and businessmen to file reports of their relationships with foreign financial institutions.

The domestic reporting provisions of the Act as implemented by the regulations, in contrast to the foreign reporting requirements, apply only to banks and financial institutions. In enacting the statute, Congress provided in s 221, 31 U.S.C. s 1081, that the Secretary might specify the types of currency transactions which should be reported:

> ‘Transactions involving any domestic financial institution shall be reported to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and in such detail as the Secretary may require if they involve the payment, receipt, or tansfer of United States currency, or such other monetary instruments as the Secretary may specify, in such amounts, denominations, or both, or under such circumstances, as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe.’

Section 222 of the Act, 31 U.S.C. s 1082, authorizes the Secretary to require such reports from the domestic financial institution involved, from the parties to the transactions, or from both. In exercising his authority under these sections, the Secretary has promulgated regulations which require only that the financial institutions make the report to the Internal Revenue Service; he has not required any report from the individual parties to domestic financial transactions.[27] The applicable regulation, 31 CFR s 103.22, requires the financial institution to ‘file a report of each deposit, withdrawal, exchange of currency or other payment or transfer, by, through, or to such financial institution, which involves a transaction in currency of more than $10,000.’ The regulation exempts several types of currency transactions 59 from this reporting requirement, including transactions ‘with an established customer maintaining a deposit relationship with the bank, in amounts which the bank may reasonably conclude do not exceed amounts commensurate with the customary conduct of the business, industry or profession of the customer concerned.’ Ibid.

A. FOURTH AMENDMENT CHALLENGE TO THE FOREIGN REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

The District Court, in differentiating for constitutional purposes between the foreign reporting requirements and the domestic reporting requirements imposed by the Secretary, relied upon our opinion in United States v. United States District Court, 407 U.S. 297, 92 S.Ct. 2125, 32 L.Ed.2d 752 (1972), for the proposition that Government surveillance in the area of foreign relations is in some instances subject to less constitutional restraint than would be similar activity in domestic affairs. Our analysis does not take us over this ground.

[16] The plenary authority of Congress to regulate foreign commerce, and to delegate significant portions of this power to the Executive, is well established. C. & S. Air Lines v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 109, 68 S.Ct. 431, 435, 92 L.Ed. 568 (1948); Norwegian Nitrogen Products Co. v. United States, 288 U.S. 294, 53 S.Ct. 350, 77 L.Ed. 796 (1933). Plaintiffs contend that in exercising that authority to require reporting of previously described foreign financial transactions, Congress and the Secretary have abridged their Fourth Amendment rights.

The familiar language of the Fourth Amendment protects '(t)he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures . . ..' Since a statute requiring the filing and subsequent publication of a corporate tax return has been upheld against a Fourth Amendment challenge, *1517 Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107, 174—176, 31 S.Ct. 342, 358—359, 55 L.Ed. 389 (1911), reporting requirements are by no means 60 per se violations of the Fourth Amendment. Indeed, a contrary holding might well fly in the face of the settled sixty-year history of self-assessment of individual and corporate income taxes in the United States. This Court has on numerous occasions recognized the importance of the self-regulatory aspects of that system, and interests of the Congress in enforcing it:

'In assessing income taxes the Government relies primarily upon the disclosure by the taxpayer of the relevant facts. This disclosure it requires him of make in his annual return. To ensure full and honest disclosure, to discourage fraudulent attempts to evade the tax, Congress imposes sanctions. Such sanctions may confessedly be either criminal or civil.' Helvering v. Mitchell, 303 U.S. 391, 399, 58 S.Ct. 630, 633, 82 L.Ed. 917 (1938).

To the extent that the reporting requirements of the Act and the settled practices of the tax collection process are similar, this history must be overcome by those who argue that the reporting requirements are a violation of the Fourth Amendment. Plaintiffs contend, however, that Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746 (1886), establishes the invalidity of the foreign reporting requirement under the Fourth Amendment, and that the particular requirements imposed are so indiscriminate in their nature that the regulations must be deemed to be the equivalent of a general warrant of the kind condemned as obnoxious to the Fourth Amendment in cases such as Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 85 S.Ct. 506, 13 L.Ed.2d 431 (1965). We do not think these cases would support plaintiffs even if their contentions were directed at the domestic reporting requirements; in light of the fact that the foreign reporting requirements deal with matters in foreign commerce, we think plaintiffs' reliance on the cases to challenge those requirements must fail.

61 Boyd v. United States, supra, is a case which has been the subject of repeated citation, discussion, and explanation since the time of its decision 88 years ago. In Communist Party v. SACB, 367 U.S. 1, 81 S.Ct. 1357, 6 L.Ed.2d 625 (1961), the Court described the Boyd holding as follows:

'The Boyd case involved a statute providing that in proceedings other than criminal arising under the revenue laws, the Government could secure an order of the court requiring the production by an opposing claimant or defendant of any documents under his control which, the Government asserted, might tend to prove any of the Government's allegations. If production were not made, the allegations were to be taken as confessed. On the Government's motion, the District Court had entered such an order, requiring the claimants in a forfeiture proceeding to produce a specified invoice. Although the claimants objected that the order was improper and the statute unconstitutional in coercing self-incriminatory disclosures and permitting unreasonable searches and seizures, they did, under protest, produce the invoice, which was, again over their constitutional objection, admitted into evidence. This Court held that on such a record a judgment for the United States could not stand, and that the statute was invalid as repugnant to the Fourth and Fifth Amendments.' Id., at 110, 81 S.Ct., at 1417.

But the Boyd Court recognized that the Fourth Amendment does not prohibit all requirements that information be made available to the Government:

'(T)he supervision authorized to be exercised by officers of the revenue over the manufacture or custody of excisable articles, and the entries thereof in books required by law to be kept for their inspection, are necessarily excepted out of the category of 62 unreasonable searches and seizures.' 116 U.S., at 623—624, 6 S.Ct. at 528.

*1518 Stanford v. Texas, supra, involved a warrant issued by a state judge which described petitioner's home and authorized the search and seizure of 'books, records, pamphlets, cards, receipts, lists, memoranda, pictures, recordings and other written instruments concerning the Communist Party of Texas.' This Court found the warrant to be an unconstitutional general warrant, and invalidated the search and seizure conducted pursuant to it. Unlike the situation in Stanford, the Secretary's regulations do not authorize indiscriminate rummaging among the records of the plaintiffs, nor do the reports they require deal with literary material as in Stanford; the information sought is about commerce, not literature. The reports of foreign financial transactions required by the regulations must contain information as to a relatively limited group of financial transactions in foreign commerce, and are reasonably related to the statutory purpose of assisting in the enforcement of the laws of the United States.

[17] Of primary importance, in addition, is the fact that the information required by the foreign reporting requirements pertains only to commercial transactions which take place across national boundaries. Mr. Chief Justice Taft, in his opinion for the Court in Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 45 S.Ct. 280, 69 L.Ed. 543 (1925), observed:

'Travellers may be so stopped in crossing an international boundary because of national self protection reasonably requiring one entering the country to identify himself as entitled to come in, and his belongings as effects which may be lawfully brought in.' Id., at 154, 45 S.Ct., at 285.

This settled proposition has been reaffirmed as recently 63 as last Term in Almeida-Sanchez v. United States, 413 U.S. 266, 272, 93 S.Ct. 2535, 2539, 37 L.Ed.2d 596 (1973). If reporting of income may be required as an aid to enforcement of the federal revenue statutes, and if those entering and leaving the country may be examined as to their belongings and effects, all without violating the Fourth Amendment, we see no reason to invalidate the Secretary's regulations here. The statutory authorization for the regulations was based upon a conclusion by Congress that international currency transactions and foreign financial institutions were being used by residents of the United States to circumvent the enforcement of the laws of the United States. The regulations are sufficiently tailored so as to single out transactions found to have the greatest potential for such circumvention and which involve substantial amounts of money. They are therefore reasonable in the light of that statutory purpose, and consistent with the Fourth Amendment.

B. FOURTH AMENDMENT CHALLENGE TO THE DOMESTIC REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

The District Court examined the domestic reporting requirements imposed on plaintiffs by looking to the broad authorization of the Act itself, without specific reference to the regulations promulgated under its authority. The District Court observed:

'(A)lthough to date the Secretary has required reporting only by the financial institutions and then only of currency transactions over $10,000, he is empowered by the Act, as indicated above, to require, if he so decides, reporting not only by the financial institution, but also by other parties to or participants in transactions with the institutions and, further, that the Secretary may require reports, not only of currency transactions but of any transaction 64 involving any monetary instrument—and in any amount —large or small.' 347 F.Supp., at 1246.

The District Court went on to pose, as the question to be resolved, whether 'these provisions, broadly authorizing an executive agency of government to require financial institutions and parties (thereto) . . . to routinely report . . . the detail of almost every conceivable financial transaction . . . *1519 (are) such an invasion of a citizen's right of privacy as amounts to an unreasonable search within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment.' Ibid.

[18] Since, as we have observed earlier in this opinion, the statute is not self-executing, and were the Secretary to take no action whatever under his authority there would be no possibility of criminal or civil sanctions being imposed on anyone, the District Court was wrong in framing the question in this manner. The question is not what sort of reporting requirements might have been imposed by the Secretary under the broad authority given him in the Act, but rather what sort of reporting requirements he did in fact impose under that authority.

'Even where some of the provisions of a comprehensive legislative enactment are ripe for adjudication, portions of the enactment not immediately involved are not thereby thrown open for a judicial determination of constitutionality. 'Passing upon the possible significance of the manifold provisions of a broad statute in advance of efforts to apply the separate provisions is analogous to rendering an advisory opinion upon a statute or a declaratory judgment upon a hypothetical case.' Watson v. Buck, 313 U.S. 387, 402, 61 S.Ct. 962, 967, 85 L.Ed. 1416.' Communist Party v. SACB, 367 U.S., at 71, 81 S.Ct., at 1397.

The question for decision, therefore, is whether the regulations relating to the reporting of domestic transactions, 65 violations of which could subject those required to report to civil or criminal penalties, invade any Fourth Amendment right of those required to report. To that question we now turn.

The regulations issued by the Secretary require the reporting of domestic financial transactions only by financial institutions. United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 70 S.Ct. 357, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950), held that organizations engaged in commerce could be required by the Government to file reports dealing with particular phases of their activities. The language used by the Court in that case is instructive:

'It is unnecessary here to examine the question of whether a corporation is entitled to the protection of the Fourth Amendment. Cf. Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 66 S.Ct. 494, 90 L.Ed. 614. Although the 'right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized men,' Brandeis, J., dissenting in Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 471, at page 478, 48 S.Ct. 564, 570, 572, 72 L.Ed. 944, is not confined literally to searches and seizures as such, but extends as well to the orderly taking under compulsion of process, Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43, 70, 26 S.Ct. 370, 377, 50 L.Ed. 652, neither incorporated nor unincorporated associations can plead an unqualified right to conduct their affairs in secret. Hale v. Henkel, supra; United States v. White, 322 U.S. 694, 64 S.Ct. 1248, 88 L.Ed. 1542.

'While they may and should have protection from unlawful demands made in the name of public investigation, cf. Federal Trade Comm'n v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U.S. 298, 44 S.Ct. 336, 68 L.Ed. 696, corporations can claim no equality with individuals in the enjoyment of a right to privacy. Cf. United States v. White, supra. They are endowed with public attributes. They have a collective impact upon society, from 66 which they derive the privilege of acting as artificial entities. The Federal Government allows them the privilege of engaging in interstate commerce. Favors from government often carry with them an enhanced measure of regulation. (Citations omitted.) Even if one were to regard the request for information in this case as caused by nothing more than official curiosity, nevertheless law-enforcing agencies have a legitimate *1520 right to satisfy themselves that corporate behavior is consistent with the law and the public interest.' 338 U.S., at 651—652, 70 S.Ct., at 368.

[19] We have no difficulty then in determining that the Secretary's requirements for the reporting of domestic financial transactions abridge no Fourth Amendment right of the banks themselves. The bank is not a mere stranger or bystander with respect to the transactions which it is required to record or report. The bank is itself a party to each of these transactions, earns portions of its income from conducting such transactions, and in the past may have kept records of similar transactions on a voluntary basis for its own purposes. See United States v. Biswell, 406 U.S., at 316, 92 S.Ct., at 1596. The regulations presently in effect governing the reporting of domestic currency transactions require information as to the personal and business identity of the person conducting the transaction and of the person or organization for whom it was conducted, as well as a summary description of the nature of the transaction. It is conceivable, and perhaps likely, that the bank might not of its own volition compile this amount of detail for its own purposes, and therefore to that extent the regulations put the bank in the position of seeking information from the customer in order to eventually report it to the Government. But as we have noted above, 'neither 67 incorporated nor unincorporated associations can plead an unqualified right to conduct their affairs in secret.' United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, 338 U.S., at 652, 70 S.Ct., at 368.

[20] The regulations do not impose unreasonable reporting requirements on the banks. The regulations require the reporting of information with respect to abnormally large transactions in currency, much of which information the bank as a party to the transaction already possesses or would acquire in its own interest. To the extent that the regulations in connection with such transactions require the bank to obtain information from a customer simply because the Government wants it, the information is sufficiently described and limited in nature, and sufficiently related to a tenable congressional determination as to improper use of transactions of that type in interstate commerce, so as to withstand the Fourth Amendment challenge made by the bank plaintiffs. '(T)he inquiry is within the authority of the agency, the demand is not too indefinite and the information sought is reasonably relevant. 'The gist of the protection is in the requirement, expressed in terms, that the disclosure sought shall not be unreasonable.'' United States v. Morton Salt Co., supra, at 652—653, 70 S.Ct., at 369; see Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 208, 66 S.Ct. 494, 505, 90 L.Ed. 614 (1946).

In addition to the Fourth Amendment challenge to the domestic reporting requirements made by the bank plaintiffs, we are faced with a similar challenge by the depositor plaintiffs, who contend that since the reports of domestic transactions which the bank is required to make will include transactions to which the depositors were parties, the requirement that the bank make a report of the transaction violates the Fourth Amendment rights of the depositor. The complaint filed in the District Court by the ACLU and the depositors contains 68 no allegation by any of the individual depositors that they were engaged in the type of $10,000 domestic currency transaction which would necessitate that their bank report it to the Government. This is not a situation where there might have been a mere oversight in the specificity of the pleadings and where this Court could properly infer that participation in such a transaction was necessarily inferred from the fact that the individual plaintiffs allege that they are in fact ‘depositors.’ Such an inference can be made, for example, as to the recordkeeping provisions of Title I, which require the banks to keep various records of certain *1521 transactions by check; as our discussion of the challenges by the individual depositors to the recordkeeping provisions, supra, implicitly recognizes, the allegation that one is a depositor is sufficient to permit consideration of the challenges to the recordkeeping provisions, since any depositor would to some degree be affected by them. Here, however, we simply cannot assume that the mere fact that one is a depositor in a bank means that he has engaged or will engage in a transaction involving more than $10,000 in currency, which is the only type of domestic transaction which the Secretary's regulations require that the banks report. That being so, the depositor plaintiffs lack standing to challenge the domestic reporting regulations, since they do not show that their transactions are required to be reported.[28]

‘Plaintiffs in the federal courts ‘must allege some threatened or actual injury resulting from the putatively 69 illegal action before a federal court may assume jurisdiction.’ Linda R. S. v. Richard D., 410 U.S. 614, 617, 93 S.Ct. 1146, 1148, 35 L.Ed.2d 536 (1973). There must be a ‘personal stake in the outcome’ such as to ‘assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions.’ Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 204, 82 S.Ct. 691, 703, 7 L.Ed.2d 663 (1962). . . . Abstract injury is not enough. It must be alleged that the plaintiff ‘has sustained or is immediately in danger of sustaining some direct injury’ as the result of the challenged statute or official conduct. Massachusetts v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447, 488, 43 S.Ct. 597, 601, 67 L.Ed. 1078 (1923). The injury or threat of injury must be both ‘real and immediate,’ not ‘conjectural’ or ‘hypothetical.’ Golden v. Zwickler, 394 U.S. 103, 109—110, 89 S.Ct. 956, 960, 22 L.Ed.2d 113 (1969); Maryland Casualty Co. v. Pacific Coal & Oil Co., 312 U.S. 270, 273, 61 S.Ct. 510, 512, 85 L.Ed. 826 (1941); United Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 89—91, 67 S.Ct. 556, 564—565, 91 L.Ed. 754 (1947).' O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 493—494, 94 S.Ct. 669, 695, 38 L.Ed.2d 674 (1974) (footnote omitted).

We therefore hold that the Fourth Amendment claims of the depositor plaintiffs may not be considered on the record before us. Nor do we think that the California Bankers Association or the Security National Bank can vicariously assert such Fourth Amendment claims on behalf of bank customers in general.

[21] [22] The regulations promulgated by the Secretary require that a report concerning a domestic currency transaction involving more than $10,000 be filed only by the financial institution which is a party to the transaction; the regulations do not require a report from the customer. 31 CFR s 103.22; see 31 U.S.C. s 1082. Both the bank and depositor plaintiffs here argue that the regulations are constitutionally defective because they do not require 70 the financial institution to notify the customer that a report will be filed concerning the domestic currency transaction. Since we have held that the depositor plaintiffs have not made a sufficient showing of injury to make a constitutional challenge to the domestic reporting requirements, we do not address ourselves to the necessity of notice to those bank customers whose transactions must be reported. The fact that the regulations do not require the banks to notify the customer of the report violates no constitutional right of the banks, and the banks in any event are left free to adopt whatever *1522 customer notification procedures they desire.[29]

71 C. FIFTH AMENDMENT CHALLENGE TO THE FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

[23] The District Court rejected the depositor plaintiffs' claim that the foreign reporting requirements violated the depositors' Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination, and found it unnecessary to consider the similarly based challenge to the domestic reporting requirements since the latter were found to be in violation of the Fourth Amendment. The appeal of the depositor plaintiffs in No. 72—1196 challenges the foreign reporting requirements under the Fifth Amendment, and their brief likewise challenges the domestic reporting requirements as violative of that Amendment. Since they are free to urge in this Court reasons for affirming the judgment of the District Court which may not have been relied upon by the District Court, we consider here the Fifth Amendment objections to both the foreign and the domestic reporting requirements.

[24] As we noted above, the bank plaintiffs, being corporations, have no constitutional privilege against compulsory self-incrimination by virtue of the Fifth Amendment. Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43, 26 S.Ct. 370, 50 L.Ed. 652 (1906). Their brief urges that they may vicariously assert Fifth Amendment claims on behalf of their depositors. But since we hold infra that those depositor plaintiffs who are actually parties in this litigation are premature in asserting any Fifth Amendment claims, we do not believe that the banks 72 under these circumstances have standing to assert Fifth Amendment claims on behalf of customers in general.

The individual depositor plaintiffs below made various allegations in the complaint and affidavits filed in the District Court. Plaintiff Stark alleged that he was, in addition to being president of plaintiff Security National Bank, a customer of and depositor in the bank. Plaintiff Marson alleged that he was a customer of and depositor in the Bank of America. Plaintiff Lieberman alleged that he had repeatedly in the recent past transported or shipped one or more monetary instruments exceeding $5,000 in value from the United States to places outside the United States, and *1523 expected to do likewise in the near future. Plaintiffs Lieberman, Harwood, Bruer, and Durell each alleged that they maintained a financial interest in and signature authority over one or more bank accounts in foreign countries. This, so far as we can assertain from the record, is the sum and substance of the depositors' allegations of fact upon which they seek to mount an attack on the reporting requirements of regulations as violative of the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination granted to each of them by the Fifth Amendment.

Considering first the challenge of the depositor plaintiffs to the foreign reporting requirements, we hold that such claims are premature. In United States v. Sullivan, 274 U.S. 259, 47 S.Ct. 607, 71 L.Ed. 1037 (1927), this Court reviewed a judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, 15 F.2d 809 (1926), which had held that the Fifth Amendment protected the respondent from being punished for failure to file an income tax return. This Court reversed the decision below, stating:

‘As the defendant's income was taxed, the statute of course required a return. See United States v. Sischo, 262 U.S. 165, 43 S.Ct. 511, 67 L.Ed. 925. In the decision that this was contrary to the Constitution we are of opinion that 73 the protection of the Fifth Amendment was pressed too far. If the form of return provided called for answers that the defendant was privileged from making he could have raised the objection in the return, but could not on that account refuse to make any return at all. We are not called on to decide what, if anything, he might have withheld. Most of the items warranted no complaint. It would be an extreme if not an extravagant application of the Fifth Amendment to say that it authorized a man to refuse to state the amount of his income because it had been made in crime. But if the defendant desired to test that or any other point he should have tested it in the return so that it could be passed upon. He could not draw a conjuror's circle around the whole matter by his own declaration that to write any word upon the government blank would bring him into danger of the law.’ 274 U.S., at 263—264, 47 S.Ct., at 607—608.

[25] Here the depositor plaintiffs allege that they intend to engage in foreign currency transactions or dealings with foreign banks which the Secretary's regulations will require them to report, but they make no additional allegation that any of the information required by the Secretary will tend to incriminate them. It will be time enough for us to determine what, if any, relief from the reporting requirement they may obtain in a judicial proceeding when they have properly and specifically raised a claim of privilege with respect to particular items of information required by the Secretary, and the Secretary has overruled their claim of privilege. The posture of plaintiffs' Fifth Amendment rights here is strikingly similar to those asserted in Communist Party v. SACB, 367 U.S., at 105—110, 81 S.Ct., at 1415—1418. The Communist Party there sought to assert the Fifth Amendment claims of its officers as a 74 defense to the registration requirement of the Subversive Activities Control Act, although the officers were not at that stage of the proceeding required by the Act to register, and had neither registered nor refused to register on the ground that registration might incriminate them. The Court said:

'If a claim of privilege is made, it may or may not be honored by the Attorney General. We cannot, on the basis of supposition that privilege will be claimed and not honored, proceed now to adjudicate the constitutionality under the Fifth Amendment of the registration provisions. Whatever proceeding may be taken after and if the privilege is claimed will provide *1524 an adequate forum for litigation of that issue.' Id., at 107, 81 S.Ct., at 1416.

Plaintiffs argue that cases such as Albertson v. SACB, 382 U.S. 70, 86 S.Ct. 194, 15 L.Ed.2d 165 (1965), have relaxed the requirements of earlier cases, but we do not find that contention supported by the language or holding of that case. There the Attorney General had petitioned for and obtained an order from the Subversive Activities Control Board compelling certain named members of the Communist Party to register their affiliation. In response to the Attorney General's petitions, both before the Board and in subsequent judicial proceedings, the Communist Party members had asserted the privilege against self-incrimination, and their claims had been rejected by the Attorney General. A previous decision of this Court had held that an affirmative answer to the inquiry as to membership in the Communist Party was an incriminating admission protected under the Fifth Amendment. Blau v. United States, 340 U.S. 159, 71 S.Ct. 223, 95 L.Ed. 170 (1950). The differences then between the posture of the depositor plaintiffs in this case and that of petitioner in Albertson v. SACB, supra, are evident.

75 We similarly think that the depositor plaintiffs' challenges to the domestic reporting requirements are premature. As we noted above, it is not apparent from the allegations of the complaints in these actions that any of the depositor plaintiffs would be engaged in $10,000 domestic transactions with the bank which the latter would be required to report under the Secretary's regulations pertaining to such domestic transactions. Not only is there no allegation that any depositor engaged in such transactions, but there is no allegation in the complaint that any report which such a bank was required to make would contain information incriminating any depositor. To what extent, if any, depositors may claim a privilege arising from the Fifth Amendment by reason of the obligation of the bank to report such a transaction may be left for resolution when the claim of privilege is properly asserted.

Depositor plaintiffs rely on Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968), Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968), and Haynes v. United States. 390 U.S. 85, 88 S.Ct. 722, 19 L.Ed.2d 923 (1968), as supporting the merits of their Fifth Amendment claim. In each of those cases, however, a claim of privilege was asserted as a defense to the requirement of reporting particular information required by the law under challenge, and those decisions therefore in no way militate against our conclusion that depositor plaintiffs' efforts to litigate the Fifth Amendment issue at this time are premature.

D. PLAINTIFF ACLU's FIRST AMENDMENT CHALLENGE TO THE FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

[26] The ACLU claims that the reporting requirements with respect to foreign and domestic transactions invade its associational interests protected by the First Amendment. 76 We have earlier held a similar claim by this organization to be speculative and hypothetical when addressed to the recordkeeping requirements imposed by the Secretary. Supra, at 1514—1515. The requirement that particular transactions be reported to the Government, rather than that records of them be available through normal legal process, removes part of the speculative quality of the claim. But the only allegation found in the complaints with respect to the financial activities of the ACLU states that it maintains accounts at one of the San Francisco offices of the Wells Fargo Bank & Trust Company. There is no allegation that the ACLU engages with any regularity in abnormally large domestic currency transactions, transports or receives monetary instruments from channels of foreign commerce, or maintains accounts in financial institutions in foreign countries. Until there is some showing that the reporting requirements *1525 contained in the Secretary's regulations would require the reporting of information with respect to the organization's financial activities, no concrete controversy is presented to this Court for adjudication. O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S., at 493—494, 94 S.Ct., at 675.

V

[27] [28] [29] All of the bank and depositor plaintiffs have stressed in their presentations to the District Court and to this Court that the recordkeeping and reporting requirements of the Bank Secrecy Act are focused in large part on the acquisition of information to assist in the enforcement of the criminal laws. While, as we have noted, Congress seems to have been equally concerned with civil liability which might go undetected by reason of transactions of the type required to be recorded or reported, concern for the enforcement of the criminal law was undoubtedly prominant in the minds of the legislators who considered 77 the Act. We do not think it is strange or irrational that Congress, having its attention called to what appeared to be serious and organized efforts to avoid detection of criminal activity, should have legislated to rectify the situation. We have no doubt that Congress, in the sphere of its legislative authority, may just as properly address itself to the effective enforcement of criminal laws which it has previously enacted as to the enactment of those laws in the first instance. In so doing, it is of course subject to the strictures of the Bill of Rights, and may not transgress those strictures.[30] But the fact that a legislative enactment manifests a concern for the enforcement of the criminal law does not cast any generalized pall of constitutional suspicion over it. Having concluded that on the record in these appeals, plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for relief under the First, Fourth, and Fifth Amendments, and having concluded that the enactment in question was within the legislative authority of Congress, our inquiry is at an end.

On the appeal of the California Bankers Association in No. 72—985 from that portion of the judgment of the District Court upholding the recordkeeping requirements imposed by the Secretary pursuant to Title I, the judgment is affirmed. On the appeal of the bank and depositor plaintiffs in No. 72—1196 from that portion of the District Court's judgment upholding the recordkeeping requirements and regulations of Title I and the foreign reporting requirements imposed under the authority of Title II, the judgment is likewise affirmed. On the Government's 78 appeal in No. 72—1073 from that portion of the District Court's judgment which held that the domestic reporting requirements imposed under Title II of the Act violated the Constitution, the judgment is reversed. The cause is remanded to the District Court for disposition consistent with this opinion.

So ordered.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Mr. Justice POWELL, with whom Mr. Justice BLACKMUN joins, concurring.

I join the Court's opinion, but add a word concerning the Act's domestic reporting requirements.

The Act confers broad authority on the Secretary to require reports of domestic monetary transactions from the financial institutions and parties involved. 31 U.S.C. ss 1081 and 1082. The implementing regulations, however, require only that the financial institution 'file a report on each deposit, withdrawal, exchange of currency or other payment or transfer, by, through, or *1526 to such financial institution, which involves a transaction in currency of more than $10,000.' 31 CFR s 103.22 (italics added). As the Court properly recognizes, we must analyze plaintiffs' contentions in the context of the Act as narrowed by the regulations. Ante, at 1519. From this perspective, I agree that the regulations do not constitute an impermissible infringement of any constitutional right.

A significant extension of the regulations' reporting requirements, however, would pose substantial and difficult constitutional questions for me. In their full reach, the reports apparently authorized by the open-ended language of the Act touch upon intimate areas of an individual's personal affairs. Financial transactions can reveal much about a person's activities, associations, 79 and beliefs. At some point, governmental intrusion upon these areas would implicate legitimate expectations of privacy. Moreover, the potential for abuse is particularly acute where, as here, the legislative scheme permits access to this information without invocation of the judicial process. In such instances, the important responsibility for balancing societal and individual interests is left to unreviewed executive discretion, rather than the scrutiny of a neutral magistrate. United States v. United States District Court, 407 U.S. 297, 316—317, 92 S.Ct. 2125, 2136—2137, 32 L.Ed. 2d 752 (1972). As the issues are presently framed, however, I am in accord with the Court's disposition of the matter.

Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, dissenting.

I

The Court expresses a doubt that the California Bankers Association has standing to litigate the claims it asserts.

That doubt, however, should be dissipated by our decisions.

Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 739, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 1368, 31 L.Ed.2d 636, stated unequivocally that 'an organization whose members are injured may represent those members in a proceeding for judicial review.'

Appellants in No. 72—1196 are a national bank, a bank customer and depositor, a membership organization which is a customer of banks and receives money through banks for its members, a businessman who has engaged in and expects to engage in foreign financial transactions, and individuals having interests in or authority over foreign bank accounts. There can hardly be any doubt that these persons—at least the individuals and the membership organization—having standing. I think the same is true of the national bank in No. 72—1196 and the California Bankers Association in No. 72—985.

80 The claims the associations litigate in these cases are not only those of its members but also those of the depositors of those member banks. This will cost the banks, it is estimated, over $6 million a year. Certainly that is enough to give the banks standing. Moreover, they must spy on their customers. The Bank Secrecy Act requires banks to record and retain the details of their customers' financial lives. In Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070, the Court upheld the right of a representative litigant, a parochial school, to have standing to raise questions pertaining to the rights of parents, guardians, and children. See Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U.S. 249, 257, 73 S.Ct. 1031, 1035, 97 L.Ed. 1586. In Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 31 L.Ed.2d 349, we upheld that the standing of a distributor of contraceptives to assert rights of unmarried persons, since they were denied 'a forum in which to assert their own rights.' Id., at 446, 92 S.Ct., at 1034. The question of standing has been variously described. But the 'gist' of the question, we said in Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 204, 82 S.Ct., 691, 703, 7 L.Ed.2d 663, was whether the party has 'such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues.' There is that 'concrete *1527 adverseness' here; and that doubtless is the reason the Solicitor General does not raise the question which the Court now stirs.

II

The Act has as its primary goal the enforcement of the criminal law.[1] The recordkeeping requirements originated 81 according to Congressman Patman, author of the measure, with the Department of Justice and the Internal Revenue Service in response to two problems: (1) 'A trend was developing in the larger banks away from their traditional practices of microfilming all checks drawn on them.' 116 Cong.Rec. 16953. (2) As respects the identification of depositors, '(a) typical example might involve a situation where a person with a criminal reputation holds an account but does not personally make deposits or withdrawals.' Ibid.

The purpose of the Act was to give the Secretary of the Treasury 'primary responsibility' under Title II 'to see to it that criminals do not take undue advantage 82 of international trade and go undetected and unpunished.' Id., at 16954. He added 'I would be the first to admit that this legislation does not provide perfect crime prevention. However, it is felt that the legislation will substantially increase the risk of discovery of any criminal who undertakes to hide his activity behind foreign secrecy.' Id., at 16955.

The same purpose was reflected in the Senate. Senator Proxmire, the author of the Senate version of the bill, stated: '(T)he purpose of the bill is to provide law enforcement authorities with greater evidence of financial transactions in order to reduce the incidence of whitecollar crime.'[2] Id., at 32627.

Customers have a constitutionally justifiable expectation of privacy in the documentary details of the financial transactions reflected in their bank accounts. That wall is not impregnable. Our Constitution provides the procedures whereby the confidentiality of one's financial affairs may be disclosed.

A

First, as to the recordkeeping requirements,[3] their announced purpose *1528 is that they will have 'a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings,' 12 U.S.C. ss 1829b(a)(2), 1953(a). The duty of the bank or institution is to microfilm or otherwise copy every check, draft, or similar instrument drawn on it or presented to it for payment and to keep 83 a record of each one 'received by it for deposit or collection,' 12 U.S.C. ss 1829b(d)(1) and (2). The retention is for up to six years unless the Secretary determines that 'a longer period is necessary,' 12 U.S.C. s 1829b(g). The regulations[4] issued by the Secretary 84 show the depth and extent of the quicksand in which our financial institutions must now operate.[5]

It is estimated that a minimum of 20 billion checks—and perhaps 30 billion—will have to be photocopied and that the weight of these little pieces of paper will approximate 166 million pounds a year.[6]

*1529 It would be highly useful to governmental espionage to have like reports from all our bookstores, all our hardware 85 and retail stores, all our drugstores. These records too might be 'useful' in criminal investigations.

One's reading habits furnish telltale clues to those who are bent on bending us to one point of view. What one buys at the hardware and retail stores may furnish clues to potential uses of wires, soap powders, and the like used by criminals. A mandatory recording of all telephone conversations would be better than the recording of checks under the Bank Secrecy Act, if Big Brother is to have his way. The records of checks—now available to the investigators—are highly useful. In a sense a person is defined by the checks he writes. By examining them the agents get to know his doctors, lawyers, creditors, political allies, social connections, religious affiliation, educational interests, the papers and magazines he reads, and so on ad infinitum. These are all tied to one's social security number; and now that we have the data banks, these other items will enrich that storehouse and make it possible for a bureaucrat—by pushing one button—to get in an instant the names of the 190 million Americans who are subversives or potential and likely candidates.

It is, I submit, sheer nonsense to agree with the Secretary that all bank records of every citizen 'have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings.' That is unadulterated nonsense unless we are to assume that every citizen is a crook, an assumption I cannot make.

Since the banking transactions of an individual give a fairly accurate account of his religion, ideology, opinions, and interests, a regulation impounding them and making them automatically available to all federal investigative agencies is a sledge-hammer approach to a problem that only a delicate scalpel can manage. Where fundamental personal rights are involved—as is true when as here the 86 Government gets large access to one's beliefs, ideas, politics, religion, cultural concerns, and the like—the Act should be 'narrowly drawn' (Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 307, 60 S.Ct. 900, 905, 84 L.Ed. 1213) to meet the precise evil.[7] Bank accounts at times harbor criminal plans. But we only rush with the crowd when we vent on our banks and their customers the devastating and leveling requirements of the present Act. I am not yet ready to agree that America is so possessed with evil that we must level all constitutional barriers to give our civil authorities the tools to catch criminals.

Heretofore this Nation has confined compulsory recordkeeping to that required to monitor either (1) the recordkeeper, or (2) his business. Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 and United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 61 S.Ct. 451, 85 L.Ed. 609, are illustrative. Even then, as Mr. Justice Harlan writing for the Court said, they must be records that would 'customarily' be kept, have a 'public' rather than a private purpose, and arise out of an "essentially noncriminal and regulatory area of inquiry." *1530 Marchetti v. United States, supra, 390 U.S., at 57, 88 S.Ct., at 707.

Those requirements are in no way satisfied here, and yet there is saddled upon the banks of this Nation an estimated bill of over $6 million a year to spy on their customers.

87 B

Second, as to the reporting provisions of the Act, they require disclosure of two types of foreign financial transactions and relationships. One provision requires a report of transportation into or out of the country of monetary instruments exceeding $5,000.[8] Another requires parties to any transaction or relationship with 'a foreign financial agency' to make such reports or make and keep such records as the Secretary may require.[9] Civil[10] and criminal[11] penalties are sanctions behind these reporting provisions.

The Act also requires the Secretary to make the reported information concerning transactions 'available for a purpose consistent with the provisions of this chapter to any other department or agency of the Federal Government' upon request.[12] And to overcome any claims of self-incrimination it requires the grant of use immunity.[13]

88 As respects domestic transactions the Secretary established two reporting requirements. (1) Routine reports are, with some exceptions, required concerning any transaction of more than $10,000 in currency from each financial institution involved.[14] The signature of at least one principal party to the transaction is required.[15] (2) The Secretary at the time of the trial reserved the right to grant exemptions from the requirements, impose additional recordkeeping or reporting requirements authorized by statute, or otherwise modify, the requirements of this part.[16]

We said in Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 351—352, 88 S.Ct. 507, 511, 19 L.Ed.2d 576: 'What a person knowingly *1531 exposes to the public, even in his own home or office, is not a subject of Fourth Amendment protection. . . . But what he seeks to preserve 89 as private, even in an area accessible to the public, may be constitutionally protected.' As stated in United States v. White, 401 U.S. 745, 752, 91 S.Ct. 1122, 1126, 28 L.Ed.2d 453, the question is 'what expectations of privacy' will be protected by the Fourth Amendment 'in the absence of a warrant.' A search and seizure conducted without a warrant is per se unreasonable, subject to 'jealously and carefully drawn' exceptions, Jones v. United States, 357 U.S. 493, 499, 78 S.Ct. 1253, 1257, 2 L.Ed.2d 1514. One's bank accounts are within the 'expectations of privacy' category. For they mirror not only one's finances but his interests, his debts, his way of life, his family, and his civic commitments. There are administrative summonses for documents, cf. Camara v. Municipal Court, 387 U.S. 523, 87 S.Ct. 1727, 18 L.Ed.2d 930; See v. City of Seattle, 387 U.S. 541, 87 S.Ct. 1737, 18 L.Ed.2d 943. But there is a requirement that their enforcement receive judicial scrutiny and a judicial order, United States v. United States District Court, 407 U.S. 297, 313—318, 92 S.Ct. 2125, 2134—2137, 32 L.Ed.2d 752. As we said in that case, 'The Fourth Amendment does not contemplate the executive officers of Government as neutral and disinterested magistrates. Their duty and responsibility are to enforce the laws, to investigate, and to prosecute. . . . But those charged with this investigative and prosecutorial duty should not be the sole judges of when to utilize constitutionally sensitive means in pursuing their tasks. The historical judgment, which the Fourth Amendment accepts, is that unreviewed executive discretion may yield too readily to pressures to obtain incriminating evidence and overlook potential invasions of privacy and protected speech.' Id., at 317, 92 S.Ct., at 2136.

Suppose Congress passed a law requiring telephone companies to record and retain all telephone calls and make them available to any federal agency on request. Would we hesitate even a moment before striking it down? I think not, for we condemned in United States v. United States District Court 'the broad and unsuspected governmental 90 incursions into conversational privacy which electronic surveillance entails.' Id., at 313, 92 S.Ct., at 2135.

A checking account, as I have said, may well record a citizen's activities, opinion, and beliefs as fully as transcripts of his telephone conversations.

The Fourth Amendment warrant requirements may be removed by constitutional amendment but they certainly cannot be replaced by the Secretary of the Treasury's finding that certain information will be highly useful in 'criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings.' 12 U.S.C. s 1951(b).

We cannot avoid the question of the constitutionality of the reporting provisions of the Act and of the regulations by saying they have not yet been applied to a customer in any criminal case. Under the Act and regulations the reports go forward to the investigative or prosecuting agency on written request without notice to the customer. Delivery of the records without the requisite hearing of probable cause[17] breaches the Fourth Amendment.

*1532 I also agree in substance with my Brother BRENNAN's view that the grant of authority by Congress to the Secretary of the Treasury is too broad to pass constitutional muster. This legislation is symptomatic of the 91 slow eclipse of Congress by the mounting Executive power. The phenomenon is not brand new. It was reflected in Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 55 S.Ct. 837, 79 L.Ed. 1570. United States v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 88 S.Ct. 419, 19 L.Ed.2d 508, is a more recent example. National Cable Television Assn. v. United States, 415 U.S. 336, 94 S.Ct. 1146, 39 L.Ed.2d 370, and FPC v. New England Power Co., 415 U.S. 345, 94 S.Ct. 1151, 39 L.Ed.2d 383, are even more recent. These omnibus grants of power allow the Executive Branch to make the law as it chooses in violation of the teachings of Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 72 S.Ct. 863, 96 L.Ed. 1153, as well as Schechter, that lawmaking is a congressional, not an Executive, function.

Mr. Justice BRENNAN, dissenting.

I concur in Parts I and II—A of Mr. Justice DOUGLAS' opinion. As to the Act's foreign and domestic reporting requirements, however, I see no need to address the independent constitutional objections the plaintiffs below attempt to raise. The reporting requirements are inseparable from—and in some cases considerably broader than—the recordkeeping requirements. Thus, since in my view the recordkeeping provisions unconstitutionally vest impermissibly broad authority in the Secretary of the Treasury, see United States v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 269, 88 S.Ct. 419, 426, 19 L.Ed.2d 508 (1967) (Brennan, J., concurring in result), the reporting provisions, too, are invalid.

The symbiotic nature of the recordkeeping and reporting requirements is clearly manifested in the expressions of congressional purpose found in 12 U.S.C. s 1951(b) and 31 U.S.C. s 1051, which lay down blanket commands that 'records' and 'reports' be required where they 'have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings.'

One example of this interdependence may be found in 12 U.S.C. ss 1951—1953, which apply to 'any uninsured 92 bank or uninsured institution,' terms which are themselves not defined in the Act. Section 1953 authorizes the Secretary to require the keeping of 'any records or evidence of any type' so long as he may require them of insured banks. Section 1952 authorizes him to require 'the making of appropriate reports by uninsured banks or uninsured institutions of any type with respect to their ownership, control, and managements and any changes therein.' As appears from the legislative history, these provisions work in tandem, permitting the Secretary to detect instances of the use of sham or illegal transactions in which the institutional party is merely an alter ego of the customer it purportedly services. See S.Rep.No.91—1139, p. 3 (1970); Hearings on Foreign Bank Secrecy and Bank Records (H.R. 15073) before the House Committee on Banking and Currency, 91st Cong., 1st and 2d Sess., 10—14 (1969—1970). Neither provision would usefully aid the detection of such practices without the other.

Not only are the reporting and recordkeeping requirements functionally inseparable, but the reporting requirements impose additional requirements, thus adding to the power of the Secretary to invade individual rights. For instance, the reporting provisions for all transactions involving domestic financial institutions, 31 U.S.C. s 1081, authorizes the Secretary to require reports at any time and in any manner and detail, of any transaction that involves the 'payment, receipt, or transfer of United States currency, or such other monetary instruments as the Secretary may specify.' Although the Secretary has by regulation limited the meaning of 'monetary instruments,' 31 CFR s 103.11, and invoked the section only where the transaction involves more than $10,000, *1533 see 31 CFR s 103.22, this in no way alters the fundamental vice of the statute.

93 That vice, see concurring opinion in United States v. Robel, supra, is the delegation of power to the Secretary in broad and indefinite terms under a statute that lays down criminal sanctions and potentially affects fundamental rights. See Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 83 S.Ct. 631, 9 L.Ed.2d 584 (1963); Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 304—307, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903—905, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940). My view in Robel applies here:
'Formulation of policy is a legislature's primary responsibility, entrusted to it by the electorate, and to the extent Congress delegates authority under indefinite standards, this policy-making function is passed on to other agencies, often not answerable or responsive in the same degree to the people. '(S)tandards of permissible statutory vagueness are strict . . .' in protected areas. NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S., at 432, 83 S.Ct., at 337. 'Without explicit action by lawmakers, decisions of great constitutional import and effect would be relegated by default to administrators who, under our system of government, are not endowed with authority to decide them.' Greene v. McElroy, 360 U.S. 474, 507, 79 S.Ct. 1400, 1419, 3 L.Ed.2d 1377.' 389 U.S., at 276, 88 S.Ct., at 430.

In the case of the Bank Secrecy Act, also potentially involving First, Fourth, and Fifth Amendment rights of the vast majority of our citizenry, it exceeds Congress' constitutional power of delegation to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to require whatever reports and records he believes to be possessed of a 'high degree of usefulness' where the purpose is to further 'criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings.'

Mr. Justice MARSHALL, dissenting.

Although I am in general agreement with the opinions of my Brothers DOUGLAS and BRENNAN, I believe it important to set forth what I view as the essential issue in these cases.

94 The purposes of the recordkeeping requirements of the Bank Secrecy Act are clear from the language of the legislation itself—to require the maintenance of records which will later be available for examination by the Government in 'criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings.' See 12 U.S.C. ss 1829b(a)(2) and 1951(b). The maintenance of the records is thus but the initial step in a process whereby the Government seeks to acquire the private financial papers of the millions of individuals, businesses, and organizations that maintain accounts in banks and use negotiable instruments such as checks to carry out the financial side of their day-by-day transactions. In my view, this attempt to acquire private papers constitutes a search and seizure under the Fourth Amendment.

As this Court settled long ago in Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 622, 6 S.Ct. 524, 528, 29 L.Ed. 746 (1886), 'a compulsory production of a man's private papers to establish a criminal charge against him . . . is within the scope of the fourth amendment to the constitution . . ..' The acquisition of records in this case, as we said of the order to produce an invoice in Boyd, may lack the 'aggravating incidents of actual search and seizure, such as forcible entry into a man's house and searching amongst his papers . . .,' Id., at 622, 6 S.Ct., at 527, but this cannot change its intrinsic character as a search and seizure. We do well to recall the admonishment in Boyd, id., at 635, 6 S.Ct., at 535:

> 'It may be that it is the obnoxious thing in its mildest and least repulsive form; but illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way, namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure.'

By compelling an otherwise unwilling bank to photocopy the checks of its customers, *1534 the Government has as much of a hand in seizing those checks as if it had forced 95 a private person to break into the customer's home or office and photocopy the checks there. See Byars v. United States, 273 U.S. 28, 47 S.Ct. 248, 71 L.Ed. 520 (1927). Compare Burdeau v. McDowell, 256 U.S. 465, 41 S.Ct. 574, 65 L.Ed. 1048 (1921), with Lustig v. United States, 338 U.S. 74, 78—79, 69 S.Ct. 1372, 1373—1374, 93 L.Ed. 1819 (Frankfurter, J.). See also, Corngold v. United States, 367 F.2d 1 (CA9 1966). Our Fourth Amendment jurisprudence should not be so wooden as to ignore the fact that through micro-filming and other techniques of this electronic age, illegal searches and seizures can take place without the brute force characteristic of the general warrants which raised the ire of the Founding Fathers. See Entick v. Carrington, 19 How.St.Tr. 1029 (1765); Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 483—484, 85 S.Ct. 506, 510—511, 13 L.Ed.2d 431 (1965). As we emphasized in Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 88 S.Ct. 507, 19 L.Ed.2d 576 (1967), the absence of any physical seizure of tangible property does not foreclose Fourth Amendment inquiry. Id., at 352—353, 88 S.Ct., at 511—512. The Fourth Amendment 'governs not only the seizure of tangible items, but extends as well to the recording of oral statements . . ..' Id., at 353, 88 S.Ct., at 512. By the same logic, the Fourth Amendment should apply to the recording of checks mandated by the Act here. And such a massive and indiscriminate search and seizure, not only without a warrant but also without probable cause to believe that any evidence to be obtained is relevant to any investigation, is plainly inconsistent with the principles behind the Amendment. See Stanford v. Texas, supra, 379 U.S., at 485—486, 85 S.Ct., at 511—512; Katz v. United States, supra, 389 U.S., at 356—359, 88 S.Ct., at 514—515.

It is suggested that there is no seizure under the Fourth Amendment because the bank, which is required to create and maintain the record, is already a party to the transaction. See ante, at 1513. Surely this is irrelevant to the question of whether a Government search or seizure is involved. The fact that one has disclosed private papers to the bank, for a limited purpose, within the context of 96 a confidential customerbank relationship, does not mean that one has waived all right to the privacy of the papers. Like the user of the pay phone in Katz v. United States, who, having paid the toll, was 'entitled to assume that the words he utters into the mouthpiece will not be broadcast to the world,' 389 U.S., at 352, 88 S.Ct., at 512, so the customer of a bank, having written or deposited a check, has a reasonable expectation that his check will be examined for bank purposes only—to credit, debit or balance his account—and not recorded and kept on file for several years by Government decree so that it can be available for Government scrutiny. See United States v. First Nat. Bank of Mobile, 67 F.Supp. 616 (SD Ala.1946).

The majority argues that any Fourth Amendment claim is premature, since the Act itself only affects the keeping of records and in no way changes the law regarding acquisition of the records by the Government. I cannot agree. This attempt to bifurcate the acquisition of information into two independent and unrelated steps is wholly unrealistic. As the Government itself concedes, 'banks have in the past voluntarily allowed law enforcement officials to inspect bank records without requiring the issuance of a summons.' Brief for Appellees in Nos. 72—985 and 72—1196, p. 38 n. 19. Indeed, the Chief of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section of the Criminal Division of the Justice Department told a Senate Subcommittee in 1972 that access by the FBI to bank records without process occurs 'with some degree of frequency.' Hearings to amend the Bank Secrecy Act (S. 3814 and S. 3828) before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions of the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban *1535 Affairs, 92d Cong., 2d Sess., 114—115 (1972).

The plain fact of the matter is that the Act's recordkeeping requirement feeds into a system of widespread 97 informal access to bank records by Government agencies and law enforcement personnel. If these customers' Fourth Amendment claims cannot be raised now, they cannot be raised at all, for once recorded, their checks will be readily accessible, without judicial process and without any showing of probable cause, to any of the several agencies that presently have informal access to bank records.

The Government suggests that the Act does not in any way preclude banks from refusing to allow informal access and insisting on the issuance of legal process before turning over a customer's financial records. Such a refusal, however, even if accompanied by notice to the customer with an opportunity for him to assert his constitutional claims, comes too late, for the seizure has already taken place. By virtue of the Act's recordkeeping requirement, copies of the customer's checks are already in the bank's files and amenable to process. The seizure has already occurred, and all that remains is the transfer of the documents from the agent forced by the Government to accomplish the seizure to the Government itself. Indeed, it is ironic that although the majority deems the bank customers' Fourth Amendment claims premature, it also intimates that once the bank has made copies of a customer's checks, the customer no longer has standing to invoke his Fourth Amendment rights when a demand is made on the bank by the Government for the records. See ante, at 1513. By accepting the Government's bifurcated approach to the recordkeeping requirement and the acquisition of the records, the majority engages in a hollow charade whereby Fourth Amendment claims are to be labeled premature until such time as they can be deemed too late.

Nor can I accept the majority's analysis of the First Amendment associational claims raised by the American 98 Civil Liberties Union on behalf of its members who seek to preserve the anonymity of their financial support of the organization. The First Amendment gives organizations such as the ACLU the right to maintain in confidence the names of those who belong or contribute to the organization, absent a compelling governmental interest requiring disclosure. See NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488 (1958). See also Lamont v. Postmaster General, 381 U.S. 301, 85 S.Ct. 1493, 14 L.Ed.2d 398 (1965); Gibson v. Florida Legislative Investigation Comm'n, 372 U.S. 539, 83 S.Ct. 889, 9 L.Ed.2d 929 (1963); Louisiana ex rel. Gremillion v. NAACP, 366 U.S. 293, 81 S.Ct. 1333, 6 L.Ed.2d 301 (1961); Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479, 81 S.Ct. 247, 5 L.Ed.2d 231 (1960); Bates v. City of Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516, 80 S.Ct. 412, 4 L.Ed.2d 480 (1960); United States v. Rumely, 345 U.S. 41, 73 S.Ct. 543, 97 L.Ed. 770 (1953). It is certainly inconsistent with this long line of cases for the Government, absent any showing of need whatsoever, to require the bank with which the ACLU maintains an account to make and keep a microfilm record of all checks received by the ACLU and deposited to its account. The net result of this requirement, obviously, is an easily accessible list of all of the ACLU's contributors. And, given the widespread informal access to bank records by Government agencies, see supra, at 1534—1535, the existence of such a list surely will chill the exercise of First Amendment rights of association on the part of those who wish to have their contributions remain anonymous. The technique of examining bank accounts to investigate political organizations is, unfortunately, not rare. See, e.g., Pollard v. Roberts, 283 F.Supp. 248 (E.D.Ark.), aff'd per curiam, 393 U.S. 14, 89 S.Ct. 47, 21 L.Ed.2d 14 (1968); United States Servicemen's Fund v. Eastland, 159 U.S.App.D.C. 352, 488 F.2d 1252 (1973).

First Amendment freedoms are 'delicate and vulnerable' They need breathing *1536 space to survive. NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 433, 83 S.Ct. 328, 338, 9

L.Ed.2d 405 (1963). The threat of disclosure entailed in the existence of an easily accessible 99 list of contributors may deter the exercise of First Amendment rights as potently as disclosure itself. Cf. ibid. See also United States Servicemen's Fund v. Eastland, supra, 159 U.S.App.D.C., at 365—368, 488 F.2d, at 1265—1268. More importantly, however slight may be the inhibition of First Amendment rights caused by the bank's maintenance of the list of contributors, the crucial factor is that the Government has shown no need, compelling or otherwise, for the maintenance of such records. Surely the fact that some may use negotiable instruments for illegal purposes cannot justify the Government's running roughshod over the First Amendment rights of the hundreds of lawful yet controversial organizations like the ACLU. Congress may well have been correct in concluding that law enforcement would be facilitated by the dragnet requirements of this Act. Those who wrote our Constitution, however, recognized more important values.

I respectfully dissent.

All Citations

416 U.S. 21, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 39 L.Ed.2d 812, 33 A.F.T.R.2d 74-1041, 74-1 USTC P 9318, 1974-1 C.B. 393

Footnotes

[*] The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

[1] See generally S.Rep.No.91—1139 (1970); H.R.Rep.No.91—975 (1970), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1970, p. 4394; Hearings on Foreign Bank Secrecy and Bank Records (H.R. 15073) before the House Committee on Banking and Currency, 91st Cong., 1st and 2d Sess. (1969—1970); Hearings on Foreign Bank Secrecy (S. 3678 and H.R. 15073) before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. (1970).

[2] See n. 11, infra.

[3] Under s 123(b), 12 U.S.C. s 1953(b), the authority of the Secretary extends to any person engaging in the business of:
‘(1) Issuing or redeeming checks, money orders, travelers' checks, or similar instruments, except as an incident to the conduct of its own nonfinancial business.
‘(2) Transferring funds or credits domestically or internationally.
‘(3) Operating a currency exchange or otherwise dealing in foreign currencies or credits.
‘(4) Operating a credit card system.
‘(5) Performing such similar, related, or substitute functions for any of the foregoing or for banking as may be specified by the Secretary in regulations.’
Section 122 of the Act, 12 U.S.C. s 1952, authorizes theSecretary to require reports with respect to the ownership, control, and management of uninsured domestic financial institutions.

[4] See House Hearings, supra, n. 1, at 60—61, 80, 146, 162, 314, 316, 321, 333; S.Rep.No. 91—1139, supra, at 18—19 (Supplemental views).

[5] For a summary of the task force study, see Hearings to amend the Bank Secrecy Act (S. 3814 and S. 3828) before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions of the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, 92d Cong., 2d Sess., 60—64 (1972). The Secretary initially issued regulations on April 5, 1972 implementing the provisions of the Act. See 31 CFR pt. 103 (37 Fed.Reg. 6912). The Treasury Department task force found that law enforcement would not be greatly impaired by limiting the check-copying requirement to checks in excess of $100. In Assistant Secretary of the Treasury estimated that this exclusion would eliminate 90% of all personal checks from the microfilming requirements. Senate Hearings on S. 3814, supra, at 42, 44, 57—58. The regulations were thus amended shortly after their promulgation to exclude the copying of checks drawn for $100 or less. 31 CFR s 103.34(b)(3), as amended, 37 Fed.Reg. 23114 (1972), 38 Fed.Reg. 2174 (1973), effective Jan. 17, 1973.

[6] Exempted by 31 CFR s 103.34(b)(3) are dividend checks, payroll checks, employee benefit checks, insurance claim checks, medical benefit checks, checks drawn on governmental agency accounts, checks drawn by brokers or dealers in securities, checks drawn on fiduciary accounts, checks drawn on other financial institutions, and pension or annuity checks, provided they are drawn on an account expected to average at least one hundred checks per month.

[7] Title 31 CFR s 103.34(b) requires that each bank retain either the original or a microfilm or other copy or reproduction of (1) documents granting signature authority over accounts; (2) statements or ledger cards showing transactions in each account; (3) each item involving more than $10,000 remitted or transferred to a person, account, or place outside the United States; (4) a record of each remittance or transaction of funds, currency, monetary instruments, checks, investment securities, or credit, of more than $10,000 to a person, account, or place outside the United States; (5) each check or draft in an amount exceeding $10,000 drawn on or issued by a foreign bank which the domestic bank has paid or presented to a nonbank drawee for payment; (6) each item of more than $10,000 received directly from a bank, broker, or dealer in foreign exchange outside the United States; (7) a record of each receipt of currency, monetary instruments, checks, or investment securities, and each transfer of funds or credit in amounts exceeding $10,000 received directly from a bank, broker, or dealer in foreign exchange outside the United States; (8) records needed to reconstruct a demand deposit account and to trace checks in excess of $100 deposited in such account.

Title 31 CFR s 103.35 requires brokers and dealers in securities to maintain similar information with respect to their brokerage accounts.

The prescribed retention period for all records under the regulations is five years, except for the records required for reconstructing a demand deposit account, which must be retained for only two years. 31 CFR s 103.36(c).

[8] Title 31 CFR s 103.51 provides:

'Except as provided in ss 103.34(a)(1) and 103.35(a)(1), and except for the purpose of assuring compliance with the recordkeeping and reporting requirements of this part, this part does not authorize the Secretary or any other person to inspect or review the records required to be maintained by subpart C of this part. Other inspection, review or access to such records is governed by other appliable law.'

This regulation became effective January 17, 1973. 37 Fed.Reg. 23114 (1972); 38 Fed.Reg. 2174 (1973).

[9] 'Monetary instrument' is defined by s 203(l) of the Act as 'coin and currency of the United States, and in addition, such foreign coin and currencies, and such types of travelers' checks, bearer negotiable instruments, bearer investment securities, bearer securities, and stock with title passing upon delivery, or the equivalent thereof, as the Secretary may by regulation specify for the purposes of the provision of this title to which the regulation relates.' 31 U.S.C. s 1052(l).

[10] The form provided by the Treasury Department for the reporting of these transactions is Form 4790 (Report of International Transportation of Currency or Monetary Instruments). See Motion to Affirm on behalf of the United States in No 72—985, App. C, pp. 29—30. The report must identify the person required to file the report, his capacity, and the identity of persons for whom he acts, and must specify the amounts and types of monetary instruments, the method of transportation, and, if applicable, the name of the person from whom the shipment was received.

[11] In issuing these regulations, the Secretary relied upon the authority of two statutory provisions: (1) the Trading with the Enemy Act, 40 Stat. 411, as amended by s 2, Act of Mar. 9, 1933, 48 Stat. 1, and by s 301, First War Powers Act, 1941, 55 Stat. 839, see 12 U.S.C. s 95a (1940 ed., Supp. V); and (2) s 251 of the Revised Statutes, 31 U.S.C. s 427.

[12] The previous regulations promulgated by the Secretary, see 31 CFR s 102.1 (1949), 10 Fed.Reg. 6556, originally mentioned transactions involving $1,000 or more in denominations of $50 or more, or $10,000 or more in any denominations. In 1952, the former amount was raised to $2,500 in denominations of $100 or more. See 17 Fed.Reg. 1822, 2306. When these regulations were revised in 1959 to simplify the reporting form, the Secretary noted the great value of the reports to law enforcement. See Treasury Release No. A—590, Aug. 3, 1959, included in the Jurisdictional Statement for the United States in No. 72—1073, App. E, pp. 127—130.

[13] The proper interpretation of this section is a source of dispute in these appeals. See n. 29, infra.

[14] 'Currency' is defined in the Secretary's regulations as the 'coin and currency of the United States or of any other country, which circulate in and are customarily used and accepted as money in the country in which issued. It includes U.S. silver certificates, U.S. notes and, Federal Reserve notes, but does not not include bank checks or other negotiable instruments not customarily accepted as money.' 31 CFR s 103.11.

[15] The form prescribed by the Secretary, see 31 CFR s 103.25(a), for the reporting of the domestic currency transactions is Treasury Form 4789 (Currency Transaction Report). See Jurisdictional Statement for the United States in No. 72—1073, App. D, p. 121. Form 4789 requires information similar to that required by the previous Treasury reporting form, see n. 12, supra, including (1) the name, address, business or profession and social security number of the person conducting the transaction; (2) similar information as to the person or organization for whom it was conducted; (3) a summary description of the nature of the transaction, the type, amount, and denomination of the currency involved and a description of any check involved in the transaction; (4) the type of identification presented; and (5) the identity of the reporting financial institution.

The regulations also provide that the names of all customers whose currency transactions in excess of $10,000 are not reported on Form 4789 must be reported to the Secretary on demand. 31 CFR s 103.22.

16 Transactions with Federal Reserve Banks or Federal Home Loan Banks, or solely with or originated by financial institutions or foreign banks, are also excluded from these reporting requirements. 31 CFR s 103.22.

17 Section 212 of the Act, 31 U.S.C. s 1061, authorizes the Secretary to provide by regulation for the availability of information provided in the reports required by the Act to other departments and agencies of the Federal Government. Pursuant to this authority, the Secretary has promulgated 31 CFR s 103.43, which provides:

'The Secretary may make any information set forth in any report received pursuant to this part available to any other department or agency of the United States upon the request of the head of such department or agency, made in writing and stating the particular information desired, the criminal, tax or regulatory investigation or proceeding in connection with which the information is sought and the official need therefor. Any information made available under this section to other departments or agencies of the United States shall be received by them in confidence, and shall not be disclosed to any person except for official purposes relating to the investigation or proceeding in connection with which the information is sought.'

The last sentence of this regulation was added by an amendment, see 37 Fed.Reg. 23114 (1972); 38 Fed.Reg. 2174 (1973), effective Jan. 17, 1973.

18 Title 31 CFR s 103.45(a) provides:

'The Secretary, in his sole discretion, may by written order or authorization make exceptions to or grant exemptions from the requirements of this part. Such exceptions or exemptions may be conditional or unconditional, may apply to particular persons or to classes of persons, and may apply to particular transactions or classes of transactions. They shall, however, be applicable only as expressly stated in the order of authorization, and they shall be revocable in the sole discretion of the Secretary.'

When originally promulgated, this regulation additionally gave the Secretary the authority to 'impose additional recordkeeping or reporting requirements authorized by statute, or otheriwise modify, the requirements of' the Act. 37 Fed.Reg. 6915 (1972). The amendment to the present form became effective January 17, 1973. 37 Fed.Reg. 23114 (1972); 38 Fed.Reg. 2174 (1973).

19 See, e.g., Treas.Reg. s 1.368—3 (records to be kept by taxpayers who participate in tax-free exchanges in connection with a corporate reorganization); s 1.374—3 (records to be kept by a railroad corporation engaging in a tax-free exchange in connection with a railroad reorganization); s 1.857—6 (real estate investment trusts must keep records of stock ownership); s 1.964—3 (shareholders must keep records of their interest in a controlled foreign corporation); s 1,1101—4 (records to be kept by a stock or security holder who receives stock or securities or other property upon a distribution made by a qualified bank holding corporation); s 1.1247—5 (foreign investment company must keep records sufficient to verify what taxable income it may have); s 1.6001—1 (all persons liable to tax under subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code shall keep records sufficient to establish gross income, deductions, and credits); s 31.6001 et seq. (requirements that various employers keep records of withholding under the Railroad Retirement Tax Act and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act); ss 45.6001—2 to 45.6001—4 (records to be kept by manufacturers of butter and cheese); ss 46.6001—2 (records to be kept by manufacturers of sugar); s 46.6001—4 (records to be kept by persons paying premiums on policies issued by foreign insurers). Treas.Reg. s 301.7207—1 provides for criminal penalties for willful delivery or disclosure to the Internal Revenue Service of a document known by the person disclosing it to be false as to any material matter.

20 Brief for Appellant California Bankers Association in No. 72—985, p. 25.

21 Congress had before it ample testimony that the requirement that banks reproduce checks and maintain other records would significantly aid in the enforcement of federal tax, regulatory, and criminal laws. See House Hearings, supra, n. 1, at 151, 322, 359; Senate Hearings, supra, n. 1, at 61—68, 175, 230, 250—255, 282. While a substantial portion of the checks drawn on banks in the United States may never be of any utility for law enforcement, tax or regulatory purposes, the regulations do limit the check-copying requirement to checks in excess of $100. 31 CFR ss 103.34(b)(3) and (4). This $100 exception was added to the regulations since this litigation was instituted, see n. 5, supra; in reviewing the judgment of the District Court in this case, we look to the statute and the regulations as they now stand, not as they once did. Hall v. Beals, 396 U.S. 45, 48, 90 S.Ct. 200, 201, 24 L.Ed.2d 214 (1969) (per curiam); Thorpe v. Housing Authority, 393 U.S. 268, 281 n. 38, 89 S.Ct. 518, 526, 21 L.Ed.2d 474 (1969).

The California Bankers Association contends that the $100 exception is meaningless since microfilm cameras cannot discriminate between checks in different amounts. There was, however, testimony during the House Hearings that an additional step could be added to the check-handling procedures to sort out those checks not required to be copied, and that many banks have equipment that can sort checks on a dollar-amount basis. House Hearings, supra, n. 1, at 322, 359. In any event, it is clear that the Act and regulations do not require banks to microfilm all checks, which some banks have traditionally done, but instead leave the decision to the banks. Given the fact that the cost burden placed on the banks in implementing the recordkeeping requirements of the statute and regulations is also a reasonable one, see n. 22, infra, we do not think that the recordkeeping requirements are unreasonable.

[22] The only figures in the record as to the cost burden placed on the banks by the recordkeeping requirements show that the Bank of America, one of the largest banks in the United States, with 997 branches, $29 billion in deposits, and a net income in excess of $178 million (Moody's Bank and Finance Manual 633—636 (1972)), expended $392,000 in 1971, including start-up costs, to comply with the microfilming requirements of Title I of the Act. Affidavit of William Ehler, App. 24—25.

The hearings before the House Committee on Banking and Currency indicated that the cost of making microfilm copies of checks ranged from 1 1/2 mills per check for small banks down to about 1/2 mill or less for large banks. See House Hearings, supra, n. 1, at 341, 354—356; H.Rep.No.91—975, supra, at 11. The House Report further indicates that the legislation was not expected to significantly increase the costs of the banks involved since it was found that many banks already followed the practice of maintaining the records contemplated by the legislation.

[23] See n. 18, supra.

[24] Chapter 4 of the Act, s 241, 31 U.S.C. s 1121, authorizes the Secretary to require by regulation the maintenance of records by persons who engage in any transaction or maintain a relationship, directly or indirectly, on behalf of themselves or others, with a foreign financial agency. The Secretary has, by regulation, required the maintenance of such records by persons having such financial interests and by domestic financial institutions which engage in monetary transactions outside the United States. 31 CFR ss 103.32, 103.33. The Act also provides that production of such records shall be compelled only by ‘a subpena or summons duly authorized and issued or as may otherwise be required by law.’ 31 U.S.C. s 1121(b). Though it is not apparent from the various briefs filed in this Court by the plaintiffs below whether this particular recordkeeping requirement is challenged, our holding that a mere requirement that records be kept does not violate any constitutional right of the banks or of the depositors necessarily disposes of such a claim, since there is no indication at this point that there has been any attempt tocompel the there has been any attempt to compel the [25] The ACLU recognizes that these cases, and the other cases it cites involved situations in which a subpoena or summons had already issued. Brief for Appellant ACLU in No. 72—1196, p. 57. See Lamont v. Postmaster General, 381 U.S. 301, 85 S.Ct. 1493, 14 L.Ed.2d 398 (1965); Gibson v. Florida Legislative Investigation Comm., 372 U.S. 539, 83 S.Ct. 889, 9 L.Ed.2d 929 (1963); Louisiana ex rel. Gremillion v. NAACP, 366 U.S. 293, 81 S.Ct. 1333, 6 L.Ed.2d 301 (1961); Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479, 81 S.Ct. 247, 5 L.Ed.2d 231 (1960); Bates v. Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516, 80 S.Ct. 412, 4 L.Ed.2d 480 (1960); NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488 (1958); United States v. Rumely, 345 U.S. 41, 73 S.Ct. 543, 97 L.Ed. 770 (1953).

[26] The ACLU contends that present injunctive relief is essential, since the banks might not notify it of the fact that their records have been subpoenaed, and might comply with the subpoena without giving the ACLU a chance to obtain judicial review. While noting that ‘most banks formally prohibit’ it (citing American Banker, May 12, 1972, p. 1, cols. 3—4), the ACLU also contends that the ‘day-to-day practice of permitting ‘informal’ access to bank records is, unfortunately, widespread.' Brief for Appellant ACLU in No. 72—1196, p. 58.

The record contains no showing of any attempt by the Government, formal or informal, to compel the production of bank records containing information relating to the ACLU; we accordingly express no opinion whether notice would in such an instance be required by either the Act or the Constitution.

[27] See n. 29, infra.

[28] We hold here and in other parts of this opinion that certain of the plaintiffs did not make the requisite allegations in the District Court to give them standing to challenge the Act and the regulations issued pursuant to it. In so holding, we do not, of course, mean to imply that such claims would be meritorious if presented by a litigant who has standing.

[29] Plaintiffs similarly contend that the Secretary's regulation requiring the reporting of domestic currency transactions only by the banks or financial institutions which are parties thereto, violates a specific requirement of the Act. Section 222 of the Act, 31 U.S.C. s 1082, provides in pertinent part:

‘The report of any transaction required to be reported under this chapter shall be signed or otherwise made both by the domestic financial institution involved and by one or more of the other parties thereto or participants therein, as the Secretary may require.’ Plaintiffs contend that this language requires the Secretary to require either a signature on the report by the individual customer in the currency transaction, or a report from that customer. Since the Secretary has only required a report from the financial institution, plaintiffs urge, in addition, that there will not be notice to the individual customer of the report made by the financial institution.

In rebuttal, the Government urged in order argument, Tr. of Oral Arg. 64—70, that not only does s 206 of the Act, 31 U.S.C. s 1055, give the Secretary broad authority to make exceptions to the requirements of the Act in promulgating the regulations, but that the House and Senate Reports on the bills considered by each house of the Congress, each of which contained a provision identical to the language of s 222, indicated that each chamber read that language differently. The Senate Committee believed that the language permitted the Secretary to require reports from the financial institution, the customer, or both, S.Rep.No. 91—1139, supra, at 15, while the House Committee felt that the language required reports to be filed by both the financial institution and the customer, H.R.Rep.No. 91—975, supra, at 22.

We similarly do not reach this claim as it relates to the depositor plaintiffs since they failed to allege sufficient injury below. Whatever the merits of such a contention vis-a -vis the depositors, the regulation clearly has no adverse effect on any constitutional right of the banks, since the statute indisputably authorizes the Secretary to require a report from the bank.

30 There have been recent hearings in Congress on various legislative proposals to amend the Bank Secrecy Act. Hearings to Amend the Bank Secrecy Act (S. 3814 and S. 3828) before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions of the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. (1972). See S. 3814 and S. 3828, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. (1972).

1 The House Report, No. 91—975, p. 10, states:

‘Petty criminals, members of the underworld, those engaging in ‘white collar’ crime and income tax evaders use, in one way or another, financial institutions in carrying on their affairs.' U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1970, p. 4395.

That was the reason for requiring the report of large domestic cash transactions. ‘Criminals deal in money—cash or its equivalent. The deposit and withdrawal of large amounts of currency or its equivalent (monetary instruments) under unusual circumstances may betray a criminal activity. The money in many of these transactions may represent anything from the proceeds of a lottery racket to money for the bribery of public officials.’ Id., at 11, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1970, p. 4396.

A sponsor on the floor of the House stated: ‘With respect to full financial recordkeeping, the problem can be simply stated; in the past decade, as organized crime and criminals have become more sophisticated, more and greater use has been made by criminal elements of our Nation's financial institutions. Law enforcement officials believe that an effective attack on organized crime requires the maintenance of adequate and appropriate records by financial institutions.’ 116 Cong.Rec. 16950.

Congressman Patman, author of the bill, stated: ‘This is really a bill which, if enacted into law, will be the longest step in the direction of stopping crime than any other we have had before this Congress in a long time.’ Id., at 16951.

While it started with a different objective, it was changed to serve an additional purpose: ‘We also discovered that secret foreign bank accounts were not the only criminal activities related to the banking field. The major law enforcement authority —the Justice Department—of the U.S. Government called our attention to the urgent need for regulations which would make uniform and adequate the present recordkeeping practices, or lack of recordkeeping practices, by domestic banks and other financial institutions.’ Id., at 16952.

2 The Senate Report, No. 91—1139, is replete with the same philosophy. See pp. 1, 5, 7, 8.

3 The Act authorizes the Secretary to issue regulations to carry out its purposes, 12 U.S.C. s 1829b(b). It empowers him to define institutions or persons affected, 12 U.S.C. ss 1953(a), (b)(5), to make exceptions, exemptions, or other special arrangements, 12 U.S.C. ss 1829(c), (f); to seek injunctions, 12 U.S.C. s 1954; and to assess and collect civil penalties, 12 U.S.C. s 1955.

4 Title 31 CFR s 103.34 at the time this litigation was commenced provided that banks shall:

‘(a) . . . secure and maintain a record of the taxpayer identification number of the person maintaining the account; or in the case of an account of one or more individuals, such bank shall secure and maintain a record of the social security number of an individual having a financial interest in that account.

‘(b) Each bank shall, in addition, retain either the original or a microfilm or other copy or reproduction of each of the following:

‘(1) Each document granting signature authority over each deposit or share account;

‘(2) Each statement, ledger card or other record on each deposit or share account, showing each transaction in, or with respect to, that account;

‘(3) Each check, clean draft, or money order drawn on the bank or issued and payable by it, except those drawn on accounts which can be expected to have drawn on them an average of at least 100 checks per month over the calendar year or on each occasion on which such checks are issued, and which are (i) dividend checks, (ii) payroll checks, (iii) employee benefit checks, (iv) insurance claim checks, (v) medical benefit checks, (vi) checks drawn on governmental agency accounts, (vii) checks drawn by brokers or dealers in securities, (viii) checks drawn on fiduciary accounts, (ix) checks drawn on other financial institutions, or (x) pension or annuity checks;

‘(4) Each item other than bank charges or periodic charges made pursuant to agreement with the customer, comprising a debit to a customer's deposit or share account, not required to be kept, and not specifically exempted, under subparagraph (b)(3) of this section;

‘(5) Each item, including checks, drafts, or transfers of credit, of more than $10,000 remitted or transferred to a person, account or place outside the United States;

‘(6) A record of each remittance or transfer of funds, or of currency, other monetary instruments, checks, investment securities, or credit, of more than $10,000 to a person, account or place outside the United States;

‘(7) Each check or draft in an amount in excess of $10,000 drawn on or issued by a foreign bank, purchased, received for credit or collection, or otherwise acquired by the bank;

‘(8) Each item, including checks, drafts or transfers of credit, of more than $10,000 received directly and not through a domestic financial institution, by letter, cable or any other means, from a person, account or place outside the United States;

‘(9) A record of each receipt of currency, other monetary instruments, checks, or investment securities, and of each transfer of funds or credit, of more than $10,000 received on any one occasion directly and not through a domestic financial institution, from a person, account or place outside the United States; and

‘(10) Records prepared or received by a bank in the ordinary course of business, which would be needed to reconstruct a demand deposit account and to trace a check deposited in such account through its domestic processing system or to supply a description of a deposited check. This subparagraph shall be applicable only with respect to demand deposits.’ 37 Fed.Reg. 6914.

During this litigation the above provision was amended by the Secretary making it unnecessary to microfilm copies of checks ‘drawn for $100 or less,’ 31 CFR s 103.34(b)(3) (1973). Since banks must copy all checks it is hard to see how this new exemption is meaningful.

[5] Like requirements are placed on brokers and dealers in securities, 31 CFR s 103.35.

[6] Hearings on Foreign Bank Secrecy and Bank Records (H.R. 15073) before the House Committee on Banking and Currency, 91st Cong., 1st and 2d Sess., 320 (1969—1970).

[7] And see Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 155, 93 S.Ct. 705, 728, 35 L.Ed.2d 147; Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 101, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 2293, 33 L.Ed.2d 212; Gooding v. Wilson, 405 U.S. 518, 522, 92 S.Ct. 1103, 1106, 31 L.Ed.2d 408; Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 151, 89 935, 938, 22 L.Ed.2d 162; Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611, 617, 88 S.Ct. 1335, 1338, 20 L.Ed.2d 182; Zwickler v. Koota, 389 U.S. 241, 250, 88 S.Ct. 391, 396, 19 L.Ed.2d 444; Whitehill v. Elkins, 389 U.S. 54, 62, 88 S.Ct. 184, 188, 19 L.Ed.2d 228; Ashton v. Kentucky, 384 U.S. 195, 201, 86 S.Ct. 1407, 1410, 16 L.Ed.2d 469; Elfbrandt v. Russell, 384 U.S. 11, 18, 86 S.Ct. 1238, 1241, 16 L.Ed.2d 321.

The same view is often expressed in concurring opinions. See Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, 216, 93 S.Ct. 739, 760, 35 L.Ed.2d 201 (Douglas, J., concurring); Gregory v. Chicago, 394 U.S. 111, 119, 89 S.Ct. 946, 950, 22 L.Ed.2d 134 (Black, J., concurring); United States v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 270, 88 S.Ct. 419, 427, 19 L.Ed.2d 508 (Brennan, J., concurring in result).

[8] 31 U.S.C. s 1101.

[9] 31 U.S.C. s 1121. The Secretary requires reports in yearly tax returns of any ‘financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, a bank, securities or other financial account in a foreign country,’ 31 CFR s 103.24.

[10] 31 U.S.C. ss 1056, 1102, 1103; 31 CFR ss 103.47—103.48.

[11] 31 U.S.C. ss 1058, 1059; 31 CFR s 103.49

[12] 31 U.S.C s 1061. The regulations read as follows:

‘The Secretary may make any information set forth in any report received pursuant to this part available to any other department or agency of the United States upon the request of the head of such department or agency, made in writing and stating the particular information desired, the criminal, tax or regulatory investigation or proceeding in connection with which the information is sought and the official need therefor.’ 31 CFR s 103.43.

[13] 31 U.S.C. s 1060. The Court in Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 92 S.Ct. 1653, 32 L.Ed.2d 212, held that ‘use immunity’ satisfies the Self-Incrimination Clause of the Fifth Amendment. I disagreed then and persist in my view that it is ‘transactional’ immunity, not ‘use’ immunity, that is required to lift this constitutional protection. See id., at 462—467, 92 S.Ct., at 1665—1668 (dissenting opinion). But since ‘use’ immunity is ‘the law’ of the present Court—though I doubt if it can long survive—I do not write this dissent against the narrow immunity that is granted.

[14] 31 CFR s 103.22.

[15] 31 U.S.C. s 1082.

16 At that time 31 CFR s 103.45 read as follows: '(a) The Secretary, in his sole discretion, may be written order or authorization make exceptions to, grant exemptions from, impose additional recordkeeping or reporting requirements authorized by statute, or otherwise modify, the requirements of this part. Such exceptions, exemptions, requirements or modifications may be conditional or unconditional, may apply to particular persons or to classes of persons, and may apply to particular transactions or classes of transactions. They shall, however, be applicable only as expressly stated in the order or authorization, and they shall be revocable in the sole discretion of the Secretary.

'(b) The Secretary shall have authority to further define all terms used herein.'

Since then, the language 'impose additional recordkeeping or reporting requirements authorized by statute, or otherwise modify' has been deleted from s 103.45.

17 A criminal prosecution in this country for not reporting an overseas transaction is still a criminal prosecution under the Bill of Rights; and to these the Fourth Amendment has been applicable from the beginning. Cases of immigration officers stopping people at the border who are leaving or entering the country are obviously inapposite and certainly the Court cannot be serious in saying that the monetary value of the article being seized is relevant to whether the search and seizure without a warrant was constitutional. As said in Katz it is 'persons' not 'places' that the Fourth Amendment protects; and it would labor the point to engage in lengthy argument that 'things' as well as 'places' are not the object of the Fourth Amendment's concerns.

End of Document

118 S.Ct. 2028
Supreme Court of the United States

UNITED STATES, Petitioner,
v.
Hosep Krikor BAJAKAJIAN.

No. 96–1487.
|
Argued Nov. 4, 1997.
|
Decided June 22, 1998.

Synopsis
After defendant pleaded guilty to failure to report exported currency, the United States District Court for the Central District of California, John G. Davies, J., determined that defendant was required to forfeit only $15,000 of the $357,144 at issue. Government appealed. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, 84 F.3d 334, affirmed. Government filed petition for writ of certiorari. The Supreme Court, Justice Thomas, held that forfeiture of entire amount possessed by defendant would violate Excessive Fines Clause.

Affirmed.

Justice Kennedy dissented and filed opinion in which Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices O'Connor and Scalia joined.

*2029 *321 Syllabus[*]

After customs inspectors found respondent and his family preparing to board an international flight carrying $357,144, he was charged with, inter alia, attempting to leave the United States without reporting, as required by 31 U.S.C. § 5316(a)(1)(A), that he was transporting more than $10,000 in currency. The Government also sought forfeiture of the $357,144 under 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(1), which provides that a person convicted of willfully violating § 5316 shall forfeit "any property ... involved in such an offense." Respondent pleaded guilty to the failure to report and elected to have a bench trial on the forfeiture. The District Court found, among other things, that the entire $357,144 was subject to forfeiture because it was "involved in" the offense, that the funds were not connected to any other crime, and that respondent was transporting the money to repay a lawful debt. Concluding that full forfeiture would be grossly disproportional to *2030 the offense in question and would therefore violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment, the court ordered forfeiture of $15,000, in addition to three years' probation and the maximum fine of $5,000 under the Sentencing Guidelines. The Ninth Circuit affirmed, holding that a forfeiture must fulfill two conditions to satisfy the Clause: The property forfeited must be an "instrumentality" of the crime committed, and the property's value must be proportional to its owner's culpability. The court determined that respondent's currency was not an "instrumentality" of the crime of failure to report, which involves the withholding of information rather than the possession or transportation of money; that, therefore, § 982(a)(1) could never satisfy the Clause in a currency forfeiture case; that it was unnecessary to apply the "proportionality" prong of the test; and that the Clause did not permit forfeiture of any of the unreported currency, but that the court lacked jurisdiction to set the $15,000 forfeiture aside because respondent had not cross-appealed to challenge it.

Held: Full forfeiture of respondent's $357,144 would violate the Excessive Fines Clause. Pp. 2033–2041.

(a) The forfeiture at issue is a "fine" within the meaning of the Clause, which provides that "excessive fines [shall not be] imposed." The Clause limits the Government's power to extract payments, whether in cash or in kind, as punishment for some offense. Austin v. United 322 States, 509 U.S. 602, 609–610, 113 S.Ct. 2801, 2805–2806, 125 L.Ed.2d 488. Forfeitures—payments in kind—are thus "fines" if they constitute punishment for an offense. Section 982(a)(1) currency forfeitures do so. The statute directs a court to order forfeiture as an additional sanction when "imposing sentence on a person convicted of" a willful violation of § 5316's reporting requirement. The forfeiture is thus imposed at the culmination of a criminal proceeding and requires conviction of an underlying felony, and it cannot be imposed upon an innocent owner of unreported currency. Cf. id., at 619, 113 S.Ct., at 2810–2811. The Court rejects the Government's argument that such forfeitures serve important remedial purposes—by deterring illicit movements of cash and giving the Government valuable information to investigate and detect criminal activities associated with that cash—because the asserted loss of information here would not be remedied by confiscation of respondent's $357,144. The Government's argument that the § 982(a)(1) forfeiture is constitutional because it falls within a class of historic forfeitures of property tainted by crime is also rejected. In so arguing, the Government relies upon a series of cases involving traditional civil in rem forfeitures that are inapposite because such forfeitures were historically considered nonpunitive. See, e.g., The Palmyra, 12 Wheat. 1, 14–15, 6 L.Ed. 531. Section 982(a)(1) descends from a different historical tradition: that of in personam criminal forfeitures. Similarly, the Court declines to accept the Government's contention that the forfeiture here is constitutional because it involves an "instrumentality" of respondent's crime. Because instrumentalities historically have been treated as a form of "guilty property" forfeitable in civil in rem proceedings, it is irrelevant whether respondent's currency is an instrumentality; the forfeiture is punitive, and the test for its excessiveness involves solely a proportionality determination. Pp. 2033–2036.

(b) A punitive forfeiture violates the Excessive Fines Clause if it is grossly disproportional to the gravity of the offense that it is designed to punish. Although the proportionality principle has always been the touchstone of the inquiry, see, e.g., Austin, supra, at 622–623, 113 S.Ct., at 2812–2813, the Clause's text and history provide little guidance as to how disproportional a forfeiture must be to be "excessive." Until today, the Court has not articulated a governing standard. In deriving the standard, the Court finds two considerations particularly relevant. The first, previously emphasized in cases interpreting the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause, is that judgments about the appropriate punishment belong in the first instance to the legislature. See, e.g., Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S. 277, 290, 103 S.Ct. 3001, 3009–3010, 77 L.Ed.2d 637. The second is that any judicial determination regarding *2031 the gravity of a particular criminal offense will be inherently imprecise. Because both considerations counsel against requiring strict 323 proportionality, the Court adopts the gross disproportionality standard articulated in, e.g., id., at 288, 103 S.Ct., at 3008–3009. Pp. 2036–2038.

(c) The forfeiture of respondent's entire $357,144 would be grossly disproportional to the gravity of his offense. His crime was solely a reporting offense. It was permissible to transport the currency out of the country so long as he reported it. And because § 982(a)(1) orders currency forfeited for a "willful" reporting violation, the essence of the crime is a willful failure to report. Furthermore, the District Court found his violation to be unrelated to any other illegal activities. Whatever his other vices, respondent does not fit into the class of persons for whom the statute was principally designed: money launderers, drug traffickers, and tax evaders. And the maximum penalties that could have been imposed under the Sentencing Guidelines, a 6–month sentence and a $5,000 fine, confirm a minimal level of culpability and are dwarfed by the $357,144 forfeiture sought by the Government. The harm that respondent caused was also minimal. The failure to report affected only the Government, and in a relatively minor way. There was no fraud on the Government and no loss to the public fisc. Had his crime gone undetected, the Government would have been deprived only of the information that $357,144 had left the country. Thus, there is no articulable correlation between the $357,144 and any Government injury. Pp. 2038–2039.

(d) The Court rejects the contention that the proportionality of full forfeiture is demonstrated by the fact that the First Congress, at roughly the same time the Eighth Amendment was ratified, enacted statutes requiring full forfeiture of goods involved in customs offenses or the payment of monetary penalties proportioned to the goods' value. The early customs statutes do not support the Government's assertion because, unlike § 982(a)(1), the type of forfeiture they imposed was not considered punishment for a criminal offense, but rather was civil in rem forfeiture, in which the Government proceeded against the "guilty" property itself. See, e.g., Harford v. United States, 8 Cranch 109, 3 L.Ed. 504. Similarly, the early statutes imposing monetary "forfeitures" proportioned to the value of the goods involved were considered not as punishment for an offense, but rather as serving the remedial purpose of reimbursing the Government for the losses accruing from evasion of customs duties. See, e.g., Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 531, 546–547, 20 L.Ed. 491. Pp. 2039–2041.

84 F.3d 334, affirmed.

THOMAS, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which STEVENS, SOUTER, GINSBURG, and BREYER, JJ., joined. KENNEDY, J., filed a dissenting 324 opinion, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and O'CONNOR and SCALIA, JJ., joined, post, p. 2041.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Irving L. Gornstein, Washington, DC, for petitioner.

James E. Blatt, Encino, CA, for respondent.

Opinion

Justice THOMAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

Respondent Hosep Bajakajian attempted to leave the United States without reporting, as required by federal law, that he was transporting more than $10,000 in currency. Federal law also provides that a person convicted of willfully violating this reporting requirement shall forfeit to the Government "any property ... involved in such offense." 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(1). The question in this case is whether forfeiture of the entire $357,144 that respondent failed to declare would violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment. We hold that it would, because full forfeiture of respondent's currency would be grossly disproportional to the gravity of his offense.

*2032 I

On June 9, 1994, respondent, his wife, and his two daughters were waiting at Los Angeles International Airport to board a flight to Italy; their final destination was Cyprus. Using dogs trained to detect currency by its smell, customs inspectors discovered some $230,000 in cash in the Bajakajians' checked baggage. A customs inspector approached respondent and his wife and told them that they were required to report all money in excess of $10,000 in their possession or in their baggage. Respondent said that he had $8,000 and 325 that his wife had another $7,000, but that the family had no additional currency to declare. A search of their carry-on bags, purse, and wallet revealed more cash; in all, customs inspectors found $357,144. The currency was seized and respondent was taken into custody.

A federal grand jury indicted respondent on three counts. Count One charged him with failing to report, as required by 31 U.S.C. § 5316(a)(1)(A),[1] that he was transporting more than $10,000 outside the United States, and with doing so "willfully," in violation of § 5322(a).[2] Count Two charged him with making a false material statement to the United States Customs Service, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1001. Count Three sought forfeiture of the $357,144 pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(1), which provides:

> "The court, in imposing sentence on a person convicted of an offense in violation of section ... 5316, ... shall order that the person forfeit to the United States any property, real or personal, involved in such offense, or any property traceable to such property." 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(1).

Respondent pleaded guilty to the failure to report in Count One; the Government agreed to dismiss the false statement charge in Count Two; and respondent elected to have a bench trial on the forfeiture in Count Three. After the bench trial, the District Court found that the entire $357,144 was subject to forfeiture because it was "involved 326 in" the offense. Ibid. The court also found that the funds were not connected to any other crime and that respondent was transporting the money to repay a lawful debt. Tr. 61–62 (Jan. 19, 1995). The District Court further found that respondent had failed to report that he was taking the currency out of the United States because of fear stemming from "cultural differences": Respondent, who had grown up as a member of the Armenian minority in Syria, had a "distrust for the Government." Id., at 63; see Tr. of Oral Arg. 30.

Although § 982(a)(1) directs sentencing courts to impose full forfeiture, the District Court concluded that such forfeiture would be "extraordinarily harsh" and "grossly disproportionate to the offense in question," and that it would therefore violate the Excessive Fines Clause. Tr. 63. The court instead ordered forfeiture of $15,000, in addition to a sentence of three years of probation and a fine of $5,000—the maximum fine under the Sentencing Guidelines—because the court believed that the maximum Guidelines fine was "too little" and that a $15,000 forfeiture would "make up for what I think a reasonable fine should be." Ibid.

The United States appealed, seeking full forfeiture of respondent's currency as provided in § 982(a)(1). The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed. 84 F.3d 334 (1996). Applying Circuit precedent, the court held that, to satisfy the Excessive Fines Clause, a forfeiture must fulfill two conditions: The property forfeited must be an "instrumentality" of the crime committed, and the value of the property must be proportional to the culpability of the owner. Id., at 336 (citing United States v. Real Property Located in El Dorado County, 59 F.3d 974, 982 (C.A.9 1995)). A majority of the panel determined that the currency was not an *2033 "instrumentality" of the crime of failure to report because " '[t]he crime [in a currency reporting offense] is the withholding of information, ... not the possession or the transportation of the money.' " 84 F.3d, at 337 (quoting United States v. $69,292 327 in United States Currency, 62 F.3d 1161, 1167 (C.A.9 1995)). The majority therefore held that § 982(a)(1) could never satisfy the Excessive Fines Clause in cases involving forfeitures of currency and that it was unnecessary to apply the "proportionality" prong of the test. Although the panel majority concluded that the Excessive Fines Clause did not permit forfeiture of any of the unreported currency, it held that it lacked jurisdiction to set the $15,000 forfeiture aside because respondent had not cross-appealed to challenge that forfeiture. 84 F.3d, at 338.

Judge Wallace concurred in the result. He viewed respondent's currency as an instrumentality of the crime because "without the currency, there can be no offense," id., at 339, and he criticized the majority for "strik[ing] down a portion of" the statute, id., at 338. He nonetheless agreed that full forfeiture would violate the Excessive Fines Clause in respondent's case, based upon the "proportionality" prong of the Ninth Circuit test. Finding no clear error in the District Court's factual findings, he concluded that the reduced forfeiture of $15,000 was proportional to respondent's culpability. Id., at 339–340.

Because the Court of Appeals' holding—that the forfeiture ordered by § 982(a)(1) was per se unconstitutional in cases of currency forfeiture—invalidated a portion of an Act of Congress, we granted certiorari. 520 U.S. 1239, 117 S.Ct. 1841, 137 L.Ed.2d 1045 (1997).

II

[1] [2] The Eighth Amendment provides: "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." U.S. Const., Amdt. 8. This Court has had little occasion to interpret, and has never actually applied, the Excessive Fines Clause. We have, however, explained that at the time the Constitution was adopted, "the word 'fine' was understood to mean a payment to a sovereign as punishment for some offense." Browning–Ferris Industries of Vt., Inc. v. Kelco Disposal, 328 Inc., 492 U.S. 257, 265, 109 S.Ct. 2909, 2915, 106 L.Ed.2d 219 (1989). The Excessive Fines Clause thus "limits the government's power to extract payments, whether in cash or in kind, 'as punishment for some offense.' " Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602, 609–610, 113 S.Ct. 2801, 2805, 125 L.Ed.2d 488 (1993) (emphasis deleted). Forfeitures—payments in kind—are thus "fines" if they constitute punishment for an offense.

[3] We have little trouble concluding that the forfeiture of currency ordered by § 982(a)(1) constitutes punishment. The statute directs a court to order forfeiture as an additional sanction when "imposing sentence on a person convicted of" a willful violation of § 5316's reporting requirement. The forfeiture is thus imposed at the culmination of a criminal proceeding and requires conviction of an underlying felony, and it cannot be imposed upon an innocent owner of unreported currency, but only upon a person who has himself been convicted of a § 5316 reporting violation. [3] Cf. *2034 id., at 619, 113 S.Ct., at 2810 (holding forfeiture to be a "fine" in part because the forfeiture statute "expressly provide[d] an 'innocent owner' defense" and thus "look[ed] ... like punishment").

329 The United States argues, however, that the forfeiture of currency under § 982(a)(1) "also serves important remedial purposes." Brief for United States 20. The Government asserts that it has "an overriding sovereign interest in controlling what property leaves and enters the country." Ibid. It claims that full forfeiture of unreported currency supports that interest by serving to "dete[r] illicit movements of cash" and aiding in providing the Government with "valuable information to investigate and detect criminal activities associated with that cash." Id., at 21. Deterrence, however, has traditionally been viewed as a goal of punishment, and forfeiture of the currency here does not serve the remedial purpose of compensating the Government for a loss. See Black's Law Dictionary 1293 (6th ed. 1990) ("[R]emedial action" is one "brought to obtain compensation or indemnity"); One Lot Emerald Cut Stones v. United States, 409 U.S. 232, 93 S.Ct. 489, 34 L.Ed.2d 438 (1972) (per curiam) (monetary penalty provides "a reasonable form of liquidated damages," id., at 237, 93 S.Ct., at 493, to the Government and is thus a "remedial" sanction because it compensates Government for lost revenues). Although the Government has asserted a loss of information regarding the amount of currency leaving the country, that loss would not be remedied by the Government's confiscation of respondent's $357,144.[4]

The United States also argues that the forfeiture mandated by § 982(a)(1) is constitutional because it falls within a class of historic forfeitures of property tainted by crime. See Brief for United States 16 (citing, inter alia, 330 The Palmyra, 12 Wheat. 1, 13, 6 L.Ed. 531 (1827) (forfeiture of ship); Dobbins's Distillery v. United States, 96 U.S. 395, 400–401, 24 L.Ed. 637 (1877) (forfeiture of distillery)). In so doing, the Government relies upon a series of cases involving traditional civil in rem forfeitures that are inapposite because such forfeitures were historically considered nonpunitive.

The theory behind such forfeitures was the fiction that the action was directed against "guilty property," rather than against the offender himself.[5] See, e.g., Various Items of Personal Property v. United States, 282 U.S. 577, 581, 51 S.Ct. 282, 284, 75 L.Ed. 558 (1931) ("[I]t is the property which is proceeded against, and, by resort to a legal fiction, held guilty and condemned as though it were conscious instead of inanimate and insentient"); see also R. Waples, Proceedings In Rem 13, 205–209 (1882). Historically, the conduct of the property owner was irrelevant; indeed, the owner of forfeited property could be entirely innocent of any crime. See, e.g., Origet v. United States, 125 U.S. 240, 246, 8 S.Ct. 846, 850, 31 L.Ed. 743 (1888) ("[T]he merchandise is to be forfeited irrespective of any criminal prosecution.... The person punished for the offence may be an entirely different person from the owner of the merchandise, or any person interested in it. The forfeiture of the goods of the principal can form no part of the personal punishment of his agent"). As Justice Story explained:

> *2035 "The thing is here primarily considered as the offender, or rather the offence is attached primarily to the thing; and this, whether the offence be malum prohibitum, or 331 malum in se ... .[T]he practice has been, and so this Court understand the law to be, that the proceeding in rem stands independent of, and wholly unaffected by any criminal proceeding in personam." The Palmyra, 12 Wheat., at 14–15, 6 L.Ed. 531.

[4] [5] Traditional in rem forfeitures were thus not considered punishment against the individual for an offense. See id., at 14; Dobbins's Distillery v. United States, supra, 96 U.S., at 401; Van Oster v. Kansas, 272 U.S. 465, 467–468, 47 S.Ct. 133, 134, 71 L.Ed. 354 (1926); Calero—Toledo v. Pearson Yacht Leasing Co., 416 U.S. 663, 683–684, 94 S.Ct. 2080, 2091–2092, 40 L.Ed.2d 452 (1974); Taylor v. United States, 3 How. 197, 210, 11 L.Ed. 559 (1845) (opinion of Story, J.) (laws providing for in rem forfeiture of goods imported in violation of customs laws, although in one sense "imposing a penalty or forfeiture[,] ... truly deserve to be called, remedial"); see also United States v. Ursery, 518 U.S. 267, 293, 116 S.Ct. 2135, 2150, 135 L.Ed.2d 549 (1996) (KENNEDY, J., concurring) ("[C]ivil in rem forfeiture is not punishment of the wrongdoer for his criminal offense"). Because they were viewed as nonpunitive, such forfeitures traditionally were considered to occupy a place outside the domain of the Excessive Fines Clause. Recognizing the nonpunitive character of such proceedings, we have held that the Double Jeopardy Clause does not bar the institution of a civil, in rem forfeiture action after the criminal conviction of the defendant. See id., at 278, 116 S.Ct., at 2142.[6]

The forfeiture in this case does not bear any of the hallmarks of traditional civil in rem forfeitures. The Government 332 has not proceeded against the currency itself, but has instead sought and obtained a criminal conviction of respondent personally. The forfeiture serves no remedial purpose, is designed to punish the offender, and cannot be imposed upon innocent owners.

Section 982(a)(1) thus descends not from historic in rem forfeitures of guilty property, but from a different historical tradition: that of in personam, criminal forfeitures. Such forfeitures have historically been treated as punitive, being part of the punishment imposed for felonies and treason in the Middle Ages and at common law. See W. McKechnie, Magna Carta 337–339 (2d ed.1958); 2 F. Pollock & F. Maitland, The History of English Law 460–466 (2d ed.1909). Although in personam criminal forfeitures were well established in England at the time of the founding, they were rejected altogether in the laws of this country until very recently.[7]

*2036 [6] 333 The Government specifically contends that the forfeiture of respondent's currency is constitutional because it involves an "instrumentality" of respondent's crime.[8] According to the Government, the unreported cash is an instrumentality because it "does not merely facilitate a violation of law," but is " 'the very sine qua non of the crime.' " Brief for United States 20 (quoting United States v. United States Currency in the Amount of One Hundred Forty–Five Thousand, One Hundred Thirty–Nine Dollars, 18 F.3d 73, 75 (C.A.2), cert. denied sub nom. Etim v. United States, 513 U.S. 815, 115 S.Ct. 72, 130 L.Ed.2d 27 (1994)). The Government reasons that "there would be no violation at all without the exportation (or attempted exportation) of the cash." Brief for United States 20.

Acceptance of the Government's argument would require us to expand the traditional understanding of instrumentality forfeitures. This we decline to do. Instrumentalities historically have been treated as a form of "guilty property" that can be forfeited in civil in rem proceedings. In this case, however, the Government has sought to punish respondent by proceeding against him criminally, in personam, rather than proceeding in rem against the currency. It is therefore irrelevant whether respondent's currency is an instrumentality; the forfeiture is punitive, and the test for 334 the excessiveness of a punitive forfeiture involves solely a proportionality determination. See infra, at 2036–2038.[9]

III

Because the forfeiture of respondent's currency constitutes punishment and is thus a "fine" within the meaning of the Excessive Fines Clause, we now turn to the question whether it is "excessive."

A

[7] [8] The touchstone of the constitutional inquiry under the Excessive Fines Clause is the principle of proportionality: The amount of the forfeiture must bear some relationship to the gravity of the offense that it is designed to punish. See Austin v. United States, 509 U.S., at 622–623, 113 S.Ct., at 2812 (noting Court of Appeals' statement that " 'the government is exacting too high a penalty in relation to the offense committed' "); Alexander v. United States, 509 U.S. 544, 559, 113 S.Ct. 2766, 2776, 125 L.Ed.2d 441 (1993) ("It is in the light of the extensive criminal activities which petitioner apparently conducted ... that the question whether the forfeiture was 'excessive' must be considered"). Until today, however, we have not articulated a standard for determining whether a punitive forfeiture is constitutionally excessive. We now hold that a punitive forfeiture violates the Excessive Fines Clause if it is grossly disproportional to the gravity of a defendant's offense.

335 The text and history of the Excessive Fines Clause demonstrate the centrality of proportionality to the excessiveness inquiry; nonetheless, they provide little guidance as to how disproportional a punitive forfeiture *2037 must be to the gravity of an offense in order to be "excessive." Excessive means surpassing the usual, the proper, or a normal measure of proportion. See 1 N. Webster, American Dictionary of the English Language (1828) (defining excessive as "beyond the common measure or proportion"); S. Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language 680 (4th ed. 1773) ("[b]eyond the common proportion"). The constitutional question that we address, however, is just how proportional to a criminal offense a fine must be, and the text of the Excessive Fines Clause does not answer it.

Nor does its history. The Clause was little discussed in the First Congress and the debates over the ratification of the Bill of Rights. As we have previously noted, the Clause was taken verbatim from the English Bill of Rights of 1689. See Browning–Ferris Industries of Vt., Inc. v. Kelco Disposal, Inc., 492 U.S., at 266–267, 109 S.Ct., at 2915–2916. That document's prohibition against excessive fines was a reaction to the abuses of the King's judges during the reigns of the Stuarts, id., at 267, 109 S.Ct., at 2916, but the fines that those judges imposed were described contemporaneously only in the most general terms. See Earl of Devonshire's Case, 11 State Tr. 1367, 1372 (H.L.1689) (fine of & pound;30,000 "excessive and exorbitant, against Magna Charta, the common right of the subject, and the law of the land"). Similarly, Magna Charta—which the Stuart judges were accused of subverting—required only that amercements (the medieval predecessors of fines) should be proportioned to the offense and that they should not deprive a wrongdoer of his livelihood:

> "A Free-man shall not be amerced for a small fault, but after the manner of the fault; and for a great fault after the greatness thereof, saving to him his contenement; (2) and a Merchant likewise, saving to him his 336 > merchandise; (3) and any other's villain than ours shall be likewise amerced, saving his wainage." Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III, ch. 14 (1225), 1 Stat. at Large 6–7 (1762 ed.).

None of these sources suggests how disproportional to the gravity of an offense a fine must be in order to be deemed constitutionally excessive.

[9] We must therefore rely on other considerations in deriving a constitutional excessiveness standard, and there are two that we find particularly relevant. The first, which we have emphasized in our cases interpreting the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause, is that judgments about the appropriate punishment for an offense belong in the first instance to the legislature. See, e.g., Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S. 277, 290, 103 S.Ct. 3001, 3009, 77 L.Ed.2d 637 (1983) ("Reviewing courts ... should grant substantial deference to the broad authority that legislatures necessarily possess in determining the types and limits of punishments for crimes"); see also Gore v. United States, 357 U.S. 386, 393, 78 S.Ct. 1280, 1285, 2 L.Ed.2d 1405 (1958) ("Whatever views may be entertained regarding severity of punishment, ... these are peculiarly questions of legislative policy"). The second is that any judicial determination regarding the gravity of a particular criminal offense will be inherently imprecise. Both of these principles counsel against requiring strict proportionality between the amount of a punitive forfeiture and the gravity of a criminal offense, and we therefore adopt the standard of gross disproportionality articulated in our Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause precedents. See, e.g., Solem v. Helm, supra, at 288, 103 S.Ct., at 3008; Rummel v. Estelle, 445 U.S. 263, 271, 100 S.Ct. 1133, 1137–1138, 63 L.Ed.2d 382 (1980).

[10] In applying this standard, the district courts in the first instance, and the courts of appeals, reviewing the proportionality determination de novo, [10] must compare *2038 the amount 337 of the forfeiture to the gravity of the defendant's offense. If the amount of the forfeiture is grossly disproportional to the gravity of the defendant's offense, it is unconstitutional.

B

[11] Under this standard, the forfeiture of respondent's entire $357,144 would violate the Excessive Fines Clause. [11] Respondent's crime was solely a reporting offense. It was permissible to transport the currency out of the country so long as he reported it. Section 982(a)(1) orders currency to be forfeited for a "willful" violation of the reporting requirement. Thus, the essence of respondent's crime is a willful failure to report the removal of currency from the United States. [12] Furthermore, as the District Court found, respondent's 338 violation was unrelated to any other illegal activities. The money was the proceeds of legal activity and was to be used to repay a lawful debt. Whatever his other vices, respondent does not fit into the class of persons for whom the statute was principally designed: He is not a money launderer, a drug trafficker, or a tax evader. [13] See Brief for United States 2–3. And under the Sentencing Guidelines, the maximum sentence that could have been imposed on respondent was six months, while the maximum fine was $5,000. App. to Pet. for Cert. 17a (transcript of District Court sentencing hearing); United States Sentencing Commission, Guidelines Manual § 5(e) 1.2, Sentencing Table 339 Nov.1994). Such penalties confirm a minimal level of culpability. [14]

*2039 The harm that respondent caused was also minimal. Failure to report his currency affected only one party, the Government, and in a relatively minor way. There was no fraud on the United States, and respondent caused no loss to the public fisc. Had his crime gone undetected, the Government would have been deprived only of the information that $357,144 had left the country. The Government and the dissent contend that there is a correlation between the amount forfeited and the harm that the Government would have suffered had the crime gone undetected. See Brief for United States 30 (forfeiture is "perfectly calibrated"); *post,*at 2041 ("a fine calibrated with this accuracy"). We disagree. There is no inherent proportionality in such a forfeiture. It is impossible to conclude, for example, that the harm respondent caused is anywhere near 30 times greater than that caused by a hypothetical drug dealer who willfully fails to report taking $12,000 out of the country in order to purchase drugs.

Comparing the gravity of respondent's crime with the $357,144 forfeiture the Government seeks, we conclude that such a forfeiture would be grossly disproportional to the 340 gravity of his offense. [15] It is larger than the $5,000 fine imposed by the District Court by many orders of magnitude, and it bears no articulable correlation to any injury suffered by the Government.

C

Finally, we must reject the contention that the proportionality of full forfeiture is demonstrated by the fact that the First Congress enacted statutes requiring full forfeiture of goods involved in customs offenses or the payment of monetary penalties proportioned to the goods' value. It is argued that the enactment of these statutes at roughly the same time that the Eighth Amendment was ratified suggests that full forfeiture, in the customs context at least, is a proportional punishment. The early customs statutes, however, do not support such a conclusion because, unlike § 982(a)(1), the type of forfeiture that they imposed was not considered punishment for a criminal offense.

Certain of the early customs statutes required the forfeiture of goods imported in violation of the customs laws, and, in some instances, the vessels carrying them as well. See, e.g., Act of Aug. 4, 1790, § 27, 1 Stat. 163 (goods unladen without a permit from the collector). These forfeitures, however, were civil in rem forfeitures, in which the Government proceeded against the property itself on the theory that it was guilty, not against a criminal defendant. See, e.g., Harford v. United States, 8 Cranch 109, 3 L.Ed. 504 (1814) (goods unladen without a permit); Locke v. United States, 7 Cranch 339, 340, 3 L.Ed. 364 (1813) (same). Such forfeitures sought to vindicate the Government's underlying property right in customs duties, and like other traditional in rem forfeitures, they were not considered at the founding to be punishment for an offense. See supra, at 2035. They therefore indicate 341 nothing about the proportionality of the punitive forfeiture at issue here. Ibid. [16]

*2040 Other statutes, however, imposed monetary "forfeitures" proportioned to the value of the goods involved. See, e.g., Act of July 31, 1789, § 22, 1 Stat. 42 (if an importer, "with design to defraud the revenue," did not invoice his goods at their actual cost at the place of export, "all such goods, wares or merchandise, or the value thereof ... shall be forfeited"); § 25, id., at 43 (any person concealing or purchasing goods, knowing they were liable to seizure for violation of the customs laws, was liable to "forfeit and pay a sum double the value of the goods so concealed or purchased"); see also Act of Aug. 4, 1790, §§ 10, 14, 22, id., at 156, 158, 161. Similar statutes were passed in later Congresses. See, e.g., Act of Mar. 2, 1799, §§ 24, 28, 45, 46, 66, 69, 79, 84, id., at 646, 648, 661, 662, 677, 678, 687, 694; Act of Mar. 3, 1823, ch. 58, § 1, 3 Stat. 781.

These "forfeitures" were similarly not considered punishments for criminal offenses. This Court so recognized in Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 531, 20 L.Ed. 491 (1871), a case interpreting a statute that, like the Act of July 31, 1789, provided that a person who had concealed goods liable to seizure for customs violations should "forfeit and pay a sum double the amount or value of the goods." Act of Mar. 3, 1823, ch. 58, § 2, 3 Stat. 781–782. The Stockwell Court rejected the defendant's 342 contention that this provision was "penal," stating instead that it was "fully as remedial in its character, designed as plainly to secure [the] rights [of the Government], as are the statutes rendering importers liable to duties." 13 Wall., at 546, 20 L.Ed. 491. The Court reasoned:

> "When foreign merchandise, subject to duties, is imported into the country, the act of importation imposes on the importer the obligation to pay the legal charges. Besides this the goods themselves, if the duties be not paid, are subject to seizure.... Every act, therefore, which interferes with the right of the government to seize and appropriate the property which has been forfeited to it ... is a wrong to property rights, and is a fit subject for indemnity." Id., 13 Wall, at 546.

Significantly, the fact that the forfeiture was a multiple of the value of the goods did not alter the Court's conclusion:

> "The act of abstracting goods illegally imported, receiving, concealing, or buying them, interposes difficulties in the way of a government seizure, and impairs, therefore, the value of the government right. It is, then, hardly accurate to say that the only loss the government can sustain from concealing the goods liable to seizure is their single value .... Double the value may not be more than complete indemnity." Ibid.

The early monetary forfeitures, therefore, were considered not as punishment for an offense, but rather as serving the remedial purpose of reimbursing the Government for the losses accruing from the evasion of customs duties. [17] They 343 were thus no different in purpose and effect than the in rem forfeitures of the goods to whose value they were proportioned. [18] Cf. One Lot Emerald *2041 Cut Stones v. United States, 409 U.S., at 237, 93 S.Ct., at 493 (per curiam) (customs statute requiring the forfeiture of undeclared goods concealed in baggage and imposing a monetary penalty equal to the value of the goods imposed a "remedial, rather than [a] punitive sanctio[n]"). [19] By contrast, 344 the full forfeiture mandated by § 982(a)(1) in this case serves no remedial purpose; it is clearly punishment. The customs statutes enacted by the First Congress, therefore, in no way suggest that § 982(a)(1)'s currency forfeiture is constitutionally proportional.

For the foregoing reasons, the full forfeiture of respondent's currency would violate the Excessive Fines Clause. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is

Affirmed.

Justice KENNEDY, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE, Justice O'CONNOR, and Justice SCALIA join, dissenting.

For the first time in its history, the Court strikes down a fine as excessive under the Eighth Amendment. The decision is disturbing both for its specific holding and for the broader upheaval it foreshadows. At issue is a fine Congress fixed in the amount of the currency respondent sought to smuggle or to transport without reporting. If a fine calibrated with this accuracy fails the Court's test, its decision portends serious disruption of a vast range of statutory fines. The Court all but says the offense is not serious anyway. This disdain for the statute is wrong as an empirical matter and disrespectful of the separation of powers. The irony of the case is that, in the end, it may stand for narrowing constitutional protection rather than enhancing it. To make its rationale work, the Court appears to remove important classes of fines from any excessiveness inquiry at all. This, too, is unsound; and with all respect, I dissent.

I

A

In striking down this forfeiture, the majority treats many fines as "remedial" penalties even though they far exceed the 345 harm suffered. Remedial penalties, the Court holds, are not subject to the Excessive Fines Clause at all. See, e.g., ante, at 2040. Proceeding from this premise, the majority holds customs fines are remedial and not at all punitive, even if they amount to many times the duties due on the goods. See ante, at 2040–2041. In the majority's universe, a fine is not a punishment even if it is much larger than the money owed. This confuses whether a fine is excessive with whether it is a punishment.

This novel, mistaken approach requires reordering a tradition existing long before the Republic and confirmed in its early years. The Court creates its category to reconcile *2042 its unprecedented holding with a six-century-long tradition of in personam customs fines equal to one, two, three, or even four times the value of the goods at issue. E.g., Cross v. United States, 6 F.Cas. 892, No. 3,434 (C.C.D.Mass.1812) (Story, J., Cir. J.); United States v. Riley, 88 F. 480 (S.D.N.Y.1898); United States v. Jordan, 26 F.Cas. 661, No. 15,498 (D.C.Mass.1876); In re Vetterlein, 28 F.Cas. 1172, No. 16,929 (C.C.S.D.N.Y.1875); United States v. Hughes, 26 F.Cas. 417, No. 15,417 (C.C.S.D.N.Y.1875); McGlinchy v. United States, 16 F.Cas. 118, No. 8,803 (C.C.Me.1875); United States v. Hutchinson, 26 F.Cas. 446, No. 15,431 (D.Me.1868); Tariff Act of 1930, § 497, 46 Stat. 728, as amended, 19 U.S.C. § 1497(a) (failing to declare goods); Act of Mar. 3, 1863, § 1, 12 Stat. 738 (same); Act of Mar. 3, 1823, ch. 58, § 1, 3 Stat. 781 (importing without a manifest); Act of Mar. 2, 1799, §§ 46, 79, 84, 1 Stat. 662, 687, 694 (failing to declare goods; failing to re-export goods; making false entries on forms); Act of Aug. 4, 1790, §§ 10, 14, 22, 1 Stat. 156, 158, 161 (submitting incomplete manifests; unloading before customs; unloading duty-free goods); Act of July 31, 1789, §§ 22, 25, 1 Stat. 42, 43 (using false invoices; buying uncustomed goods); King v. Manning, 2 Comyns 616, 92 Eng. Rep. 1236 (K.B.1738) (assisting smugglers); 1 Eliz. 1, ch. 11, § 5 (1558–1559) (Eng.) (declaring goods under wrong person's name); 1 & 2 Phil. & 346 M., ch. 5, §§ 1, 3 (1554–1555) (Eng.) (exporting food without a license; exporting more food than the license allowed); 5 Rich. 2, Stat. 1, chs. 2, 3 (1381) (Eng.) (exporting gold or silver without a license; using ships other than those of the King's allegiance).

In order to sweep all these precedents aside, the majority's remedial analysis assumes the settled tradition was limited to "reimbursing the Government for" unpaid duties. Ante, at 2040. The assumption is wrong. Many offenses did not require a failure to pay a duty at all. See, e.g., Act of Mar.

3, 1863, § 1, 12 Stat. 738 (importing under false invoices); Act of Mar. 3, 1823, ch. 58, § 1, 3 Stat. 781 (failing to deliver ship's manifest); Act of Mar. 2, 1799, § 28, 1 Stat. 648 (transferring goods from one ship to another); Act of Aug. 4, 1790, § 14, 1 Stat. 158 (same); 5 Rich. II, st. 1, ch. 2 (1381) (Eng.) (exporting gold or silver without a license). None of these in personam penalties depended on a compensable monetary loss to the Government. True, these offenses risked causing harm, ante, at 2040, n. 17, but so does smuggling or not reporting cash. A sanction proportioned to potential rather than actual harm is punitive, though the potential harm may make the punishment a reasonable one. See TXO Production Corp. v. Alliance Resources Corp., 509 U.S. 443, 460–462, 113 S.Ct. 2711, 2721–2723, 125 L.Ed.2d 366 (1993) (opinion of STEVENS, J.). The majority nonetheless treats the historic penalties as nonpunitive and thus not subject to the Excessive Fines Clause, though they are indistinguishable from the fine in this case. (It is a mark of the Court's doctrinal difficulty that we must speak of nonpunitive penalties, which is a contradiction in terms.)

Even if the majority's typology were correct, it would have to treat the instant penalty as nonpunitive. In this respect, the Court cannot distinguish the case on which it twice relies, One Lot Emerald Cut Stones v. United States, 409 U.S. 232, 93 S.Ct. 489, 34 L.Ed.2d 438 (1972) (per curiam). Ante, at 2034, 2040–2041. Emerald Stones held forfeiture of smuggled goods plus a fine equal to their value was remedial and not punitive, for purposes of 347 double jeopardy, because the fine "serves to reimburse the Government for investigation and enforcement expenses." 409 U.S., at 237, 93 S.Ct., at 493. The logic, however, applies with equal force here. Forfeiture of the money involved in the offense would compensate for the investigative and enforcement expenses of the Customs Service. There is no reason to treat the cases differently, just because a small duty was at stake in one and a disclosure form in the other. See Bollinger's Champagne, 3 Wall. 560, 564, 18 L.Ed. 78 (1865) (holding falsehoods on customs forms justify forfeiture even if the lies do not affect the duties due and paid). The majority, in short, is not even faithful to its own artificial category of remedial penalties.

*2043 B

The majority's novel holding creates another anomaly as well. The majority suggests in rem forfeitures of the instrumentalities of crimes are not fines at all. See ante, at 2036, and nn. 8, 9. The point of the instrumentality theory is to distinguish goods having a "close enough relationship to the offense" from those incidentally related to it. Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602, 628, 113 S.Ct. 2801, 2815, 125 L.Ed.2d 488 (1993) (SCALIA, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment). From this, the Court concludes the money in a cash-smuggling or nonreporting offense cannot be an instrumentality, unlike, say, a car used to transport goods concealed from taxes. Ante, at 2036, n. 9. There is little logic in this rationale. The car plays an important role in the offense but is not essential; one could also transport goods by jet or by foot. The link between the cash and the cash-smuggling offense is closer, as the offender must fail to report while smuggling more than $10,000. See 31 U.S.C. §§ 5316(a), 5322(a). The cash is not just incidentally related to the offense of cash smuggling. It is essential, whereas the car is not. Yet the car plays an important enough role to justify forfeiture, as the majority concedes. A fortiori, the cash does as well. Even if there were a clear distinction between instrumentalities 348 and incidental objects, when the Court invokes the distinction it gets the results backwards.

II

Turning to the question of excessiveness, the majority states the test: A defendant must prove a gross disproportion before a court will strike down a fine as excessive. See ante, at 2036. This test would be a proper way to apply the Clause, if only the majority were faithful in applying it. The Court does not, however, explain why in this case forfeiture of all of the cash would have suffered from a gross disproportion. The offense is a serious one, and respondent's smuggling and failing to report were willful. The cash was lawful to own, but this fact shows only that the forfeiture was a fine; it cannot also prove that the fine was excessive.

The majority illuminates its test with a principle of deference. Courts " 'should grant substantial deference to the broad authority that legislatures necessarily possess' " in setting punishments. Ante, at 2037 (quoting Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S. 277, 290, 103 S.Ct. 3001, 3009, 77 L.Ed.2d 637 (1983)). Again, the principle is sound but the implementation is not. The majority's assessment of the crime accords no deference, let alone substantial deference, to the judgment of Congress. Congress deems the crime serious, but the Court does not. Under the congressional statute, the crime is punishable by a prison sentence, a heavy fine, and the forfeiture here at issue. As the statute makes clear, the Government needs the information to investigate other serious crimes, and it needs the penalties to ensure compliance.

A

By affirming, the majority in effect approves a meager $15,000 forfeiture. The majority's holding purports to be narrower, saying only that forfeiture of the entire $357,144 would be excessive. Ante, at 2038, and n. 11. This narrow holding is artificial in constricting the question presented for this Court's review. The statute mandates forfeiture of 349 the entire $357,144. See 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(1). The only ground for reducing the forfeiture, then, is that any higher amount would be unconstitutional. The majority affirms the reduced $15,000 forfeiture on de novo review, see ante, at 2038, and n. 11, which it can do only if a forfeiture of even $15,001 would have suffered from a gross disproportion. Indeed, the majority leaves open whether the $15,000 forfeiture itself was too great. See ante, at 2038, n. 11. Money launderers, among the principal targets of this statute, may get an even greater return from their crime.

The majority does not explain why respondent's knowing, willful, serious crime deserves no higher penalty than $15,000. It gives only a cursory explanation of why forfeiture of all of the money would have suffered from a gross disproportion. The majority justifies its evisceration of the fine because the money was legal to have and *2044 came from a legal source. See ante, at 2038. This fact, however, shows only that the forfeiture was a fine, not that it was excessive. As the majority puts it, respondent's money was lawful to possess, was acquired in a lawful manner, and was lawful to export. Ante, at 2038. It was not, however, lawful to possess the money while concealing and smuggling it. Even if one overlooks this problem, the apparent lawfulness of the money adds nothing to the argument. If the items possessed had been dangerous or unlawful to own, for instance, narcotics, the forfeiture would have been remedial and would not have been a fine at all. See Austin, supra, at 621, 113 S.Ct., at 2811–2812; e.g., United States v. One Assortment of 89 Firearms, 465 U.S. 354, 364, 104 S.Ct. 1099, 1105–1106, 79 L.Ed.2d 361 (1984) (unlicensed guns); Commonwealth v. Dana, 43 Mass. 329, 337 (1841) (forbidden lottery tickets). If respondent had acquired the money in an unlawful manner, it would have been forfeitable as proceeds of the crime. As a rule, forfeitures of criminal proceeds serve the nonpunitive ends of making restitution to the rightful owners and of compelling the surrender of property held without right or ownership. See 350 United States v. Ursery, 518 U.S. 267, 284, 116 S.Ct. 2135, 2145, 135 L.Ed.2d 549 1996). Most forfeitures of proceeds, as a consequence, are not fines at all, let alone excessive fines. Hence, the lawfulness of the money shows at most that the forfeiture was a fine; it cannot at the same time prove that the fine was excessive.

B

1

In assessing whether there is a gross disproportion, the majority concedes, we must grant " 'substantial deference' " to Congress' choice of penalties. Ante, at 2037 (quoting Solem, supra, at 290, 103 S.Ct., at 3009–3010). Yet, ignoring its own command, the Court sweeps aside Congress' reasoned judgment and substitutes arguments that are little more than speculation.

Congress considered currency smuggling and non-reporting a serious crime and imposed commensurate penalties. It authorized punishments of five years' imprisonment, a $250,000 fine, plus forfeiture of all the undeclared cash. 31 U.S.C. § 5322(a); 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(1). Congress found the offense standing alone is a serious crime, for the same statute doubles the fines and imprisonment for failures to report cash "while violating another law of the United States." 31 U.S.C. § 5322(b). Congress experimented with lower penalties on the order of one year in prison plus a $1,000 fine, but it found the punishments inadequate to deter lucrative money laundering. See President's Commission on Organized Crime, The Cash Connection: Organized Crime, Financial Institutions, and Money Laundering 27, 60 (Oct.1984). The Court today rejects this judgment.

The Court rejects the congressional judgment because, it says, the Sentencing Guidelines cap the appropriate fine at $5,000. See ante, at 2038–2039, and n. 14. The purpose of the Guidelines, however, is to select punishments with precise proportion, not to opine on what is a gross disproportion. In addition, there is no authority for elevating the Commission's judgment of what is prudent over the congressional judgment 351 of what is constitutional. The majority, then, departs from its promise of deference in the very case announcing the standard.

The Court's argument is flawed, moreover, by a serious misinterpretation of the Guidelines on their face. The Guidelines do not stop at the $5,000 fine the majority cites. They augment it with this vital point: "Forfeiture is to be imposed upon a convicted defendant as provided by statute." United States Sentencing Commission, Guidelines Manual § 5E1.4 (Nov.1995). The fine thus supplements the forfeiture; it does not replace it. Far from contradicting congressional judgment on the offense, the Guidelines implement and mandate it.

2

The crime of smuggling or failing to report cash is more serious than the Court is willing to acknowledge. The drug trade, money laundering, and tax evasion all depend in part on smuggled and unreported cash. Congress enacted the reporting requirement *2045 because secret exports of money were being used in organized crime, drug trafficking, money laundering, and other crimes. See H.R.Rep. No. 91–975, pp. 12–13 (1970). Likewise, tax evaders were using cash exports to dodge hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes owed to the Government. See ibid.

The Court does not deny the importance of these interests but claims they are not implicated here because respondent managed to disprove any link to other crimes. Here, to be sure, the Government had no affirmative proof that the money was from an illegal source or for an illegal purpose. This will often be the case, however. By its very nature, money laundering is difficult to prove; for if the money launderers have done their job, the money appears to be clean. The point of the statute, which provides for even heavier penalties if a second crime can be proved, is to mandate forfeiture regardless. See 31 U.S.C. § 5322(b); 352 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(1). It is common practice, of course, for a cash courier not to confess a tainted source but to stick to a well-rehearsed story. The kingpin, the real owner, need not come forward to make a legal claim to the funds. He has his own effective enforcement measures to ensure delivery at destination or return at origin if the scheme is thwarted. He is, of course, not above punishing the courier who deviates from the story and informs. The majority is wrong, then, to assume in personam forfeitures cannot affect kingpins, as their couriers will claim to own the money and pay the penalty out of their masters' funds. See ante, at 2033, n. 3. Even if the courier confessed, the kingpin could face an in personam forfeiture for his agent's authorized acts, for the kingpin would be a co-principal in the commission of the crime. See 18 U.S.C. § 2.

In my view, forfeiture of all the unreported currency is sustainable whenever a willful violation is proved. The facts of this case exemplify how hard it can be to prove ownership and other crimes, and they also show respondent is far from an innocent victim. For one thing, he was guilty of repeated lies to Government agents and suborning lies by others. Customs inspectors told respondent of his duty to report cash. He and his wife claimed they had only $15,000 with them, not the $357,144 they in fact had concealed. He then told customs inspectors a friend named Abe Ajemian had lent him about $200,000. Ajemian denied this. A month later, respondent said Saeed Faroutan had lent him $170,000. Faroutan, however, said he had not made the loan and respondent had asked him to lie. Six months later, respondent resurrected the fable of the alleged loan from Ajemian, though Ajemian had already contradicted the story. As the District Court found, respondent "has lied, and has had his friends lie." Tr. 54 (Jan. 19, 1995). He had proffered a "suspicious and confused story, documented in the poorest way, and replete with past misrepresentation." Id., at 61–62.

353 Respondent told these lies, moreover, in most suspicious circumstances. His luggage was stuffed with more than a third of a million dollars. All of it was in cash, and much of it was hidden in a case with a false bottom.

The majority ratifies the District Court's see-no-evil approach. The District Court ignored respondent's lies in assessing a sentence. It gave him a two-level downward adjustment for acceptance of responsibility, instead of an increase for obstruction of justice. See id., at 62. It dismissed the lies as stemming from "distrust for the Government" arising out of "cultural differences." Id., at 63. While the majority is sincere in not endorsing this excuse, ante, at 2038, n. 12, it nonetheless affirms the fine tainted by it. This patronizing excuse demeans millions of law-abiding American immigrants by suggesting they cannot be expected to be as truthful as every other citizen. Each American, regardless of culture or ethnicity, is equal before the law. Each has the same obligation to refrain from perjury and false statements to the Government.

In short, respondent was unable to give a single truthful explanation of the source of the cash. The multitude of lies and suspicious circumstances points to some form of crime. Yet, though the Government rebutted each and every fable respondent proffered, it was unable to adduce affirmative proof of another crime in this particular case.

*2046 Because of the problems of individual proof, Congress found it necessary to enact a blanket punishment. See S.Rep. No. 99–130, p. 21 (1985); see also Drug Money Laundering Control Efforts, Hearing before the Subcommittee on Consumer and Regulatory Affairs of the Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee, 101st Cong., 1st Sess., 84 (1989) (former Internal Revenue Service agent found it " 'unbelievably difficult' " to discern which money flows were legitimate and which were tied to crime). One of the few reliable warning signs of some serious crimes is the use of large sums of cash. See id., at 83. So Congress 354 punished all cash smuggling or nonreporting, authorizing single penalties for the offense alone and double penalties for the offense coupled with proof of other crimes. See 31 U.S.C. §§ 5322(a), (b). The requirement of willfulness, it judged, would be enough to protect the innocent. See ibid. The majority second-guesses this judgment without explaining why Congress' blanket approach was unreasonable.

Money launderers will rejoice to know they face forfeitures of less than 5% of the money transported, provided they hire accomplished liars to carry their money for them. Five percent, of course, is not much of a deterrent or punishment; it is comparable to the fee one might pay for a mortgage lender or broker. Cf. 15 U.S.C. § 1602(aa)(1)(B) (high-cost mortgages cost more than 8% in points and fees). It is far less than the 20%–26% commissions some drug dealers pay money launderers. See Hearing on Money Laundering and the Drug Trade before the Subcommittee on Crime of the House Judiciary Committee, 105th Cong., 1st Sess., 62 (1997) (testimony of M. Zeldin); Andelman, The Drug Money Maze, 73 Foreign Affairs 108 (July/Aug. 1994). Since many couriers evade detection, moreover, the average forfeiture per dollar smuggled could amount, courtesy of today's decision, to far less than 5%. In any event, the fine permitted by the majority would be a modest cost of doing business in the world of drugs and crime. See US/Mexico Bi–National Drug Threat Assessment 84 (Feb.1997) (to drug dealers, transaction costs of 13%–15% are insignificant compared to their enormous profit margins).

Given the severity of respondent's crime, the Constitution does not forbid forfeiture of all of the smuggled or unreported cash. Congress made a considered judgment in setting the penalty, and the Court is in serious error to set it aside.

III

The Court's holding may in the long run undermine the purpose of the Excessive Fines Clause. One of the main 355 purposes of the ban on excessive fines was to prevent the King from assessing unpayable fines to keep his enemies in debtor's prison. See Browning–Ferris Industries of Vt., Inc. v. Kelco Disposal, Inc., 492 U.S. 257, 267, 109 S.Ct. 2909, 2916, 106 L.Ed.2d 219 (1989); 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 373 (1769) ("[C]orporal punishment, or a stated imprisonment, ... is better than an excessive fine, for that amounts to imprisonment for life. And this is the reason why fines in the king's court are frequently denominated ransoms ..."). Concern with imprisonment may explain why the Excessive Fines Clause is coupled with, and follows right after, the Excessive Bail Clause. While the concern is not implicated here—for of necessity the money is there to satisfy the forfeiture—the Court's restrictive approach could subvert this purpose. Under the Court's holding, legislators may rely on mandatory prison sentences in lieu of fines. Drug lords will be heartened by this, knowing the prison terms will fall upon their couriers while leaving their own wallets untouched.

At the very least, today's decision will encourage legislatures to take advantage of another avenue the majority leaves open. The majority subjects this forfeiture to scrutiny because it is in personam, but it then suggests most in rem forfeitures (and perhaps most civil forfeitures) may not be fines at all. Ante, at 2035, 2039–2040, and n.

16; but see ante, at 2035, n. 6. The suggestion, one might note, is inconsistent or at least in tension with Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602, 113 S.Ct. 2801, 125 L.Ed.2d 488 (1993). In any event, these remarks may *2047 encourage a legislative shift from in personam to in rem forfeitures, avoiding mens rea as a predicate and giving owners fewer procedural protections. By invoking the Excessive Fines Clause with excessive zeal, the majority may in the long run encourage Congress to circumvent it.

IV

The majority's holding may not only jeopardize a vast range of fines but also leave countless others unchecked by 356 the Constitution. Nonremedial fines may be subject to deference in theory but overbearing scrutiny in fact. So-called remedial penalties, most in rem forfeitures, and perhaps civil fines may not be subject to scrutiny at all. I would not create these exemptions from the Excessive Fines Clause. I would also accord genuine deference to Congress' judgments about the gravity of the offenses it creates. I would further follow the long tradition of fines calibrated to the value of the goods smuggled. In these circumstances, the Constitution does not forbid forfeiture of all of the $357,144 transported by respondent. I dissent.

All Citations

524 U.S. 321, 118 S.Ct. 2028, 141 L.Ed.2d 314, 172 A.L.R. Fed. 705, 66 USLW 4514, 98 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 3239, 98 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 4757, 98 Daily Journal D.A.R. 6736, 11 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 662

Footnotes

[*] The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

[1] The statutory reporting requirement provides:

> "[A] person or an agent or bailee of the person shall file a report ... when the person, agent, or bailee knowingly—
>
> "(1) transports, is about to transport, or has transported, monetary instruments of more than $10,000 at one time—
>
> "(A) from a place in the United States to or through a place outside the United States...." 31 U.S.C. § 5316(a).

[2] Section 5322(a) provides: "A person willfully violating this subchapter ... shall be fined not more than $250,000, or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both."

[3] Although the currency reporting statute provides that "a person or an agent or bailee of the person shall file a report," 31 U.S.C. § 5316(a), the statute ordering the criminal forfeiture of unreported currency provides that "[t]he court, in imposing sentence on a person convicted of" failure to file the required report, "shall order that the person forfeit to the United States" any property "involved in" or "traceable to" the offense, 18 U.S.C. § 982(a)(1). The combined effect of these two statutes is that an owner of unreported currency is not subject to criminal forfeiture if his agent or bailee is the one who fails to file the required report, because such an owner could not be convicted of the reporting offense. The United States endorsed this interpretation at oral argument in this case. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 24–25.

For this reason, the dissent's speculation about the effect of today's holding on "kingpins" and "cash couriers" is misplaced. See post, at 2045, 2046. Section 982(a)(1)'s criminal in personam forfeiture reaches only currency owned by someone who himself commits a reporting crime. It is unlikely that the Government, in the course of criminally indicting and prosecuting a cash courier, would not bother to investigate the source and true ownership of unreported funds.

[4] We do not suggest that merely because the forfeiture of respondent's currency in this case would not serve a remedial purpose, other forfeitures may be classified as nonpunitive (and thus not "fines") if they serve some remedial purpose as well as being punishment for an offense. Even if the Government were correct in claiming that the forfeiture of respondent's currency is remedial in some way, the forfeiture would still be punitive in part. (The Government concedes as much.) This is sufficient to bring the forfeiture within the purview of the Excessive Fines Clause. See Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602, 621–622, 113 S.Ct. 2801, 2811–2812, 125 L.Ed.2d 488 (1993).

[5] The "guilty property" theory behind in rem forfeiture can be traced to the Bible, which describes property being sacrificed to God as a means of atoning for an offense. See Exodus 21:28. In medieval Europe and at common law, this concept evolved into the law of deodand, in which offending property was condemned and confiscated by the church or the Crown in remediation for the harm it had caused. See 1 M. Hale, Pleas of the Crown 420–424 (1st Am. ed. 1847); 1

W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 290–292 (1765); O. Holmes, The Common Law 10–13, 23–27 (M. Howe ed.1963).

6 It does not follow, of course, that all modern civil in rem forfeitures are nonpunitive and thus beyond the coverage of the Excessive Fines Clause. Because some recent federal forfeiture laws have blurred the traditional distinction between civil in rem and criminal in personam forfeiture, we have held that a modern statutory forfeiture is a "fine" for Eighth Amendment purposes if it constitutes punishment even in part, regardless of whether the proceeding is styled in rem or in personam. See Austin v. United States, supra, at 621–622, 113 S.Ct., at 2811–2812 (although labeled in rem, civil forfeiture of real property used "to facilitate" the commission of drug crimes was punitive in part and thus subject to review under the Excessive Fines Clause).

7 The First Congress explicitly rejected in personam forfeitures as punishments for federal crimes, see Act of Apr. 30, 1790, ch. 9, § 24, 1 Stat. 117 ("[N]o conviction or judgment ... shall work corruption of blood, or any forfeiture of estate"), and Congress reenacted this ban several times over the course of two centuries. See Rev. Stat. § 5326 (1875); Act of Mar. 4, 1909, ch. 321, § 341, 35 Stat. 1159; Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 645, § 3563, 62 Stat. 837, codified at 18 U.S.C. § 3563 (1982 ed.); repealed effective Nov. 1, 1987, Pub.L. 98–473, 98 Stat.1987.

It was only in 1970 that Congress resurrected the English common law of punitive forfeiture to combat organized crime and major drug trafficking. See Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, 18 U.S.C. § 1963, and Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, 21 U.S.C. § 848(a). In providing for this mode of punishment, which had long been unused in this country, the Senate Judiciary Committee acknowledged that "criminal forfeiture ... represents an innovative attempt to call on our common law heritage to meet an essentially modern problem." S.Rep. No. 91–617, p. 79 (1969). Indeed, it was not until 1992 that Congress provided for the criminal forfeiture of currency at issue here. See 18 U.S.C. § 982(a).

8 Although the term "instrumentality" is of recent vintage, see Austin v. United States, 509 U.S., at 627–628, 113 S.Ct., at 2814–2815 (SCALIA, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment), it fairly characterizes property that historically was subject to forfeiture because it was the actual means by which an offense was committed. See infra, at 2036; see, e.g., J.W. Goldsmith, Jr.-Grant Co. v. United States, 254 U.S. 505, 508–510, 41 S.Ct. 189, 190–191, 65 L.Ed. 376 (1921). "Instrumentality" forfeitures have historically been limited to the property actually used to commit an offense and no more. See Austin v. United States, supra, at 627–628, 113 S.Ct., at 2814–2815 (SCALIA, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment). A forfeiture that reaches beyond this strict historical limitation is ipso facto punitive and therefore subject to review under the Excessive Fines Clause.

9 The currency in question is not an instrumentality in any event. The Court of Appeals reasoned that the existence of the currency as a "precondition" to the reporting requirement did not make it an "instrumentality" of the offense. See 84 F.3d 334, 337 (C.A.9 1996). We agree; the currency is merely the subject of the crime of failure to report. Cash in a suitcase does not facilitate the commission of that crime as, for example, an automobile facilitates the transportation of goods concealed to avoid taxes. See, e.g., J.W. Goldsmith, Jr.-Grant Co. v. United States, supra, at 508, 41 S.Ct., at 190. In the latter instance, the property is the actual means by which the criminal act is committed. See Black's Law Dictionary 801 (6th ed. 1990) ("Instrumentality" is "[s]omething by which an end is achieved; a means, medium, agency").

10 At oral argument, respondent urged that a district court's determination of excessiveness should be reviewed by an appellate court for abuse of discretion. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 32. We cannot accept this submission. The factual findings made by the district courts in conducting the excessiveness inquiry, of course, must be accepted unless clearly erroneous. See Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 574–575, 105 S.Ct. 1504, 1511–1512, 84 L.Ed.2d 518 (1985). But the question whether a fine is constitutionally excessive calls for the application of a constitutional standard to the facts of a particular case, and in this context de novo review of that question is appropriate. See Ornelas v. United States, 517 U.S. 690, 697, 116 S.Ct. 1657, 1662, 134 L.Ed.2d 911 (1996).

11 The only question before this Court is whether the full forfeiture of respondent's $357,144 as directed by § 982(a)(1) is constitutional under the Excessive Fines Clause. We hold that it is not. The Government petitioned for certiorari seeking full forfeiture, and we reject that request. Our holding that full forfeiture would be excessive reflects no judgment that "a forfeiture of even $15,001 would have suffered from a gross disproportion," nor does it "affir[m] the reduced $15,000 forfeiture on de novo review." Post, at 2043. Those issues are simply not before us. Nor, indeed, do we address in any respect the validity of the forfeiture ordered by the District Court, including whether a court may disregard the terms of a statute that commands full forfeiture: As noted, supra, at 2033, respondent did not cross-appeal the $15,000 forfeiture ordered by the District Court. The Court of Appeals thus declined to address the $15,000 forfeiture, and that question is not properly presented here either.

12 Contrary to the dissent's contention, the nature of the nonreporting offense in this case was not altered by respondent's “lies” or by the “suspicious circumstances” surrounding his transportation of his currency. See post, at 2045–2046. A single willful failure to declare the currency constitutes the crime, the gravity of which is not exacerbated or mitigated by “fable[s]” that respondent told one month, or six months, later. See post, at 2045. The Government indicted respondent under 18 U.S.C. § 1001 for “lying,” but that separate count did not form the basis of the nonreporting offense for which § 982(a)(1) orders forfeiture.

Further, the District Court's finding that respondent's lies stemmed from a fear of the Government because of “cultural differences,” supra, at 2032, does not mitigate the gravity of his offense. We reject the dissent's contention that this finding was a “patronizing excuse” that “demeans millions of law-abiding American immigrants by suggesting they cannot be expected to be as truthful as every other citizen.” Post, at 2045. We are confident that the District Court concurred in the dissent's incontrovertible proposition that “[e]ach American, regardless of culture or ethnicity, is equal before the law.” Ibid. The District Court did nothing whatsoever to imply that “cultural differences” excuse lying, but rather made this finding in the context of establishing that respondent's willful failure to report the currency was unrelated to any other crime—a finding highly relevant to the determination of the gravity of respondent's offense. The dissent's charge of ethnic paternalism on the part of the District Court finds no support in the record, nor is there any indication that the District Court's factual finding that respondent “distrust[ed] ... the Government,” see supra, at 2032, was clearly erroneous.

13 Nor, contrary to the dissent's repeated assertion, see post, at 2041, 2042–2044, 2046, 2047, is respondent a “smuggl[er].” Respondent owed no customs duties to the Government, and it was perfectly legal for him to possess the $357,144 in cash and to remove it from the United States. His crime was simply failing to report the wholly legal act of transporting his currency.

14 In considering an offense's gravity, the other penalties that the Legislature has authorized are certainly relevant evidence. Here, as the Government and the dissent stress, Congress authorized a maximum fine of $250,000 plus five years' imprisonment for willfully violating the statutory reporting requirement, and this suggests that it did not view the reporting offense as a trivial one. That the maximum fine and Guideline sentence to which respondent was subject were but a fraction of the penalties authorized, however, undercuts any argument based solely on the statute, because they show that respondent's culpability relative to other potential violators of the reporting provision—tax evaders, drug kingpins, or money launderers, for example—is small indeed. This disproportion is telling notwithstanding the fact that a separate Guideline provision permits forfeiture if mandated by statute, see post, at 2044–2045. That Guideline, moreover, cannot override the constitutional requirement of proportionality review.

15 Respondent does not argue that his wealth or income are relevant to the proportionality determination or that full forfeiture would deprive him of his livelihood, see supra, at 2037, and the District Court made no factual findings in this respect.

16 The nonpunitive nature of these early forfeitures was not lost on the Department of Justice, in commenting on the punitive forfeiture provisions of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970:

“ ‘The concept of forfeiture as a criminal penalty which is embodied in this provision differs from other presently existing forfeiture provisions under Federal statutes where the proceeding is in rem against the property and the thing which is declared unlawful under the statute, or which is used for an unlawful purpose, or in connection with the prohibited property or transaction, is considered the offender, and the forfeiture is no part of the punishment for the criminal offense. Examples of such forfeiture provisions are those contained in the customs, narcotics, and revenue laws.’ ” S.Rep. No. 91–617, p. 79 (1969) (emphasis added).

17 In each of the statutes from the early Congresses cited by the dissent, the activities giving rise to the monetary forfeitures, if undetected, were likely to cause the Government losses in customs revenue. The forfeiture imposed by the Acts of Aug. 4, 1790, and Mar. 2, 1799, was not simply for “transferring goods from one ship to another,” post, at 2042, but rather for doing so “before such ship ... shall come to the proper place for the discharge of her cargo ... and be there duly authorized by the proper officer or officers of the customs to unlade” the goods, see 1 Stat. 157, 158, 648, whereupon duties would be assessed. Similarly, the forfeiture imposed by the Act of Mar. 3, 1823, was for failing to deliver the ship's manifest of cargo—which was to list “merchandise subject to duty”—to the collector of customs. See Act of Mar. 2, 1821, § 1, 3 Stat. 616; Act of Mar. 3, 1823, § 1, id., at 781. And the “invoices” that if “false” gave rise to the forfeiture imposed by the Act of Mar. 3, 1863, were to include the value or quantity of any dutiable goods. § 1, 12 Stat. 737–738.

18 The nonpunitive nature of the monetary forfeitures was also reflected in their procedure: like traditional in rem forfeitures, they were brought as civil actions, and as such are distinguishable from the punitive criminal fine at issue here. Instead of instituting an information of libel in rem against the goods, see, e.g., Locke v. United States, 7 Cranch 339, 3 L.Ed. 364 (1813), the Government filed “a civil action of debt” against the person from whom it sought payment. See, e.g., Stockwell

v. United States, 13 Wall. 531, 541–542, 20 L.Ed. 491 (1871). In both England and the United States, an action of debt was used to recover import duties owed the Government, being "the general remedy for the recovery of all sums certain, whether the legal liability arise from contract, or be created by a statute. And the remedy as well lies for the government itself, as for a citizen." United States v. Lyman, 26 F.Cas. 1024, 1030, No. 15,647 (C.C.Mass.1818) (Story, C.J.). Thus suits for the payment of monetary forfeitures were viewed no differently than suits for the customs duties themselves.

19 One Lot Emerald Cut Stones differs from this case in the most fundamental respect. We concluded that the forfeiture provision in Emerald Cut Stones was entirely remedial and thus nonpunitive, primarily because it "provide[d] a reasonable form of liquidated damages" to the Government. 409 U.S., at 237, 93 S.Ct., at 493. The additional fact that such a remedial forfeiture also "serves to reimburse the Government for investigation and enforcement expenses," ibid.; see post, at 2042, is essentially meaningless, because even a clearly punitive criminal fine or forfeiture could be said in some measure to reimburse for criminal enforcement and investigation. Contrary to the dissent's assertion, this certainly does not mean that the forfeiture in this case—which, as the dissent acknowledges, see post, at 2041 (respondent's forfeiture is a "fine"); post, at 2045–2046 (§ 982(a)(1) imposes a "punishment"), is clearly punitive—"would have to [be treated] as nonpunitive," post, at 2042.

* * *

End of Document

2014 WL 11878430
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
S.D. Florida.

United States of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Carl R. Zwerner, Defendant.

CASE NO. 13–22082–CIV–ALTONAGA/O'Sullivan
|
Signed 04/29/2014

Attorneys and Law Firms

Thomas F. Koelbl, David Zisserson, United States Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Edward Alan Marod, Nathan W. Hill, Gunster Yoakley & Stewart, P.A., West Palm Beach, FL, Martin R. Press, Gunster Yoakley & Stewart, Fort Lauderdale, FL, for Defendant.

ORDER

CECILIA M. ALTONAGA UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

1 THIS CAUSE came before the Court upon Plaintiff, the United States' Motion for Summary Judgment[1] ("Motion") [ECF No. 21], filed February 18, 2014. Defendant, Carl R. Zwerner ("Zwerner") filed an Opposition to the United States' Motion for Summary Judgment ("Response") [ECF No. 25] on March 7, 2014; and on March 17, 2014, the United States filed its Reply ... [ECF No. 26]. The Court has carefully considered the parties' written submissions, the record, and applicable law.

This case involves the collection of civil penalties assessed by the United States against Zwerner for failing to annually declare his foreign bank account on certain tax-related forms from 2004 to 2007. (See Mot. 1). In order to diversify his investments, Zwerner opened a foreign bank account in Europe around the late 1960s.[2] (See id. ¶ 8; Resp. 1–2, ¶ 8; Zwerner Dep. 62:25–63:24, 67:19–25, 78:18–20). At the advice of Swiss bankers and attorneys, Zwerner established a Bond Foundation ("Foundation") based in Lichtenstein and deposited approximately $200,000 into the account. (See Mot. ¶ 8; Resp. 1–2, ¶ 8). A board of directors managed the Foundation and maintained signature authority over the account. (See Mot. ¶ 8; Resp. 1–2, ¶ 8). The account's funds were comprised of money earned and taxed in the United States, as well as funds earned overseas. (See Mot. ¶ 9; Resp. 2, ¶ 9).

Zwerner did not file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR") declaring his foreign account. (See Mot. ¶¶ 28, 42, 51). Zwerner states he did not realize it was necessary to report his ownership interest in a foreign account located abroad and funded with money he earned overseas. (See Zwerner Dep. 138:10–140:11). Zwerner mistakenly believed the account's assets and earned income would only need to be declared if the funds were transferred to the United States. (See id. 74:4–22, 138:21–140:11).

Between 2006 and 2007, Zwerner became aware of a taxpayer's obligation to report an interest in a foreign account or foundation after reading news articles on the subject. (See id. 139:12–20; 186:1–187:20). In May 2008, Zwerner disclosed the foreign account to his longtime accountant, Robert Bloomfield, who advised Zwerner to consult an attorney. (See Mot. ¶ 31; Resp. 4, ¶ 31). Zwerner subsequently retained attorney Dennis Kleinfeld, who also engaged attorney Marc Nurik ("Nurik"). (See Mot. ¶¶ 32, 37; Resp. 4–5, ¶¶ 32, 37).

On February 10, 2009, Nurik and a consultant met with Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") criminal agent, Betty Stewart ("Stewart"), regarding their client's voluntary disclosure. (See Mot. ¶ 39). After the meeting, Stewart sent Nurik a letter dated February 17, 2009 explaining a voluntary disclosure is not made until the client's identity is disclosed to the IRS. (See id. ¶ 41; Resp. 5, ¶ 41; Feb. 17, 2009 Letter, Pl.'s Ex. M [ECF No. 21–13]). In March 2009, Zwerner filed amended tax returns. (See Mot. ¶ 52). On April 6, 2009, Nurik sent Zwerner a letter updating him on the status of his voluntary disclosure and enclosing Stewart's February 10, 2009 letter. (See id. ¶ 44; Apr. 6, 2009 Letter, Pl.'s Ex. N [ECF No. 21–14]). The April 6, 2009 letter states, "in the attached letter dated February 17, 2009 ... the John Doe referenced as making a Voluntary Disclosure is you. You are free to represent the same to any entity making inquiries regarding whether or not Voluntary Disclosure was made anonymously to the Internal Revenue Service." (Apr. 6, 2009 Letter, Pl.'s Ex. N) (alteration added).

2 In June 2010, the IRS commenced an investigation of Zwerner's income tax returns after reviewing his amended returns, and IRS Agent Carlos Tarrago ("Agent Tarrago") contacted Zwerner. (See Mot. ¶ 52). After multiple conversations with Agent Tarrago, Zwerner drafted a letter dated August 9, 2010 regarding the reasons for and the events related to the disclosure of his foreign account. (See Aug. 9, 2010 Letter, Def.'s Ex. M [ECF No. 25–6]). In the letter, Zwerner states he believed his attorney, Nurik, made a voluntary disclosure during a February 10, 2009 meeting with the IRS. (See id.; Resp. ¶ 40). Zwerner also admits, "I was aware that this account should have been reported and I should have reported the income from the account." (Aug. 9, 2010 Letter, Def.'s Ex. M). At the end of the letter, Zwerner references his full cooperation with Agent Tarrago. (See id.).

Zwerner later submitted a Statement on Dissolved Entities [ECF No. 21–3] dated November 8, 2011 to the IRS acknowledging his ownership interest in his foreign account formed through the Bond Foundation, and subsequently the Livella Foundation. (See Mot. ¶ 15; Resp. 2–3, ¶¶ 14–15).

Summary judgment may only be rendered if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56(a), (c). "[T]he court must view all evidence and make all reasonable inferences in favor of the party opposing summary judgment." Chapman v. AI Transport, 229 F.3d 1012, 1023 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (quoting Haves v. City of Miami, 52 F.3d 918, 921 (11th Cir. 1995)).

In the Motion, the United States asks the Court to enter summary judgment against Zwerner for the FBAR penalties assessed against him from 2004 to 2007, totaling $3,630,119.29, including interest and statutory additions calculated as of January 31, 2014. (See Mot. 31). Specifically, the United States argues Zwerner's failure to comply with the FBAR requirements was willful, justifying the higher civil penalties assessed against him. (See id. 18–22). Zwerner argues he did not willfully violate any reporting requirements (see Resp. 16–17) and asserts a number of affirmative defenses, including his eligibility for one of the IRS's voluntary disclosure programs (see Resp. 17–27). The United States refutes Zwerner's affirmative defenses, contending: the FBAR penalties do not violate Defendant's Eighth Amendment right to be free from excessive fines (see Mot. 22–25; Reply 5–6); the IRS is not prohibited from treating U.S. taxpayers disparately (see Mot. 25–26; Reply 8); and Zwerner was not eligible for and did not complete the 2009 Voluntary Disclosure Program (see Mot. 26–30; Reply 8–10).

U.S. citizens must keep records and report their interests in foreign financial accounts as required by law. See 31 U.S.C.§§ 5314(a), (c). Pursuant to the Code of Federal Regulations for "Reports of foreign financial accounts,"

> [e]ach United States person having a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, a bank, securities, or other financial account in a foreign country shall report such relationship to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for each year in which such relationship exists and shall provide such information as shall be specified in a reporting form prescribed under 31 U.S.C. [section] 5314 to be filed by such persons. The form prescribed under section 5314 is the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (TD–F 90–22.1).

31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(a) (alterations added). U.S. taxpayers must report foreign financial accounts exceeding $10,000 on or before June 30 of each calendar year for accounts maintained the previous calendar year. Id. § 1010.306(c).

Penalties for reporting violations regarding foreign financial agency transactions generally are not to exceed $10,000. See 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(B)(i). Willful violations, however, have a maximum penalty of $100,000, or fifty percent of the balance in the account at the time of the violation, whichever is greater. See id. §§ 5321(a)(5)(C)–(D). For a willful violation, the United States must show: (1) a U.S. person (2) with a financial interest or signatory or other authority (3) over a foreign financial account (4) that exceeds $10,000 in value (5) willfully (6) failed to file a timely FBAR disclosing the account. See id. §§ 5314, 5321(a)(5); 31 C.F.R. §§

1010.306(c), 350(a). The Government's Motion asks the Court to decide there are no triable issues of fact that Zwerner's conduct was willful.

3 The United States contends Zwerner is liable for willful conduct, and thus should be subject to the maximum civil penalty. (See Mot. 15–22). The definition of willfulness asserted by the United States includes reckless disregard. (See id. 17 (" 'willfulness' may be satisfied by establishing the individual's reckless disregard of a statutory duty, as opposed to acts that are known to violate the statutory duty at issue." (quoting United States v. McBride, 908 F. Supp. 2d 1186, 1204 (D. Utah 2012))). In McBride, the district court inferred willfulness from: the taxpayer's signature on his tax returns indicating constructive knowledge of relevant tax statutes, his familiarity with the accounting firm's promotional materials informing him of a duty to comply with FBAR requirements, and his disregard of the concerns he had over the legality of the accounting firm's strategies. See id. 908 F. Supp. 2d at 1205–06, 1208, 1210 (enforcing civil penalties against a taxpayer for willfully failing to comply with FBAR reporting requirements); see also United States v. Williams, 489 Fed.Appx. 655, 659–60 (4th Cir. 2012) (finding willful blindness and reckless conduct after a taxpayer had signed his tax return and was on inquiry notice of the FBAR reporting requirement but nonetheless failed to file). The United States maintains willfulness "does not require proof that the party knew he was acting wrongly." (Mot. 17 (citing Safeco Ins. Co. of Am. v. Burr, 551 U.S. 47, 57–58 (2007) (citations omitted) (holding that liability for willfully failing to comply with the Fair Credit Reporting Act extends to both known violations and violations based on reckless disregard of a statutory duty))).

Zwerner emphasizes a showing of willfulness requires a "voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty." United States v. Sturman, 951 F.2d 1466, 1476 (6th Cir. 1991) (quoting Cheek v. United States, 498 U.S. 192, 192 (1991)). The Sixth Circuit in Sturman acknowledged "willfulness can be inferred from a conscious effort to avoid learning about reporting requirements." Id. (citation omitted) (applying the statutory willfulness standard in a criminal conviction for a taxpayer's failure to file an FBAR Form 90–22.1).[3] In Cheek, involving a conviction for income tax evasion and failure to file income tax returns, the Supreme Court held:

> [a] good-faith misunderstanding of the law or a good-faith belief that one is not violating the law negates willfulness, whether or not the claimed belief or misunderstanding is objectively reasonable. Statutory willfulness, which protects the average citizen from prosecution for innocent mistakes made due to the complexity of the tax laws, ... is the voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty.

498 U.S. at 192 (alterations added; internal citations omitted).

Under either intent standard, genuine issues of material fact remain in dispute. While Zwerner admits he intended his foreign account to be a private, secret account, he states it was not done to avoid paying U.S. taxes. (See Zwerner Dep. 91:5–92:17, 138:7–143:13, 161:21–162:5, 163:25–164:8). Zwerner insists he did know of any FBAR reporting obligations when he filed his tax returns from 2004 to 2007, as he was under the mistaken impression that funds earned or held overseas did not need to be declared and taxed. (See id. 138:14–141:19). Furthermore, Zwerner states he did not declare the foreign account on his accountant's tax organizer form because he believed: he did not have signatory authority over the account, he only had an indirect interest in the account, he did not know if he earned foreign income annually, and the funds initially deposited into the account were earned overseas. (See id. 66:14–25, 94:12–20; 139:6–141:19, 160:12–162:1, 163:8–164:12).

To refute Zwerner's arguments regarding his state of mind, the United States cites Zwerner's August 9, 2010 letter to the IRS, in which Zwerner admits he knew he should have reported his foreign account. (See Reply ¶ 8; Aug. 9, 2010 Letter, Def.'s Ex. M). But Zwerner explains he included the statement at Agent Tarrago's direction, despite not agreeing with it. (See Zwerner Dep. 224:1–226:1). Zwerner insists Agent Tarrago dictated the information to include in the letter (see id. 221:20–222:2), and Zwerner complied, noting he signed the letter in an effort to obtain a reduced civil penalty as Agent Tarrago hinted at. (see id. 226:2–21). As further evidence of the disputed factual record, Agent Tarrago denies he authored the letter and says Zwerner admitted he knew of the filing requirement during other conversations. (See Reply ¶ 8; Agent Tarrago Dep., Pl.'s Ex. T, 141:20–142:13, 153:23–155:25 [ECF No. 26–1]).

4 Whether Zwerner willfully failed to file FBARs for tax years 2004 to 2007 clearly remains an issue to be decided by the trier of fact. See McCormick v. United States, 500 U.S. 257, 270 (1991) ("It goes without saying that matters of intent are for the jury to consider.") (citation omitted). Accordingly, it is ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment [ECF No. 21] is DENIED.

DONE AND ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2014 WL 11878430

Footnotes

[1] The Court refers to the page numbers provided by the Court's electronic case management ("CM/ECF") system when citing to Plaintiff's Motion, which is otherwise unnumbered.

[2] While the precise date the account was opened is unknown, Zwerner testifies he opened the account approximately 35 to 45 years ago, likely in the late 1960s. (See Zwerner Dep. 62:25–63:24 [ECF No. 21–1]).

[3] The civil and criminal statutes governing the filing of FBARs both use the term "willful." See 31 U.S.C. §§ 5321, 5322. A "term appearing in several places in a statutory text is generally read the same way each time it appears." Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 143 (1994) (citation omitted).

End of Document

147 T.C. 121
United States Tax Court.

WHISTLEBLOWER 21276-13W, Petitioner
v.
COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Respondent [*]

Docket Nos. 21276-13W, 21277-13W
|
Filed August 3, 2016

Synopsis

Background: In consolidated cases, claimants, a wife and her husband, sought awards after targeted business pled guilty and paid United States $74 million, and IRS's Whistleblower Office summarily rejected their claims because collection purportedly occurred before they filed their Forms 211, Application for Award for Original Information. Claimants appealed. The Tax Court, Jacobs, J., 144 T.C. 290, held that, in order to qualify for awards, claimants were not required to file Forms 211 prior to providing information, and remanded to Whistleblower Office. On remand, claimants and Whistleblower Office agreed on award of 24% of collected proceeds, but they disagreed as to whether business's criminal fine and civil forfeitures constituted part of collected proceeds.

Holdings: The Tax Court, Jacobs, J., held that:

[1] statutory term “collected proceeds” was not limited to amounts collected by IRS pursuant to Internal Revenue Code (IRC), and instead was broadly defined;

[2] statutory term “internal revenue laws” was not limited to laws codified under IRC;

[3] criminal fines that business agreed to in its guilty plea were part of broadly-defined “collected proceeds” used to calculate amount of award; and

[4] civil forfeitures that business agreed to in its guilty plea were part of broadly-defined “collected proceeds” used to calculate amount of award.

Decision for claimants.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Sealed, [1] for petitioners.

Richard L. Hatfield, John T. Arthur, and Jonathan D. Tepper, for respondent.

Ps, husband and wife, seek whistleblower awards authorized by I.R.C. sec. 7623(b). The Whistleblower Office rejected Ps' claims for awards as untimely and administratively closed their cases. In Whistleblower 21276-13W v. Commissioner, 144 T.C. 290 (2015), we (1) held that Ps' claims for awards were timely, (2) ordered the parties to attempt to resolve their differences and keep the Court informed as to their progress, and (3) retained jurisdiction. The parties subsequently agreed that Ps are eligible for an award of 24% of the collected proceeds.

The targeted taxpayer pleaded guilty to a violation of 18 U.S.C. sec. 371 and paid $74,131,694 in tax restitution, a criminal fine, and civil forfeitures to the Government. The parties agree that the tax restitution payment constitutes collected proceeds for purposes of an award under I.R.C. sec. 7623(b). They disagree as to whether payments of the criminal fine and civil forfeitures constitute collected proceeds.

Held: The criminal fine and civil forfeitures are collected proceeds for purposes of an award under I.R.C. sec. 7623(b).

SUPPLEMENTAL OPINION

JACOBS, Judge:

121 Petitioners, husband and wife, seek whistleblower awards authorized by section 7623(b). [2] Each petitioner filed a Form 211, Application for Award for Original Information, with the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) Whistleblower Office. The Whistleblower Office summarily rejected petitioners' claims on the basis that “additional tax, penalties, interest or other proceeds” had been collected before petitioners filed their respective Forms 211 and 122 administratively closed their cases. Petitioners appealed that rejection to this Court. See sec. 7623(b)(4). Because the documents in the IRS' administrative files were insufficient for us to conduct an effective review, a partial trial was held to determine (1) what information, disclosure, and/or action, if any, petitioners provided to employees, agents, and/or officers of the United States in detecting underpayments of tax and/or detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws or conniving at the same, see sec. 7623(a)(1) and (2), and (2) whether that information, disclosure, and/or action satisfies the requirements of section 7623(b).

We rendered an Opinion that fleshed out the IRS' inadequate administrative file. Whistleblower 21276–13W v. Commissioner, 144 T.C. 290 (2015). In that Opinion we held that Form 211 is not required to be filed with the Whistleblower Office before the whistleblower supplies information to other parts of the IRS or other Government agencies in order to be eligible for an award under section 7623(b). We issued an order requiring the parties to attempt to resolve their differences and to keep the Court informed of their progress. We did not remand the case to the Whistleblower Office.

During a conference call, the parties informed the Court that: (1) they agree that petitioners are eligible for an award; and (2) the award is to be 24% of the collected proceeds, i.e., proceeds that are eligible for an award; but (3) they could not reach agreement as to the amount of the collected proceeds.

Background

The targeted taxpayer pleaded guilty to conspiring to defraud the IRS, file false Federal income tax returns, and evade Federal income tax in violation of 18 U.S.C. sec. 371.[3] 123 The taxpayer paid $74,131,694 in tax restitution, a criminal fine, and civil forfeitures to the Government under 18 U.S.C. sec 3571.

The parties stipulated that the $74,131,694 collected from the taxpayer consisted of the following: tax restitution of $20,000,001; a criminal fine of $22,050,000;[4] a civil forfeiture of $15,821,000, representing gross fees the taxpayer received from its U.S. clients;[5] and the relinquishment of all claims to $16,260,693 that had been previously forfeited to the United States.[6]

Respondent determined, and petitioners agree, that the tax restitution payment constitutes collected proceeds for purposes of an award under section 7623(b)(1). The parties disagree as to whether payments of the criminal fine and civil forfeitures constitute collected proceeds.

Discussion

I. Introduction

The whistleblower program is one of the weapons used by the IRS to detect underpayments of tax and violations of the 124 internal revenue laws. The program is based on the principle "if you know something, say something." The statute provides that if the IRS institutes an administrative or judicial action against a taxpayer and collects proceeds as a result of information provided by a whistleblower, the informant will be monetarily rewarded with a portion of the collected proceeds.

The dispute to be resolved concerns statutory interpretation. Therefore, we begin our task by examining the language of the statute.

II. Statutory Background and IRS Guidance

Section 7623 (b), enacted by the Tax Relief and Health Care Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109-432, sec. 406, 120 Stat. at 2958, provides for a mandatory whistleblower award if the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute exceed $2 million and if certain other requirements are met. See sec. 7623(b)(3), (5), (6).[7] Section 7623(b)(1) provides:

> If the Secretary proceeds with any administrative or judicial action described in subsection (a) based on information brought to the Secretary's attention by an individual, such individual shall, subject to paragraph (2) [not applicable in this matter], receive an award at least 15 percent but not more than 30 percent of the collected proceeds (including penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts) resulting from the action (including any > related actions) or from any settlement in response to such action. The determination of the amount of such award by the Whistleblower Office shall depend upon the extent to which the individual substantially contributed to such action.

The administrative or judicial actions alluded to by section 7623(b)(1) relate to (1) the detection of underpayments of tax or (2) the detection and bringing to trial and punishment of persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws or conniving at the same. See sec. 7623(a).[8] Section 7623(b) was 125 enacted in response to the ineffectiveness of the prior, discretionary whistleblower program, now codified as section 7623(a).

In 2010, the IRS provided administrative guidance regarding the whistleblower program in Internal Revenue Manual sec. 25.2.2.12 (June 18, 2010).[9] That guidance, in pertinent part, states:

> (1) "Collected proceeds" are the monies the IRS obtains directly from a taxpayer which are based upon the information the whistleblower has provided. Satisfaction of taxpayers' liabilities by reducing a credit balance is not within the scope of collected proceeds.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> (3) For claims filed after December 20, 2006, awards are paid out of the proceeds collected, including penalties, interest, additions to tax and additional amounts.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> 126 (9) Criminal Fines: Criminal fines, which must be deposited into the Victims of Crime Fund, cannot be used for payment of whistleblower awards.

III. Positions of the Parties

A. Respondent's Position

Respondent asserts that the plain language of section 7623 makes clear that only those proceeds assessed and collected under a provision of title 26 may be used to pay a whistleblower award because section 7623 relates solely to violations of Federal tax laws. Consequently, respondent continues, criminal fines and civil forfeitures are not "collected proceeds" for purposes of the Secretary's paying an award under title 26.[10] Respondent further maintains that if criminal fines and forfeitures could be used for payment of the whistleblower award, an "irreconcilable conflict" would be created "between Title 26's whistleblower statute and the provisions of 42 U.S.C. sec. 10601 [regarding criminal fines] and 31 U.S.C. sec. 9703.1[[11] [regarding civil forfeitures] that specify the purposes for which moneys collected under Title 18 in this case may be used."

B. Petitioners' Position

Petitioners also maintain that the plain language of section 7623(b)(1) is clear. Petitioners assert that the entire approximately $74 million collected from the taxpayer is collected proceeds because that amount was the settlement payment resulting from an administrative or judicial action taken by the Secretary and relates to acts committed by the taxpayer in violation of the provisions of title 26, specifically sections 7201 and 7206(1).

127 IV. Analysis

A. Collected Proceeds Are Not Limited to Amounts Collected Under Title 26.

[1] The language of section 7623(b)(1) is plain. And "[w]here * * * the statute's language is plain, 'the sole function of the courts is to enforce it according to its terms.' " United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241, 109 S.Ct. 1026, 103 L.Ed.2d 290 (1989) (quoting Caminetti v. United States, 242 U.S. 470, 485, 37 S.Ct. 192, 61 L.Ed. 442 (1917)). We therefore must "give effect to the will of Congress, and where its will has been expressed in reasonably plain terms, 'that language must ordinarily be regarded as conclusive.' " Griffin v. Oceanic Contractors, Inc., 458 U.S. 564, 570, 102 S.Ct. 3245, 73 L.Ed.2d 973 (1982) (quoting Consumer Prod. Safety Comm'n v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 108, 100 S.Ct. 2051, 64 L.Ed.2d 766 (1980)).

[2] [3] Section 7623(b)(1) is straightforward and written in expansive terms, namely, where, using information provided by the whistleblower, the Secretary proceeds with an administrative or judicial action regarding underpayments of tax or any action regarding the violation of, or conniving to violate, the internal revenue laws, the whistleblower is entitled to an award based on a percentage of the collected proceeds resulting from the Secretary's action (as well any related actions) or from any settlement in response to such action. The term at the center of the dispute herein, i.e. "collected proceeds", is not statutorily defined. We therefore must rely on the canons of statutory construction that: (1) when words used in a statute are not specifically defined, courts generally give the words their plain or ordinary meaning, FCC v. AT&T, Inc., 562 U.S. 397, 403, 131 S.Ct. 1177, 179 L.Ed.2d 132 (2011), and (2) words in a statute must be read in their context, with a view to their place in the overall statutory scheme, Davis v. Mich. Dep't of Treasury, 489 U.S. 803, 809, 109 S.Ct. 1500, 103 L.Ed.2d 891 (1989). Moreover, we are mindful that reliance on a statute's context is a "subtle business, calling for great wariness lest what professes to be mere rendering becomes creation and attempted interpretation of legislation becomes legislation itself." Palmer v. Massachusetts, 308 U.S. 79, 83, 60 S.Ct. 34, 84 L.Ed. 93 (1939).

[4] With these canons in mind, we turn to the meaning of "collected proceeds". "Proceeds", as the Supreme Court explained, is "a word of great generality." Indeed, the Supreme Court noted that "[p]roceeds are not necessarily 128 money." Phelps v. Harris, 101 U.S. 370, 380, 25 L.Ed. 855 1879; see Whistleblower 22716-13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. ——, —— (slip op. at 22) (Mar. 14, 2016). Our Court has stated that "[t]he general dictionary definition of 'proceeds' encompasses 'what is produced by or derived from something (as a sale, investment, levy, business) by way of total revenue: the total amount brought in' ". Anderson v. Commissioner, 123 T.C. 219, 232 (2004) (quoting Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1807 (1974)), aff'd, 137 Fed.Appx. 373 (1st Cir. 2005). And the Oxford English Dictionary defines "proceeds" as "[t]hat which proceeds, is derived, or results from something; that which is obtained or gained by any transaction; produce, outcome, profit." 12 Oxford English Dictionary 544 (2d ed. 1989). The definition of "collect" is similarly expansive: "[t]o gather together into one place or group; to gather, get together." 3 Oxford English Dictionary 476.

We find instructive the decision by the Court of the Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in United States v. S. Half of Lot 7 & Lot 8, 910 F.2d 488 (8th Cir. 1990) (en banc). Therein, the Court of Appeals had to interpret 18 U.S.C. sec. 1955(d), which provides that any property, including money, used in an illegal gambling operation may be seized and forfeited to the United States. The plaintiffs owned real property that was seized by the United States. They argued that only personal property could be seized because the statute did not provide specifically that real property could be forfeited. Disagreeing with the plaintiffs, the Court of Appeals held that the term "any property" is to be given its plain meaning and that the addition of the phrase "including money" does not limit the breadth of the term "any property".[12] The Court of Appeals, quoting the Supreme Court, stated:

> We believe "Congress could not have chosen ... broader words to define the scope of what was to be forfeited." United States v. Monsanto, 491 U.S. 600, [607], 109 S.Ct. 2657, 105 L.Ed.2d 512 * * * (1989). The words in question here are commonly understood, and "Congress' failure to supplement [section 1955(d)'s] comprehensive phrase —'any property'—with an exclamatory 'and we even mean [real property]' does not lessen the force of the statute's plain language." 129 Id. at * * * [609] (emphasis omitted). * * * [S. Half of Lot 7 & Lot 8, 910 F.2d at 490.]

We are leery of arbitrarily limiting the meaning of an expansive and general term such as "collected proceeds". In drafting section 7623(b)(1), Congress could have provided that the whistleblower's award is to be based on taxes and other amounts assessed and collected by the IRS under title 26. But it did not. Instead, Congress chose to use a sweeping term "collected proceeds" as the basis of the award. The context of the statute in which the term "collected proceeds" is used reinforces our conclusion. Congress revealed its intent that the mandatory whistleblower program be an expansive rewards program by including in section 7623(b)(1) other broad and sweeping terms such as "any administrative or judicial action", "any related actions", and "any settlement in response to such action."

Respondent would have us narrow the definition of collected proceeds, despite the term's expansive ordinary meaning. Respondent would limit collected proceeds to those moneys assessed and collected under the provisions of title 26. Respondent claims the phrase "detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws", as used in section 7623(a)(2), is essentially synonymous with the phrase "detecting underpayments of tax", as used in section 7623(a)(1), and that both phrases refer to taxes assessed and collected under a provision of title 26. Consequently, according to respondent, only amounts assessed and collected under a provision of title 26 may be used in funding the award to a whistleblower.

[5] In making this argument, respondent notes that the Code mentions "internal revenue laws" in a number of instances. See, e.g., sec. 6301 ("The Secretary shall collect the taxes imposed by the internal revenue laws."); sec. 6065 ("Except as otherwise provided by the Secretary, any return, declaration, statement, or other document required to be made under any provision of the internal revenue laws * * * shall contain or be verified by a written declaration that it is made under penalties of perjury."); sec. 1400S(e) (authorizing the Secretary to "make such adjustments in the application of the internal revenue laws as may be necessary to ensure that taxpayers do not lose any deduction or credit or experience a change of filing status" by reason of exigencies caused by 130 various hurricanes). Respondent also invites our attention to the caption of section 7212, "Attempts to Interfere with Administration of Internal Revenue Laws", and points out that subsection (a) of section 7212 makes it a crime to block an official acting "under this title".

We do not accept respondent's position that "collected proceeds" are limited to title 26 collections. If Congress had wanted to limit collected proceeds to title 26 collections, it could, and would, have done so. Moreover, we disagree that internal revenue laws are limited to laws codified in title 26. To the contrary, none of the provisions cited by respondent state, or even imply, that internal revenue laws are limited to those laws codified in title 26.[13]

There are numerous instances where internal revenue laws are found outside title 26. One instance relates to relief from employment tax obligations. So called "section 530 relief" from employment tax does not refer to section 530 of the Code (which governs Coverdell education savings accounts), but rather to section 530 of the Revenue Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-600, 92 Stat. at 2885. Another instance: Although section 6212 is the Code provision relating to notices of deficiency, it is section 3463(a) of the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998, Pub. L. No. 105-206, 112 Stat. at 767, which provides that "[t]he Secretary * * * shall include on each notice of deficiency under section 6212 * * * the date determined * * * as the last day on which the taxpayer may file a petition with the Tax Court." And perhaps the most telling instance: The very provisions establishing the Whistleblower Office are found outside the Code. See Tax Relief and Health Care Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109-432, div. A, sec. 406(b), 120 Stat. at 2959-2960.[14]

131 The Code itself refers to laws outside title 26 as internal revenue laws. As an example, section 6531 provides periods of limitation on criminal prosecutions:

> SEC. 6531. PERIODS OF LIMITATION ON CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.
>
> No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any of the various offenses arising under the internal revenue laws unless the indictment is found or the information instituted within 3 years next after the commission of the offense, except that the period of limitation shall be 6 years—
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> (8) for offenses arising under section 371 of Title 18 of the United States Code, where the object of the conspiracy is to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat any tax or the payment thereof.

We find the reference in section 6531(8) to 18 U.S.C. sec. 371 to be especially illuminating inasmuch as the targeted taxpayer pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud the IRS, file false Federal income tax returns, and evade Federal income tax, in violation of 18 U.S.C. sec. 371.[15] Finally, the phrase "internal revenue laws" dates from the earliest version of the whistleblower statute enacted in 1867. At that time, the modern title 26 did not exist; internal revenue laws meant all revenue laws. We think it erroneous to impose a post facto restriction on the meaning of the phrase not intended by Congress when it enacted the legislation. In sum, the phrase "internal revenue laws" is not limited to those laws codified in title 26.

Respondent further argues that the term "collected proceeds", as used in section 7623(b)(1), pertains solely to taxes and related payments because the list of items deemed to be collected proceeds is set forth in a parenthetical: "collected proceeds (including penalties, interest, additions to tax, and 132 additional amounts)". Respondent asserts that "the terms penalties, addition to tax, and additional amounts have specific meanings under Title 26 that do not extend beyond the definition of 'tax'." Respondent bases his argument on section 6665(a)(2), which provides that "any reference in this title to 'tax' imposed by this title shall be deemed also to refer to the additions to the tax, additional amounts, and penalties provided by this chapter", as well as on section 6671(a), which provides that "[t]he penalties and liabilities provided by this subchapter * * * shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as taxes. Except as otherwise provided, any reference in this title to 'tax' imposed by this title shall be deemed also to refer to the penalties and liabilities provided by this subchapter." Respondent argues:

> Neither section 7623 nor its legislative history [respondent refers to the legislative history of sec. 7623(a)] provides a basis to conclude that Congress intended the terms penalties, additions to tax, and additional amounts in section 7623 to have meaning different than that set forth in section 6665. Penalties, additions to tax, and additional amounts under section 7623(b) pertain to amounts assessed under Title 26 that increase the total amount of tax liability. More broadly, these terms have a well-established meaning under Subtitle F of the Code—they are, in fact, the title of Chapter 68 and refer to those penalties, additions to tax, and additional amounts.

In making this argument, respondent ignores the fact that the first word in the parenthetical listing those items deemed to be collected proceeds is "including". And the Code itself provides that "[t]he terms 'includes' and 'including' when used in a definition contained in this title shall not be deemed to exclude other things otherwise within the meaning of the term defined." Sec. 7701(c); see also Wnuck v. Commissioner, 136 T.C. 498, 506 (2011) ("Anyone fluent in English knows that the word 'includes' cannot be assumed to mean 'includes only'."); Dunaway v. Commissioner, 124 T.C. 80, 91-92 (2005) (quoting Cannon v. Nicholas, 80 F.2d 934, 936 (10th Cir. 1935)). By using the word "including", Congress clearly intended the list of items deemed to be collected proceeds to be nonexhaustive. Moreover, the list of items deemed to be collected proceeds includes the word "penalties". In several places the Code interposes the word "fine" with the word "penalties". See, e.g., sec. 7201 ("Any person who willfully attempts in any manner to evade or defeat 133 any tax * * * shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law * * * be fined not more than $100,000 [.]"); sec. 162(f) ("No deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any fine or similar penalty paid to a government for the violation of any law."). Finally, we note that the list of items deemed to be collected proceeds does not include "tax", yet respondent conceded that the restitution payment (i.e., a tax) qualifies as collected proceeds. [16] By making this concession, respondent appears to concede concomitantly that the universe of "collected proceeds" is greater than the items deemed to be collected proceeds listed in the parenthetical.

Our holding in this matter is not in conflict with our holding in Whistleblower 22716-13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. ——, wherein the Court examined the $2 million threshold requirement of section 7623(b)(5)(B). See supra note 7. Section 7623(b)(5)(B) provides that for a whistleblower to qualify for the mandatory whistleblower award, "the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute [must] exceed $2,000,000." In Whistleblower 22176-13W, the whistleblower provided information to the Government that resulted in the collection of a small tax restitution payment and Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBAR) civil penalties under 31 U.S.C. sec. 5321(a) in an amount exceeding $2 million. The IRS Whistleblower Office denied the whistleblower's claim for an award on the basis that (1) the Government had obtained complete information about the taxpayer's activities from another source and (2) the whistleblower's claim did not meet the $2 million threshold of section 7623(b)(5)(B) because FBAR penalties do not constitute "tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, * * * [or] additional amounts". In arguing his case before us, the whistleblower asserted that FBAR penalties constituted an "additional amount" as used in section 7623(b)(5)(B).

134 We rejected the whistleblower's assertion. In interpreting what constitutes "additional amounts" we held that the phrase "additional amounts" as it appears in the series in section 7623(b)(5)(B), i.e., "tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts", was a term of art. We noted that the phrase "additional amounts" when used in a series that also includes "tax" and either "additions to tax" or "additions to the tax" appeared nearly 40 times in title 26, and when the words were tied together, as they are in section 7623(b)(5)(B), they had a specific technical meaning. We stated we repeatedly have held that the phrase "additional amounts", which the whistleblower sought to extend to FBAR penalties, "is a term of art that refers exclusively to the civil penalties enumerated in chapter 68, subchapter A" of title 26 which are assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as taxes. Whistleblower 22716-13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. at —— (slip op. at 19).

In reaching our holding, we determined that the wording in the threshold requirement of section 7623(b)(5)(B) ("if the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute exceed $2,000,000") is different from that of section 7623(b)(1), which provides for an award of a percentage of the collected proceeds ("including penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts"). After acknowledging that "the Supreme Court observed long ago that the word 'proceeds' is 'of great generality' * * * Phelps v. Harris, 101 U.S. 370, 380, 25 L.Ed. 855 1880", we explicitly rejected the whistleblower's argument that we should read the phrase "collected proceeds" into section 7623(b)(5)(B), stating: "Congress could have employed, but did not employ, the term 'collected proceeds' when drafting the $2,000,000 monetary threshold." Whistleblower 22716-13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. at —— (slip op. at 22). We observed that the word "including" was not used in section 7623(b)(5)(B) and that "Congress explicitly and unambiguously provided that a whistleblower is eligible for a non-discretionary award only 'if the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute' exceed $2,000,000." Id. Moreover, we explicitly declined to entertain the Commissioner's arguments that collected proceeds are limited to amounts collected under title 26 and that because FBAR penalties are paid under title 31, they do not constitute collected proceeds. Id. at —— n.6 (slip op. at 14).

135 In sum, we herein hold that the phrase "collected proceeds" is sweeping in scope and is not limited to amounts assessed and collected under title 26. To paraphrase the Court of Appeals: Congress' not supplementing the comprehensive phrase "collected proceeds" with an exclamatory "and we mean all proceeds collected" does not lessen the force of the statute's plain language.

B. Section 7623(b)(1) Uses Collected Proceeds to Calculate the Amount of the Award.

As has been discussed supra, section 7623 governs two distinct whistleblower programs: Section 7623(a) governs the longstanding discretionary whistleblower program, and section 7623(b) governs the mandatory whistleblower program at issue in these cases. These two programs provide awards to whistleblowers via two subtly different mechanisms.

Section 7623(a) provides that in cases where an award is not otherwise provided by law, if the Secretary in his discretion makes an award, "[a]ny amount * * * shall be paid from the proceeds of amounts collected by reason of the information provided, and any amount so collected shall be available for such payments." The mandate of section 7623(a) is twofold. First, because the statute gives the Secretary discretion in determining not just whether to make an award, but also the amount of the award to be made, subsection (a) limits the amount of the award to the proceeds collected as a consequence of the whistleblower's information. Second, the statute explicitly provides that all of the proceeds collected are available for funding the award, thus emphasizing that the whistleblower may receive an award based on all the proceeds collected as a result of the whistleblower's information. In other words, section 7623(a) ensures that the award cannot exceed the amount of the proceeds collected, but with the proviso that all of the proceeds collected are to be available to fund the award.

Section 7623(b) is different. Unlike subsection (a), which requires that an award "shall be paid from" a specific funding source, subsection (b) sets forth how to calculate the whistleblower's award. Paragraph (1) directs that the whistleblower "shall * * * receive as an award at least 15 percent but not more than 30 percent of the collected proceeds 136 * * * resulting from the action (including any related actions) or from any settlement in response to such action."

[6] [7] The difference in wording between subsections (a) and (b) of section 7623 is striking. Section 7623(a) explicitly provides that the whistleblower award is to be paid from the proceeds collected. In contrast, subsection(b)(1) provides that the whistleblower award is calculated by using a percentage of the collected proceeds. Had Congress sought to require that the section 7623(b) award payment be drawn from the collected proceeds, it could and would have done so, such as by incorporating the wording of subsection (a). But it did not. And we are mindful that when "Congress includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion." Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 23, 104 S.Ct. 296, 78 L.Ed.2d 17 (1983) (quoting United States v. Wong Kim Bo, 472 F.2d 720, 722 (5th Cir. 1972)); see Whistleblower 22716-13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. at —— (slip op. at 23). We therefore hold that the collected proceeds are to be used only for purposes of calculating the amount of the award to be given to the whistleblower.

C. Criminal Fines Are Collected Proceeds.

As previously noted, both the discretionary and mandatory whistleblower awards program require the Secretary to proceed with an administrative or judicial action which relates to, inter alia, the detection and bringing to trial and punishment of persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws or conniving at the same. See sec. 7623(a) and (b)(1). The phrase "punishment * * * [of] persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws or conniving at the same" has throughout the existence of the statute meant punishment of criminal tax violations. See supra note 8. In these cases the taxpayer pleaded guilty to conspiring to evade tax and file false statements under 18 U.S.C. sec. 371, which section 6531(8) refers to as an internal revenue law.

[8] Paragraph (1) of section 7623(b) includes penalties as collected proceeds. And as we noted supra p. 20, 104 S.Ct. 296, we are mindful that (1) title 26 often treats a fine as a subset within the purview of a penalty, and (2) title 26 provides for fines levied as punishment. See, e.g., secs. 7201, 7212, 7217. In these cases the Secretary, through the IRS' criminal enforcement 137 unit, took administrative action[17] in response to information provided by petitioners. That action ultimately resulted in the taxpayer's entering into a plea agreement and, inter alia, agreeing to pay a criminal fine.

Respondent acknowledges that "[i]n 1996 Congress amended section 7623 to add 'detecting underpayments of tax,' to clarify that information pertaining to civil as well as criminal violations of the internal revenue laws constitutes a basis for a whistleblower award." Thus, respondent acknowledges that since the whistleblower statute was first enacted in 1867, almost a century and a half ago, whistleblowers could receive an award for information relating to criminal tax violations. Respondent's admission is at loggerheads with his fundamental position in these cases that criminal fines do not constitute collected proceeds because they were not assessed and collected under title 26.[18]

As an alternative argument, respondent asserts that a criminal fine collected by the Government cannot be considered collected proceeds because (1) pursuant to 42 U.S.C. sec. 10601[19] all criminal fines collected from persons convicted of offenses against the United States, with certain exceptions not herein applicable, are to be deposited in the Crime Victims Fund; (2) criminal fines are paid by the taxpayer directly to the imposing court, which in turn deposits them into the Crime Victims Fund; and (3) at no time are criminal 138 fines available to the Secretary, thus making it impossible for him to use the fines to pay a whistleblower award.

Respondent's argument arises from a fundamental misinterpretation of the plain language of the statute. Section 7623(b)(1) does not refer to, or require, the availability of funds to be used in making an award. As we noted supra section IV.B., section 7623(b)(1) establishes the manner in which the Secretary calculates the award to be made to a whistleblower who qualifies for the mandatory award program. The statute explicitly instructs the Secretary to pay the whistleblower who qualifies for the mandatory award program an award of 15% to 30% of the collected proceeds. We have already explained that "collected proceeds" is a broadly defined term: It encompasses "the total amount brought in" by the Government. See Anderson v. Commissioner, 123 T.C. at 232. On the other hand, the discretionary award program of subsection (a) requires the Secretary to pay the whistleblower award "from the proceeds; of amounts collected by reason of the information provided" by the whistleblower, presumably to prevent the amount of the award from exceeding the amount of the proceeds collected; but in doing so the statute explicitly makes all such proceeds collected available for use in making the award. Seemingly, respondent desires the Court to impose some, but not all, of the rules of the discretionary whistleblower award program of section 7623(a) on the mandatory whistleblower award program of section 7623(b).[20] This we will not do. The mandatory award program of subsection (b) is separate and distinct from the discretionary award program of subsection (a).

We thus hold that criminal fines constitute collected proceeds for purposes of an award under section 7623(b)(1).

D. Civil Forfeitures Are Collected Proceeds.

[9] The taxpayer agreed to (1) relinquish claims to approximately $16.2 million in moneys previously forfeited and (2) forfeit approximately $15.8 million representing gross fees it received from U.S. taxpayers. See supra p. 5. These forfeitures 139 resulted from an administrative action with respect to the laundering of proceeds, which, in turn, arose from a conspiracy to violate sections 7201(tax evasion) and 7206 (fraudulent/false tax returns). Within the context of section 7623(b)(1), we are of the opinion that a forfeiture is similar to a criminal fine.

Respondent argues that the amounts forfeited by the taxpayer are not collected proceeds because they were not collected as a result of a violation of the tax laws under title 26. But as we held supra, internal revenue laws are not limited to laws codified in title 26. Laundering proceeds gained from the filing of false returns and tax evasion is a violation of internal revenue laws.

Respondent asserts that forfeited moneys do not constitute collected proceeds because they are required to be deposited into the Department of the Treasury Forfeiture Fund, governed by 31 U.S.C. sec. 9703(a).[21] This assertion is similar to that advanced by respondent with respect to the criminal fine; we reject it.

Respondent next argues that the discretionary whistleblower awards program governed by section 7623(a) prevents the inclusion of forfeited moneys as part of the collected proceeds. Respondent bases this argument on the flush language of subsection (a), which provides that the Secretary may make a discretionary whistleblower award only "in cases where such expenses are not otherwise provided for by law" and a separate awards program exists for civil forfeitures in 31 U.S.C. sec. 9703(d)(2). As we stated previously, this argument is flawed because section 7623(a) relates to discretionary whistleblower awards, whereas the type of award involved in these cases relates to a mandatory whistleblower award authorized by section 7623(b)(1). See Whistleblower 22716-13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. at —— (slip op. at 22-23).

We thus hold that civil forfeitures constitute collected proceeds for purposes of an award under section 7623(b)(1).

V. Conclusion

Section 7623(b)(1) uses plain language. The words and terms in question are commonly understood. The term for amounts used to calculate the award is "collected proceeds". 140 The term "collected proceeds" means all proceeds collected by the Government from the taxpayer. The term is broad and sweeping; it is not limited to amounts assessed and collected under title 26.

To reflect the aforesaid, and on the bases of (1) respondent's acknowledgment that petitioners are entitled to an award under section 7623(b) for information brought to the Secretary's attention; (2) the parties' agreement that the aforesaid award should be 24% of the proceeds collected from the taxpayer; (3) the parties' agreement that the taxpayer paid the Government $74,131,694 in tax restitution, a criminal fine, and civil forfeitures; (4) the parties' agreement that the taxpayer's $20,000,001 restitution payment constitutes collected proceeds for purposes of an award under section 7623(b); and (5) the holdings we herein make, namely that the criminal fine of $22,050,000 and the civil forfeitures of $32,081,693 are collected proceeds for purposes of an award under section 7623(b), we conclude that petitioners are entitled to a $17,791,607 (24% x $74,131,694) award under section 7623(b).

Appropriate decisions will be entered for petitioners.

All Citations

147 T.C. No. 4, 147 T.C. 121, Tax Ct. Rep. (CCH) 60,664, Tax Ct. Rep. Dec. (RIA) 147.4

Footnotes

* This Opinion supplements our previously filed Opinion, Whistleblower 21276-13W v. Commissioner, 144 T.C. 290 (2015).

[1] The names of petitioners' counsel have been omitted in furtherance of protecting petitioners' identities.

[2] Unless otherwise indicated, all section references are to the Internal Revenue Code (Code or title 26). All dollar amounts are rounded to the nearest dollar.

[3] Title 18 U.S.C. sec. 371 (2012) provides:

> If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.
>
> If, however, the offense, the commission of which is the object of the conspiracy, is a misdemeanor only, the punishment for such conspiracy shall not exceed the maximum punishment provided for such misdemeanor.

The underlying crimes within the conspiracy charge were (1) tax evasion in violation of sec. 7201 and (2) fraudulent declarations made under penalties of perjury in violation of sec. 7206(1).

[4] The criminal fine was imposed by a Federal court pursuant to 18 U.S.C. sec. 3571 as a result of the taxpayer's guilty plea to conspiring to defraud the IRS, file false Federal income tax returns, and evade Federal income taxes in violation of 18 U.S.C. sec. 371. Title 18 U.S.C. sec. 3571(a) provides that a defendant who has been found guilty of an offense may be sentenced to pay a fine. As relevant in these cases an organization may be fined the amount specified in the law setting forth the offense, 18 U.S.C. sec. 3571(c)(1); $500,000 for a felony, 18 U.S.C. sec. 3571(c)(3); or if the defendant derived pecuniary gain from the offense, or if the offense results in pecuniary loss to a person other than the defendant, a fine of not more than the greater of twice the gross gain or twice the gross loss, 18 U.S.C. sec. 3571(d).

[5] The money was forfeited pursuant to 18 U.S.C. sec. 981(a)(1)(A), which provides for a forfeiture of property involved in a financial transaction (money laundering) with the intent to engage in conduct constituting a violation of sec. 7201 (tax evasion) or sec. 7206 (fraud/filing false returns).

[6] The relinquishment was from a prior civil forfeiture pursuant to 18 U.S.C. sec. 981(a)(1)(A).

[7] See Whistleblower 22716-13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. —— (Mar. 14, 2016), for an analysis of sec. 7623(b)(5).

[8] Sec. 7623(a) provides:

> SEC. 7623(a). In General.—The Secretary, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, is authorized to pay such sums as he deems necessary for—
>
> (1) detecting underpayments of tax, or
>
> (2) detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws or conniving at the same,
>
> in cases where such expenses are not otherwise provided for by law. Any amount payable under the preceding sentence shall be paid from the proceeds of amounts collected by reason of the information provided, and any amount so collected shall be available for such payments.

The sec. 7623(a) discretionary awards program derives from legislation enacted in 1867 that authorizes the Secretary “to pay such sums * * * as may in his judgment be deemed necessary for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws, or conniving at the same.” Act of Mar. 2, 1867, ch. 169 sec. 7, 14 Stat. 471, 473; see Whistleblower 22716-13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. at —— (slip op. at 7-8). In 1996 the statute was amended to clarify that providing the Government with information detecting underpayments of tax qualified for an award. Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2, Pub. L. No. 104-168, sec. 1209(a), 110 Stat. at 1473. The legislative history states that “[t]he bill clarifies that rewards may be paid for information relating to civil violations, as well as criminal violations. The bill also provides that the rewards are to be paid out of the proceeds of amounts (other than interest) collected by reason of the information provided.” H.R. Rept. No. 104-506, at 51 (1996), 1996-3 C.B. 49, 99.

[9] The Secretary promulgated regulations with respect to sec. 7623(b) applicable to whistleblower information submitted on or after Aug. 12, 2014, and to claims for awards under sec. 7623(b) that are open as of Aug. 12, 2014. Secs. 301.7623-2(f), 301.7623-4(e), Proced. & Admin. Regs. The Whistleblower Office denied each petitioner's claim for an award on or about Aug. 13, 2013, and the parties agree that the regulations do not apply in these cases.

[10] Respondent concedes that the tax restitution payment made by the taxpayer qualifies as collected proceeds (even though the restitution was made pursuant to 18 U.S.C. sec. 3556) because it was assessed as a tax and collected by the IRS under sec. 6201(a)(4).

[11] Respondent appears to refer to 31 U.S.C. sec. 9703(a) (redesignated 31 U.S.C. sec. 9705, by the Justice for Victims of Trafficking Act of 2015, Pub. L. No. 114-22, sec. 105(c)(1)(A), 129 Stat. at 237).

[12] The Court of Appeals also noted that legislative history generally cannot overcome the plain words and meaning of a statute. United States v. S. Half of Lot 7 & Lot 8, 910 F.2d 488, 490 (8th Cir. 1990) (citing Ex parte Collett, 337 U.S. 55, 61 (1949)).

[13] Indeed, the IRS itself acknowledges that tax laws may be found outside title 26. In a Chief Counsel Memorandum discussing whistleblower matters, dated April 23, 2012, the IRS, citing IRM pt. 4.10.12.1.2(3) (Nov. 9, 2007), stated: "Title 26 of the United States Code, reproduced separately as the Internal Revenue Code (Code), contains most of the Federal tax law."

[14] We doubt that respondent would agree with the contention that an individual who threatened a Whistleblower Office official would not be in violation of sec. 7212 because the statute governing the activities of the Whistleblower Office is not codified under title 26.

[15] Ours is not the only court to note that tax laws and related laws may be found beyond those codified in title 26. The District Court for the Northern District of California in Hom v. United States, 2013 WL 5442960 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 30, 2013) aff'd, 645 Fed.Appx. 583, 2016 WL 1161577 (9th Cir. Mar. 24, 2016), stated: "[T]he issue here is whether [31 U.S.C.] Section 5314 is either an internal revenue law or related statute (either designation would make the disclosure [of taxpayer information under sec. 6103] permissible). The United States argues that [31 U.S.C.] Section 5314 is a 'related statute' under Section 6103 (Dkt. No. 13 at 6). This is correct. Congress intended for [31 U.S.C.] Section 5314 to fall under 'tax administration.' "

[16] Respondent conceded that the tax restitution payment constitutes collected proceeds because it was assessed under sec. 6201(a)(4). Sec. 6201(a)(4) was enacted as part of the Firearms Excise Tax Improvement Act of 2010, Pub. L. No. 111-237, sec. 3(a), 124 Stat. at 2497-2498, effective for restitution ordered after Aug. 16, 2010. Under respondent's logic, if the whistleblowers in this matter had provided information to the Government before Aug. 17, 2010, they would not be entitled to any award.

[17] Although inapplicable in these cases, see supra note 9, sec. 301.7623-2(a)(2), Proced. & Admin. Regs., includes criminal investigations in its definition of administrative action. "[T]he term administrative action means all or a portion of an Internal Revenue Service (IRS) civil or criminal proceeding against any person that may result in collected proceeds * * * including, for example * * * an examination, * * * or a criminal investigation."

[18] As stated supra note 8, in 1996 sec. 7623 was amended to clarify that an award could be made for information relating to the detection of a civil tax underpayment as well as detection of a criminal tax violation. Thus, the IRS has turned itself around. The implication of the amendment is that before 1996, the IRS denied whistleblower awards for reporting civil tax deficiencies on the basis that the statute authorized awards only for the reporting of criminal tax violations. Now respondent asserts that an award may be made only for the reporting of civil tax deficiencies.

[19] Enacted by the Act of Oct. 12, 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, sec. 1402, 98 Stat. at 2170-2171.

[20] Respondent would have us impose the rule that awards must be paid from proceeds collected, but not make all such proceeds available for such payment.

[21] See supra note 11.

End of Document

951 F.2d 1466
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff–Appellee,
v.
David A. STURMAN (90–3147); Ralph L. Levine (90–3148); Reuben Sturman (90–3151); and Melvin Kaminsky (90–3750), Defendants–Appellants.

Nos. 90–3147, 90–3148, 90–3151 and 90–3750.
|
Argued Aug. 5, 1991.
|
Decided Oct. 24, 1991.
|
Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied Jan. 8, 1992.

Synopsis

Defendants were convicted in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, George W. White, J., of conspiring to defraud the United States, and one defendant was convicted additionally of attempted tax evasion, filing false income tax returns, wilfully failing to maintain records and file reports, and endeavoring to obstruct justice. Defendants appealed. The Court of Appeals, Kennedy, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) defendants were properly charged with conspiracy to defraud the United States rather than conspiracy to commit specific offense against the United States; (2) evidence was sufficient to support challenged convictions; (3) foreign depositions were properly admitted; and (4) foreign bank records were properly admitted.

Affirmed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

1471 Bernard A. Smith, Office of U.S. Atty., Stephen H. Jigger, Office of U.S. Atty., Organized Crime Strike Force Unit, Cleveland, Ohio, Frank J. Marine (argued and briefed), U.S. Dept. of Justice, Crim. Div., Washington, D.C., for plaintiff-appellee.

Arthur Wells, Jr., Berkeley, Cal., Alan M. Caplan (argued and briefed), Bushnell, Caplan & Fielding, San Francisco, Cal., for defendant-appellant David A. Sturman.

Paul J. Cambria, Jr., Lipsitz, Green, Fahringer, Roll, Schuller & James, Buffalo, N.Y. (argued and briefed), for defendants-appellants Ralph L. Levine and Melvin Kaminsky.

Jeremy A. Rosenbaum, J. Michael Murray (argued and briefed), Berkman, Gordon, Murray & Palda, Cleveland, Ohio, for defendant-appellant Reuben Sturman.

Before KENNEDY and MILBURN, Circuit Judges, and WILHOIT, District Judge. [*]

KENNEDY, Circuit Judge.

I. STATEMENT OF FACTS

On June 25, 1987, the defendants were charged with one count of conspiring to defraud the United States by impeding governmental functions. Reuben Sturman was also indicted on counts of attempted tax evasion, filing false income tax returns, willfully failing to maintain records and file reports, and one count of endeavoring to obstruct justice. Following their conviction, Reuben Sturman was sentenced to 10 years imprisonment, fined approximately $2.5 million, and ordered to pay prosecution costs. The other defendants were sentenced to shorter terms and fined lesser amounts.

Reuben Sturman engaged in the production, sale, and distribution of sexually explicit books and tapes. Some of the individual businesses ran “peep booths” which played sexually explicit videos. David Sturman, Reuben Sturman's son, was responsible for his father's businesses in the San Francisco area. Ralph Levine ran the businesses in Nevada and Melvin Kaminsky managed Reuben Sturman's principal business, Sovereign News Company.

The defendants, led by Reuben Sturman, created 150 domestic corporations beginning in the 1960s. Reuben Sturman also formed five foreign corporations in countries following strict “corporate secrecy” policies. The testimony of numerous witnesses revealed that the named shareholders and nominees in these corporations were often fictitious. In other cases, real people were listed as shareholders, but their names and signatures had been used without their knowledge or permission. The prosecution proved that, in fact, Reuben Sturman was the beneficial owner of most of the corporations.

The defendants used the corporations to conceal income. They transferred money between corporations in ways that made tracing income and expenses difficult. The defendants also skimmed money from some of the adult entertainment businesses. This money was then used to pay personal expenses or was transferred and deposited in Swiss bank accounts. These bank accounts 1472 were opened in 1974, as stated by Reuben Sturman, to "conceal his money" and "avoid taxes." (Testimony of Walter Butti, Alfred Graf and James Olsafsky.) The transfers to Switzerland were accomplished through a series of transactions involving both the foreign and domestic corporations.

Reuben Sturman took a variety of steps to conceal his activities from the authorities. A federal investigation in 1975 forced him to begin hiding documents. In 1979, following the issuance of subpoenas calling for various records, Reuben Sturman destroyed or hid many of the requested records. He took similar actions in response to a 1982 grand jury subpoena.

Tax records filed during the period of the conspiracy contained numerous false statements and inaccuracies. Reuben Sturman failed to report his ownership in the domestic and foreign corporations or his signature authority over foreign bank accounts. His tax returns for 1978–1982 underreported $2,735,713 in individual income. The other defendants also failed to report their signature authority in foreign accounts.

II. DENIAL OF DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS COUNT I

All defendants filed motions to dismiss Count I which charged that the defendants, > did unlawfully, knowingly and willfully conspire, combine, confederate and agree together and with each other to defraud the United States of America by hampering, hindering, impeding, impairing, obstructing and defeating the lawful Governmental functions of the Internal Revenue Service of the Treasury Department of the United States in the ascertainment, computation, assessment and collection of income taxes [in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371.]

Defendants based their motions on this Court's decision in United States v. Minarik, 875 F.2d 1186 (6th Cir.1989), which held that conspiracy to commit an offense and conspiracy to defraud, under 18 U.S.C. § 371, were two separate crimes. The District Court denied the defendants' motions holding that Minarik was inapplicable to the conspiracy charged in this case. We agree.

Count I of the indictment is based on 18 U.S.C. § 371 (1984) which states,

> [i]f two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Count I charges the defendants under the defraud clause of the statute. This type of conspiracy is generally known as a "Klein" conspiracy. See United States v. Klein, 247 F.2d 908 (2d Cir.1957), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 924, 78 S.Ct. 365, 2 L.Ed.2d 354 (1958). In Klein, several persons were charged with defrauding the United States by impeding and obstructing the lawful functions of the Treasury Department and concealing the nature of their business activities and source of income. As in this case, "the indictment [was] framed to make a general charge of impeding and obstructing the Treasury Department ... [with more specific allegations] as particular instances, rather than as substitute and complete allegations of the substantive crime itself." Klein, 247 F.2d at 916. The conspiracy in Klein also involved a large number of domestic and foreign corporations, and multiple violations of the tax laws.

[1] In Minarik, 875 F.2d at 1186, this Court addressed the two clauses of the conspiracy statute. One of the defendants in that case, Aline Campbell, had been issued three tax assessments for a total demand of $108,788.15. Campbell responded that she did not owe a tax. Shortly after the tax assessment, Campbell, together with her friend Robert Minarik, arranged for the sale of a house Campbell owned. The $47,500 payment was made in the form of seven checks for $4,900 and one check for $3,732.18. The buyer assumed a mortgage for the balance. When Campbell cashed two of the checks at the same bank, the IRS was contacted. The IRS agents 1473 obtained a warrant to search Campbell's car because she had attempted to avoid the Bank Secrecy Act which requires the filing of an IRS report for any transaction over $10,000. The defendants were charged with conspiring to defraud the government by concealing the nature of and income from Campbell's business affairs in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371. The indictment did not make clear what function of the Treasury Department the defendants were impeding and the government changed its theory of the case throughout the indictment process and trial. The defendants could have been charged properly under section 7206(4) of the Internal Revenue Code which makes it a felony to conceal any goods or commodities on which a tax or levy has been imposed.

This Court held that defendants could not be charged under the defraud clause but convicted on evidence which supports the offense clause. In Minarik, the Court interpreted section 371 finding:

> the "offense" and "defraud" clauses as applied to the facts of this case are mutually exclusive, and the facts proved constitute only a conspiracy under the offense clause to violate 26 U.S.C. § 7206(4)....

875 F.2d at 1187. The Court concluded that when Congress creates a specific offense out of conduct which was previously criminalized only if it took the shape of a conspiracy to defraud the United States, the court should require that a criminal conspiracy regarding that conduct be brought exclusively under the offense clause. Id. at 1194. Thus, if the offense clause covers an act or offense, a person cannot alternatively be convicted under the broad defraud clause. This rule comes into effect most often when a Congressional statute closely defines the duties a defendant is accused of violating. The Court reasoned that requiring an indictment to charge a defendant with conspiracy to commit a specific crime reduces the uncertainty in a case by defining up front the alleged crime.

[2] Defendants here argue that the conduct alleged in Count I amounted to a violation of either 26 U.S.C. §§ 7206(1) or 7206(4) and that the conspiracy should have been charged under the offense clause of section 371. We disagree. The conspiracy alleged and proven here was broader than a violation of a specific statute.

This Court, in Minarik, noted that the holding in the case referred to the offense and defraud clauses "as applied to the facts in this case." 875 F.2d at 1187. The facts in Minarik and this case are distinguishable. Reuben Sturman set up a complex system of foreign and domestic organizations, transactions among the corporations, and foreign bank accounts to prevent the IRS from performing its auditing and assessment functions. Evidence shows that he committed a wide variety of income tax violations and engaged in numerous acts to conceal income. This large conspiracy involved many events which were intended to make the IRS impotent. No provision of the Tax Code covers the totality and scope of the conspiracy. This was not a conspiracy to violate specific provisions of the Tax Code but one to prevent the IRS from ever being able to enforce the Code against the defendants. Only the defraud clause can adequately cover all the nuances of a conspiracy of the magnitude this case addresses. As the Supreme Court had held with respect to specific violations within a conspiracy, "[t]he fact that the events include the filing of false statements does not, in and of itself, make the conspiracy-to-defraud clause of § 371 unavailable to the prosecution." Dennis v. United States, 384 U.S. 855, 863–64, 86 S.Ct. 1840, 1845–46, 16 L.Ed.2d 973 (1966). In this case, the prosecution was entitled to indict the defendants under the defraud clause.[1] 1474 The broad nature of the conspiracy, and the associated violation of several statutes, distinguishes this case from Minarik. In this case, the alleged conduct violates several statutes. A "conspiracy to defraud" charge most clearly covers the conduct when viewed in its entirety.

The chief concern of this Court in Minarik was that the government, by constantly changing the prosecution theory, never adequately informed the defendant of the charges against him. In this case, no such changing theories have emerged. The prosecution has presented the case clearly and no confusion as to the charges is evident.

III. INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE CLAIMS OF DAVID STURMAN AND RALPH LEVINE

A. David A. Sturman

David Sturman asserts that the prosecution produced insufficient evidence to support his conviction. He specifically points to a lack of proof evidencing his participation in a conspiracy or of the formation of a willful conspiracy.

[3] [4] [5] A conviction withstands a sufficiency of evidence challenge if > after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the government and drawing all reasonable inferences in the government's favor, the evidence is sufficient to justify a reasonable juror's conclusion that each element of the offense has been established beyond a reasonable doubt....

United States v. Poulos, 895 F.2d 1113, 1117 (6th Cir.1990) (citations omitted). When attempting to prove an individual's participation in a conspiracy, the prosecution must first establish that a conspiracy existed. This Court stated the elements necessary for proof of conspiracy under 18 U.S.C. § 371 in United States v. Meyers, 646 F.2d 1142 (6th Cir.1981):

> The essential elements of conspiracy are: (1) that the conspiracy described in the indictment was willfully formed, and was existing at or about the time alleged; (2) that the accused willfully became a member of the conspiracy; (3) that one of the conspirators thereafter knowingly committed at least one of the overt acts charged in the indictment, at or about the time and place alleged; and (4) that such overt act was knowingly done in furtherance of some object or purpose of the conspiracy as charged.

Id. at 1143–44. The existence of a conspiracy can be inferred from circumstantial evidence. United States v. Levinson, 405 F.2d 971 (6th Cir.1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 958, 89 S.Ct. 2097, 23 L.Ed.2d 744 (1969). Once a conspiracy has been established, the prosecution need only produce slight evidence to implicate the defendant. Poulos, 895 F.2d at 1117.

[6] Extensive evidence was submitted at trial to establish the existence of a conspiracy. Evidence against David Sturman included his admission that he had opened two Swiss bank accounts under assumed names, his signature authority over 20 additional accounts under the names of various fictitious persons, his directorship at one of the corporations used to channel money from other businesses, and his failure to report his signature authority over Swiss accounts as required by law. All of these activities were interrelated to his father's overall activities. His father's secretary and accountant were also active in the overall scheme. This evidence is adequate to prove the existence of a conspiracy. The testimony of various witnesses, the signature cards with David Sturman's name, and his own admissions implicate the defendant. The jury reasonably could have inferred from the evidence that David Sturman knew of the conspiracy, willfully became a member of the conspiracy, and participated in the concealment of assets from the IRS. This Court finds that a reasonable jury could find the evidence adequate to implicate the defendant and support his conviction and therefore affirms the District Court findings.

B. Ralph L. Levine

[7] Levine argues there is insufficient evidence of any agreement on his part to 1475 become a member of the conspiracy, and that even if he did so agree, it was to a different conspiracy then the one alleged. For this Court to sustain a conviction of conspiracy, > the defendant must know the purpose of the conspiracy, but not necessarily the full scope thereof, the detailed plans, operation, membership, or even the purpose of other members in the conspiracy.

United States v. Shermetaro, 625 F.2d 104, 108 (6th Cir.1980). Further, the Court is bound by "all reasonable inferences and credibility choices in support of the jury's verdict." United States v. Hughes, 895 F.2d 1135, 1140 (6th Cir.1990) (quoting United States v. Stull, 743 F.2d 439, 442 (6th Cir.1984)).

As Levine concedes, Reuben Sturman conspired to defraud the government by creating numerous and complex means of concealing assets and income. Levine, who acted as a partner to Sturman, ran the Nevada businesses. An employee, Jack Marcum, testified that at least $70,000 in cash from the Nevada businesses went unrecorded every month. Levine failed to report the existence or use of this money and therefore furthered the purpose of the conspiracy. His signature authority and power of attorney on Swiss accounts, his failure to report such authority, and the signing of aliases on the signature cards provides further evidence from which the jury could imply willing membership. Levine argues that any finding that he participated in the conspiracy can only be based on inference piled on inference in violation of Direct Sales Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 703, 711, 63 S.Ct. 1265, 1269, 87 L.Ed. 1674 (1943). This Court finds the evidence presented adequate to find participation in a conspiracy even without multiplying inferences. A reasonable jury could find the evidence sufficient to convict the defendant.

IV. SINGLE VERSUS MULTIPLE CONSPIRACIES AND JOINDER OF CLAIMS

Levine and David Sturman both contend that the evidence establishes the existence of multiple conspiracies rather than only one large conspiracy. Levine also asserts that the District Court abused its discretion when it denied his motion for severance. The motion, based on Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 14, claimed prejudice by the joinder of defendants at trial. Defendants have failed to preserve either of these issues.

[8] [9] At the end of trial, both Levine and David Sturman requested jury instructions on multiple conspiracies. The district judge declined to give the multiple conspiracy instruction and several other instructions requested by the defense. After the jury was instructed, Reuben Sturman's attorney, J. Michael Murray, raised a general objection "to the failure with respect to any of the jury instructions that have not been included." He then mentioned several specific instructions, by number, which he believed expressed a correct statement of law and were necessary to present a balanced statement of the case to the jury and potential defenses. Mr. Murray did not mention, even by number, the instruction addressing multiple conspiracies and gave no distinct reasons for objecting to the court's failure to include the multiple conspiracy instruction.

A general objection to district court jury instructions is insufficient to preserve a specific claim. Fed.R.Crim.P. 30 states:

> No party may assign as error any portion of the charge or omission therefrom unless that party objects thereto before the jury retires to consider its verdict, stating distinctly the matter to which that party objects and the grounds of the objection.

This rule clearly indicates that a specific objection must be made with regard to charge requests. See United States v. Friedman, 854 F.2d 535, 555 (2d Cir.1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1004, 109 S.Ct. 1637, 104 L.Ed.2d 153 (1989); United States v. Martinez, 776 F.2d 1481, 1484 (10th Cir.1985) (holding that the objection "both instructions fit this case and should be given" is inadequate to preserve issue). The defendants in this case have failed to preserve 1476 the issue of multiple conspiracies for appeal.

[10] Levine's contention that the District Court abused its discretion by denying his motion for severance is also without merit. Levine made several motions based on Rule 14 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Rule 14 allows the trial court to grant a severance if it appears that a defendant is prejudiced by a joinder of offenses or defendants. Levine argued that the evidence against the co-defendants unfairly accrued to him and that no cautionary instruction could eradicate that accrual.

Levine has failed to preserve this claim for appeal. This Court has held that "a severance motion will be deemed waived if it is not renewed at the end of the evidence." United States v. Swift, 809 F.2d 320, 323 (6th Cir.1987). Although Levine argued that he was entitled to a judgment of acquittal under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 29 because of the prosecution's failure to prove one conspiracy, he did not renew his motion for severance.

[11] Even if Levine had preserved this claim, it is without merit. The Supreme Court articulated a test for denial of severance motions in Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750, 66 S.Ct. 1239, 90 L.Ed. 1557 (1946). Succinctly, the test is whether the error had substantial influence on the judgment. Id. at 765, 66 S.Ct. at 1248. A denial of a severance motion is reversed only if there is abuse of discretion by the trial court. United States v. Bibby, 752 F.2d 1116 (6th Cir.1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1010, 106 S.Ct. 1183, 89 L.Ed.2d 300 (1986). No abuse of discretion is apparent in this case. The District Court made repeated instructions to the jury to consider the evidence against each defendant separately. A jury is presumed capable of sorting and considering evidence separately. Swift, 809 F.2d at 323. In addition, much of the evidence in the trial would have been admissible if Levine had a separate trial. This Court finds no basis for reversing the District Court's denial of severance.

V. WILLFULNESS ELEMENT OF COUNTS XII–XV

[12] Counts XII–XV charged Reuben Sturman with willfully failing to maintain records and file reports as required by 31 U.S.C. § 5314 (1982). The statute governs records and reports on foreign financial agency transactions. The government based these counts on Reuben Sturman's failure to file Form 90–22.1. This form must be filed by any person who has an interest in or signature over a foreign bank account with a balance in excess of a set dollar amount. Reuben Sturman objects to his conviction on these counts because he believes that the prosecution failed to show that he was aware of the Form 90–22.1 filing requirements.

In Cheek v. United States, 498 U.S. 192, 111 S.Ct. 604, 610, 112 L.Ed.2d 617 (1991), the Supreme Court established that the test for statutory willfulness is "voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty." Willfulness may be proven through inference from conduct meant to conceal or mislead sources of income or other financial information. Spies v. United States, 317 U.S. 492, 499, 63 S.Ct. 364, 368, 87 L.Ed. 418 (1943).[2] Other circuit courts have concluded that willfulness can be inferred from a conscious effort to avoid learning about reporting requirements. United States v. Bank of New England, N.A., 821 F.2d 844, 855 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 943, 108 S.Ct. 328, 98 L.Ed.2d 356 (1987).

The evidence in this case establishes that Reuben Sturman did take actions to conceal his assets from the federal government. He concealed his signature authority, his interests in various transactions, and his interest in corporations transferring cash to foreign banks. This conduct could be adequate for the jury to infer willfulness 1477 on the part of the defendant. In addition, the defendant did admit knowledge of and failure to answer a question concerning signature authority at foreign banks on Schedule B of his income tax return. This section of the return refers taxpayers to a booklet that further outlines their responsibilities for reporting foreign bank transactions. This booklet discusses the duty to file Form 90–22.1. These resources indicate that the defendant could have learned of the additional requirements quite easily. It is reasonable to assume that a person who has foreign bank accounts would read the information specified by the government in tax forms. Evidence of acts to conceal income and financial information, combined with the defendant's failure to pursue knowledge of further reporting requirements as suggested on Schedule B, provide a sufficient basis to establish willfulness on the part of the defendant.

VI. OBJECTIONS TO PROSECUTORIAL SUMMATION

[13] Defendant Levine contends that statements by the prosecutor in his rebuttal argument deprived him of a fair trial and that the District Court abused its discretion when it denied his motion for mistrial based on the statements. Levine's attorney argued in summation that the prosecution had failed to produce any evidence which linked Levine to the purchase, sale, transfer of funds into or out of Swiss accounts. In response, the prosecution referred to cashiers checks from Nevada banks which had been deposited in Switzerland. The inference was that these checks established that money from sales in Nevada, where Levine managed Sturman's businesses, had been moved into foreign banks. Levine asserts that since no direct or concrete evidence was produced to link him with those foreign bank transactions, the prosecutor's remarks were prejudicial and improperly suggested an unsupported inference.

Alleged prosecutorial prejudicial or biased remarks will warrant reversal only if the comments have "so infected the trial with unfairness as to make the resulting conviction a denial of due process." United States v. Moreno, 899 F.2d 465, 468 (6th Cir.1990) (quoting Darden v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 168, 181, 106 S.Ct. 2464, 2471, 91 L.Ed.2d 144 (1986)). In this case, evidence did exist that suggested Levine had participated in the skimming and transfer of money from United States corporations to Swiss accounts. This evidence included Levine's signature on signature cards and the testimony of various witnesses. This evidence is adequate to support any inference by the jury that deposits to the Swiss accounts from Nevada reflects proceeds from the skimming of income in which Levine was involved. In addition, the jury was instructed that the arguments of the attorneys should be dismissed to the extent they were unsupported by the evidence. This Court finds Levine's guilt supported by the evidence and that the prosecution's summary argument did not "infect[ ] the trial with unfairness."

VII. ALLEGED BIAS OF A JUROR

[14] Levine contends that he has been denied the right to a fair trial because the District Court failed to accord the defendant a hearing based on the defendant's claims of juror bias. This Court has held that,

> [s]ince the trial judge is in the best position to determine the nature and extent of alleged jury misconduct, his decision on the scope of proceedings necessary to discover misconduct is reviewed only for an abuse of discretion.

United States v. Shackleford, 777 F.2d 1141, 1145 (6th Cir.1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1119, 106 S.Ct. 1981, 90 L.Ed.2d 663 (1986). The Supreme Court, in Remmer v. United States, 347 U.S. 227, 230, 74 S.Ct. 450, 451, 98 L.Ed. 654 (1954), required a hearing in cases of jury bias to "determine the circumstances, the impact thereof upon the juror, and whether or not it was prejudicial, in a hearing with all interested parties permitted to participate." [3]

1478 During the course of this trial, Juror Olenik approached Judge White with concerns related to Levine's drawing pictures of the jurors during the trial. She advised the judge that some of the other jurors were also uncomfortable. When questioned, several of the jurors admitted being anxious over the drawings and their appropriateness. The judge assured the jurors that drawings by the defendants were permitted. He also told Juror Olenik that the drawings did not resemble any of the jurors. The judge asked each juror whether the incident would have any impact on their ability to remain fair and impartial. All the jurors responded negatively. Although the judge asked the jurors the questions originally requested by defense counsel, he denied defense requests for additional questioning. He did not allow the defense attorneys to ask any questions directly to the jury.

This Court has articulated four points to be considered when determining jury impartiality. United States v. Zelinka, 862 F.2d 92 (6th Cir.1988). First, a hearing must be held. Second, the defendant bears the burden of proving bias. Third, no presumption of prejudice arises from the "contact." And finally, fourth, juror testimony at the hearing to determine juror bias is not inherently suspect. Although no case since Remmer has addressed the right of the defense to question jurors, such questioning would normally be important to the defense in its effort to prove bias. However, when the questioning of the jurors occurs during the trial it is preferable it be done by the judge. Jurors may resent being questioned directly by counsel.

Even if direct questioning of the jurors by the defense is required by Remmer, the absence of such questioning in this case is harmless error. Each juror was asked separately what had occurred and its impact on them. The juror who approached the court about the issue appeared mainly concerned with whether the defendant's drawings were permissible. The court adequately assured the jurors that Levine had done nothing improper. The judge was justified in taking at face value the jurors' assurances of impartiality. This Court finds that any deficiencies in the juror bias hearing were harmless error and the defendant was not entitled to a mistrial.

VIII. ADEQUACY OF 18 U.S.C. § 1503 ALLEGATION

Count XVI of the indictment charged Reuben Sturman with obstruction of justice in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1503. [4] The count alleged that Reuben Sturman concealed or suppressed documents of various corporations which had been subpoenaed by the grand jury. Reuben Sturman argues that the charge did not provide sufficient information on the specific documents alleged destroyed or the particular corporations or subpoenas involved.

[15] [16] The Supreme Court has held that the fifth amendment indictment clause and the sixth amendment notice clause, as protected in Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 7(c), require an inquiry to determine:

> first, whether the indictment "contains the elements of the offense intended to be charged, 'and sufficiently apprises the defendant of what he must be prepared to meet,' " and, secondly, " 'in case any other proceedings are taken against him for a similar offence, whether the record shows with accuracy to what extent he may plead a former acquittal or conviction.' "

1479 Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749, 763–64, 82 S.Ct. 1038, 1046–47, 8 L.Ed.2d 240 (1962) (citations omitted). Furnishing the defendant with a bill of particulars fails to save deficiencies in the indictment. Id. at 769–70, 82 S.Ct. at 1050. This Court, when reviewing the sufficiency of an indictment, must ask whether the omission complained of deprives the defendant of one of the protections which the guaranty of a grand jury indictment was meant to ensure. Id. at 763, 82 S.Ct. at 1046.

[17] Count XVI of the indictment charges Reuben Sturman with endeavoring to obstruct justice in January 1982 in the United States District Court by destroying, concealing, and suppressing records of various corporations. The indictment clearly establishes the date and manner of the offense as well as the administrative body affected by the actions. This information sets forth all the elements necessary to establish and give a general description of the offense. Any technical deficiencies were harmless error since the indictment sufficiently apprised the defendant of the charges against him to enable him to prepare a response. See United States v. Weiss, 491 F.2d 460 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 833, 95 S.Ct. 58, 42 L.Ed.2d 59 (1974). The District Court correctly dismissed Reuben Sturman's motion to dismiss the charge.

IX. ADMISSION OF JAMES OLSAFSKY'S TESTIMONY

[18] James Olsafsky was the government's key witness with respect to Count XVI of the indictment charging Reuben Sturman with destroying or concealing subpoenaed documents. Olsafsky handled the bookkeeping for fifteen to twenty of the stores owned by Reuben Sturman. Olsafsky testified that he was directed by Reuben Sturman to destroy numerous documents subject to a grand jury subpoena. The documents ordered destroyed included all records of corporations then in existence which contained the name of a living person. Records of defunct corporations were not destroyed. During examination of Olsafsky, the government requested that he flip through the file of a defunct corporation and identify what records he would have destroyed seven years previously if he had been asked by Reuben Sturman. The defense asserts that it is prejudicial error to allow a key witness to speculate on what documents he might have destroyed, and to bolster witness testimony with a demonstration of document destruction. They assert they are denied the right to cross-examine since the testimony was not based in fact.

District court decisions relating to the admission of testimony may not be reversed unless the defendant proves abuse of discretion and specific prejudice. Admissibility of evidence is measured by weighing the probative value of the evidence against its prejudicial value. United States v. Zipkin, 729 F.2d 384, 389–90 (6th Cir.1984). The testimony to which Reuben Sturman objects merely serves to identify the types of documents Olsafsky was ordered to destroy. Since Olsafsky did in fact destroy documents, the use of a similar file to identify the type of destroyed documents is based on personal knowledge. The court was within its discretion in permitting the demonstration. Any prejudice would be outweighed by the probative value of Olsafsky's identification of the types of documents Reuben Sturman ordered destroyed.

X. ADMISSION OF EXPERT TESTIMONY

[19] Reuben Sturman objects to the summary testimony of Internal Revenue Agent James Morrow who was involved in the investigation of this case. Reuben Sturman asserts that Morrow's summary testimony was in fact a final argument to the jury, recounting unproven and contested facts. The defendant argues that permitting Morrow's testimony constitutes prejudicial error and requires a reversal of convictions.

Reuben Sturman relies on a Second Circuit case which held that witness credibility is for determination by the jury and that one witness cannot comment on the credibility of another witness. 1480 United State v. Scop, 846 F.2d 135, 142, modified on reh'g, 856 F.2d 5

(2d Cir.1988). Agent Morrow, using charts, summarized the evidence and testified that the evidence showed a connection between the defendants, Swiss bank accounts, and a failure to report signature authority and income. Agent Morrow did not comment directly on any specific witness' credibility but rather gave his view of the events. The summary testimony was neither inflammatory nor prejudicial, the District Court properly instructed the jury on the elements of each count charged, and Agent Morrow's testimony and charts aided the jury in organizing the proof presented.

The admission of testimony summarizing evidence has been held to be admissible in income tax prosecutions. United States v. Lattus, 512 F.2d 352, 353 (6th Cir.1975). This Court has allowed such testimony in criminal trials when the judge charges the jury as to all the elements necessary for conviction, where the summary is intended to aid the jury in organizing proof, and where the summary is not inflammatory or prejudicially worded. United States v. Scales, 594 F.2d 558, 562 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 946, 99 S.Ct. 2168, 60 L.Ed.2d 1049 (1979). We find that under this standard the District Court properly admitted the testimony.

XI. ADMISSION OF FOREIGN DEPOSITIONS

Reuben and David Sturman both contend that the depositions taken of four Swiss bank officials in Switzerland did not comply with Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 15. Rule 15(d) provides:

> Subject to such additional conditions as the court shall provide, a deposition shall be taken and filed in the manner provided in civil actions except as otherwise provided in these rules, provided that ... the scope and manner of examination and cross-examination shall be such as would be allowed in the trial itself.

The defendants claim that the admission of the depositions at trial violated their rights to due process, confrontation and effective assistance of counsel.

Depositions of four Swiss bank officials were taken in Switzerland prior to trial. These depositions were presided over by a Swiss magistrate, Benedikt Holdener. Magistrate Holdener had aided the United States in the investigation and prosecution of the defendants. During the depositions, Holdener instructed the defendants to register any objections to the proceeding in writing. He disallowed verbatim transcription. Instead, Holdener dictated a summary of each question and response and noted objections either contemporaneously or required them to be submitted later in writing. Witnesses were given the opportunity to read the summaries and then sign them. During the trial in this case, the English translation of a portion of these depositions was read into the record.

A. Failure to Comply with Fed.R.Crim.P. 15

[20] The District Court overruled the defendants' objections to the foreign depositions finding,

> that the defendants were entitled to be present there, they were entitled to have counsel there, counsel for the government was entitled to have questions read, and it appears to me that counsel for the defendants were entitled to submit questions to the magistrate for answers by the witnesses.

Under a test articulated by the Second Circuit, these procedural safeguards support allowance of the depositions despite variations from United States procedures. The Second Circuit held that a foreign deposition would be admissible, > unless the manner of examination required by the law of the host nation is so incompatible with our fundamental principles of fairness or so prone to inaccuracy or bias as to render the testimony inherently unreliable....

United States v. Salim, 855 F.2d 944, 953 (2d Cir.1988). Swiss law forbids verbatim transcription so the summary method of establishing the record was the most effective legal method. All defense questions, with just one exception, were submitted to the witnesses so that objections and determinations 1481 on admissibility could be litigated later.[5] Although the witnesses were not given an oath, defense conceded that each witness was told the penalties for giving false testimony. The Second Circuit has recognized that an oath may not be given in some foreign countries and that the omission of such an oath does not automatically result in the suppression of the deposition. See United States v. Casamento, 887 F.2d 1141, 1172–75 (2d Cir.1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1081, 110 S.Ct. 1138, 107 L.Ed.2d 1043 (1990). Cross-examination, acceptance and consideration of objections, and the review of all written testimony by the witnesses ensured that the testimony complied with Rule 15(d) to the extent possible. Depositions taken in foreign countries cannot at all times completely emulate the United States' method of obtaining testimony. Here, all steps were taken to ensure the defendants' rights while respecting the legal rules established in a different country. The District Court achieved substantial compliance with Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 15.

The same factors which demonstrate substantial compliance with Rule 15 rebut any claims based on due process violations or interference with effective assistance of counsel. The ability of the defendants to cross-examine, and the admission of all defense questions, protected the defendants against the constitutional violations alleged. Defendants have failed to point to any way in which they were prejudiced by the procedures used.

B. Neutrality or Impartiality of the Magistrate

[21] David and Reuben Sturman also object to Magistrate Holdener presiding over the depositions asserting that he was not neutral because of his role in the prosecutions. Holdener himself overruled the objection. Neither Rule 15 nor Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 28(b) address the issue of neutral or impartial magistrates. Instead, these rules accept the necessity of foreign officials presiding over foreign depositions. If the law of Switzerland permits a person to serve as both magistrate and prosecuting attorney, then that practice must be permissible in obtaining depositions for United States litigation provided that the criteria in Salim are met. The defendants have failed to establish evidence that Magistrate Holdener's handling of the deposition unfairly prejudiced the defendants or that the testimony could be considered unreliable. The defendants were provided sufficient opportunity to ask questions designed to refute the credibility of the witnesses. The admission into evidence of the depositions did not violate any constitutional rights of the defendants and did not constitute unfair prejudice.

C. Pierre Perrelet's Identification

[22] The defense also objects to Pierre Perrelet's identification of defendant Reuben Sturman. Perrelet was asked to identify his former customer. He responded by stating, “[p]resumably the second gentlemen at the left side of the table in second place who is leaning on a briefcase is a customer of SBC whom I looked after in the past.” This description identified Reuben Sturman. Defense seeks a reversal of Reuben Sturman's convictions since this identification was based on a presumption. From the context in which the word “presumably” was used, it seems sufficiently clear that the witness was identifying the defendant and the “presumably” was merely a euphemism.

XII. DISQUALIFICATION OF DISTRICT JUDGE

[23] Reuben Sturman argues that the district judge in this case was under a duty to sua sponte recuse himself because of his bias against the defendants. After pronouncing the sentence and judgment, the judge requested the defendants and their attorneys to approach the bench. He then stated that he had had to separate his feelings about the defendants' business 1482 from the defendants in imposing the sentence. He concluded, however, by noting that he had tried his best to keep his feelings about the type of business in which the defendants were engaged out of the sentencing and believed he had succeeded. [6]

Reuben Sturman argues that the judge's comments indicate a bias which effected the entire four-month trial and previous years of motions and discretionary rulings. The defendant asserts that because the judge failed to recuse himself at the outset of the case, the convictions in the case must be reversed.

A federal judge is required to recuse himself “in any proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned.” 28 U.S.C. § 455(a). This Circuit has determined that whenever a judge's impartiality is questioned, it must be determined whether “a reasonable, objective person, knowing all the circumstances, would not have questioned [the judge's] impartiality.” Hughes v. United States, 899 F.2d 1495, 1501 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 111 S.Ct. 508, 112 L.Ed.2d 520 (1990); see also H.R.Rep. No. 1453, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 4, reprinted in 1974 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 6351, 6354.

Under the test established in Hughes, this Court must look at all the circumstances surrounding the case to determine whether a reasonable person would believe the judge was impartial. Several factors support a finding that Judge White acted impartially during the trial. First, the defendants can point to no decision on the part of the judge that clearly demonstrated bias. The contentions in the appeal that raise abuse of discretion issues have been found to be without merit. Second, the sentences given the defendants, rather than exhibiting bias against the defendants, are substantially below the level requested by the government and appear fair under the circumstances. Third, this Court may take at face value Judge White's assertion that he set his feelings about the defendants' business aside. Judges, whether they are hearing tax evasion cases or vicious murder prosecutions, may have views about the nature and heinousness of the underlying crime. All judges, as part of their decisionmaking process, seek to set these feelings aside. Judge White merely articulated a tension all judges share. This Court holds that the defendants have failed to prove that Judge White's personal beliefs concerning pornography tainted the proceedings. [7]

XIII. VIOLATIONS OF THE MUTUAL ASSISTANCE TREATY

Reuben and David Sturman both raise objections to the use of records obtained from Switzerland under the Treaty Between the United States of America and the Swiss Confederation on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, May 25, 1973, United States–Switzerland, 27 U.S.T. 209, T.I.A.S. 8302. The Treaty ("Treaty") states that Switzerland agrees to provide information and access to bank records in Switzerland only for a specifically defined list of criminal offenses. Reuben Sturman 1483 asserts that the United States government submitted false information concerning the defendant's connection with organized crime in order to obtain his records under the Treaty. He claims that these submissions and the resultant release of records violated his fourth amendment privacy and fifth amendment due process rights. David Sturman objects to the use of the records obtained under the Treaty provisions in the case against him since the government did not provide evidence to Switzerland concerning David Sturman when they sought the records.

The United States requested assistance from the government in Switzerland in obtaining the bank records of Reuben Sturman. In acquiring these records, the United States government must submit evidence to Switzerland that shows the requested records relate to one of a select list of criminal offenses. The United States government submitted evidence to Switzerland which indicated that Reuben Sturman had some relationship to organized crime. The evidence submitted to Switzerland was never disclosed to Reuben Sturman despite his discovery request. The District Court, after a in camera review of the evidence, ruled that the defendant had failed to show the government misrepresented the facts. Both David and Reuben Sturman assert that the records obtained as a result of the United States' action under the Treaty should not be admissible. They further argue that should this evidence be found inadmissible, the convictions based on the evidence should be reversed.

Article 37 of the Treaty provides that,

> [t]he existence of restrictions in this Treaty shall not give rise to a right on the part of any person to take any action in the United States to suppress or exclude any evidence or to obtain other judicial relief in connection with the requests under this Treaty....

Treaty Between the United States of America and the Swiss Confederation on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, May 25, 1973, United States–Switzerland, 27 U.S.T. 209, T.I.A.S. 8302. [8] This language indicates that neither David nor Reuben Sturman have standing to raise a claim under the Treaty. Relying on the decision of the D.C. Circuit Court in Cardenas v. Smith, 733 F.2d 909, 917–19 (D.C.Cir.1984), defendants claim that the Treaty cannot deprive them of constitutional rights. Id. at 919. [9] Because we find the defendants have not been deprived of their constitutional rights, we do not consider whether they have standing to raise such claims.

A. Fourth Amendment

[24] [25] Reuben Sturman maintains that, because of Switzerland's strict banking secrecy laws, he has a reasonable expectation of privacy protected by the fourth amendment. In support of his assertion of an expectation of privacy, he relies on the Swiss penalties of imprisonment or fine for revealing information and on the Treaty's goal of preserving the integrity of Swiss banking law. In essence, the defendant argues a constitutional right created by the statutory rights granted him by a foreign country to records in that country. No such right of privacy in banking 1484 records is recognized in the United States. United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435, 96 S.Ct. 1619, 48 L.Ed.2d 71 (1976).

Any privacy right conferred on Reuben Sturman by Switzerland and any remedy given for a violation of that right is limited by the terms of the Treaty. The Treaty clearly indicates that the Swiss government has agreed that an American citizen's right to privacy can be curtailed under certain circumstances. The Treaty also evidences a decision by the Swiss government to limit the remedy available once bank records are released. The Swiss government has limited the right to privacy given by its laws and denied to depositors any expectancy that, if records were disclosed to the United States, they could be suppressed or excluded from evidence. This intent is plainly stated in the language of Article 37 which is part of the law of Switzerland as well as the United States.

Even if Article 37 does not foreclose a fourth amendment claim for suppression of evidence, Reuben Sturman had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the documents for fourth amendment purposes. The Treaty makes any expectation of privacy limited through its terms. If no such expectation exists, then his ability to raise a fourth amendment claim is limited by the holdings of the United States Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has held that there is no privacy interest in the records and documents of third parties. Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128, 99 S.Ct. 421, 58 L.Ed.2d 387 (1978); Miller, 425 U.S. at 435, 96 S.Ct. at 1620. Further, the fourth amendment does not justify exclusion of evidence when the defendant is not the victim of the challenged practices. The supervisory power of the federal courts does not allow it to suppress evidence that has been seized unlawfully from a person not before the court. United States v. Payner, 447 U.S. 727, 100 S.Ct. 2439, 65 L.Ed.2d 468 (1980). Thus, since an individual has no privacy interest in his bank records, he cannot make a motion for exclusion once they are obtained. Only the holder of the records, for example the bank, can raise an objection.

B. Due Process Claims

[26] Reuben Sturman asserts that the submission of false statements linking him to organized crime in order to obtain information from a foreign country is the type of governmental misconduct which violates substantive due process. He also claims that he was denied any reasonable opportunity to respond to the charges in the documents submitted to the Swiss government and has thus been denied his procedural due process rights. These claims are without merit.

A review of the submissions to the Swiss government reveals that the documents contain no serious misrepresentations concerning the defendant. The District Court's review of the documents generated the same opinion. Even if misrepresentations were found, a reversal of conviction is not automatic. A federal court's supervisory power allows the court to remedy cases of serious governmental misconduct. Payner, 447 U.S. at 727, 100 S.Ct. at 24; United States v. Gjieli, 717 F.2d 968 (6th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1101, 104 S.Ct. 1595, 80 L.Ed.2d 127 (1984). Reversals of convictions using this power should not be granted readily. Id. at 978. This Court has held that the reversal of a conviction should be granted only when the following prerequisites are met:

> (1) there must be a constitutional injury which is personal to the complaining defendant, (2) the injury must "harm" the defendant in a legally significant way, (3) there must be an injury to the judicial system, (4) the "remedy" selected by the Court to preserve judicial integrity and deter future misconduct may not exceed established limitations on the court's power, and (5) the remedy selected must be narrowly tailored.

Id. at 978–79.

In Gjieli, the government improperly released defendant, Zeff Lulgjuraj, from prison. His release signalled his codefendants that a Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agent was ready to deliver Lulgjuraj to them. The government officials submitted a false writ to a district judge in 1485 order to obtain the prisoner's release. One agent posed as a United States Marshal in order to secure custody of the prisoner. Applying the test above, this Court held that the government's misconduct did not entitle the defendants to reversal of their convictions. Id. at 979.

In this case, Reuben Sturman has suffered no identifiable constitutional injury. The defendant has no constitutional right to review submissions to the Swiss government made in the course of an investigation. Even if such a right existed, the defendant received adequate protection through the in camera review of the documents by the District Court and this Court. As discussed above, no right arises from any expectation of privacy asserted by the defendant. Reuben Sturman also urges that this Court find a deprivation of a liberty interest due to the stigmatization of his name. The documents submitted to the Swiss government have never been released or made public. This Court has held that "in order to establish a protectable liberty interest, the plaintiff must demonstrate ... that the defendants publicly and voluntarily disclosed stigmatizing charges or information...." Yashon v. Gregory, 737 F.2d 547, 556 (6th Cir.1984).

Misconduct, if any, committed by the government in this case is not as serious as that committed in Gjieli where a reversal of conviction was denied. We find that the defendant has failed to satisfy the test articulated in Gjieli.

C. David Sturman

[27] David Sturman obtained a decision from the Swiss Federal Supreme Court which held that no Swiss evidence could be used against him in a case for tax evasion. Notice of Ruling by the Swiss Supreme Court That No Evidence Obtained from Switzerland May be Used Against David Sturman, October 13, 1989. Using this decision, David Sturman objected to the use of the evidence in the District Court. The District Court overruled his objection. We agree. The Swiss Central Authority advised the United States government that the Swiss documents could only be used against the codefendants if they were participants in Reuben Sturman's criminal activities. Article 5 para. 2(b) of the Treaty provides that evidence obtained under the Treaty can be used against persons accused of participating in the criminal activity and accessories. Evidence produced during this trial shows David Sturman's participation in Reuben Sturman's criminal activity. The admission of the Swiss evidence was thus permissible under the Treaty.

XIV. DENIAL OF REUBEN STURMAN'S DISCOVERY REQUEST

A Special Agent of the IRS, Richard N. Rosfelder, who was in charge of the investigation against the defendants, testified at trial about the investigation. Following his testimony, Reuben Sturman requested that the government produce several documents related to the testimony. Specifically, the defendant requested Rosfelder's Special Agent's Report outlining the investigation and suggesting indictment, the submissions to the Swiss government sent with the request for information under the Mutual Assistance Treaty, and the agent's grand jury testimony. The defendant claims that the government failed to produce 99% of the Special Agent's Report, the Swiss submissions, and 100 pages of grand jury testimony. The District Court held that the missing documents did not need to be produced and refused a request to conduct further voir dire of Special Agent Rosfelder to determine the contents of the documents.

A trial court's rulings on matters relating to the production of documents is reviewed under a clearly erroneous standard. United States v. Nathan, 816 F.2d 230 (6th Cir.1987). The defendant raises two arguments in support of his contention that the denial of his discovery motion was reversible error.

[28] [29] [30] First, the defendant claims that the denial of the discovery motion violates the provisions of the Jencks Act. 18 U.S.C. § 3500 (1985). The Jencks Act addresses demands for the production of statements 1486 and reports of witnesses. Particularly, the statute provides:

> After a witness called by the United States has testified on direct examination, the court shall, on motion of the defendant, order the United States to produce any statement (as hereinafter defined) of the witness in the possession of the United States which relates to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified. [10]

It is clear that the submissions to the Swiss government do not fall under the protections of the Act since they were prepared and signed by government attorneys, were not a verbatim transcript of any statements made by the agent, and were not reviewed for accuracy by the agent. The Special Agent's Report was reviewed by the District Court and certain sections which appeared to be statements of the witness were ordered released to the defendant. The remainder of the document is an internal prosecution report, prepared prior to the events discussed under direct examination, and thus exempt from discovery under the Jencks Act. United States v. O'Keefe, 825 F.2d 314, 319 (11th Cir.1987). The defendant also protests the denial of discovery with respect to the redacted portions of the grand jury testimony. The government claims that these portions did not need to be given to the defendant since they did not relate to the direct testimony of the witness and merely summarized documentary evidence and discussed subjects of investigation other than Reuben Sturman. A review of the redacted portions of the testimony reveals that this assessment is accurate.

[31] Second, the defendant raises a protest to the nondisclosure of these documents based on Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215 (1963). The Supreme Court held in Brady that the suppression by the prosecution of evidence which is material to either guilt or punishment violates due process. This Court has held that, > if the government does fail to disclose Brady material, the defendant has a constitutional remedy for the nondisclosure only if the defendant can show that there is a reasonable probability that "the omission deprived the defendant of a fair trial."

United States v. Presser, 844 F.2d 1275, 1282 (6th Cir.1988) (citation omitted) (emphasis in original). The defendant has failed to show a reasonable probability that he was denied a fair trial. The evidence supporting the defendant's conviction was substantial. No arguments were made which suggest the information withheld contains facts which go directly to the guilt or innocence of the defendants. Both this Court and the District Court, in their in camera review, found that they do not. The District Court did not err in denying Reuben Sturman's discovery motion.

XV. THE BANK SECRECY ACT AND SELF–INCRIMINATION

[32] [33] Reuben Sturman was under investigation for tax-related violations from 1976 and was under grand jury investigation from 1978. These investigations included the examination of the defendant's foreign bank accounts. Reuben Sturman's indictment listed several counts, associated with The Bank Secrecy Act, which alleged that the defendant had failed to file information related to the foreign accounts during the years he was being investigated. The defendant claims that the Bank Secrecy Act, which requires a person to file certain information if they have over a minimum amount of money in foreign accounts, is directed at persons suspect of criminal activities and promotes self-incrimination. The defendant asserts that the Act is therefore unconstitutional and that 1487 the trial court erred in denying his motion to dismiss and motion for judgment of acquittal on the counts related to the Act.

The Supreme Court has held that taxpayers cannot assert a violation of their rights against compulsory self-incrimination when they refuse to answer questions on a tax return for fear authorities will discover illegal activity. United States v. Sullivan, 274 U.S. 259, 260, 47 S.Ct. 607, 607, 71 L.Ed. 1037 (1927). Sullivan implies that any objections to specific questions will be considered only if the individual files a completed return and raises the objections in the return. A defendant's fear of self-incrimination cannot serve as a defense to a failure to complete the information called for on his tax return unless he raised an objection when he filed.

Even if Sullivan were not applicable to this situation, the defendant's claim is still without merit. The defendant bases his claim on a line of cases which have found various reporting requirements in violation of the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination when specific conditions are met. Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968); Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 88 S.Ct. 716, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968); Haynes v. United States, 390 U.S. 85, 88 S.Ct. 722, 19 L.Ed.2d 923 (1968).[11] The Supreme Court held in these cases that statutes violate the right against compulsory self-incrimination when (1) they are directed against a "selective group inherently suspect of criminal activity"; (2) requirements are imposed in an "area permeated with criminal statutes"; and (3) reporting requirements would have placed the subject in real danger of self-incrimination. See Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 47, 88 S.Ct. at 702; Grosso, 390 U.S. at 64, 88 S.Ct. at 711. The Bank Secrecy Act applies to all persons making foreign deposits, most of whom do so with legally obtained funds. The requirement is imposed in the banking regulatory field which is not infused with criminal statutes. In addition, the disclosures do not subject the defendant to a real danger of self-incrimination since the source of the funds is not disclosed. It is not evident from the information provided whether the money in the account came from a legitimate adult entertainment business or from a scheme to skim money from a business. Thus, the defendant has failed to show that the Bank Secrecy Act violated any individual right Marchetti and Grosso seek to protect.

XVI. DOUBLE JEOPARDY

[34] Reuben Sturman received consecutive fines for Counts VII–XI, charging him with making and subscribing a false tax return in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1), and Counts II–VI, charging him with attempting to evade income taxes in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7201. Relying on several cases from other circuit courts,[12] the defendant argues that filing a false tax return under section 7206(1) is a lesser included offense under attempted income tax evasion in violation of section 7201. In cases of lesser included offenses, consecutive sentences are double jeopardy since the offender cannot be tried and convicted under both statutes. At least one court, however, has recognized that the cases cited by the defendant address only cases where the proof of tax evasion necessarily proves the preparation and filing of a fraudulent return. United States v. Franks, 723 F.2d 1482, 1487 (10th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 817, 105 S.Ct. 85, 83 L.Ed.2d 32 (1984). The Tenth Circuit found that a misrepresentation of foreign bank account information is distinct from understating income on a tax return. Proving that a taxpayer violated 1488 section 7206(1) by misrepresenting her interest in or signature authority on a foreign account does not necessarily prove tax evasion. When the proofs on the charges are separate, the sentencing may be consecutive. Id. at 1487. We adopt the reasoning of the Tenth Circuit and allow the sentence to stand.

XVII. REFUSAL TO GIVE JURY INSTRUCTIONS

Reuben Sturman objects to the trial court's rejection of nine jury instructions requested by the defendant. Defendant seeks a reversal of his convictions due to the jury instruction errors. The defendant's objections are without merit.

[35] The first requested jury instruction whose denial the defendant protests would have informed the jury that the activities of the defendants were not illegal unless the activities furthered a conspiracy to impede the IRS. A jury instruction read by the court instructed the jury that a conviction of the defendants on Count I was only possible if the government showed that the "means or methods described in the indictment were agreed upon to be used in an effort to ... accomplish ... the conspiracy." This instruction adequately covers the same ground as the requested instruction.

[36] Defendant's requested jury instructions numbered 9, 10, 13, 14, and 15 set forth the defendant's argument that if the government had proved evasion of corporate, as opposed to individual income, then he was entitled to acquittal. The defendant asserts that the failure to present the requested instructions resulted in the jury only being presented with the prosecution's theory of the case. These instructions were addressed at Counts II–VI and Counts VII–XI. The defendant has waived his right to object to the court's refusal to give instructions 14 and 15 by failing to present distinct and clear objections with regard to those instructions.

[37] The defendant's theory of the case as presented in requested instructions 9, 10, and 13 makes an incorrect statement of law. The requested instructions call on the jury to distinguish between income of the defendant and income accruing to the corporations. In this case, all the Swiss accounts were set up in the name of individuals. This Court, in Davis v. United States, 226 F.2d 331 (6th Cir.1955), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 965, 76 S.Ct. 432, 100 L.Ed. 838 (1956), held that the unexplained transfer of funds to an individual's account constituted income to the individual. The government was not required to prove what use was made of the funds. The defense failed to prove that any of the funds were used to the benefit of any corporation.

The defendant next objects to the District Court's rejection of his suggested instructions 7 and 8 which addressed his reading of Minarik, 875 F.2d at 1186. This Court has found that the District Court properly allowed Count I and that Minarik did not apply in this case. Thus, no error resulted from the District Court's failure to give instructions 7 and 8.

[38] The final objection raised in connection with jury instructions concerns defendant's requested instruction 17. This instruction, which sought to define when a false statement is knowingly made, was requested in relation to Counts VII–XI which charged the defendant with willfully filing fraudulent tax returns. The instruction stated that in order to establish a knowingly made false statement the defendant must knowingly make a statement and know that the statement is false. The instruction was designed to present defense's assertion that failure to answer a question did not constitute a knowingly made false statement. It is a crime for any person to willfully make "any return, statement ... which he does not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter." 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1). The District Court properly instructed the jury that the government had to prove that the defendant willfully made a false statement "as to a material matter alleged in the indictment." This instruction covered the issue presented by requested instruction 17. This Court finds no error on the part of the 1489 District Court with regard to jury instructions.

XVIII. ADMISSION INTO EVIDENCE OF FOREIGN BANK RECORDS

Volumes of business records from seven foreign banks were presented at trial. These records were "certified" by twelve affidavits or certificates of authenticity. This practice, adopted by Congress in 18 U.S.C. § 3505, dispenses with the necessity of calling a live witness to establish authenticity.

Section 3505 allows the admission of foreign records, and prevents their exclusion as hearsay, provided that a foreign certification attests to certain facts.[13] A foreign certification serves to authenticate the records. Reuben Sturman asserts that there was error in the admission and maintenance of records the prosecution received from Switzerland. He also objects to the admission of the foreign bank records urging that section 3505 is unconstitutional because it deprives him of his right to confrontation.

[39] The certificates at issue indicated that the person signing the certificates was acting in the capacity of custodian of the records, that the records were made or received in the regular course of business, and that the records were part of a regular business practice that made or received the documents at the time, or within a reasonable time thereafter, of the recorded event. These attestations satisfy most of the provisions of section 3505. The certificate fails to state that the "record was made ... by (or from information transmitted by) a person with knowledge of those matters." 18 U.S.C. § 3505(a)(1)(A). Reuben Sturman contends that this foundational element must be established. This Court, when interpreting similar language in Federal Rules of Evidence 803(6),[14] has held that a witness need only have knowledge of the recordkeeping procedures. United States v. Hathaway, 798 F.2d 902 (6th Cir.1986). In this case, a bank official, who would necessarily have some knowledge of the bank's recordkeeping procedures, provided the certification.

[40] The defendant also protests that the certificates were not physically attached to the records being authenticated and that the certifications did not identify the specific records they authenticate. Neither of these assertions is valid. Section 3505 contains no requirement that the certificate be attached to the authenticated record. Each certificate was associated with a transmittal record that listed the account and record of accounts being produced. The certifications incorporated these transmittal letters.

The defendant also raises the following arguments: (1) that the "legal advisor" who signed the certification was not a "custodian" under the requirement of section 3505; (2) that section 3505 does not refer to records "received" which the certification includes in its description of the records; and (3) that the certification states that it was the regular course of business to make "documents of this kind" rather than the specific record being authenticated. After a careful consideration of these issues, this Court find the claims to be without merit.

[41] 1490 Reuben Sturman also alleges that section 3505 deprives him of his sixth amendment right of confrontation. We disagree. The confrontation clause does not establish an absolute exclusion of all hearsay. Testimony of an unavailable witness is permissible provided it contains an "indicia of reliability." United States v. Miller, 830 F.2d 1073 (9th Cir.1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1033, 108 S.Ct. 1592, 99 L.Ed.2d 907 (1988) (quoting Ohio v. Roberts, 448 U.S. 56, 63, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 2537, 65 L.Ed.2d 597 (1980)). The Supreme Court in Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 182–83, 107 S.Ct. 2775, 2782–83, 97 L.Ed.2d 144 (1987), has held that "[b]ecause 'hearsay rules and the Confrontation Clause are generally designed to protect similar values,' ... no independent inquiry into reliability is required when the evidence 'falls within a firmly rooted hearsay exception.' " (quoting Roberts, 448 U.S. at 66, 100 S.Ct. at 2539) (citations omitted). Section 3505 establishes an exception to the hearsay rule for foreign business documents. This exception ensures that the requirements of the Confrontation Clause are automatically satisfied.

[42] [43] Finally, the defendant claims that the prosecution failed to satisfy the foundational requirements of Federal Rules of Evidence 602 and 901. Rule 602 requires the introduction of evidence which supports a finding that a witness has personal knowledge of the matter on which they are to testify. Rule 901 requires authentication and identification prior to the admissibility of any evidence. The admissibility of foreign records is a question that may be determined by the court before trial. Fed.R.Evid. 104(a); 18 U.S.C. § 3505(b); United States v. Tedder, 801 F.2d 1437, 1448 (4th Cir.1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 938, 107 S.Ct. 1585, 94 L.Ed.2d 775 (1987). The District Court held a pre-trial hearing on November 6 and 16, 1987 to determine the admissibility of the challenged records. There was no necessity of repeating this hearing before the jury. In addition, the prosecution did have Special Agent Rosfelder testify regarding the receipt, custody, and certification of the records. The defense was given an opportunity at that time to cross-examine the witness.

Special Agent Rosfelder admitted during his testimony that he did not have custody of the records at all times and therefore lacked personal knowledge regarding some of the details of the receipt and maintenance of the records. Even if the court did commit error by allowing Rosfelder to testify on an issue of which he did not have personal knowledge, the error is harmless. Special Agent Rosfelder's testimony was sought as the result of challenges to the certification of the records. Since we find the certificates to be adequate, the testimony was unnecessary.

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, the decision of the District Court is AFFIRMED as to all defendants.

All Citations

951 F.2d 1466, 34 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. 704

Footnotes

[*] The Honorable Henry R. Wilhoit, Jr., United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, sitting by designation.

[1] The government's brief cites four cases in which the Sixth Circuit has affirmed convictions based on the defraud clause. These defendants could also have been charged based on the offense clause. These decisions lend support to limiting Minarik to its facts. See United States v. Jerkins, 871 F.2d 598 (6th Cir.1989); United States v. Shermetaro, 625 F.2d 104 (6th Cir.1980); United States v. Fruehauf Corp., 577 F.2d 1038 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 953, 99 S.Ct. 349, 58 L.Ed.2d 344 (1978); United States v. Levinson, 405 F.2d 971 (6th Cir.1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 958, 89 S.Ct. 2097, 23 L.Ed.2d 744 (1969).

[2] The defendant claims that Spies is irrelevant since it deals with specific charges of tax evasion rather than conspiracy to defraud the government. We find that the case relevant. Spies did involve an indictment which contained a single felony charge of willfully attempting to defeat and evade a tax. However, willful failure to file a return and willful failure to pay taxes were cited as means to the end. 317 U.S. at 494, 63 S.Ct. at 366.

[3] Remmer involved a case of jury tampering by outside influences. After the completion of the trial, it was revealed that a juror had been approached by someone who suggested it would be profitable to bring in a verdict favorable to the petitioner. The judge had ordered an investigation at the time the juror had reported the incident, decided the offer had been made in jest, and never notified the defense of the incident. The defense learned of the occurrence after the trial in the newspaper. 347 U.S. at 228, 74 S.Ct. at 450.

[4] 18 U.S.C. § 1503 (1984) states, in relevant part, that whoever,

> corruptly or by threats or force, or by any threatening letter or communication, influences, obstructs, or impedes, or endeavors to influence, obstruct, or impede, the due administration of justice, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

5 It should be noted that only Reuben Sturman exercised his cross-examination rights. The other defendants are presumed to have waived their rights to cross-examination. The one question rejected by Holdener concerned the salary of one of the witnesses.

6 The transcription of the judge's comments reads in part:

> I have gone out of my way, very frankly, as a judge to separate in my mind the business that the defendants are in from what they are charged with.

. . . . .

> However, it is this Court's feeling that even thought [sic] the defendants are suffering and have gone through an ordeal, I can't help but think that having seen many movies that depicted certain scenes, that probably the gentleman involved in selling, first of all, it runs through my mind that somebody has to be paid to appear in those scenes.
>
> Quite frankly, I have to believe that some people who have acted in those scenes have gone through some tremendous pressures of their own.

. . . . .

> I had to say that. I have tried my best to, and I think I have in keeping that from involving the sentence in this case. I have tried to limit it to the tax matters in this case and the conspiracy that was alleged and the other charges in this case which have nothing to do with—indirectly it may with the businesses—but should not involve my thinking in the sentences.

7 No motion for recusal was filed with the District Court. Indeed, defense counsel complimented the district judge at this same sentencing hearing on his fairness in presiding over the case.

8 The Technical Analysis of Article 37 goes further adding,

> [e]nforcement of the provisions of the Treaty is a matter for the Contracting parties, and does not give rise to any right on the part of defendants ... to obtain judicial relief....

Technical Analysis of the Treaty Between the United States and Switzerland on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, reprinted in Message from the President transmitting the Treaty with the Swiss Confederation on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 34 (1976).

9 The Cardenas case involved an appeal by a nonresident alien seeking redress in United States Courts for the seizure of Swiss accounts in which plaintiff had an interest. The United States government had encouraged the Swiss government to seize the accounts. The plaintiff claimed that the seizure violated her rights under the fourth and fifth amendments as well as various statutory and Treaty related obligations. The D.C. Circuit recognized that Article 37 precluded any claims arising under the Treaty. The court found, however, that there was no evidence that the Treaty intended to preclude judicial review of the statutory and constitutional claims. The court reversed the lower court's decision to dismiss the complaint so that the statutory and constitutional claims could be heard. 733 F.2d at 911–19.

10 The statute defines the term statement as

> (1) a written statement made by said witness and signed or otherwise adopted or approved by him;
>
> (2) a stenographic, mechanical, electrical, or other recording, or a transcription thereof, which is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement made by said witness and recorded contemporaneously with the making of such oral statement; or
>
> (3) a statement, however taken or recorded, or a transcription thereof, if any, made by said witness to a grand jury.

18 U.S.C. § 3500(e).

11 These cases dealt with an occupational tax related to wagers. Under the statute, persons registering as wagers had to keep on their persons stamps showing the payment of tax, maintain daily wagering records, and keep their books open for inspection. These persons were also liable for an occupational tax. The petitioners in these cases argued that the registration and tax requirements violated their rights against self-incrimination. Based on the criteria discussed above, the court found for the petitioners.

12 United States v. Citron, 783 F.2d 307, 312 (2d Cir.1986), following remand, 853 F.2d 1055 (2d Cir.1988); United States v. Pulawa, 532 F.2d 1301, 1302 (9th Cir.1976); United States v. Slutsky, 487 F.2d 832, 845 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 937, 94 S.Ct. 1937, 40 L.Ed.2d 287 (1974).

13 18 U.S.C. § 3505 reads in relevant part:

(a)(1) In a criminal proceeding in a court of the United States, a foreign record of regularly conducted activity, or a copy of such record, shall not be excluded as evidence by the hearsay rule if a foreign certification attests that—

> (A) such record was made, at or near the time of the occurrence of the matters set forth, by (or from information transmitted by) a person with knowledge of those matters;
> (B) such record was kept in the course of regularly conducted business activity;
> (C) the business activity made such a record as a regular practice; and > (D) if such record is not the original, such record is a duplicate of the original;
> unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness.
> ....

[14] Fed.R.Evid. 803(6) list evidence which may not be excluded by the hearsay rule. Subdivision 6 addresses records of regularly conducted activity. Such records must be “made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge....”

End of Document

2017 WL 2483213
United States District Court,
W.D. Washington,
at Seattle.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Jeffrey P. POMERANTZ, Defendant.

CASE NO. C16-0689JLR
|
Signed 06/08/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Paul T. Butler, US Dept. of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Jeffrey P. Pomerantz, pro se.

ORDER

JAMES L. ROBART, United States District Judge

I. INTRODUCTION

1 Before the court is Defendant Jeffrey P. Pomerantz's motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(3) for improper venue and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. (Mot. (Dkt. # 9).) In the alternative, Mr. Pomerantz moves to transfer venue to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a). (Id.) Plaintiff United States of America ("the Government") opposes Mr. Pomerantz's motion. (Resp. (Dkt. # 11).) Mr. Pomerantz also provides a declaration, which the court considers when addressing the issues relating to venue. (Pomerantz Decl. (Dkt. # 13-1).) The court has considered the parties' submissions, the relevant portions of the record, and the applicable law. Considering itself fully advised, [1] the court DENIES the motion to transfer and GRANTS the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim with leave to amend.

II. BACKGROUND

On May 13, 2016, the Government filed this suit to reduce to judgment civil penalties assessed against Mr. Pomerantz for his alleged failure to disclose foreign bank accounts in his 2007 through 2009 annual taxes. (Compl. (Dkt. # 1) at 2.) When the Government filed its complaint, the alleged civil penalties and interest totaled $860,300.35. (Id.) Mr. Pomerantz is a dual citizen of the United States and Canada who resides in Canada (id.), and he was allegedly required to file certain tax forms because of his interests in foreign bank accounts (id. ¶¶ 22, 36, 44). Mr. Pomerantz, who is proceeding pro se, moves to dismiss this case for improper venue under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(3) and for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). [2] (See Mot.) Alternatively, Mr. Pomerantz seeks to transfer this action to the District of Columbia. (Id.)

III. ANALYSIS

A. Venue

Mr. Pomerantz moves to dismiss this case for improper venue pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(3). (Id. at 1.) Dismissal for improper venue is only proper when venue is "wrong" or "improper." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(3); Atl. Marine Constr. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S. Ct. 568, 577 (2013). The federal venue statute provides that "[a] defendant not resident in the United States may be sued in any judicial district." 28 U.S.C. § 1391(c)(3); see also Brunette Mach. Works, Ltd. v. Kockum Indus., Inc., 406 U.S. 706, 714 (1972) (affirming that the provision in Section 1391 governing venue over a foreign defendant "is properly regarded not as a venue restriction at all, but rather as a declaration of the long-established rule that suits against aliens are wholly outside the operation of all the federal venue laws, general and special"). Mr. Pomerantz concedes that he is not a resident of the United States. (Pomerantz Decl. ¶ 1.) Therefore, venue is proper in any judicial district, including the Western District of Washington, and the court denies the motion to dismiss for improper venue.

2 In the alternative, Mr. Pomerantz moves to transfer venue to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia under 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a), chiefly because his counsel of choice is admitted to practice before that court. (See Mot. at 8.) Section 1404 grants judges discretion to transfer a case to another district, even though venue is proper in the current forum. See Jones v. GNC

Franchising, Inc., 211 F.3d 495, 498 (9th Cir. 2000). The purposes of Section 1404(a) are to prevent wasted "time, energy, and money and to protect litigants, witnesses, and the public against unnecessary inconvenience and expense." Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 616 (1964).

1. Legal Standard

The court must "adjudicate motions for transfer [of venue] according to an individualized, case-by-case consideration of convenience and fairness." Jones, 211 F.3d at 498. As the movant, Mr. Pomerantz bears the burden of showing transfer is appropriate. Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 255-56 (1981). In determining whether to transfer venue pursuant to Section 1404(a), the Ninth Circuit articulated several factors that the court should consider: "(1) the location where the relevant agreements were negotiated and executed, (2) the district that is most familiar with the governing law, (3) the plaintiff's choice of forum, (4) the respective parties' contacts with the forum, (5) the contacts relating to the plaintiff's cause of action in the chosen forum, (6) the differences in the costs of litigation in the two forums, (7) the availability of compulsory process to compel attendance of unwilling non-party witnesses, and (8) the ease of access to sources of proof." Jones, 211 F.3d at 498-99.

2. Factors Related to Location

The first factor—the location where the underlying agreement was negotiated or concluded—is neutral because there are no agreements between the parties. (See generally Compl.) The second factor—the district most familiar with the governing law—is also neutral. Neither party argues that federal courts in Washington or the District of Columbia have superior familiarity with the federal law, and federal district courts are presumed to be equally capable of applying federal law. See Cargill Inc. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 920 F. Supp. 144, 148 (D. Colo. 1996).

The fifth factor—the contacts between the Government's claims and the chosen forum—is also neutral. See Jones, 211 F.3d at 498. The acts or omissions that allegedly give rise to the claim took place when Mr. Pomerantz failed to file the contested tax forms from his residence in Canada. (Resp. at 7.) Neither party asserts any relationship between the cause of action and the Western District of Washington or the District of Columbia. (See generally Mot.; Resp.)

3. Factors Related to the Parties

The third factor—the plaintiff's choice of forum—favors denying the motion to transfer. As the plaintiff in this action, the Government's choice of forum generally receives deference under Section 1404(a). Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 805 F.2d 834, 843 (9th Cir. 1986). The court balances this deference against the extent of the plaintiff's and defendant's contacts with the forum, "including those relating to his cause of action." See Pac. Car & Foundry Co. v. Pence, 403 F.2d 949, 954 (9th Cir. 1968.) "If the operative facts have not occurred within the forum of original selection and that forum has no particular interest in the parties or the subject matter, the plaintiff's choice is only entitled to minimal consideration." Id. None of the operative facts occurred in the Western District of Washington, and this forum does not have any particular interest in the parties or the subject matter. (See generally Compl.) Neither the assessment of the FBAR penalties nor the hearings related to it occurred in Washington. (See id.; Resp. at 7.) Thus, this factor weighs only slightly against transfer of venue.

3 Likewise, the fourth factor—the parties' contacts with the forum—supports denying the motion to transfer. The Government asserts that Mr. Pomerantz has had frequent contact with the Western District of Washington (see Resp. at 7), whereas Mr. Pomerantz contends that he does not "regularly or frequently cross into th[at] district," only for short visits "every 2-3 months" (Pomerantz Decl. ¶ 9). Mr. Pomerantz does not identify any personal contacts with the District of Columbia, but he notes that his counsel of choice is a member of the District of Columbia bar. (Mot. at 4; see also Pomerantz Decl. ¶ 10 (stating that Mr. Pomerantz "cannot afford counsel and ha[s] no access to counsel licensed to practice before this court").) On balance, the court concludes that this factor weighs against transfer because the relevant contacts under Jones are the contacts between the parties, the witnesses, and the potential fora, not the parties' representatives. See 28 U.S.C. § 1404 (listing interests to be considered as those of "parties and witnesses").

4. Factors Related to Litigation

The sixth factor—differences in litigation costs—is also neutral. Mr. Pomerantz declares that he "cannot afford counsel" and has "no access to counsel licensed to practice in the Western District of Washington." (Pomerantz Decl.

¶ 10.) Mr. Pomerantz further asserts that he "has no connection with anyone in Washington [S]tate to act as his counsel and doesn't feel that anyone there would be more qualified than his choice of representative." (Mot. at 4.)

The conveniences to be considered when determining whether transfer is warranted are those of the "parties and witnesses." 28 U.S.C. § 1404. Generally, convenience of counsel may not be considered as part of the Section 1404(a) analysis. See, e.g., In re Volkswagen AG, 371 F.3d 201, 206 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that the district court's "consideration of location of counsel as a factor to be considered in determining the propriety of a motion to transfer venue was an abuse of discretion").

A minority of courts have considered convenience of counsel a proper consideration when deciding whether to transfer a case, as a derivative of the parties' interests in litigation costs. See Mobil Oil Corp. v. W. R. Grace & Co., 334 F. Supp. 117, 124 n.5 (S.D. Tex. 1971) ("The cost of counsel's transportation and time in route must be borne by the parties. Therefore this factor directly bears upon the convenience of the parties and costs of litigation"). However, Mr. Pomerantz does not assert that his chosen counsel will incur additional costs if this case remains in the Western District of Washington. (See generally Mot.) Mr. Pomerantz instead argues that his chosen counsel cannot practice in this court at all because his preferred counsel is not admitted to practice in this court and cannot be admitted pro hac vice because "he has no connection with anyone who may be willing to act as local counsel." (See id. at 4.) The court finds this argument unpersuasive.

Before the District Court for the District of Hawaii, a plaintiff asserted that his counsel of choice resided in Hawaii, and if the court granted the defendant's motion to transfer, the plaintiff would likely be unable "to find another attorney to represent [him] in New York." Berry v. Deutsche Bank Tr. Co. Americas, No. 07-00172 SOM/LEK, 2007 WL 2363366, at *8 (D. Haw. Aug. 13, 2007). The court gave this argument no weight, reaffirming that "courts have not considered the location of the parties' counsel as a factor for transfer." Id. (citing Kawamoto v. CB Richard Ellis, Inc., 225 F. Supp. 2d 1209, 1215-16 (D. Haw. 2002)); see also 15 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure § 3850 (4th ed. 2017) (stating the general rule that the location of counsel is not a factor to considered on a motion to transfer venue). Thus, this court does not consider the location of Mr. Pomerantz's counsel as a factor for transfer. As neither party has alleged any other basis for increased litigation costs in either forum, the sixth factor is neutral.

4 The seventh and eighth factors—the ease of access to sources of proof and witnesses—are also neutral. Mr. Pomerantz identifies no witnesses or evidence that are more easily accessed from the District of Columbia than from the Western District of Washington. (See generally Mot.)

5. Weighing the Factors

The only non-neutral factors are the plaintiff's choice of forum and the parties' contact with the forum, and each weighs against transferring venue. See supra §§ III.A.2-4. Accordingly, the court denies Mr. Pomerantz's motion to transfer.

B. Failure to State a Claim

In his motion to dismiss, Mr. Pomerantz asserts that the Government fails to plead sufficient facts to support the reasonable inference that he "willfully" failed to file a required report regarding foreign bank accounts in 2007, 2008, and 2009. [3] (Mot. at 8.) The Government responds by identifying allegations that it contends suggest Mr. Pomerantz was either willfully ignorant of the reporting requirement or had actual knowledge of the reporting requirement and his duty to comply with it. (Resp. at 4.)

1. Legal Standard

When considering a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), the court construes the complaint in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Livid Holdings, Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005). The court must accept all well-pleaded facts as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Wyler Summit P'ship v. Turner Broad. Sys., Inc., 135 F.3d 658, 661 (9th Cir. 1998). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.' " Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)). A court may dismiss a complaint as a matter of law if it lacks a cognizable legal theory or states insufficient facts under a cognizable legal theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990); Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 534 (9th Cir. 1984).

The court need not accept as true a legal conclusion presented as a factual allegation. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Although Rule 8 does not require "detailed factual allegations," it demands more than "an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). A pleading that offers only "labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action" will not survive a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Id.

2. The Government's Claim

The Government seeks to reduce to an enforceable judgment a civil penalty assessed against Mr. Pomerantz by a delegate of the Secretary of the Treasury. (Compl. at 1); 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5). Section 5321(a)(5) permits the Secretary of Treasury to "commence a civil action to recover a civil penalty," but it does not indicate the elements of such an action. See United States v. McBride, 908 F. Supp. 2d 1186, 1201 (D. Utah 2012). Courts have concluded the validity of the underlying civil penalty is one element of an action to reduce a penalty to judgment. See United States v. Williams, No. 1:09-CV-437, 2010 WL 3473311, at *1 (E.D. Va. Sept. 1, 2010), rev'd on other grounds, 489 Fed.Appx. 655 (4th Cir. 2012). In United States v. Williams, the District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia concluded that a court should review the assessment of the underlying penalty de novo, and the amount of the penalty under an arbitrary and capricious standard. Id.; accord McBride, 908 F. Supp. 2d at 1201 (applying a de novo standard to whether the underlying penalty was a valid debt); Moore v. United States, No. C13-2063RAJ, 2015 WL 1510007, at *7 (W.D. Wash. Apr. 1, 2015) (same). Thus, in order to state a claim to reduce a civil penalty to a judgment, the Government must allege sufficient facts to support a reasonable inference that (1) the government assessed a civil penalty, and (2) the penalty was valid. To adequately allege that the penalty was valid, the Government must allege facts supporting each element of the underlying penalty. See United States v. Toth, No. 15-CV-13367-ADB, 2017 WL 1703936, at *4 (D. Mass. May 2, 2017) (using the elements of C.F.R. § 1010.350 as elements of an action to reduce to judgment a civil FBAR penalty in ruling on a motion to dismiss).

5 The civil penalties that the Government seeks to reduce to a judgment result from Mr. Pomerantz's alleged failure to file Treasury Form TD F 90-22.1 (an "FBAR Form"), which reports foreign bank and financial accounts. (Compl. at 1.) A duty to file an FBAR form arises if: (1) a "U.S. Person";[4] (2) has a direct financial interest in, an indirect financial interest in, signatory authority over, or some other type of authority over one or more financial accounts located in a foreign country; and (3) the aggregate value of such account or accounts was greater than $10,000.00 at any time during the calendar year at issue. 31 U.S.C. § 5314; see also 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350. Additionally, because the Government assessed a penalty greater than $10,000.00 for each alleged failure to file (Compl. ¶¶ 24, 46, 48), Mr. Pomerantz's failure to file must have been willful, 31 U.S.C. § 5321. Thus, in order to state a claim the Government must plead facts supporting the reasonable inferences that (1) Mr. Pomerantz was a "U.S. Person," who (2) had an interest in or authority over the subject foreign accounts, which (3) had an aggregate value of $10,000.00 or more, and (4) that he willfully failed to file an FBAR Form for the accounts. Mr. Pomerantz contends that the Government fails to adequately allege his "interest in or authority" over foreign accounts and willful failure to file.[5]

a. Interest or Authority over Foreign Financial Accounts

The "interest or authority" element may be met by showing that the taxpayer: (1) had a direct financial interest in a foreign account, (2) had an indirect financial interest in a foreign account, or (3) served as a signatory or had other authority over a foreign account. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(b). The Government alleges two sets of foreign accounts provide the basis for the penalties assessed: (1) Mr. Pomerantz's personal accounts located in Canada (the "CIBC Accounts"), and (2) Mr. Pomerantz's accounts in Switzerland (the "Grand Turk Oppenheim Accounts," the "2003 Oppenheim Portfolio Accounts," and the "2007 Oppenheim Portfolio Accounts" (collectively, the "Chafford Limited Accounts")).[6] (Compl. ¶¶ 5-13.)

The Government alleges that the CIBC Accounts are located in Canada and that Mr. Pomerantz had a direct financial interest in them. (Id. ¶ 5.) The Government further alleges that Mr. Pomerantz formed a corporation named Chafford Limited, in whose name the Chafford Limited Accounts were opened, and that Mr. Pomerantz "retained full powers to exercise any and all rights to act on behalf of" Chafford Limited. (Id. ¶ 6.) These allegations plausibly support the inferences that Mr. Pomerantz had a "financial interest" in the CIBC Accounts and an "other financial interest" in the Chafford Limited Accounts, and that both sets of accounts were foreign. See 31 C.F.R. § 1010.31(e)(ii)(2).

b. Willful Failure to File

Because the civil penalties exceed the statutory limit for a non-willful failure to file an FBAR Form, the Government must allege facts supporting the inference that Mr. Pomerantz acted "willfully" in his failure to file. See 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(c). Generally, a "willful" failure for purposes of the Bank Secrecy Act is "an intentional violation of a known legal duty to report." Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 154 n.5 (1994); see also United States v. Zwerner, No. 13-22082-CIV, 2014 WL 11878430, at *3, n.3 (S.D. Fla. Apr. 29, 2014) (adopting the Ratzlaf definition for civil FBAR penalties); accord IRS CCA 200603026, 2006 WL 148700 at *1-2 (Jan. 20, 2006) (An IRS chief counsel advisory opinion addressing in part the definition of "willful" FBAR reporting violations.).

6 The Government alleges that Mr. Pomerantz's failure to timely file FBAR Forms "was willful within the meaning of 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)," implying that Mr. Pomerantz had either constructive or actual knowledge of the reporting duty. (Id. ¶¶ 23, 37, 45.) However, these allegations are precisely the "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements" that are insufficient to state a claim. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, (2009) (citing*Twombly*, 550 U.S. at 555). They do not plausibly support the inference that Mr. Pomerantz knew of the reporting duty. Instead, the Government must allege sufficient facts to plausibly support the inference that Mr. Pomerantz knew—actually or constructively—of the reporting requirement. United States v. Williams, 489 Fed.Appx. 655, 659 (4th Cir. 2012).

i. Actual Knowledge

Actual knowledge of the duty to report may be inferred from a course of conduct that demonstrates a conscious attempt to conceal the failure to report. See United States v. Sturman, 951 F.2d 1466, 1476 (6th Cir. 1991) (citing Spies v. United States, 317 U.S. 492, 499 (1943)). The Government alleges that the company Mr. Pomerantz used to open the Swiss accounts—Chafford Limited —"conducted no active business, but was a shell entity used to hold and manage [Mr.] Pomerantz' personal investments." (Compl. ¶¶ 6-7.)

Similar allegations, combined with the taxpayer's failure to pursue knowledge of further reporting requirements, sufficiently supported a finding of "willfulness" in Sturman. See 951 F.2d at 1476-77. The court can plausibly infer an intent to evade the foreign bank account reporting requirement based on the creation of foreign bank accounts in the name of a shell company. See id. Thus, with regard to the Chafford Limited Accounts, the Government has adequately pleaded facts supporting the inference that Mr. Pomerantz knew of his duty to report.

However, Mr. Pomerantz opened the CIBC Accounts in his own name. (Compl. ¶ 5.) The accounts were opened prior to January 1, 2001, well before the allegedly "duplicitous" actions occurred. (Id.) The Government makes no allegations that Mr. Pomerantz took steps to conceal or mislead sources of income by opening the CIBC Accounts, and since the accounts were created well before the allegedly "duplicitous" actions occurred, the court cannot infer a confiscatory intent with regard to the CIBC Accounts. (See id.) The court declines to infer from Mr. Pomerantz's creation of the Chafford Limited Accounts knowledge of the duty to file FBAR Forms for the CIBC Accounts. The Government has not provided the court with any authority in which a court inferred from obfuscating conduct with no connection to a particular account an intent to evade a reporting obligation for that account, and the court finds such an inference implausible. (See generally Resp.) Thus, with regard to the CIBC Accounts, the Government makes only speculative and conclusory allegations regarding Mr. Pomerantz's actual knowledge.

ii. Constructive Knowledge

Knowledge of the duty to report may be actual or constructive. Williams, 489 Fed.Appx. at 659. Taxpayers who are willfully ignorant of the reporting requirement are treated as if they knew of the requirement, under the theory of constructive knowledge. Id. The Government alleges that Mr. Pomerantz "failed to report income deposited into, and/or received from, the foreign accounts." (Compl. ¶¶ 22, 36, 44.) The Government argues that the court can reasonably infer from this allegation that Mr. Pomerantz was willfully ignorant of the FBAR reporting obligation. (Resp. at 4.)

However, the cases the Government cites in support of this argument have found "willful ignorance" of the FBAR reporting duty because the government showed that the taxpayer was on inquiry notice of the duty due to specific language on a Schedule B tax form, which directs filers to the FBAR filing instructions and requirements. See Williams, 2010 WL 3473311, at *4 (imputing knowledge of the FBAR reporting requirement to a taxpayer who completed a Schedule B form); McBride, 908 F. Supp. 2d at 1197-98 (same); Sturman, 951 F.2d at 1476 (imputing knowledge of the FBAR reporting requirement to a taxpayer who was "aware of" the Schedule B form's contents).

7 Here, in contrast, the Government does not allege that Mr. Pomerantz filled out a Schedule B Form or was otherwise aware of its contents and instructions regarding the FBAR reporting requirement. (See generally Compl.) Nor has the Government alleged any other basis to infer willful ignorance. (Id.) Accordingly, the court cannot reasonably infer that Mr. Pomerantz was willfully ignorant of the FBAR duty to report.

Based on the foregoing analysis, the court concludes that the Government fails to sufficiently plead that any failure of the duty to report with regard to the CIBC Accounts was willful. The court cannot disaggregate the amount of the penalty that resulted from the failure to report the CIBC accounts from the failure to report the Chafford Limited Accounts. Because the CIBC Accounts were part of the basis for levying each of the penalties that the Government seeks to reduce to judgment, the court accordingly dismisses the entire complaint as to all three penalties. (Compl. ¶¶ 24, 46, 48.)

C. Leave to Amend

As a general rule, when a court grants a motion to dismiss, the court should dismiss the complaint with leave to amend. See Eminence Capital, LLC v. Aspeon, Inc., 316 F.3d 1048, 1051-52 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)). The policy favoring amendment is to be applied with "extreme liberality." Id. at 1051. In determining whether dismissal with leave to amend is appropriate, courts consider such factors as undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowing the amendment, and futility of amendment.Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182 (1962).

Mr. Pomerantz does not argue that any prejudice, undue delay, bad faith, or dilatory motive should preclude leave to amend, and the court discerns no such circumstances. (See generally Mot; Reply (Dkt. # 13).) The court also concludes that amendment would not be futile at this stage of the proceedings. The court therefore grants the Government leave to amend its complaint within 21 days of the entry of this order. If the Government fails to file an amended complaint by that deadline, the court will dismiss the complaint with prejudice.

IV. CONCLUSION

The court DENIES Mr. Pomerantz's motion to transfer but GRANTS his motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim (Dkt. # 9) and GRANTS the Government leave to amend its complaint. The Government's amended complaint, if any, must be filed and served no later than twenty-one (21) days from the entry of this order.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 2483213, 119 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-2113

Footnotes

[1] Neither party has requested oral argument, and the court deems it unnecessary to the disposition of this motion. See Local Rules W.D. Wash. LCR 7(b)(4).

[2] Mr. Pomerantz phrases his argument regarding venue in a way that suggests he may attempt to challenge the court's personal jurisdiction over him. (See Mot. at 5.) However, he has waived that defense by failing to affirmatively raise it. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(1)(A); see also Am. Ass'n of Naturopathic Physicians v. Hayhurst, 227 F.3d 1104, 1007 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that a pro se defendant waived the defense of lack of personal jurisdiction by omitting it from a Rule 12 motion to dismiss for insufficient process).

3 Mr. Pomerantz provides a declaration supporting his motion to dismiss. (See generally Pomerantz Decl.) If, in a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a court is presented with matters outside the pleadings and does not exclude them, the court must treat the motion as one for summary judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d). The court therefore excludes Mr. Pomerantz's declaration from its consideration of the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim and does not convert the motion to one for summary judgment.

4 “U.S. Person” is a term of art that includes U.S. citizens. See 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350. Mr. Pomerantz does not contest that he was a “U.S. Person” during the relevant time and declares that he is a U.S. citizen. (See Mot.; Pomerantz Decl. ¶ 1.)

5 Mr. Pomerantz does not contest the Government's allegation that the aggregate amount was greater than $10,000.00. (See generally Mot.)

6 The Government also alleges facts regarding “Tofino Accounts.” (See Compl. ¶¶ 24, 46, 48.) However, because the Government does not allege that any of the 2007, 2008, and 2009 penalties were based on the Tofino Accounts, the court does not address the Tofino Accounts herein. (See generally id.)

End of Document

2013 WL 1500987
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
W.D. Tennessee,
Eastern Division.

David W. NANCE and Priscilla
Lynn Nance, Plaintiffs,
v.
UNITED STATES of America, Defendant.

No. 12–1064.
|
April 11, 2013.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Lewis Clayton Culpepper, III, Evans Petree, PC, Memphis, TN, for Plaintiffs.

Christopher James Williamson, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Defendant.

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS AMENDED COMPLAINT

J. DANIEL BREEN, District Judge.

INTRODUCTION

1 This matter was initially brought by the Plaintiffs, David W. Nance and Priscilla Lynn Nance (the “Nances”), on March 9, 2012 against the United States of America (sometimes referred to herein as the “Government”). (D.E.1.) On August 29, 2012, they filed an amended complaint, seeking a refund of tax penalties. (D.E.20.) Before the Court is the Defendant's motion to dismiss the amended complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (D.E.25.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The Rule permits a court to dismiss a complaint for “failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.” Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). “When a court is presented with a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, it may consider the [c]omplaint and any exhibits attached thereto, public records, items appearing in the record of the case and exhibits attached to defendant's motion to dismiss so long as they are referred to in the [c]omplaint and are central to the claims contained therein.” Bassett v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 528 F.3d 426, 430 (6th Cir.2008). “[T]he district court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and must accept all the factual allegations contained in the complaint as true.” Paige v. Coyner, 614 F.3d 273, 277 (6th Cir.2010) (citing Lambert v. Hartman, 517 F.3d 433, 439 (6th Cir.2008)). “In order to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, [a plaintiff's] complaint need contain only ‘enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.’ “ Id. (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007)).

FACTS ALLEGED

The Plaintiffs have alleged the following facts. The Nances reside in Milan, Tennessee and own and operate Nance Tool & Die, Inc ., a Tennessee corporation. Their attorney, Robert Bly, of Knoxville, Tennessee, who held himself out as an experienced tax adviser, informed the Plaintiffs that they could minimize income subject to federal taxation by forming offshore corporations domiciled in the Bahamas. To that end, he assisted them in forming Bahamian-domiciled Philco Investments, Ltd. (“Philco”), of which Mr. Nance was principal shareholder. Thereafter, Nance transferred funds from Nance Tool & Die's corporate account to Philco's bank account in Nassau. On Bly's advice, Plaintiffs also incorporated Luxum International, Ltd. in the Bahamas and a trust in Costa Rica. At the time, Bly assured the Plaintiffs their investments were proper.

In late 1999, however, counsel contacted the Nances to inform them that the offshore transactions may “no longer” be valid from a tax standpoint. Consequently, they ceased all their Bahamian and Costa Rican operations and deposits. Bly did not instruct Plaintiffs to remove funds from the offshore accounts, make reports to any agency, including the Internal Revenue Service (“IRS” or the “Service”), or take any other action.

On November 25, 2003, the IRS issued Letter 3679 to the Plaintiffs, advising that they were under examination by the agency in connection with their offshore financial arrangements. They were invited to participate in the Voluntary Compliance Initiative, a program under which they could minimize their exposure to penalties by providing certain information to the Government. If they complied, a civil fraud penalty would only be imposed for the "major" year. For any other year, only a delinquency or accuracy-related penalty would be assessed. The letter further stated that "[a]dditionally, we will not impose information return civil penalties for failure to comply with [Internal Revenue Code ("IRC")] sections ... 6048 [which requires reporting with respect to foreign trusts], if you file delinquent or amended information returns." (D.E. 20–1 at 1.) The letter provided that

> 2 civil penalties for violations involving Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBAR) will be imposed for only one year and we may resolve the FBAR penalty for less than the statutory amount based on the facts and circumstances of your case. Except for the FBAR penalty in one year, to which you will be expected to agree, civil penalties will not be imposed for failure to file an FBAR, for filing a false FBAR, or failing to keep records you are required to keep, if you file delinquent or amended FBARs.

(Id.). Letter 3679 instructed that, in order to participate in the program, Plaintiffs had to advise the IRS within thirty days of the date of the letter of their intention to participate. All required materials were to be submitted within 150 days. The agency contact person was listed therein as Elysia A. Wilcox.

After consulting with an attorney [1] and their accountant, the Nances opted to participate in the initiative. On December 8, 2003, they provided a Form 2848 to their accountant, Tom Shelton, permitting him to discuss their tax issues with the IRS. The Nances submitted the same form to their current attorney, Frank Stockdale Carney, on March 18, 2004. The form included power to discuss issues related to their income taxes and civil penalties for tax years 1996 through 2003. By letter dated March 24, 2004, Carney advised Wilcox that he was working with the Plaintiffs on a response to her letter and enclosed a copy of the Form 2848. In a subsequent correspondence dated April 9, 2004, Carney informed Wilcox of the facts and circumstances of Plaintiffs' offshore transactions and sought to begin the process of filing the necessary documents to be in compliance with the initiative. In the early summer of 2004, Carney contacted Janet Cunningham, the revenue agent assigned to the Nances' case, stating:

> As you and I discussed, there may be some informational returns, such as reports in IRC section[ ] ... 6048, that should have been filed in the past in connection with the foreign bank accounts. At this time, the Nances no longer maintain any of the foreign bank accounts. You mentioned that in your review you would determine whether these informational returns are now moot and we do not need to file those, or whether you want us to file any of those applicable returns. As I confirmed, if you feel you need us to file the applicable informational returns, please let me know and we will prepare those returns.

(Id. at 33.) Plaintiffs worked diligently to determine whether information reported for years 1997 through 2000 was correct and voluntarily filed amended returns based on professional advice received in 2003 and 2004 and at the request of the IRS. As part of the Voluntary Compliance Initiative, the Nances worked with the Service to formulate a Closing Agreement. Carney met with Cunningham on July 2, 2004, during which they discussed the remaining and amended returns that would be required. Carney took notes at the meeting that reflected his clients would need to file a Form 3520–A for the years 1997 through 2004, and that 2004 would be the final return. In a November 4, 2004 letter to Cunningham, Carney submitted, among other things, a Form 3520–A for the years 1997 through 2003. He stated therein that the submission was "[i]n response to [her] request at [their] last conference for additional information and reporting returns ..." (Id. at 35.) Otherwise, the Nances would have been required, pursuant to the 2003 Form 3520–A's filing instructions, to mail the form to the IRS Center located in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

3 On February 23, 2006, Plaintiffs executed a Closing Agreement with the IRS, pursuant to which they filed Forms 3520, 3520–A, 5472 and TDF 99–22.1 for the years 1999 through 2002. Under the terms of the Closing Agreement, Plaintiffs paid $1,245,396.52 in taxes due and $446,344.50 in penalties for 1999, along with interest. The Closing Agreement was signed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on April 12, 2006. The document provided in part that "[t]his agreement is final and conclusive except ... if it relates to a tax period ending after the date of this agreement, it is subject to any law, enacted after the agreement date, that applies to that tax period." (Id. at 9.)

On September 11, 2006, the Service issued Notice Number CP15 to the Plaintiffs, assessing an additional penalty in the amount of $156,478.00 for the 2003 tax year based on their failure to timely file the Form 3520–A due March 15, 2004. In subsequent notices, numbered CP503 and CP504, dated October 16, 2006 and November 20, 2006, respectively, the Nances were advised of interest added to the penalty, bringing the total balance to $158,897.00. Plaintiffs filed a Request for Penalty Waiver with the Taxpayer Advocate on June 1, 2007, citing reasonable cause for late filing of Form 3520–A. The request was denied on June 26, 2007.

On August 8, 2007, the Nances filed a Written Protest Appeal, requesting reconsideration of the determination based on reasonable cause. A conference was held with an appeals officer on March 11, 2008. The appeal was denied on October 20, 2009. A month later, the Plaintiffs filed a claim for credit for the period ending December 31, 2003, which the IRS disallowed on March 29, 2010.

The Plaintiffs submit that they are entitled to relief on the following grounds:

> (a) The penalty assessed against Plaintiffs by Defendant is improper because Plaintiffs filed Forms 3520, 3520–A, 5472 and TD 99–22.1 for tax years 1999–2002 after receiving notice regarding the Voluntary Compliance Initiative dated November 25, 2003; however, Plaintiffs received a late filing fee for 2003 Form 3520–A.
>
> (b) The 2003 Form 3520–A return was filed with the understanding that it was part and parcel of a Voluntary Compliance Initiative under which the Plaintiffs over a couple of years worked with an assigned Revenue Officer to determine what returns were required, to file such returns, and to pay back taxes associated with foreign bank accounts.
>
> (c) The Letter 3679 and the Voluntary Compliance Initiative had assured the Plaintiffs that a civil fraud penalty and a civil penalty for failing to file an FBAR would be assessed for only one year, and the Plaintiffs paid such penalties for 1999 as stated in the Closing Agreement. Letter 3679 further assured Plaintiffs that the offer contained therein pertained to years ending after December 31, 1998.
>
> (d) The Closing Agreement, executed by the Plaintiffs and the Commissioner, included the penalties assessed with respect to tax year ending December 31, 1999 and further stated that it was conclusive as to all tax periods except "if it relates to a tax period ending after the date of this agreement" and such Closing Agreement was last executed by the Commissioner on April 12, 2006.
>
> 4 (e) Plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Carney, first contacted Ms. Elysia A. Wilcox by letter dated March 24, 2004, about the Plaintiffs' participation in the Voluntary Compliance Initiative, which was within the 150–day period permitted by Letter 3679.
>
> (f) Mr. Carney's and the Plaintiffs' understanding was that the Service would determine what, if any, information returns and amended returns were required and would notify Mr. Carney and the Plaintiffs, at which time the Plaintiffs would file such returns. In fact, Plaintiffs filed such returns upon the instruction of the Service's agent, including returns for 2003, in finalizing the Voluntary Compliance Initiative. All information returns, including the 2003 Form 3520–A, were mailed as one single packet to the agent to conclude the Voluntary Compliance Initiative.
>
> (g) Under the Plaintiffs' reasonable reliance on Letter 3679, the Closing Agreement, and the Voluntary Compliance Initiative, no assessment should ever have been made for 2003 because the Plaintiffs' understanding was that any penalties for late filing of all necessary information returns related to the Plaintiffs' offshore transactions were covered by such Letter 3679, the Closing Agreement, and the Voluntary Compliance Initiative.
>
> (h) Alternatively, the Plaintiffs should be granted the requested relief because they had reasonable cause for failing to timely file the 2003 Form 3520–A, which was not due to willful neglect.

(D.E. 20 at 13–15.)

ASSERTIONS OF THE PARTIES AND ANALYSIS

The Government first submits that the tax period ending December 31, 2003 and, by extension, the 2003 Form 3520–A, the late filing of which was the basis for the penalty at issue, was not, as Plaintiffs claim, part of any agreement between the Nances and the IRS. Under 26 U.S.C. § 7121, the Service "is authorized to enter into an agreement in writing with any person relating to the liability of such person ... in respect of any internal revenue tax for any taxable period." 26 U.S.C. § 7121(a). Closing agreements under the statute are "final and conclusive," except on a showing of "fraud or malfeasance, or misrepresentation of a material fact[.]" 26 U.S .C. § 7121(b). Accordingly, "closing agreements are binding on the parties as to the matters agreed upon and may not be modified or disregarded in any proceeding unless there is a showing of fraud, malfeasance, or misrepresentation of a material fact." In re Spendthrift Farm, Inc., 931 F.2d 405, 407 (6th Cir.1991); see also In re Crowell, 258 B.R. 885, 888 (E.D.Tenn.2001) (same), aff'd, 305 F.3d 474 (6th Cir.2002).

Closing agreements under § 7121(a) "are contracts and generally are interpreted under ordinary contract principles." Roach v. United States, 106 F.3d 720, 723 (6th Cir.1997). "An ambiguous closing agreement will be interpreted in accord with the surrounding circumstances." Id. "[I]f the essential terms of an agreement are deemed unambiguous, a court will not look beyond the four corners of the document to determine the parties' intent." Rink v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 47 F.3d 168, 171 (6th Cir.1995).

5 The Defendant points out that the Closing Agreement entered into by the Plaintiffs referred only to the tax years 1997 through December 31, 2002 and that, while the Nances could have requested inclusion of the 2003 tax year within the agreement's terms, they did not do so. Although they do not dispute that the Closing Agreement did not specifically mention 2003 returns, the Plaintiffs insist that, at a minimum, there is some ambiguity as to whether it applied only to years 1997 through 2002 or to all tax years other than those ending after the date of the agreement. Thus, they submit that the Court is permitted to consider parol evidence—in this case, the parties' conduct and Letter 3679—in construing the Closing Agreement.

Even if the Court agreed with the Government that the 2003 Form 3520–A filing did not fall within the ambit of the Closing Agreement, 26 U.S.C. § 6677, which provides for the imposition of penalties for failure to file information with respect to foreign trusts and under which the penalty here was assessed, states that "[n]o penalty shall be imposed ... on any failure which is shown to be due to reasonable cause or not due to willful neglect." 26 U.S.C. § 6677(d). "Reasonable cause" requires the taxpayer to demonstrate that he "exercised ordinary business care and prudence but nevertheless was unable to file the return within the prescribed time." United States v. Boyle, 469 U.S. 241, 246, 105 S.Ct. 687, 690, 83 L.Ed.2d 622 (1985) (internal quotation marks omitted). "Willful neglect" is defined in this context as "conscious, intentional failure or reckless indifference." Id. at 245, 105 S.Ct. at 690. The taxpayer is charged with the "heavy burden" of showing both reasonable cause and absence of willful neglect. [2] Id., 105 S.Ct. at 689–90; Shafmaster v. United States, 707 F.3d 130, 137 (1st Cir.2013).

In attempting to meet their burden, the Nances argue that (1) Bly did not indicate to them that they needed to report any transactions to the IRS or take other action in connection with prior offshore transactions, advice upon which they relied, and that (2), upon receipt of Letter 3679 and knowledge of filing requirements relating to the offshore transactions, Plaintiffs immediately sought advice from their accountant and new attorney, who opened a dialogue with the IRS, which constituted the exercise of ordinary business care. The Government discounts the first of the proffered bases, contending that Plaintiffs could not have relied upon advice regarding when a 2003 tax form should have been filed when Bly ceased representing them in 1999. However, it is not clear from the record before the Court when Bly's representation ceased. Further, "[a]lthough relying on an expert for the ministerial task of filing a tax return does not constitute reasonable cause, relying on an expert's advice concerning substantive questions of tax law, such as whether a liability exists in the first instance, may constitute reasonable cause." Estate of Liftin v. United States, 101 Fed. Cl. 604, 608 (Fed.Cl.2011) (citing Boyle, 469 U.S. at 250, 105 S.Ct. 687) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also McMahan v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 114 F.3d 366, 369 (2d Cir.1997) ("reliance on a mistaken legal opinion of a competent tax adviser—a lawyer or accountant—that it was unnecessary to file a return constitutes reasonable cause"). The Nances may be able to prove facts demonstrating that they relied in good faith on Bly's failure to advise them of the need to file a Form 3520–A for tax year 2003 and that they did not otherwise know during the period of his representation that such a filing was required.

6 When they received Letter 3679, Plaintiffs became aware of their obligation to make certain filings with the Service. As noted above, their subsequent counsel, Mr. Carney, met with revenue officer Cunningham in July 2004, four months after the Form 3520–A's March 2004 due date. According to the amended complaint, "Mr. Carney and Ms. Cunningham discussed the remaining returns and amended returns that would be required. Mr. Carney took notes from such meeting, noting that the Plaintiffs would need to file a Form 3520–A for the years 1997 through 2004 (stating that 2004 would be the final return)." (D.E. 20 ¶ 42.) Carney provided the form to Cunningham directly pursuant to her request in November 2004.

"Reasonable cause may exist when a taxpayer files a return after the due date, but does so in reliance on an expert's erroneous advice." Estate of Liftin, 101 Fed. Cl. at 608. Reliance on the erroneous advice of an IRS officer or employee may also constitute reasonable cause. See McMahan, 114 F.3d at 369; Tesoriero v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, No. 18959–10, 2012 WL 3964976, at *4 (U.S. Tax Ct., Sept. 11, 2012). Viewing the facts alleged in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs, the Court finds they have stated a plausible claim that their failure to timely file the 2003 Form 3520–A was due to reasonable cause, based on Mr. Carney's communications with Ms. Cunningham.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth herein, the Defendant's motion to dismiss is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2013 WL 1500987, 111 A.F.T.R.2d 2013-1616, 2013-1 USTC P 50,278

Footnotes

[1] The amended complaint does not indicate whether this individual was Bly, Frank Stockdale Carney, see infra, or someone else.

[2] The Government does not argue that the Nances' failure to file the form at issue was the result of willful neglect and nothing currently in the record raises an inference thereof. Thus, for purposes of the instant motion, the Court will assume Plaintiffs did not willfully neglect their tax liability and will focus on whether they have passed muster under Rule 12(b)(6) on the issue of reasonable cause.

End of Document

148 T.C. No. 21
United States Tax Court.

Ian D. SMITH, Petitioner
v.
COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Respondent

Docket No. 25605–15W
|
Filed June 7, 2017

Synopsis

Background: Petitioner brought whistleblower action, seeking to recover award after target corporate taxpayer paid income tax deficiency of over $14 million. Parties cross-moved for summary judgment.

Holdings: The Tax Court, Gerber, J., held that:

[1] in matter of first impression, term "amounts in dispute," as used in whistleblower provisions, included tax deficiencies, penalties, interest, additions to tax and additional amounts in dispute because of examinations commenced on account of whistleblower claim, and

[2] petitioner met statutory threshold "amount in dispute" required to recover whistleblower award.

Ordered accordingly.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Thomas C. Pliske and Shine Lin, for petitioner.

Richard L. Hatfield, for respondent.

P, a whistleblower, provided information to R. Using P's information, R commenced examinations of a taxpayer that led to the assessment and collection of almost $20 million. R determined that slightly less than $2 million of the collected proceeds was collected using the information P provided. R further determined that because less than $2 million was based on P's information, the $2 million threshold for application of the nondiscretionary award regime of I.R.C. sec. 7623(b) had not been met. Accordingly, R made a discretionary whistleblower award under I.R.C. sec. 7623(a). P argues that the "amounts in dispute" referenced in I.R.C. sec. 7623(b)(5)(B) is almost $20 million and that the threshold for use of the nondiscretionary award of I.R.C. sec. 7623(b) has been met.

OPINION

GERBER, Judge:

1 This whistleblower award case, brought pursuant to section 7623(b)(4), [1] is before the Court on the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment. The seminal legal issue, one of first impression, concerns the interpretation of the phrase "amounts in dispute" in section 7623(b)(5)(B) for purposes of determining whether the $2 million threshold was met requiring payment of a whistleblower award under section 7623(b).

Background [2]

Petitioner filed a Form 211, Application for Award for Original Information, that respondent received on August 4, 2008. On the Form 211 petitioner alleged that a business was exchanging its products or services for gift certificates and that these barter transactions were not included as part of the business' income. Petitioner also contended that customers' gift certificates were given to the business' employees as compensation and that the value of the gift certificates was not treated as includible in the employees' income (i.e., not included on Forms W–2, Wage and Tax Statement). This information was based on petitioner's personal experience. In a September 4, 2008 letter, respondent acknowledged receipt of the Form 211, assigned a number to petitioner's application, and advised that the claim would be evaluated.

Using petitioner's whistleblower information, respondent, early in 2009, initiated both an employment tax and an income tax examination of the business entity that petitioner had identified. As a result of the employment tax examination, on January 4, 2012, the business agreed to employment tax liabilities for various taxable quarters from 2006 through 2009 in the aggregate amount of $3,094,188.12. On the same date the business also agreed to employment tax penalties for various quarters from 2006 through 2009 in the aggregate amount of $618,837.64. On January 23, 2012, respondent's employment tax revenue agent attributed $496,095, in the aggregate, of employment taxes that were assessed and collected from the subject business directly to the information provided by petitioner's whistleblower claim.

On July 17, 2013, respondent's income tax revenue agent's report proposed business income tax adjustments for “disallowed expenses of barter assets.” The income tax revenue agent noted that the subject business had reported all income from barter activity but that the adjustments resulted from failure to substantiate the barter-related expenses. The amounts of those income adjustments in the report that the income tax revenue agent attributed to the barter deductions for the 2007, 2008, 2009, and 2010 fiscal years were $1,153,327, $1,263,600, $1,130,468, and $1,004,102, respectively. Those adjustments involving the disallowance of barter-related expenses ultimately resulted in the assessment and collection of income tax in the aggregate amount of $1,593,024. The income tax revenue agent also noted that the above amounts were attributable to the information in petitioner's whistleblower claim because the barter accounts had been selected for scrutiny on account of the claim. The total income tax deficiency that was ultimately agreed to and paid by the subject business was $14,543,098, including the $1,593,024 referenced in the income tax revenue agent's report.

2 Respondent's whistleblower analyst (analyst) in a memorandum to his program manager stated that his “review of the employment tax adjustments supports a determination that the whistleblower information substantially contributed to the actions taken on several general ledger accounts.” The analyst determined that collected proceeds subject to a whistleblower award for the employment taxes totaled $1,777,911.77. That amount exceeded the $595,314 that the employment tax examiner had determined to be attributable to the whistleblower claim. The analyst's more expansive approach included gift certificates and other items that were not specifically tied to the bartering but nonetheless generated employment tax liability as part of the completed audit process initiated by the whistleblower claim.

The analyst, however, stated that > [his] review of the income tax adjustments and Example 2 in the regulations, leads * * * [him] to the conclusion that the whistleblower submission did not substantially contribute to the income tax adjustments. The only connection between the income tax adjustments and the whistleblower submission is the services choice of general ledger accounts to examine.

The reference to “Example 2” in the analyst's statement refers to Example 2 in section 301.7623–2(b), Proced. & Admin. Regs. He also relied on section 301.7623–2(e)(2), Proced. & Admin. Regs., which contains a definition of “amount in dispute”. In addition, the analyst stated: “The income tax adjustments were made based on a lack of substantiation or business purpose which is a different fact pattern than the one alleged by the whistleblower.” The analyst's conclusion was that the $1,593,024 of income tax collected from the business in connection with barter accounts was not attributable to petitioner's whistleblower claim.

Accordingly, the analyst determined that of the $3,853,345.45 of employment tax, penalty and interest, only a portion, $1,771,911.77, was directly attributable to the whistleblower, resulting in a determination of a discretionary 10% award of $177,191.18 under section 7623(a). The analyst used section 7623(a) because, in his view, the “amount in dispute” was less than the $2 million section 7623(b)(5)(B) threshold so that a mandatory 15% to 30% award under section 7623(b)(1) was not warranted. With respect to the remaining tax, penalties, and interest, $2,081,433.67, the analyst determined that they had no direct relationship to the whistleblower information and therefore resulted in a discretionary 1% award of $20,814.34 under section 7623(a). In the analyst's report in which he determined that the whistleblower's claim did not result in an income tax deficiency, it was also noted that the income tax examination of the subject business generated a $14,543,098 income tax deficiency, which the subject business ultimately agreed to and paid.

In an August 12, 2013, memorandum to his acting program manager, the analyst sought clarification on the determination of the amount to be attributed to the phrase “collected proceeds” and related matters because of the confluence of the employment and income tax deductions in the subject whistleblower's claim. The analyst explained that there was a direct relationship between the whistleblower's claim and the employment tax but not between the whistleblower's claim and the income tax. With respect to the income tax the whistleblower's claim was that the subject business had failed to report the barter transactions in income. The income tax examiner determined that the barter transactions were includible in income but disallowed certain deductions relating to the barter transactions for lack of substantiation, resulting in income tax deficiencies. The analyst questioned whether the income tax deficiencies associated with the bartering accounts of the subject business "are a part of collected proceeds, [and] can the award percentage be different for the employment tax and income tax adjustments?"

3 On July 27, 2015, respondent issued a Preliminary Award Recommendation Under Section 7623(a) (recommendation). The recommendation followed the analyst's determination that petitioner's total whistleblower award was to be $198,005.52 ($177,191.18 plus $20,814.34). In an August 10, 2015, letter, petitioner's counsel responded to the recommendation disagreeing with the amount of the award. In particular, petitioner's counsel contended that the award percentage should have been between 15% and 30% because the amount in dispute exceed $2 million. Petitioner's counsel raised additional questions concerning interpretation of section 7623.

In a September 4, 2015, Final Decision Under Section 7623(a), respondent advised petitioner that, after considering his counsel's contentions, the amount of the whistleblower award would remain $183,551.11 ($198,005.51 less a 7.3% sequestration reduction) (excluding any award attributable to the income tax). In addition respondent advised that the award amount would be reduced by 7.3% in accord with the Budget Control Act of 2011, as amended by the American Tax Relief Act of 2012, requiring that automatic reductions take place as of March 1, 2013, including awards paid under section 7623.

Discussion

I. Summary Judgment

[1] [2] [3] Summary judgment is intended to expedite litigation and to avoid unnecessary and expensive trials. Shiosaki v. Commissioner, 61 T.C. 861, 862 (1974). Summary judgment may be granted where the pleadings and other materials show that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and that a decision may be rendered as a matter of law. Rule 121(b); Electronic Arts, Inc. v. Commissioner, 118 T.C. 226, 238 (2002). The burden is on the moving party to demonstrate that no genuine dispute as to any material fact remains and that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. FPL Grp., Inc. & Subs. v. Commissioner, 116 T.C. 73, 74–75 (2001). The parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment and have shown and stated that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact.

II. Jurisdiction for Review of Whistleblower Cases

[4] Here we consider the standards for an award and the calculation of the monetary threshold for mandatory awards under section 7623(b). We may exercise our jurisdiction to the extent authorized by Congress. Kasper v. Commissioner, 137 T.C. 37, 40 (2011). In a whistleblower action, we have jurisdiction only with respect to the Commissioner's award determination or denial thereof. Sec. 7623; Cooper v. Commissioner, 135 T.C. 70, 75 (2010). In this case the parties are in agreement as to the information provided to respondent but disagree regarding the term "amounts in dispute" referenced in section 7623(b)(5). That section is the threshold for the mandatory award regime of section 7623(b) and therefore the calculation of the amount of the whistleblower award. Those matters are clearly within the scope of our jurisdiction authorized by Congress in section 7623(b)(4).

III. Statute and Underlying Controversies

Section 7623(a) authorizes the Secretary to pay whistleblower awards and to issue regulations with respect to the application of the enabling statute. The Secretary "is authorized to pay such sums as he deems necessary" from amounts collected in the detection of underpayments of tax. Accordingly, section 7623(a) provides the Secretary with complete discretion to pay sums, limited only to the amounts collected.

Section 7623(b)(1) and (2) specifically provides for less discretionary authority to make awards to whistleblowers and, in pertinent part, contains the following language:

SEC. 7623(b). Awards to Whistleblowers.—

> 4 (1) In general.—If the Secretary proceeds with any administrative or judicial action described in subsection (a) based on information brought to the Secretary's attention by an individual, such individual shall, subject to paragraph (2), receive as an award at least 15 percent but not more than 30 percent of the collected proceeds. * * * The determination of the amount of such award by the Whistleblower Office shall depend upon the extent to which the individual substantially contributed to such action.
>
> (2) Award in case of less substantial contribution.—
>
>> (A) In general.—In the event * * * the Whistleblower Office determines [the claim] to be based principally on disclosures of specific allegations (other than information provided by the individual described in paragraph (1)) * * * the Whistleblower Office may award such sums as it considers appropriate, but in no case more than 10 percent of the collected proceeds (including penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts) resulting from the action (including any related actions) or from any settlement in response to such action, taking into account the significance of the individual's information and the role of such individual * * * in contributing to such action.
>>
>> [Emphasis added.]

In summary, section 7623(b)(1) provides that where respondent proceeds with an action using information supplied by an individual, the award shall be at least 15% but not more than 30% of the collected proceeds, depending on the extent to which the information substantially contributed to the collection. Section 7623(b)(2) addresses circumstances where there is a less substantial contribution on the part of a whistleblower and provides respondent, in such circumstances, with discretion to award an amount that does not exceed 10%.

Section 7623(b) is available for whistleblower awards only if the following section 7623(b)(5) thresholds are met:

> (5) Application of this subsection.—This subsection shall apply with respect to any action—
>
>> (A) against any taxpayer, but in the case of an individual, only if such individual's gross income exceeds $200,000 for any taxable year subject to such action, and
>>
>> (B) if the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute exceed $2,000,000. [Emphasis added.]

Respondent concluded that the “amounts in dispute” did not exceed $2 million and, accordingly, determined that a discretionary award under section 7623(a) was appropriate. Petitioner contends that respondent incorrectly applied the section 7623(b)(5)(B) threshold to limit the determination of the award to section 7623(a). The main thrust and seminal core of petitioner's argument focuses on the $2 million threshold in section 7623(b)(5)(B) and the phrase “amounts in dispute”. Specifically, petitioner contends, as a matter of first impression, that respondent has read into section 7623(b)(5)(B) a limitation with respect to the $2 million threshold by concluding that “amounts in dispute” include only the amounts of collected proceeds for which the whistleblower provided direct or indirect information.

Under petitioner's interpretation the “amounts in dispute” in this case total $19,989,467.44, which is the combined amount of the employment and income tax deficiencies and penalties in dispute between the taxpayer and respondent because of examinations commenced on account of petitioner's whistleblower claim. Accordingly, under petitioner's interpretation section 7623(b)(1) and (2), rather than section 7623(a), would be applicable and would have resulted in a larger award. Ostensibly, and using the collected amounts attributed by respondent to petitioner's direct information, if section 7623(b)(1) applied, petitioner's award would necessarily be at least 15% of $1,771,911.77, or $265,786.76, as opposed to the 10% amount, $177,191.18, determined by respondent's Whistleblower Office.

5 Respondent argues that certain common words or phrases in section 7623(b)(1) require him to follow the same quantitative measure in determining the $2 million threshold of section 7623(b)(5)(B). In particular, respondent focuses on the words “any” and “action” in the context of section 7623(b)(1) as follows:

> If the Secretary proceeds with any administrative or judicial action described in subsection (a) based on information brought to > the Secretary's attention by an individual, such individual shall, subject to paragraph (2), receive an award ... [t]he determination of the amount of such award by the Whistleblower Office shall depend upon the extent to which the individual substantially contributed to such action. [Emphasis added.]

Respondent goes on to contend that section 7623(b)(1) therefore defines the scope of the words "any action" for purposes of section 7623(b), and accordingly governs the use of the phrase "any action" in section 7623(b)(5). Respondent's reliance on the term "action" which appears in section 7623(b)(1), (2), and (5) as the link between those sections is misplaced.

The word "action" is used five times each in subsection (b)(1) and (2) and two times in subsection (b)(5). Subsection (a) is a historical remnant dating back to 1867, and subsection (b) was added by 2006 legislation. Subsection (a) does not contain the word "action", and it provides for a discretionary award for "detecting underpayments of tax, or detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws". Accordingly "action" for purposes of subsection (b) is the detecting of underpayments of tax or violations of tax law without any qualifier as to quantity or amount.

The word "action" is used in subsection (b)(1) and (2) in connection with prescribing percentage limits for awards only from collected proceeds resulting from the action, depending on whether the whistleblower brought information or specific allegations to respondent's attention. Further refinements involve the extent to which the individual substantially contributed to the "action".

Accordingly, the word "action" is being used in that context and does not establish another technical definition or meaning for purposes of section 7623(b) in general. The use of the word "action" in the introductory phrase to section 7623(b)(5), "[t]his subsection shall apply with respect to any action—(emphasis added), is in no manner linked to the concept of "collected proceeds" or substantial contribution. The word "action" is used in subsection (b)(5)(A) in the following context: "against any taxpayer, but in the case of any individual, only if such individual's gross income exceeds $200,000 for any taxable year subject to such action" (emphasis added). Here again, the word "action" is used without specific limitations.

We are unable to accept respondent's contention that the subsection (b)(1) determination of the size or percentage of an award applies only to those portions that were directly or indirectly attributable to the whistleblower's information or that respondent's definition of "amounts in dispute" should be employed to determine whether the $2 million threshold of subsection (b)(5)(B) has been met. The application of respondent's position in this case would lead to anomalous results. Petitioner's whistleblower claim caused the initiation of an examination that resulted in the collection of almost $20 million of tax and penalties, almost $2 million of which was directly or indirectly attributable to petitioner's information. In spite of those results, under respondent's position the provisions of section 7623(b) would not be applicable in this case.

6 [5] The current whistleblower statute was enacted in 2006 to "address perceived problems with the discretionary award regime." Tax Relief and Health Care Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109–432, div. A, sec. 406, 120 Stat. at 2958; Cooper v. Commissioner, 135 T.C. at 73. Section 7623(b) was enacted to encourage whistleblowers to provide information about the underpayment of tax and violation of tax laws. Lippolis v. Commissioner, 143 T.C. 393, 399 (2014); Cooper v. Commissioner, 135 T.C. at 73. Under the new provisions, a whistleblower generally is entitled to a minimum nondiscretionary award of 15% of the collected proceeds if the Commissioner proceeds with administrative or judicial action using information provided in a whistleblower claim. Cooper v. Commissioner, 135 T.C. at 73–74. The nondiscretionary minimum award is clearly part of the statutory regime to encourage whistleblowers.

In Lippolis, this Court considered whether the $2 million threshold of section 7623(b)(5)(B) is jurisdictional or whether it is to be asserted as an affirmative defense. Lippolis v. Commissioner, 143 T.C. at 396. In reaching the conclusion that it is not jurisdictional, this Court stated: "The phrase 'any action' refers to 'any administrative or judicial action' with which the Secretary 'proceeds' based on information provided by a whistleblower under section 7623." Id. at 395. In that case, the Commissioner assessed and collected $844,746 from the taxpayer and, under section 7623(a), awarded $126,712 (15% of the collected proceeds), and the whistleblower sought to have the award come under section 7623(b). Accordingly, the question arose of whether the section 7623(b)(5)(B) threshold of $2 million had been met. Although this Court in Lippolis specifically did not decide what constitutes the "amounts in dispute", it left for another day the question of whether the $844,746 respondent used to compute the award constituted the entire "amount(s) in dispute".

In Whistleblower 22716–13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. 84 (2016), this Court considered whether Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBAR) civil penalties are "additional amounts" described in section 7623(b)(5)(B) to be considered in determining whether the $2 million threshold had been met. This Court held that FBAR civil penalties are not additional amounts that could be counted in determining whether the $2 million threshold has been met. Id. at 85. In that case, the Court did not consider or decide the question before us in petitioner's case, i.e., whether the amount in dispute should include only the amounts that would be subject to the section 7623(b)(1) or (2) award or should include the total amount in dispute between the Commissioner and the taxpayer. Id. at 92.

In Whistleblower 21276–13W v. Commissioner, 147 T.C. 121 (2016), this Court considered whether the term "collected proceeds" as used in section 7623(b)(1) should be construed, as contended by respondent here, as limited to having been collected pursuant to the Internal Revenue Code or whether it should be more broadly defined. In particular, we had to decide whether criminal fines and civil forfeitures are "collected proceeds" for purposes of subsection (b)(1). Id. at 123. In that case, the Commissioner took the limited view that although tax restitution of $20,000,001 constituted "collected proceeds", the remaining $54,131,693 of criminal fines and civil forfeitures did not. Id. In Whistleblower 21276–13W, this Court held that the whistleblower's more expansive view of "collected proceeds" was correct and that it included the $54,131,693 amount along with the $20,000,001, resulting in a $17,791,607 whistleblower award computed at the 24% rate that had been agreed to by the parties. Id. at 140.

7 We again note that the Commissioner's discretionary authority to pay awards to "whistleblowers" dates back to legislation enacted in 1867. Act of Mar. 2, 1867, ch 169, sec. 7, 14 Stat. at 471, 473; Whistleblower 22716–13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. at 88. That discretionary authority became section 7623(a), and it was not subject to judicial review until 2006 when section 7623(b) was added. When Congress added the nondiscretionary award regime with minimum percentages for awards, it also set a monetary threshold that must be met before the mandatory provisions of subsection (b)(1) and (2) come into play. That monetary threshold was established to target large dollar cases.[3] It also appears that the 2006 mandatory award additions to section 7623 were intended to motivate whistleblowers to come forward so that additional collections of tax would occur.

[6] [7] In interpreting the term "amounts in dispute" as used in section 7623(b)(5)(B), we begin with the statute. Greyhound Corp. v. Mt. Hood Stages, Inc., 437 U.S. 322, 330 (1978). The phrase "amounts in dispute" is not used in any other context in section 7623, and the parties have not contended that the phrase is a term of art and/or that the phrase had been used in other sections of the Internal Revenue Code. Section 7623(b)(5)(B) is plain and has a clear meaning in the context of section 7623 and its intended congressional purpose. United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241 (1989) (citing Caminetti v. United States, 242 U.S. 470, 485 (1917)). Where the statute has been expressed in plain terms, that language should be given effect. Griffin v. Oceanic Contractors, Inc., 458 U.S. 564, 570 (1982) (citing Consumer Prod. Safety Comm'n v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 108 (1980)).

The section 7623(b)(5)(B) phrase "amounts in dispute" is not specifically limited to only those amounts directly or indirectly attributable to the whistleblower information. Once the monetary thresholds are met and the Government recovers "collected proceeds" resulting from the action, the mandatory provisions of subsection (b)(1) or (2) apply. See Whistleblower 22716–13W v. Commissioner, 146 T.C. at 89. Conversely, "collected proceeds" as used in subsection (b)(1) is limited by "resulting from the action" whereas "amounts in dispute" as used in subsection (b)(5) is not.

Here section 7623(b)(5) has a clear meaning. Congress intended to limit the nondiscretionary award regime to larger cases. Explicitly, section 7623(b)(5)(A) and (B) "shall apply with respect to any action—against any taxpayer, but in the case of any individual, only if such individual's gross income exceeds $200,000 for any taxable year subject to such action, and * * * if the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute exceed $2,000,000." The first monetary threshold applies to individuals, and the second applies to all taxpayers. Subsection (b)(5) is intended to make the nondiscretionary award program of subsection (b)(1) and (2) applicable to larger cases. Those where the "amounts in dispute" between the taxpayer and the Commissioner exceed $2 million. Once that threshold is met, then subsection (b)(1) or (2) would apply and award percentages are to be made based on the standards of those subsections.

Section 7623(b)(5) is simply a monetary threshold for application of the less discretionary whistleblower award regime. The $200,000 of gross income threshold must be met where the taxpayer is an individual, and the $2 million amount in dispute must be met for any taxpayer. The factors of section 7623(b)(1) and (2) limiting the award to a particular portion of collected proceeds focuses upon the usefulness of the whistleblower's claim and should not be a refinement of the "amounts in dispute" as used in section 7623(b)(5). The facts of this case are illustrative of that distinction. Petitioner's whistleblower claim regarding the barter and gifts caused respondent to examine those items and related accounts of the taxpayer, resulting in almost $20 million in collected tax revenue. The next statutory step would be to determine what portion of those collected proceeds resulted from the whistleblower's information or claim.

8 The regulation promulgated with respect to section 7623(b)(5) is section 301.7623–2(e), Proced. & Admin. Regs. Paragraph (e)(2)(i) of the regulation defines "amount in dispute" for purposes of section 7623(b)(5), as follows:

> [T]he term amount in dispute means the greater of the maximum total of tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts that resulted from the action(s) with which the IRS proceeded based on the information provided, or the maximum total of such amounts that were stated in formal positions taken by the IRS in the action(s). * * *

Respondent's analyst relied on this regulation for determining that the $2 million threshold was not met in this case. The regulation does not support respondent's narrow view that the "amount in dispute" is limited to the portion to which award percentages are applied, as defined in section 7623(b)(1) and (2). The regulation provides instead that the amounts in dispute are the amounts that resulted from the actions with which IRS proceeded based on the whistleblower information. Accordingly, it does not follow that the limiting standards of section 7623(b)(1) and (2) providing for a percentage to be applied to the portion of "collected proceeds" to which the whistleblower's information "substantially contributed" would also apply in determining whether the initial $2 million threshold has been met. Conceptually, section 7623(b)(5) is a threshold to ensure that the less discretionary mandate of subsection (b)(1) is applied to taxpayers with a certain minimum amount of annual income or with a significant amount of tax liability. In effect, respondent has backed into the subsection (b)(1) and (2) limitations to interpret the subsection (b)(5) threshold.

[8] Respondent's analyst also relied on section 301.7623–2(b), Example (2), Proced. & Admin. Regs. That section addresses the concept "proceeds based on" which is an integral part of determining which percentages of section 7623(b)(1) and (2) are to be used to calculate the whistleblower award. All of the examples under section 301.7623–2(b), Proced. & Admin. Regs., are designed as guidance for determining whether whistleblower information was the source or the reason for respondent's pursuit or examination of a taxpayer. In Example 2 the Commissioner pursued a taxpayer using whistleblower information and then, by means of information requests and summonses developed additional information which the example concludes was not information that was proceeded on because of the whistleblower. That example, however was not intended to address the purely mathematical threshold of section 7623(b)(5). In the case before the Court, respondent proceeded using petitioner's information, and the examination resulted in nearly $20 million of tax in dispute, of which almost $2 million was directly or indirectly attributable to petitioner's information. Those circumstances satisfy the purely mathematical threshold of section 7623(b)(5). The next step would be to determine what portions of the proceeds collected were substantially or less substantially attributable to petitioner's information.

Accordingly, the "amount in dispute" for purposes of section 7623(b)(5)(B) in this case was in excess of

$2 million, and respondent's use of the discretionary provisions of section 7623(a) to determine the amount of the whistleblower award was in error.

9 Petitioner also raised the following issues in his motion for summary judgment: (1) whether “collected proceeds” includes amounts which respondent would not have collected without petitioner's whistleblower claim; (2) whether respondent applied the correct award percentages; and (3) whether respondent has the legal authority to unilaterally reduce an award by sequestration. Because we have decided that respondent's use of section 7623(a) in this case was incorrect, petitioner's motion for summary judgment will be granted in part with respect to the section 7623(b)(5)(B) threshold question. Finally, our holding that respondent should have used section 7623(b) to compute the amount of the award renders petitioner's other concerns or arguments moot until an award has been determined under section 7623(b).

To reflect the foregoing,

An appropriate order will be issued.

All Citations

148 T.C. No. 21, 2017 WL 2472375, Tax Ct. Rep. (CCH) 60,923, Tax Ct. Rep. Dec. (RIA) 148.21

Footnotes

[1] All section references are to the Internal Revenue Code in effect at all relevant times. All Rule references are to the Tax Court Rules of Practice and Procedure.

[2] Respondent in his response to petitioner's motion for summary judgment stated: “In the present case, respondent and petitioner are generally in agreement as to the relevant facts * * * and the proper interpretation of * * * [the statute] presents a pure question of law.”

[3] See Ron West, John H. Skarbnik, & Frank L. Brunetti, “A Primer for Tax Whistleblowers”, Taxes—The Tax Magazine, at 27, 30 (April 2012).

End of Document

85 F.3d 906
United States Court of Appeals,
Second Circuit.

UNITED STATES of America, Appellee,
v.
Mark A. SIMON, Defendant–Appellant.

No. 1110, Docket 95–1514.
|
Argued Feb. 28, 1996.
|
Decided May 29, 1996.

Synopsis

Defendant was convicted of structuring financial transactions to avoid reporting requirement, in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Carol Bagley Amon, J. Appeal was taken. The Court of Appeals, Meskill, Circuit Judge, held that evidence supported determination that defendant intended "something more" than simply to avoid reporting requirement, as required to satisfy intent element of crime, when he made 14 deposits of almost $10,000 (amount requiring report to government by bank) in eight different branches of bank, located in three counties, over seven-day period.

Affirmed.

Winter, Circuit Judge, dissented and filed opinion.

Attorneys and Law Firms

907 Stephen Robert LaCheen, Philadelphia, PA (Peter Goldberger, Ardmore, PA, of counsel), for Appellant.

Eric Corngold, Assistant United States Attorney (Zachary W. Carter, United States Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, Peter A. Norling, Assistant United States Attorney, Eastern District of New York, Brooklyn, NY, of counsel), for Appellee.

Before: VAN GRAAFEILAND, MESKILL and WINTER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

MESKILL, Circuit Judge:

This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction by a jury entered August 18, 1995 in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Amon, J. The defendant, Mark Simon, was convicted of structuring cash transactions to evade currency reporting requirements in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 5322 and 5324(3).[1] On appeal, Simon contends that the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to establish knowledge of illegality, as required by Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 114 S.Ct. 655, 126 L.Ed.2d 615 (1994). Because we conclude that there was sufficient evidence for a jury to infer knowledge of illegality, we affirm the judgment of conviction.

BACKGROUND

Between July 18, 1989 and July 25, 1989, Simon, a licensed stockbroker, deposited more than $130,000 in cash into one account through 14 deposits at eight Citibank branches located throughout Brooklyn, Nassau County and Suffolk County, New York. More specifically, on Tuesday, July 18, 1989, he made two deposits of $9,730 and $9,620, respectively, at Plainview, Long Island and Melville, Long Island Citibank branches. On Wednesday, July 19, 1989, he made two deposits of $9,000 and $8,800, respectively, at Hicksville, Long Island and Garden City, Long Island Citibank branches. On Thursday, July 20, 1989, he made four deposits of $9,900, $9,900, $9,920 and $9,900, respectively, at 13th Avenue, Brooklyn, 18th Avenue, Brooklyn, Shore Parkway, Brooklyn and Plainview, Long Island Citibank branches. 908 On Monday, July 24, 1989, he made four deposits of $9,900, $9,700, $9,600 and $9,920, respectively, at 13th Avenue, Brooklyn, 18th Avenue, Brooklyn, Shore Parkway, Brooklyn, and Plainview, Long Island Citibank branches. On Tuesday, July 25, 1989, he made two deposits of $9,920 and $5,400, respectively, at Avenue J, Brooklyn and Plainview, Long Island Citibank branches.

Internal Revenue Service Agent Anthony Curieri arrested Simon on March 3, 1992. At trial, Agent Curieri testified that, after Simon signed a waiver of his Fifth Amendment rights, he questioned Simon about the 1989 cash deposits. According to Curieri's testimony, the defendant admitted that "he structured these deposits to conceal the monies from the government and to avoid having, in his words, [the] special $10,000 form filled out." [2]

At trial, the defendant, who did not testify, conceded, through his counsel, that he structured the cash deposits, as described, with the purpose of avoiding the currency reporting requirements. He denied, however, any knowledge that his conduct was illegal. In other words, he conceded knowledge of bank reporting requirements, but denied any knowledge that it was illegal for him to structure transactions with the purpose of avoiding such requirements.

In her charge to the jury, the district judge made it clear that the jury could not convict the defendant unless the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew that his conduct was illegal. More specifically, she charged the jury as follows:

> The first element of the offense that the government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt is that the defendant knew that Citibank had a duty to report currency transactions in excess of $10,000 and also knew that it was unlawful for the defendant to structure his currency transactions in order to avoid causing such a report to be filed. The act of structuring without knowledge that structuring is unlawful is not a crime.

Similarly, both the prosecution and the defense reminded the jury in summation that the only issue in dispute was whether the defendant knew that his conduct was illegal. The jury convicted.

DISCUSSION

I. Standard of Review

[1] [2] In reviewing sufficiency of the evidence claims, "we must view the evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, in the light most favorable to the government, crediting every inference that could have been drawn in its favor, ... and we must affirm the conviction so long as, from the inferences reasonably drawn, the jury might fairly have concluded guilt beyond a reasonable doubt." United States v. Skowronski, 968 F.2d 242, 247 (2d Cir.1992) (citations omitted). A defendant challenging the sufficiency of evidence bears "a very heavy burden." United States v. Nusraty, 867 F.2d 759, 762 (2d Cir.1989) (quoting United States v. Young, 745 F.2d 733, 762 (2d Cir.1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1084, 105 S.Ct. 1842, 85 L.Ed.2d 142 (1985)). As we have explained before, if " 'any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime,' the conviction must stand." United States v. Badalamenti, 794 F.2d 821, 828 (2d Cir.1986) (quoting Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 319, 99 S.Ct. 2781, 2789, 61 L.Ed.2d 560 (1979)).

II. Sufficiency of the Evidence

Federal law requires financial institutions to file reports with the Treasury Department of any cash transaction exceeding $10,000. 31 U.S.C. § 5313; 31 C.F.R. § 103.22(a) (1995). Federal law also makes it illegal to structure a transaction for the purpose of evading a financial institution's reporting requirement. 31 U.S.C. § 5324. A person who "willfully" violates the structuring prohibition is subject to criminal prosecution. 31 U.S.C. § 5322.

The Supreme Court recently held that conduct is not "willful" within the meaning of 909 section 5322 unless the defendant knows that his own conduct is unlawful. Ratzlaf, 510 U.S. at ——, 114 S.Ct. at 657. The Ratzlaf Court reasoned that because section 5324 itself prohibited purposeful structuring and section 5322 authorized prosecution only for willful structuring, a prosecution under section 5322 required more than a purpose to circumvent the reporting obligation. Id. at ——, 114 S.Ct. at 658. More specifically, the Court reasoned that to avoid rendering the willfulness requirement of section 5322 mere surplusage, section 5322 must be interpreted to require proof that the defendant acted with knowledge that his structuring was unlawful. Id. at ——, 114 S.Ct. at 659. Because the district court in Ratzlaf had instructed the jury that the government did not have to prove that the defendant acted with knowledge that structuring was unlawful, the Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with its opinion. Id. at ——, 114 S.Ct. at 663. [3]

Thus, "Ratzlaf dealt with an abstract jury instruction in yes or no terms; and in its wake, courts and juries must try to answer more concrete questions," United States v. Hurley, 63 F.3d 1, 16 (1st Cir.1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1105, 116 S.Ct. 1322, 134 L.Ed.2d 474 (1996), such as what type and quantum of proof is sufficient to support a reasonable inference of willfulness. In Ratzlaf itself, the dissenters opined that the majority's knowledge requirement would make structuring prosecutions "difficult or impossible." 510 U.S. at ——, 114 S.Ct. at 669 (Blackmun, J., dissenting). The majority responded with the unremarkable suggestion that knowledge of illegality can be inferred from evidence of the defendant's conduct. Id. at —— n. 19, 114 S.Ct. at 663 n. 19.

Courts directly and indirectly addressing this issue in the wake of Ratzlaf have concluded that general consciousness of illegality, the method of structuring, and the status of the defendant can support a reasonable inference of knowledge of illegality. See Hurley, 63 F.3d at 16 (concluding that "the thrust of Ratzlaf 's wilfulness requirement is met if persons engaged in depositing broken down amounts are generally conscious that their laundering operation is illegal, even if they do not know the precise requirements of the law."); United States v. Marder, 48 F.3d 564, 574 (1st Cir.) (stating that the purchase of approximately $10,000 worth of money orders at "three separate banks suggests that [the] defendant had a purpose beyond evasion of the reporting requirement: concealment of his structuring," tending to prove knowledge of illegality), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1056, 115 S.Ct. 1441, 131 L.Ed.2d 320 (1995); United States v. Walker, 25 F.3d 540, 548 n. 8 (7th Cir.) (finding that complex scheme to enlist family members to purchase money orders and cashier's checks in small denominations provided sufficient evidence of knowledge of illegality), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 953, 115 S.Ct. 371, 130 L.Ed.2d 323 and 513 U.S. 1009, 115 S.Ct. 531, 130 L.Ed.2d 434 (1994); United States v. Retos, 25 F.3d 1220, 1231 (3d Cir.1994) (reversing conviction on improper instruction, but finding that defendant's status provided a sufficient basis to infer knowledge of illegality). However, at least one circuit has criticized such decisions and required evidence of knowledge distinct from the evidence of structuring itself. United States v. Wynn, 61 F.3d 921, 928 (D.C.Cir.1995) (disagreeing with Marder, 48 F.3d at 574, and Walker, 25 F.3d at 548 n. 8). Yet, the Wynn Court apparently agreed that the status of the defendant can support an inference of knowledge of illegality. Id. (citing Retos, 25 F.3d at 1231, with approval).

We recognize that currency structuring is not so "obviously 'evil' or inherently 'bad' " that the act of structuring itself satisfies the willfulness requirement. See Ratzlaf, 510 U.S. at ——, 114 S.Ct. at 662. However, we 910 also recognize that the method of structuring can provide circumstantial evidence of willfulness. As the majority noted in Ratzlaf, "[a] jury may, of course, find the requisite knowledge on defendant's part by drawing reasonable inferences from the evidence of defendant's conduct." Id. 655 n. 19, 114 S.Ct. at 663 n. 19 (emphasis added) (citations omitted). And as we have noted repeatedly, a jury may infer "the state of a man's mind from the things he says and does." United States v. Sweig, 441 F.2d 114, 117 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 403 U.S. 932, 91 S.Ct. 2256, 29 L.Ed.2d 711 (1971); see also United States v. Sheiner, 410 F.2d 337, 340 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 825, 90 S.Ct. 68, 24 L.Ed.2d 76 (1969).

[3] In other words, when the method of structuring suggests a significant effort not only to avoid the bank reporting requirements but to conceal the currency structuring itself from the authorities, Ratzlaf 's requirement of "something more" is satisfied. 510 U.S. at ——, 114 S.Ct. at 657. Although such conduct may support more than one reasonable inference, the trier of fact may choose between reasonable inferences. In reviewing a claim that the government did not present legally sufficient evidence of willfulness, we need only determine if "any rational trier of fact could have found" knowledge of illegality. Jackson, 443 U.S. at 319, 99 S.Ct. at 2789.

[4] Moreover, as we have noted in other contexts, "the trier of fact may properly consider the general educational background and expertise of the defendant as bearing on the defendant's ability to form the requisite wilful intent." United States v. Fletcher, 928 F.2d 495, 501–02 (2d Cir.) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 815, 112 S.Ct. 67, 116 L.Ed.2d 41 (1991). A jury may infer knowledge of the law from a defendant's education and expertise. United States v. MacKenzie, 777 F.2d 811, 818 (2d Cir.1985) ("Defendants' backgrounds (each had a college degree, Roderick in economics and Malcolm in business) also demonstrate the likelihood they knew what the law required."), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1169, 106 S.Ct. 2889, 90 L.Ed.2d 977 (1986).

[5] We conclude that the evidence presented at trial was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction for currency structuring. There was sufficient circumstantial evidence for a rational jury to find that the defendant comprehended the unlawfulness of his structuring.

First, and most importantly, we emphasize that this is not a case like Ratzlaf, where the court improperly instructed the jury on willfulness. The district court here instructed the jury that the government was required to prove knowledge of illegality. The government and the defense reminded the jury of that requirement.

Second, the defendant's conduct in this case suggests not only knowledge of the reporting requirements and an intent to circumvent those requirements, but knowledge of illegality as well. Contrast Ratzlaf, 510 U.S. at ——, 114 S.Ct. at 657 (describing the defendant's efforts in obtaining cashier's checks from at least ten different banks immediately after learning from casino that it would have to file a report if it accepted $100,000 in cash as repayment of gambling debt). Here, the undisputed evidence of the defendant's structuring—of his method of structuring—supports a reasonable inference that the defendant was attempting to conceal not only his deposits, but also his acts of structuring. In other words, a reasonable jury could infer that the extensive efforts undertaken by the defendant in structuring his cash deposits "undoubtedly [were] based on the knowledge that his conduct was unlawful." Caming v. United States, 889 F.Supp. 736, 741 (S.D.N.Y.1995).

In structuring his deposits of more than $130,000 in cash, the defendant went to eight different branches of Citibank in Brooklyn, Nassau County and Suffolk County on 14 different occasions over a seven day period. On two separate days, Simon went to four different Citibank branches located throughout two different counties. Simon's decision to make all his deposits in different branches of the same bank rather than in different banks may have been made out of carelessness or convenience or lack of knowledge of how branches assemble information for reporting purposes. The extensive effort Simon 911 did take in structuring these deposits amply supports a reasonable inference that he was attempting to hide his structuring activities because he knew that his conduct was unlawful.

Finally, we note that this defendant is not an unsophisticated person. He was a licensed stockbroker, and he himself was required, as a stockbroker, to file currency transaction reports with the Treasury Department. See 31 U.S.C. § 5315; 31 C.F.R. § 103.11(n)(2) (1995). The jury reasonably could have inferred that this defendant possessed the knowledge and sophistication to understand that his own conduct was unlawful. Retos, 25 F.3d at 1231; see Wynn, 61 F.3d at 928 (citing Retos with approval*).*

To the extent that defense counsel suggests, as he did at trial, that the defendant was attempting to avoid filling out the reporting forms himself, see n.1, supra, the jury logically could reject that explanation, reasoning that the defendant's structuring conduct entailed considerably more effort in time and travel than what is entailed in completing a currency transaction report. To the extent that defense counsel argues that the defendant was merely attempting to avoid scrutiny of his deposits by the IRS, we observe that he would have had a better chance of achieving this objective if he had used different banks or different account names. The defendant's attempts to conceal his activities amply support a reasonable inference that the defendant knew that his own conduct was unlawful. The appellant, in challenging the sufficiency of the evidence, has not borne his "very heavy burden." Nusraty, 867 F.2d at 762 (quoting Young, 745 F.2d at 762).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

WINTER, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

Respectfully, I disagree with my colleagues as to the sufficiency of the evidence that Simon knew that structuring cash deposits to avoid reporting requirements was illegal. I therefore dissent.

The parties and all members of the panel are in agreement that Simon triggered the obligation of Citibank to report cash transactions exceeding $10,000. 31 U.S.C. § 5313; 31 C.F.R. § 103.22(a) (1995). Indeed, Citibank duly reported Simon's transactions. We also agree that Simon knowingly made separate deposits of under $10,000 in an attempt to evade the daily reporting requirements. 31 U.S.C. § 5324. Simon concedes that he wanted to conceal the aggregate size of the transactions from the government. He readily admitted to that purpose when arrested. What is at issue is whether Simon knew that the structuring of deposits to avoid reporting requirements itself was illegal.

The government paints Simon as a sophisticated stockbroker with knowledge of reporting requirements for currency transactions in excess of $10,000. In its view, Simon conceived of a clever scheme to make separate cash deposits of slightly under that amount at different Citibank branches on the days in question. The very nature of the scheme, the government argues, supports an inference of Simon's knowledge that structuring was illegal. See Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 114 S.Ct. 655, 126 L.Ed.2d 615 (1994).

The scheme was anything but clever, however, and Simon's understanding of the laws regarding the reporting of cash transactions was hardly sophisticated. Simon's fourteen deposits were all made to a single account in his own name. For Simon to have expected that daily deposits totalling over $10,000 would not be detected—the government's, and evidently the jury's, view of his purpose—he must have been ignorant of the elementary fact that banks tally all deposits during and at the end of the day in order to determine the balance in an account. In short, the government's position is that Simon's sophistication extended to knowledge of the illegality of structuring but did not include a familiarity with bank statements. Discovery of the fact that he had made cash deposits in excess of $10,000 on each of the days in question was thus as inevitable as the sunset. Indeed, the total of the daily cash deposits was reported by the bank, and the government conceded at oral argument that 912 the reports were precisely what caused Simon's arrest. Far from being a nascent Professor Moriarty, Simon might as well have faxed his deposit receipts to the United States Attorney.

Simon's status as a licensed stockbroker adds nothing to the proof regarding his knowledge of the laws regulating structuring. The government's evidence was only that financial institutions, including stockbrokers, must file reports concerning cash transactions in excess of $10,000. The government offered no evidence as to whether Simon ever received cash from a client, ever filled out such a report, or ever received training as to pertinent statutory or regulatory requirements. The government's proof, in short, was the law itself.

The government's entire case thus rests on inferences to be drawn from Simon's conduct. What is lacking, however, is an explanation of why someone who knew that structuring deposits was illegal would make several cash deposits on the days in question—on one day totaling over $39,000—into a single account in his own name, whether or not separate branches were used.

Simon's conduct is at least as consistent with the lack of knowledge of the illegality of structuring as with that knowledge. Given that his conduct made his arrest inevitable, it is far more consistent with lack of knowledge. When asked at oral argument how Simon's behavior differed from that of a person lacking knowledge of the illegality of structuring, the government speculated that such a person might make separate deposits at the same branch but at different times during the day. However, such a person might also anticipate that a teller at that branch might recognize the depositor as a repeat customer and ask him to fill out a currency transaction report. Indeed, Simon's post-arrest statement suggested exactly that fear.

My colleagues suggest that the jury could have logically rejected the inference that Simon hoped through his efforts only to avoid having to fill out currency transaction forms himself because structuring "entailed considerably more effort in time and trouble" than filling out the reports. I may misunderstand my colleagues' reasoning, but it seems to me unresponsive. Someone who is ignorant of the illegality of structuring but wants to avoid making a currency transaction report might well spend time and effort in going to different branches to achieve that goal.

I realize that Simon's behavior is more than highly suspicious. He had access to large amounts of cash during very brief periods of time, and the likelihood of some kind of past or future serious criminal activity looms large. However, Ratzlaf, in overruling our precedents, requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt that Simon knew that structuring was illegal. The government's proof failed to meet this standard. Simon's conduct, the sole evidence offered to show such knowledge, demonstrates at best a belief that form—deposits just under $10,000 at separate branches—would prevail over substance—the aggregate deposits in one day—for purposes of the currency transaction rules. This is not an unreasonable or uncommon belief given our tax or regulatory laws. For example, splitting a large monetary gift between two tax years alters the tax consequences, as does the use of relatively meaningless trusts for estate purposes.

Finally, it ill behooves the government to seek a conviction based on flimsy inferences regarding a defendant's knowledge of the details of currency reporting and structuring laws. The government has refused to adopt proposals that the requirements of these laws be posted in banks. 53 Fed.Reg. 7,948 (1988); 54 Fed.Reg. 20,398 (1988). Such ignorance is presumably fostered in order to identify the depositors and to put them under surveillance in order to locate the sources of cash. The government's failure to post such requirements is surely no defense. Nevertheless, the lack of such notices undermines any assumption that the details of the laws are widely known.

I respectfully dissent.

All Citations

85 F.3d 906, 77 A.F.T.R.2d 96-2430, 96-2 USTC P 50,358

Footnotes

[1] Subsequent to the conduct which formed the basis of the indictment, Congress recodified § 5324(1)-(3) as § 5324(a)(1)-(3), without substantive change. Congress also added subsection (b) to impose the prohibitions of subsection (a) in the international currency context. See Annunzio–Wylie Anti–Money Laundering Act, Pub.L. No. 102–550, tit. XV, § 1525(a), 106 Stat. 4064 (1992) (codified at 31 U.S.C. § 5324). The grand jury indicted Simon on July 14, 1994 under the law in effect at the time of the conduct charged in the indictment. For consistency and clarity, we refer to the codification in effect at the time of the conduct charged in the indictment. See 31 U.S.C. § 5324 (1988 & Supp. V 1993). See also infra n.3 (discussing 1994 amendment).

[2] Defense counsel pointed out, on cross-examination and on appeal, that the agent's contemporaneous report states that the defendant told him that he structured the deposits "to conceal the monies from the government and avoid filling out that $10,000 special form."

[3] Ratzlaf overruled Second Circuit precedent, namely, United States v. Scanio, 900 F.2d 485 (2d Cir.1990), under which knowledge of the bank reporting obligation and the intent to evade that obligation provided a sufficient basis for conviction. Although Congress subsequently amended the anti-structuring law to conform to the Scanio interpretation, see Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994, § 411, Pub.L. No. 103–325, 108 Stat. 2160, 2253 (1994) (codified at 31 U.S.C. §§ 5322(a), (b), 5324(c)), Ratzlaf governed anti-structuring prosecutions for Simon's conduct, which occurred prior to the amendment. See also supra n. 1 (discussing 1992 amendment).

End of Document

2010 WL 3473311

This decision was reviewed by West editorial staff and not assigned editorial enhancements.

United States District Court, E.D. Virginia,
Alexandria Division.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
J. Bryan WILLIAMS, Defendants.

Civil Action No. 1:09–cv–437.
|
Sept. 1, 2010.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Gerard J. Mene, United States Attorney's Office, Alexandria, VA, for Plaintiff.

David H. Dickieson, Schertler & Onorado, Washington, DC, for Defendants.

Memorandum Opinion

LIAM O'GRADY, District Judge.

I. Background

1 In this case, the Government seeks to enforce its assessment of two "Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts" ("FBAR") penalties against Defendant J. Bryan Williams for willfully failing to report his interest in two Swiss bank accounts for the tax year 2000 as required by 31 U.S.C. § 5314. Based on the findings of fact and conclusions of law that follow, the Court concludes that the Government falls short of meeting its burden in establishing that Williams willfully failed to disclose assets in a foreign account in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5314.

II. Procedural Posture

The Government instituted this action by filing its Complaint (Dkt. No. 1) on April 23, 2009. Williams filed his Answer (Dkt. No. 6) on July 10, 2009. After discovery, the Government moved for summary judgment (Dkt. No. 11) on January 6, 2010. By an Order dated March 19, 2010 (Dkt. No. 37), the Court denied the Government's Motion for Summary Judgment, finding that genuine disputes of material facts remained.

The Court held a bench trial on April 26, 2010. In lieu of closing arguments, the Court permitted the parties to file simultaneous post-trial briefs and responses thereto. The parties' briefs have now been received and this matter is ripe for disposition.

III. Jurisdiction

Title 28, § 1345 of the United States Code provides subject matter jurisdiction over this case, as this is a suit "commenced by the United States." Further, the Government states that it has commenced this action at the request of and with the authorization of the Chief Counsel for the IRS and at the direction of the Attorney General, pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 7401, which states that "No civil action for the collection or recovery of taxes, or of any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, shall be commenced unless the Secretary authorizes or sanctions the proceedings and the Attorney General or his delegate directs that the action be commenced." [1]

IV. Legal Standard

The statute at issue, 31 U.S.C. § 5321(b)(1), permits the Secretary of Treasury to "commence a civil action to recover a civil penalty assessed under subsection (a)...." However, the statute does not indicate the legal standard to be applied by courts in such an action. The Court is aware of no other court which has addressed this issue.

Both parties cite Eren v. Commissioner, 180 F.3d 594 (4th Cir.1999) a Fourth Circuit case which discusses the legal standard applicable in a trial before the U.S. Tax Court, for the proposition that the Court's review is "de novo, and the general rule is that it is a decision based on the merits of the case and not on any record developed at the administrative level." Id. at 597–598.

The Court agrees that a de novo standard is appropriate here. Though Eren is not wholly on point, the Court looks to the rationale in providing de novo review in a trial before the tax court as instructive in this case. Further, in enforcement actions brought by the Government in other contexts, e.g., U.S. S.E.C. v. Pirate Investor LLC, 580 F.3d 233, 239 (4th Cir.2009) (§ 10(b) enforcement action under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934); Hi–Tech Pharm., Inc. v. Crawford, 544 F.3d 1187, 1191 (11th Cir.2008) (enforcement actions brought under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act); Reich v. Local 89, 36 F.3d 1470, 1474 (9th Cir.1994) (Labor–Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959), the Government is required to prove its case by a preponderance of the evidence on the record established at trial. The Court is also persuaded that a de novo standard is appropriate given that 31 U .S.C. § 5321 provides for no adjudicatory hearing before an FBAR penalty is assessed. See United States. v. Healy Tibbitts Const. Co., 713 F.2d 1469, 1475 (9th Cir.1983) ("where, as here, the statute contemplates a full adjudicatory hearing before the agency, a court trial de novo is inappropriate" (emphasis added)); United States v. Indep. Bulk Transp., Inc., 394 F.Supp. 1319 (S.D.N.Y.1975) (same).

V. Findings of Fact Not in Dispute

2 The following are findings of fact which are not in dispute among the parties and which were established by the evidence submitted at trial:

1. In 1993, Defendant Williams opened two bank accounts at Credit Agricole Indosuez, SA, in the name of ALQI Holdings, Ltd., a British Corporation. Def. Ex. 20.

2. Between 1993 and 2000 Williams deposited more than $7,000,000 in assets in the accounts, earning more than $800,000 in income over that period.

3. Schedule B, Part III of Williams' 2000 income tax return instructed Williams to indicate whether he had an interest in financial accounts in a foreign country by checking "Yes" or "No" in the appropriate box and directed him to Form TCF 90–22.1.

4. On Williams 2000 tax return the box was checked "No."

5. The deadline for filing a TDF 90–22.1 form for the tax year 2000 was June 30, 2001.

6. Williams did not file a TDF 90–22.1 form by June 30, 2001.

7. Williams' tax attorneys and accountants advised him to make a series of complete disclosures to Swiss and U.S. authorities. Tr. at 73; 77–78.

8. In January 2002, Williams disclosed the ALQI accounts to John Manton of the IRS in Washington, D.C. Tr. at 76.

9. On October 15, 2002, Williams disclosed the accounts by filing his income tax return for the tax year 2001. Tr. at 72; Def. Ex. 5.

10. Williams made full disclosure of the ALQI accounts on February 14, 2003, as part of his application to participate in the Offshore Voluntary Compliance Initiative. Tr. at 74–76; Def. Ex. 5.

11. In February 2003, Williams filed Amended Returns for 1999 and 2000 which disclosed details about his ALQI accounts.

12. Thereafter in May 2003, Williams agreed to plead guilty to tax fraud again fully disclosing all information about the ALQI Swiss bank accounts. Tr. at 78.

13. On June 12, 2003, Williams pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy to defraud the United States and to one count of criminal tax evasion in connection with funds held in the Swiss bank accounts during the years 1993 through 2000. Id.

14. On January 18, 2007, Williams filed the TDF 90–22.1 form for all years going back to 1993, including tax year 2000.

VI. Findings of Fact In Dispute

At trial, there were several significant facts in dispute, most significantly being when Williams first met with the Swiss authorities and when the ALQI accounts were frozen. The Government pointed to testimony given by Williams in a related case before the U.S. Tax Court wherein Williams stated the accounts were frozen in 2001 instead of 2000. However, as Defendant notes, the IRS had already stipulated in the Tax Court case that the Swiss account was frozen on November 14, 2000 at the behest of the U.S. Government, a fact that was thereafter confirmed by the IRS Appeals Office. Tr. at 93; Def. Ex. 29. Defendant also asserted that November 14, 2000 is the proper date in its Opposition to the Government's Motion for Summary Judgment. The Government made no attempt to correct the date in its Reply Brief, though the issue became apparent during oral argument on the Motion, and the Court noted that dispute in its March 19, 2010 Order denying the Government's Motion for Summary Judgment.

3 During his testimony at this trial, Williams adamantly maintained that November 14, 2000 was the actual date the account was frozen, and insisted that he misspoke during his Tax Court testimony, explaining that the date was a collateral issue during the Tax Court proceedings that he had not focused on in preparing for the case. For its part, the Government attempted to disavow its stipulation in the Tax Court by claiming that the stipulation was made in a different jurisdiction by a different set of Government lawyers. Tr. at 43. Upon giving full consideration to all of the evidence, the Court is persuaded by Williams testimony and as such makes the following findings as to facts which were in dispute:

1. In the summer of 2000, Swiss authorities requested a meeting with Williams to interview him with respect to the ALQI accounts. Tr. at 38.

2. Williams subsequently retained Swiss and U.S. attorneys. Tr. at 44.

3. On November 13, 2000, Williams met with Swiss authorities about the ALQI accounts. Tr. at 44.

4. Swiss authorities, acting at the request of the U.S. Government, thereafter froze Williams' ALQI accounts on November 14, 2000. Tr. at 37–38, 93; Def. Ex. 24.

5. Given their November 13, 2000 meeting with Williams and the November 14, 2000 seizure of his assets in the ALQI accounts, Swiss and U.S. authorities were aware of these assets. Id.

6. In June of 2001, Williams retained tax attorneys to advise him with respect to his interests at Credit Agricole Indosuez.

7. Despite hiring tax lawyers and accountants, Williams had never been advised of the existence of the TDF 90–22.1 form prior to June 30, 2001, nor had he ever filed the form in previous years with the Department of Treasury. Tr. at 79.

VII. Discussion [2]

Title 31, § 5314 of the U.S.Code requires qualifying individuals to disclose their interests in foreign bank accounts. Section 5314(b) allows the Secretary of Treasury to delegate its authority for enforcement of the section and to prescribe the methods for doing so. The Department of Treasury did so in promulgating the disclosure requirements at issue here, including the requirement to file the TDF 90–22.1 form. See 31 C.F.R. § 103.24–27.

Pursuant to the applicable regulation, an individual is required to file Form TDF 90–22.1 if: (1) the individual was a resident or a person doing business in the United States; (2) the individual had a financial account or accounts that exceeded $10,000 during the calendar year; (3) the financial account was in a foreign country; and (4) the U.S. person had a financial interest in the account or signatory or other authority over the foreign financial account. See 31 C.F.R. § 103.24; 103.27. Williams does not dispute that he meets the first three of these requirements. [3]

Civil penalties for willful violations of § 5314 are provided in 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(B), [4] which allowed for a maximum assessment of $100,000. Section 5321(b)(1) authorizes the Secretary of Treasury to assess these penalties; the Secretary delegated that authority to the IRS in 31 CFR § 103.56(g).

4 Thus, the crux of this case is whether Williams "willfully" violated any portion of § 5314.

V. "Willful Violations"

While " 'willfully' is a word of many meanings whose construction is often dependent on the context in which it appears," the Supreme Court has clarified that "[w] here willfulness is a statutory condition of civil liability, it is generally taken to cover not only knowing violations of a standard, but reckless ones as well." Safeco Ins. Co. of Am. v. Burr, 551 U.S. 47, 57, 127 S.Ct. 2201, 167 L.Ed.2d 1045 (2007) (citations and internal quotations omitted). Importantly, "a single, or even a few, inadvertent errors would not amount to a 'willful' violation. At some point, however, a repeated failure to comply with known regulations can move a [defendant's] conduct from inadvertent neglect into reckless or deliberate disregard (and thus willfulness)...." Am. Arms Int'l v. Herbert, 563 F.3d 78, 85 (4th Cir.2009) (citing RSM, Inc. v. Herbert, 466 F.3d 316 (4th Cir.2006) (internal citations omitted).

In this case, the Government has failed to prove a "willful" violation. The Court finds that the Government's case does not adequately account for the difference between failing and willfully failing to disclose an interest in a foreign bank account.[5] Further, the Government fails to differentiate tax evasion from failing to check the box admitting the existence of a foreign bank account.

ii. Whether Williams Willfully Violated § 5314

Form 1040, Schedule B, Part III instructs a taxpayer to report an interest in a financial account in a foreign country by checking "Yes" or "No" in the appropriate box on Form 1040. Specifically, Schedule B, Part III, Question 7a of Williams' Form 1040 reads:

> At any time during 2000, did you have an interest in or a signature or other authority over a financial account in a foreign country, such as a bank account, securities account, or other financial account? See instructions for exceptions and filing requirements for Form TDF 90.22.1.

Def. Ex. 3. It is undisputed that "No" is checked in the box adjoining Question 7a on Williams' Form 1040. Id.

The Government argues that Williams' signature on his Form 1040 is prima facie evidence that Williams knew the contents of his tax return. See U.S. v. Dehlinger, 368 Fed.Appx. 439, 447, 2010 WL 750083 at *7 (4th Cir. March 5, 2010) (citing United States v. Mohney, 949 F.2d 1397 (6th Cir.1991)). However, "[a] taxpayer's signature on a return does not in itself prove his knowledge of the contents, but knowledge may be inferred from the signature along with the surrounding facts and circumstances...." Mohney, 949 F.2d at 1407.

In this case, upon examination of the surrounding facts and circumstances presented at trial, the Court is not persuaded that Williams was lying about his ignorance to the contents of the Form 1040.

As mentioned, there is no dispute that Williams checked the "No" box indicating that he had no foreign bank accounts and that he failed to submit the requisite TDF 90–22.1 form by June 30, 2001 when it was due. However, these actions occurred after Williams found out that the U.S. and Swiss authorities knew about the ALQI accounts. On November 13, 2000, seven months before he failed to check the correct box, Williams met with the Swiss authorities about the ALQI accounts. At the same time, at the request of the U.S., the Swiss authorities froze the assets in the ALQI accounts.[6] In response to these actions, also in 2000, Williams sought the advice of both Swiss and U.S. counsel. The Court finds that given these facts along with the other testimony given at trial, it clearly follows logically that Williams was aware that the authorities knew about the ALQI accounts by the fall of 2000, significantly before June 30, 2001. The fact that Williams had been notified by Swiss authorities that they were aware of the ALQI accounts and the subsequent freezing of his assets in the account strongly indicate to the Court that Williams lacked any motivation to willfully conceal the accounts from authorities after that point.

5 Further, Williams' subsequent disclosures throughout 2002 and 2003 corroborate his lack of intent. Though made after the June 30, 2001 deadline, Williams' disclosure of the ALQI accounts to John Manton of the IRS in January 2002 indicates to the Court that Williams continued to believe the assets had already been disclosed. That is, it makes little sense for Williams to disclose the ALQI accounts merely six months after the deadline he supposedly willfully violated. Had the authorities only become aware of the accounts in the intervening six months, Williams' disclosures to Manton may have been viewed in a different light. However, given that Williams believed authorities had been on notice of the accounts since well before the June 30, 2001 deadline, Williams' disclosures to Manton indicate that Williams was not in a mindset to conceal the accounts just six months prior.

The same can be said of Williams' disclosure of the ALQI accounts via his filing of a 2001 tax return. This disclosure is not consistent with a man who knew he had unlawfully concealed his interests in a foreign bank account. Rather, they indicate Williams' consciousness of guilt for evading income taxes, which he never equated with a foreign banking disclosure violation. Similarly, though Williams' February 14, 2003 disclosure in the course of his application to participate in the Offshore Voluntary Compliance Initiative was likely motivated by the possibility of attaining amnesty, the 2003 disclosure is also consistent with an individual who had already been caught avoiding income taxes and was no longer seeking to conceal his assets or income.

The Government argues that Williams' guilty plea should estop him from arguing that he did not willfully violate § 5314 for the tax year 2000. However, the evidence introduced at trial established that the scope of the facts established by Williams' 2003 guilty plea are not as broad as the Government suggests, and there remains a factual incongruence between those facts necessary to his guilty plea to tax evasion and those establishing a willful violation of § 5314. That Williams intentionally failed to report income in an effort to evade income taxes is a separate matter from whether Williams specifically failed to comply with disclosure requirements contained in § 5314 applicable to the ALQI accounts for the year 2000. As Williams put it in his testimony at trial, "I was prosecuted for failing to disclose income. To the best of my knowledge I wasn't prosecuted for failing to check that box." Tr. at 34.

After reviewing the evidence presented at trial, the Court concludes that Williams' testimony that he only focused on the numerical calculations on the Form 1040 and otherwise relied on his accountants to fill out the remainder of the Form is credible, and should be given more weight than the mere fact that Williams checked the "No" box. In sum, the Court finds that Williams' failure to disclose already-frozen assets in a foreign account was not an act undertaken intentionally or in deliberate disregard for the law, but instead constituted an understandable omission given the context in which it occurred. The Government has failed to meet its burden to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that Williams willfully violated § 5314.

VIII. Conclusion

6 For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that the Government failed to meet its burden in establishing Williams' liability under 31 U.S.C. 5321(b). Judgment is hereby entered in favor of Defendant J. Bryan Williams.

An appropriate order shall issue.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2010 WL 3473311, 106 A.F.T.R.2d 2010-6150, 2010-2 USTC P 50,623

Footnotes

[1] In turn, 31 U.S.C. § 7402 provides that "district courts of the United States at the instance of the United States shall have such jurisdiction to make and issue in civil actions, writs and orders of injunction, and ... render such judgments and decrees as may be necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the internal revenue laws."

[2] Additional findings of fact appear throughout the Court's conclusions of law as needed.

[3] Williams does dispute whether he had "signatory or other authority" over the account due to its freezing by Swiss authorities, but the issue is rendered moot by the Court's conclusions in the remainder of this Opinion.

[4] As that statute existed prior to amendment in 2004. Willful violations are now addressed in 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C), which provides a different calculation of the maximum available penalty. As discussed in greater detail infra, the statute was also amended to expand the scope of the statute to acts falling below the willfulness standard, but those provisions were not in effect for the tax year 2000.

[5] It is worth noting that Congress has since amended 31 U.S.C. § 5321 to allow the government to assess a civil penalty for FBAR violations regardless of whether the violation is willful. See 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5), as amended by P.L. 108–357. Further, the statute now provides a "reasonable cause" exception. See 31 U .S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(B)(ii). While the issue of Williams' liability under the statute as amended is not before the Court, the Court notes that Congress found it necessary to expand the coverage of § 5321 to address a class of conduct falling short of the "willful" standard solely accounted for under the old statute. Clearly, simply failing to file a Form TDF 90.22.1 was insufficient to subject an individual to liability for a civil penalty under the old statute.

[6] As noted, Williams argues that because the accounts were frozen, it is also debatable whether Williams had "signatory or other authority over" the accounts as required by 31 C.F.R. § 103.24 by June 30, 2001. That question is moot, however, given the remainder of the Court's Opinion.

End of Document

2017 WL 4418572
United States District Court,
W.D. Washington,
at Seattle.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Jeffrey P. POMERANTZ, Defendant.

CASE NO. C16-689 MJP
|
Signed 10/05/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Paul T. Butler, US Dept. of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Jeffrey P. Pomerantz, pro se.

ORDER DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS

Marsha J. Pechman, United States District Judge

1 The Court, having received and reviewed:

1. Defendant's Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim and/or Lack of Personal Jurisdiction and/or to Strike Amended Complaint (Dkt. No. 19);

2. Plaintiff's Response in Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Amended Complaint (Dkt. No. 21);

all attached declarations and exhibits; and relevant portions of the records, rules as follows:

IT IS ORDERED that the motion to dismiss is DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the motion to strike portions of the amended complaint is DENIED.

Nature of case

The United States brings this action to collect civil penalties assessed against Defendant Jeffrey Pomerantz for failing to timely report his financial interest in foreign bank accounts during the years 2007 through 2009. Defendant allegedly owes $860,300.35 in penalties.

Nature of motion

Mr. Pomerantz brings a motion (1) to dismiss the amended complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2); or (2) failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6), and; (3) to strike portions of the amended complaint under Rule 12(f). Mr. Pomerantz also argues the amended complaint is barred by the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel.

Background

On May 13, 2016, the United States filed a complaint against Mr. Pomerantz, seeking to collect civil penalties for Defendant's alleged failure to timely file a Treasury Form TD F 90-22.1 (“FBAR Form”) reporting his interest in foreign bank accounts on his annual United States tax filings during the years 2007 through 2009. Mr. Pomerantz is a United States citizen currently residing in British Columbia, Canada. Dkt. # 17 (“Amend. Compl.”), ¶ 2-3; Dkt. # 19 at 2.

The foreign bank accounts at issue in this action include both Mr. Pomerantz's personal accounts—two checking accounts opened with the Canada Imperial Bank of Commerce (“CIBC Accounts”)—and accounts opened by Chafford Limited (five accounts with Sal Oppenheim JR & CIE AG in Switzerland; “Chafford Limited Accounts”). Id. ¶¶ 5, 8-10. The Government alleges that Chafford Limited is a corporation formed in the Turks and Caicos Islands that conducted no active business, but was simply a shell company used to hold and manage Mr. Pomerantz's personal investments. Amend. Compl. ¶ 7.

On June 8, 2017, the Government's first complaint was dismissed pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failing to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Dkt. # 16. The Court, the Honorable James L. Robart presiding, held that the Government did not sufficiently allege that Mr. Pomerantz acted “willfully” in his failure to file FBAR Forms regarding his personal, CIBC, checking accounts. In particular, there were no allegations in the original complaint that Mr. Pomerantz had actual or constructive knowledge of the duty to file FBAR Forms for the CIBC accounts, which were opened in Defendant's name, not the name of his company. Id. at 14-15.

At the same time, the Court found that the complaint contained sufficient facts to support an inference that Mr. Pomerantz intended to evade the foreign bank account reporting requirement by creating foreign bank accounts in the name of Chafford Limited, an alleged shell company. Id. at 14.

2 On June 23, 2017, the Government filed an amended complaint, alleging the same facts regarding the Chafford Limited accounts, and alleging additional facts in support of the inference that Defendant willfully failed to report his personal CIBC accounts. Mr. Pomerantz now brings a motion (1) to dismiss the amended complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2); or (2) failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6), and; (3) to strike portions of the amended complaint under Rule 12(f). Mr. Pomerantz also argues the amended complaint is barred by the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel.

Discussion/Analysis

a. Personal Jurisdiction

As an initial matter, Mr. Pomerantz argues that the Court lacks personal jurisdiction over him because he does not have the requisite "minimum contact" with this forum. Dkt. # 19 at 3. However, because Mr. Pomerantz failed to raise lack of personal jurisdiction at the first available opportunity, he has waived the defense. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(1) (if a party fails to raise a challenge to personal jurisdiction in a preliminary Rule 12 motion or its first responsive pleading, such challenge is waived). As noted in the Court's June 8, 2017 Order granting Mr. Pomerantz's motion to dismiss, Mr. Pomerantz failed to raise the defense of personal jurisdiction in his first Rule 12 motion. Dkt. # 16 at 2 n.2. "Personal jurisdiction ... represents a restriction on judicial power ... as a matter of individual liberty." Ruhrgas AG v. Marathon Oil Co., 526 U.S. 574, 584, 119 S.Ct. 1563, 143 L.Ed.2d 760 (1999). "Therefore, a party may insist that the limitation be observed, or he may forgo that right, effectively consenting to the court's exercise of adjudicatory authority." Id.; see also American Ass'n of Naturopathic Physicians v. Hayhurst, 227 F.3d 1104, 1106-07 (9th Cir. 2000) ("A fundamental tenet of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is that certain defenses under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 must be raised at the first available opportunity or, if they are not, they are forever waived.").

b. Failure to State a Claim

Mr. Pomerantz next moves to dismiss the amended complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Dkt. # 19 at 3-5. "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.' " Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009) (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007)). A claim is plausible "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the conduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 545, 127 S.Ct. 1955). "In sum, for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief." Moss v. United States Secret Serv., 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009).

In this case, to survive the motion to dismiss, the Government is required to plead facts supporting a reasonable inference that (1) Mr. Pomerantz was a "U.S. Person," who (2) had an interest in or authority over the subject foreign accounts, which (3) had an aggregate value of $10,000.00 or more, and (4) that he willfully failed to file an FBAR Form for the accounts. 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5); see also 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350; United States v. Toth, No. 15-CV-13367-ADB, 2017 WL 1703936, at *4 (D. Mass. May 2, 2017) (using the elements of C.F.R. § 1010.350 as elements of an action to reduce to judgment a civil FBAR penalty).

3 The first three of these elements were addressed in the Court's June 8, 2017 order. Dkt. # 16. Mr. Pomerantz is a U.S. Citizen, the Court previously held that the Government plausibly alleged Mr. Pomerantz had a "financial interest" in the CIBC Accounts and "other financial interest" in the Chafford Limited Accounts, and both sets of accounts were foreign. Id. at 11 n.4, 12-13. The allegations supporting these elements are repeated in the amended complaint. Amend. Compl., ¶¶ 2, 5-11. The Court's previous order also found the allegations regarding the Chafford Limited Accounts—but not the CIBC Accounts—were sufficient to support an inference that Mr. Pomerantz willfully failed to disclose those accounts. Dkt. # 16 at 14 ("The [C]ourt can plausibly infer an intent to evade the foreign bank account reporting requirement based on the creation of foreign bank accounts in the name of a shell company."). These allegations are also repeated in the amended complaint. Amend. Compl., ¶¶ 6-7.

At issue in the instant motion, therefore, is whether the Government adequately alleged that Mr. Pomerantz acted willfully in failing to disclose income from his CIBC Accounts. Generally, a "willful" failure for purposes of the Bank Secrecy Act is "an intentional violation of a known legal duty to report." Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 154 n.5, 114 S.Ct. 655, 126 L.Ed.2d 615 (1994); see also United States v. Zwerner, No. 13-22082-CIV, 2014 WL 11878430, at *3, n.3 (S.D. Fla. Apr. 29, 2014) (adopting the Ratzlaf definition for civil FBAR penalties); accord IRS CCA 200603026, 2006 WL 148700 at *1-2 (Jan. 20, 2006) (An IRS chief counsel advisory opinion addressing in part the definition of "willful" FBAR reporting violations.). A willful failure to file an FBAR Form requires proof that "the defendant acted with knowledge that his conduct was unlawful," meaning he intentionally violated "a known legal duty." Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 137, 114 S.Ct. 655, 126 L.Ed.2d 615 (1994).

In its amended complaint, the Government alleges that Mr. Pomerantz filed timely FBAR Forms, reporting his interest in the CIBC accounts for the years 2001-2002, and again in 2005. Amend. Compl. ¶ 14. This allegation is sufficient to demonstrate that Mr. Pomerantz understood the reporting requirements regarding the CIBC accounts long before 2007, the first year that the Government alleges Mr. Pomerantz willfully failed to report his income in these accounts. The Government's other allegations —that Mr. Pomerantz signed tax returns in the years 2007 through 2009, and reported income from the CIBC accounts when that income was less significant, but failed to report higher maximum account balances—support the inference that Mr. Pomerantz acted with knowledge that his conduct was unlawful. Id. ¶¶ 17-19, 26, 42, 52; United States v. McBride, 908 F.Supp.2d 1186, 1204 05 (D. Utah 2012)) (inferring willfulness from the taxpayer's signature on his tax returns indicating constructive knowledge of relevant tax statutes); United States v. Williams, 489 Fed.Appx. 655, 659 60 (4th Cir. 2012) (finding willful blindness and reckless conduct after a taxpayer had signed his tax return and was on inquiry notice of the FBAR reporting requirement but nonetheless failed to file). The Government's amended complaint therefore pleads sufficient factual content to allow the Court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant willfully failed to file FBAR Forms for the CIBC Accounts. See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937.

While Mr. Pomerantz's main argument for dismissal concerns the sufficiency of the Government's allegations, Mr. Pomerantz also argues that there is insufficient evidentiary support for Plaintiff's allegations. See, e.g., id. at 4 ("The amended claim makes claims which are improper and have no evidentiary support...."). However, the issue before the Court on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion " 'is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims.' " Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997) (citation omitted). Mr. Pomerantz's arguments regarding the sufficiency of the Government's evidence are not appropriately before the Court at this time.

c. Motion to Strike Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f)

4 Mr. Pomerantz also moves to strike portions of the amended complaint that refer to "an unrelated tax court case" pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f). Dkt. # 19 at 7-8. Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f), "[t]he court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). An allegation is impertinent or immaterial if it "ha [s] no possible relationship to the controversy," and scandalous if it "reflect [s] cruelly upon the [other party's] moral character, use[s] repulsive language, or detract[s] from the dignity of the court." Lawrence v. City of Bethlehem, No. Civ.A. 97-CV-1824, 1998 WL 964214, at *4, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17660, at *11–12 (E.D.Pa. Oct. 30, 1998) (quoting Khalid Bin Talal Etc. v. E.F. Hutton & Co., 720 F.Supp. 671, 686 (N.D. Ill. 1989)). "Motions to strike are disfavored and 'should not be granted unless it is clear that the matter to be stricken could have no possible bearing on the subject matter of the litigation.' " Harper v. Collection Bureau of Walla Walla, Inc., C06-1605-JCC, 2007 WL 4287293, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Dec. 4, 2007) (quoting Colaprico v. Sun Microsystems, Inc., 758 F.Supp. 1335, 1339 (N.D. Cal. 1991)).

The following paragraphs in the amended complaint refer to the tax court case:

> In case number 25058-15 before the United States Tax Court, Pomerantz stipulated to entry of a decision including a tax deficiency and civil fraud penalty under 26 USC § 6663 with respect to his [2007-2009] United States income tax liability.
>
> Both the deficiency and the fraud penalty for the [2007-2009] tax year[s] to which Pomerantz stipulated in the United States Tax Court case were based at least in part on income generated by and/or income deposited into the foreign accounts identified in paragraph 21, above, that were not disclosed on Pomerantz' [2007-2009] income tax return[s].

Amend. Compl. ¶¶ 27-28, 43-44, 53-54.

Mr. Pomerantz argues that the Government has not demonstrated the relevance of the tax case, and therefore included these paragraphs in the pleadings solely to discredit him. Id. at 7. The Government counters that Mr. Pomerantz's admission in the tax court case of “fraudulent intent” in failing to report income generated by these accounts is “certainly probative of [his] state of mind.” Dkt. # 21 at 9. The Government has the better argument; Mr. Pomerantz's tax court admissions are directly relevant to the willfulness of his failure to file the FBAR Forms.

Moreover, Mr. Pomerantz has not described any prejudice caused by the offending paragraphs. “[M]otions to strike are rarely granted in the absence of a showing of prejudice to the moving party.” Moussouris v. Microsoft Corp., C15-1483JLR, 2016 WL 4472930, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Mar. 7, 2016) (quoting Freeman v. Alta Bates Summit Med. Ctr. Campus, No. C 04-2019 SBA, 2004 WL 2326369, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 12, 2004)). “This demanding standard leads district courts in the Ninth Circuit to disfavor motions to strike....” Id. Given that Mr. Pomerantz's admissions in the tax case are relevant to his state of mind and he has not demonstrated any prejudice, Mr. Pomerantz's Rule 12(f) motion is denied.

d. Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel

Finally, Mr. Pomerantz argues that the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel apply to bar the Plaintiff's amended complaint because it raises the same claims and issues that were raised in the original complaint filed in this case. Dkt. # 19 at 5. In turn, the Government correctly argues that neither res judicata nor collateral estoppel apply here because both doctrines preclude re-litigating issues that were disposed of in a final judgment, and there has been no final judgment in this matter. Dkt. # 21 at 7; see also See Dkt. # 16 (June 8, 2017 Order dismissing complaint and granting leave to amend).

5 “Res judicata applies as between separate actions, not within the confines of a single action on trial or appeal.” 18 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 4404 (3d ed. 2017). Collateral estoppel “means simply that when an issue of ultimate fact has once been determined by a valid and final judgment, that issue cannot again be litigated between the same parties in any future lawsuit.” United States v. Romeo, 114 F.3d 141, 143 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. 436, 443, 90 S.Ct. 1189, 25 L.Ed.2d 469 (1970)).

A dismissal without prejudice is not a final judgment on the merits. Audette v. Int'l Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, 195 F.3d 1107, 1113 n. 1 (9th Cir. 1999); see also Bamgbose v. Delta T Grp., Inc., 724 F.Supp.2d 510, 519 (E.D. Pa. 2010) (“Res judicata and collateral estoppel are not triggered when a court decides something without prejudice; rather, they require final judgments.”); Ahler v. City of New York, No. 93-0056 (SS), 1993 WL 362404, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 13, 1993) (“Dismissal without prejudice averts the possibility of detrimental res judicata and collateral estoppel effects.”). Given that both res judicata and collateral estoppel require a final judgment, and there was no such judgment in this case, Mr. Pomerantz's argument that the amended complaint is barred by these doctrines is wholly without merit.

Conclusion

Ultimately, none of Mr. Pomerantz's arguments in the instant motion are persuasive or supported by the law. Mr. Pomerantz waived his personal jurisdiction defense by failing to raise it in his first Rule 12 motion, the Government pled sufficient facts to support an inference that Mr. Pomerantz willfully failed to file FBAR Forms for his CIBC Accounts, the paragraphs regarding Mr. Pomerantz's tax court case are relevant to this action, and the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel do not bar an amended complaint, especially where the court granted leave to amend. Mr. Pomerantz's motion is therefore DENIED.

The clerk is ordered to provide copies of this order to Defendant and to all counsel.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 4418572, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-6095

End of Document

937 F.2d 532
United States Court of Appeals,
Tenth Circuit.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff–Appellee,
v.
David A. DASHNEY, Defendant–Appellant.

Nos. 90–1136, 90–1220.
|
June 27, 1991.

Synopsis

Following jury trial before the United States District Court for the District of Colorado, Sherman G. Finesilver, Chief Judge, defendant was convicted of two counts of structuring and attempting to structure cash transactions in excess of $10,000 for purpose of avoiding bank filings of currency transaction reports (CTRs). Defendant appealed. The Court of Appeals, Holloway, Chief Judge, held that: (1) Government was not required to prove that defendant had knowledge of prohibition of structuring transactions in criminal statutes, and (2) defendant's conduct in attempting to structure one "cash hoard" to avoid reporting requirements should not have been divided into two charges.

Affirmed in part; reversed in part and remanded.

Attorneys and Law Firms

533 Jill M. Wichlens, Asst. Federal Public Defender, Denver, Colo. (Michael G. Katz, Federal Public Defender, with her on the brief), for defendant-appellant.

Robert D. Clark, Asst. U.S. Atty., Denver, Colo. (Michael J. Norton, U.S. Atty., with him on the brief), for plaintiff-appellee.

Before HOLLOWAY, Chief Judge, and BARRETT and SEYMOUR, [*] Circuit Judges.

HOLLOWAY, Chief Judge.

I

Defendant-appellant, David Allen Dashney, appeals from his convictions and sentence after a jury trial on two counts of structuring and attempting to structure cash transactions in excess of $10,000.00 for the purpose of avoiding bank filings of currency transaction reports (CTRs), in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5324(3), 31 U.S.C. § 5322(a), and 18 U.S.C. § 2. [1]

There was evidence tending to show that in December of 1989 Dashney won approximately $92,400, paid out in cash, playing blackjack at the Mirage Hotel in Las Vegas. VIII R. at 354–55; IV R. at 45–46. He was registered under the name David Allen, Allen being his middle name. VIII R. at 346–47; IV R. at 35, 77–78. After winning, Dashney went to Florida to talk to his broker at Dean Witter where he had an account. Dashney told his broker's secretary that he did not want to use a check to deposit his winnings because of the tax consequences. VI R. at 152, 162. Subsequently Dashney discussed with his broker the possibility of depositing cash up to a certain amount without any CTR being filed. Id. at 165. The broker had the impression that Dashney thought that he could legally do what he wanted to do. Id. at 178. Dashney's broker informed him, however, that the brokerage company could not accept cash deposits in any amount. Id. at 167–68.

Soon thereafter Dashney flew to Colorado Springs, Colorado, where he attempted to rent a car, using cash only. This unusual rental attempt was reported to the Sheriff, who sent two officers to investigate. Id. at 183–85. The officers asked if they could search Dashney and his bags and were given permission to do so. They counted out $100,000 in his bag. Id. at 185. Dashney told them that the money had been won in Las Vegas. Id. at 186. Dashney also said that he had not given the money to Dean Witter because he knew if he deposited over $9,999.99 in cash, the broker had to tell federal authorities. Id. at 187. Dashney was picked up at the airport by his friend Sandra Jarrett.

On December 14, 1989, Dashney obtained a Colorado driver's license, using Jarrett's address. IV R. at 96–97; VI R. at 235–36. On that same day, he and Jarrett went to ten banks in the Denver area where they attempted to purchase and successfully purchased eleven checks from eight of the banks, each check made out to David Dashney, with no check for over $10,000. IV R. at 96–100; IX R. at 7, 9. Dashney and Jarrett did not purchase checks from two banks contacted.

At FirstBank—Cherry Creek branch, Jarrett began a purchase of a cashier's check for $10,000, made out to Dashney. VI R. at 244. During this transaction the teller told them that if the amount was $10,000 or more, a "large-currency transaction report" would have to be filled out. Id. at 241–42. Dashney told the teller that he did not want the CTR filled out because he did 534 not want to pay taxes on the money. Id. at 243. He also told her that no CTR needed to be filed if a cashier's check for $9,999 were purchased. Id. at 242. Dashney then had the bank void the first check for $10,000 and issue a cashier's check to him for $9,999.99. Id. at 244, 249.

At World Savings—Cherry Creek branch Dashney purchased a cashier's check for $9,999.99, paid for with $100 bills. Dashney said he wanted to purchase ten checks for $10,000. He had the instructions portion of a CTR form in his hand when he approached the teller. Id. at 252, 254, 257–58. Dashney indicated to the teller that there was no need to report the money because it had been won in Las Vegas. Id. at 257.

At Commercial Federal Savings and Loan—Cherry Creek branch, Dashney raised the issue of CTRs, asking if one was required for a transaction of $10,000 or more. Id. at 262. The financial counselor told Dashney that he would definitely file a CTR for $10,000 or over and that it was discretionary as to filing one for lesser transactions. Id. at 262. Dashney purchased a bank check for $9,999.99 from the financial counselor and also purchased a cashier's check for $9,999.99 from a teller supervisor. Id. at 261, 263. Dashney again mentioned that he had won the money in Las Vegas. Id. at 266.

At FirstBank—Green Mountain branch, Dashney purchased a cashier's check for $5,000 from an operations supervisor. Id. at 270. Dashney inquired about purchasing a check for $9,999.99 and was informed that the bank would file a CTR for any transaction over $5,000. Id. at 271. Jarrett then attempted to purchase a cashier's check for $5,000 with Dashney's money. Id. at 273. The supervisor and the bank president decided that the two checks would have to be considered as a single transaction requiring a CTR, but Dashney indicated that he would not provide information for a CTR. Id. The second check was voided. Id. at 272. Dashney told the supervisor that the money had been won in Las Vegas and that such winnings are exempt from CTR rules. Id. at 278.

At Century Bank—Cherry Creek branch, Dashney inquired about a certificate of deposit for over $100,000. Id. at 283. He indicated that he was not pleased with the offered rate and would shop around. Id. at 283–85. Dashney then asked about purchasing a cashier's check for $100,000 but changed his mind after he was told that a CTR would have to be filed. Id. at 285–86, 292. Dashney then asked a vice president if a CTR had to be filed for transactions under $10,000 and was told that one would be filed. V R. at 130. Dashney then showed the instructions portion of a CTR form to the vice president, specifically the paragraph stating that no form need be filled out for transactions under $10,000. Id. at 131. The vice president responded that if there was suspicion that multiple transactions might add up to more than $10,000, they had to fill out a CTR. Id. Dashney became irritated and left the bank without conducting any transaction. Id.

At First National Bank of Lakewood, Dashney asked about purchasing a cashier's check for $10,000 and asked if a CTR would have to be filled out. VI R. at 296, 299. He noted that he had won the money in a casino. After being told that a CTR would be filed for a $10,000 transaction, Dashney pointed out the clause on the CTR form stating that casinos are exempt from CTR requirements. He then purchased a check for $9,999.99. Id. at 296–301.

At Capitol Federal Savings—Green Mountain branch, Dashney said he wanted to purchase a $10,000 cashier's check. When he was told that a CTR would have to be filled out for the transaction, he changed his purchase to a $9,999.99 cashier's check. Dashney told the savings counselor that he had won the money in Las Vegas and he showed her a gold watch he had purchased with the money. Id. at 305–310.

At Green Mountain Bank, Dashney asked to purchase a $10,000 cashier's check. When he was told that a CTR would be filled out, he objected, stating that only transactions over $10,000 required CTRs. The head teller told Dashney that it was discretionary as to whether 535 to fill out a CTR for any amount under $10,000. Id. at 312. Dashney then told the teller that he had already purchased over ten cashier's checks that day and he held up "in a fan-type motion backs of what looked like checks." Id. at 314. A few minutes later, Jarrett attempted to purchase a check for $9,999.99 at another teller's window but no check was obtained. Id.

At Cherry Creek National Bank, Dashney asked about purchasing a cashier's check for $30,000. He was told that a CTR would be filed for any transaction over $10,000, whereupon he decided to get a check for $10,000 instead. An unidentified woman accompanying Dashney then purchased a cashier's check for $9,999.99, payable to Dashney. VII R. at 324–25.

At World Savings and Loan—Lakewood Green Mountain branch, Dashney asked about a jumbo certificate, a certificate of deposit for $100,000 or more. VII R. at 337. He appeared unhappy with the offered rate, saying he could get better rates elsewhere. Dashney then purchased a $10,000 association check, similar to a cashier's check. Id. at 330–31. Jarrett purchased an association check for $5,000 payable to Dashney. Dashney initiated a discussion about CTRs and he said that one should not be filled out because the transaction was for only $10,000. Id. at 332, 333. During the conversation Dashney said that he had started off with $100,000 in cash and he was going from bank to bank purchasing cashier's checks, which he showed to the teller in a stack. Id. at 336. The checks purchased by Dashney and Ms. Jarrett on December 14 totaled $99,999.93.

Dashney testified on his own behalf. He stated that he had won the money in Las Vegas, but that he thought that these winnings were reported to the government by the casino. IX R. at 3, 7. Dashney testified that he left the hotel on December 9 with $100,000; he had won $113,000 and had bought an expensive watch there. Id. at 3. Dashney testified that he was concerned about "bureaucratic problems" which might arise from having the same money reported to the government again when he bought cashier's checks. Id. at 8. He claimed that he had no intention of hiding the money and that he was purchasing cashier's checks only because Dean Witter would not accept cash. Id. at 9. Dashney said that several of the prosecution witnesses made incorrect statements in court. Id. at 17, 30, 34, 37, 41. A number of the checks were identified by Dashney as having been purchased by him. Id. at 44–49. Dashney also admitted that several of the bank employees had discussed CTRs with him. Id. at 32–41.

II

Dashney was charged in a two count indictment alleging that he had attempted to and had successfully structured transactions to evade the filing of CTRs, in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 5324(3), 5322(a) and 18 U.S.C. § 2.[2] He was convicted following a 536 jury trial and was sentenced to 24 months' imprisonment pursuant to the Sentencing Guidelines. See United States Sentencing Commission, Guidelines Manual § 2S1.3 (Nov.1989).[3]

The defendant Dashney filed a motion to dismiss the indictment for vagueness and failure to charge knowledge of illegality. I R. Doc. 6. At a hearing on the motion it was argued more specifically that the indictment did not charge Dashney with knowledge of the antistructuring statute, 31 U.S.C. § 5324. After argument the trial judge denied the motion to dismiss by an oral ruling, rejecting the claim of vagueness. She further held that knowledge of illegality is not required; the defendant would be entitled to an instruction that his acts must be willful, that is, "done voluntarily and intentionally and with the specific intent to do something the law forbids, not because of accident or other innocent reason." II R. at 28–29. The judge said that the statute does contain a scienter element and that the government would have to show that defendant had knowledge that CTRs had to be filed and that the defendant structured his transaction, attempting to evade those reporting requirements. Id. at 29.

At a conference where instructions to the jury were discussed, the same issue was again raised by Dashney. His attorney referred to his earlier legal argument that the government must establish knowledge of illegality and the antistructuring statute. VIII R. at 427–29. The trial judge, however, did not instruct that knowledge of illegality was required to be proven by the government, and instead charged, inter alia, that the government must prove that the defendant knowingly and willfully structured or attempted to structure a currency transaction; and that the purpose of the structured transaction or attempted structured transaction was to evade the bank's reporting requirement. Instruction No. 12.

The judge further instructed that an act is done willfully if done voluntarily and intentionally, and with specific intent to do something the law forbids, that is to say with bad purpose either to disobey or disregard the law; that to evade or attempt to evade the reporting requirements of 31 U.S.C. § 5313(a) means that the defendant acted voluntarily and intentionally and with the specific intent to knowingly keep financial institutions from having sufficient information to prepare and file the currency transaction report; in other words, the evasion or attempted evasion must be made with the bad purpose of seeking to prevent financial institutions from making a written report of the currency transaction; and that knowingly means that the act or omission was done voluntarily and intentionally, and not because of a mistake or accident. Instruction No. 15. Further she instructed that the crime charged is a serious crime which requires proof of specific intent; that the government must prove that the defendant knowingly did an act which the law forbids, as knowingly was earlier defined, purposely intending to violate the law. Instruction No. 16. The defendant's attorney moved for a judgment of acquittal at the close of all the evidence, and this motion was denied.

Following his convictions and sentencing on Counts 1 and 2, the defendant appealed.

537 III

[1] Dashney argues three main points on appeal in challenging his convictions on both counts. First, it is claimed that the district court erred in denying Dashney's motion to dismiss the indictment for failure to charge knowledge of illegality. See I R. Doc.10. Second, it is claimed that the jury instructions improperly failed to instruct the jury that knowledge of illegality must be proved for conviction under 31 U.S.C. §§ 5322(a) and 5324(3). Third, it is argued that the district court erred in denying Dashney's motion for judgment of acquittal since no evidence was presented that Dashney had knowledge of the illegality of his actions. The gravamen of all of these claims is that for a conviction under 31 U.S.C. §§ 5322(a) and 5324(3), it must be established that the defendant had knowledge of the prohibition of structuring transactions in the criminal statutes.

Although this is the first time such an argument has been made in this circuit under the antistructuring law, a similar contention has been presented and rejected in both the Ninth and Second Circuits. See United States v. Hoyland, 914 F.2d 1125, 1128–29 (9th Cir.1990); United States v. Scanio, 900 F.2d 485, 489–91 (2d Cir.1990). Dashney, however, says that the argument has never been properly considered in light of the complete legislative history of 31 U.S.C. §§ 5322(a) and 5324(3) and the recent Supreme Court decision in Cheek v. United States, 498 U.S. 192, 111 S.Ct. 604, 112 L.Ed.2d 617 (1991).

Section 5324 of Title 31 was part of the Money Laundering Control Act of 1986, which was Title I, Subtitle H of the Anti–Drug Abuse Act of 1986. Pub.L. No. 99–570, 100 Stat. 3207 (1986). There were no Senate or House Reports submitted with the bill as passed, but there were a number of related Congressional reports submitted on proposed versions of the various portions of the final bill. 1986 U.S.Code Cong. & Ad.News 5393. [4]

Dashney primarily relies on two reports—one by the House Committee on the Judiciary and one by the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. The report from the House Committee on the Judiciary contained a proposal, not adopted, to change "willfully" to "knowingly" in § 5322. See H.R.Rep. No. 855, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 7, 27 (1986) (hereinafter Judiciary Committee Report). The report explains that the term "willfully" has been interpreted as "having different meanings and requiring differing standards depending on the context." Id. at 21. The report then says that "willfully" in this context has been interpreted as requiring an "actual awareness of the reporting requirement to sustain violations." Id. at 22. The report also states that the proposed alteration to "knowingly" was not intended to change the meaning of the statute, but only to express the requisite state of mind more clearly. Id. at 21–22. This portion of the legislative history is relied on heavily by Dashney on this appeal. [5]

Dashney also relies on the report from the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, which echoes the aforementioned Judiciary Committee Report and states that "[i]n the criminal context the term 'knowingly' means with specific intent to commit a violation of the Bank Secrecy Act" or "specific intent to commit a crime." H.R.Rep. No. 746, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 29, 41 (1986) (hereinafter Banking Committee Report). The heading for this discussion is "Clarifying the 'State of Mind' Standard for Criminal and Civil Money Penalties." Id. at 28–29.

538 Although the House reports show that two House Committees recognized some ambiguity in the term "willfully," and suggested that it be revised to "knowingly," this provides us with little guidance, for this proposed change was not made. Dashney argues that the change to “knowingly”—the proposed “clarification”—was not made because Congress deemed it unnecessary since “knowingly” was already implicit in the statute, thus showing legislative intent in accord with Dashney's contention that proof of knowledge of the antistructuring statute and the illegality of his actions are required for a conviction. Therefore, according to Dashney, we should interpret the statutes in question here, §§ 5324(3) and 5322(a), as requiring specific knowledge of illegality of structuring under the antistructuring provision in § 5324(3). Or, in any event, Dashney says there is such ambiguity that we should thus construe the statutes under the rule of lenity, citing Bifulco v. United States, 447 U.S. 381, 387, 400, 100 S.Ct. 2247, 2252, 2258, 65 L.Ed.2d 205 (1980), and United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336, 347–48, 92 S.Ct. 515, 522, 30 L.Ed.2d 488 (1971).

While criminal intent is not specifically addressed, it is implicitly dealt with in another related report from the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. See S.Rep. No. 433, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. (1986) (hereinafter Senate Report). The report gives an example of the intended application of the proposed statute:

> For example, a person who converts $18,000 in currency to cashier's checks by purchasing two $9,000 cashier's checks at two different banks or on two different days with the specific intent that the participating bank or banks not be required to file [CTRs] for those transactions, would be subject to potential civil and criminal liability. A person conducting the same transactions for any other reasons ... would not be subject to liability under the proposed amendment.

Senate Report at 22. Thus, this Report contemplates a criminal intent element for prosecution for structuring crimes, but the intent required is merely to avoid the currency transaction reporting requirements, and not specific knowledge of the antistructuring law itself. We are not persuaded that the legislative history as a whole impels a construction of the statutes in the restrictive manner which Dashney suggests.

Dashney further submits that in any event the rule of lenity should be applied here, in his favor, due to ambiguity of the currency transaction report statutes. See Bifulco v. United States, 447 U.S. 381, 387, 100 S.Ct. 2247, 2252, 65 L.Ed.2d 205 (1980). Bifulco, however, notes that the touchstone of the rule of lenity is statutory ambiguity. Id. at 387, 100 S.Ct. at 2252. We feel, however, that the intent of Congress in the statute's usage of the term “willfully” in § 5322(a) was to adopt the interpretation of the statute explained in United States v. Scanio, 900 F.2d 485 (2d Cir.1990):

> The meaning of the term ‘willful’ depends upon the context in which it is used, see United States v. Stroud, 893 F.2d 504, 507 (2d Cir.1990) (quoting Screws v. United States, 325 U.S. 91, 101, 65 S.Ct. 1031, 1035, 89 L.Ed. 1495 (1945) (plurality opinion)), and a requirement that an act be done ‘willfully’ normally does not necessitate proof that the defendant was specifically aware of the law penalizing his conduct. Where the law imposes criminal liability for certain conduct, a requirement that the conduct be ‘willful’ generally ‘means no more than that the person charged with the duty knows what he is doing. It does not mean that, in addition, he must suppose that he is breaking the law.’ American Surety Co. v. Sullivan, 7 F.2d 605, 606 (2d Cir.1925) (L. Hand, J.); United States v. Gregg, 612 F.2d 43, 51 (2d Cir.1979) (‘It is well settled that ignorance of the law is no defense to purposeful and intentional action.’ (citing Lambert v. California, 355 U.S. 225, 228, 78 S.Ct. 240, 242, 2 L.Ed.2d 228 (1957)).

....

> ... With respect to the applicable mens rea, the legislative history indicates that Congress only intended to require 539 proof that the defendant structured a currency transaction in order to prevent the financial institution from filing a CTR.

900 F.2d at 489, 491 (emphasis added).

The Ninth Circuit's opinion in United States v. Hoyland, 914 F.2d 1125 (9th Cir.1990), persuasively makes the same interpretation of the statutes, concluding, id. at 1129:

> Congress was aware that several circuits, including ours, had held it no crime to structure deposits so that > the reporting requirement would not be triggered. S.Rep. No. 433, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 22 (1986). Congress changed the law to make it a crime so to structure with the intent to prevent reporting. To act willfully under the statute is to act with this intent.

See also United States v. 316 Units of Municipal Securities, 725 F.Supp. 172, 178 (S.D.N.Y.1989) (to restrict prosecutions to those few cases in which the government could prove actual knowledge of the antistructuring statute would contravene the legislative intent to broaden the scope of the currency reporting statute) (dictum). Hence we feel that the rule of lenity does not benefit Dashney here since the statutes' intent is not unclear.

Finally, Dashney says that "willfully" in the penalty provision of 31 U.S.C. § 5322 has previously been interpreted as requiring knowledge of illegality in relation to other violations of Title 31 and should therefore be interpreted in the same manner regarding violations of § 5324(3). See United States v. Eisenstein, 731 F.2d 1540, 1543 (11th Cir.1984) (importation and exportation of over $10,000 without filing a CTR, in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 1059, 1081, 1082 (1976)); United States v. Granda, 565 F.2d 922, 926 (5th Cir.1978) (importation of over $5,000 without filing a CTR, in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 1058, 1101).[6] Furthermore, Dashney argues that the interpretation of "willfully" as requiring knowledge of illegality is supported by Cheek v. United States, 498 U.S. 192, 111 S.Ct. 604, 112 L.Ed.2d 617 (1991). Cheek holds that, in a criminal tax violation context, "the standard for the statutory willfulness requirement is the 'voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty.' " Cheek, 111 S.Ct. at 610.

Both Eisenstein and Granda involve what is now recodified, in amended form, as 31 U.S.C. § 5316, requiring reports to be filed upon the exporting or importing of over $10,000 across United States borders. See Eisenstein, 731 F.2d at 1542; Granda, 565 F.2d at 923. The requirement of knowledge of illegality is necessary there because "[t]he isolated act of bringing money in excess of $5,000 into the country is not illegal or even immoral." Granda, 565 F.2d at 926; see Eisenstein, 731 F.2d at 1543. An innocent traveler could certainly decide to go overseas carrying a large amount of money or traveler's checks, and absent knowledge of the reporting requirements, there is no reason to believe that such activity can be a crime. When typically innocent behavior is criminalized, there is a strong argument for requiring a person to have knowledge of the illegality of his actions to justify a conviction. See Lambert v. California, 355 U.S. 225, 228–29, 78 S.Ct. 240, 242–43, 2 L.Ed.2d 228 (1957). In the case before us, however, and in context of the statutes before us, no wholly innocent person faces such a predicament since a scienter element is incorporated into both 31 U.S.C. §§ 5324 and 5322.

The prohibition of the antistructuring statute, § 5324, includes this basic proviso—"no person shall for the purpose of evading the reporting requirements of section 5313(a) ..." 31 U.S.C. § 5324 (emphasis added). Innocent or accidental structuring of transactions does not trigger § 5324, and consequently, both Dashney's indictment and his jury instructions properly included the element of willful intent to evade the reporting requirements. See I R. Doc. 1; I R. Doc. 27, Instruction No. 12, 15–16.

Cheek addresses "willfulness" in the context of criminal violations of federal tax 540 statutes. Cheek, 111 S.Ct. at 609. The Court stated that

> The general rule that ignorance of the law or a mistake of law is no defense to criminal prosecution is deeply rooted in the American legal system....
>
> The proliferation of statutes and regulations has sometimes made it difficult for the average citizen to know and comprehend the extent of the duties and obligations imposed by the tax laws. Congress has accordingly softened the impact of the common-law presumption by making specific intent to violate the law an element of certain federal criminal tax offenses. Thus, the Court almost 60 years ago interpreted the statutory term 'willfully' as used in the federal criminal tax statutes as carving out an exception to the traditional rule. This special treatment of criminal tax offenses is largely due to the complexity of the tax laws.

Id.

Dashney argues that the complexity of the statutes governing the reporting of monetary transactions is equal to that of the tax statutes and, thus, a similar exception to the general rule should be made in interpreting these reporting statutes. We disagree. Cheek involves only certain criminal tax statutes, and we see no reason to extend similar statutory interpretation into the straightforward currency reporting requirements. Criminal tax statutes are more analogous to the international currency reporting statutes involved in Granda and Eisenstein, since entirely innocent actions can lead to violations of the law. See Hoyland, 914 F.2d at 1129; Scanio, 900 F.2d at 490–91. As previously noted, Dashney's actions were anything but innocent, as he went to great lengths to avoid the filling out of CTRs in connection with his transactions. The various witnesses' testimony regarding Dashney's comments, along with the several checks under the $10,000 mandatory reporting limit, indicate that Dashney was quite aware of the reporting requirement and intended to evade such reporting.

In sum, we are not persuaded that the trial judge's instructions were in error or that the government's proof was lacking as to an essential element. The evidence amply supported the guilty verdicts on the charges which were tried.

IV

[2] After argument of this appeal, defendant Dashney was granted leave to file a supplemental brief asserting an issue not argued in his original briefs or at argument. The substance of this claim of error was argued below, however, by a pretrial motion.[7] The gist of this contention is that it was fundamental error for the government to divide the allegations of defendant's acts at the various banks into two charges of structuring on which Dashney received two convictions, two special assessments of $50, and his sentence of 24 months' imprisonment under the Sentencing Guidelines. See Counts 1 and 2, note 2, supra.

The government has filed a response to defendant Dashney's supplemental brief arguing that there are bona fide distinctions between the conduct charged in Counts 1 and 2; that each count alleges a cognizable violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5324(3); and that therefore there was no multiplicity in the charging of two separate counts. And the government says that the defendant Dashney was in no way harmed by having been charged in two counts in any event, since his sentence on two counts did not involve any additional imprisonment, fine or restitution order, and that the imposition of a second $50 special assessment in the judgment was de minimis.

The government makes no objection to our considering the additional issue and we 541 conclude that we should do so since it goes to the fundamental validity of one conviction and one $50 special assessment, and might affect the sentence imposed. We feel we should decide this new issue as a proper exercise of our discretion since injustice might otherwise result. Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 121, 96 S.Ct. 2868, 2877, 49 L.Ed.2d 826 (1976). We have therefore considered the recent opinion of the Seventh Circuit which Dashney relies on, United States v. Davenport, 929 F.2d 1169 (7th Cir.1991), and have reconsidered our record in light of that opinion.

Davenport involved a similar situation where the defendants were charged with separate counts of violation of the antistructuring statute, 31 U.S.C. § 5324(3). There Count 1 charged a conspiracy to violate § 5324(3), Count 2 charged one violation of the antistructuring statute, consisting of the making of ten deposits viewed as an effort to "structure" an $81,500 transaction, and the last ten counts charged each of the ten same deposits as separate violations of the statute. The court held that these latter ten counts were invalid:

> These counts should have been thrown out. The statute does not forbid the making of deposits. It forbids the structuring of a transaction. The Davenports received $100,000 in cash, which they wanted to deposit. The receipt and deposit of the $100,000 were the transaction that the Davenports structured by breaking it up into multiple deposits, of which ten had been made when they were caught. There was one structuring, one violation. The government's position leads to the weird result that if a defendant receives $10,000 and splits it up into 100 deposits he is ten times guiltier than a defendant who splits up the same amount into ten deposits.

Id. at 1171 (emphasis added). The court stated further:

> The statute's aim was to prevent people from either causing the (usually innocent) bank to fail to file a required report or defeating the goal of the requirement that large cash deposits be reported to the Internal Revenue Service by breaking their cash hoard into enough separate deposits to avoid activating the requirement. S. Rep. No. 433, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 22 (1986); United States v. Scanio, supra, 900 F.2d at 488.

Id. at 1173 (emphasis added).

We must agree with the defendant that the rationale of Davenport clearly applies to the facts in the instant case. As in Davenport, there was one "cash hoard" involved here. Count 1 of the indictment here alleges that the defendant Dashney "structured or attempted to structure a transaction or transactions" with the purchase on the same business day of $99,999.93 in cashier's checks at ten banks. Count 2 here alleged that Dashney attempted to structure a transaction or transactions with the purchase of cashier's checks totaling approximately $100,000, alleging transactions at two banks.[8] It is clear from our record that the same $100,000 fund was involved in the conduct alleged in both counts. Dashney testified that he left the hotel in Las Vegas on December 9 with $100,000, after he had won $113,000 and then bought an expensive watch there. IX R. at 3. Following his trip to Florida, he returned to Colorado Springs and there he told two officers from the Sheriff's Department that his bag contained $100,000 he had won in Las Vegas, and they counted out $100,000 in his bag. VI R. at 185–86. Then, in one day—December 14, 1989—Dashney and his friend Jarrett went to all the banks covered by the charges in Counts 1 and 2, making the purchases or attempted purchases of cashier's checks. This record thus shows that Dashney, throughout the events alleged, was dealing with the same fund of approximately $100,000 brought from Las Vegas and which he attempted repeatedly to use in separate purchases of cashier's checks for $10,000 or less. The persuasive opinion in Davenport convinces us that here also there was a multiplicity of charges, splitting up one unit of prosecution contemplated 542 by the statute into two separate counts.

The government makes two unconvincing arguments to avoid the Davenport holding. First, the government suggests that a distinction exists here between the counts; that Count 2 charged only attempted structuring transactions, which were not consummated, and that "there is a logical separation between consummated structured transactions and attempted but unconsummated structured transactions." Government Response at 4. We see no logic in this argument. This interpretation would mean that if one sets out to structure transactions so as to avoid CTRs on one $100,000 cash hoard by buying ten cashier's checks, and all ten purchases succeeded, only one structuring count would be proper. But if two checks of the ten were not obtained, then one would be guiltier and two structuring counts could be charged relating to the same efforts to avoid CTRs on one cash hoard. As the court said in Davenport, 929 F.2d at 1171, about a similar contention, "[t]he government's position leads to [a] weird result...." The basic violation of structuring by attempting to conceal one large cash hoard, during one day's conduct, underlies both counts charged against Dashney. They concerned only one structuring violation in our opinion.

The remaining contention of the government is that Dashney has suffered no harm by being charged in two separate counts. It is true that such multiple counts are grouped together for sentencing purposes. See U.S.S.G. §§ 3D1.2(d) and 3D1.3(b). Nevertheless, separate convictions are involved and an additional conviction does bear an onus that the defendant is entitled to be relieved of, if invalid. The government says that the extra $50 special assessment is de minimis. Apparently the Congress did not think so and directed imposition of the assessments on separate valid convictions. We have held that a separate invalid special assessment of $50 would prevent the application of the concurrent sentence doctrine. United States v. Sullivan, 919 F.2d 1403, 1429 n. 42 (10th Cir.1990).

In sum, we are convinced that the Davenport result is sound and that it requires the vacation of the conviction on Count 2 here.

V

Accordingly, the conviction on Count 1 is AFFIRMED. The conviction on Count 2 is REVERSED. The cause is remanded to the district court to vacate the sentence and resentence the defendant in accord with this opinion.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

937 F.2d 532, 60 USLW 2059

Footnotes

[*] Judge Seymour heard the argument in this case but did not participate in this decision.

[1] Section 5324 states in part that “[n]o person shall for the purpose of evading the reporting requirements of section 5313(a) with respect to such transaction ... structure or assist in structuring, any transaction with one or more domestic financial institutions.” 31 U.S.C. § 5324. Section 5313(a) of Title 31 requires financial institutions to file reports of currency transactions involving more than $10,000.

Section 5322(a) of Title 31 provides in part that “[a] person willfully violating this subchapter ... shall be fined not more than $250,000, or imprisonment [of] not more than five years, or both.” Thus § 5322(a) acts to prescribe criminal penalties for a variety of Title 31 violations, including § 5324.

[2] The indictment reads in part:

COUNT 1

The Grand Jury charges that:

> On or about December 14, 1989, in the State and District of Colorado, DAVID A. DASHNEY, for the purpose of evading the reporting requirements of 31 U.S.C. § 5313(a) and Title 31, Code of Federal Regulations, Section 103.22(a)(1), knowingly, intentionally, and unlawfully structured or attempted to structure a transaction or transactions or knowingly, intentionally, and unlawfully induced, counseled, or commanded Sandra Jarrett to structure or attempt to structure a transaction or transaction, to wit: the purchase with cash on the same business day of $99,999.93 of cashiers checks payable to the order of DAVID A. DASHNEY, with one or more domestic financial institutions in metropolitan Denver, to wit: [alleging transactions with eleven financial institutions] ... or knowingly, intentionally, and unlawfully procured or caused the structuring or attempted structuring of a transaction or transaction, to wit: the purchase of cash on the same business day of $99,999.93 of cashier's checks payable to the order of DAVID A. DASHNEY, with one or more domestic financial institutions, to wit: those transactions described above in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 5324(3), 5322(a), all in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2.

COUNT 2

The Grand Jury charges that

> On or about December 14, 1989, in the State and District of Colorado, DAVID A. DASHNEY, for the purpose of evading the reporting requirements of 31 U.S.C. § 5313(a) and Title 31, Code of Federal Regulations, Section 103.22(a)(1), knowingly, intentionally, and unlawfully attempted to structure a transaction or transactions, to wit: the purchase with cash of a series of cashiers checks, none of which is in excess of $10,000.00, totaling approximately $100,000.00, all such cashiers checks to have been payable to the order of DAVID A. DASHNEY, with one or more domestic financial institutions in metropolitan Denver, to wit: World Savings and Green Mountain Bank, in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 5324(3), 5322(a), all in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2.

I R. at 1–3. The government argued at a hearing on a motion to require the government to elect on which count it would proceed that the Count 1 transactions were completed, while those alleged in Count 2 were attempted, but unsuccessful. II R. at 6–12. The argument raised in this motion of defendant is addressed further in Part IV, infra.

[3] The defendant's Las Vegas winnings were seized by the government in a civil forfeiture action pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 981(a)(1)(A), 31 U.S.C. § 5324(3), 21 U.S.C. § 881(a)(6), and Supplemental Rule for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims C(2). See I R. Doc. 9, Ex. Q.

[4] When committee reports are used in divining legislative intent, the reports used are usually those which accompanied the proposed and enacted legislation. It has been said that “[c]oncerning those parts of the bill passed as introduced by the committee without change, it is reasonable to assume that the legislature adopted the intent of the committee.” Sutherland Stat. Const. § 48.06 at 308 (4th Ed). This is not the case before this court as the reports discussed were attached to rejected proposed bills.

[5] We note that the legislation proposed in this House Judiciary Committee Report contained no prohibition on structuring. Thus, the interpretations of “willfully” were not made with reference to legislative proposals on an antistructuring law.

[6] The relevant currency reporting statutes were originally codified at 31 U.S.C. §§ 1051–1101 (1976). They were revised and recodified at 31 U.S.C. §§ 5311–26 (1986).

[7] The motion below was titled “MOTION TO REQUIRE GOVERNMENT TO ELECT DUE TO DUPLICITY IN INDICTMENT,” but it actually was directed at the multiplicity of the indictment, arguing that “[b]oth counts allege the same wrongful conduct on behalf of the defendant.” I R. Doc. 3. Duplicity refers to the inclusion of various offenses in a single count of an indictment, while multiplicity refers to multiple counts of an indictment which cover the same criminal behavior. United States v. Chrane, 529 F.2d 1236, 1237 n. 3 (5th Cir.1976).

[8] Only one of these two banks was not involved in Count 1.

End of Document

2015 WL 4508688
United States District Court, W.D. Washington,
at Seattle.

James MOORE, Plaintiff,
v.
UNITED STATES of America, Defendant.

No. C13–2063RAJ.
|
Signed July 24, 2015.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Anthony V Diosdi, Moskowitz LLP, San Francisco, CA, Keith Allen Kemper, Ellis Li & McKinstry, Seattle, WA, for Plaintiff.

Adam D. Strait, Jennifer Y. Golden, Washington, DC, for Defendant.

ORDER

RICHARD A. JONES, District Judge.

I. INTRODUCTION

1 This matter comes before the court on the parties' supplemental briefs following the court's April 1, 2015 order. The court assumes the parties' familiarity with that order, and will not repeat the summary and analysis of this litigation contained therein.

In light of the April 1 order, the parties' supplemental briefs and evidence, and the reasons stated below, the court directs the clerk to DISMISS this case and to enter judgment for the United States.

II. DISCUSSION

The court summarizes its rulings today as follows:

1) The United States has demonstrated that the IRS's decision to assess Mr. Moore FBAR penalties of $10,000 for each year from 2005 through 2008 was not arbitrary, not capricious, and not an abuse of its discretion.

2) The IRS's conduct in assessing those FBAR penalties, by contrast, was in several respects arbitrary and capricious. In particular, the IRS disclosed no adequate basis for its decision to assess the penalties until this litigation forced its hand. Even after this litigation began, the IRS refused to disclose the evidence on which it now relies to demonstrate the basis for its decision to impose those penalties. With respect to the 2005 penalty, the IRS broke its own promise not to impose a penalty until Mr. Moore had an opportunity to respond to its "proposed" assessment.

3) In light of these rulings, the Government is entitled to judgment for $40,000, although that amount will be offset by the more than $10,000 that Mr. Moore has already paid. In light of the arbitrary and capricious conduct described above, the court rules that any interest, late fee, or other supplemental assessment that the IRS or another agency of the United States has attempted to tack on to Mr. Moore's FBAR penalties is void. The United States shall treat the FBAR penalties as if they were first assessed on the date of this order.

The court briefly explains each of those rulings. First, it finds that the supplemental declaration of IRS Appeals Officer Daisy Batman, which includes the case memorandum that the IRS previously refused to disclose to Mr. Moore, discloses the basis for the IRS's decision to assess the FBAR penalties. That memorandum leads the court to conclude that the IRS did not act arbitrarily and capriciously or abuse its discretion in determining the amount of the penalties. In particular, the court finds that the guidelines for determining the amount of FBAR penalties contained in the Internal Revenue Manual are not arbitrary or capricious, and that it was not an abuse of discretion for the IRS to follow those guidelines in this case.

The IRS's refusal to disclose anything about the basis for its decision until this litigation, and in particular its decision to withhold Agent Batman's memorandum until after the court ordered it produced, was arbitrary and capricious. The IRS did not simply fail to disclose Agent Batman's memorandum, it opposed Mr. Moore's motion to compel its disclosure. Once the Government determined that it could point to no other evidence justifying its decision to impose the maximum penalties, the Government produced the memorandum. The IRS has offered no explanation for its apparent policy not to explain the assessment of FBAR penalties to citizens, and in particular for its apparent policy not to put that explanation in writing. It has also offered no explanation for its steadfast refusal to disclose Agent Batman's memo in this litigation until it was left with no other options. No citizen should have to sue his own Government to find out why he is being fined, or to find out why he is being fined $40,000 as opposed to a smaller amount. And once a citizen has sued, he should not have to fight over the most basic disclosures.

2 As to its bizarre conduct in assessing the 2005 penalty, the IRS explains that it has an internal policy to assess FBAR penalties at least 180 days before the expiration of the statute of limitations for doing so. That policy is well within its discretion. What is not within its discretion is its decision to offer Mr. Moore the opportunity to contest the 2005 FBAR penalty before its assessment, and then to impose the penalty before the deadline the IRS imposed. The IRS offers no explanation for why it allowed rote application of its internal policies to trump the individual assurances it made to Mr. Moore.

In light of the court's conclusion that the amount of the penalty the IRS imposed was appropriate, there are two apparent harms arising from its arbitrary and capricious conduct in imposing that penalty. First, Mr. Moore was given the unappealing choice to either accept the IRS's unexplained imposition of a $40,000 penalty or to file suit. The court assumes that Mr. Moore's choice to sue cost him a substantial sum. Second, the IRS has assessed interest and other penalties on top of the FBAR penalties. The court expresses no opinion at this time on whether the first harm can be remedied. The court remedies the second harm by preventing the IRS from profiting by imposing penalties without explaining them. The court voids the IRS's assessment of interest and other charges on top of its previously unexplained penalties.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the court directs the clerk to DISMISS this case and to enter judgment for the United States for $40,000, although the United States must offset that amount by the amount of any payments it has received from Mr. Moore. The United States shall treat the FBAR penalties underlying that judgment as if they were imposed on the date of this order. Mr. Moore owes no interest, late charge, or other assessment supplemental to the $40,000 in penalties accruing before the date of this order.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2015 WL 4508688, 116 A.F.T.R.2d 2015-5397, 2015-2 USTC P 50,411

End of Document

2017 WL 1743837
United States District Court,
S.D. New York.

UNITED STATES of America,
v.
Michael LITTLE, Defendant.

12-cr-647 (PKC)
|
Signed 05/03/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Sarah Kathleen Eddy, Sarah Elizabeth Paul, United States Attorney Office, New York, NY, Stanley John Okula, Jr., U.S. Attorney's Office, White Plains, NY, for United States of America.

Michael John Little, New York, NY, pro se.

Sean Michael Maher, The Law Offices of Sean M. Maher, PPLC, New York, NY, for Defendant.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

P. Kevin Castel, United States District Judge

1 Defendant Michael Little moves for partial dismissal of the Second Superseding Indictment on the grounds that his prosecution for failure to file individual income tax returns and Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBARs") would deprive him of due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Little asserts that at the time of the events charged in the indictment he was a U.K. citizen and a lawful permanent resident of the U.S. He argues that the statutes and regulations requiring U.K. citizens with permanent residence status under U.S. immigration law to file U.S. income tax returns and FBARs, when read in conjunction with the U.S./U.K. Tax Treaty (the "Treaty"), are ambiguous, such that a person of ordinary intelligence lacks notice as to what constitutes compliance with the law. The Court finds that none of the relevant statutes or regulations, whether read in isolation or together, or in conjunction with the Treaty, are so ambiguous that they could properly be found unconstitutionally vague as applied to the charged conduct. Defendant's motion for partial dismissal of the indictment is thus denied.

BACKGROUND

A grand jury returned a nineteen count Second Superseding Indictment against defendant Little, filed on March 18, 2013, charging him with willful failure to file individual income tax returns and FBARs, as well various crimes arising out of his alleged assistance of Harry G. A. Seggerman's heirs in a scheme to avoid the taxes due on their inheritance held in undeclared offshore accounts. (Dkt. No. 48.) Little first raised his due process arguments in a letter to the Court dated February 9, 2017. (Dkt. No. 230.) The Court directed the government to respond. (Dkt. No. 231.) The government responded on March 2, 2016, (Dkt. No. 234), Little replied on March 21, 2017, (Dkt. No. 239), and supplemented this submission on April 10, 2017, (Dkt. No. 244.)

DISCUSSION

Defendant Little moves to dismiss Counts One through Eight of the Second Superseding Indictment on the grounds that the statutes and regulations requiring him to file individual income tax returns and FBARs, as well as those attaching criminal liability to such failure, are unconstitutionally vague in violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

I. Void for Vagueness Standard.

"As generally stated, the void-for-vagueness doctrine requires that a penal statute define the criminal offense with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited and in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement." United States v. Rybicki, 354 F.3d 124, 129 (2d Cir. 2003) (quoting Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 357 (1983)). Because the First Amendment is not implicated, the Court assesses Little's challenge as applied, i.e., "in light of the specific facts of the case at hand and not with regard to the statute's facial validity." Id. (quoting United States v. Nadi, 996 F.2d 548, 550 (2d Cir. 1993)). Courts examine as-applied vagueness claims in two steps: "a court must first determine whether the statute gives the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited and then consider whether the law provides explicit standards for those who apply it." Rubin v. Garvin, 544 F.3d 461, 468 (2d Cir. 2008) (quoting Farrell v. Burke, 449 F.3d 470, 486 (2d Cir. 2006)). The "novelty" of a prosecution does not bolster a vagueness challenge, for the lack of a prior "litigated fact pattern" that is "precisely" on point is "immaterial." United States v. Kinzler, 55 F.3d 70, 74 (2d Cir. 1995).

2 "A scienter requirement may mitigate a law's vagueness, especially where the defendant alleges inadequate notice." Rubin, 544 F.3d at 467 (citing Vill. of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 499 (1982)). Where "the punishment imposed is only for an act knowingly done with the purpose of doing that which the statute prohibits, the accused cannot be said to suffer from lack of warning or knowledge that the act which he does is a violation of law." United States v. Tannenbaum, 934 F.2d 8, 12 (2d Cir. 1991) (quoting Screws v. United States, 325 U.S. 91, 102 (1945) (plurality opinion)) (Bank Secrecy Act provision requiring reporting by financial institutions not void for vagueness when applied to an individual because the Act defined financial institutions to include "[a] person who engages as a business in dealing in or exchanging currency" and defendant knew he was "committing a wrongful act.")

The Court must conduct separate inquiries into the underlying statutes and regulations and then into the statutes imposing criminal penalties for certain types of violations of these statutes and regulations. First, the Court finds that the U.S. statutes and regulations that require alien lawful permanent residents (green card holders) to either (a) file a tax return and pay taxes on worldwide income, or (b) file a tax return reporting worldwide income and indicate that he or she is taking a particular protection under the Treaty, are not unconstitutionally vague as applied. Second, the Court finds that the statutes providing for criminal sanctions against individuals who violate these obligations are not vague as applied to alien lawful permanent residents.

II. U.S. Tax and Reporting Obligations for Alien Lawful Permanent Residents.

An alien individual who is a lawful permanent resident of the United States is treated as a resident of the United States for tax payment and reporting purposes. 26 U.S.C. § 7701(b)(1)(A). This treatment applies regardless of whether the individual is physically present in the U.S. or not. An individual is a lawful permanent resident of the U.S. if the individual has been lawfully accorded the privilege of residing permanently in the U.S. as an immigrant in accordance with the immigration laws, as long as this status has not been revoked or administratively or judicially determined to have been abandoned. 26 U.S.C. § 7701(b)(6). In 2008 Congress amended 26 U.S.C. § 7701(b)(6) to add the following language:

> An individual shall cease to be treated as a lawful permanent resident of the United States if such individual commences to be treated as a resident of a foreign country under the provisions of a tax treaty between the United States and the foreign country, does not waive the benefits of such treaty applicable to residents of the foreign country, and notifies the Secretary of the commencement of such treatment.

26 U.S.C. § 7701(b)(6)(B).

Under 26 U.S.C. § 6012 and 26 C.F.R. § 1.6012-1, a U.S. resident is required to file an income tax return each year on a Form 1040.

An individual who is a U.S. resident as well as a resident of a foreign country is a dual resident. If the U.S. is party to a tax treaty with the foreign country of which the dual resident is also a resident, then that treaty will determine the residency status of that resident.

The U.S. is party to a tax treaty with the U.K.: the Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income and on Capital Gains, effective July 24, 2001. The residence provisions of the Treaty, or "tie breaker rules," dictate that, for the purposes of the taxation of worldwide income, when an individual is a dual resident of the U.S. and U.K.:

> 3 a) he shall be deemed to be a resident only of the State in which he has a permanent home available to him; if he has a permanent home available to him in both States, he shall be deemed to be a resident only of the State with which his personal and economic relations are closer (centre of vital interests);

> b) if the State in which he has his centre of vital interests cannot be determined, or if he does not have a permanent home available to him in either State, he shall be deemed to be a resident only of the State in which he has an habitual abode;
>
> c) if he has an habitual abode in both States or in neither of them, he shall be deemed to be a resident only of the State of which he is a national;
>
> d) if he is a national of both States or of neither of them, the competent authorities of the Contracting States shall endeavour to settle the question by mutual agreement.

Treaty, art. IV, § 4. Explicitly excluded from this treatment are taxes due to either State by "any person who is liable to tax in that State in respect only of income from sources in that State or of profits attributable to a permanent establishment in that State." Id. at art. IV, § 1.

A dual resident of the U.S. and the U.K. may claim benefits under the Treaty and be treated as a nonresident alien for the purposes of computing his U.S. federal income tax liability. To receive such treatment, the individual must file a Form 1040NR:

> An alien individual ... who determines his or her U.S. tax liability as if he or she were a nonresident alien shall make a return on Form 1040NR on or before the date prescribed by law (including extensions) for making an income tax return as a nonresident. The individual shall prepare a return and compute his or her tax liability as a nonresident alien. The individual shall attach a statement (in the form required in paragraph (c) of this section) to the Form 1040NR. The Form 1040NR and the attached statement, shall be filed with the Internal Revenue Service Center, Philadelphia, PA 19255.

26 C.F.R. § 301.7701(b)-7(b). The individual must also file as an attachment to his or her Form 1040NR a completed Form 8833 (Treaty-Based Return Position Disclosure). 26 C.F.R. § 301.7701(b)-7(c).

The filing of this Treaty-Based Return Position Disclosure is also mandated as part of a separate and independent reporting obligation pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6114:

> (a) Each taxpayer who, with respect to any tax imposed by this title, takes the position that a treaty of the United States overrules (or otherwise modifies) an internal revenue law of the United States shall disclose (in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe) such position—
>
> (1) on the return of tax for such tax (or any statement attached to such return), or
>
> (2) if no return of tax is required to be filed, in such form as the Secretary may prescribe.

Thus, the filing of Form 8833 satisfies the reporting requirements of both 26 C.F.R. § 301.7701(b)-7(b) and 26 U.S.C. § 6114 with respect to disclosing that the filing individual is taking a Treaty position. See 26 C.F.R. § 301.7701(b)-7(d).

For further clarification regarding filing requirements, 26 C.F.R. § 301.7701(b)-7(e) sets forth examples to illustrate the application of these rules and the tax and reporting obligations of individuals who do or do not take a Treaty position.

III. The Tax and Reporting Obligations Applicable to Alien Permanent Residents are not Void as Applied.

A. Failure to File Tax Returns.

4 Little argues that the 2008 amendment to 26 U.S.C. § 7701(b)(6), when read in conjunction with the Treaty, created an ambiguity regarding a permanent resident's tax and reporting obligations. (Def.'s Reply in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss, March 21, 2017, Dkt. No. 239 ("D.'s Reply") at 2.) He argues that this amendment brought the law into compliance with the Treaty, which states:

> An individual who is a United States citizen or an alien admitted to the United States for permanent residence (a 'green card' holder) is a resident of the United States only if the individual has a substantial presence, permanent home or habitual abode in the > United States and if that individual is not a resident of a State other than the United Kingdom for the purposes of a double taxation convention between that State and the United Kingdom.

Treaty, art. 4 § 2. Little argues that because he was only temporarily in the U.S. between 2005-2008, this language from the Treaty would lead a person of ordinary intelligence to believe that he was not a resident of the U.S. for tax purposes. (D.'s Reply at 2.) Little also argues that the Court should not interpret any subsequently passed legislation or regulation as having modified the Treaty, citing TWA v. Franklin Mint Corp., 466 U.S. 243, 252 (1984) ("A treaty will not be deemed to have been abrogated or modified by a later statute unless such purpose on the part of Congress has been clearly expressed."). (D.'s Reply at 3.)

Little cites several more provisions of the Treaty that he claims are inconsistent with the above described tax and reporting obligations imposed by U.S. statutes and regulations, arguing that an alien lawful permanent resident of ordinary intelligence would be unclear as to what was needed to comply with the law. He cites, among other portions of the Treaty, Article 25, which states:

> Nationals of a Contracting State shall not be subjected in the other Contracting State to any taxation or any requirement connected therewith that is more burdensome than the taxation and connected requirements to which nationals of that other State in the same circumstances, particularly with respect to taxation on worldwide income, are or may be subjected.

Treaty, art. 25, § 1.

Little appears to interpret this language to mean that a U.K. national cannot be subject to any requirement in the U.S. that is more burdensome than that which that person would be subject to in the U.K. (D.'s Reply at 4.) Little's interpretation is erroneous. A plain reading of the forgoing language is that a U.K. national cannot be subject to requirements in the U.S. that are more burdensome than those that U.S. nationals are subject to within the U.S. Thus, Little's contention that failure to file tax returns in the U.K. is not a criminal offence is irrelevant.

Little goes on to argue that even under U.S. law the penalty for failing to disclose a Treaty position is a financial penalty, not the denial of Treaty benefits, citing 26 U.S.C. § 6712 (imposing a $1,000 penalty for failure to comply with 26 U.S.C. § 6114). (Id. at 3.) He further argues that failure to disclose that one is taking a Treaty position does not prohibit one from doing so, citing Pekar v. Commissioner, 113 T.C. 158, 161 n.5 (1999) ("A taxpayer who fails in a material way to disclose one or more positions taken for a taxable year is subject to a separate penalty for each failure to disclose a position. However, there is no indication that this failure estops a taxpayer from taking such a position.") (internal citations omitted).

5 Little also cites language in Articles 3, 5, 7, and 26 of the Treaty, which he argues exempt the income he made working in the U.S. from taxation by the U.S. (D.'s Reply at 4.)

Little's arguments lack merit. Based on the above cited statutes and regulations, an alien lawful permanent resident of ordinary intelligence would know that he or she needed to either (a) file a tax return and pay taxes on worldwide income, or (b) file a tax return reporting worldwide income and indicate that he or she is taking a particular protection under the Treaty. An individual's obligation to pay taxes on either his income earned while in the U.S., or his worldwide income, is irrelevant to his or her obligation to disclose such income and report it pursuant to the above discussed statutes and regulations.

The U.S. statutes and regulations giving rise to these obligations are thus not void as applied to the conduct with which Little is charged in the Second Superseding Indictment. Dicta in a decades-old Tax Court case does not render the obligations imposed on Little by these statutes and regulations unconstitutionally vague.

Little's argument that the failure to take a Treaty position can result only in a financial penalty also lacks merit. 26 U.S.C. § 6712(c) expressly states that "[t]he penalty imposed by this section shall be in addition to any other penalty imposed by law."

Little also contends that he was informed by Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs that he was a U.K. tax resident pursuant to the Treaty and thus not required to file U.S. tax returns. (Def.'s February 9, 2017 Letter, Dkt. No. 230 at 2.)

Advice of counsel is an affirmative defense that must be based in fact and raised at trial by the defendant, who must prove that he "(1) 'honestly and in good faith' sought the advice of counsel; (2) 'fully and honestly la[id] all the facts before his counsel'; and (3) 'in good faith and honestly follow[ed]' counsel's advice, believing it to be correct and intending that his acts be lawful. United States v. Colasuonno, 697 F.3d 164, 181 (2d Cir. 2012) (quoting Williamson v. United States, 207 U.S. 425, 453 (1908)) (alternations in original). It remains to be determined whether information from a U.K. tax official can qualify as advice of counsel.

Under the present circumstances, no advice that Little may have received from U.K. tax authorities affects the void for vagueness analysis of his duty to file U.S. tax returns.

B. Failure to File FBARs.

Both Little and the Government agree that the Treaty does not affect any individual's obligation to file FBARs and that the 2007 and 2008 FBAR forms provided that FBARs were to be filed by "citizen[s] or resident[s] of the United States, or a person in and doing business in the United States." (Gov.'s Opp. to Mot. to Dismiss, March 2, 2017, Dkt. No. 234 ("Gov.'s Opp.") at 11; D.'s Reply at 4.) However, Little contends that IRS announcements 2009-51 and 2010-51 suspended the requirement for a person "in and doing business in the United States" to file and FBAR. (D.'s Reply at 4.) Internal Revenue Bulletin: 2009-51, "Temporary Suspension of FBAR filing Requirements for Persons who are not Citizens, Residents, or Domestic Entities," June 22, 2009, stated:

> 6 [A]ll persons may rely on the definition of 'United States person' found in the instructions for the prior version of the FBAR (the July 2000 version) to determine whether they have an obligation to file an FBAR. The definition of 'United States person' from the prior version is as follows: ... The term 'United States person' means (1) a citizen or resident of the United States, (2) a domestic partnership, (3) a domestic corporation, or (4) a domestic estate or trust.

Prior to February 24, 2011, the FBAR regulations did not define the term "U.S. resident." Internal Revenue Manual 4.26.16.3.1.2(1). "For FBARs required to be filed June 30, 2011 or later, 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(b) defines 'United States resident' using the definition of resident alien in IRC 7701(b)," which includes green card holders such as Little. Internal Revenue Manual 4.26.16.3.1.2(2)(1).

For FBARs due before the June 22, 2009 announcement, there does not appear to be any ambiguity regarding the duty to file for persons 'in and doing business in the United States.' Even before the term 'United States resident' was defined by FBAR regulations, it appears likely that an alien lawful permanent resident of ordinary intelligence not 'in or doing business in' the U.S. would have understood themselves to be under an obligation to file an FBAR based on the definition of 'United States resident' in other parts of the U.S. code and regulations. To the extent that there was any ambiguity regarding this duty, that ambiguity is remedied for the purposes of this void for vagueness analysis by the fact that criminal penalties only apply to a failure to file an FBAR if such failure to file was willful, as will be discussed below.

IV. The Relevant Criminal Statutes as Applied are not Void for Vagueness.

Little argues that Counts One through Eight of the Second Superseding Indictment must be dismissed pursuant to the void for vagueness doctrine of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Count One of the Second Superseding Indictment charges Little with Obstructing and Impeding the Due Administration of Internal Revenue Laws in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7212(a); Counts Two through Seven charge Little with Failure to File Individual Income Tax Returns for Tax Years 2005-2010 in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7203; Count Eight charges Little with Willful Failure to File Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5322(a). Because a person of ordinary intelligence would understand that these statutes impose criminal penalties on persons engaging in the conduct in which Little is alleged to have engaged, these statutes are not void for vagueness as applied to Little.

26 U.S.C. § 7212(a) makes it unlawful to "corruptly ... obstruct[ ] or impede[ ], or endeavor[ ] to obstruct or impede, the due administration of" the Internal Revenue Code. 26 U.S.C. § 7212(a). "To act or endeavor 'corruptly,' within the meaning of this section, means to act or endeavor 'with the intent to secure an unlawful advantage or benefit either for one's self or for another.' " United States v. Parse, 789 F.3d 83, 121 (2d Cir. 2015) (quoting United States v. Kelly, 147 F.3d 172, 177 (2d. Cir. 1998)).

Count One, paragraph nine of the Second Superseding Indictment alleges that Little took six separate actions, in addition to failing to file FBARs and tax returns, that violated Section 7212(a) in connection with the alleged scheme to avoid the taxes due on the Seggerman heirs' inheritance, and the government represents it intends to rely on those actions rather than on the failure to file tax returns or FBARs. (Gov.'s Opp. at 14-15.) A person of ordinary intelligence would understand that conduct of the type alleged in paragraph nine would expose an individual to criminal penalties for obstruction under the meaning of section 7212(a). Thus, there is no void for vagueness issue with respect to Little's prosecution for obstruction of the internal revenue laws.

7 26 U.S.C. § 7203 makes it unlawful for "[a]ny person required under [Title 26] to pay any estimated tax or tax, or required by this title or by regulations made under authority thereof to make a return, keep any records, or supply any information, [to] willfully fail[ ] to pay such estimated tax or tax, make such return, keep such records, or supply such information...." In Section 7203 and other statues prohibiting tax evasion, "the word 'willfully' ... generally connotes a voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty." United States v. Bishop, 412 U.S. 346, 360 (1973). The Supreme Court has "formulated the requirement of willfulness as bad faith or evil intent, or evil motive and want of justification in view of all the financial circumstances of the taxpayer, or knowledge that the taxpayer should have reported more income than he did." Id. (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).

31 U.S.C. 5322(a) makes it unlawful to "willfully violat[e]" 31 U.S.C. §§ 5311 et seq., "or a regulation prescribed or order issued" thereunder, including 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350, which requires certain individuals to file FBARs. Thus, to be convicted under Section 5322(a) for violating the requirement to file an FBAR, a defendant must know of his duty to file but intentionally fail to do so anyway. See United States v. Sturman, 951 F.2d 1466, 1476 (6th Cir. 1991) (defining "willfulness" in prosecution for failure to file records and reports of foreign financial agency transactions as the "voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty"); United States v. Eisenstein, 731 F.2d 1540, 1543 (11th Cir. 1984) ("[A]s it is used in the currency reporting statute, the term willful require[s] proof of the defendant's knowledge of the reporting requirement and his specific intent to commit the crime.") (internal quotation marks omitted) (alterations and emphasis in original); United States v. Granda, 565 F.2d 922, 925-26 (5th Cir. 1978) ("[T]he terms knowing and willful require proof of the defendant's knowledge of the reporting requirement and his specific intent to commit the crime. Congress, by adding these terms, took this regulatory statute out of the ranks of strict liability type crimes."); United States v. San Juan, 545 F.2d 314, 318 (2d Cir. 1976) ("Without proof of any knowledge of, or notice to, Mrs. San Juan of the reporting requirements, a jury could not determine beyond a reasonable doubt that she had the requisite willful intent.").

Thus, conviction pursuant to each of these statutes requires the government to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Little acted willfully with respect to the failure to file tax returns and FBARs, and corruptly with respect to the obstruction of the internal revenue laws. As described above, the presence of this scienter requirement undercuts any due process void for vagueness challenge. Because a conviction may only be obtained only if the government proves, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant knew he was legally required to file tax returns or file an FBAR, and so knowing, intentionally did not do so with the knowledge that he was violating the law, he cannot complain that he could be convicted for actions that he did not realize were unlawful. See, e.g., 3 L. Sand, et al., Modern Federal Jury Instructions, Criminal Inst. 50B-11 at 50B-16 (2013) ("A willful violation of this reporting requirement can only occur if the government proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew of the reporting requirement and that the defendant acted with the specific intent to violate that requirement.")

CONCLUSION

Neither the legal obligation for alien lawful permanent residents of the U.S. to file tax returns or FBARs, nor the statutes criminalizing such failure, nor the statute prohibiting the obstruction of the internal revenue laws, are vague as applied to Little's alleged conduct. A person of ordinary intelligence would know if his or her actions conformed to law. Defendant's motion to dismiss Counts One through Eight of the Second Superseding Indictment is DENIED. The Clerk of the Court is directed to terminate the motion (Dkt. No. 239.)

8 SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 1743837, 119 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-1715, 2017-1 USTC P 50,229

End of Document

2016 WL 1642968
United States District Court,
S.D. Ohio, Western Division,
Western Division at Dayton.

Mark Crawford, et al., Plaintiffs,
v.
United States Department of the Treasury, et al., Defendants.

Case No.: 3:15–CV–00250
|
Signed April 25, 2016
|
Filed 04/26/2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

James Bopp, Jr., Justin L. McAdam, Courtney E. Turner, Richard E. Coleson, The Bopp Law Firm, P.C., Terre Haute, IN, Joseph C. Krella, Dinsmore and Shohl LLP, Dayton, OH, for Plaintiffs.

Edward J. Murphy, Jordan A. Konig, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Defendants.

ENTRY AND ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE AN AMENDED VERIFIED COMPLAINT (DOC. 32); GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS (DOC. 26) PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT (DOC. 1); AND TERMINATING CASE.

THOMAS M. ROSE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

1 Plaintiffs[1] filed suit against the United States Department of the Treasury (“Treasury Department”), United States Internal Revenue Service (“IRS”), and United States Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (“FinCEN”), referred to, collectively, as “Defendants”, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on all claims. (Doc. 1, at PageID# 48–50.) Plaintiffs' Verified Complaint (doc. 1) and proposed Amended Verified Complaint (doc. 32–1) challenge the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (“FATCA”), the intergovernmental agreements (“IGAs”) negotiated by the Treasury Department to supplant FATCA in the signatory countries, and the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (“FBAR”) administered by FinCEN. FATCA mandates that foreign financial institutions (“FFIs”) report the tax return information of their U.S. citizen account holders directly to the IRS using the FATCA Report (Form 8966). 26 U.S.C. § 1471(b)(1)(C); 26 C.F.R. §§ 1.1471–4(d)(3)(v), –4(d)(3)(vi).

Previously, Plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction on all claims (doc. 8, at PageID# 135–38) and attached a Memorandum in Support of their Motion for Preliminary Injunction. (Doc. 8–1, at PageID# 139–74.) After full briefing, the Court denied Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction. (Doc. 30.) Now before the Court is Defendants' Motion to Dismiss filed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), (6). (Docs. 26, 27.) Plaintiffs filed a Memorandum in Opposition to the Motion to Dismiss. (Doc. 37.) Defendants filed a Reply Memorandum in Support of their Motion to Dismiss. (Doc. 38.)

In addition, Plaintiffs filed a Motion for Leave to File an Amended Verified Complaint, (doc. 32), and attached a proposed Amended Verified Complaint, (doc. 32–1), to their motion. Defendants filed a Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave, (doc. 34), arguing that amendment is futile because the proposed Amended Verified Complaint does not cure the deficiencies stated in Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, (docs. 26, 27), and the Court's Entry and Order Denying Plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction. (Doc. 30.) Plaintiffs filed a Reply Memorandum in support of their Motion for Leave. (Doc. 35.)

There are eight proposed claims before the Court. (Doc. 32–1, at 154–209.) The first claim challenges the validity of the Canadian, Czech, Israeli, French, Danish, and Swiss IGAs[2] used by the Treasury Department. (Id., at 154–65.) The second claim addresses the information reporting provisions FATCA and the IGAs impose not on Plaintiffs, but on FFIs. (Id., at 166– 71.) The third claim aims at the heightened reporting requirements for foreign bank accounts under FATCA, the IGAs, and the FBAR. (Id., at 172–78.) The fourth claim challenges the 30% tax imposed by FATCA on payments to FFIs from U.S. sources when these foreign institutions choose not to report to the IRS about the bank accounts of their U.S. customers (the “FFI Penalty”). (Id., at 179–88.) Similarly, the fifth claim challenges the 30% tax imposed by FATCA on account holders who exercise their rights under the statute not to identify themselves as United States citizens to their banks and to refuse to waive privacy protections afforded their accounts by foreign law (the "Passthrough Penalty"). (Id., at 189–93.) The sixth claim challenges the penalty imposed under the Bank Secrecy Act for "willful" failures to file an FBAR for foreign accounts, which can be as much as the greater of $100,000 or 50% of the value of the unreported account (the "Willfulness Penalty"). (Id., at 194–98.) The seventh and eighth claims challenge the information reporting requirements of FATCA and the IGAs as unconstitutional under the Fourth Amendment. (Id., at 199–209.)

2 The Motion to Dismiss and Motion for Leave to Amend are now fully briefed and ripe for decision. A relevant factual background will first be set forth, followed by the applicable legal standard and analysis of the motions.

I. BACKGROUND

A. FATCA Statute and Regulations

Congress passed FATCA in 2010 to improve compliance with tax laws by U.S. taxpayers holding foreign accounts. FATCA accomplishes this through two forms of reporting: (1) by FFIs about financial accounts held by U.S. taxpayers or foreign entities in which U.S. taxpayers hold a substantial ownership interest, 26 U.S.C. § 1471; and, (2) by U.S. taxpayers about their interests in certain foreign financial accounts and offshore assets. 26 U.S.C. § 6038D.

1. FATCA

President Obama signed FATCA into law on March 18, 2010. Senator Carl Levin, a co–sponsor of the FATCA legislation, declared, "offshore tax abuses [targeted by FATCA] cost the federal treasury an estimated $100 billion in lost tax revenues annually." 156 Cong. Rec. 5 S1745–01 (2010). FATCA became law as the IRS began its Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program ("OVDP"), which since 2009 has allowed U.S. taxpayers with undisclosed overseas assets to disclose them and pay reduced penalties. By 2014, the OVDP collected $6.5 billion through voluntary disclosures from 45,000 participants. IRS Makes Changes to Offshore Programs; Revisions Ease Burden and Help More Taxpayers Come into Compliance, IRS (June 18, 2014), https://www.irs.gov/uac/Newsroom/IRS–Makes–Changes–to–Offshore–Programs% 3B–Revisions–Ease–Burden–and–Help–More–Taxpayers–Come–into–Compliance. The success of the voluntary program has likely been enhanced by the existence of FATCA.

2. Foreign Financial Institution Reporting Under FATCA

Foreign Financial Institution reporting encourages FFIs to disclose information on U.S. taxpayer accounts. If the FFI does not, then a 30% withholding tax may apply to U.S.–sourced payments to the non–reporting FFI. A 30% withholding tax may also apply to FFI account holders who refuse to identify themselves as U.S. taxpayers.

> In the case of any withholdable payment to a foreign financial institution which does not meet the requirements of subsection (b) [specifying reporting criteria], the withholding agent with respect to such payment shall deduct and withhold from such payment a tax equal to 30 percent of the amount of such payment.

26 U.S.C. § 1471(a).

Section 1471(b)(1) then provides that, "[t]he requirements of this subsection are met with respect to any foreign financial institution if an agreement is in effect between such institution and the Secretary [of the Treasury] under which such institution agrees" to make certain information disclosures and "to deduct and withhold a tax equal to 30 percent of...[a]ny [pass–through] payment which is made by such institution to a recalcitrant account holder or another foreign financial institution which does not meet the requirements of this subsection[.]" § 1471(b)(1)(D)(i); see also § 1471(d)(7) (defining "pass[–through] payment"). A "recalcitrant account holder" is one who "[f]ails to comply with reasonable requests for information" that is either information an FFI needs to determine if the account is a U.S. account, § 1471(b)(1)(A), or basic information like the account holder's name, address, and taxpayer identification number. § 1471(c)(1)(A). Section 1471(c)(1) specifies the "information required to be reported on U.S. accounts," including "account balance or value." § 1471(c)(1)(C). In their Amended Verified Complaint, Plaintiffs seek a preliminary injunction against enforcement of § 1471(a), (b)(1)(D), (c)(1), and (c)(1)(C). (Doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at W.)

3 Under § 1471(b)(2), “Financial Institutions Deemed to Meet Requirements in Certain Cases,” an FFI “may be treated by the Secretary as meeting the requirements of this subsection if ... such institution is a member of a class of institutions with respect to which the Secretary has determined that the application of this section is not necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.” That means that an FFI that is treated this way is not subject to the reporting criteria in § 1471(b)(1). The Secretary can statutorily exempt FFIs from “attempt[ing] to obtain a valid and effective waiver” of foreign nondisclosure laws from each account holder and can exempt FFIs from closing such account “if a waiver ... is not obtained from each such holder within a reasonable period of time.” § 1471(b)(1)(F). [3] The Secretary's exemption of an FFI under § 1471(b)(2) also means that the FFI no longer has to make the report described in § 1471(c)(1) because that report is based on “[t]he agreement described in subsection (b)” that an FFI the Secretary has exempted does not need to have in place to avoid withholding. Furthermore, the FATCA statute provides, “[t]he Secretary shall prescribe such regulations or other guidance as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of, and prevent the avoidance of, this chapter,” i.e., §§ 1471–74. 26 U.S.C. § 1474(f).

Plaintiffs also seek to enjoin enforcement of 26 C.F.R. § 1.1471–2T(a)(1). The “[g]eneral rule of withholding” under § 1471(a) is largely reiterated by 26 C.F.R. § 1.1471–2T(a)(1), which Plaintiffs also target. (Doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at Z.) Plaintiffs seek to enjoin enforcement of 26 C.F.R. §§ 1.1471–4(a)(1), 1.1471–4(d), and 1.1471–4(d)(3)(ii), which repeat the content of § 1471(b) and (c). (Id., Prayer for Relief at AA.) In addition, Plaintiffs seek an injunction against 26 C.F.R. § 1.1471–4T(b)(1), which addresses the 30% withholding tax for recalcitrant account holders established by the statute. (Id., Prayer for Relief at BB.) Plaintiffs also seek to enjoin the IRS's use of Form 8966, “FATCA Report”, the form on which FFIs make disclosures under § 1471(c). See 26 C.F.R. § 1.1471–4(d)(3)(v); (doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at DD.) In Plaintiffs' view, these FATCA regulations “primarily elaborate on the [ ] requirements of the statutory provisions and clarify the statutory requirements.” (Doc. 32–1, at 37.)

3. Individual Reporting Under FATCA

There is a companion individual reporting requirement to § 1471's FFI reporting requirement located at 26 U.S.C. § 6038D. Under § 6038D, individuals holding more than $50,000 of aggregate value in “specified foreign financial assets”, § 6038D(b), must file a report with their annual tax returns, § 6038D(a), that includes, for each asset “[t]he maximum value of the asset during the taxable year.” § 6038D(c)(4). Plaintiffs seek to enjoin this asset–value reporting requirement. (Doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at X.) Section 6038D(h) also provides that, “[t]he Secretary shall prescribe such regulations or other guidance as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section ....” Plaintiffs seek to enjoin enforcement of the regulation that states this same reporting requirement. 26 C.F.R. § 1.6038D–4(a)(5); (see doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at CC.) Plaintiffs also target two other regulatory reporting requirements: disclosing whether a depository or custodial account was opened or closed during the taxable year, 26 C.F.R. § 1.6038D–4(a)(6); and “[t]he amount of any income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit recognized for the taxable year with respect to the reported specified foreign financial asset”, 26 C.F.R. § 1.6038D–4(a)(8). (Doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at CC.)

B. The Canadian, Czech, Israeli, French, Danish, and Swiss Intergovernmental Agreements

Once FATCA became law, the Government began requiring coordination with FFIs and foreign governments. To facilitate FATCA implementation, the United States has concluded over seventy IGAs with foreign governments addressing the exchange of tax information. Plaintiffs seek to enjoin IGAs with Canada, the Czech Republic, Israel, France, Denmark, and Switzerland in their entirety. (Doc 32–1, Prayer for Relief at B1 [4], E, I, M, Q, U.) Alternatively, they seek to enjoin parts of those IGAs. (Id., Prayer for Relief at B2–D, F–H, J–L, N–P, R–T, V.)

4 The Canadian, Czech, French, Danish, and Israeli IGAs are similar because they are all “Model 1” IGAs, whereas the Swiss IGA is a “Model 2” IGA. The key distinction is that under Model 1 IGAs, foreign governments agree to collect their FFIs' U.S. account information and to send it to the IRS, whereas under Model 2 IGAs, foreign governments agree to modify their laws to the extent necessary to enable their FFIs to report their U.S. account information directly to the IRS. All six IGAs, in their preambulatory clauses, recognize the partner governments' mutual "desire to conclude an agreement to improve international tax compliance" [5] or, in the case of Switzerland, a "desire to conclude an agreement to improve their cooperation in combating international tax evasion." [6]

All six IGAs mention the Tax Information Exchange Agreements ("TIEAs") that the United States has with these six countries as part of preexisting treaties. See supra notes 5–6. All six IGAs similarly note the need for "an intergovernmental approach to FATCA implementation", or, in the Swiss case, "intergovernmental cooperation to facilitate FATCA implementation". Id.

The five Model 1 IGAs—Canadian, Czech, French, Danish, and Israeli—define "Obligations to Obtain and Exchange Information with Respect to Reportable Accounts" in Article 2. Canadian IGA art. 2; Czech IGA art. 2; French IGA art. 2; Danish IGA art. 2; Israel IGA art. 2. In addition to seeking to enjoin Article 2 in full, (doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at B2, F, J, N, R), Plaintiffs attack the agreement that IGA partners, with respect to each "U.S. Reportable Account" of its FFIs, will report, "the account balance or value ... as of the end of the relevant calendar year or other appropriate reporting period ...." Canadian IGA art. 2, § 2(a)(4); Czech IGA art. 2, § 2(a)(4); French IGA art. 2, § 2(a)(4); Danish IGA art. 2, § 2(a)(4); Israeli IGA art. 2, § 2(a)(4); (see doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at C, G, K, O, S.) If Model 1 partner countries comply with Article 2 as well as the "Time and Manner of Exchange of Information" agreed to in Article 3 and other rules, then their reporting FFIs "shall be treated as complying with, and not subject to withholding under, section 1471", nor will they be required to withhold "with respect to an account held by a recalcitrant account holder" under § 1471. Canadian IGA art. 4, §§ 1, 2; Czech IGA art. 4 §§ 1, 2; French IGA art. 4 §§ 1, 2; Danish IGA art. 4 §§ 1, 2; Israeli IGA art. 4, §§ 1, 2. This is consistent with the Treasury Secretary's power to deem FFIs to be in compliance with § 1471 if statutory purposes are met. 26 U.S.C. § 1471(b)(2)(B).

5 The Israeli IGA is not yet in force. See Israeli IGA art. 10, § 1. However, the Government asserts that the Treasury Secretary has exercised his discretion not to impose § 1471 withholding against Israeli FFIs or recalcitrant account holders.

The Swiss IGA is different in that under its Article 3 —which Plaintiffs seek to enjoin (doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at V)—the Swiss government agrees to "direct all Reporting Swiss Financial Institutions" to report certain information directly to the IRS. Swiss IGA art. 3, § 1. Under Article 5—which Plaintiffs also seek to enjoin (doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at V)—the U.S. government "may make group requests...based on the aggregate information reported to the IRS pursuant to" Article 3. Swiss IGA art. 5, § 1. "Such requests shall be made pursuant to Article 26 of the [Swiss] Convention, as amended by the Protocol," and, "such requests shall not be made prior to the entry into force of the Protocol[.]" Swiss IGA art. 5, § 2. The "Protocol" being "the Protocol Amending the [Swiss] Convention that was signed at Washington on September 23, 2009." Swiss IGA pmbl. That Protocol has not yet been approved by the Senate, and because of that, Article 5 of the Swiss IGA cannot yet be implemented.

C. Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts

The third body of law at issue in this case pertains to the FBAR requirements. U.S. persons who hold a financial account in a foreign country that exceeds $10,000 in aggregate value must file a FBAR with the Treasury Department reporting the account. See 31 U.S.C. § 5314; 31 C.F.R. §§ 1010.306(c), .350. The current FBAR form is FinCEN Form 114. The form has been due by June 30 of each year regarding accounts held during the previous calendar year. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.306(c). Beginning with the 2016 tax year, the due date of the form will be April 15. Surface Transportation and Veterans Health Care Choice Improvement Act of 2015, Pub. L. No. 114–41, § 2006(b)(11), 129 Stat. 443. A person who fails to file a required FBAR may be assessed a civil monetary penalty. 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(A). The amount of the penalty is capped at $10,000 unless the failure was willful. See § 5321(a)(5)(B)(i), (C). A willful failure to file increases the maximum penalty to $100,000 or half the value in the account at the time of the violation, whichever is greater. § 5321(a)(5)(C). In either case, whether to impose the penalty and the amount of the penalty are committed to the Secretary's discretion. See § 5321(a)(5)(A) ("The Secretary of the Treasury may impose a civil money penalty [.]"); § 5321(a)(5)(B) ("[T]he amount of any civil penalty ... shall not exceed" the statutory ceiling). Plaintiffs seek to enjoin enforcement of the willful FBAR penalty under § 5321(a)(5). (Doc. 32–1, Prayer for Relief at Y.) They also ask for an injunction against "the FBAR account–balance reporting requirement" of FinCen Form 114. (Id., Prayer for Relief at EE.)

II. MOTIONS TO AMEND AND DISMISS PURSUANT TO FED. R. CIV. P. 12(B)(1), 15(A)(2)

A. Motion to Dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) for Lack of Standing

1. Standard of Review

Defendants challenge Plaintiffs' standing, which relates to the Court's jurisdiction; therefore, the Court must consider the issue first. Sault Ste. Marie v. United States, 9 Fed.Appx. 457, 460 (6th Cir. 2001) (citing Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 93–94 (1998)). Federal courts may only decide actual cases or controversies. DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 341 (2006). "One element of the case–or–controversy requirement" is that plaintiffs "must establish that they have standing to sue." Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 818 (1997). The standing requirement protects the "time–honored concern about keeping the Judiciary's power within its proper constitutional sphere." Id. at 820. "[S]tanding inquir[ies are] especially rigorous when reaching the merits of the dispute would force [a court] to decide whether an action taken by one of the other two branches of the Federal Government was unconstitutional." Clapper v. Amnest Int'l USA, 133 S. Ct. 1138, 1146 (2013).

6 Standing contains three elements:

> First, plaintiffs must have suffered an injury in fact—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of—the injury has to be fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant, and not the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court. Third, it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.

Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (1992) (citations and internal quotation omitted).

As for the first consideration, a "threatened injury must be certainly impending to constitute injury in fact," and "'[a]llegations of possible future injury' are not sufficient." Clapper, 133 S. Ct at 1147 (quoting Whitmore v. Ark., 495 U.S. 149, 158 (1990)) (emphasis in original). Similarly, "a plaintiff raising only a generally available grievance about government—claiming only harm to his and every citizen's interest in proper application of the Constitution and laws, and seeking relief that no more directly and tangibly benefits him than it does the public at large—does not state an Article III case or controversy." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 573–74; see also id. at 577 (rejecting attempt "to convert the undifferentiated public interest in executive officers' compliance with the law into an 'individual right' vindicable in the courts"). In addition, plaintiffs generally cannot establish standing indirectly when their injury is the result of "the independent action of some third party not before the court." Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 42 (1976); see also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560–61 (same); Shearson v. Holder, 725 F.3d 588, 592 (6th Cir. 2013) (same); Ammex, Inc. v. United States, 367 F.3d 530, 533 (6th Cir. 2004) (finding no standing to challenge excise tax assessed against third party, since "alleged injury ... in the form of increased fuel costs was not occasioned by the Government").

As to the second consideration, "a plaintiff must 'assert his own legal rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties.' " Coyne, 183 F.3d at 494 (quoting Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 499 (1975)); see also United States v. Ovalle, 136 F.3d 1092, 1100–01 (6th Cir. 1998); Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400, 410 (1991). The rare exception to this requirement arises where a plaintiff can "show that (1) it has suffered an injury in fact; (2) it has a close relationship to the third party; and (3) there is some hindrance to the third party's ability to protect his or her own interests." Mount Elliott Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Troy, 171 F.3d 398, 404 (6th Cir. 1999); see also Connection Distrib. Co. v. Reno, 154 F.3d 281, 295 (6th Cir. 1998).

"A plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating standing and must plead its components with specificity." Coyne, 183 F.3d at 494; see also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. A plaintiff "must demonstrate standing separately for each form of relief sought." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 185 (2000). The Supreme Court has "always insisted on strict compliance with this jurisdictional standing requirement." Raines, 521 U.S. at 819. Moreover, "suits challenging, not specifically identifiable Government violations of law, but the particular programs agencies establish to carry out their legal obligations are, even when premised on allegations of several instances of violations of law, rarely if ever appropriate for federal–court adjudication." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 568 (quotation omitted).

2. United States Senator Rand Paul

7 Plaintiff Paul seeks to base legal standing for Counts 1 and 2 on his role as a U.S. Senator, charged with the institutional task of advice and consent under the U.S. Constitution. He contends that the IGAs exceed the proper scope of Executive Branch power and should have been submitted for Senate approval. (Doc. 32–1, at 32–33.) In its Entry and Order Denying Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction, the Court found this insufficient to meet the requirements of standing for three reasons, stating: (1) Plaintiff Paul has alleged no injury to himself as an individual, (2) the institutional injury he alleges is wholly abstract and widely dispersed, and (3) his attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience. (Doc. 30, at 14.)

As Defendants argue, Plaintiffs have failed to cure the deficiencies behind the Court's denial for preliminary injunction. The lone amendment in Plaintiffs' proposed amended complaint, in regards to Plaintiff Paul, states:

> Senator Paul now suffers, and will continue to suffer, the concrete and particularized injury of not being able to vote against the FATCA IGAs, which injury was caused by the unconstitutional and illegal action creating the IGAs, and which injury will be redressed by the IGAs being held beyond constitutional and statutory authority.

(Doc. 32–1, at 34.) This proposed amendment formulaically recites the elements for standing, while reasserting the same basis for standing that the Court previously found insufficient. As Plaintiff Paul's claim of standing is based on a loss of political power, not a loss of any private right, the asserted injury is not "concrete" for purposes of Article III standing. (See doc. 30, at 13) (citing Raines, 512 U.S. at 821.) Moreover, the additional deficiencies previously identified by the Court are likewise, not cured, by the proposed amendment. Senator Paul has neither been authorized to sue on behalf of the Senate nor can he base his standing on a more generalized interest in "vindication of the rule of law." (Doc. 30, at 14 (citation omitted).) A legislator does not hold any legally protected interest in proper application of the law that is distinct from the interest held by every member of the public. Therefore, Plaintiff Paul does not allege a particularized, legally cognizable injury by his claim that the Executive Branch is not adhering to the law. See Campbell v. Clinton, 203 F.3d 19, 22 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (stating Congressional plaintiffs do not "have standing anytime a President allegedly acts in excess of statutory authority").

Plaintiff Paul has an adequate remedy to challenge the reporting requirements and penalties that he opposes by working to repeal these laws through the legislative process. Raines, 521 U.S. at 821.

3. Individual Plaintiffs

The Court previously found that all Plaintiffs lacked standing to sue, except Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel because Defendants conceded he had standing with respect to Counts three and six regarding FBAR requirements. (Doc. 30 at 14–23.) Defendants, in their Motion to Dismiss, assert that they did not make such concession; therefore, the Court will analyze standing as it relates to all individual plaintiffs on all counts. (Doc. 27, at 4 n.1.) This analysis will include three new plaintiffs—Katerina Johnson, Lois Kuettel, and Richard Adams —named in Defendants' proposed Amended Verified Complaint. (Doc. 32–1, at 1.)

The basis for the Court's previous finding for lack of standing was due to no individual plaintiffs alleging they suffered or was about to suffer injury under the FATCA withholding tax. (Doc. 30, at 14.) Neither were any plaintiffs an FFI to which the tax under § 1471 applies nor were they assessed the tax. (Id.) No plaintiffs had even been informed that the IRS intends to assess the recalcitrant account holder withholding tax imposed by § 1471(b). (Id. at 14–15.) Moreover, all Plaintiffs, but Crawford, live in jurisdictions where FFIs are not currently subject to the § 1471(b) withholding tax.

a. Mark Crawford

8 Plaintiff Crawford seeks to invalidate FATCA and the FBAR requirements on three bases: (1) his brokerage firm cannot accept U.S. citizens—including Crawford himself—as clients, due to a relationship with a bank that has a policy against taking on American clients, (see doc. 32–1, at 11–12); (2) he does not want the "financial details of his accounts" disclosed to the U.S. government, (see id., at 12); and (3) he fears "unconstitutionally excessive fines imposed by 31 U.S.C. § 5321 if he willfully fails to file an FBAR." (See id., at 12–13).

Previously, the Court found Plaintiff Crawford lacked standing because standing cannot be established when third parties are the causes of the alleged injuries. (Doc. 30, at 15.) The alleged injury involved his bank's policy against U.S. citizens as clients, and subsequent denial of his application for a brokerage account as possibly affecting Plaintiff Crawford financially. (Doc. 32–1, at 11–12.) The Court found any such harm as not fairly traceable to an action by Defendants, which are not responsible for the decisions of a third party. (Doc. 30, at 15.) In an attempt to cure this deficiency, Plaintiff Crawford identifies a specific denial of his application by Saxo Bank in Copenhagen, Denmark, which was allegedly because he is a U.S. citizen. (Doc. 32–1, at 12.) However, this amendment fails to establish the required connection between the Defendants and the harm. Instead, the amendment provides further explanation of the harm that the Court previously found to be not fairly traceable to an action by Defendants.

Plaintiffs argue that Warth v. Seldon recognized that indirect harm may be sufficient to establish standing. (Doc. 35, at 9 (citing 422 U.S. 490, 504–05).) The Supreme Court in Warth, stated:

> The fact that the harm to petitioners may have resulted indirectly does not in itself preclude standing. When a governmental prohibition or restriction imposed on one party causes specific harm to a third party, harm that a constitutional provision or statute was intended to prevent, the indirectness of the injury does not necessarily deprive the person harmed of standing to vindicate his rights. But it may make it substantially more difficult to meet the minimum requirement of Art. III: to establish that, in fact, the asserted injury was the consequence of the defendants' actions, or that prospective relief will remove the harm.

Id. (citation omitted). While an injury may be indirect, in certain circumstances, the injury must still be "fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant[,]" Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560–61, and "not dependent on speculation about the possible actions of third parties not before the court." Village of Arlington Heights v. Metro. Housing Dev. Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 264 (1977). Although the amendment does identify that Plaintiff Crawford was unsuccessful in his attempt to obtain a brokerage account, the causation of such harm is dependent on speculation of possible third party action by the Court.

In Village of Arlington Heights, an African–American man alleged that he sought and would qualify for a prospective housing complex, and that he would probably move there, as it was closer to his job. 429 U.S. at 264. However, the man alleged that he was unable to move there because he was an African American. Id. The Supreme Court found it compelling that if the Court were to grant the relief sought, there was at least a "substantial probability" the man would be afforded the housing opportunity. Id. (citation omitted). Here, if the Court were to grant the relief sought, the facts as alleged do not suggest that there is a "substantial probability" that Plaintiff Crawford will be successful in his banking endeavors. Rather, it requires the Court to speculate as to the actions of Saxo Bank. The question of whether or not Saxo Bank would grant Plaintiff Crawford's application for a brokerage account cannot be determined with "substantial probability" without speculation as to the general practices and policies of Saxo Bank, if Plaintiff Crawford meets the criteria of the Saxo Bank's general practices and policies for a brokerage account, and any other aspects of Saxo Bank's application process that fall squarely within their discretion.

9 In addition, as the Court previously found, Plaintiff Crawford's discomfort with the information reporting requirements of FATCA does not establish the concrete, particularized harm that confers standing. (Doc. 30, at 15.) Plaintiff Crawford states, "[he] now suffers, and will continue to suffer, concrete and particularized injuries to legally protected interest, which interests are caused by the challenged government actions and will be redressed by the requested relief." (Doc. 32–1, at 13.) However, merely reciting the elements of a cause of action is not sufficient to convey standing. Furthermore, regardless of Plaintiff Crawford's fear of "unconstitutionally excessive fines imposed by 31 U.S.C. § 5321 if he willfully fails to file an FBAR," (id., at 12–13), there was no allegation that he failed to file any FBAR that may have been required, much less the assessment of an "excessive" FBAR penalty, (doc. 30, at 15), nor was there any proposed amendment that spoke to this deficiency.

b. Roger and Katerina Johnson

Plaintiff Roger Johnson states that he is a U.S. citizen who resides in the Czech Republic. (Doc 32–1, at 14.) Plaintiff Katerina Johnson is a citizen of, and resides, in the Czech Republic. (Id., at 16.) They seek to invalidate the Czech IGA, FATCA, and the FBAR reporting requirements because: (1) Plaintiff Katerina Johnson, Plaintiff Roger Johnson's wife, who has been added as a party in the proposed Amended Verified Complaint, "strongly objected to having her financial affairs disclosed to the United States government", leading to the couple's decision to separate their assets, (see id., at 15, 17); (2) they do not want the financial details of their accounts disclosed, (see id., at 16); and (3) they fear "unconstitutionally excessive fines" if they willfully fail to file an FBAR. (See id.).

Previously, the Court found Plaintiff Roger Johnson lacking standing for three reasons. (Doc. 30, at 16.) First, the harm Plaintiff Roger Johnson alleges resulted from his wife's objections to FATCA and the choices they made in response were not traceable to the government. (Id.); see Simon, 426 U.S. at 41–42. Second, Plaintiff Roger Johnson's discomfort with reporting requirements of American law did not support standing, as he did not allege any concrete constitutional injury. (Doc. 30, at 16 (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561).) Third, the prospect of the hypothetical imposition of an excessive fine, if he willfully fails to file a required FBAR, was insufficient. (Doc. 30, at 16 (citing Clapper, 133 S. Ct. at 1477).)

To cure these deficiencies, Plaintiffs Roger Johnson states the value of his accounts subjects him to the reporting requirements of FACTA and FBAR, as well as adds a recurring recitation of the elements of standing, that they "now suffer[ ], and will continue to suffer, concrete and particularized injuries to legally protected interests, which injuries are caused by the challenged government actions and will be redressed by the requested relief." (Doc. 30, at 16.) However, the reporting requirement, itself, does not constitute "an invasion of a legally protected interest" and despite Plaintiffs discomfort with the alleged invasion of their privacy, they still have not identified a constitutionally protected interest for the same reasons identified in the Court's denial of Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction. (Id., at 22–23.) Therefore, the new allegations regarding being subjected to reporting requirements do not cure the aforementioned deficiencies. There is no allegation that they failed to file any FBAR that may have been required, much less that the Government has assessed an "excessive" FBAR penalty against them.

c. Stephen J. Kish

Plaintiff Kish states that he is a dual citizen of the United States and Canada, residing in Toronto, Canada. (Doc. 32–1, at 18.) The Court previously found that Kish's allegation that his wife "strongly opposes the disclosure of her personal financial information" under FATCA to be insufficient to convey standing because his wife is not a plaintiff. (Doc. 30, at 17 (citing Coyne, 183 F.3d at 494).) Plaintiff Kish's proposed amendments include being subjected to reporting requirements and the same recurring recitation of the elements of standing, that he "now suffers, and will continue to suffer, concrete and particularized injuries to legally protected interests, which injuries are caused by the challenged government actions and will be redressed by the requested relief." (Doc. 32–1, at 19.) However, as analyzed above, these proposed amendments do not cure the deficiencies previously identified by the Court to have standing. As before, Plaintiff Kish may not assert claims on his wife's behalf. (Doc. 30, at 17.) The fact that he has suffered some "discord" in his marriage, (id.), is too vague and indirect of a harm to establish standing. Furthermore, as explained above, reluctance to comply with the requirements of American law and theoretical "excessive fines" that would be imposed if he willfully violated the law, do not convey standing. (Doc. 32–1, at 19.)

d. Daniel and Lois Kuettel

10 Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel states that he is a citizen of Switzerland who renounced his U.S. Citizenship in 2012. (Id., at 20.) The Court previously found that the only ongoing injury that Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel alleged was related to a college savings account maintained at a Swiss bank for his daughter, Plaintiff Lois Kuettel, who has been added to this action. (Doc. 32–1, at 22–23; Doc. 30, at 17.) The Court previously inferred a concession by Defendants as to standing for Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel on Counts 3 and 6; however, the Defendants deny such concession and these Counts will be analyzed in the same regard as all other Counts. (See doc. 30, at 18; doc. 34, at 4 n.1 (discussing doc. 16, at PageID# 216).) Plaintiff Lois Kuettel is a tri–citizen of the United States, Switzerland, and the Philippines. (Doc. 32–1, at 23.) There were several issues identified by the Court with regard to standing, for Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel, which will be analyzed in conjunction with Plaintiff Lois Kuettel.

First, the account balance was approximately $8,400, which fell below the $10,000 threshold for FBAR reporting. (Doc. 30, at 17.) This deficiency is cured by alleging that "[t]he account currently has a balance of greater than $10,000." (Doc. 32–1, at 22.) Second, Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel's daughter was only ten years old and not a plaintiff to the case. (Doc. 30, at 17.) This deficiency is also cured as Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel's daughter has been added as a plaintiff, as a minor child, by and through her next friend, Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel. (Doc. 32–1, at 1, 23.) Third, Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel's objection "to filing an FBAR as required by FinCEN because he is not a U.S. citizen and would not do so for his daughter's account" was insufficient because "[t]he relief for any wrong [was] either for Kuettel's daughter to sue her Swiss bank for disparate treatment ..., or to seek recourse in the power of the market moving her accounts to an institution that wishes to compete for her business." (Doc. 30, at 18.)

Plaintiffs Daniel and Lois Kuettel allege that Plaintiff Lois Kuettel cannot avoid FBAR reporting by renouncing her U.S. citizenship and that Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel does not want to violate his daughter's privacy by filing the FBAR on her behalf. (Doc. 32–1, at 23–24.) For these reasons, Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel closed his daughter's account and opened another account in his name. (Id., at 24.) However, as stated in the Court's denial for preliminary injunction, any advantages his daughter might receive by Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel filing an FBAR on his daughter's behalf or by placing the account in his name are based on a bank policy, not the conduct of the Defendants. (Doc. 30, at 18–19.) The failure to reap those advantages is due to the Bank's policies regarding someone like Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel's reluctance to comply with the FBAR requirements, not any action that is fairly traceable to the Government. (See doc. 30, at 18.)

Likewise, any assertion of past harm because Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel was "mostly unsuccessful" in refinancing his mortgage due to FATCA still does not convey standing. Any conceivable harm is attributable to the actions of a third–party foreign bank, not the actions of the Government. Finally, any past harm alleged is not redressable here because Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel renounced his American citizenship and has since obtained acceptable refinancing. (See id., at 18) (citing Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200, 210–11 (1995) ("[T]he fact of past injury ... does nothing to establish a real and immediate threat that he would again suffer similar injury in the future." (quotations omitted)).)

e. Donna–Lane Nelson and Richard Adams

Plaintiff Nelson is a citizen of Switzerland who has renounced her U.S. citizenship. (Doc. 32–1, at 26–27.) She renounced her citizenship because a Swiss bank "offered investment opportunities that were not available to her as an American." (Id., at 27.) She "resents having to provide" "explanations" to Swiss banks that have requested information on her past U.S. citizenship and payments to her daughter, who lives in the United States, and she sees "threats implied by these requests which appear to be prompted by FATCA." (Id., at 28.) Furthermore, she does not want to disclose financial information to the Government, and fears she may be subjected to willful FBAR penalties, despite no such penalty having been imposed or threatened against her. Additionally, she fears the 30% withholding tax may be imposed against her "if her business partner", who is her husband, with whom she holds joint accounts, "opts to become a recalcitrant account holder." (Id., at 28–29.)

11 Previously, the Court found Plaintiff Nelson lacked standing because her allegations of harm stemmed from third–party conduct. (Doc. 30, at 19.) Consistent with the above analyses, fear of hypothetical events that might have befallen her if she had not renounced her citizenship was not sufficient to constitute concrete harm to confer Article III standing. (Id., at 19–20.) The Court further found that discretionary decisions of a foreign bank do not create standing, and without standing, she could not air her "resentment" of U.S. law in this Court. (Id., at 20.) In order to attempt to cure the above deficiencies, Plaintiff Nelson claims that she was "worried that her account would be closed and that she would be unable to open another account with her U.S. citizenship." (Doc. 32–1, at 27.) However, this allegation fails to cure the deficiencies for the same reasons. The discretionary decisions or future discretionary decisions of a foreign bank do not create standing. Furthermore, as identified above, fear of a hypothetical harm that may or may not occur if she had not renounced her citizenship is not sufficient to constitute concrete harm.

Plaintiff Nelson also proposes the following amendment: "[s]he also knew of many accounts of U.S. citizens that had been closed because of a person's ties to the U.S. and because of FATCA and IGAs." (Id.) This amendment fails to cure her standing deficiencies for all the same reasons previously stated. Moreover, knowledge of hypothetical harm to people not a party to this case by a third party cannot confer standing for Plaintiff Nelson.

Plaintiff Adams, Plaintiff Nelson's business partner and husband, is named as a party in the proposed amended complaint, and is a United States citizen currently residing in Switzerland. (Id., at 29.) Plaintiff Adams alleges that he was unable to incorporate the business he shares with his wife in France because he is a U.S. citizen. (Id.) Like his wife, Plaintiff Adams is fearful that he will be unable to continue banking in Switzerland, and anticipates his account may be closed. (Id., at 30.) If such event occurs, the couple will reluctantly consider separating their accounts. (Id.) With a closed account and separated marital accounts, Plaintiff Adams fears that he will be unable to open another account for everyday use. (Id.) Additionally, Plaintiff Adams does not wish to disclose the financial details of the accounts he currently holds. (Id.) Again, like his wife, Plaintiff Adams fears "unconstitutionally excessive fines" due to FBAR reporting requirements. (Id., at 31.)

Plaintiff Adams lacks standing for all the same reasons as his wife. Plaintiff Adams' hypothetical fear of the harms that may be caused by a third party bank are insufficient to confer standing because it does constitute concrete harm. Likewise, as discussed above, the discretionary decisions of a foreign bank do not create standing.

Consistent with the aforementioned proposed amendments, Plaintiffs Nelson and Adams formulaically recite the elements of standing, "[Nelson and Adams] now suffer[ ], and will continue to suffer, concrete and particularized injuries to legally protected interests, which injuries are caused by the challenged government actions and will be redressed by the requested relief." (Id., at 29, 31.) As analyzed above, this is insufficient to convey standing.

f. L. Marc Zell

Plaintiff Zell is a dual citizen of the United States and the State of Israel, currently residing in Israel. (Id., at 31.) In the Court's denial for a preliminary injunction, the Court found that the majority of Plaintiff Zell's allegations concerned the conduct of Israeli banks and his belief that these actions have been unfair to him or his clients, as a practicing attorney. (Doc. 30, at 21.) As stated above, the conduct of third parties—even if related to the banks' compliance with FATCA—does not confer standing to bring suit against Defendants, nor may Plaintiff Zell seek redress on behalf of third parties who have allegedly suffered harm, including unidentified clients not a party to this case.

Moreover, his compliance with a client's wish to avoid the FATCA reporting requirements potentially subjected the client—not Plaintiff Zell—to the risk of imposition of a 30% tax. (See id. (citing 26 U.S.C. § 1471(b)(1)(D).)) Plaintiff Zell had not alleged that he has been assessed a 30% withholding tax under FATCA, nor could he (or his clients) be, because such withholding under § 1471 is not presently being imposed against Israeli FFIs or their recalcitrant account holders. (Doc. 30, at 21–22.) Plaintiff Zell had not had a penalty imposed against him for any willful failure to file an FBAR either. (Id., at 22.)

Therefore, he had suffered no concrete and particularized injury sufficient to convey standing. (Id. (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560).)

12 Plaintiff Zell's newly proposed allegations do not cure the above–mentioned deficiencies. The proposed amendments include statements that his accounts are subject to FATCA and FBAR required reporting, to which he is choosing not to comply. (Doc. 32–1, at 34.) But, again, Plaintiff Zell does not allege that he has been assessed a withholding tax under FATCA, as they are not presently imposed against Israeli recalcitrant account holders, nor has he alleged that he has been assessed a penalty for his willful failure to file an FBAR. Based on the Court's previous holdings, these allegations do not support that Plaintiff Zell has suffered a concrete and particularized injury sufficient to convey standing. Additionally, Plaintiff Zell recites the same statement that he meets the elements of standing, by formulaically reciting such elements, (doc. 32–1, at 35), which the Court finds as insufficient to confer standing.

4. Motion to Amend

Plaintiffs bring their Motion for Leave to Amend pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). “Rule 15(a)(2) provides that leave to amend is to be freely given when justice so requires.” Riverview Health Institute LLC v. Medical Mutual of Ohio, 601 F.3d 505, 520 (6th Cir. 2010). “However, a motion for leave to amend may be denied where there is 'undue delay, bad faith, or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, futility of amendment, etc.' ” Id. (quoting Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182 (1962) (emphasis in original)). A proposed amendment is futile if the amendment could not withstand a motion to dismiss. Riverview Health, 601 F.3d at 520 (citing Rose v. Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co., 203 F.3d 417, 420 (6th Cir. 2000)) (quotations omitted); Thiokel Corp. v. Dep't of Treasury, Revenue Div., 987 F.2d 376, 383 (6th Cir. 1993).

Here, analyzing each Plaintiff individually, the Court finds that none of the Plaintiffs has standing to sue Defendants. No individual Plaintiff has suffered an invasion of a legally protected interest, which is concrete and particularized, and actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Moreover, no alleged injury is fairly traceable to the actions of the Defendants, but rather, the actions of an independent third party. Finally, there are no allegations that it is likely that the alleged injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. See Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560–61. In reaching these holdings, the Court analyzed the proposed Amended Verified Complaint, (doc. 32–1), which could not withstand Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, (doc. 26); therefore, the proposed amendments are futile.

Accordingly, all claims are DISMISSED for lack of subject–matter jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), against all Defendants, without prejudice.

III. MOTION TO DISMISS PURSUANT TO FED. R. CIV. P. 12(B)(6)

In addition to challenging Plaintiffs' standing pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, (id.), challenged Plaintiffs' proposed Amended Verified Complaint, (doc. 32–1), under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. (Doc. 26.) Because the Court has dismissed all claims under Rule 12(b)(1), the Court does not reach Defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) arguments.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File an Amended Verified Complaint, (doc. 32), and the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, (doc. 26), Plaintiffs' Complaint. The captioned case is hereby TERMINATED upon the docket records of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Western Division, at Dayton. [7]

13 DONE and ORDERED in Dayton, Ohio, this Monday, April 25, 2016.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2016 WL 1642968, 117 A.F.T.R.2d 2016-1400, 2016-1 USTC P 50,268

Footnotes

[1] Plaintiffs include Mark Crawford ("Plaintiff Crawford"), Senator Rand Paul ("Plaintiff Paul"), in his official capacity as a member of the United States Senate, Roger Johnson ("Plaintiff Roger Johnson"), Katerina Johnson ("Plaintiff Katerina Johnson"), Daniel Kuettel ("Plaintiff Daniel Kuettel"), Lois Kuettel ("Plaintiff Lois Kuettel"), a minor child, by and through her next friend, Daniel Kuettel, Stephen J. Kish ("Plaintiff Kish"), Donna–Lane Nelson ("Plaintiff Nelson"), Richard Adams ("Plaintiff Adams"), and L. Marc Zell ("Plaintiff Zell"), referred to, collectively, as "Plaintiffs."

[2] Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Canada to Improve International Tax Compliance through Enhanced Exchange of Information under the Convention Between the United States of America and Canada with Respect to Taxes on Income and on Capital, Can.–U.S., Feb. 5, 2014, U.S. Dep't of Treasury, available at https://www.treasury.gov/resource–center/tax–policy/treaties/Documents/FATCA–Agreement–Canada–2–5–2014.pdf [hereinafter Canadian IGA]; Agreement between the United States of America and the Czech Republic to Improve International Tax Compliance and with Respect to the United States Information and Reporting Provisions Commonly Known as the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act, Czech–U.S., Aug. 4, 2014, U.S. Dep't of Treasury, available at https://www.treasury.gov/resource–center/tax–policy/treaties/Documents/FATCA–Agreement–Czech–Republic–8–4–2–14.pdf [hereinafter Czech IGA]; Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the State of Israel to Improve International Tax Compliance and to Implement FATCA, Isr.–U.S., June 30, 2014, U.S. Dep't of Treasury, available at https://www.treasury.gov/resource–center/tax–policy/treaties/Documents/FATCA–Agreement–Israel–6–30–2014.pdf [hereinafter Israeli IGA]; Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the French Republic to Improve International Tax Compliance and to Implement FATCA, Fr.–U.S., Nov. 14, 2013, available at https://www.treasury.gov/resource–center/tax–policy/treaties/Documents/BilateralAgreementUSFranceImplementFATCA [hereinafter French IGA]; Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Kingdom of Denmark to Improve International Tax Compliance and to Implement FATCA, Den.–U.S., Nov. 19, 2012, available at https://www.treasury.gov/resource–center/tax–policy/treaties/Documents/FATCA–Agreement–Denmark–11–19–2012.pdf [hereinafter Danish IGA]; Agreement between the United States of America and Switzerland for Cooperation to Facilitate the Implementation of FATCA, Switz.–U.S., Feb. 14, 2013, available at https://www.treasury.gov/resource–center/tax–policy/treaties/Documents/FATCA–Agreement–Switzerland–2–14–2013.pdf [hereinafter Swiss IGA].

[3] If the country enters into an IGA this provision becomes irrelevant because consent is no longer a legal impediment under foreign law.

[4] Plaintiffs' proposed Amended Verified Complaint contains two "B" sections in the Prayer for Relief; therefore, the first "B" section will be referred to as "B1" and the second "B" section will be referred to as "B2".

[5] Canadian IGA pmbl.; Czech IGA pmbl.; Israel IGA pmbl.; French IGA pmbl.; Danish IGA pmbl.

[6] Swiss IGA pmbl.; see also Convention between the United States and Canada with Respect to Taxes on Income and Capital, Can.–U.S., art. XXVII, Sept. 26, 1980 ("Canadian Convention"); Convention between the United States of America and the Czech Republic for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income and Capital, Czech–U.S., art. 29, Sept. 16, 1993 ("Czech Convention"); Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the State of Israel with Respect to Taxes on Income, Isr.–U.S., art. 29, Nov. 20, 1975 ("Israeli Convention"); Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the French Republic for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income and Capital, Together with Two Related Exchanges of Notes, Fr.–U.S., art. 26(2), Aug. 31, 1994 ("French Convention"); Convention between the United States of America and the Government of the Kingdom of Denmark for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income, Den.–U.S., art. 26, Aug. 19, 1999 ("Danish Convention"); Convention between the United States and the Swiss Confederation for the Avoidance of Double Taxation with Respect to Taxes on Income, Switz.–U.S., art. 26, Oct. 2, 1996 ("Swiss Convention").

[7] The Court acknowledges the assistance of student extern Anthony Graber of the University of Dayton School of Law in the preparation of this opinion.

End of Document

2017 WL 6021420
United States District Court, C.D. California.

UNITED STATES of America
v.
John Van KATWYK

Case No. CV 17–3314–GW(JCx)
|
Filed 10/23/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

James C. Hughes, AUSA—Office of US Attorney, Los Angeles, CA, for United States of America.

PROCEEDINGS: PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR DEFAULT JUDGMENT AGAINST JOHN VAN KATWYK [14]

GEORGE H. WU, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

1 Court and counsel confer. The Tentative circulated and attached hereto, is adopted as the Court's Final Ruling. Plaintiff's Motion is GRANTED.

The Court will allow Defendant to file his motion under Rule 60 within 30 days from the date of this order.

I. Background

United States of America ("Plaintiff") moves for a default judgment against John Van Katwyk ("Defendant"). Plaintiff personally served Defendant with a copy of the Summons and Complaint in this case—regarding Defendant's willful failure to report his interest in foreign financial accounts—on May 19, 2017. See generally Docket No. 1 ("Complaint"); see also Motion for Default Judgment ("MDJ"), Docket No. 14. Defendant has failed to file an answer. See generally MDJ.

Defendant has been a lawful permanent resident of the United States since approximately 1983. See Complaint ¶ 11. In 1992, Defendant obtained ownership and control over an account held with UBS AG in the name of the Calimco Foundation, with an account number ending #2603 ("Calimco Account"). See id. ¶ 12. Between 1993 and 2004, Defendant used the Calimco Account for the payment of his own expenses. See id.

Defendant successfully filed foreign bank account reports ("FBAR") with the United States for the taxable years 1993, 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2003. See id. ¶ 13. For example, on his 1993 FBAR form, Defendant reported his interest in an account with "Credit Lyonnais BK Nederland Par" with a balance between $10,000 and $50,000. See id. In addition, on Defendant's 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2003 FBAR forms, Defendant reported his interest in an account held with Fortis Bank Netherlands with the account number ending #7773, and an account balance between $10,000 and $50,000. See id. However, Defendant failed to report his interest in the Calimco Account on any of the abovementioned FBAR forms. See id.

In 2004, Defendant traveled to Liechtenstein and set up a foreign trust entity named the Shaq Foundation. See id. ¶ 14. Defendant then traveled to Zurich in Switzerland and opened a new account with UBS AG in the name of the Shaq Foundation, with an account number ending #8555 ("Shaq Foundation Account"). See id. All funds held in the Calimco Account were subsequently transferred into the Shaq Foundation Account. See id. During the years 2004 through 2008, while the balance of the Shaq Foundation Account always exceeded $10,000, Defendant failed to file FBAR forms and report the Shaq Foundation Account's existence to his U.S. income tax return preparer. See id. ¶¶ 15, 17. Throughout those five years, Defendant used funds from the Shaq Foundation Account to pay for his personal expenditures. See id. ¶ 16.

During the time of Defendant's failure to file an FBAR, the balance of the Shaq Foundation Account was at least $800,432. See id. ¶ 22. On June 12, 2015, the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") assessed an FBAR penalty in the amount of $80,043 against Defendant for his willful failure to report his interest in foreign financial accounts in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5314. See id. ¶ 23. On the same date, the IRS sent Defendant notice and demand for payment. See id. Despite being issued notice and demand for payment, Defendant failed to make any payments against his FBAR penalty for the 2008 taxable year. See id. ¶ 24. As of December 2, 2016, the total outstanding balance, consisting of the FBAR penalty, penalties for late payment, and statutory interest, totaled $88,341.16. See id. ¶ 25.

II. Legal Standard

2 The procedural prerequisites to the entry of default judgment are set out in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("FRCP") 55 and Local Rule 55–1. These prerequisites require that a party moving for default judgment submit a declaration or otherwise provide information (1) indicating when and against which party default has been entered; (2) identifying the pleading as to which default has been entered; (3) indicating whether the defaulting party is an infant, or incompetent person, and if so, whether that person is represented by a general guardian, committee, conservator or other representative; (4) stating that the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, 50 U.S.C. App. § 521, does not apply; and (5) affirming that notice has been served on the defaulting party, if required by Rule 55(b)(2). See FRCP 55(b)(2); C.D. Cal. L.R. 55–1.

Once the procedural prerequisites have been satisfied, entry of default judgment is left to the trial court's sound discretion. Aldabe v. Aldabe, 616 F.2d 1089, 1092–93 (9th Cir. 1980); Landstar Ranger, Inc. v. Parth Enters., Inc., 725 F.Supp.2d 916, 919 (C.D. Cal. 2010). The Ninth Circuit has held that a district court may consider the following factors in exercising its discretion to award a default judgment:

> (1) the possibility of prejudice to the plaintiff; (2) the merits of plaintiff's substantive claim, (3) the sufficiency of the complaint, (4) the sum of money at stake in the action; (5) the possibility of a dispute concerning material facts; (6) whether the default was due to excusable neglect; and (7) the strong policy underlying the [FRCP] favoring decisions on the merits.

Eitel v. McCool, 782 F.2d 1470, 1471–72 (9th Cir. 1986). "In applying this discretionary standard, default judgments are more often granted than denied." PepsiCo v. Triunfo–Mex, Inc., 189 F.R.D. 431, 432 (C.D. Cal. 1999). Such judgments are proper, for instance, where defendant has never appeared in the action, his failure to defend is unexplained, and the plaintiff would suffer prejudice if the default were not entered. See Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Macino, 710 F.2d 363, 367 (7th Cir. 1983). Further, a party seeking a default judgment must state a claim upon which it may recover. See PepsiCo, Inc., v. Cal. Sec. Cans, 238 F.Supp.2d 1172, 1172 (C.D. Cal. 2002). After a default has been entered by the court clerk, the well-pleaded factual allegations of the complaint are taken as true, except for those allegations relating to damages. TeleVideo Sys., Inc. v. Heidenthal, 826 F.2d 915, 917 (9th Cir. 1987); Discovery Commc'ns, Inc. v. Animal Planet, Inc., 172 F.Supp.2d. 1282, 1288 (C.D. Cal. 2001). Where damages are liquidated (i.e., ascertainable from definite figures contained in the documentary evidence or in detailed affidavits), default judgment may be entered without a damages hearing. See Dundee Cement Co. v. Howard Pipe & Concrete Prods., Inc., 722 F.2d 1319, 1323 (7th Cir. 1983); Allergan Inc. v. Mira Life Grp. Inc., No. SACV 04–36 JVS (MLGx), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26881, at *9 (C.D. Cal. June 9, 2004). The Court need not make detailed findings of fact in the event of default. See Adriana Int'l Corp. v. Thoeren, 913 F.2d 1406, 1414 (9th Cir. 1990).

III. Analysis

A. Plaintiff Has Met the Procedural Requirements for Default Judgment

Plaintiff's application for default judgment complies with FRCP 55(a) and (b)(2), as well as Local Rule 55–1. First, Plaintiff has stated, by declaration, that Plaintiff filed a request for default against Defendant with the Clerk of the Court on August 8, 2017 and default was entered by the Clerk on August 9, 2017. Declaration of James C. Hughes ("Hughes Decl."), MDJ, ¶ 9. Second, Plaintiff's Complaint is the pleading on which default was entered. Hughes Decl. ¶¶ 2–3. Third, Plaintiff declared that Defendant is not an infant based on correspondence containing Defendant's date of birth. Hughes Decl. ¶¶ 15–16. Plaintiff also declared that Defendant is not incompetent based on: (a) Plaintiff's ignorance of any proceeding to adjudicate competency or prior judicial determinations of incompetency; (b) Plaintiff's ignorance of any guardian or other representative appointed to act on behalf of Defendant; and (c) the absence of any obvious outward signs of mental incompetency when speaking with Defendant on the phone. Hughes Decl. ¶¶ 15, 17. Fourth, Plaintiff informs the Court that the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act does not apply based on a copy of the results of a search for Defendant in the Department of Defense Manpower Data Center. Hughes Decl. ¶ 18. Finally, under FRCP 55(b)(2) Plaintiff is not required to serve Defendant with written notice of the application because Defendant failed to appear personally or by a representative. FRCP 55(b)(2).

B. Eitel Factors Weigh in Favor of Awarding Plaintiff Default Judgment

3 In exercising its discretion to award a default judgment, this Court considers the Eitel factors. The first six Eitel factors appear to weigh in favor of granting Plaintiff's Motion for Default Judgment. The seventh factor tends to weigh against default judgment since it always favors adjudication on the merits. However, the seventh factor is not dispositive in and of itself. Consequently, on balance, the Court would GRANT Plaintiff's request.

1. Plaintiff Will Suffer Prejudice If Motion for Default Judgment Is Denied

With respect to the first Eitel factor, Plaintiff has demonstrated that prejudice will result in the absence of entry of a default judgment against Defendant because his failure to participate in this action would leave Plaintiff without apparent recourse for recovery. See Roberts v. Cal. Dep't of Corr., No. 2:13–CV–07461–ODW, 2014 WL 879808, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 5, 2014) (citing Cal. Sec. Cans, 238 F.Supp.2d at 1177) ("There is a possibility of prejudice to the plaintiff when denying default judgment would leave the plaintiff without an alternate recourse for recovery."). The evidence before this Court establishes that Defendant has been assessed a civil FBAR penalty (along with accumulated penalties and interest) of $88,341.16. Hughes Decl., Exh. D. As a result, Plaintiff will be prejudiced if this court does not reduce the aforementioned civil penalty to judgment because Plaintiff will have no other recourse for recovering that penalty.

2. Substantive Merits and Sufficiency of the Complaint

The second and third Eitel factors require that a plaintiff "state a claim on which the [plaintiff] may recover." Cal. Sec. Cans, 238 F.Supp.2d at 1175 (quoting Kloepping v. Fireman's Fund, No. C 94–2684 THE, 1996 WL 75314, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 13, 1996) (citing Danning v. Lavine, 572 F.2d 1386, 1388 (9th Cir. 1978). On entry of a default, well-plead allegations in the complaint regarding liability are generally deemed true. See Geddes v. United Fin. Corp., 559 F.2d 557, 560 (9th Cir. 1977); see also Alan Neuman Prods., Inc. v. Albright, 862 F.2d 1388, 1392 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding that "facts which are not established by the pleadings of the prevailing party, or claims which are not well-pleaded, are not binding and cannot support the [default] judgment").

In the instant case, Plaintiff sufficiently stated a claim on which it can recover. To prevail on its Complaint to reduce an FBAR penalty to judgment, Plaintiff must prove that Defendant: 1) is a United States citizen or resident; 2) who has an interest in, or signature or other authority over, a foreign bank, securities, or other financial account; 3) in which the aggregate balance of such account exceeded, at any time during the calendar year, $10,000; and 4) failed to report that interest to the IRS by June 30 of the year following any calendar year. See 31 C.F.R. §§ 1010.350, 1010.306(c); 31 U.S.C. § 5314; United States v. Bohanec, No. 2:15–CV–4347 DDP (FFMx), 2016 WL 7167860, at *3 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 8, 2015) ("United States citizens who have a financial interest in, or signature authority over, a foreign bank account are required to file a [FBAR]."). If any person willfully fails [1] to timely report interest in a foreign bank, securities, or other financial account to the IRS, then the maximum penalty shall be increased to the greater of either $100,000 or fifty percent of the balance in the account at the time of the violation. 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C)–(D). Here, Plaintiff has sufficiently alleged that: (1) Defendant is a permanent resident of the United States; (2) Defendant is the beneficial owner of the Shaq Foundation Account held with UBS AG in Switzerland during the tax year 2008; and (3) the aggregate balance of the Shaq Foundation Account exceeded $10,000 during the tax year 2008. See Complaint ¶¶ 11, 14–16. Accordingly, Defendant was required to annually file an FBAR to report his interest in the Shaq Foundation Account for each year the account existed and contained an amount greater than $10,000. See 31 U.S.C. § 5314; 31 C.F.R. § 1010.305(c). Defendant failed to make any such report or filing on or before June 30, 2009, with respect to the 2008 tax year. See id. ¶ 17. Consequently, Defendant is liable for the FBAR violation for the tax year 2008.

4 Furthermore, Plaintiff plead facts sufficient to establish that Defendant's failure to report his foreign bank account constituted a willful violation. A reckless disregard to statutory duty may be sufficient to satisfy willfulness. United States v. McBride, 908 F.Supp.2d 1186, 1204 (D. Utah 2012) (" 'willfulness' may be satisfied by establishing the individual's reckless disregard of statutory duty ...."). In a case concerning a failure to report certain information to the IRS, conduct can be classified as willful if the defendant failed to investigate the legality of the conduct. Id. at 1209. Here, Defendant was clearly aware of FBAR reporting requirements as he had made previous disclosures to the IRS regarding his other foreign bank accounts. Furthermore, if Defendant was unaware of his obligation to report the Shaq Foundation Account (which he failed to even disclose to his US income tax return preparer), he recklessly ignored the risk that the conduct is illegal by failing to investigate the conduct's legality. The second and third Eitel factors thus weigh in favor of granting default judgment.

3. Sum of Money at Stake in the Action

The fourth Eitel factor requires the Court to weigh the amount of money at stake against the seriousness of Defendant's conduct. See Cal. Sec. Cans, 238 F.Supp.2d at 1176; see also Eitel, 782 F.2d at 1471–72. "Default Judgment is disfavored where the sum of money at stake is too large or unreasonable in relation to defendant's conduct." Vogel v. Rite Aid Corp., 992 F.Supp.2d 998, 1012 (C.D. Cal. 2014). Here, Defendant's willful failure to disclose his foreign bank account for five consecutive calendar years constituted an egregious violation of United States law and could have subjected him to a penalty of more than $400,000—half the balance of the account at the time of the violation. However, Plaintiff seeks a judgment only of $88,341.16, including late fees and interest. While the amount Plaintiff seeks is significant, the Court would find that in light of the potential amount Defendant could have been required to pay, the amount is reasonable.

4. Possibility of Dispute Concerning Material Facts

The fifth Eitel factor requires the Court to consider whether it is likely a dispute exists as to any material facts in the case. See Eitel, 782 F.2d at 1471–72. "Where a plaintiff's complaint is well-pleaded and the defendant makes no effort to properly respond, the likelihood of disputed facts is very low." See United States v. Yermian, No. SACV 15–0820–DOC (RAOx), 2016 WL 1399519, at * 3 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 18, 2016) (emphasis added); see also Landstar Ranger, 725 F.Supp.2d at 921. Additionally, upon default, the factual allegations of the complaint, except those relating to the amount of damages, will be taken as true. TeleVideo Systems Inc., 826 F.2d at 917.

Here, the allegations in the Complaint are well-pleaded and straightforward. In response to the Complaint, Defendant mailed unfiled pleadings to the office of counsel for the United States ("Unfiled Pleadings"). In the Unfiled Pleadings, Defendant contends that his "actions were never willful," and that the two year statute of limitations had run out. See MDJ at 33. However, Defendant failed to file his answer with the court prior to August 9, 2017—when the Court Clerk entered default. He appears to have attempted to file the materials on September 5, 2017, but because default had already been entered, the Court rejected the filing. See Docket No. 16. Once a Court Clerk enters default, a defendant's right to appear in the action or to present evidence is cut off. Clifton v. Tomb, 21 F.2d 893, 897 (4th Cir. 1927). The only procedure available to Defendant is to file a motion to set aside the default under FRCP 55(c), and Defendant has failed to file such a motion. O'Connell & Stevenson, Rutter Group Prac. Guide: Federal Civ. Pro. Before Trial § 6:43, at 6–10 (The Rutter Group 2017). Accordingly, the facts alleged by Plaintiff were sufficient to establish its claim of a FBAR violation and the fifth factor weighs in favor of granting Plaintiff's Motion for Default Judgment.

5. Possibility of Excusable Neglect

5 In respect to the sixth Eitel factor, the possibility of excusable neglect in the instant case is remote. The underlying reason for this factor is to uphold due process by requiring that all interested parties be given notice reasonably calculated to apprise them of the pendency of the action, and be afforded opportunity to present their objections before a judgment is rendered. See Philip Morris USA, Inc. v. Castworld Prods., Inc., 219 F.R.D. 494, 500 (C.D. Cal. 2003). Here, Plaintiff personally served Defendant with a copy of the Summons and Complaint. See generally Docket No. 9. Furthermore, Plaintiff has repeatedly advised and instructed Defendant of his need to file an answer with the Court. Hughes Decl. at ¶¶ 5, 8, 10. Despite such notice, Defendant failed to file an answer presenting his objections. Therefore, the Court would find that Defendant was provided reasonable notice and that the possibility of excusable neglect is unlikely.

6. Strong Policy Favoring Decisions on the Merits

The seventh Eitel factor emphasizes that "cases should be decided upon their merits whenever reasonably possible." Eitel, 782 F.2d at 1472. However, "this preference, standing alone, is not dispositive." Id. "Defendant's failure to answer Plaintiff's Complaint makes a judgment on the merits impractical, if not impossible." Cal. Sec. Cans, 238 F.Supp.2d at 1177. Accordingly, the inability to comply with the strong policy favoring deciding cases on the merits does not preclude the Court from entering default judgment against Defendant.

IV. Plaintiff Is Entitled to a Penalty

Plaintiff's Motion for Default Judgment "must also prove all damages sought in the complaint." Dr. JKL Ltd. v. HPC IT Educ. Ctr., 749 F.Supp.2d 1038, 1046 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (citing Philip Morris USA, Inc., 219 F.R.D. 498). Rule 55 does not require the court to conduct a hearing on damages, so long as it ensures there is an adequate basis for the damages awarded in the default judgment. Action S.A. v. Marc Rich & Co. Inc., 951 F.2d 504, 508 (2d Cir. 1991). "The Court considers Plaintiff's declarations, calculations, and other documentation of damages in determining if the amount at stake is reasonable." Truong Giang Corp. v. Twinstar Tea Corp., No. 06–CV–03594, 2007 WL 1545173, at *12 (N.D. Cal. May 29, 2007).

Under 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(A), a civil monetary penalty may be imposed on individuals who fail to file a required FBAR. U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(A). Here, Plaintiff sufficiently addressed and established all the elements necessary to demonstrate a violation. Plaintiff seeks to reduce a penalty of $88,341.16[2] to judgment due to Defendant's failure to report a required FBAR and for late payments authorized by 31 U.S.C. § 3717. Accordingly, the Court would find that Plaintiff is as a matter of law entitled to the penalty, and that the amount requested is reasonable.

V. Conclusion

The Court would GRANT Plaintiff's Application for Default Judgment against Defendant and award Plaintiff a total of $88,341.16. However, as for the interest, costs, expenses, and any additional penalties, the Court would allow Plaintiff to enumerate those costs in a supplemental filing.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 6021420, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-6380

Footnotes

[1] "If a foreign account holder 'willfully' failed to report the account on an FBAR, the maximum penalty is increased from $10,000 to the greater of $100,000 or fifty percent of the balance in the account at the time of violation." Bohanec, 2016 WL 7167860, at *3 (citing 31 U.S.C. §§ 5321(a)(5)(C), (D)(ii)).

[2] Interest and penalties have accrued on the assessed FBAR penalty of $80,043. As of December 2, 2016, the total outstanding balance, consisting of the FBAR penalty, penalties for late payment under 31 U.S.C. § 3717(e)(2), and statutory interest, totaled $88,341.16. 31 U.S.C. § 3717(e)(2); Hughes Decl. ¶ 14, Exh. D.

End of Document

2017 WL 401228
United States District Court,
E.D. Wisconsin.

Milo KENTERA and Lois Kentera, Plaintiffs,
v.
UNITED STATES of America, Defendant.

Case No. 16–CV–1020–JPS
|
Signed 01/30/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Joseph M. Bray, Lynn K. Ching, Anthony V. Diosdi, Moskowitz LLP, San Francisco, CA, for Plaintiffs.

Martin M. Shoemaker, United States Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Defendant.

ORDER

J.P. Stadtmueller, U.S. District Judge

1 Plaintiffs, Milo and Lois Kentera, filed a complaint against the United States, alleging violations of the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA"), 5 U.S.C. § 701 et seq., and their due process rights under the Fifth Amendment. (Docket #1). This action arises from Plaintiffs' failure to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR") for several tax years despite having assets that should have been identified in that form. The Internal Revenue Service assessed civil penalties against Plaintiffs for these failures. Plaintiffs challenge those penalties, arguing that they are void because Plaintiffs had reasonable cause for their failure to file the FBARs. They further assert that the IRS' decision to impose the penalties was arbitrary and capricious, in violation of the APA. The government moved to dismiss the complaint, asserting that it has not waived its sovereign immunity with respect to Plaintiffs' claims and, even if it had, venue is not proper in this District. (Docket #15). The motion is fully briefed, and, for the reasons stated below, it will be granted on the basis of sovereign immunity.[1]

1. APPLICABLE LAW

1.1 Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b) provides for dismissal of complaints which fail to state a viable claim for relief or for improper venue. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(3) and (6). To state a viable claim, a complaint must provide "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). In other words, the complaint must give "fair notice of what the ... claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007) (citation omitted). The allegations must "plausibly suggest that the plaintiff has a right to relief, raising that possibility above a speculative level[.]" Kubiak v. City of Chicago, 810 F.3d 476, 480 (7th Cir. 2016) (citation omitted). In reviewing Plaintiffs' complaint, the Court is required to "accept as true all of the well-pleaded facts in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff." Id. at 480–81.

1.2 Sovereign Immunity

"It is axiomatic that the United States may not be sued without its consent and that the existence of consent is a prerequisite for jurisdiction." United States v. Mitchell, 463 U.S. 206, 212 (1983). Waivers of sovereign immunity are narrowly construed because the immunity protects the public fisc. See West v. Gibson, 527 U.S. 212, 222 (1999); Nelson v. Miller, 570 F.3d 868, 883–84 (7th Cir. 2009). The court must strictly construe the scope of any alleged waiver in favor of the sovereign. Lane v. Pena, 518 U.S. 187, 192 (1996). A court may "not enlarge the waiver beyond what the language [of the statute] requires." Library of Congress v. Shaw, 478 U.S. 310, 318 (1986) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Consent to suit cannot be implied, and ambiguities are construed in favor of immunity. See United States v. Nordic Village, 503 U.S. 30, 34 (1992). In this Circuit, a sovereign immunity defense, if sustained, shows that the plaintiff failed to state a claim; it is not a matter affecting the court's subject-matter jurisdiction. Collins v. United States, 564 F.3d 833, 837–38 (7th Cir. 2009). The plaintiff, as the party seeking to breach the government's sovereign immunity, bears the burden to show that a waiver exists. See Macklin v. United States, 300 F.3d 814, 819 (7th Cir. 2002); Cole v. United States, 657 F.2d 107, 109 (7th Cir. 1981).

2. RELEVANT FACTS

2 The relevant facts are drawn from Plaintiffs' complaint. The Bank Secrecy Act ("BSA"), 31 U.S.C. § 5311 et seq., requires U.S. citizens to keep records and file reports when they "mak[e] a transaction or maintai[n] a relation with a foreign financial agency." 31 U.S.C. § 5314(a). The report must be made in an FBAR, which is IRS Form TD F 90–22.1. The FBAR must be filed on or before June 30 of the year following the calendar year for which the report is made. If the individual fails to comply with the requirements of Section 5314, the BSA provides that civil penalties may be imposed. Id. § 5321(a)(5). For non-willful violations, the penalty cannot exceed $10,000. Id. § 5321(a)(5)(B)(I).

In 1984, Plaintiff Milo Kentera inherited money located in a foreign bank account at Banque Cantonale de Geneve ("BCGE"). He added his wife's name to the BCGE account shortly thereafter. The balance in the account increased dramatically in 2007 due to the sale of Milo Kentera's parents' property in Montenegro, certain proceeds of which were distributed to Milo and deposited in the BCGE account.

Plaintiffs have consistently disclosed the BCGE account on their federal income tax returns since 1984. However, in 2006 their accountant failed to prepare or file an FBAR in connection with their federal income tax return. Their accountant for tax years 2007, 2008, and 2009 made the same error, despite having information from which he could have discovered the existence of the BCGE account. In 2010, a third accountant acknowledged the existence of the BCGE account in Plaintiffs' return, but again seems to have failed to prepare or file an FBAR.

In February 2011, the IRS announced a federal amnesty program for taxpayers with foreign bank accounts—the 2011 Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Initiative ("OVDI"). To participate, taxpayers were required to amend their tax returns and file FBARs for tax years 2003–2010. OVDI participants were required to pay all delinquent taxes, interest, and penalties, and, under this program, taxpayers were subject to a 25% penalty on the highest aggregate account balance on their previously undisclosed accounts during those years.

In around September 2011, Plaintiffs applied to the OVDI program. They amended their tax returns for 2006–2010 to include omitted income and filed completed FBARs for 2005–2010. In August 2013, the IRS provided Plaintiffs with a Form 906, Closing Agreement on Final Determination Covering Specific Matters(the "Closing Agreement"). The Closing Agreement provided, in relevant part, that Plaintiffs would be liable under the tax code for a miscellaneous penalty of $90,092. Plaintiffs withdrew from the OVDI program the next month.

After Plaintiffs withdrew from the program, IRS agent Kimberly Nguyen ("Nguyen"), who works in Milwaukee, examined the matter and recommended that Plaintiffs be assessed non-willful FBAR penalties pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5). The amounts of the penalties were as follows:

> (1) Lois Kentera: $500 for calendar year 2006; and $2,500 per year for calendar years 2007, 2008, 2009, and 2010, for a total penalty of $10,500; and
>
> (2) Milo Kentera: $500 for calendar year 2006; and $10,000 per year for calendar years 2007, 2008, 2009, and 2010, for a total penalty of $40,500.

On September 17, 2014, the government mailed each Plaintiff a letter advising that the IRS was proposing assessment of these penalties.

On or about December 14, 2014, Plaintiffs' counsel communicated with Nguyen, protesting the proposed penalties. He also had a conference with her sometime thereafter. By letter dated April 22, 2015, the government mailed Milo Kentera a letter of an "appeals determination," upholding the IRS' proposed FBAR penalties. A similar letter was sent to Lois Kentera on April 29, 2015.

3 In their complaint, Plaintiffs assert that the government was wrong to assess these penalties. First, Plaintiffs contend that the BSA prohibits the imposition of an FBAR penalty if the violation was "due to reasonable cause." 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(B)(ii)(I). According to Plaintiffs, reasonable cause for their violations exists because the fault lay with their various accountants. The government disregarded this defense, and Plaintiffs believe this was a violation of their due process rights under the Fifth Amendment. Second, Plaintiffs allege that because the IRS wrongfully rejected their reasonable cause defense under the BSA, its assessment of the penalties was arbitrary and capricious, in violation of the APA. See 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A) (a district court may set aside agency action that is "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law"). Plaintiffs request that the Court find that the government abused its discretion in assessing these penalties and ask that the Court declare the penalties void.

3. DISCUSSION

The government contends that Plaintiffs have failed to state any claims against it because it has not waived its sovereign immunity with respect to Plaintiffs' claims. The parties' dispute focuses on the APA, which provides a waiver of sovereign immunity when two prerequisites are met.[2] First, the action in question must "see[k] relief other than money damages and stat[e] a claim that an agency or an officer or employee thereof acted or failed to act in an official capacity or under color of legal authority." See 5 U.S.C. § 702. Second, the plaintiff must show that (1) review of the agency action in question is authorized by a substantive statute or (2) review is made of a "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court." Id. § 704; Bowen v. Massachusetts, 487 U.S. 879, 891–93 (1988); Consol. Edison of N.Y. v. U.S. Dep't of Energy, 247 F.3d 1378, 1382 (Fed. Cir. 2001) ("The Supreme Court has explained that a litigant may invoke the APA as a waiver of sovereign immunity, thereby invoking district court jurisdiction, if the litigant can satisfy both ... § 702 and ... § 704.") (parentheticals omitted); see also Blagojevich v. Gates, 519 F.3d 370, 372 (7th Cir. 2008). Both parties agree that none of the substantive law on which Plaintiffs rely contains a waiver of sovereign immunity. (Docket #16 at 4); (Docket #17 at 3).

Nevertheless, the government asserts that Plaintiffs have adequate remedies outside the instant suit. (Docket #16 at 4). In the government's view, Plaintiffs can pay some or all of the penalties and then file a refund suit under the Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1491, or the Little Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(2). Id. at 4–5. Such a suit would permit Plaintiffs to raise the reasonable cause defense that forms the basis of this action. Id. at 5. Alternatively, if Plaintiffs simply decline to pay the penalties, they could assert the reasonable cause defense during a suit brought by the government to reduce the penalties to judgment pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 5321(b)(2). Id.[3]

4 Plaintiffs rejoin that the government's proposed alternative avenues are not adequate substitutes for APA review. (Docket #17). The availability of remedies under the Tucker Act and Little Tucker Act turn on different prerequisites, so the Court will treat them in turn.

3.1 The Tucker Act and Money Mandating Statutes

First, there is the Tucker Act, which established the Court of Federal Claims in order to provide a forum for certain monetary claims against the United States. Under the Tucker Act, the Court of Federal Claims has "jurisdiction to render judgment upon any claim against the United States, founded either upon the Constitution, or any Act of Congress or any regulation of an executive department, or upon any express or implied contract with the United States, or for liquidated or unliquidated damages in cases not sounding in tort." See 28 U.S.C. § 1491 (a)(1). The Tucker Act waives the government's sovereign immunity for such actions. United States v. Mitchell, 463 U.S. 206, 212–18 (1983); United States v. Testan, 424 U.S. 392, 397–98 (1976). Thus, says the government, Plaintiffs could pay some of the penalties and seek a refund under the Tucker Act.

There is an additional wrinkle, however, since the Tucker Act only confers jurisdiction and itself creates no substantive rights. Testan, 424 U.S. at 398. As such, to assert a claim in the Court of Federal Claims under the Tucker Act, Plaintiffs would need a source of substantive law that creates for them a damages remedy. Mitchell, 463 U.S. at 216; Todd v. United States, 386 F.3d 1091, 1094 (Fed. Cir. 2004). This is referred to as the requirement for a "money-mandating" source of law. See Roth v. United States, 378 F.3d 1371, 1384 (Fed. Cir. 2004) ("Because the Tucker Act itself does not provide a substantive cause of action, a plaintiff must find elsewhere a money mandating source upon which to base a suit.").

According to Plaintiffs, neither the BSA nor the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment qualify. (Docket #17 at 6–7). First, although the BSA provides the means for the government to enforce FBAR requirements, it says nothing about the taxpayer's ability to seek repayment of unauthorized penalties. (Docket #17 at 6). Second, the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment has, as Plaintiffs point out, been flatly held not to be money mandating. Id. at 7; Smith v. United States, 709 F.3d 1114, 1116 (Fed. Cir. 2013) ("The Due Process clauses of both the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments do not mandate the payment of money, and thus do not provide a cause of action under the Tucker Act.").

Yet Plaintiffs acknowledge that this is not the end of the story. Rather, the Court of Federal Claims could hear Plaintiffs' claims—statutory, constitutional, or otherwise—under an "illegal exaction" theory. Consol. Edison Co. of N.Y., 247 F.3d at 1384. An illegal exaction occurs when money is "improperly paid, exacted, or taken from the claimant" in violation of the Constitution or some statutory power. See Eastport S.S. Corp. v. United States, 178 Ct. Cl. 599, 605 (1967). The classic illegal exaction claim is a tax refund suit alleging that taxes have been improperly collected or withheld by the government. See, e.g., City of Alexandria v. United States, 737 F.2d 1022, 1028 (Fed. Cir. 1984). As Plaintiffs admit, "[a]lthough the [Court of Federal Claims] ordinarily lacks jurisdiction over due process claims under the Tucker Act, cases have held that [it] does have jurisdiction over illegal exaction claims when the exaction is based upon an asserted statutory power." (Docket #17 at 7) (citing Gahagan v. United States, 72 Fed. Cl. 157, 163 (2006); Aerolineas Argentinas v. United States, 77 F.3d 1564, 1573 (Fed. Cir. 1996)). Here, that statutory power would be the BSA itself.

5 Plaintiffs argue, however, that even in illegal exaction cases, a money-mandating source of law is still required to create jurisdiction under the Tucker Act. (Docket #17 at 7–8) (citing Starr Int'l Co., Inc. v. United States, 121 Fed. Cl. 428, 464 (2015)). The government disagrees. It claims that either a money-mandating statute or an illegal exaction, but not both, are required to bring a claim in the Court of Federal Claims. (Docket #19 at 7) (citing Aerolineas Argentinas, 77 F.3d at 1579).

The Court need not resolve the parties' disagreement on this question because it finds that the BSA qualifies as money-mandating. To prove that a statute is money-mandating, it "must be such that [it] 'can fairly be interpreted as mandating compensation by the Federal Government for the damage sustained.' " Jones v. United States, 122 Fed. Cl. 490, 508 (2015) (quoting United States v. White Mountain Apache Tribe, 537 U.S. 465, 472 (2003)); Testan, 424 U.S. at 401–02. The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit explained in Norman that > [t]o invoke Tucker Act jurisdiction over an illegal exaction claim, a claimant must demonstrate that the statute or provision causing the exaction itself provides, either expressly or by "necessary implication," that "the remedy for its violation entails a return of money unlawfully exacted." Cyprus Amax Coal Co. v. United States, 205 F.3d 1369, 1373 (Fed. Cir. 2000) (concluding that the Tucker Act provided jurisdiction over an illegal exaction claim based upon the Export Clause of the Constitution because the language of that clause "leads to the ineluctable conclusion that the clause provides a cause of action with a monetary remedy").

Norman v. United States, 429 F.3d 1081, 1095 (Fed. Cir. 2005).

It is not the case, as Plaintiffs believe, that the BSA is not money-mandating simply because it does not expressly provide the taxpayer a remedy for an unauthorized FBAR penalty. Rather, the absence of money-mandating language is not fatal to jurisdiction so long as a monetary remedy can be implied for an illegal exaction under the relevant statute. White Mountain Apache Tribe, 537 U.S. at 477 ("To the extent that the Government would demand an explicit provision for money damages to support every claim that might be brought under the Tucker Act, it would substitute a plain and explicit statement standard for the less demanding requirement of fair inference that the law was meant to provide a damages remedy for breach of a duty."). In other words, "[the court] asks what would be the explicit or implicit remedy for the Government's violation of the statute." Northern California Power Agency v. United States, 122 Fed. Cl. 111, 115–16 (2015). If, "by necessary implication, the remedy would be a return of the payments that were assessed ... in violation of [the statute]," jurisdiction exists. Id. Thus, the court in Greene found that a monetary remedy could be fairly implied for an illegal offset against a tax refund made pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3720A because the taxpayer would have no other recourse for return of those funds. Greene v. United States, 124 Fed. Cl. 636, 641 (2015). The same logic held sway in Starr, where the court found that if jurisdiction did not exist, the government "could nationalize a private corporation, as it did to AIG, without fear of any claims or reprisals." Starr, 121 Fed. Cl. at 464–65.

The analysis is the same with respect to the BSA. The statute authorizes the government to impose a penalty for failure to file an FBAR, unless the failure was due to reasonable cause. 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(B)(ii)(I). If there was no failure to file or if the failure was due to reasonable cause, there should be no penalty and any money the government receives as payment of the penalty was illegally exacted in violation of the statute. Though the BSA admittedly lacks money-mandating language, it is by necessary implication that the taxpayer has a monetary remedy—the return of his illegally exacted funds—when the statute is violated. Norman, 429 F.3d at 1095; N. California Power Agency, 122 Fed. Cl. at 116; White Mountain Apache Tribe, 537 U.S. at 477. As a result, Plaintiffs could bring their statutory and constitutional claims in the Court of Federal Claims pursuant to the Tucker Act. This, in turn, compels the Court to conclude that APA review is unavailable here, since Plaintiffs have an adequate remedy to replace it.[4]

3.2 The Little Tucker Act

6 Plaintiffs could not only assert a claim under the Tucker Act in the Court of Federal Claims, they could also raise a claim under the Little Tucker Act in either the district court or the Court of Federal Claims. The Little Tucker Act provides concurrent jurisdiction in the district courts and the Court of Federal Claims over suits against the United States for $10,000 or less founded upon "the Constitution, or any Act of Congress,...or upon any express or implied contract with the United States" and waives sovereign immunity for those claims. 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(2); Mitchell, 463 U.S. at 212–218. However, the Tucker Act limits the Court of Federal Claims to awarding damages and not granting injunctive or declaratory relief. Richardson v. Morris, 409 U.S. 464, 465–66 (1973). This limitation applies to district courts when they exercise jurisdiction under the Little Tucker Act, since the district court is essentially sitting in place of the Court of Federal Claims. United States v. Sherwood, 312 U.S. 584, 589–91 (1941).[5]

This limitation, Plaintiffs contend, undermines the government's contention that the Little Tucker Act is an adequate substitute for their APA claim. Plaintiffs argue first that because the FBAR penalties against them total $51,000, their claims exceed the jurisdictional reach of the Little Tucker Act. (Docket #17 at 9–10). However, the $10,000 limitation applies per claim, not per case, and because none of the individual FBAR penalties exceeds $10,000, the Little Tucker Act provides jurisdiction. See Baker v. United States, 722 F.2d 517, 518 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Louisville & Nashville R.R. Co., 221 F.2d 698, 703 (6th Cir. 1955); Zumerling v. Devine, 769 F.2d 745, 748 (Fed. Cir. 1985); Commonwealth of Pa. v. National Ass'n of Flood Ins., 520 F.2d 11, 25 (3d Cir. 1975).

Second, Plaintiffs assert that the inability of the court to grant equitable relief when exercising jurisdiction under the Act is problematic. Id. at 10–11. They reason as follows:

> If the government declined to answer or counterclaim, plaintiffs could theoretically obtain a default judgment for refund of the $10,000. However, since the Tucker Act does not empower the district court to render declaratory relief, and a default judgment is not given preclusive effect under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, plaintiffs would remain liable for the balance of the civil penalty assessment. As such the United States would be able to offset any federal benefits to which plaintiffs may be entitled, including social security benefits.

Id. (internal citations omitted). The government claims that Plaintiffs' fear "is entirely theoretical and also incorrect." (Docket #19 at 4).

The Court agrees that Plaintiffs' argument is speculative. Moreover, the argument has been rejected by other courts. See Briggs v. United States, 564 F. Supp. 2d 1087, 1093 (N.D. Cal. 2008). If Plaintiffs were successful in achieving a refund of even a partial payment of the FBAR assessments, the government would be barred by res judicata from seeking to collect the remainder of the assessments. See id. at 1092–93; Consol. Edison Co. of N.Y., 247 F.3d at 1384–85 (if the plaintiff succeeded in obtaining a partial refund, one "cannot imagine that the United States would continue to require the [plaintiff] to pay unlawful exactions"). This Court agrees with Briggs inasmuch as once Plaintiffs were repaid, "it would be unlikely (and inappropriate) for defendan[t] to continue with wrongful offsets." Briggs, 564 F. Supp. 2d at 1094. Thus, the fact that a district court could not grant a prospective, equitable ban on future collection of the FBAR assessments under the Little Tucker Act is of no moment. See Telecare Corp. v. Leavitt, 409 F.3d 1345, 1349 (Fed. Cir. 2005) (noting that "[t]he availability of an action for money damages under the Tucker Act ... is presumptively an 'adequate remedy' for § 704 purposes" and "a final decision in a Little Tucker Act case ... will finally resolve the issue and as a practical matter make repeated suits unnecessary"). Thus, Plaintiffs could bring their claims in this case under the Little Tucker Act.[6]

3.3 Plaintiffs Have Not Established a Waiver of Sovereign Immunity

7 The parties' present dispute requires the Court to assess the nuances of Tucker Act and Little Tucker Act jurisdiction. But recall that the ultimate inquiry here is whether the United States has waived its sovereign immunity as to Plaintiffs' claims. This does not occur by implication; instead, waiver must be unmistakable. Nelson, 570 F.3d at 883–84. Waiver in this case must be decided by reference to the APA, which waives immunity only when the plaintiff lacks another adequate remedy elsewhere. 5 U.S.C. § 704. The question is not whether Plaintiffs might have a better chance of success in the present suit; rather, dismissal is required merely if they have an adequate remedy in another proceeding. See Walsh v. Dep't of Veterans Affairs, 400 F.3d 535, 537–38 (7th Cir. 2005); Consol. Edison Co. of N.Y., 247 F.3d at 1383.

Considering these principles together, the Court is obliged to conclude that Plaintiffs have failed to meet their burden to show that sovereign immunity has been waived. Macklin, 300 F.3d at 819. Plaintiffs have an adequate alternative to this lawsuit in either the Tucker Act or the Little Tucker Act. Moreover, to the extent Plaintiffs believe that they should not be required to pay any of the FBAR assessments before filing suit, either by preemptively paying them to create jurisdiction under the statutes discussed above, or by waiting for the government to offset their funds from them administratively, this is merely a complaint that APA review might be better for them financially in the short term. It does not, standing alone, demonstrate that paying some or all of the assessments and filing a refund suit in the Court of Federal Claims is inherently inadequate. Cf. Greene v. United States, 124 Fed. Cl. 636, 641 (2015) (noting that illegal exaction claim does not require the taxpayer to first fully pay the tax liability). In any event, Plaintiffs never expressly assert that there is a problem with Tucker Act or Little Tucker Act claims simply because they require a prepayment of the allegedly illegal penalty in order to create jurisdiction. As such, the Court remains unconvinced that the government has waived its sovereign immunity and it must dismiss Plaintiffs' claims.

4. CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs have not met their substantial burden to show that the government waived its sovereign immunity with respect to the claims they assert in this action. As a result, the complaint must be dismissed for failure to state a claim. The dismissal is without prejudice so that Plaintiffs may avail themselves of whatever other avenues for relief they deem appropriate, including potential claims under the Tucker Act or Little Tucker Act. See Sorrentino v. Godinez, 777 F.3d 410, 414–15 (7th Cir. 2015).

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that the United States' motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim (Docket #15) be and the same is hereby GRANTED; and

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that this action be and the same is hereby DISMISSED without prejudice.

The Clerk of Court is directed to enter judgment accordingly.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 401228, 119 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-634, 2017-1 USTC P 50,143

Footnotes

[1] Because the Court finds that the complaint should be dismissed because of the government's sovereign immunity, it need not reach the question of whether this District is the proper venue for the suit.

[2] The other two asserted jurisdictional bases for the suit—28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 28 U.S.C. § 2201—do not create waivers of the United States' sovereign immunity. See (Docket #16 at 3, 5–6). Plaintiffs admit as much with respect to Section 1331. (Docket #17 at 3). Further, while Plaintiffs do not expressly concede that the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201, does not create a waiver of sovereign immunity, the Act "neither provides nor denies a jurisdictional basis for actions under federal law, but merely defines the scope of available declaratory relief." See McCarthy v. Marshall, 723 F.2d 1034, 1037 (1st Cir. 1983). As a result, the Act cannot itself work a waiver of sovereign immunity.

[3] Plaintiffs believe that this is not a viable option because the government can recoup the penalties without litigation by offsetting payments made by other federal agencies, including Social Security benefits. (Docket #17 at 11); 31 U.S.C. § 3716; 31 C.F.R. § 285.5(a)(1). The government does not address Plaintiffs' position in its reply and therefore seems to have abandoned this argument. Because the Court finds that the Tucker Act and Little Tucker Act afford Plaintiffs an adequate alternative to a claim under the APA, the Court does not decide whether waiting for the government to sue them would also qualify.

[4] The Court notes that the parties have not cited, and it has not located, specific guidance on whether APA review of FBAR penalties should be permitted to proceed or be rejected in favor of a Tucker Act claim. The Court found only one case coming close: Moore v. United States, No. C13–2063RAJ, 2015 WL 1510007 (W.D. Wash. Apr. 1, 2015). The court in Moore heard (and rejected on the merits) an APA challenge to the imposition of an FBAR penalty. See id. at *3. Nevertheless, the government appears not to have raised sovereign immunity in Moore, so the Court does not find Moore helpful on the specific question raised here.

[5] The Little Tucker Act also subsumes the requirement in the Tucker Act that there be a money-mandating statute or an illegal exaction. (Docket #19 at 7 n.5). Because that point was addressed above, see supra Part 4.1, the Court need not repeat its analysis here.

[6] The government argues, for the first time in its reply, that 28 U.S.C. § 1355 also affords an adequate alternative to the present request for APA review. (Docket #19 at 2). Section 1355 provides that federal district courts have original jurisdiction "of any action or proceeding for the recovery or enforcement of any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, incurred under any Act of Congress, except matters within the jurisdiction of the Court of International Trade." 28 U.S.C. § 1355(a). Whether or not this statute provides an adequate alternative, Plaintiffs were not given a chance to respond to the government's position. The Court will, therefore, disregard it. Studio & Partners v. KI, No. 06–C–0628, 2008 WL 426496, at *6 (E.D. Wis., Feb. 14, 2008) (citing TAS Distributing Co., Inc. v. Cummins Engine Co., Inc., 491 F.3d 625, 630–31 (7th Cir. 2007)).

End of Document

2014 WL 3746497
United States District Court, E.D. Virginia,
Alexandria Division.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
J. Bryan WILLIAMS, Defendant.

Civil Action No. 1:09–CV–00437.
|
Signed June 26, 2014.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Gerard J. Mene, United States Attorney's Office, Alexandria, VA, Christopher David Belen, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

David H. Dickieson, Schertler & Onorado, Washington, DC, for Defendant.

ORDER

LIAM O'GRADY, District Judge.

1 In April 2009, the United States brought a civil action in the Eastern District of Virginia against J. Bryan Williams to collect $200,000 in civil penalties assessed against him by the IRS for failing to file a Foreign Bank Account Report ("FBAR") form for his two foreign accounts during the tax year 2000. This Court held a bench trial on April 26, 2010, and thereafter reviewed supplemental briefs from the parties. On September 1, 2010, the Court ruled in favor of Mr. Williams, finding that the government failed to meet its burden of establishing that Williams's violations under 31 U.S.C. § 5314 were willful.

The United States appealed to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, and on July 20, 2012 the Fourth Circuit reversed. The Fourth Circuit held that Williams willfully violated Section 5314 by signing his 2000 federal tax return. The court found Williams's signature "prima facie evidence that he knew the contents of his return," Op. at 12, and concluded that he was also on notice of the FBAR requirement. The court held that Williams's admission that he did not carefully review the instructions on his federal tax return suggested a "conscious effort to avoid learning about reporting requirements," id. (citing United States v. Sturman, 951 F.3d 1466, 1476 (6th Cir.1991)), and combined with his false answers indicated an intent to conceal his financial information. Because the Fourth Circuit found that this conduct constituted at least willful blindness to the FBAR requirement, it found that Mr. Williams's violations were willful and remanded for proceedings consistent with that opinion. Because the penalties imposed by the IRS were not an abuse of the agency's discretion, this Court now affirms the $200,000 in civil penalties imposed against Mr. Williams.

Although the Government argues that the amount of the penalty assessed may not be considered on remand, this Court does review the penalty amount for abuse of discretion under the "arbitrary and capricious" standard of the Administrative Procedure Act. 5 U.S. § 706. The Court rejects Defendant's contention that the Fourth Circuit's remand for "further proceedings" is an invitation to engage in de novo review of the penalty amount. Although some courts have held in similar contexts that de novo review is appropriate when the issue of a defendant's underlying tax liability is at issue, see, e.g., Dogwood Forest Rest Home, Inc. v. United States, 181 F.Supp.2d 554, 559–60 (M.D.N.C.2001) (collecting cases), the Fourth Circuit has already ruled on the issue of Mr. Williams's liability in this case. On remand, it has been established that Williams is eligible for the FBAR penalties, including the penalties for willful violations. Because review of the penalty amount is the only remaining issue in this case, the appropriate standard of review is abuse of discretion. [1]

Courts have specifically found that an agency's selection of a penalty is "the exercise of a discretionary grant of power, and is to be reviewed only for abuse under an arbitrary and capricious standard of review." Ekanem v. Internal Revenue Service, 1998 WL 773614, at *1 (D.Md.1998). Under that narrow and deferential standard, the Court must not substitute its judgment for the agency's, and must only review the record to ensure that the agency engaged in reasoned decision-making and that there was a "rational connection between the facts found and the choice made." Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass'n v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 43 (1983) (quoting Burlington Truck Lines, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 156, 168 (1962)).

2 In this case, the two $100,000 penalties issued by the IRS were within the range authorized by Congress in 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C) for willful violations. Although the IRS may impose a lower penalty where the violating taxpayer meets certain criteria, see U.S. Br. at 6, such departures are within the discretion of the agency. The Internal Revenue Manual states that in assessing penalties, examiners "exercise discretion" in determining "the total amount of penalties to be asserted," and also states that examiners are to consider the facts and circumstances of each case when making that determination. The Manual clarifies that the penalties are determined "per account," and not per person or per unfiled FBAR. IRM § 4.26.16.4. The Manual specifically lists "[t]he nature of the violation and the amounts involved" and "[t]he cooperation of the taxpayer during the examination" as among the factors that an examiner should consider. However, it also warns that "given the magnitude of the maximum penalties permitted for each violation, the assertion of multiple penalties ... should be considered only in the most egregious cases." IRM § 4.26.16.4.7.

Although Defendant argues that the imposition of two maximum penalties is not warranted in this case, the Court finds that there is sufficient evidence in the record to demonstrate that the $200,000 penalty was the product of reasoned decision-making and consideration of the appropriate factors. While there is no evidence from which the Court can conclude that the penalties were assessed for an improper purpose, the IRS's letter to Mr. Williams bolsters the conclusion that the agency made a reasoned decision after considering the relevant factors. See Def. Ex. 29. Reviewing the IRS's decision under an abuse of discretion standard, this Court cannot simply substitute its judgment for that of the agency. Although the Internal Revenue Manual does state that multiple maximum penalties are for "egregious" cases, it would not be arbitrary and capricious for the IRS to find that the amount of money involved in this case justified the imposition of maximum penalties. Therefore, it is hereby ORDERED:

1. The two Report of Foreign Bank Accounts ("FBAR') penalties assessed against Mr. Williams under 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C), totaling $200,000, are AFFIRMED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2014 WL 3746497, 114 A.F.T.R.2d 2014-5036

Footnotes

[1] Although the only other court to have considered the appropriateness of an FBAR penalty amount did not specifically identify a standard of review, it reviewed the penalty with great deference to the judgment of the agency. In United States v. McBride, 908 F.Supp.2d, 1186, 1214 (D.Utah Nov. 8, 2012), the court affirmed two maximum penalties after determining that they were within the range authorized by Congress. The court did not consider the propriety of the penalty amounts, simply stating that the penalties were authorized by the statute and "[a]ccordingly ... were proper."

End of Document

2016 WL 3129530
United States District Court,
S.D. Texas, Laredo Division.

Bernhard GUBSER, Plaintiff
v.
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, et al., Defendants.

CIVIL ACTION NO. 5:15-CV-298
|
Signed 05/04/2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

George M. Clarke, III, Joseph B. Judkins, Baker McKenzie LLP, Washington, DC, Brian J. Hurst, MacKenzie Marie Martin, Baker McKenzie LLP, Dallas, TX, for Plaintiff.

Jon E. Fisher, Dept. of Justice, Dallas, TX, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Marina Garcia Marmolejo, United States District Judge

1 This case concerns a foreign bank account that Bernhard Gubser (Plaintiff) failed to disclose to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) in 2008 in violation of the Bank Secrecy Act. After months of engaging in IRS administrative procedures without any resolution, Plaintiff filed this suit seeking a declaratory judgment regarding the IRS's burden of proof to show a willful violation of the Report of Foreign Banks and Financial Accounts (FBAR) filing requirement. The United States filed a 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. (Dkt. No. 11). Having reviewed the parties' submissions, their arguments at hearing, and the applicable law, Defendant's Motion (Dkt. No. 11) is GRANTED for the reasons given below.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff is a dual citizen of Switzerland (by birth) and the United States (via naturalization in 1992). Department of Treasury regulations require U.S. citizens with foreign bank accounts exceeding $10,000 to file a FBAR annually with the IRS, disclosing the account information. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350 (setting forth the reporting requirements under 31 U.S.C. § 5314). Plaintiff, however, did not file a FBAR to report his Swiss bank account to the IRS until the 2009 reporting year, when he alleges he first became aware of the reporting requirement. Since 2009, Plaintiff has filed a FBAR with the IRS annually.

In March 2015, Plaintiff received a form letter (Letter 3709) from the IRS concerning his failure to file a FBAR for 2008. The letter proposed assessing a civil penalty of half the account's balance ($1,363,336.00) for willful failure to meet FBAR filing requirements. The letter explained that Plaintiff could either agree to the proposed penalty and submit payment, or request a conference with the Appeals Office to contest the proposed penalty. If Plaintiff did neither, the letter stated that the IRS would assess the penalty and begin collection procedures.

In response to the letter, Plaintiff submitted a written request in May 2015 to meet with the Appeals Office. Plaintiff's attorneys met with an appeals officer on September 10, 2015. At the meeting, the appeals officer stated that the agency's burden of proof is by a preponderance of the evidence, and that under this burden the agency could show a willful violation of FBAR filing requirements by Plaintiff. Plaintiff also alleges, however, that the appeals officer represented if the burden of proof was clear and convincing evidence, the agency could not prove willfulness. Ultimately, the matter was not resolved at the meeting or in the months that followed.

Approximately three months after the Appeals Office conference, Plaintiff filed the instant suit against the IRS, United States, and IRS Commissioner in his official capacity. Plaintiff seeks a declaration that the IRS must prove willful violations of FBAR filing requirements by clear and convincing evidence.

The United States has now moved for dismissal under Rule 12(b)(1) on several grounds.[1] First, Defendant claims that the suit is barred by sovereign immunity. Second, Defendant contends that Plaintiff lacks standing because no formal penalty assessment has, or is certain to, take place. Finally, Defendant argues that Plaintiff's claims are not ripe for consideration.

II. LEGAL STANDARD FOR 12(B)(1)

2 A Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss challenges the court's subject matter jurisdiction. "Under Rule 12(b)(1), a claim is 'properly dismissed for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction when the court lacks the statutory or constitutional power to adjudicate' the claim." In re FEMA Trailer Formaldehyde Products Liab. Litig., 668 F.3d 281, 286 (5th Cir. 2012) (quoting Home Builders Ass'n, Inc. v. City of Madison, 143 F.3d 1006, 1010 (5th Cir. 1998)). On a Rule 12(b)(1) motion, the party asserting jurisdiction bears the burden of proof, but the court must accept as true the allegations and facts in the complaint. Life Partners Inc. v. United States, 650 F.3d 1026, 1029 (5th Cir. 2011). The court may find that subject matter jurisdiction is lacking based on "(1) the complaint alone; (2) the complaint supplemented by undisputed facts evidenced in the record; or (3) the complaint supplemented by undisputed facts plus the court's resolution of disputed facts." Choice Inc. of Tex. v. Greenstein, 691 F.3d 710, 714 (5th Cir. 2012) (citation omitted).

Here Plaintiff's complaint is supplemented by two undisputed documents: the proposed penalty letter (Letter 3709) and an agreement between the Parties to extend the statute of limitations period to assess civil FBAR penalties.

III. ANALYSIS

Defendant argues that this court lacks subject matter jurisdiction and Plaintiff's complaint must be dismissed for the following reasons: (1) Plaintiff's suit is barred by sovereign immunity; (2) Plaintiff lacks standing; and (3) Plaintiff's claims are not ripe for adjudication. Because the Court concludes that this matter is not justiciable on standing grounds, the Court does not reach Defendant's ripeness and sovereign immunity arguments. See Sinochem Int'l Co. v. Malaysia Int'l. Shipping Corp., 549 U.S. 422, 431 (2007) ("[A] federal court has leeway 'to choose among threshold grounds for denying audience to case on the merits.' ").

Article III of the Constitution limits the jurisdiction of federal courts to cases or controversies. Const., Art. III, § 2. Standing is an essential element of Article III's case-or-controversy requirement. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). The requirements of Article III standing are built on separation-of-powers principles, and serve "to prevent the judicial process from being used to usurp the powers of the political branches." Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 133 S. Ct. 1138, 1146 (2013).

"To establish standing, a plaintiff must show: (1) it has suffered, or imminently will suffer, a concrete and particularized injury-in-fact; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the defendant's conduct; and (3) a favorable judgment is likely to redress the injury." Hous. Chronicle Pub. Co. v. City of League City, Tex., 488 F.3d 613, 617 (5th Cir. 2007) (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560–61). "An allegation of future injury may suffice if the threatened injury is certainly impending, or there is a substantial risk that the harm will occur." Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 134 S. Ct. 2334, 2341 (2014) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Clapper, 133 S. Ct. at 1150 n.5); see also Bauer v. Texas, 341 F.3d 352, 357–58 (5th Cir. 2003) ("A plaintiff can meet the standing requirements when suit is brought under the Declaratory Judgment Act by establishing actual present harm or a significant possibility of future harm, even though the injury-in-fact has not yet been completed." (citation omitted)). To show redressability, "it must be 'likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that a favorable decision will redress the plaintiff's injury.' " Dep't of Tex., Veterans of Foreign Wars of U.S. v. Tex. Lottery Comm'n, 760 F.3d 427, 432 (5th Cir. 2014) (en banc) (quoting S. Christian Leadership Conference v. Supreme Court of State of La., 252 F.3d 781, 788 (5th Cir. 2001)).

3 Here, even assuming Plaintiff can establish an injury-in-fact caused by Defendant's conduct, he cannot satisfy the redressability requirement of Article III standing. Plaintiff argues that a declaration that the IRS must prove willful violations of FBAR filing requirements by clear and convincing evidence would resolve the threat of a $1.36 million penalty. Plaintiff's arguments, however, are highly speculative, and his pleadings cannot support the conclusion that a declaration by this Court would be likely to redress the claimed harmed. Although Plaintiff alleges that an individual appeals officer represented the IRS could not meet this higher burden, Plaintiff has not claimed that this representation was legally binding or would preclude the IRS from still assessing a penalty. In fact, Plaintiff conceded at oral argument that the appeals officer could choose to assess or not assess the penalty regardless of any declarations by this Court regarding the burden of proof. In other words, without additional facts, it is far from likely that a favorable declaration regarding the IRS's burden of proof would prevent the assessment of a penalty against Plaintiff.

Accordingly, because Plaintiff fails to satisfy the redressability requirement of standing, Plaintiff cannot meet Article III's case-or-controversy requirement.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons explained above, the Court concludes that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction. Accordingly, Defendant's Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 11) is hereby GRANTED.

It is so ORDERED.

SIGNED this 4th day of May, 2016.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2016 WL 3129530, 117 A.F.T.R.2d 2016-1459

Footnotes

[1] Although there are three Defendants in this lawsuit, the Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 11) is entitled “United States of America's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Brief” and signed by Jon E. Fisher as Attorney for the United States without reference to the other two Defendants. Plaintiff, however, refers to Dkt. No. 11 as “Defendants' Motion to Dismiss” throughout his response. To the extent it is unclear whether Dkt. No. 11 was intended to serve as a filing on behalf of the IRS and the IRS Commissioner, the Court considers its jurisdiction with regard to these two Defendants sua sponte. See Howery v. Allstate Ins. Co, 243 F.3d 912, 919 (5th Cir. 2001) (“[F]ederal courts must address jurisdictional questions whenever they are raised and must consider jurisdiction sua sponte if not raised by the parties.”). For the same reasons that Plaintiff lacks standing to pursue claims against the United States, see infra, an Article III case-or-controversy is also lacking between Plaintiff and both other Defendants.

End of Document

2013 WL 4430917
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
1. Stephen KERR; 2. Michael Quiel; Defendants.

No. CR 11–2385–PHX–JAT–DKD–001–002.
|
Aug. 16, 2013.

ORDER

JAMES A. TEILBORG, Senior District Judge.

1 Pending before the Court are: Defendant Stephen Kerr's ("Kerr") Renewed Motion for Rule 29 Judgment of Acquittal or, in the alternative, a New Trial (Doc. 302), and Defendant Michael Quiel's ("Quiel") Motion for a Judgment of Acquittal or for a New Trial (Doc. 301). [1] The Court now rules on these Motions.

I. Background

In the Indictment (Doc. 3), Kerr was charged with Conspiracy to Defraud the United States (Count 1), Willful Subscription to False Individual Tax Returns for 2007 and 2008 (Counts 2 and 3), and Failure to File Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBARs) for 2007 and 2008 (Counts 6 and 7). Count 1 charged Kerr, Quiel, and Christopher Rusch ("Rusch"), their former attorney, with conspiring to establish companies and bank accounts in Switzerland to move money out of the United States and defraud the IRS. Counts 2 and 3 charged Kerr with intentionally omitting income from the foreign accounts on his 2007 and 2008 tax returns and intentionally failing to mark the box in Schedule B indicating an interest in a foreign bank account. Counts 6 and 7 charged Kerr with willfully failing to file FBARs to report his interest in the foreign accounts. On April 11, 2013, a jury acquitted Kerr of Count 1, and convicted him of Counts 2, 3, 6, and 7. Kerr now moves the Court to set aside the jury verdicts and enter judgments of acquittal, or, alternatively, grant a new trial.

Quiel was charged with Conspiracy to Defraud the United States (Count 1), Willful Subscription to False Individual Tax Returns for 2007 and 2008 (Counts 4 and 5), and Failure to File FBARs for 2007 and 2008 (Counts 8 and 9). Count 1 charged Kerr, Quiel, and Rusch with conspiring to establish companies and bank accounts in Switzerland to move money out of the United States and defraud the IRS. Counts 4 and 5 charged Quiel with intentionally omitting income from the foreign accounts on his 2007 and 2008 tax returns and intentionally failing to mark the box in Schedule B indicating an interest in a foreign bank account. Counts 8 and 9 charged Quiel with willfully failing to file FBARs to report his interest in the foreign accounts. On April 11, 2013, a jury acquitted Quiel of Count 1, and convicted him of Counts 4 and 5. The jury was unable to reach a verdict on Counts 8 and 9, which the Government later dismissed. Quiel and Kerr now moves the Court to set aside the jury verdicts and enter judgments of acquittal, or, alternatively, grant a new trial.

II. Legal Standards

A. Judgment of Acquittal

"A defendant may move for a judgment of acquittal ... within 14 days after a guilty verdict or after the court discharges the jury." Fed.R.Crim.P. 29(c)(1). The Court may set aside the jury verdict and enter an acquittal. Id. at 29(c)(2). Courts review a motion for judgment of acquittal applying the same test as a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence. United States v. Ladum, 141 F.3d 1328, 1337 (9th Cir.1998). In considering whether there is sufficient evidence to deny a motion for judgment of acquittal, courts "review the evidence presented in the light most favorable to the government to determine whether any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt." Id.

B. New Trial

2 With respect to a motion for new trial, "the court may vacate any judgment and grant a new trial if the interest of justice so requires." Fed.R.Crim.P. 33(a). A district court has greater discretion to grant a new trial than to grant a judgment of acquittal. United States v. Kellington, 217 F.3d 1084, 1097 (9th Cir.2000). Thus, in considering a motion for new trial, "[t]he court is not obliged to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict, and it is free to weigh the evidence and evaluate for itself the credibility of the witnesses." Id. More specifically, "[i]f the court concludes that, despite the abstract sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, the evidence preponderates sufficiently heavily against the verdict that a serious miscarriage of justice may have occurred, it may set aside the verdict, grant a new trial, and submit the issue for determination by another jury." Id. (internal quotations omitted). However, the authority to grant a new trial should be used "only in exceptional cases." United States v. Rush, 749 F.2d 1369, 1371 (9th Cir.1984).

III. Kerr's Motion for Judgment of Acquittal and New Trial

Kerr claims that the Government "failed to meet its burden as to willfulness on each of the substantive counts." (Doc. 302 at 3). Kerr moves for judgment of acquittal or new trial because: 1) Rusch's testimony should be excluded when determining the sufficiency of the evidence; 2) Kerr was acquitted of conspiracy, and the overt acts of the substantive offenses were required elements of the conspiracy count; 3) the Government failed to prove Kerr had a legal duty to report income from the foreign corporations; and 4) the Government committed prosecutorial misconduct by using the term "fraudulent" in closing arguments. Furthermore, Kerr lists eight additional grounds for acquittal or for a new trial without providing any factual support or legal authority for his arguments, including: 1) the admission of Government exhibits on redirect violates Kerr's Sixth Amendment right to confrontation;[2] 2) the indictment erroneously indicated Kerr's Failure to File FBAR forms under Schedule B, Section II, Line 7a; 3) the Court failed to provide Kerr's proposed "theory of the case" jury instruction; 4) the Government misstated in closing arguments that Kerr owed taxes; 5) the Government committed prosecutorial misconduct by accusing defense counsel of tampering with the impeachment tape of Rusch; 6) the Court improperly denied Kerr's request that the Court order the Government to provide Special Agent Giovannelli's Report; 7) the Court failed to provide jury instructions about expenses rightfully deductible from income; and 8) the Court erroneously allowed the Government to use the definitions in the FBAR form in the jury instructions.

A. Rusch's Testimony

Kerr argues that Rusch's testimony should be excluded in determining the sufficiency of the evidence on the substantive counts because it is inadmissible under the crime-fraud exception to attorney-client privilege and under the co-conspirator exception to hearsay.

1. Attorney–Client Privilege

3 Kerr claims that the Court admitted Rusch's testimony under the crime-fraud exception to attorney-client privilege. (Doc. 302 at 4). Because Defendants were acquitted of Count 1, Conspiracy to Defraud the United States, Kerr argues that the crime-fraud exception does not apply; therefore, Rusch's testimony violates attorney-client privilege and should be excluded when determining the sufficiency of the evidence on the substantive counts. (Id.) However, in its July 17, 2012 Order, the Court held that Defendants waived attorney-client privilege by claiming that their failure to file FBARs and their filing false tax returns was based on the advice of counsel. (Doc. 96 at 5). Furthermore, the Court denied Kerr's Motion to Preclude Admission of Items Protected by Attorney–Client Privilege (Doc. 118), and noted that "the Court found that ... implicit waiver had occurred for any information relating to Kerr filing FBARs, and filing tax returns for tax years 2007 and 2008." (Doc. 145 at 8 n. 1). Therefore, the Court did not permit Rusch's testimony under the crime-fraud exception.[3]

Kerr argues that the advice of counsel defense may waive the privilege "as to documents presented early on[,]" but does not waive the privilege regarding Rusch's testimony because the advice of counsel defense did not require Rusch to testify. (Doc. 302 at 4 n. 2). Kerr does not cite any legal authority in support of this argument. (Id.) The Government was entitled to the specified privileged information because Kerr implicitly waived attorney-client privilege. (Doc. 96). Kerr offers no cases suggesting that Kerr may waive privilege as to the communications, but preserve privilege regarding Rusch's testimony about the same information. Furthermore, Kerr never objected to the testimony at trial.[4] Kerr also claims that he was "considering using [advice] of counsel as a possible defense," but instead "put on no defense." (Doc. 314 at 4). This claim is inaccurate because Kerr presented this defense in both opening and closing arguments and requested and received a jury instruction encapsulating that defense. (See e.g. Doc. 325 at 124) ("Now this is their lawyer. This is a tax expert. They believe him. They rely upon this advice."); (Doc. 338 at 79) ("a very, very important jury instruction in the case ... that's basically the instruction regarding the reliance on counsel"); (Doc. 287 at 35) (jury instruction for advice of counsel defense). Accordingly, the Court can find no error in the admission of Rusch's testimony, and such testimony will not be excluded when determining the sufficiency of the evidence under Rule 29(c)(2) or Rule 33(a).

2. Co–Conspirator Exception to Hearsay

Kerr argues that Rusch's testimony should not be admitted under the co-conspirator exception to hearsay (Fed.R.Evid.801(d)(2) (E)). (Doc. 302 at 8–10). However, Kerr fails to cite to any part of the Record where such admission of evidence occurred. Kerr's failure to indicate where in the Record error occurred prevents the Court from making any meaningful analysis of this issue. In his Reply, Kerr asserts that "the majority of statements" allegedly admitted under the co-conspirator exception were "Rusch's [with regard to his] understanding of the Defendants [sic] knowledge as to the legality of their actions[;]" however, he does not cite any specific statements. (Doc. 314 at 6).

4 Without any specific statements that were allegedly admitted pursuant to the exception, the Court is skeptical of Kerr's arguments for the following reasons. First, Rusch's knowledge is not hearsay. Second, the Court can envision circumstances in which the testimony would be admissible. For example, if Rusch testified to statements made by Kerr, the testimony is admissible under Fed.R.Evid. 801(d)(2), an opposing party's statement. Furthermore, if the statements were not asserted for the truth of the matter, but to establish the effect on the listener or basis in fact for the Rusch's subsequent actions, then the statements would be allowed based on Fed.R.Evid. 801(c). See United States v. Payne, 944 F.2d 1458, 1472 (9th Cir.1991) (holding that out-of-court statements introduced to show the effect on the listener are not hearsay); United States v. Walling, 486 F.2d 229, 234 (9th Cir.1973) (holding that statement was not hearsay because it was offered to demonstrate the "circumstances which served as a foundation for [witness's] own observations and actions"). Because Kerr does not cite to the record indicating where the Court admitted the testimony under Rule 801(d)(2)(E), and does not cite to the specific statements in Rusch's testimony that he allegedly objected to at trial (Doc. 314 at 7), the Court will not exclude Rusch's testimony in determining the sufficiency of the evidence under Rule 29(c)(2) or Rule 33(a).

B. Willful Intent

Kerr argues that the "overt acts of the substantive offenses were required elements of the conspiracy count." (Doc. 314 at 10). Kerr claims that the Government failed to prove "any other knowledge or intent of illegality except for that required to prove the conspiracy—that the Defendants did this to defraud the IRS." (Id. at 11). Because the jury acquitted Kerr of conspiracy, he alleges that the elements of the substantive counts cannot be proven; therefore, the government "failed to prove the required illegal intent." (Id. at 10).

"[I]t is well-established that 'inconsistent verdicts may stand, even when a conviction is rationally incompatible with an acquittal, provided there is sufficient evidence to support a guilty verdict.' " United States v. Suarez, 682 F.3d 1214, 1218 (9th Cir.2012) (internal citations omitted). In this case, the jury was instructed that they must find Kerr acted "willfully" to be guilty of the substantive counts. (Doc. 287 at 25, 28). The jury could have acquitted Kerr of conspiracy for reasons unrelated to Kerr's intent. For example, the jury could have determined that the Government did not prove there was an agreement between the co-conspirators. The jury was properly instructed about Kerr's intent for the substantive counts; thus, by finding Kerr guilty, the jury found that Kerr acted willfully. Therefore, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

C. Legal Duty to Report Income

5 Kerr claims that the Government failed to prove a legal duty to report income and foreign accounts; therefore, the Government did not prove willfulness. (Doc. 314 at 11). To prove willfulness, the Government must show the "voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty." Cheek v. United States, 498 U.S. 192, 201 (1991). In Cheek, the United States Supreme Court held:

> Carrying this burden requires negating a defendant's claim of ignorance of the law or a claim that because of a misunderstanding of the law, he had a good-faith belief that he was not violating any of the provisions of the tax law. This is so because one cannot be aware that the law imposes a duty upon him and yet be ignorant of it, misunderstand > the law, or believe that the duty does not exist.

Id.

Kerr argues that the Government did not meet their burden because there was "no expert testimony or evidence" that proved the income was reportable on Kerr's personal tax return. (Doc. 302 at 16). Kerr does not cite to any legal authority requiring expert testimony to prove a legal duty to report. Furthermore, the Government presented evidence at trial from which the jury could conclude that Defendants had a legal duty to report income and foreign accounts.

In addition, during the settling conference for jury instructions, Defendants objected that the FBAR instruction "presuppose[s] that the defendants did have a legal obligation to file an FBAR." (Doc. 337 at 15). The Government responded that the instructions require that the jury first determine that Defendants had an obligation to file the FBAR based on the evidence, and the Court agreed and overruled Kerr's objection. (Id. at 18). Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the Government, the Government met its burden in proving that Kerr had a legal duty to report income and foreign accounts, and knew of the duty. Therefore, a jury could have found that Kerr acted willfully beyond reasonable doubt. Furthermore, the evidence does not preponderate heavily against the verdict and there was no miscarriage of justice. Accordingly, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

D. Prosecutorial Misconduct

Kerr asserts that the Government committed prosecutorial misconduct by continually referring to stock transactions as "fraudulent." (Doc. 302 at 25). The Court ordered the Government not to describe the securities transactions in terms of "SEC violations" or "violations of security laws." (Doc. 337 at 19). The Court permitted the Government to describe particular conduct as "fraudulent" under Fed.R.Evid. 404(b)(2) because "that conduct helps establish a motive on [Defendants'] part to violate the tax laws." (Id. at 22–23). The Government complied with the Court's ruling; therefore, there was no prosecutorial misconduct. Accordingly, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

E. Erroneous Indictment

6 Kerr argues that the Indictment erroneously indicated that Kerr failed to file FBAR forms under Schedule B, Section II, instead of Schedule B, Section III. (Doc. 302 at 29). The Court overruled Kerr's objection to correcting this typographical error during the jury instructions conference. (Doc. 337 at 15). Kerr has not presented any argument that would cause the Court to reconsider its prior decision. Thus, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

F. Instructions on Defendant's Theory of the Case

Kerr argues that the Court failed to provide a jury instruction on Kerr's theory of the case. (Doc. 302 at 29). Kerr raised this issue during the jury instructions conference, and the Court rejected it. (Doc. 337 at 18–19). The jury was properly instructed on Kerr's theory of the case regarding "advice of counsel" and "good faith misunderstanding of the law." (Doc. 287 at 33–35). Accordingly, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

G. Misstated Evidence in Closing Argument

Kerr claims that the Government misstated evidence that Kerr owed taxes during the closing argument. (Doc. 302 at 29). Kerr did not object at trial, so the Court will review for plain error. See United States v. Cabrera, 201 F.3d 1243, 1246 (9th Cir.2000). In Response to Kerr's argument, the Government argues that no evidence was misstated because the Government presented evidence that Kerr "failed to report significant income" in 2007 and 2008, that Kerr had a "tax liability even though [he] failed to report this income," that the Government stated in closing arguments that the jury did not need to find a tax liability in order to convict Kerr on the false returns, and that a jury instruction was given in relation to this matter. (Doc. 311 at 23); (Doc. 303 at 47); (Doc. 287 at 27). Because Kerr presents no legal support for his arguments, Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory is denied.

H. Accusation of Evidence Tampering

Kerr asserts that the Government committed prosecutorial misconduct by accusing defense counsel of engaging in evidence tampering. Kerr argues that the Government prejudiced the jury by accusing counsel of doctoring the impeachment tape of Rusch, and suborning perjury by Rusch. (Doc. 302 at 29). However, Kerr does not provide any factual support or legal authority to support this argument. Furthermore, Kerr did not object at trial; therefore, the claim is subject to plain error review. United States v. Cabrera, 201 F.3d at 1246. A claim for prosecutorial misconduct is viewed in context of the entire trial. Id. "Reversal on this basis is justified only if it appears more probable than not that prosecutorial misconduct materially affected the fairness of the trial." United States v. Sayakhom, 186 F.3d 928, 943 (9th Cir.1999).

The Government responds that it did not claim that Defendants tampered with or doctored the tape. (Doc. 311 at 24). The Government merely stated that the tape was edited and did not capture the entire meeting. (Id.) During cross-examination by Quiel's counsel, Rusch stated that Quiel "played a clearly and obviously edited tape, which I also believe to be completely misleading." (Doc. 334 at 208). He continued on by saying, "I know for a fact that you edited the beginning of the tape." (Id. at 209). In closing arguments, the Government referred to the tape as being "blatantly edited" because it does not "include anything from the very beginning of this meeting." (Doc. 303 at 61). This statement does not rise to the level of prosecutorial misconduct. Accordingly, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

I. IRS Special Agent's Report

7 Kerr claims that his right to a fair trial was violated because the Court did not order the Government to provide the Special Agent's Report ("SAR"), which he alleges may contain Brady material. (Doc. 302 at 29). In its October 2, 2012 Order, the Court held that Kerr failed to show that the Government is withholding Brady material; therefore, in accordance with the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the SAR only had to be disclosed if the Special Agent testified. (Doc. 107 at 4). Kerr has not presented any argument that would cause the Court to reconsider its prior decision. The Special Agent did not testify at trial, and thus the Government was not required to disclose the SAR. Accordingly, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

J. Instruction on Deductible Expenses

Kerr claims that the Court failed to include the required jury instruction on deductible expenses. (Doc. 302 at 29). When reviewing a claim of error relating to jury instructions, the instructions must be viewed as a whole. United States v. Abushi, 62 F.2d 1289, 1299 (9th Cir.1982). A trial judge is given substantial latitude in tailoring jury instructions so long as they fairly and adequately address the issues presented. United States v. James, 576 F.2d 223, 226 (9th Cir.1978). In United States v.. Marabelles, the Court addressed the issue of whether the defendant was entitled to an instruction regarding deductible expenses in a tax evasion and false return case. 724 F.3d 1374, 1382 (9th Cir.1984). The defendant in that case requested an instruction related to unsubstantiated expenses that he claimed reduced his tax liability. Id. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the district court's refusal to provide the defendant's instruction was not error because it would not have "materially affected the § 7206(1) conviction since a tax deficiency is not an element of that crime." Id.

In the present case, Kerr does not cite to a specific instruction requested, or provide any factual or legal support for his argument. Looking at the instructions as a whole, the jury was instructed that they could consider a lack of tax due when determining willfulness. (Doc. 287 at 27). Furthermore, the gross income instruction defines gross income as "all income received before making any deductions allowed by law," which indicates that Defendants may be entitled to deduct expenses. (Id. at 38). These instructions fairly and adequately address the issue presented. Accordingly, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

K. FBAR Definitions

Kerr argues that the Court erred in giving the Government's proposed jury instructions, which included definitions from the FBAR instructions because no regulation addressed these definitions. (Doc. 302 at 30). The FBAR filing requirements in effect during 2007 and 2008 are outlined in 31 C.F.R. § 103.24. The regulation incorporates the definitions set forth in the general instructions prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and included with the FBAR form. See 31 C.F.R. § 103.24 ("each person ... shall provide such information as shall be specified in a reporting form prescribed by the Secretary to be filed by such persons"). In addition, 31 C.F.R. § 103.27(c)-(d) provides further details for reports filed pursuant to section 103.24, including the filing deadline date, the minimum account balance, and the specific reports required. The FBAR form and the instructions were modified in 2008, and the jury was properly instructed about the modified definitions for the 2008 count. Accordingly, Kerr's claim that there is no regulation addressing the FBAR definitions is incorrect. Therefore, the Court denies Kerr's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

8 Based on the foregoing, Kerr's Renewed Motion for Rule 29 Judgment of Acquittal or, in the alternative, a New Trial is denied.

III. Quiel's Motion for Judgment of Acquittal and New Trial

Quiel moves for judgment of acquittal based on four claims: 1) the admission of new exhibits on redirect without the opportunity to cross-examine violated the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment; 2) the conviction was based on an erroneous indictment;[5] 3) Rusch's testimony should have been stricken because Rusch committed perjury and the Government never linked his testimony to the alleged conspiracy; and 4) the Court erred in admitting redacted documents. (Doc. 301).

A. Confrontation Clause

Quiel asserts that the Court erred in issuing a "complete ban on recross-examination" in violation of the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment. (Doc. 301 at 4). On day 3 of the trial, Quiel's counsel attempted to recross-examine a witness, Cheryl Bradley. (Doc. 326 at 264). At that time, Quiel's counsel stated "I ... do have three follow-up, please Your Honor." (Id.). The Court responded, "Well, that's called recross, which we don't permit. You had three follow-up." (Id.). Quiel's counsel, responded "Yes, Your Honor, in relationship to her questions." (Id.). In reply, the Court stated, "There's no such thing as recross examination. That will be denied." (Id.)

Quiel now argues that, later in the trial, during the testimony of Chris Rusch, he was chilled from recross-examination based on the Court's earlier admonition. (Doc. 312 at 6). Quiel specifically argues that limiting recross-examination regarding Exhibits 44, 51, and 52, which were admitted during the Government's redirect examination of Mr. Rusch, violated the Confrontation Clause. (Id. at 3). Quiel did not attempt to recross-examine Rusch at the time of the testimony and did not make any reference to the Court's earlier admonition regarding re-cross examination at the time of Rusch's testimony. Defense counsel did object that the admission of Exhibits 44, 51, and 52 was outside the scope of cross-examination, but the Court was unpersuaded that those Exhibits were new matter and, thus, overruled those objections. Quiel now appears to argue that, pursuant to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals decision in United States v. Jones, 982 F.2d 380, 383–84 (9th Cir.1992), recross-examination must be permitted.

Recross-examination is not guaranteed under the Confrontation Clause. See United States v. Baker, 10 F.3d 1374, 1404 (9th Cir.1993), overruled on other grounds by United States v. Nordby, 225 F.3d 1053 (9th Cir.2000) ("Allowing recross is within the sound discretion of the trial court"); United States v. Riggi, 951 F.2d 1368, 1374 (3rd Cir.1991) ("As a general rule, a trial court has wide discretion to restrict recross-examination"). However, "[w]hen material new matters are brought out on redirect examination, the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment mandates that the opposing party be given the right of recross-examination on those new matters." United States v. Jones, 982 F.2d 380, 384 (9th Cir.1992) (quoting United States v. Riggi, 951 F.2d 1368, 1375 (3rd Cir.1991)).

9 "If 'new matter' is defined broadly, then any question asked on redirect that had not already been asked and answered would conceivably introduce 'new matter' requiring the opportunity for recross insofar as it expanded or elaborated on the witness' previous testimony. Such an approach would conflict with the trial court's discretion to impose reasonable limits on cross-examination" Baker, 10 F.3d at 1405. However, a "new matter" is not limited to a "new subject," but also applies to newly elicited material testimony within a particular subject area. Id. Accordingly, recross-examination is only necessary when "new matter" is elicited on re-direct.

Defendants did not argue during trial that they should be entitled to recross-examination because a new matter was being elicited during redirect. Although, during the testimony of Ms. Bradley, defense counsel requested re-cross, defense counsel gave no reason as to why he was entitled to recross-examination of that witness or any other witness. Further, it is of concern to the Court that, after receiving an unfavorable jury verdict, Defendants now seek reconsideration of the "alleged" "blanket ban" on recross-examination, such "ban" having occurred on day 3 of a 19–day trial, based on Defendants' argument that they were "chilled" from previously seeking such reconsideration from the Court. The Court does not see how the Defendants were chilled from seeking reconsideration during trial, but now feel completely free to seek such reconsideration. The Court's concerns about the timing of Defendants' claimed "chilling effect" is highlight by the fact that, although Defendants argue that there is a binding Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals case on point, which allows for recross-examination under certain circumstances, and Defendants believe that they are within those circumstances where recross-examination is appropriate, Defendants waited to bring that binding case to the Court's attention until after receiving an unfavorable jury verdict.

Despite these substantial concerns, the Court will assume, for the purposes of this Order, that Defendants were chilled from seeking recross-examination for witnesses that followed Ms. Bradley. Accordingly, the Court must determine whether new matter was elicited on redirect examination in violation of Defendants' Sixth Amendment right to confrontation.

In his argument, Quiel relies heavily on United States v. Jones, in which the defendant was convicted of drug violations. 982 F.2d at 382. In Jones, the defendant believed the district court imposed a blanket prohibition on recross-examination. Id. at 384. On redirect, the Government's witness, Alex Vasilieff, identified the defendant for the first time and placed him at the scene of the crime, corroborating the damaging testimony made by other witnesses. Id. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that "the district court's ban on recross examination prevented Jones from probing Vasilief's [sic] incriminating testimony." Id. In Jones, the ban on recross-examination violated the defendant's Confrontation Clause rights because he was "unable to subject the prosecution's case to the rigorous adversarial testing that is the norm of Anglo–American criminal proceedings." Id. at 384–85 (internal quotations omitted).

10 In the present case, Quiel asserts that the Government's Exhibits 44, 51, and 52 were new matters presented on redirect. (Doc. 301 at 3). Exhibit 44 is a fax from Rusch to Pierre Gabris, a private banker who opened foreign bank accounts (Doc. 331 at 32) containing written instructions regarding stock transactions. (Doc. 335 at 91–92). Exhibits 51 and 52 are emails that Rusch received from Gabris that provide accounting statements for the foreign accounts. (Id. at 101). On direct examination, the Government asked Rusch how stock transactions occurred. (Doc. 331 at 145). Rusch responded, "The vast majority of the time Mr. Quiel would phone me and give me an instruction to sell or buy or make a transfer. I would write that down. I would type it up into a fax and fax it over to Mr. Gabris." (Id.) When the Government questioned Rusch about the activity in the foreign accounts, Rusch stated that he received "[a]n accounting typed up in Excel and sent to [him] by e-mail from Pierre Gabris," which Rusch would then fax to Mr. Quiel. (Id. at 152). Rusch further elaborated that he never emailed Kerr or Quiel regarding their foreign accounts because he was "given instruction not to have any e-mail trail for these accounts, and to send everything by fax." (Id. at 153).

On cross-examination, both Defendants questioned Rusch's credibility regarding his testimony on the instructions for stock transactions and the accountings he forwarded to Defendants. During cross-examination, Kerr addressed the lack of written records for stock transactions:

> Q: When those stocks are eventually sold, the whole activity of selling those stocks, getting those stocks into management companies, the mechanical process of doing that was done ply [sic] by Mr. Gabris or by you. You're the only ones that could control these. Right?
>
> A: Well, the mechanical process was Mr. Quiel would give me instructions, I would write them down, I would type up a fax, I would send that fax to Mr. Gabris and he would act upon it.
>
> Q: You say those were instructions Mr. Quiel would give you but I don't see any record of that in anything in writing. There's nothing in writing where he gave you instructions, is there?
>
> A: No. He was very specific not to keep any written—
>
> Q: There are no instructions, are there, that he put in writing to tell you to sell any stock or anything?
>
> A: No, there's not.

(Doc. 334 at 71–72). Kerr also discussed the accountings with Rusch:

> Q: Well, Mr. Kerr wasn't getting any bank records. Who was getting them?
>
> A: Mr. Gabris.
>
> Q: So Mr. Gabris got all these records. Did he send copies to you?
>
> A: Not of the bank statements.
>
> Q: So the knowledge of the money and what was going in the account was Mr. Gabris and you didn't have any knowledge about it?
>
> A: Well, no, that's not what I said. You asked me if the bank statements were sent to me. They were not. Mr. Gabris would send accountings of transactions, investments, positions in Excel format, send them to me by email and I would forward them on to Mr. Kerr and Mr. Quiel by fax.

11 (Doc. 334 at 58–59). Furthermore, Kerr questioned Rusch about whether there are records to show that Defendants knew what Rusch was doing:

> Q: I'm asking you at this point in time, did you have documents in the file that are copies of the documents that you sent to Mr. Kerr or Mr. Quiel, which would show how you were basically handling all this money and transferring it from account to account?
>
> A: I had them on computer file, yes. I did not have them in printed files, no.
>
> Q: Okay. And where is that computer file?
>
> A: I haven't had it for a number of years. Before this—before this occurred I'd lost the computer.
>
> Q: You lost the computer before this occurred?
>
> A: Yes. The hard drive was damaged.
>
> Q: So you don't really have any records that would show that you had been giving them reports about how all of this money was getting spent, correct?
>
> A: If I recall the discovery, I think there was some accounting in there. I mean, we're talking 20,000 pages. I don't recall it all, but—
>
> Q: You're talking about bank records. I'm talking about a report where you said you apprised them of what you were doing.
>
> A: I believe there is an Excel file in the documents, yes.
>
> Q: There's an actual file that you have broken down that shows how you're spending money all during this period of time from 2006 clear up to 2008?
>
> A: No. I'm saying there's an accounting from Mr. Gabris related to their transactions.
>
> Q: But you said you did have something that was on your computer, now it's lost?
>
> A: No. I'm saying there's an accounting from Mr. Gabris related to their transactions.
>
> Q: But you said you did have something that was on your computer, now it's lost?
>
> A: I had a number of files, and I believe I only had one or two at the time of this case coming about.
>
> Q: So in effect we just don't have any records from your computer.
>
> A: Other than what I have already produced, correct.

(Doc. 334 at 135–36). During cross-examination by Quiel, Rusch also discussed the lack of records and missing computer:

> Q: And you weren't able to—as you've been cooperating and working and helping with the Government, you weren't able to give them all of your own records because many of them were destroyed when your computer disappeared.
>
> A: I gave them all of the records that I had of myself and Mr. Kerr and Mr. Quiel.
>
> Q: When did your computer disappear?
>
> A: My computer didn't disappear. I had a—lost a hard drive, which means it had become damaged, I'm thinking 2009 maybe when I moved to Switzerland.
>
> Q: Where is the hard drive now?
>
> A: I haven't had it for years.

> Q: What did you do with it?
>
> A: I just replaced the computer.
>
> Q: Did you throw the hard drive away?
>
> A: Yes, I got rid of the entire computer.
>
> Q: So it's gone. If anybody wanted to check it out or try to reconstruct it or fix it, it's gone.
>
> A: Yes.
>
> Q: You never gave your clients an opportunity to try to have someone check out that hard drive to see if it could be salvaged, correct?
>
> 12 A: That's correct.
>
> Q: You never gave the Government an opportunity to check the hard drive to see if any of it could be salvaged, correct?
>
> A: Correct.

(Doc. 335 at 42–43). Throughout cross-examination, Defendants raised questions about whether the documents Rusch described exist or if Rusch and Gabris were acting without Defendants' knowledge.

The Government argues that the exhibits were "introduced on redirect for the limited purpose of rehabilitating Rusch's testimony and establishing that the documents indeed existed." (Doc. 310 at 7). On redirect, Rusch testified that "on each and every transaction Mr. Quiel would give me very specific instructions." (Doc. 335 at 89). In describing Exhibit 44, Rusch reiterated that Quiel provided information on the desired stock transaction, and then Rusch "wrote up the document" and "faxed it to Mr. Gabris." (Id. at 92, 95). When discussing Exhibits 51 and 52, Rusch described them as "e-mails that [he] received from Mr. Gabris that are accounting statements that [he] forwarded on to Messrs. Kerr and Mr. Quiel." (Id. at 101). The Government further questioned him:

> Q: And why did [Gabris] provide [Exhibit 51] to you?
>
> A: Mr. Quiel phoned me and asked me to get an accounting. I telephoned Mr. Gabris, obtained that accounting.
>
> Q: And what did you do once you received this e-mail?
>
> A: I printed it out and faxed it to Mr. Quiel and to Mr. Kerr, and then placed it in my file.

(Doc. 335 at 102).

Rusch's testimony on redirect examination was consistent with his testimony on direct and cross-examination. See United States v. Croft, 124 F.3d 1109, 1121 (9th Cir.1997) (holding that no recross is required when defendant sought to use sworn affidavits to establish "inconsistencies that could have been and were covered on cross-examination"). Unlike in Jones, where the witness identified the defendant and placed him at the scene of the crime for the first time on redirect, here Rusch repeated testimony that had already been covered. On cross-examination, Defendants had the opportunity to impeach Rusch regarding the stock transactions and accountings. That was not the case in Jones, where the Court found that the witness's testimony was not subject to the "rigorous adversarial testing" in the criminal proceedings. 982 F.2d at 384. Therefore, the present case is distinguishable from Jones.

In addition, the Court did not release Rusch from the subpoena; thus, he remained "subject to recall." (Doc. 335 at 159). Defendants could have recalled Rusch in their case-in-chief to further question him on direct examination.[6] See United States v. Ross, 33 F.3d 1507, 1518 (11th Cir.1994) ("prevention of recross-examination 'would not have prevented appellant from confronting his accusers; it would only have affected the order of confrontation. All the witnesses were equally available to the appellant and could have been called to the witness stand by him and questioned on direct examination as to any point he desired.' ") (quoting Hale v. United States, 435 F.2d 737, 752 n. 22 (5th Cir.1970)). Therefore, the Government did not raise new matters on redirect examination in violation of the Confrontation Clause. Accordingly, the Court denies Quiel's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

B. Rusch's Testimony

13 Quiel claims that the Court should have stricken Rusch's testimony because he "is a known perjurer," and the Government never established that the crime-fraud exception to attorney-client privilege applied.[7] (Doc. 301 at 5). The Supreme Court has held that “a conviction obtained by the knowing use of perjured testimony is fundamentally unfair, and must be set aside if there is any reasonable likelihood that the false testimony could have affected the judgment of the jury.” United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 103 (1976). A new trial is required if the false evidence is material, and its inclusion undermines the confidence in the judgment of the jury. Maxwell v. Roe, 628 F.3d 486, 499 (9th Cir.2010). Quiel alleges that Rusch committed perjury by: 1) denying on cross-examination that he told Defendants and their defense counsel in a January 2011 meeting that he had followed the law, but after hearing a secret tape recording of the meeting, admitted making the statements and claimed that it was “spin;” and 2) testifying that the “bathroom scene” on the secret tape recording was inserted into the tape to cover up something. (Doc. 301 at 5 n. 1).

First, Rusch did deny on cross-examination that he told Defendants and their counsel that everything was legal. (Doc. 332 at 50). However, he stated that, during the meeting, he was talking about possible lines of defense. (Id. at 51). On the audio recording, Rusch described proposed lines of defense as his “spin” on the matter. (Doc. 310 at 12). This statement was confirmed on redirect. (Doc. 335 at 141–42). Second, Rusch testified that he believed that other statements he made in the meeting were omitted from the tape during the “bathroom scene.” (Doc. 334 at 210). Rusch testified that he knew the beginning of the meeting was taken out of the tape, and that he was just speculating on why his other comments regarding viable defenses are not on the tape. (Id. at 211). It is the jury's province to determine the credibility of witnesses. United States v. Sanchez–Lima, 161 F.3d 545, 548 (9th Cir.1998). The tape and Rusch's statements were presented to the jury, who found Defendants guilty. Quiel has presented no evidence that proves Rusch committed perjury. Therefore, the Court denies Quiel's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

C. Redacted Documents

Quiel claims that the Court should have refused to admit redacted documents that the defense was unable to review. (Doc. 301 at 8). Quiel does not specify which exhibits he is referring to. Quiel does specifically object, however, to the Government's use of portions of the Individual Master File (IMF) without providing defense counsel the complete record. (Id.) Providing the relevant parts of the IMF to the defendant may be sufficient. United States v. Fusero, 106 F.Supp.2d 921, 925 (E.D.Mich.2000). The Government avows that it turned over all relevant portions of the IMF record. (Doc. 310 at 17). Quiel claims that there may be exculpatory evidence in the IMF, but he does not point to any specific evidence that may be in the file. (Doc. 301 at 9). Although not mentioned in Quiel's Motion, the Court notes that Quiel objected to the admission of IRS Form 4340 (Exhibit 263) and sought that the entire IMF file be disclosed at trial. (Doc. 258 at 102). This objection was overruled, and Quiel fails to establish evidence that would cause the Court to reconsider its prior decision. (Id. at 113). Accordingly, the Court denies Quiel's motion for judgment of acquittal or a new trial under this theory.

14 Based on the foregoing, Quiel's Motion for a Judgment of Acquittal or for a New Trial is denied.

IV. Conclusion

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that Kerr's Renewed Motion for Rule 29 Judgment of Acquittal or, in the alternative, a New Trial (Doc. 302) is denied.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Quiel's Motion for a Judgment of Acquittal or for a New Trial (Doc. 301) is denied.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2013 WL 4430917, 112 A.F.T.R.2d 2013-5772

Footnotes

[1] Quiel joined in Kerr's Renewed Motion for Rule 29 Judgment of Acquittal or, in the alternative, a New Trial. (See Doc. 304). Therefore, the Court's conclusions regarding Kerr's Motion apply to Quiel as well.

[2] This argument is addressed below in Quiel's Motion for a Judgment of Acquittal or for a New Trial, which Kerr joined in. (Doc. 314 at 15). Therefore, the Court's analysis of the issue applies equally to Kerr.

[3] Kerr fails to point to any part of the Record where the Court admitted Rusch's testimony pursuant to the crime-fraud exception.

[4] Quiel objected at trial that Rusch was testifying in violation of attorney-client privilege; however, the Court overruled the objection based on its previous rulings. (Doc. 331 at 36).

[5] The issue regarding the erroneous indictment has already been addressed above; accordingly, that analysis applies equally to Quiel.

[6] Furthermore, Rusch could be classified as a hostile witness or a witness identified as an adverse party under Federal Rule of Evidence 611(c)(2), allowing Defendants to use leading questions on direct examination.

[7] The Court addressed the crime-fraud exception issue in Kerr's Motion above. Accordingly, the Court will not readdress that issue here.

End of Document

522 B.R. 232
United States Bankruptcy Court,
C.D. California.

In re Saeed COHEN, Debtor.

No. 2:13–bk–26483–NB.
|
Signed Nov. 13, 2014.

Synopsis
Background: Chapter 11 debtor's former wife sought relief from automatic stay to continue her divorce litigation in state court. In addition, Internal Revenue Service (IRS) asserted claims against debtor's estate. Parties filed various objections.

Holdings: The Bankruptcy Court, Neal W. Bason, J., held that:

[1] judicial estoppel did not apply to statement in transcript in state court divorce proceedings by counsel for wife in which state court asked counsel to confirm that "the tax" was "a community property obligation" and he responded, "It has been paid" and "We're not disputing that it's a community property obligation";

[2] debts asserted in IRS's proof of claim were "incurred" before debtor's separation from wife, rather than when debtor reached a post-separation settlement agreement with the IRS, and thus, the community estate was liable for the debts;

[3] debtor's post-separation closing/settlement agreement with IRS did not violate automatic temporary restraining order (ATRO) under California statute restraining divorcing spouses from transferring community property; and

[4] wife did not have a prior, separate interest in interpled funds based on state court's award to her of one-half of monthly property rental proceeds pursuant to its order on temporary spousal support and child support.

Ordered accordingly.

Attorneys and Law Firms

233 Ron Bender, Krikor J. Meshefejian, Kurt Ramlo, Beth Ann R. Young, Levene, Neale, Bender, Yoo & Brill L.L.P, Los Angeles, CA, for Debtor.

United States Trustee (LA), Dare Law, Hatty K. Yip, Office of the UST/DOJ, Los Angeles, CA, for Trustee.

MEMORANDUM DECISION ON "ISSUE 1" RELATED TO WHETHER IRS CLAIM IS A COMMUNITY CLAIM

NEAL W. BASON, Bankruptcy Judge.

I. INTRODUCTION

Tax debts that arise during marriage are "community claims" in bankruptcy parlance, and they are payable from community property. In this case the debtor's wife argues that her interest in community property somehow ceased to be liable for those tax debts because, after she separated from the debtor, he entered into a settlement with the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS"). She cites no authority that is on point, and this court rejects her arguments. This court also holds that certain entities in which the bankruptcy estate holds an interest are entitled to interpled funds in litigation to which the IRS is a party, and sustains in part and overrules in part various objections to the claims asserted by the IRS.

II. BACKGROUND [1]

In 1989 the debtor, Mr. Cohen ("Debtor"), was married to Ms. Fariba Cohen ("Ms.Cohen"). They separated in 2010 (the parties disagree on the precise separation date, but it makes no difference for purposes of this memorandum decision). See Dkt. 60 at 10:10–11; 97; 460 at 5:12. Just before their divorce trial was set to resume, Debtor filed his voluntary chapter 11 bankruptcy petition on June 25, 2013 (the "Petition Date"). Dkt. 60 at 10:16–19. It is undisputed that by this time Debtor and Ms. Cohen had already incurred an astounding total of more than $13 million in legal fees in connection with their divorce.

Ms. Cohen has sought relief from the automatic stay (Section 362(a)) to continue her divorce litigation in State court. She has also argued that the automatic stay does not apply to some of the divorce proceedings, and that this court must or should abstain. She now reiterates many of these arguments. See, e.g., dkt. 242 at 15:18–21:12. The official committee of creditors holding unsecured claims (the 234 "Committee") and Debtor oppose that relief.

This court has rejected Ms. Cohen's arguments before, and does so again. Those arguments are not properly raised at this time (see dkt. 256 at 13:1–16:21) (Committee's Brief) and alternatively this court rejects the arguments on the merits, for the same reasons as before. Among other things, the divorce trial would eat up more millions of dollars on litigation that very likely would be irrelevant, such as allocation of assets between Debtor and Ms. Cohen when, in all likelihood, there will be few or no assets left to allocate. See, e.g., dkt. 60, 134, 135, 223, 256 at 16:22–18:14, and Adv. 2:14–ap–01484 dkt. 16 & 17.

On June 3, 2014, this court issued a scheduling order pursuant to a stipulation among Debtor, Ms. Cohen, the Committee, and the IRS. See Dkt. 375, 394, 407, 448. This memorandum decision addresses Issues 1(a), 1(b), and 1(c) in that scheduling order:

Issue # 1(a)—whether any of the claims asserted by the IRS against Debtor's estate are an allowed "community claim" as defined in Section 101(7), or if instead they are the separate debt of Debtor (or of Ms. Cohen) payable from property other than the kind identified in Section 541(a)(2);

Issue # 1(b)—resolution of two adversary proceedings: Lighton Property, LLC v. Cohen, 2:14–ap–01194–NB ("Lighton "), and Nazarian v. Cohen, 2:14–ap–01195–NB ("Nazarian "); and Issue # 1(c)—resolution of the Committee's objection to the IRS claims asserted in its amended proof of claim 3–2 (the "IRS Claim").

In connection with the foregoing issues this court has reviewed the parties' briefs in the bankruptcy case (dkt. 460–467), the documents referenced therein including in the Lighton and Nazarian adversary proceedings, the documents referenced below, and all other documents that this court has deemed relevant. For the reasons set forth below this court is not persuaded that it is necessary to hold an evidentiary hearing on any of these issues.

Some issues have been presented through formal motions for summary judgment, and others are presented as claim objections, all as modified by the scheduling order. The parties are all familiar with the standards for determining if there are genuine issues of material fact (see, e.g., Lighton Adv. dkt. 10, Ex. 33), and this court will not repeat them here.

A. Facts underlying Issue 1(a)

The IRS Claim is for over $8 million. The IRS asserts that most of this is a community claim that arises from 2003 through 2008 when Debtor and Ms. Cohen were married.

There is no dispute that Amp Plus, Inc. dba Elco Lighting ("Elco") and the income from it are community assets and have been at all relevant times. See Lighton Adv. dkt. 10, Ex. 33 (ex. 2 & 3 thereto). During the marriage, multiple foreign bank accounts were used "to hold unreported income from [Elco]," aggregating approximately $35 million by 2008. Dkt. 461 at 6:7–14.

Taxpayers who have foreign bank accounts with over $10,000 at any time during a calendar year are required to disclose the existence of these accounts to the IRS on a foreign bank account report ("FBAR"). 31 U.S.C. § 5314. See dkt. 461 at 7:12–17. For 2003 through 2008, Debtor and Ms. Cohen failed to file FBARs. To the contrary, they filed joint income tax returns verifying—incorrectly—that they did not have any such accounts. According to Debtor, this subjected 235 them to possible penalties of $58 million or more. Dkt. 461 at 8:24–25. [2]

In 2011, after Debtor and Ms. Cohen separated, he participated in a disclosure and settlement program, the Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Initiative ("OVDI"), and entered into a "closing" agreement (settlement) with the IRS for approximately $8.7 million. The IRS characterizes this as a "miscellaneous penalty" pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 7121. Dkt. 245 at 5:6–12; and see Proof of Claim 3–2.

Ms. Cohen notified the IRS that she was opting out of the OVDI. Instead she has attempted (so far unsuccessfully) to assert an entitlement to an "innocent spouse" defense under 26 U.S.C. § 6015. See Nazarian Adv. dkt. 12 at 3:2–3 (Ms. Cohen's Brief); see also dkt. 465 at 6 n. 8 (Committee Brief) and dkt. 245 at 12:20–13:2 (IRS Brief).

Meanwhile, before this bankruptcy court, Ms. Cohen has argued that the IRS Claim arises not from the 2003 through 2008 failure to file FBARs and false statements on the joint tax returns, but instead from the post-separation OVDI agreement, and therefore, she asserts, the debt was not "incurred" during marriage and the community property of the bankruptcy estate is not liable for it. In support of this argument, she asserts among other things that there is no such thing as the "miscellaneous penalty" claimed by the IRS, so the debt allegedly must have been incurred when the post-separation OVDI contract became effective.

B. Additional facts underlying Issue 1(b)

The Lighton and Nazarian interpleader actions have been referred to this bankruptcy court. See Lighton Adv. dkt. 10, Ex. 60; Nazarian Adv. dkt. 10, Ex. 76. In Lighton the issue is who, as between the IRS, Ms. Cohen, and Debtor or his bankruptcy estate is entitled to rents paid by Elco to its landlord and affiliate, Lighton Property, LLC ("Lighton"). In Nazarian the issue is who is entitled to repayment of approximately $1 million that was loaned to plaintiff Nazarian in 2009, either from Elco or from Debtor or both. The IRS has filed motions for summary judgment in both actions. See Lighton Adv. dkt. 10, Ex. 33; Nazarian Adv. dkt. 10, Ex. 28.

C. Additional facts underlying Issue 1(c)

The IRS Claim consists of (1) a secured claim for $8,208,469.29 based on the OVDI settlement and (2) certain other unsecured claims relating to Ms. Cohen's tax liabilities for years 2009 through 2011 and Mr. Cohen's tax liability for tax year 2012. The Committee has objected to the IRS Claim on various grounds, the other parties have filed briefs, and some of the issues initially raised by the Committee are no longer contested by the IRS. See dkt. 219, 242, 245, 254, 256.

*236 III. JURISDICTION, AUTHORITY, AND VENUE

The Supreme Court has distinguished between (a) bankruptcy courts' broad subject matter jurisdiction and (b) their narrower constitutional and statutory "authority" to issue final judgments or orders. Whenever the bankruptcy court lacks such authority then its determinations constitute only proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law that are subject to de novo review by an Article III court. See Stern v. Marshall, 564 U.S. 2, 131 S.Ct. 2594, 180 L.Ed.2d 475 (2011); Law v. Siegel, —— U.S. ——, 134 S.Ct. 1188, 188 L.Ed.2d 146 (2014); In re Bellingham Ins. Agency, Inc., 702 F.3d 553, 567 (9th Cir.2012), aff'd sub nom Executive Benefits Ins. Agency v. Arkison, —— U.S. ——, 134 S.Ct. 2165, 189 L.Ed.2d 83 (2014) Executive Benefits Ins. Agency v. Arkison, —— U.S. ——, 134 S.Ct. 2165, 189 L.Ed.2d 83 (2014). This court has an independent duty to examine these issues. See In re Rosson, 545 F.3d 764, 769 n. 5 (9th Cir.2008) (subject matter jurisdiction); In re Pringle, 495 B.R. 447, 455 (9th Cir. BAP 2013) (authority under Stern).

A. This court has subject matter jurisdiction

Bankruptcy courts are "units" of the federal district courts, to which all bankruptcy proceedings have been referred or local rule or standing order in each district. See 28 U.S.C. § 151; Cent. Dist. Cal. General Order No. 13–05; LBR 5011–1(a). As such, this court has jurisdiction over all civil proceedings (1) "arising under title 11," i.e., any proceedings to enforce rights created by the Bankruptcy Code, (2) "arising in" a bankruptcy case, i.e., other proceedings that would not exist outside a bankruptcy case, such as case administration, or (3) "related to" a bankruptcy case, i.e., any proceedings the outcome of which could conceivably have any effect on the bankruptcy estate. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 157(a), 1334(b); In re Harris, 590 F.3d 730, 737 (9th Cir.2009) (summarizing jurisdictional standards); In re Marshall, 600 F.3d 1037, 1054 (9th Cir.2010) (same); In re Fietz, 852 F.2d 455, 457 (9th Cir.1988) (adopting "related to" test of Pacor, Inc. v. Higgins, 743 F.2d 984 (3rd Cir.1984)).

The matters addressed in this memorandum decision are all quintessentially "arising under" and "arising in" proceedings because they consist of determining the parties' "hierarchically ordered claims to a pro rata share of the bankruptcy res." Stern, 131 S.Ct. at 2614 (quoting Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492 U.S. 33, 56, 109 S.Ct. 2782, 106 L.Ed.2d 26 (1989)). (The quoted phrase is from the Supreme Court's discussion of a non-jurisdictional issue—what proceedings are "core"—but the same concept presumably applies to jurisdictional issues because the Court interpreted statutory "core" proceedings to be coterminous with statutory "arising in" and "arising under" jurisdiction. Id. at 2605.)

Alternatively, assuming for the sake of argument that there were any question on this point, this court at the very least has "related to" jurisdiction. In short, this bankruptcy court has subject matter jurisdiction.

B. This court has the authority to issue final judgments or orders

The bankruptcy courts' authority to issue final judgments or orders is governed both (1) by federal statute and (2) by the United States Constitution.

1. Statutory authority

Bankruptcy courts have the statutory authority to issue final judgments or orders in "core" proceedings. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2). Congress used that terminology in an attempt to track the Supreme 237 Court plurality's decision in Northern Pipeline Constr. Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 71, 102 S.Ct. 2858, 73 L.Ed.2d 598 (1982).

The statutory list is non-exclusive (28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)) but the courts have been careful to interpret the statute and its "catchall" provisions to stay within constitutional limits, and they have considered "factors such as whether the rights involved exist independent of title 11, depend on state law for their resolution, existed prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition, or were significantly affected by the filing of the bankruptcy case." In re Cinematronics, Inc., 916 F.2d 1444, 1450 n. 5 (9th Cir.1990). See also In re Castlerock Prop's, 781 F.2d 159 (9th Cir.1986). This court also bears in mind that a "determination that a proceeding is not a core proceeding shall not be made solely on the basis that its resolution may be affected by State law." 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(3).

The issues addressed in this memorandum decision come within the statutory definition of core proceedings, including allowance or disallowance of the IRS claims (28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(B)); determination of the extent and priority of its asserted liens and interests over the claims of Ms. Cohen and other parties in interest (id., subpara. (K)); and adjustment of the debtor's financial relationships with the IRS and Ms. Cohen in her assertion of claims and interests in the bankruptcy res (id., subpara. (O)). This court therefore has statutory authority to issue a final judgment or order.

2. Constitutional authority

To safeguard "individual liberty and separation of powers" there are constitutional limits on the authority of bankruptcy judges, who are not appointed pursuant to Article III of the Constitution, to issue final judgments and orders. Stern, 131 S.Ct. at 2615. In analyzing those limits the Supreme Court has focused primarily on whether the "public rights" exception to Article III applies. See, e.g., id. at 2611–15 & 2618–19 (plurality opinion).

One definition of "public rights" is that if "it depends upon the will of [C]ongress whether a remedy in the courts shall be allowed at all,' [then] Congress could limit the extent to which a judicial forum was available." Stern at 2612 (quoting Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 59 U.S. 272, 18 How. 272, 284, 15 L.Ed. 372 (1855)). For example, a bankruptcy discharge arguably is a matter of public rights because Congress need not provide any discharge at all.

The same reasoning arguably could apply more broadly, because Congress need not enact any bankruptcy laws at all. At one point the Supreme Court stated that "the restructuring of debtor-creditor relations, which is at the core of the federal bankruptcy power ... may well be a 'public right.' " Marathon, 458 U.S. at 71, 102 S.Ct. 2858 (plurality opinion).

More recent decisions, however, have expressly declined to endorse such a general rule. See Stern, 131 S.Ct. at 2614 n. 7 (plurality opinion); Bellingham, 702 F.3d at 561 (acknowledging "demise" of general rule that controversies at the "core of the bankruptcy process implicated public rights"). Unfortunately, no alternative general rule has emerged. As the Supreme Court has acknowledged, its reasoning has not been "entirely consistent." Stern, 131 S.Ct. at 2611 (plurality); and id. at 2621 (Scalia, J., concurring).

Nevertheless, the Stern plurality has articulated two alternative tests to determine when a Bankruptcy Judge can issue a final judgment or order:

> ... Congress may not bypass Article III simply because a proceeding may have some bearing on a bankruptcy case; the question is whether the action at issue 238 [a] stems from the bankruptcy itself or [b] would necessarily be resolved in the claims allowance process. [Stern, 131 S.Ct.

> at 2618 (underlining added, citation omitted)]

These two alternatives are examined below.

a. Constitutional authority to adjudicate claims that "stem[ ] from the bankruptcy itself"

This first test—whether the action at issue "stems from the bankruptcy itself" (Stern, 131 S.Ct. at 2618)—initially sounds very similar to the pre-Stern test—whether the controversy at issue is at the "core of the bankruptcy process." Bellingham, 702 F.3d at 561. Fortunately, the Ninth Circuit has explained, after a careful review of Granfinanciera, Stern, and other Supreme Court cases, that the difference is whether there is a jury right:

> Stern fully equated bankruptcy litigants' Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial in federal bankruptcy proceedings with their right to proceed before an Article III judge. [Bellingham, 702 F.3d 553, 563]

In other words, under Stern's first test, the statutory definition of core proceedings fails to meet constitutional muster when a party is entitled to have the proceeding heard by a jury.

In this case, the parties have not established that they are being deprived of any right to a jury as to any of the issues addressed in this memorandum decision. Therefore, under Stern's first alternative test, this bankruptcy court has the constitutional authority to issue a final judgment or order on all of the issues presented.

b. Alternative Constitutional authority to adjudicate matters that "would necessarily be resolved in the claims allowance process"

In referring to an action that "would necessarily be resolved in the claims allowance process" (Stern, 131 S.Ct. at 2618, emphasis added), the Stern plurality apparently means to encompass both (i) the adjudication of "hierarchically ordered claims to a pro rata share of the bankruptcy res" (id. at 2614) and (ii) the adjudication of constitutionally non-core issues that are necessary to the allowance or disallowance of filed claims. Under the latter principle, when a party has filed a proof of claim, then the bankruptcy court can issue a final judgment or order if the allowance or disallowance of that claim necessarily requires adjudication of issues that normally would require a jury or are not statutorily core. See Stern, 131 S.Ct. at 2615–18 (plurality opinion, Part III.C.2); Langenkamp v. Culp, 498 U.S. 42, 111 S.Ct. 330, 112 L.Ed.2d 343 (1990) (although alleged recipient of avoidable preference normally is entitled to jury, there is no such right if creditor files proof of claim, because claims allowance process necessarily involves determination of preference issues); Katchen v. Landy, 382 U.S. 323, 86 S.Ct. 467, 15 L.Ed.2d 391 (1966) (bankruptcy referee could use summary proceeding without jury to determine preference claim, because preference issues necessarily had to be resolved in the course of claims-allowance process); Bellingham, 702 F.3d at 562, n. 7 (distinguishing final adjudication of fraudulent transfer action by bankruptcy court when creditor had filed a proof of claim and it was "not possible" to rule on allowance of the proof of claim without first resolving the fraudulent transfer issue) (citation omitted); In re Deitz, 760 F.3d 1038 (9th Cir.2014), adopting In re Deitz, 469 B.R. 11, 17–24 (9th Cir. BAP 2012) (bankruptcy court can enter final judgment on underlying non-core claims that necessarily are part of adjudicating nondischargeability action); 239 In re Wash. Coast I, LLC, 485 B.R. 393, 406–07 (9th Cir. BAP 2012) ("[T]he determination of priority between two creditors ... is not only tied to the claims resolution process, but it also involves the adjudication of rights created by the Bankruptcy Code under § 506.... Accordingly, the bankruptcy court's exercise of power over the lien priority dispute was a constitutional delegation of power from Congress.") (citation omitted).

In this case, Issues 1(a), 1(b) and 1(c) are part of determining the "hierarchically ordered claims to a pro rata share of the bankruptcy res." Stern, 131 S.Ct. at 2614. In addition, supposing for the sake of discussion that some of the parties' underlying claims normally would have to be tried to a jury or are statutorily non-core, those underlying claims "would necessarily be resolved in the [bankruptcy] claims allowance process." Id. at 2618 (emphasis added). For each of these alternative reasons, this court has the constitutional authority to issue a final judgment or order on all of the issues presented.

c. Alternative constitutional authority to adjudicate pretrial matters

Even in a constitutionally non-core proceeding under Stern, the bankruptcy court can resolve pretrial matters, including case-dispositive motions that do not require factual findings. See In re Professional Satellite and Communication, LLC, 2012 WL 6012829, at *3 (S.D.Cal.); In re Heller Ehrman, LLP, 2011 WL 4542512, at *3 (Bankr.N.D.Cal.) (citing In re Healthcentral.com, 504 F.3d 775, 787 (9th Cir.2007)). See also Arkison, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 2165, 189 L.Ed.2d 83 (district court's de novo review was same under appeal from summary judgment ruling as it would have been for proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law).

In this case, the issues can be determined on the uncontested facts and the law (with very limited exceptions, as to which this court is not ruling, as noted below). Therefore, this is an alternative reason why this court has the constitutional authority to issue a final judgment or order on all of the issues addressed below.

d. Alternative constitutional authority if parties have expressly or impliedly consented

At least under current the Ninth Circuit authority, parties can consent to final adjudication of claims that are constitutionally non-core, and such consent may be implied. See Bellingham, 702 F.3d 553 (litigant consented to adjudication by bankruptcy judge by failing timely to object), aff'd on other grounds, Arkison, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 2165, 189 L.Ed.2d 83; Pringle, 495 B.R. 447 (rebuttable presumption that failure to challenge authority to issue final order is intentional and indicates consent). See also Stern, ––– U.S. ––––, 131 S.Ct. 2594, 2608, 180 L.Ed.2d 475 (if litigant "believed that the Bankruptcy Court lacked the authority to decide his claim ... then he should have said so—and said so promptly.").

In this case, Debtor and the Committee have expressly consented to this court's entry of final orders or judgments (see dkt. 394 at 25–27), but both the IRS and Ms. Cohen have expressly declined to provide such consent (dkt. 387, 419). Accordingly, this alternative ground for this court's authority to enter final orders or judgments is not available.

C. Conclusion as to jurisdiction, authority, and venue

For the reasons set forth above, this bankruptcy court has both subject matter jurisdiction and the authority to enter final judgments and orders on the issues addressed below. Venue is proper under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1408(1) and 1409(a).

*240 IV. DISCUSSION

[1] As a preliminary matter, the Committee argues (dkt. 465, 13:13–20 & n. 17) for judicial estoppel. The Committee cites a transcript (dkt. 257–2, Ex. B) in which the State court asks Ms. Cohen's counsel to confirm that "the tax" is "a community property obligation" and he responds, "It has been paid. We're not disputing that it's a community property obligation." Id. at 9:16–17 & 9:25–26. It is not clear what tax is "the tax" in this quoted colloquy, but the IRS claim in this case has not "been paid" so it appears that Ms. Cohen's counsel was referring to some other tax debt. In any event, the evidence is not sufficiently clear to apply judicial estoppel.

A few of Ms. Cohen's papers and arguments appear to have been presented without observing the normal procedural requirements do so (see dkt. 256 at 2:9–15 & 13:1–16:11) (Committee Brief). Nevertheless, this court has considered these documents and for the reasons set forth below, is unpersuaded.

One more preliminary issue is that prepetition the IRS filed five notices of federal tax liens with respect to its miscellaneous penalty of over $8 million. For most of the following discussion, that is irrelevant. The overriding issue is whether there is any claim at all against community property, not whether that claim is secured or unsecured.

For ease of discussion, the following analysis focuses first on Ms. Cohen's arguments regarding the IRS claim. Other issues are discussed thereafter.

A. Federal bankruptcy law

Community property:

> The commencement of a [bankruptcy] case ... creates an estate. Such estate is comprised of [in addition to other assets] [a]ll interests of the debtor and the debtor's > spouse in community property as of the commencement of the case that is—

>
> (A) under the sole, equal, or joint management and control of the debtor; or
>
> (B) liable for an allowable claim against the debtor, or for both an allowable claim against the debtor and an allowable claim against the debtor's spouse, to the extent that such interest is so liable. [11 U.S.C. § 541(a)(2)]

Such property is referred to in this Memorandum Decision as "Estate Community Property."

Community claim:

> The term "community claim" means claim that arose before the commencement of the case concerning the debtor for which [Estate Community Property] is liable, whether or not there is an such property at the time of the commencement of the case. (11 U.S.C. § 101(7)]

Distributions. The Bankruptcy Code's distribution scheme regarding community property is generally intended to parallel state law. As discussed in more detail below, creditors are entitled to be paid first, and if there are any remaining assets in the bankruptcy estate then those assets are distributed to the equity owners, i.e., the spouses. If there are any differences between State law and the bankruptcy distribution scheme, then the state law scheme is preempted. See, e.g., 6 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 726.04 & 726.05[1] (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer eds., 16th ed.) (State laws are preempted to extent of any inconsistency with Bankruptcy Code's "waterfall" of distributions out of "sub-estates").

In this case, Ms. Cohen has not asserted a claim for any prepetition support payments (as distinguished from any postpetition 241 support payments that might be payable under 11 U.S.C. § 1129(a)(14)). Nor has Ms. Cohen asserted that most of the property at issue is her separate property. Nevertheless, some of her arguments presuppose that she is entitled to distributions on a par with creditors, or ahead of them. For the reasons discussed below, those arguments are contrary to California law, and alternatively they are contrary to the Bankruptcy Code's distribution scheme.

B. Issue 1(a): the bulk of the IRS Claim is a community claim

1. Governing law

[2] "Apart from [any provisions of federal bankruptcy that override State law], Congress has generally left the determination of property rights in the assets of a bankrupt's estate to state law." Butner v. United States, 440 U.S. 48, 54, 99 S.Ct. 914, 59 L.Ed.2d 136 (1979). See also In re McCoy, 111 B.R. 276, 279 (9th Cir. BAP 1990).

Under California law, it is helpful to distinguish between in personam liability and in rem liability. Creditors can reach community property to pay debts incurred by either spouse during marriage, regardless whether any right to reimbursement exists as between the spouses. See Lezine v. Sec. Pac. Fin. Serv., Inc., 14 Cal.4th 56, 64, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d 76, 925 P.2d 1002 (1996). California Family Code section 910 codifies this in rem liability:

> Except as otherwise expressly provided by statute, the community estate is liable for a debt incurred by either spouse before or during marriage, regardless of which spouse has the management and control of the property and regardless of whether one or both spouses are parties to the debt or to a judgment for the debt. [Cal. Fam. C. 910(a), emphasis added. See also Cal.Code Civ. P. § 695.028.]

The phrase, "during marriage" does not include "the period during which the spouses are living separate and apart before a judgment of dissolution of marriage or legal separation of the parties." Cal. Fam. C. § 910(b). Debtor and Ms. Cohen were separated in 2010. See dkt. 60 at 10:10–11; dkt. 97; dkt. 460 at 5:12.

Therefore the question is whether the debts asserted in the IRS proof of claim were "incurred" before or after the 2010 separation. California Family Code section 903 defines when an obligation is incurred:

> A debt is 'incurred' at the following time:
>
> (a) In the case of a contract, at the time the contract is made.
>
> (b) In the case of a tort, at the time the tort occurs.
>
> (b) In other cases, at the time the obligation arises.
>
> [Cal. Fam. C. § 903, emphasis added]

The IRS, the Committee and Debtor argue that, under subdivision "(c)" above, the debts were "incurred" before the 2010 separation when the tax obligations arose. That is either (i) in 2003 through 2008 when Debtor and Ms. Cohen, despite having FBAR accounts, represented on their tax returns that they had no such accounts, failed to file FBAR forms, and did not pay the associated taxes, or (ii) at the latest, in 2009 when the last of those forms and payments were due and that triggered associated penalties. The IRS briefs cite ample authority for this proposition. See, e.g., dkt. 460 (citing, inter alia, Espinosa v. Comm'r, 24 Fed.Appx. 825, 826 (9th Cir.2001); Edelson v. Comm'r, 829 F.2d 828, 833–34 (9th Cir.1987); Jeffries v. Comm'r, 2010 T.C.M. 172 (2010)).

Ms. Cohen argues that the debt is actually a contract debt, created by Debtor's post-separation closing/settlement agreement with the IRS, and therefore the debt 242 supposedly was "incurred" after the marriage. Ms. Cohen's arguments are unpersuasive.

2. The plain meaning of the statute is contrary to Ms. Cohen's argument

Ms. Cohen cites no authority that tax debts incurred pre-separation are somehow transformed by settlement into debts "incurred" post-separation. That is an unnatural reading of the statute. For these reasons alone this court rejects her argument.

3. Relevant cases are contrary to Ms. Cohen's argument

Although Ms. Cohen's (strained) argument is apparently unprecedented in any reported decisions, what authority does exist strongly supports the contrary conclusion. One such decision is In re Marriage of Hirsch, 211 Cal.App.3d 104, 259 Cal.Rptr. 39 (Cal.Ct.App.1989) (cited in Debtor's Brief, dkt. 461, 15:22–16:3).

The facts in Hirsch are very analogous to this case. During marriage the husband was a director of a failed bank and that failure led to lawsuits. After separation, the husband settled those lawsuits, although the wife refused to participate in any settlements. The wife argued that the debts under the settlements were not community debts, and the trial court agreed, but the court of appeal reversed. Ms. Cohen points out that the decision does not explicitly state that the obligations at issue were "incurred" during the marriage, but that is an essential prerequisite to that court's holding. The fact that this issue was not discussed only shows that the court of appeal viewed it as obvious: settlement of debts incurred pre-separation does not somehow convert them into debts "incurred" post-separation.

Another decision contrary to Ms. Cohen's argument is In re Marriage of Hargrave, 36 Cal.App.4th 1313, 43 Cal.Rptr.2d 474 (1995). In that case, tax debts incurred during the marriage were settled by the husband after the marriage had terminated, and the community property was still held liable for those debts even though the IRS had determined that the wife was an "innocent spouse."

Analogous authority in the bankruptcy context points to the same outcome. The Supreme Court has held that, although a settlement agreement and releases may have "worked a kind of novation," that did not convert nondischargeable tort liabilities into a dischargeable contract debt. Archer v. Warner, 538 U.S. 314, 323, 123 S.Ct. 1462, 155 L.Ed.2d 454 (2003).

4. Ms. Cohen's attempts to disregard the pre-separation tax debts are unconvincing

Ms. Cohen attempts to bolster her argument by citing numerous cases treating "closing agreements" with the IRS as contracts. See dkt. 242 at 14:11–22 and dkt. 466 at 7:12–26 (Ms. Cohen's Briefs). But cf. dkt. 461 at 13:16–14:20 (Debtor's Brief, citing authority that rejects the treatment of closing agreements as contracts).

From this premise Ms. Cohen appears to reason that the liability to the IRS was a purely contractual creation that sprang into existence and was "incurred" post-separation in 2010. This court agrees with the preliminary assessment by the State court (Hon. Mark A. Juhas):

> ... the fallacy of [Ms. Cohen's] argument is [that] the agreement that was made with the I.R.S. isn't a separate property agreement.... He [Debtor] didn't go out and cheat on his taxes after [the] date of separation. All of this arises from things that happened during marriage. [Dkt. 464, Ex. D at 28:9–16]

In a similar vein, Ms. Cohen makes numerous arguments to try to distance the liability under the closing agreement from 243 any association with the 2003 through 2008 tax years. She argues (dkt. 466, 11:1–12:4) that there is no statute that authorizes the IRS to issue a "miscellaneous penalty," and that liability under the closing agreement was calculated not based on the FBAR penalty but instead based on a different formula used for OVDI agreements (id. and dkt. 254 at 5:3–7). She asserts that FBAR penalties only "arise" once the IRS brings a lawsuit, and that the IRS, having elected not to bring such a suit did not pursue FBAR penalties, forfeited the right to allege that the debts at issue were related to the 2003 through 2008 tax years, and instead elected a post-separation contractual liability. Alternatively, she cites authority that, at least for some purposes, FBAR penalties are not treated as "tax" penalties. Dkt. 466 at 11:7–19. Finally (at least as the Committee interprets Ms. Cohen's arguments, dkt. 256 at 9:7–21) she may be arguing that the penalty must be disallowed because it is unauthorized. These are all red herrings.

There is no evidence to contradict the statements in the closing agreement itself (Nazarian Adv. dkt. 10–2, Ex. 28 at PDF pp. 260–64) that it relates to the 2003 through 2008 tax years. Those were the years in which Debtor and Ms. Cohen failed to disclose their FBAR accounts and pay associated taxes, and the IRS has identified "11 different statutory penalties in each of the disclosed years" for which the "miscellaneous penalty" was a "proxy" (dkt. 460 at 11:25–26). The IRS has broad statutory authority to settle taxpayer disputes (26 U.S.C. §§ 7121, 7122) and its settlement prior to actually commencing suit does not take away from the fact that it was liabilities for the 2003 through 2008 tax years that were being settled. Nor is there anything inconsistent with the IRS using a settlement formula under the OVDI program that is similar to, but not as complex as, the calculus that would have actually been used in any FBAR lawsuit. Ms. Cohen has not cited any authority that would limit the IRS' ability to settle the pre-separation tax liabilities in this manner, or to include claims for several tax years within one settlement and label it a "miscellaneous penalty." Her attempt to characterize the pre-separation tax debts as post-separation contract debt is essentially sleight of hand.

5. Ms. Cohen's objection that the maximum liability would be $60,000 is unpersuasive

Ms. Cohen appears to take the position (dkt. 466 at 10:24–25, 13:4–5, and dkt. 245 Ex. 1 at 26 (letter to IRS)) that the maximum penalty that could have been asserted against Debtor was $10,000 per year for a total of $60,000. If that is so, the Committee argues (dkt. 256 at 7:21–9:6), then perhaps the closing agreement and IRS liens created an unwarranted advantage for the IRS over similarly situated creditors (although the Committee offers no independent argument in support of Ms. Cohen's position).

As Ms. Cohen concedes (dkt. 466 at 10:24–1), the $10,000 limit only applies if Debtor (and Ms. Cohen) acted without any willful intent to violate the FBAR requirements. She also concedes (id.) that if willfulness is shown then the penalties can greatly exceed the dollar amount of the closing agreement.

As a factual matter, Ms. Cohen disputes that she or Debtor had the willful intent to violate the FBAR statutes —she alleges that their tax advisor did not tell them about this obligation. But she does not dispute, and cannot dispute, the false statements on their tax returns that there were no foreign accounts over $10,000. In addition, Debtor recites a litany of facts (dkt. 461 at 15:5–17:22) that could readily result in a finding of willfulness if the 244 dispute had ever gone to trial. Ms. Cohen has not disputed those underlying facts, and even if she did, Debtor has conceded them. Therefore, if the case had ever gone to trial, there would have been every reason for a finder of fact to conclude that Debtor, at least, acted willfully.

The IRS and Debtor also provide calculations showing that any finding of willfulness easily could have resulted in liability many times the roughly $8 million settlement, up to or exceeding, in different scenarios, $26.25 million (dkt. 460 at 12 n. 6) (IRS example) or $58 million (dkt. 461 at 8:24–25, Debtor example), or even $90 million (dkt. 461 at 4:18–26, Debtor example). Ms. Cohen has not disputed these examples.

6. Ms. Cohen's attempts to transform the community claim into Debtor's sole obligation are unavailing

Ms. Cohen appears to argue that, because Debtor and the IRS entered into the closing agreement without her, she and all community property are exonerated from any liability. She also asserts that Debtor should have litigated defenses that, she claims, would have either eliminated or reduced the penalties to a substantially lesser amount. Dkt. 466 at 10:24–11:6 & 14:7–16. Other parties disagree about her purported innocence (see, e.g., dkt. 460 at 11:28–12:8 and dkt. 461 at 7:18–26, 8:24–25, & 11:17–18) but those disagreements raise factual issues that this court need not address because on the undisputed facts Ms. Cohen's arguments miss the mark.

The IRS concedes (dkt. 245 at 12:2 and 12:12–19) that its claim for the miscellaneous penalty is what it calls a "[s]eparate" debt of Debtor. In other words, although the IRS asserts in personam liability against Debtor and in rem liability against community property, the IRS is not asserting (at least in its claim filed in this bankruptcy case) in personam liability against Ms. Cohen. Therefore, to the extent that Ms. Cohen is raising defenses to her own in personam liability her arguments are irrelevant.

[3] Ms. Cohen apparently is also attempting to second-guess Debtor's settlement of his own liability. She claims that by entering into that settlement Debtor violated the automatic temporary restraining order ("ATRO") under California Family Code § 2040(a)(2). Among other things, the ATRO restrains both divorcing spouses from > transferring, encumbering, hypothecating, concealing, or in any way disposing of any property, whether real or personal, whether community, quasi-community, or separate, without the written consent of the other party or an order of the court, except in the usual course of business or for the necessities of life.... [Cal. Fam. C. § 2040(a)(2)]

It is difficult to see how Debtor's settlement of his own liability amounts to "transferring" any "property" (or any other violation of the ATRO). Ms. Cohen argues, however, that Debtor violated the ATRO by:

> retroactively impair[ing] the couple's interests in community property. See, e.g., roeger [Roeger] v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross, 54 Cal.3d 26 [283 Cal.Rptr. 584, 812 P.2d 931] (1991) (the transfer of community property realty during marriage, in violation of statute requiring spousal consent, may be invalidated in its entirety by non-consenting spouse). [Dkt. 242 at 14:27–28]

First, there was nothing "retroactive[ ]" about the liability under the closing agreement. That agreement was a settlement of the 2003–08 tax year debts that were incurred prior to separation.

Second, Ms. Cohen cites no authority that one spouse's post-separation settlement 245 of his own liability amounts to a "transfer" of community property. The one case she does cite, Droeger, was decided under a different statute governing consensual liens, and has been distinguished by the California Supreme Court, which interpreted that statute not to limit the usual rule that community property is liable for the debts of either spouse incurred during marriage. Lezine, 14 Cal.4th 56, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d 76, 925 P.2d 1002.

Conceivably (although Ms. Cohen does not actually articulate this argument) a settlement that exceeded the liability to which community property was already exposed could be interpreted as the equivalent of a "transfer" of such property within the meaning of the ATRO statute. But Ms. Cohen offers no reason why Debtor would choose to settle in excess of his exposure to liability. To the contrary, as set forth above, his actual exposure was far greater than the settlement.

For all of these reasons, there is neither any legal authority nor any factual basis for Ms. Cohen's argument that Debtor's settlement with the IRS somehow violated the ATRO and could be avoided.

7. Conclusion as to Issue 1(a): which portions of the IRS Claim constitute "community claims" under § 101(7)

By far the largest portion of the filed IRS Claim is for the miscellaneous penalty, which arises from the 2003 through 2008 tax years and is for debts that were incurred prior to separation. Ms. Cohen has not established that the settlement of those debts in 2010 somehow retroactively caused them to be "incurred" after separation. The IRS has a community claim for the miscellaneous penalty.

Another portion of IRS Claim is for unpaid taxes arising from Ms. Cohen's separately-filed 2009 tax return. The IRS has a community claim for this pre-separation debt, for essentially the same reasons that the miscellaneous penalty is a community claim. The Estate Community Property is liable for the debt of either spouse incurred prior to separation, so Ms. Cohen's pre-separation 2009 tax debts are properly characterized as "in rem" community claims. See 11 U.S.C. 102(2) (" 'claim against the debtor' includes claim against property of the debtor).

The IRS Claim also includes some of Ms. Cohen's post-separation tax debts for 2011 and 2012, and those do not qualify as community claims. As the Committee concedes, however, the IRS can attempt to collect any such debts from Ms. Cohen, based on her in personam liability, and in addition the IRS may be able to collect from any separate property interests that she has. This court agrees with the Committee (dkt. 256 at 7:10–14) that, to the extent that the IRS seeks to "garnish" any distributions to Ms. Cohen from this bankruptcy estate, simply filing a proof of claim is not sufficient; but no doubt the IRS can achieve the same result in various other ways.

The IRS claim with respect to Ms. Cohen's 2010 tax obligations falls somewhere in the middle of the foregoing analysis. That is the year when the spouses separated, and the parties have not specifically briefed how to treat the tax liabilities arising in that situation. The IRS has cited authority that taxes accrue at the end of the tax year (see, e.g., dkt. 460) but that general rule may be subject to exceptions in the divorce situation, or perhaps taxpayers can make some sort of short year election or other options. In addition, the parties disagree about the precise date of separation. For all of these reasons, it is beyond the scope of this Memorandum Decision to determine whether certain portions of the IRS Claim arising from Ms. Cohen's 2010 tax year are or are not community claims. That issue is reserved for 246 later determination, and if helpful the parties can address at a future status conference what procedures should apply to such determination.

The last component of the IRS Claim is for Debtor's 2012 tax year. That debt arose in the post-separation period, so it is not a community claim. It can be collected from separate property of Debtor, or from distributions, if any, that he receives on account of his equity ownership in property of the bankruptcy estate.

D. Issue 1(b): the interpled funds

1. Limits of IRS lien

As the Committee points out, the IRS has conceded that its "lien does not attach to property and earnings acquired post-petition by the estate." Dkt. 245 (IRS Opp. to Committee's Claim Obj.) at 11:1–2. See also dkt. 219 at 4:8–19 (Committee Obj. to IRS Claim). In addition, as Ms. Cohen points out (dkt. 467 at 7:20–8:2), there is no showing that any IRS lien extends beyond Debtor's own property to the revenues of entities in which Debtor holds an interest.

The IRS has not disputed these assertions, although it adds the caveat that it expects such property and earnings to be used to fund a chapter 11 plan, including payment of its claim, and "[t]o the extent future distributions from Elco and Lighton threaten [its] secured position in the value of the shares of stock and/or membership interests that are part of the estate, the [IRS] is entitled to adequate protection." Dkt. 245 at 11:3–10. Those issues are not before this court for decision at this time, and for present purposes the point is only that the IRS does not assert a lien on the interpled funds.

This moots the various arguments by Ms. Cohen (dkt. 467 at 8:3–27) and the Committee (dkt. 465 at 16:7–13) regarding whether Debtor was only a nominal payee, whether the IRS can rely on "reverse piercing," and the applicability of alter ego or similar doctrines. The remaining issue is whether Ms. Cohen has established any basis to receive distributions from the interpled funds ahead of the bankruptcy estate. She has not.

2. Limits of Ms. Cohen's interests

[4] Ms. Cohen asserts that she has a prior, separate interest in the interpled funds "by reason of the Superior Court's award to [her] of one-half of the monthly Lighton Property rental proceeds, pursuant to its 'Order on Temporary Spousal Support, Child Support, and Other Related Matters' filed on August 10, 2011." Dkt. 467, 6:21–26. This court does not agree.

As the Committee points out, that order is a temporary spousal support order that does not permanently define relative property interests. See dkt. 465, 20:16–23 (Committee Brief) and Nazarian Adv. dkt. 10–1, Ex. 16, at 156–59) (Order for temporary support). This temporary allocation has no binding effect and is not controlling. In any event, as the Committee argues (dkt. 465 at 16:15–28), once this bankruptcy case commenced the automatic stay superseded any temporary spousal support order insofar as any property division. See In re Teel, 34 B.R. 762, 764 (9th Cir. BAP 1983).

Ms. Cohen appears to assert (dkt. 467 at 6:13–7:14 & 9:19–21) that her claimed 50% interest in the Lighton interpled funds attached prior to the bankruptcy case. But her asserted interest in those funds was for purposes of paying support, and she has not argued that she was owed any unpaid support as of the petition date, so that argument is unavailing.

This leaves Ms. Cohen without a basis to assert a "claim" on a par with creditors, let alone a priority over creditors' claims (apart from any unpaid postpetition support 247 payments). See 11 U.S.C. §§ 507(a)(1) and 1129(a)(14)). As noted above, this accords with the general rule that creditors are entitled to be paid first, and thereafter any distributions on account of equity ownership interests are made to the divorcing spouses.

For example, in the factually similar case of Hirsch the court of appeal applies the usual rules that "[i]n dividing the community property equally under the mandate of [California divorce law], the court must distribute both the assets and the obligations of the community so that the residual assets awarded to each party after the deduction of the obligations [to creditors] are equal." Hirsch, 211 Cal.App.3d 104, 108–09, 259 Cal.Rptr. 39 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted, emphasis altered). In addition, although a spouse may or may not have in personam liability for tortious conduct, creditors generally are "able to reach a community asset to satisfy a debt incurred by one spouse alone." Id. at 109, 259 Cal.Rptr. 39 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted, emphasis added). A separate issue is that "[b]etween the spouses, certain obligations which are properly characterized as separate may be assigned to the responsible person if unpaid, or reimbursement may be ordered in favor of the community if the debt was paid from community assets," but that does not diminish creditors' recoveries. Id., 211 Cal.App.3d at 109, 259 Cal.Rptr. 39 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted, emphasis added).

The Committee (dkt. 465 at 11:18–12:8) cites numerous authorities that reiterate these principles. See Lezine, 14 Cal.4th 56, 64, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d 76, 925 P.2d 1002 (community property liable for debts of either spouse during marriage, and reimbursement obligations between spouses do not affect creditors' primacy in collecting from community property to satisfy debts); United States v. Berger, 574 F.3d 1202, 1203–06 (9th Cir.2009) (community property liable to satisfy husband's criminal restitution judgment, "including that portion of the property that otherwise would potentially be awarded upon dissolution of marriage to an innocent spouse who was not involved in the criminal activity"); Ordlock v. Commr., 533 F.3d 1136, 1138–39 (9th Cir.2008) (wife was not entitled to refund of community property payments made on tax debts, because such property was liable for such debts notwithstanding any alleged "innocent spouse" status with respect to IRS); In re McIntyre, 222 F.3d 655, 658 (9th Cir.2000) (community property, including non-debtor spouse's share, was liable for husband's tax debts).

Any "bad acts" by Debtor against Ms. Cohen might be the basis to seek a reallocation of any property remaining after payment of creditors, but those acts would not be a basis for any claim competing on a par with creditors, let alone any sort or priority over such creditors. See, e.g., Berger, 574 F.3d 1202 (criminal restitution judgment); Ordlock, 533 F.3d 1136 (husband's tax debts, regardless of wife's alleged "innocent spouse" status); In re Provenza, 316 B.R. 177, 201 (para.90) & passim (Bankr.E.D.La.2003) (extensive wrongdoing by debtor both prior to and within bankruptcy).

Ms. Cohen cites California law that she implies is to the contrary, but as argued by Debtor (dkt. 461 at 10 n. 5) and the Committee (dkt. 465 at 9:19–11:17), those statutes address the allocation of responsibility as between the divorcing spouses, not the liability of community property for debts incurred during the marriage. Ms. Cohen cites no contrary authority.

Not only are creditors' rights superior under California law; but to the extent of any conflict between California law and the 248 Bankruptcy Code the latter will control under the supremacy clause of the U.S. Constitution, Article VI, Clause 2. Teel, 34 B.R. 762, 764 (citations omitted). Under the Bankruptcy Code's distribution scheme, creditors have priority over equity interests. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 544 (estate has "strong arm" rights of hypothetical and actual creditors) and § 1129(b) (so called "absolute priority" of claims over interests). In re General Teamsters, Warehousemen and Helpers Union, Local 890, 265 F.3d 869, 873 (9th Cir.2001) ("The bankruptcy code establishes a strict priority for satisfaction of obligations of a debtor. Claims of equity holders are always junior to claims of both secured and unsecured creditors.") (internal citations omitted).

For all of these reasons, Ms. Cohen has not established any primacy of her interests with respect to the interpled funds. To the contrary, her interests are subordinate to those of creditors and the bankruptcy estate.

3. Conclusion regarding Issue 1(b): distribution of interpled funds

There is ambiguity about the proper recipient of some of the interpled funds because certain promissory notes (Nazarian Adv. dkt. 10–2, Ex. 28 at 89) were made payable to "Saeed Cohen or Elco Lighting" (emphasis added). Therefore, it appears that there is a genuine dispute of fact about where the funds came from, and to whom the interpled funds should be repaid as between Debtor and Elco (assuming that, as this court has ruled, the interests of those entities are superior to the interests of the IRS and Ms. Cohen in the interpled funds). The Committee suggests (dkt. 256 at 19 n. 14) that this issue can be deferred by ordering the distribution of the funds to Elco to hold pending further order of this court. The Committee suggests a similar solution (dkt. 465 at 16–17) with respect to distributing funds to Lighton. No party in interest has established any reason to do otherwise, so that is what this court will order.

E. Issue 1(c): resolution of the Committee's objection to the IRS claims

Most of the Committee's objections to the IRS claim are resolved above. The filed IRS Claim includes some debts that might not be fully liquidated and may be disputed on standard tax law grounds—Ms. Cohen's 2009 tax debt is listed as "Pending Examination" (Claim 3–2 at 3), Debtor notes that his 2012 tax liability has yet to be finalized (dkt. 461 at 17:23–18:16), and there may be other debts that are subject to revision. The Committee acknowledges that the IRS may need to amend its claim, and the rulings in this Memorandum Decision are without prejudice to the rights of the IRS to amend its claim as appropriate, and the rights of other parties in interest to object to amended claims.

V. CONCLUSION

This court anticipates directing counsel for the Committee to draft, circulate, and lodge separate orders implementing the decisions set forth above. Before that, this court intends to review with the parties at the next status conference whether to defer entry of any such orders so as to give all parties in interest at least a short "breathing spell" before having to litigate appeals. That time could be used for possible settlement discussions, agreements regarding procedures, or similar negotiations.

All Citations

522 B.R. 232, 114 A.F.T.R.2d 2014-6597, 2014-2 USTC P 50,507

Footnotes

[1] For brevity, filed documents are referred to by docket number ("dkt.") rather than their full title. Many arguments are repeated in numerous briefs, and this Memorandum Decision usually cites the briefs filed in the main bankruptcy case rather than the briefs in the adversary proceedings. Unless the context suggests otherwise, references to a "chapter" or

"section" (" § ") refer to the United States Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq. (the "Code"), a "Rule" means one of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure ("FRBP"), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("FRCP"), or other federal or local rule, and other terms have the meanings provided in the Code, the Rules, and the parties' briefs.

[2] Debtor provides an example of how the principal FBAR penalties work: "For willful failures to timely file FBARs occurring after October 22, 2004, the maximum civil penalty is the greater of $100,000 or 50 percent of the high balance in the account during the taxable year for each year for which there is a failure to timely file an FBAR. See 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5). Thus, for example, if a taxpayer had a high balance in a foreign bank account of $30 million earning zero interest for six straight years and willfully failed to file FBARs for each of those six years, the taxpayer could be subject to maximum penalties of $90 million (50% x $30 million x 6 years), even though the account balance never exceeded $30 million. This failure to report penalty is completely separate from income tax penalties, and from any taxes and interest owed as the result of failing to report all income on a taxpayer's return." Dkt. 461 at 4:18–26.

End of Document

2018 WL 2465354
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, D. Connecticut.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Diane M. GARRITY, Paul G. Garrity, Jr., and Paul M. Sterczala, as fiduciaries of the Estate of Paul G. Garrity, Sr., Defendants.

No. 3:15-CV-243(MPS)
|
Signed 06/01/2018

Attorneys and Law Firms

Christine L. Sciarrino, U.S. Attorney's Office, New Haven, CT, Steven Marcus Dean, Carl Lewis Moore, Kari Powell, Philip Leonard Bednar, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Daniel F. Brown, Heather L. Marello, Anthony M. Bruce, Randall P. Andreozzi, Andreozzi, Bluestein, Weber, Brown LLP, Clarence, NY, Michael Menapace, Wiggin & Dana, Hartford, CT, James O. Craven, Wiggin & Dana, New Haven, CT, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Michael P. Shea, U.S.D.J.

I. Background

1 Plaintiff, the United States of America ("the Government"), filed this suit to reduce to judgment a civil penalty that the Internal Revenue Service ("the IRS") assessed against Paul G. Garrity, Sr., under 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5), for his alleged willful failure to report his interest in or authority over a foreign financial account in the 2005 tax year, in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5314. The Government now moves in limine to preclude the opinion testimony of Defendants' proposed expert witness Howard Epstein. For the reasons discussed below, the motion to preclude Mr. Epstein's proposed testimony is GRANTED. I assume familiarity with the facts, the parties' arguments, and the Court's prior rulings, and recount only certain relevant facts below.

According to Defendants' expert disclosure, Mr. Epstein is a certified public accountant with over 25 years of experience. (Report of Howard B. Epstein, CPA, ECF No. 114-2 at 2.) His practice focuses on international tax planning and compliance for individual taxpayers and multi-national companies. (Id.) Defendants propose that Mr. Epstein will testify at trial on the following general subjects:

- "general reporting requirements as they related to Foreign Financial Accounts and Foreign Trusts"; and

- "general guidance published by the Internal Revenue Service, the Department of Treasury, and FinCen explaining the rules and reporting requirements to taxpayers and practitioners relating to such vehicles for the year the subject penalty is assessed (2005), as compared to years before and after." (ECF No. 114-2 at 2.)

More specifically, Mr. Epstein's proposed testimony includes opinions on:

- "the state of published guidance and public awareness of [foreign account] reporting requirements so as to provide an objective backdrop or perspective....";

- "how such guidance evolved in the years before and after the subject year [i.e., 2005], and how, in that climate, international tax compliance has been viewed and understood by practitioners and taxpayers...."; and

- "whether an individual taxpayer could have been unaware of his filing foreign income and asset reporting requirements." (ECF No. 114-2 at 3.)

Mr. Epstein's proposed testimony purports to answer the question, "Should Paul Garrity Sr. have known of his requirements to report the Stiftung [a Liechtenstein entity]?" (ECF No. 114-2 at 9.) He opines that "the IRS should not and does not determine—without specific supporting evidence—that a taxpayer should have known of his foreign bank account reporting requirements." (Id. at 10.)

II. Legal Standards

Federal Rule of Evidence 702 provides that a "witness who is qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education may testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise if ... the expert's scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue," among other requirements. The Court must determine whether the proposed "expert testimony is relevant, i.e., whether it has any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence." Amorgianos v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 303 F.3d 256, 265 (2d Cir. 2002) (internal quotation marks omitted). "In addition to the requirements of Rule 702, expert testimony is subject to Rule 403, and 'may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury.' " Nimely v. City of New York, 414 F.3d 381, 397 (2d Cir. 2005) (quoting Fed. R. Evid. 403).

III. Discussion

2 The premise of Mr. Epstein's proposed testimony appears to be that the Government will attempt to prove that Mr. Garrity, Sr. "should have known" about his obligation to file an FBAR, i.e., to report his interest in or authority over a foreign financial account, for the 2005 tax year. (See, e.g., ECF No. 122 at 9 (Defendants' argument that "the government is poised—if it fails to establish any improper motive or intent—to contend that ... if a taxpayer 'should have known' ... that he had to report the account then he is subject to the willfulness penalty."); ECF No. 114-2 at 3 (Mr. Epstein's statement that "[t]he government asserts that Mr. Garrity should have known of his filing requirements and willfully or recklessly ignored them.").) Whether Mr. Garrity "should have known" of the FBAR requirement is not part of the Government's burden of proof, however, as it does not reflect the standard applicable to this case.

Rather, the key question for the jury will be whether Mr. Garrity, Sr.'s failure to file an FBAR for the 2005 calendar year was willful. [1] As several courts have held, a defendant willfully violates the FBAR requirement when he "either knowingly or recklessly fails to file an FBAR." Bedrosian v. U.S. Dep't of Treasury, No. 15-5853, 2017 WL 4946433, at *3 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 20, 2017). See also, e.g., United States v. Williams, 489 Fed. Appx. 655, 658 (4th Cir. 2012); United States v. Bohanec, 263 F. Supp. 3d 881, 888-89 (C.D. Cal. 2016); United States v. McBride, 908 F. Supp. 2d 1186, 1204 (D. Utah 2012) (citing Safeco Ins. Co. of Am. v. Burr, 551 U.S. 47, 57 (2007)). Actual knowledge encompasses "willful blindness" to the obvious or known consequences of one's actions. McBride, 908 F. Supp. 2d at 1205 (citing Global-Tech Appliances, Inc. v. SEB S.A., 563 U.S. 754, 767 (2011)). The government may prove willful blindness with evidence that Mr. Garrity, Sr. made a "conscious effort to avoid learning about reporting requirements." Williams, 489 Fed. Appx. at 659. Evidence of a taxpayer's negligence, however, is insufficient to prove willfulness. See, e.g., Bedrosian, 2017 WL 4946433, at *6 (finding that the defendant was not liable for willful failure to file an FBAR because his actions amounted to, at most, negligence).

Mr. Epstein's report does not, and does not purport to, address the subjective standard at issue here. Instead, Mr. Epstein speaks only to an objective standard—whether Mr. Garrity, Sr. "should have known" of the reporting obligation in light of the IRS's public education on the issue at the relevant time. What Mr. Garrity, Sr. should have known—i.e., whether Mr. Garrity, Sr. was negligent in his failure to file an FBAR—is not the issue in this case.

What Mr. Garrity, Sr. actually knew (or consciously chose to avoid learning) is the key issue, and there is no evidence linking that issue with Mr. Epstein's proposed testimony. Defendants point to no evidence in this case that Mr. Garrity, Sr. knew or believed that, for example, there was uncertainty about IRS guidance regarding the reporting of foreign financial accounts or about whether an account held in the name of a Liechtenstein Stiftung, such as the Lion Rock Foundation, had to be disclosed to the IRS. Indeed, defense counsel conceded during the pre-trial conference that there is no evidence that Mr. Garrity, Sr. was aware (or that he was unaware) of any IRS guidance and no evidence that he was certain or uncertain about any FBAR reporting obligation. For example, defense counsel acknowledged that there is no evidence that Mr. Garrity, Sr. had conversations about IRS guidance or any lack thereof, or even about the reporting requirement in general, with his accountant. In short, there is no evidence that Mr. Garrity, Sr.'s state of mind was influenced by any lack of IRS guidance.

3 Because it bears no connection to Mr. Garrity, Sr., evidence about any uncertainty or lack of clarity in the IRS guidance is irrelevant. See United States v. Ingredient Tech. Corp., 698 F.2d 88, 97 (2d Cir. 1983) (holding that the district court properly excluded expert testimony on the lack of clarity in the relevant legal obligations because "there was no evidence that [the defendants] genuinely thought that what they were doing was lawful and proper; on the contrary, their conduct indicated a subjective belief in the un lawfulness of the conduct"); United States v. Curtis, 782 F.2d 593, 599 (6th Cir. 1986) (holding that the district court properly excluded expert testimony on the unsettled nature of an area of tax law as evidence to negate willfulness). In disagreeing with the approach taken in United States v. Garber, 607 F.2d 92 (5th Cir. 1979), the Second Circuit noted in Ingredient Technology that "the Garber majority's approach permits juries to find that uncertainty in the law negates willfulness whether or not the defendants are actually confused about the extent of their tax liability." Ingredient Tech., 698 F.2d at 97. Instead, the Ingredient Technology court sided with "prior cases on willfulness[, which] consistently require factual evidence of the defendants' state of mind to negate willfulness under any theory." Id. As the Sixth Circuit held in Curtis, "[w]illfulness is personal," and "relates to the defendant's state of mind.... Unless there is a connection between the external facts and the defendant's state of mind, the evidence of the external facts is not relevant." 782 F.2d at 599. See also United States v. Banki, No. S1 10 Cr. 08 (JFK), 2010 WL 1875690, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. May 10, 2010) (holding that "if, but only if, there [was] prior evidence in the record to establish a factual link between Defendant's state of mind and [the agency's] under-enforcement policy," would the expert witness's testimony about agency enforcement policy be relevant in aiding the jury in weighing the credibility of the defendant's "alleged lack of knowledge regarding the legality of his conduct"). After specifically inquiring of defense counsel at the pretrial conference, I remain unaware of any evidence in this case suggesting a "factual link" between Mr. Garrity, Sr.'s state of mind and the IRS's published guidance or enforcement policy (or lack thereof) concerning the reporting of foreign financial accounts.

Moreover, to the extent any evidence of general public uncertainty about the reporting of foreign financial accounts is relevant, whatever slight probative value it has is substantially outweighed by the danger of confusing the issues and misleading the jury. The jurors will be instructed that the Government must prove willfulness, but Mr. Epstein's testimony may lead them to conclude —incorrectly—that Mr. Garrity, Sr.'s willfulness depends on the degree to which the IRS enforced, publicized, or explained the reporting obligation—or the degree to which others were aware of it.

Further, to the extent that Mr. Epstein purports to opine on the legal requirements related to filing an FBAR, he will be attempting to "explain[ ] the tax law," which "is generally within the purview of the court, not expert witnesses." United States v. Fletcher, 928 F.2d 495, 503 (2d Cir. 1991). See also Ingredient Tech., 698 F.2d at 97 ("[I]t would be very confusing to a jury to have opposing opinions of law admitted into evidence as involving a factual question for them to decide.... Questions of law are for the court."); Banki, 2010 WL 1875690, at *3 ("While [the expert]'s opinion that the law as written did not require action by a United States depository institution may be relevant to the Court's charge of law, it can have no bearing on any factual matter before the jury," as "the jury's task is only to determine whether Defendant's alleged conduct violates the law as laid out by the Court."). The Court notes that many of the exhibits Defendants apparently proposed to use with Mr. Epstein consist of rules, regulations, and internal IRS legal opinions, all of which set forth legal matters. The law is for the Court, rather than the jury, to decide.

I find that Mr. Epstein's testimony must be excluded under Rule 702, because it will not assist the jury to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue. I also find that the evidence is irrelevant to the question of willfulness and, even if it has some relevance, that it must be excluded under Rule 403, because allowing Mr. Epstein to testify on the proposed subjects would risk jury confusion and invade the province of the Court.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed above, the motion to preclude Mr. Epstein's testimony is GRANTED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2018 WL 2465354

Footnotes

[1] The jury will also determine whether Mr. Garrity, Sr. had an interest in, or signatory or other authority over, a foreign bank account during the relevant time period. But Mr. Epstein's proposed testimony does not directly address that question, and Defendants have not suggested that they seek to offer his testimony on that question.

End of Document

2018 WL 2271381
United States District Court,
W.D. Texas, Austin Division.

UNITED STATES of America,
v.
Dominique G. COLLIOT, Defendant.

Cause No.: AU–16–CA–01281–SS
|
Signed 05/15/2018
|
Filed 05/16/2018

Attorneys and Law Firms

Jon E. Fisher, Herbert W. Linder, US Department of Justice, Tax Division, Dallas, TX, Richard L. Durbin, Jr., Assistant U.S. Attorney, San Antonio, TX, for United States of America.

Lawrence Robert Kemm, Pro Hac Vice, Richard D. Euliss, Pro Hac Vice, Carlton Fields Jorden Burt, P.A., Washington, DC, for Dominique G. Colliot.

ORDER

SAM SPARKS, SENIOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

1 BE IT REMEMBERED on this day the Court reviewed the file in the above-styled cause, and specifically, Defendant Dominique Colliot's Motion for Summary Judgment [#52], the United States of America (the IRS)'s Response [#57] in opposition, Colliot's Reply [#58] in support, and the IRS's Surreply [1] [#59–2] in opposition as well as Colliot's Unopposed Motion to Modify Order on Prejudgment Writ of Garnishment to UBS [#61], Having reviewed the documents, the relevant law, and the case file as a whole, the Court now enters the following opinion and orders.

Background

In December 2016, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) initiated this lawsuit to reduce to judgment outstanding civil penalties assessed against Colliot. Compl. [#1] at 1. The penalties were assessed for Colliot's repeated and willful failures to timely file Form TD F 90–22.1, entitled "Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts" and commonly referred to as an "FBAR," from 2007 to 2010. Mot. Summ. J. [#52], For 2007, the IRS assessed penalties of $548,773 for four separate FBAR violations. Resp. Mot. Summ. J. [#57] at 15. For 2008, the IRS assessed penalties of $196,082 for another four FBAR violations. Id. at 16. The IRS also assessed smaller penalties in 2009 and 2010. Id. at 17. In forms provided to Colliot in connection with the assessment of these penalties, the IRS stated the penalties were authorized under 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5) and 31 C.F.R. § 1010.820(g)(2). Mot. Summ. J. [#52–12] Ex. L at 2.

These underlying facts are not in dispute. Colliot now moves for summary judgment on the ground the IRS incorrectly applied the law when it calculated the monetary penalties assessed against Colliot. Mot. Summ. J. [#52], This pending motion is ripe for review.

Analysis

I. Motion for Summary Judgment

A. Legal Framework

To understand Colliot's argument, it is first necessary to briefly review the history of the provision used to impose civil penalties upon Colliot, 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5). A previous version of § 5321(a)(5) allowed the Secretary of the Treasury to impose civil monetary penalties amounting to the greater of $25,000 or the balance of the unreported account up to $100,000. See Resp. Mot. Summ. J. [#57] at 2. A related regulation promulgated by the Department of the Treasury via notice-and-comment rulemaking, 31 C.F.R. § 103.57, reiterated that "[f]or any willful violation committed after October 26, 1986 ... the Secretary may assess upon any person, a civil penalty[ ] ... not to exceed the greater of the amount (not to exceed $100,000) equal to the balance in the account at the time of the violation, or $25,000." Amendments to Implementing Regulations Under the Bank Secrecy Act, 52 Fed. Reg. 11436, 11445–46 (1987).

2 In 2002, the Treasury delegated the authority to assess penalties under § 5321(a)(5) to the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN). Treasury Order 180–01, 67 Fed. Reg. 64697 (2002). In addition to this delegation of enforcement authority, Treasury Order 180–

01 provided that related regulations were unaffected by this transfer of power and should continue in effect "until superseded or revised." Id. Roughly six months later, FinCEN redelegated the authority to assess penalties under § 5321(a)(5) and its related regulation, § 103.57, to the IRS. Mot. Summ. J. [#52–5] Ex. E (Memorandum of Agreement and Delegation of Authority for Enforcement of FBAR Requirements).

In 2004, Congress amended § 5321 to increase the maximum civil penalties that could be assessed for willful failure to file an FBAR. 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5); American Jobs Creation Act of 2004, Pub. L. No. 108–357, § 821, 118 Stat. 1418 (2004). Under the revised statute, the civil monetary penalties for willful failure to file an FBAR increased to a minimum of $100,000 and a maximum of 50 percent of the balance in the unreported account at the time of the violation. 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C).

Despite this change, the regulations promulgated in reliance on the prior version of the statute remained unchanged. Thus, § 103.57 continued to indicate the maximum civil penalty for willful failure to file an FBAR was capped at $100,000. FinCEN subsequently renumbered § 103.57—it is now 31 C.F.R. § 1010.820—as part of a large-scale reorganization of regulatory provisions. It also amended part of the regulation to account for inflation. Civil Monetary Penalty Adjustment and Table, 81 Fed. Reg. 42503, 42504 (2016). FinCEN did not, however, revise the regulation to account for the increased maximum penalty now authorized under § 5321(a)(5). 31 C.F.R. § 1010.820. Nevertheless, the IRS did not let § 103.57 (now § 1010.820) constrain its enforcement authority, and since 2004, the IRS has repeatedly levied penalties for willful FBAR violations in excess of the $100,000 regulatory cap. Resp. Mot. Summ. J. [#57] at 3.

B. Application

Under 5 U.S.C. § 706(2), a court must hold unlawful and set aside agency actions which are "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law."

Colliot argues the IRS acted arbitrarily and capriciously by assessing penalties against Colliot in excess of those allowed by § 1010.820. Mot. Summ. J. [#52] at 4–5 (arguing penalties imposed in excess of the $100,000 cap set forth in § 1010.820 are "not in accordance with the law"). In turn, the IRS argues § 1010.820 is inconsistent with the 2004 amendments to § 5321(a)(5)(C) and was therefore implicitly superseded or invalidated by those statutory revisions. Resp. Mot. Summ. J. [#57] at 5, 7 (arguing the IRS followed "the actual law" instead of the agency's superseded regulation); see alsoUnited States v. Larionoff, 431 U.S. 864, 873 (1977) ("[I]n order to be valid[,] [regulations] must be consistent with the statute under which they are promulgated."). If the amendments to § 5321(a)(5) vitiated the lower penalty threshold set out in § 1010.820, then the IRS cannot have acted arbitrarily or capriciously by failing to apply § 1010.820 to cap the penalties levied on Colliot.

Unfortunately for the IRS, there is little reason to believe § 5321(a)(5)(C) implicitly superseded or invalidated § 1010.820. Section 5321(a)(5) sets a ceiling for penalties assessable for willful FBAR violations, but it does not set a floor.[2] 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5). Instead, § 5321(a)(5) vests the Secretary of the Treasury with discretion to determine the amount of the penalty to be assessed so long as that penalty does not exceed the ceiling set by § 5321(a)(5)(C). Id. And § 1010.820—a regulation validly issued by the Treasury via notice-and-comment rulemaking—purports to cabin that discretion by capping penalties at $100,000.[3] 31 C.F.R. § 1010.820. Thus, considered in conjunction with § 5321, § 1010.820 is consistent with § 5321's delegation of discretion to determine the amount of penalties to be assessed. SeeU.S. Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Webb, 595 F.2d 264, 272 (5th Cir. 1979) ("Regulations are presumed valid unless they are shown to be unreasonable or contrary to the provisions of the enabling statute."). Since § 1010.820 can be applied consistent with § 5321(a)(5), the Court concludes § 5321(a)(5) does not implicitly invalidate or supersede § 1010.820.

3 In sum, § 1010.820 is a valid regulation, promulgated via notice-and-comment rulemaking, which caps penalties for willful FBAR violations at $100,000. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.820. Rules issued via notice-and-comment rulemaking must be repealed via notice-and-comment rulemaking. SeePerez v. Mortgage Bankers Ass'n, 135 S. Ct. 1199, 1206 (2015) (requiring agencies to "use to the same procedures when they amend or repeal a rule as they used to issue the rule in the first instance"). Section 1010.820 has not been so repealed and therefore remained good law when the FBAR penalties in question were assessed against Colliot. Consequently, the IRS acted arbitrarily and capriciously when it failed to apply the regulation to cap the penalties assessed against Colliot. 5 U.S.C. § 706(2) (requiring agency action to be "in accordance with law"); see alsoRichardson v. Joslin, 501 F.3d 415, (5th Cir. 2007) ("[A]n agency must abide by its own regulations.") (citing United States ex rel. Accardi v. Shaughnessy, 347 U.S. 260(1954)).

II. Motion to Modify Order on Prejudgment Writ of Garnishment

Colliot also asks the Court to modify its Order on Prejudgment Writ of Garnishment to UBS [#19]. Mot. Modify [#61]. Specifically, Colliot asks the Court modify the order to authorize the purchase and sale of U.S. Treasury bills with a maturity date of one year or less using funds withheld by the writ of garnishment. Id. [#61] at 2. The funds are otherwise to remain segregated with UBS under the terms of the original order. Id. The Court finds the terms of these proposed modifications to the order reasonable and unopposed by the IRS, and therefore the Court grants Colliot's request for the modifications specified above. However, the Court does not at this time consent to the transfer of increases in the segregated funds resulting from interest accruals or proceeds from the sale or maturity of the Treasury bills.

Conclusion

The Court agrees with Colliot that the IRS cannot assess penalties in excess of the threshold set by 31 C.F.R. § 1010.820. However, neither party has briefed the Court on what relief might be appropriately afforded Colliot in these circumstances, and at this time, the Court declines Colliot's unsupported request that the Court dismiss the entire action with prejudice. See Mot. Summ. J. [#52] at 11. Instead, the Court orders the parties provide additional briefing on the appropriate next steps in this case.

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED Colliot's Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART as described in this opinion;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED the parties shall within THIRTY (30) days file with the Court a brief memo of no more than TEN (10) pages regarding whether the Court should dismiss this case with prejudice and citing to legal authority in support; and

IT IS FINALLY ORDERED that Colliot's Unopposed Motion to Modify Order on Prejudgment Writ of Garnishment to UBS [#61] is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART as described in this opinion.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2018 WL 2271381, 121 A.F.T.R.2d 2018-1834

Footnotes

[1] The Court herein considers the arguments raised in the surreply and the IRS's Motion for Leave to File Surreply [#59] is GRANTED. Additionally, the IRS's Motion for Extension of Time to File Response [#55] and Motion to Withdraw Motion for Extension of Time to File Response [#56] are both DISMISSED as moot.

[2] The IRS argues Congress clearly intended to increase penalties for willful FBAR violations when it amended § 5321(a)(5), and therefore, § 5321 implicitly supersedes § 1010.820. Resp. Mot. Summ. J. [#57] at 9. This argument is foreclosed by the unambiguous text of § 5321(a)(5), which allows the Secretary of the Treasury to assess larger penalties than those provided for by § 1010.820 but ultimately leaves the decision of whether or not to do so within the Secretary of the Treasury's discretion. *See*31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5) (providing the Secretary of the Treasury "may impose a civil penalty" falling within the penalty threshold set by § 5321(a)(5)(C) (emphasis added)).

[3] If FinCEN or the IRS wished to preserve their discretion to award the maximum possible penalty for willful FBAR violations under § 5321(a)(5), they might easily have written or revised § 1010.820 to do so. For example, § 1010.820 might have incorporated § 532l(a)(5)'s maximum penalty thresholds by reference, or alternatively, the IRS might have revised § 1010.820 to reflect the increased penalty limits. Instead, FinCEN and the IRS enacted and then left in place the $100,000 penalty cap.

End of Document

2011 WL 98948
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

TRIQUINT SEMICONDUCTOR, INC., a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff/Counterdefendant,
v.
AVAGO TECHNOLOGIES LIMITED, a Singapore corporation; Avago Technologies U.S., Inc., a Delaware corporation; Avago Technologies Wireless IP (Singapore Pte., Ltd., a Singapore corporation, Defendants/Counterclaimants.

No. CV–09–01531–PHX–JAT.
|
Jan. 12, 2011.

Go to Markman Construed Terms

Attorneys and Law Firms

C. Mark Kittredge, David John Palmer, Jonathan M. James, Theodore Hughes Wimsatt, Perkins Coie Brown & Bain PA, Phoenix, AZ, Chun M. Ng, Ja mes Sfekas, Jonathan L. McFarland, Katherine G. Galipeau, Shylah Renee Alfonso, Susan E. Foster, Perkins Coie LLP, Seattle, WA, for Plaintiff/Counterdefendant.

Brian W. Nolan, Christine M. Hernandez, David Allan Greenfield, Duane David Hough, Gregory A. Frantz, Michael J. Word, Mayer Brown LLP, New York, NY, Eric B. Evans, Mayer Brown LLP, Palo Alto, CA, James A. Ryan, Krystal Michelle Aspey, Quarles & Brady LLP, Phoenix, AZ, for Defendants/Counterclaimants.

ORDER

JAMES A. TEILBORG, District Judge.

1 Before the Court are the parties' proposed constructions of the claim terms of thirteen patents.[1] The Court constructs the disputed claim terms below.

I. Background

Plaintiff/Counterdefendant TriQuint Semiconductor, Inc. (“TriQuint”), sued Defendants/Counterclaimants Avago Technologies Limited, Avago Technologies U.S., Inc., and Avago Technologies Wireless IP (Singapore) Pte., Ltd. (collectively, “Avago”), for alleged infringement of three TriQuint patents and other related claims. Avago filed a counterclaim against TriQuint for alleged infringement of ten Avago patents and other related claims. The parties both design, manufacture and sell high-performance radio frequency filters, and power amplifier integrated circuits (chips) and modules (multiple chips on a circuit board) for use in wireless communications products, such as mobile telephone handsets.

The patents and technology at issue in this case concern bulk acoustic wave (“BAW”) filters used in mobile telephones to filter transmitted and received radio frequency signals. BAW filters are incredibly small, and as a result, manufacturing BAW filters is a highly technical process. The patents at issue in this case concern the construction and composition of BAW filters and the parts that make up BAW filters, such as resonators.

TriQuint and Avago have filed briefs supporting their proposed constructions of the disputed claim terms in the three TriQuint patents and the ten Avago patents at issue in this case. Pursuant to Markman v. Westview Instruments, Inc., 517 U.S. 370, 116 S.Ct. 1384, 134 L.Ed.2d 577 (1996), the Court must construe the claims of the patents as a matter of law. On December 14, 2010, the Court held a Markman hearing during which the proposed constructions of the disputed claim terms were argued before the Court. Having considered the evidence presented in the parties' briefs, exhibits, and during the hearing, for the reasons set forth below, the Court construes the disputed claim terms as a matter of law as follows.

II. Legal Standard

“It is a ‘bedrock principle’ of patent law that ‘the claims of a patent define the invention to which the patentee is entitled the right to exclude.’ ” Phillips v. AWH Corp., 415 F.3d 1303, 1312 (Fed.Cir.2005) (quoting Innova/Pure Water, Inc. v. Safari Water Filtration Sys., Inc., 381 F.3d 1111 (Fed.Cir.2004)). Claim construction, which is the determination of the meaning of the terms in a patent, is a question of law, and exclusively within the province of the Court. Markman, 517 U.S. at 372. Thus,

> The determination of infringement is a two-step process. First, the court construes the claims to correctly determine the scope of the claims. Second, it compares the properly construed claims to the accused device. Claim construction is a matter of law.... However, a determination of infringement, both literal and under the doctrine of equivalents, is a question of fact.

Dow Chemical Co. v. Sumitomo Chemical Co., 257 F.3d 1364, 1372 (Fed.Cir.2001) (internal citations omitted).

2 There is a specific order of evidence that the Court should consider in construing a claim. See Vitronics Corp. v. Conceptronic, Inc., 90 F.3d 1576, 1582–83 (Fed.Cir.1996). First, the Court considers the patent itself. Id. at 1582. In construing the claims, the Court should "look to the words of the claims themselves" giving them "their ordinary and customary meaning" unless clearly stated otherwise. Id. Specifically, disputed claim terms are given "their ordinary and accustomed meaning as understood by one of ordinary skill in the art." Dow Chem., 257 F.3d at 1372; see Texas Digital Systems, Inc. v. Telegenix, Inc., 308 F.3d 1193, 1202 (Fed.Cir.2002) ("The terms used in the claims bear a 'heavy presumption' that they mean what they say and have the ordinary meaning that would be attributed to those words by persons skilled in the relevant art."). "Dictionaries are always available to the court to aid in the task of determining meanings that would have been attributed by those of skill in the relevant art to any disputed terms used by the inventor in the claims." Texas Digital, 308 F.3d at 1202 (citing Vitronics, 90 F.3d at 1584 n. 6).

Second, the Court looks at "the [patent] specification to determine whether the inventor has used any terms in a manner inconsistent with their ordinary meaning. The patent specification acts as a dictionary when it expressly defines terms used in the claims or when it defines terms by implication." Vitronics, 90 F.3d at 1582.

Third, the Court may consider the prosecution history of the patent. Id. at 1582. "[T]he record before the Patent and Trademark Office [("PTO")] is often of critical significance in determining the meaning of the claims. Id. at 1582–83. Specifically, reference may be made to the patent specifications, the prosecution history, prior art, and other claims in determining the proper scope of patent claims and the meaning of any terms in dispute. Carroll Touch, Inc. v. Electro Mechanical Systems, Inc., 15 F.3d 1573, 1577 (Fed.Cir.1993). Thus,

> Prosecution history estoppel precludes a patentee from obtaining[,] in an infringement suit[,] patent protection for subject matter which it relinquished during prosecution in order to obtain allowance of the claims. It thus serves as a check on the applicability of the doctrine of equivalents.... The application of prosecution history estoppel is a question of law.

Mark I Marketing Corp. v. R.R. Donnelly & Sons Co., 66 F.3d 285, 291 (Fed.Cir.1995) (internal citations omitted). In other words, > Prosecution history estoppel requires that the claims of a patent be interpreted in light of the proceedings in the PTO during the application process. Estoppel is a "rule of patent construction" that ensures that claims are interpreted by reference to those "that have been cancelled or rejected." The doctrine of equivalents allows the patentee to claim those insubstantial alterations that were not captured in drafting the original patent claim but which could be created through trivial changes. When, however, the patentee originally claimed the subject matter alleged to infringe but then narrowed the claim in response to a rejection, he may not argue that the surrendered territory comprised unforeseen subject matter that should be deemed equivalent to the literal claims of the issued patent.

3 Festo Corp. v. Shoketsu Kinzoku Kogyo Kabushiki Co., 535 U.S. 722, 733–34, 122 S.Ct. 1831, 152 L.Ed.2d 944 (2002) (internal citations omitted). In reviewing the patent file history, it is appropriate to review the relevant patent file history for parent and grandparent applications. Mark I, 66 F.3d at 291.

Fourth, the Court may consider extrinsic evidence, such as expert testimony, only if the Court cannot resolve a disputed claim term based on the first three sources of evidence. Vitronics, 90 F.3d at 1583–84. In most situations, analysis of the patent and its prosecution history, i.e., the intrinsic evidence, will resolve any ambiguity in a disputed claim term, and it is improper to rely on extrinsic evidence. Id. at 1583.

The disputed claims should be interpreted without reading in limitations from the patent specification. Teleflex, Inc. v. Ficosa N. Am. Corp., 299 F.3d 1313, 1326 (Fed.Cir.2002) (citing Comark Commc'ns, Inc. v. Harris Corp., 156 F.3d 1182, 1186 (Fed.Cir.1998)). In other words, if the patent specification discloses only one exemplary embodiment, that does not require that each claim be limited to that one embodiment. SRI Int'l v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am., 775 F.2d 1107, 1121 n. 14 (Fed.Cir.1985) (en banc).

Courts should not determine a claim to be indefinite without first making a reasonable attempt at construction. Metabolite Lab ., Inc. v. Lab. Corp. of Am. Holdings, 370 F.3d 1354, 1366 (Fed.Cir.2004) ("Only when a claim remains insolubly ambiguous without a discernable meaning after all reasonable attempts at construction must a court declare it indefinite."); All Dental Prodx, LLC v. Advantage Dental Prods., Inc., 309 F.3d 774, 780 (Fed.Cir.2002) ("Only after a thorough attempt to understand the meaning of a claim has failed to resolve material ambiguities can one conclude that the claim is invalid for indefiniteness.").

Finally, "a dependent claim includes all the limitations of the claim from which it depends .... It is axiomatic that dependant claims cannot be found infringed unless the claims from which they depend have been found to be infringed." Wahpeton Canvas Co. v. Frontier, Inc., 870 F.2d 1546, 1553 (Fed.Cir.1989).

III. Claim Construction

The following chart summarizes the Court's construction of the disputed claim terms. The full analysis supporting each construction is below.

Disputed Claim Term	Construction
TriQuint's Patents
U.S. Patent No. 5,231,327
the only connections to the [second/third] electrode (Claims 1, 4, 6 & 8)	no other electrical connections to the [second/third] electrode exist
U.S. Patent No. 5,894,647
fabricating a substrate ... having a top electrode (Claims 1 & 5)	fabricating a substrate and adding a top electrode on the substrate; this step must precede the step of "removing from a top electrode ...."
top electrode	conducting material on the substrate that includes at least a portion that overlaps at least a portion of a paired electrode (bottom electrode)

(Claims 1–8)
adding a differential layer of conducting material on top of the top electrode (Claims 1 & 5)	adding a differential layer of conducting material on top of the top electrode [No construction is necessary.]
removing from the top electrode portions of the top electrode that include, but are not necessarily limited to, those portions of the top electrode that overlap with a portion of the bottom electrode and that are not composed of a portion of both the primary layer of the conducting material and the differential layer of the conducting material (Claim 1)	removing the portions of the top electrode that both (1) overlap with a portion of the bottom electrode and (2) are not composed of a portion of both the primary layer of conducting material and the differential layer of conducting material; ”but are not necessarily limited to” means other portions of the top electrode may or may not be removed as well
the first top electrode additionally comprising a differential layer of conducting material (Claims 2 & 6)	in addition to a primary layer of conducting material, the first top electrode includes a differential layer of conducting material
fabricating a primary layer of conducting material on the top surface of the substrate to form first and second top electrodes (Claims 3, 4, 7 & 8)	fabricating a primary layer of conducting material on the top surface of the substrate to form first and second top electrodes [No construction is necessary.]
fabricating a differential layer of conducting material upon the first top electrode (Claims 3 & 7)	fabricating a differential layer of conducting material upon the first top electrode [No construction is necessary.]
U.S. Patent No. 6,114,635
substantially non-conducting material (Claims 1–3 & 11)	largely but not wholly non-conducting material
bonding strip	a separately recognizable strip where bonding material joins a

(Claims 1 & 11)	portion of the lid to a portion of the die
bonding material (Claims 1, 3, 8 & 11)	material that bonds together the bonding strips
Avago's Patents
U.S. Patent No. 7,365,619
related to a common ground (Claim 1)	related to a common electrical ground
antiparallel (Claims 1 & 11)	the first electrode of the first resonator is electrically connected to the second electrode of the second resonator, and vice versa; where the first and second electrodes of a resonator are determined by the direction of polarization of the resonator
a polarization of the common piezo layer in the first area and a polarization of the common piezo layer in the second area are unidirectional (Claim 1)	a polarization of the shared layer of piezoelectric material in the first area and a polarization of the shared layer of piezoelectric material in the second area are in the same absolute direction
exhibit substantially identical shifts in terms of the amount and direction of the resonance frequency due to a Voltages Coefficient of Frequency (VCF) effect (Claims 3 & 13)	exhibit substantially identical shifts in terms of the amount and direction of the resonance frequency due to a Voltages Coefficient of Frequency (VCF) effect, i.e., changes in the resonance frequency when the direct voltage varies, or is swept, within a wide range from high negative voltages to high positive voltages

architecture (Claims 6 & 16)	the number, composition, size, shape, and order of layers in the resonator
U.S. Patent 7,268,436
wherein the bonding connections of the contact areas and the inner areas of external contacts each include a bonding arc (Claim 1)	wherein each bonding connection formed between the contact areas and the inner area of external contacts includes a bonding arc
bonding connections (Claim 1)	a connection that bonds two elements
bonding arc (Claim 1)	a bond formed by bonding the side of a bond wire to a contact area/inner area of external contact, forming an arc-like shape
U.S. Patent No. 6,841,922
due to technological limitations in the manufacturing of this layer (Claim 1)	due to technological limitations in the manufacturing of this layer [No construction is necessary.]
the other layer (Claims 1–3)	the other layer [No construction is necessary.]
the acoustic reflector is a plurality of layers having a high acoustic impedance and comprises a plurality of layers having a low acoustic impedance (Claim 4)	the acoustic reflector comprises a plurality of layers having a high acoustic impedance and a plurality of layers having a low acoustic impedance
U.S. Patent No. 6,933,807
wherein the performance of the acoustic reflector is determined by its reflectivity for a longitudinal wave existing	[The disputed claim term is indefinite and incapable of construction.]

in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator and by its reflectivity for a shear wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator (Claims 1 & 10)
performance of the acoustic reflector (Claims 1 & 10)	the reflectivity for a longitudinal wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator and the reflectivity for a shear wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator
wherein areas with layers with high acoustic impedance and areas with layers with low acoustic impedance are alternately adjacently disposed (Claims 1 & 10)	wherein areas with layers with high acoustic impedance and areas with layers with low acoustic impedance are alternately adjacently disposed, with the term “areas” including a layer having a characteristic acoustic impedance (high or low) along with any connected thin intermediate layers
wherein the layers of the acoustic reflector and layers disposed between the acoustic reflector and the piezoelectric layer are selected, with reference to their number, material, and thickness, such that the transmissivity for the longitudinal wave and the transmissivity for the shear wave in the area of the resonance frequency is smaller than –10 dB (Claims 1 & 10)	the number, the material and the thickness of the layers of the acoustic reflector and the layers between the acoustic reflector and the piezoelectric layer must all be selected for the specific purpose of achieving (a) the transmissivity for the longitudinal wave in the area of the resonance frequency of less than –10dB, and (b) the transmissivity for the shear wave in the area of the resonance frequency of less than –10dB
layers of the acoustic resonator are selected such that the BAW resonator has an	the layers of the acoustic resonator must all be selected for the specific purpose of achieving an unambiguous

unambiguous and desired dispersion performance (Claim 4)	and desired dispersion performance
unambiguous and desired dispersion performance (Claim 4)	the first shear harmonic wave and the longitudinal main resonance of the BAW resonator are separated by at least a bandwidth of the resonator
[layers] are selected such that the distance between the longitudinal main resonance and the first shear harmonic wave is greater than the bandwidth of the longitudinal main resonance of the resonator (Claim 6)	the layers of the acoustic resonator must all be selected for the specific purpose of achieving a distance between the longitudinal main resonance and the first shear harmonic wave that is greater than the bandwidth of the longitudinal main resonance of the resonator
longitudinal main resonance [of the resonator] (Claim 6)	the primary resonant frequency at which the resonator resonates longitudinally (in the direction of the elastic deflection)
U.S. Patent No. 6,909,340
A bulk acoustic wave filter, comprising: a plurality of bulk acoustic wave resonators (Claims 1 & 12)	A bulk acoustic wave filter having at least two bulk acoustic wave resonators. [The preamble is not a limitation.]
bulk acoustic wave resonator[s] (Claims 1–4 & 9–12)	a resonator comprised of a layer of piezoelectric material sandwiched between a top electrode and bottom electrode with a specific effective resonator surface surface contents (Claims 1, 2, 5–8 & 12)	area

aspect ratios (Claims 1 & 12)	the smallest dimension of the resonator within the surface plane divided by the largest dimension of the resonator within the surface plane. The directions of these two dimensions need not be perpendicular to each other.
nonrectangular shape (Claims 3 & 4)	a shape where the angles between the boundary lines of the shape are not equal to 90 degrees where they meet, i.e., any shape that is not a rectangle
stage of a conductor filter (Claim 9)	one series resonator and one parallel resonator connected in a ladder configuration
half-stage of a conductor filter (Claim 9)	one additional parallel or series resonator included within a ladder configuration

U.S. Patent No. 6,864,619

[a detuning layer sequence] arranged on the first piezoelectric resonator (Claims 1 & 12)	the detuning layer sequence is only applied to the first piezoelectric resonator
[the detuning layer sequence comprises at least a first layer having a first acoustic impedance and a second layer having a second acoustic impedance] in order to shift a resonance frequency of the first piezoelectric resonator relative to the resonance frequency of the second piezoelectric resonator (Claims 1 & 12)	the detuning layer sequence comprises at least a first layer having a first acoustic impedance and a second layer having a second acoustic impedance for the purpose of shifting the resonance frequency of the first piezoelectric resonator relative to the resonance frequency of the second piezoelectric resonator

U.S. Patent No. 6,812,619

the resonator is adapted in such a way that a width of the frame-like zone and acoustical property means of the layer structure in the frame-like zone are arranged so that displacement relating to the piezoelectrically excited strongest resonance mode is substantially uniform in the center area of the resonator (Claims 1 & 35)	the resonator is adapted in such a way that a width of the frame-like zone and acoustical property means of the layer structure in the frame-like zone are arranged so that displacement relating to the piezoelectrically excited strongest resonance mode is substantially uniform in the center area of the resonator [No construction is necessary.]
the resonator is adapted to operate in the thickness extensional wave mode as a TE mode (Claims 1 & 35)	the resonator is adapted to operate such that the displacement of the particles of the piezoelectrical material occurs in the direction of the applied electrical field
U.S. Patent No. 6,377,137
removing material from a bottom surface of said substrate to reduce the thickness of the substrate and to reduce an electromagnetic influence in a resulting filter (Claim 1)	removing material from a bottom surface of said substrate to reduce the thickness of the substrate and to reduce the effects caused by currents flowing through the filter
reduce an electromagnetic influence (Claim 1)	reduce the effects caused by currents flowing through the filter die cavity (Claims 5, 6, 14 & 16)	a hollow area in a package where the die is mounted victim loop (Claims 7, 15 & 18)	a current path from the output pad to the ground pad such that the signal bypasses the filter elements
victimizer loop	a current path from the input signal pad to the ground pad

(Claims 7, 15 & 18)	such that the signal bypasses the filter elements
U.S. Patent No. 6,262,637
film bulk acoustic resonator (FBAR) (Claims 1 & 20–22)	a bulk acoustic wave (BAW) resonator fabricated using thin film technology
a 90° phase shifter (Claim 1)	a phase shifter that shifts the phase of a signal by 90 degrees in series with a second band-pass filter (Claim 1)	in series with a second band-pass filter [No construction is necessary.]
U.S. Patent No. 6,051,907
Thin Film Bulk Acoustic Wave Resonators (FBARs) (Claims 1, 7 & 10)	a thin film bulk acoustic wave resonator (FBAR) comprised of a plurality of layers having respective thicknesses, and exhibiting at least one of a series resonance and a parallel resonance at respective frequencies that are a function of the thickness of at least one of the layers
calculating an average of the measured frequencies (Claim 10)	calculating a mean of the measured frequencies
simultaneously altering the thickness of each of the plurality of the FBARs [by the amount (A)] (Claim 10)	altering the thickness of each film bulk acoustic resonator to be detuned on a wafer by the same amount (A) at the same time

A. TriQuint's U.S. Patent No. 5,231,327—"the only connections to the [second/third] electrode" (Claims 1, 4, 6 & 8)

4 TriQuint acquired U.S. Patent No. 5,231,327, titled "Optimized Piezoelectric Resonator–Based Networks" (the "#327 patent"), through its acquisition of TFR Technologies, Inc. ("TFR"). The #327 patent describes a way of designing a piezoelectric resonator so that electrical connections are more conveniently located. The #327 patent describes two top resonators, each with their own top electrode, that are electrically connected to each other by one shared bottom electrode. (See Doc. # 196–1, Ex. A at Fig. 4B.)

TriQuint's proposed construction for "the only connections to the [second/third] electrode" is "no other conductive electrical connections to the [second/third] electrode exist." Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the [second/third] electrode is not electrically connected to any other component of the circuit." [2]

Based on the disputed claim term, which appears in four of the patent claims, if the bottom electrode of a resonator is connected to another component or device, then it is not covered by the #327 patent. TriQuint contends that the relevant connections are conductive electrical connections; whereas, Avago contends that the electrode may not have any electrical connections to any other component in the circuit. Avago's proposed construction is more closely supported by the patent or the plain meaning of the term "connections" as used in the relevant art.

TriQuint argues that the "connections" described in the disputed claim term refer to electrical connections. The #327 patent supports this construction, and Avago does not disagree. Avago argues, and the Court agrees, that the disputed claim term is not limited to conductive electrical connections as proposed by TriQuint. Claims 1 and 4 refer to electrical connections: "a pair of series connected piezoelectric resonators sharing a first electrode"; "a shunt element connected to the first electrode and to a signal ground"; and "a first pair of resonators sharing a first electrode for connection to other circuitry." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. A. at 11:37–38, 11:39–40, 12:6–7.) Figure 4B of the #327 patent shows the primary preferred embodiment for the invention. (Id. at 3:11–14.) The patent specification describes electrode M2 as "a floating electrode that does not connect to other circuitry." (Id. at 6:25–26.) The patent compares electrode M2 to electrodes M1 and M3, which "are referred to as connecting electrodes since they connect the network to other circuitry, such as resistors." (Id. at 5:67–68, 6:1–2.)

As understood by a person of ordinary skill in the art, the term "connections" in the disputed claim term refers to electrical connections, but not specifically conductive electrical connections. An industry dictionary defines a "floating network or component" as "having no terminal at ground potential." IEEE STANDARD DICTIONARY OF ELECTRICAL & ELECTRONIC TERMS 380 (4th ed.1988).

5 The Court finds the ordinary and customary meaning of the term "connections" as understood by person of ordinary skill in the art, see Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1313, means electrical connections. TriQuint seeks to limit the disputed claim term to "conductive" electrical connections. There is no support in either the #327 patent, or TriQuint's brief, to limit the construction to "conductive" electrical connections. Accordingly, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "no other electrical connections to the [second/third] electrode exist."

B. TriQuint's U.S. Patent No. 5,894,647

TriQuint acquired U.S. Patent No. 5,894,647, titled "Method for Fabricating Piezoelectric Resonators and Product" (the "#647 patent"), through its acquisition of TFR. The #647 patent describes how to shift a resonator's resonant frequency by a small amount by adding layers of material to the top electrode. However, the layers may not be aligned perfectly creating "parasitic" resonators. The #647 patent describes the removal of the portions of the top electrode that overlap the bottom electrode.

1. "fabricating a substrate ... having a top electrode" (Claims 1 & 5)

TriQuint's proposed construction for "fabricating a substrate ... having a top electrode" is "fabricating a substrate and adding a top electrode on the substrate; this step must precede the step of 'removing from a top electrode ....' " Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "fabricating a substrate and defining [3] on the substrate a top electrode; this step must precede the step of 'removing from a top electrode....' " The parties agreed that the top electrode must be initially added on the substrate before portions are removed in the "removing" step. The parties dispute whether an "electrode," as used in the #647 patent, means a defined electrode of an individual resonator, or whether it refers to a general layer of the conducting material in which an electrode is later etched out.

The #647 patent teaches various ways of removing the portions of the top electrode that overlap the bottom electrode and that are not composed of both primary and differential layers. The first method is to deposit primary and differential layers in areas slightly larger than the ultimately desired electrodes, and then to remove the excess strips. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. B at 5:33–6:17.) The second method is to deposit a primary layer on the substrate and then to deposit a differential layer in the general area to be occupied by the electrode, and then to use a masking and etching process to remove material so as to leave the desired two electrodes. (Id. at 6:38–49.) The Court finds the claims in the #647 patent are broad enough to include both methods. The #647 patent uses the term "top electrode" to refer to electrode layers during the manufacturing process, as well as after that process has been completed (after "the step of removing"). Avago argues that this second method was disclaimed in the prosecution history; however, it appears that the inventor's alleged disclaimer is taken out of context. (Doc. # 197–2, Ex. B.2 at p. 5–6) (distinguishing the claimed invention from prior art stating that the "essence" of the invention is the removal of narrow strips of metal along the edges of the electrode, and not disavowing the scope of the relevant claims).

6 Based on the foregoing fabrication methods, the Court finds Avago's proposed construction that the top electrode must be defined on the substrate is misleading. The parties agree that a removing step occurs after the top electrode is added. As described above, there is no specific "defining" of the top electrode, other than to add layers to the substrate, prior to the removal process. The outer limits of the top electrode are not fixed or defined until after the "removing" step, which both parties agree follows the addition of the primary and differential layers on the substrate.

Therefore, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "fabricating a substrate and adding a top electrode on the substrate; this step must precede the step of 'removing from a top electrode ....' "

2. "top electrode" (Claims 1–8)

TriQuint's proposed construction of "top electrode" is "conducting material on the substrate that includes at least a portion that overlaps at least a portion of a paired electrode (bottom electrode)." Avago's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "a top electrode of an individual resonator."

The #647 patent supports Avago's proposed construction of the disputed claim term to the extent that the overlapping portions of the top electrode and bottom electrode define the resonator. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. B at 7:8–10.) The patent describes a device comprised of two resonators, with the claims describing the fabrication of the electrodes on the device. The claims repeatedly describe a top electrode overlapping with a portion of a bottom electrode to define an individual resonator. (See e.g., id. at 7:8–10, 7:40–45, 8:54–60.) The patent provides that the two top electrodes are components of a first and second resonator. (Id. 7:40–45.) The #647 patent also describes the addition of "a differential layer of conducting material to the first top electrode so as to shift the resonant frequency of the first resonator relative to the resonant frequency of the second resonator." (Id. at 9:11–14.) However, the claim term "top electrode" does not need to be constructed in a manner that takes into account its formation of a resonator.

The claims clearly describe a device comprised of two resonators with each resonator having its own top electrode. In support of its position that a top electrode is split among two or more resonators, TriQuint directs the Court to the #327 patent. Upon reviewing the claims in the #647 patent at issue here, the Court does not find support for the contention that "top electrode" in the #647 patent is not limited to an individual resonator. However, the Court does not find it necessary to read "an individual resonator" into the construction of "top electrode," because the claims clearly states how the resonator is formed.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes "top electrode" as "conducting material on the substrate that includes at least a portion that overlaps at least a portion of a paired electrode (bottom electrode)."

3. "adding a differential layer of conducting material on top of the top electrode" (Claims 1 & 5)

7 TriQuint proposes that no construction is necessary, because "adding a differential layer of conducting material on top of the top electrode" is clear on its face. Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term provides that "this step [adding a differential layer of conducting material on top of the top electrode] must come after the step of fabricating the top electrode as it requires that the differential layer be formed 'on top of the top electrode.' "

While it is clear from the disputed claim term that the top electrode exists prior to adding a differential layer, the #647 patent does not explicitly include a prior step of "fabricating the top electrode." The patent requires "fabricating a substrate having a top and bottom surface and having a top electrode on the top surface." (Id. at 7:1–2.) Adding the implicit step "fabricating the top electrode" would only add ambiguity to the disputed claim term.

Avago's proposed construction also appears to require that the boundaries of the top electrode must be fixed before adding the differential layer to the top electrode. Such a construction is not supported by the patent claims. Claims 1 and 5 describe fabricating a piezoelectric resonator by, among other steps, "adding a differential layer of conducting material on top of the top electrode." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. B at 7:11–12, 8:26–27.) Then, "removing from the top electrode portions of the top electrode that ... overlap with a portion of the bottom electrode that are not composed of a portion of both the primary layer ... and the differential layer." (Id. at 7:16–21, 8:31–35.) Before these two steps occur, the top electrode already exists on the substrate, and is comprised of "a primary layer of conducting material." (Id. at 7:5–6.)

Avago's proposed construction muddles a claim term that is clear on its face when read in context. Accordingly, the Court finds that no further construction is required.

4. "removing from the top electrode portions of the top electrode that include, but are not necessarily limited to, those portions of the top electrode that overlap with a portion of the bottom electrode and that are not composed of a portion of both the primary layer of the conducting material and the differential layer of the conducting material" (Claim 1)

TriQuint's proposed construction for "removing from the top electrode portions of the top electrode that include, but are not necessarily limited to, those portions of the top electrode that overlap with a portion of the bottom electrode and that are not composed of a portion of both the primary layer of the conducting material and the differential layer of the conducting material" is "removing from the portions of the top electrode that both (1) overlap with a portion of the bottom electrode and (2) are not composed of a portion of both the primary layer of conducting material and the differential layer of conducting material." TriQuint also proposes that "but are not necessarily limited to" means "other portions of the top electrode may or may not be removed as well." Avago proposes that "but not necessarily limited to" is vague and renders the claim indefinite.

8 Avago argues that because the patent examiner originally found the use of the phrase "... but not necessarily limited to ..." vague in light of the preceding word "including" (Doc. # 197–2, Ex. B–3 at p. 2), the Court should strike claim 1 of the #647 patent as invalid. The inventors attempted to amend the claims to remove "but are not necessarily limited to" from claim 1. (Doc. # 197–2, Ex. B–4 at p. 2.) However, the PTO issued the #647 patent with the phrase still contained in claim 1, which is likely the result of a ministerial error. While perhaps not an example of superbly concise writing, the Court does not find the use of the phrase "but not necessarily limited to" renders the entire claim indefinite.

A person of ordinary skill in the art would understand the phrase "including, but not necessarily limited to, X" means the category includes X, but may also contain Y and Z. In fact, as TriQuint points out, Avago uses the phrase "including, but not limited to" in discussing its proposed construction of a subsequent disputed claim term. (See Doc. # 197 at p. 35.) Additionally, TriQuint's brief cites a patent statute that contains the allegedly indefinite phrase. See 35 U.S.C. § 210(a) ("This chapter shall take precedence over any other Act ... including, but not necessarily limited to the following:") Clearly, the phrase is not insolubly ambiguous.

TriQuint's proposed construction rearranges the disputed claim term to remove the phrase "but not necessarily limited to," and adds a provision to define the meaning of that phrase. The Court will adopt TriQuint's proposed construction and construe the disputed claim term as "removing the portions of the top electrode that both (1) overlap with a portion of the bottom electrode and (2) are not composed of a portion of both the primary layer of conducting material and the differential layer of conducting material; 'but are not necessarily limited to' means other portions of the top electrode may or may not be removed as well."

5. "the first top electrode additionally comprising a differential layer of conducting material" (Claims 2 & 6)

TriQuint's proposed construction for "the first top electrode additionally comprising a differential layer of conducting material" is "in addition to a primary layer of conducting material, some or all of the first top electrode includes a differential layer of conducting material." Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "a differential layer of conducting material is added only to the first top electrode of an individual first resonator."

In its brief, Avago states that its proposed construction requires that the differential layer of conducting material is applied only to the first electrode (not to the second electrode). TriQuint understands Avago's proposed construction to also require that the differential layer may be added only after the primary layer has been deposited, which is inconsistent with the patent. The #647 patent permits the sequence to be reversed and the differential layer could be deposited on the substrate followed by the primary layer. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. B. at 6:20–25, 8:11–13, 10:4–6.) Accordingly, the Court finds Avago's proposed construction to be ambiguous and potentially in conflict with other claims in the #647 patent.

9 TriQuint's proposed construction states that the differential layer may be added to "some or all" of the first top electrode. However, the Court does not find it necessary to read this phrase into the disputed patent claim. For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "in addition to a primary layer of conducting material, the first top electrode includes a differential layer of conducting material."

6. "fabricating a primary layer of conducting material on the top surface of the substrate to form first and second top electrodes" (Claims 3, 4, 7 & 8)

TriQuint proposes that no construction is necessary, because "fabricating a primary layer of conducting material on the top surface of the substrate to form first and second top electrodes" is clear on its face. Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "fabricating a primary layer of conducting material on the top surface of the substrate to form the first top electrode of a first resonator and to form the second top electrode of a second resonator."

Avago's only construction of the disputed claim term is the addition of "of a first resonator" and "of a second resonator." It is not necessary to introduce the concept of individual resonators into the construction of this disputed claim term, as Avago proposes. The disputed claim term concerns the formation of the electrodes upon the substrate, and does not reference the formation of resonators or the composition of resonators. As noted above, the #647 patent often uses the term "electrode" to refer to the electrode layer before the final electrode boundaries are carved out. Therefore, the Court agrees with TriQuint that the disputed claim term is clear on its face, and no construction is necessary.

7. "fabricating a differential layer of conducting material upon the first top electrode" (Claims 3 & 7)

TriQuint proposes that no construction is necessary, because "fabricating a differential layer of conducting material upon the first top electrode" is clear. Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "fabricating a differential layer of conducting material only upon the first top electrode" and that "this step must come after the step of fabricating the first top electrode as it requires that the differential layer be formed 'upon the first top electrode.' " TriQuint argues that there is no "step of fabricating the first top electrode."

Avago seeks to add the word "only" into the claim term. The Court finds no reason for this addition. As TriQuint points out in its brief, some of the differential layer may be deposited onto the substrate during the fabrication process. The #647 patent teaches a fabrication method in which primary and differential layers are deposited in areas slightly larger than the ultimately desired electrodes, and then the excess strips are removed, (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. B at 5:33–6:17), and a fabrication method in which the primary layer is deposited on the substrate and then the differential layer is deposited in the general area to be occupied by the electrode, and then a masking and etching process is used to leave the desired two electrodes (id. at 6:38–49). Adding "only" to the disputed claim term would render the construction inaccurate. Avago argues that "only" is required to clarify that the differential layer is applied only to the first electrode, and not to the second electrode. The claim term clearly states "upon the first top electrode." The Court does not find it necessary to clarify that "first top electrode" does not mean "first top electrode and second top electrode."

10 Finally, and as stated above, it is clear from the disputed claim term that the top first electrode exists prior to adding a differential layer. Contrary to Avago's proposed construction, the #647 patent does not explicitly include a prior step of "fabricating the top electrode." The patent requires "fabricating a substrate having a top and bottom surface and having a top electrode on the top surface." (Id. at 7:1–2.) Adding the implicit step "fabricating the first top electrode," as Avago proposes, would only add ambiguity to the disputed claim term and conflict with the patent specification.

Based on the foregoing, the Court finds that it is not necessary to construct the disputed claim term.

C. TriQuint's U.S. Patent No. 6,114,635

TriQuint acquired U.S. Patent No. 6,114,635, titled "Chip–Scale Electronic Component Package" (the "#635 patent"), through its acquisition of TFR. The #635 patent describes a compact package for an acoustic wave device located on a substrate or a die. The package includes a lid that covers part of the die, which is made of a "substantially nonconducting material," and provides space above the acoustic device so that it can deform or vibrate. The lid and the die are connected with "bonding strips" by "bonding material."

1. "substantially non-conducting material" (Claims 1–3 & 11)

The #635 patent calls for "a lid made out of substantially non-conducting material." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. C at 4:14, 4: 36–37, 4:46–47, 5:24.) TriQuint's proposed construction for "substantially non-conducting material" is "a material with sufficient resistivity to prevent significant electrical conduction in areas between conducting structures at operating conditions (not limited to insulators)." Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "insulators (e.g., sapphire or alumnia)."

As an initial matter, Avago's proposed construction conflates "substantially" with "not at all." "Substantially" is defined as "largely but not wholly that which is specified." MERRIAM–WEBSTER'S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY 1174 (10th ed.1993). In its reply brief, Avago acknowledges that the term "substantially" by itself means "largely but not wholly that which is specified." (Doc. # 213–1 at p. 10 n. 9.) The patent specification supports this reading: "a lid [ ] made out of alumnia, sapphire or other suitable material." (Id. at 2:58–59 .) As TriQuint points out in its brief, alumnia and sapphire are insulators, but "other suitable material" leaves open the possibility of a lid made out of a non-insulating material, so long as that material is substantially non-conducting. The prosecution history confirms that "substantially non-conducting material" is not limited to insulators. (See Doc. # 196–3, Ex. 4 at p. 3) (referring to U.S. Patent No. 4,905,075 in which a lid made of substantially nonconducting material was made of a silicon wafer, a semiconducting material.) The Court finds that insulators form a subset of "substantially non-conducting materials," but the plain meaning of "substantially non-conducting materials" can include other materials, such as semiconductors.

11 The Court also finds that those of ordinary skill in the art would not limit the disputed claim term to "insulators." However, TriQuint's proposed construction is not without issues. Avago speculates that the terms "sufficient" and "significant" in TriQuint's proposed construction will raise new construction claims, and the Court agrees. Accordingly, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "largely but not wholly non-conducting material."

2. "bonding strip" (Claims 1 & 11)

TriQuint's proposed construction for "bonding strip" is "strip where bonding material joins a portion of the lid to a portion of the die." Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "a strip, distinct from the die or lid itself, that has a given thickness and is capable of being bonded." The parties disagree as to whether the bonding strips must be separate and distinct from the die, the lid, and the bonding material.

The #635 patent provides that the bonding strip "may be used simply to provide a surface to which lid 6 is bonded." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. C at 3:52–53.) The patent also provides that the bonding strip must be "electrically conducting" (id. at 2:64). Therefore, it must be distinct from the lid, which is made of "substantially non-conducting material" (id. at 4:46–47). TriQuint acknowledges that the bonding strip must be distinct, in that it is separately recognizable, from the die and the lid, but that the bonding strip, the lid and the die can be comprised of similar base material. TriQuint argues that the bonding strips and the bonding material (discussed below) are separately recognizable at some point during the manufacturing process, but not at all times.

The #635 patent provides that the bonding strips and the bonding material must have a thickness to "provide sufficient free space above the surface of the die." (Id. at 3:13–14.) Avago's proposed construction of "bonding strips" requires the bonding strips to have "a given thickness." However, the term "a given thickness" is nonspecific and unhelpful. The patent specification does not provide that each layer must have a characteristic, or given, thickness. The Court finds no reason to import a "given thickness" limitation into the claims.

Based on the foregoing, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "a separately recognizable strip where bonding material joins a portion of the lid to a portion of the die."

3. "bonding material" (Claims 1, 3, 8 & 11)

TriQuint's proposed construction for "bonding material" is "material that bonds together the bonding strips." Avago's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "material, separate and distinct from the bonding strips, capable of bonding together the bonding strips and having a given thickness."

The patent specification provides that "bonding strip 5 on die 1 and bonding strip 8 on lid 6 are joined together in the package of this invention by a thin layer of bonding material 9." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. C at 3:2–4.) The patent specification makes it clear that bonding material is distinct from the bonding strips; however, contrary to Avago's proposed construction, the bonding material does not need to have a different composition from the bonding strips. As TriQuint states in its brief, the preferred bonding material, a gold/tin alloy (id. at 3:4–5), can be used for both the bonding material and the bonding strips, and the separation between the bonding material and the bonding strips may not be observed in a final bonded package. During the Markman hearing, TriQuint argued that at some point in the manufacturing process the bonding material is separately recognizable from the bonding strips.

12 As described above, the use of the phrase "a given thickness" in Avago's proposed construction is likely to cause confusion. The #635 patent provides that the bonding strips and the bonding material must have a thickness to "provide sufficient free space above the surface of the die." (Id. at 3:13–14.) That the bonding material has an observable thickness is made clear by the patent's description of the assembly of the invention. However, the patent specification does not provide that each layer must have a characteristic, or given, thickness. The Court finds no reason to import a "given thickness" limitation into the claims.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "material that bonds together the bonding strips."

D. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 7,365,619

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 7,365,619, titled "BAW Apparatus" (the "#5,619 patent"). The #5,619 patent describes a method of reducing "non-linear" properties of BAW resonators used in communications filters. According to the #5,619 patent, the resonance frequency will shift upward and downward when a direct voltage is applied across the resonator, and this effect is referred to as the voltages coefficient of frequency effect or VCF effect. The #5,619 patent teaches that by subdividing a resonator into two separate resonators and connecting them in "antiparallel," the non-linear effects can be reduced.

1. "related to a common ground" (Claim 1)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "related to a common ground" is clear on its face. TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "using a shared terminal within the filter that electrically connects the reference voltages of the input and output signals to the device's ground voltage."

TriQuint argues the disputed claim term requires construction because "its meaning and limits are not plain to a layperson." (Doc. # 196 at p. 12.) However, the Court is required to construct claims in the manner in which a person of ordinary skill in the art would understand the disputed claim term. See Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1313 (stating that "the ordinary and customary meaning of a claim term is the meaning that the term would have to a person of ordinary skill in the art in question at the time of the invention"); Dow Chem., 257 F.3d at 1372.

"Ground" is defined as "[a] conducting connection to a structure that serves a function similar to that of an earth ground." IEEE 100: THE AUTHORITATIVE DICTIONARY OF IEEE STANDARD TERMS 489 (7th ed.2000). Accordingly, "related to a common ground" means related to a common conducting connection to a structure. The patent specification provides: "Both signal input 102E (IN) and signal output 102A (OUT) relate to the common electrical ground 102G (GND)." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. D at 6:25–26.) This specification refers to Figure 2, which provides an illustration of how the signals relate to the common electrical ground.

13 As TriQuint notes in its brief, each system has only one ground voltage. However, TriQuint's proposed construction introduces concepts such as "shared terminal," "reference voltages," and ultimately refers back to "the device's ground voltage." Introducing these additional concepts into the disputed claim term would only require further construction. A person of ordinary skill in the art would understand "related to a common ground" to mean "related to a common electrical ground." Accordingly, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "related to a common electrical ground."

2. "antiparallel" (Claims 1 & 11)

"Antiparallel" was term coined by the inventors; therefore, the definition in the patent specification controls. Edwards Lifesciences LLC v. Cook Inc., 582 F.3d 1322, 1329 (Fed.Cir.2009) (adopting a definition different from the ordinary meaning when "the patentee acted as his own lexicographer and clearly set forth a definition of the disputed claim term in either the specification or prosecution history") (quoting CCS Fitness, Inc. v. Brunswick Corp., 288 F.3d 1359, 1366 (Fed.Cir.2002)). Avago's proposed construction for "antiparallel" is:

> the first electrode of the first resonator is electrically connected to the second electrode of the second resonator, and vice versa; where the first and second electrodes of a resonator are determined by the direction of polarization of the resonator. [4]

Avago argues that its proposed construction is supported by the definitions in the specification of the #5,619 patent.

TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "a parallel connection with mutually inverse polarization." TriQuint further proposes the claim term be constructed as follows:

> A parallel connection means that the resonators are connected between two common points in the circuit, but along different branches.
>
> Mutually inverse polarization requires a connection such that (a) the electric field applied to the first area of piezoelectric layer is in the same direction as the polarization of first area, and (b) the electric field applied to the second area is in the opposite direction of the polarization of the second area. [5]

TriQuint defines "polarization" in the claim construction below. TriQuint's proposed construction is derived from the patent specification, which provides "the present invention is based on the findings that harmonic waves of the two BAW resonators mutually reduce one other and ... cancel one other out because of the antiparallel connection, i.e., their parallel connection with mutually inverse polarization." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. D at 3:25–29.) Avago argues that this phrase was not intended to provide a substantive definition of "antiparallel," which is evidenced by TriQuint's need to further define terms in its own construction. Avago also argues that TriQuint's proposed construction departs from the patent specification and improperly relies on extrinsic evidence.

14 The patent specification describes the antiparallel connection of the BAW resonators, depicted by Figure 2 of the #5,619 patent, as the exchange of the first electrode of a second BAW resonator with the first electrode of a first BAW resonator; thus, "first electrode 84T, 90T, 96T of first BAW resonator 84, 90, 96 of BAW apparatus 82, 88, 94 is electrically connected to second electrode 86B, 92B, 98B of second BAW resonator 86, 92, 98 of BAW apparatus 82, 88, 94, and vice versa." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. D at 6:31–45) (emphasis added). The patent specification also describes, with reference to Figure 1, a BAW resonator pair connected antiparallel as:

> The only thing that is essential for the inventive BAW apparatus and/or antiparallel connections of the two BAW resonators 72, 74 is that the polarizations 72R, 74R of the two BAW resonators 72, 74 have the same direction with regard to the first electrode 72T, 74T and the second electrode 72B, 74B. Alternatively, for example, the polarization of both BAW resonators 72, 74 may also be pointing in the direction from the second electrode 72B, 74B to the first electrode 72T, 74T.

(Id. at 5:32–39) (emphasis added). The Court finds Avago's proposed construction is consistent with the patent specification.

Avago revised its proposed construction of the disputed claim term so that it no longer requires the resonators to be on opposing surfaces of a piezoelectric layer. TriQuint argued that the use of "the piezoelectric layer" in Avago's proposed construction rendered the term "common piezo layer" in claim 1 superfluous is without merit. Based on Avago's revised construction, the Court does not have to resolve this dispute. Avago's description of the first BAW resonator and second BAW resonator connected antiparallel does not conflict with the second part of claim 1 stating that the resonators comprise a common piezo layer, nor does it conflict with claim 11, which does not explicitly require a "common piezo layer."

Based on the foregoing, the Court construes "antiparallel" as:

> The first electrode of the first resonator is electrically connected to the second electrode of the second resonator, and vice versa; where the first and second electrodes of a resonator are determined by the direction of polarization of the resonator.

3. "a polarization of the common piezo layer in the first area and a polarization of the common piezo layer in the second area are unidirectional" (Claim 1)

The parties have stipulated that "unidirectional" means "in the same absolute direction," and "common piezo layer" means "a shared layer of piezoelectric material." (See Doc. # 209 at p. 2.) With respect to the disputed claim term, Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "a polarization of the common piezo layer in the first area and a polarization of the common piezo layer in the second area are unidirectional" is clear on its face. TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is:

> 15 absent application of an electric field, the first and second areas of the piezoelectric layer exhibit significant net electric dipole moments that point in the same direction. An electric dipole moment is a value representing the nonuniform distribution of positive and negative electrical charges within a material. [6]

TriQuint's proposed construction of the disputed claim term focuses on the physics of polarization, which is a level of detail Avago contends is not necessary to understand the invention. Avago argues that it is the direction of the polarization that is relevant to understanding of the invention, not the physics or the process by which material is polarized. The Court agrees, and finds that TriQuint's proposed construction with "net electric dipole moments" and "non-uniform distribution" of electrical charges serves to obfuscate meaning of the disputed claim term.

The #5,619 patent uses polarization as a directional concept. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. D at 5:28–32.) The patent specification states that polarization is a property "impressed upon the BAW resonator during manufacturing." (Id. at 1:54–56.) The patent specification also states that the BAW resonators exhibit electric polarization, and "[t]he direction of mechanical deformation, expansion or contraction, of the BAW resonator depends on the direction of the electric field applied to first electrode T and second electrode B and on the direction of polarization of BAW resonator 30." (Id. at 1:59–64.) According to the #5,619 patent, "if the polarization of the BAW resonator and the direction of the electric field are pointing in the same direction, BAW resonator 30 contracts, whereas BAW resonator

30 expands when the polarization of BAW resonator 30 and the direction of the electric field are pointing in the opposite direction." (Id. at 1:64–2:2.)

Avago argues that the effect of the polarization on the resonator (expansion or contraction) is the important concept with regard to the invention, not the physics describing polarization. The Court does not find it necessary to define polarization in the manner proposed by TriQuint in order to construct how polarization is used in the disputed claim term. Further, the Court finds a person of ordinary skill in the art, see Texas Digital, 308 F.3d at 1202, understands the meaning of polarization as it relates to the distribution of positive and negative electrical charges.

Applying the stipulated terms, the Court constructs the disputed claim term as "a polarization of the shared layer of piezoelectric material in the first area and a polarization of the shared layer of piezoelectric material in the second area are in the same absolute direction."

4. "exhibit substantially identical shifts in terms of the amount and direction of the resonance frequency due to a Voltages Coefficient of Frequency (VCF) effect" (Claims 3 & 13)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "exhibit substantially identical shifts in terms of the amount and directions of the resonance frequency due to a Voltages Coefficient of Frequency (VCF) effect" is clear on its face. Alternatively, Avago proposes the disputed claim term means "exhibit substantially identical shifts in terms of the amount and direction of the resonance frequency due to a Voltages Coefficient of Frequency (VCF) effect, i.e., changes in the resonance frequency when the direct voltages varies, or is swept, within a range from negative to positive voltages." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "during the operation of the BAW filter, the voltages applied to the first and second resonators cause the resonant frequencies of those resonators to simultaneously shift in the same direction by insignificantly different amounts due to something called the Voltages Coefficient of Frequency effect." TriQuint argues that the term "due to a Voltages Coefficient of Frequency effect" is indefinite because there is no way to tell when a resonance frequency shift is "due to a VCF effect" or due to some other cause.

16 As stated above, a court should declare a claim term indefinite "[o]nly when a claim remains insolubly ambiguous without a discernable meaning after all reasonable attempts at construction." Metabolite, 370 F.3d at 1366. Contrary to TriQuint's assertion, the VCF effect is not insolubly ambiguous. The term is explained in the patent specification:

> It has been proven that the resonance frequency changes upward and downward in an almost linear manner, while the direct voltage varies, or is swept, within a wide range from high negative voltages to high positive voltages. This effect is referred to as VCF effect (VCF = voltages coefficient of frequency)

(Doc. # 196–1, Ex. D at 3:53–58.) Avago's proposed construction takes into account this explanation of the VCF effect. TriQuint argues that the #5,619 patent does not explain how to distinguish between frequency shifts caused by the VCF effect and frequency shifts caused by other factors. However, the patent specification makes it clear that the VCF effect occurs when direct voltage varies across a resonator. Accordingly, the Court finds the term "VCF effect" is capable of construction.

TriQuint's proposed construction, notwithstanding its argument that the claim term is indefinite, contains limitations not found in the plain language of claims 3 and 13. Specifically, TriQuint reads into the claim term that the shifts occur "during the operation of the BAW filter." This limitation is unnecessary. The patent specification explains that the VCF effect occurs when direct voltage is applied to the resonator. TriQuint also seeks to add the limitation that shifts in resonator frequency occur "simultaneously ." There is nothing in the #5,619 patent requiring the shifts to occur simultaneously. Finally, TriQuint seeks to introduce the concept that the resonators shift in the same direction "by insignificantly different amounts." This phrase is in lieu of the claim term's "substantially identical shifts." The Court finds no reason to redefine a phrase that is already clear.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "exhibit substantially identical shifts in terms of the amount and direction of the resonance frequency due to a Voltages Coefficient of Frequency (VCF) effect, i.e., changes in the resonance frequency when the direct voltage varies, or is swept, within a wide range from high negative voltages to high positive voltages."

5. "architecture" (Claims 6 & 16)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "architecture" is clear on its face. Alternatively, Avago proposes the disputed claim term means "the number, composition, and order of layers in the resonator." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the overlap of piezoelectric layer and the top and bottom electrodes is substantially identical in geometric shape and size in both resonators, and the composition and thickness of each layer is the same in both resonators."

17 Claims 6 and 16 require the two BAW resonators to be "substantially identical in architecture." The term "architecture" is used only once outside of claims 6 and 16 where the patent specification provides that "[p]referably, BAW resonators 72, 74 having the same architecture are used for an inventive BAW apparatus." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. D at 5:59–61.)

TriQuint points out that Avago's alternate proposed construction (considering number, composition and order of layers) makes sense if only the side view of the resonators is taken into account. However, because resonators are three-dimensional objects, the size and shape of the resonators must be considered in addition to the layer structure. This is supported by the prosecution history of the #5,619 patent, in which the patent examiner stated, "the BAW resonators have the same architecture because they are made of the same materials, have the same size electrodes and the same thickness of electrode layers and piezoelectric layers." (Doc. # 196–3, Ex. 11 at p. 4–5) (parentheticals omitted). For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the term "architecture" as "the number, composition, size, shape, and order of layers in the resonator."

E. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 7,268,436

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 7,268,436, titled "Electronic Device with Cavity and a Method for Producing the Same" (the "#436 patent"). The #436 patent describes an acoustic wave filter device in a compact package that includes a semiconductor chip with the filter itself, a cavity frame positioned on top of the chip, and a cavity cover on top of the frame. Because the cavity frame on the semiconductor chip surrounds the region of the circuit structure, the device can be reduced in size.

1. "wherein the bonding connections of the contact areas and the inner areas of external contacts each include a bonding arc" (Claim 1)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "wherein the bonding connections of the contact areas and the inner areas of external contacts each include a bonding arc" is clear on its face. Alternatively, Avago proposes the disputed claim term means "wherein each connection between the contact areas and the inner areas of external contacts includes a bonding arc." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "each connection between the bond wire and a contact area or inner area of external contact includes a bonding arc. In other words, there is a bonding arc at each end of the bonding wire."

The parties' disagreement concerns whether there is a "bonding arc" at each connection area, or whether there is a single bonding arc in the connection of two areas. The first interpretation (TriQuint's) does not permit the use of thermocompression heads in the bond wire; whereas, the second interpretation (Avago's) permits a thermocompression head at one end of the bond wire and a bonding arc at the other end of the bond wire. The plain meaning of the disputed claim term is unclear: "each" could refer to each connection area (requiring a bonding arc at each connection area), or "each" could refer more generally to each bonding connection between two connection areas (requiring only one bonding arc).

18 Figure 1 of the #436 patent is unsupportable under TriQuint's proposed construction of the disputed claim term, because this depiction of the electronic device shows a thermocompression head at the contact area, and a bonding arc at the inner area of the external contact. TriQuint's proposed construction of the disputed claim term only supports the depiction of the electronic device in Figure 2 of the #436 patent, in which there are two bonding arcs in the bond wire. However, Avago's proposed construction supports the depiction of the invention in both Figure 1 and Figure 2. Where the proposed embodiments of the invention permit Avago's broader construction of the disputed claim terms, and the claims do not explicitly exclude both embodiments, the Court will not limit unnecessarily the invention.

The patent specification also supports Avago's proposed construction of the disputed claim term: "The contact areas 12 can be connected via thermocompression head 24 and bonding wires 22 to a bondable coating 25 on inner areas 13 of the external contacts 14. The entire bonding connection 11 can be embedded in the plastics housing composition 18." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. E at 4:46–50) (emphasis added). Based on the Figures and the patent specification, a "bonding connection" does not refer to each point where the bond wire is connected to a connection site. Rather, a bonding connection has three components: (1) a bond at a contact area; (2) a bond wire; and (3) a bond at the inner area of an external contact. The disputed claim term requires only that each bonding connection have a bonding arc. The #436 patent clearly permits thermocompression heads at a connection site, provided that the other connection site has a bonding arc, and the plain language of the disputed claim term can be constructed to support this interpretation.

TriQuint directs the Court to the patent examiner's original rejection of certain claims. (See e.g., Doc. # 196–3, Ex. 17 & 18.) However, as Avago discusses in its reply brief, the patent examiner's rejection of certain claims concerned a patent reference unrelated to the types of bonds formed at the connection sites. (Doc. # 213–1 at p. 17.) The Court does not find the prosecution history to be elucidating in construing the disputed claim term.

Based on the foregoing, the Court adopts Avago's understanding of "wherein the bonding connections of the contact areas and the inner areas of external contacts each include a bonding arc." The Court construes the disputed claim term as "wherein each bonding connection formed between the contact areas and the inner area of external contacts includes a bonding arc."

2. "bonding connections" (Claim 1)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "bonding connections" is clear on its face. Alternatively, Avago proposes the disputed claim term means "a connection that bonds two elements." TriQuint argues the construction of the disputed claim term is apparent from the construction of the claim term above: a connection between the bond wire and a contact area.

19 Based on the Court's construction of the disputed claim term above, the Court finds that "bonding connections" are formed by a bond wire between the contact areas and the inner areas of external contacts of an electronic device. The Court does not find support in the #436 patent for TriQuint's proposed construction without reading out certain preferred embodiments of the invention. Accordingly, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "a connection that bonds two elements."

3. "bonding arc" (Claim 1)

Avago's proposed construction for "bonding arc" is "a bond formed at least partially by mechanical deformation of a portion of the bond wire, on its side, against the contact area/inner area of external contact." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "a bonding connection formed by bonding the side of the bond wire to a contact area/inner area of external contact, forming an arc-like shape." TriQuint also proposes the disputed claim term be constructed to provide that: "A 'bonding arc' does not include a 'thermocompression head' or ball bond."

Avago argues that while a bonding arc is distinguishable from a thermocompression head, the patent specification does not require the bonding arc to have any particular shape or geometry. The Court disagrees. TriQuint's proposed construction states the bond wire forms an "arc-like shape." The Court does not think this is an additional limitation on the disputed claim term. The particular shape or geometry, "an arc-like shape," is implicit in the claim term "bonding arc." The Figures in the #436 patent depicting the electronic device support a construction that requires a bonding arc to be in the shape of an arc.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "a bond formed by bonding the side of a bond wire to a contact area/inner area of external contact, forming an arc-like shape."

F. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 6,841,922

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 6,841,922, titled "Piezoelectric Resonator Apparatus with Acoustic Reflector" (the "#922 patent"). To reflect leaked sound waves at the operating frequency back into the piezoelectric layer, the thickness of the layers of the acoustic mirror should be¼ the acoustic wavelength of the BAW resonator's operating frequency. This thickness is known as #/4 thickness or¼ lambda thickness. The #922 patent describes how to construct an acoustic mirror with non-#/4 thick layers that is capable of reflecting the sound waves.

1. "due to technological limitations in the manufacturing of this layer" (Claim 1)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "due to technological limitations in the manufacturing of this layer" is clear on its face. TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the layer is manufactured at a thickness different from¼ of the wavelength in this layer at the operating frequency because technological limitations make it difficult to manufacture the layer at a thickness of¼ of the wavelength." [7]

20 The claim term plainly states layers are "set different from a quarter of the acoustic wavelength" due to "limitations" in technology, and not due to an inability of technology. The patent specification supports a plain reading of the claim term, and provides that realization of the¼ wavelength thickness "may be problematic for technological reasons," and "[m]etal layers with such thickness can be realized technologically only with difficulty." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. I at 2:21, 30–33) (emphasis added).

The disputed claim term explicitly provides that the technological limitations relate to the manufacturing of this layer. TriQuint argues that Avago deems non-manufacturing processes, such as parasitic capacitances and different temperature coefficients of the layers, to be technological limitations referred to in the claim. Because the disputed claim term plainly states that the technological limitations relate to the manufacturing of the layer, the Court agrees with TriQuint's line of reasoning. However, the manufacturing limitation (as opposed to operational limitations) is explicit in the claim, and it is not necessary to read extraneous manufacturing-related limitations into the disputed claim term.

A person having ordinary skill in the art would understand the disputed claim term to mean that the technological limitations in the manufacturing process referred to in the #922 patent make #/4 thick layers difficult to manufacture, but not impossible to manufacture. Accordingly, the Court gives "due to technological limitations in the manufacturing of this layer" its plain and ordinary meaning.

2. "the other layer" (Claims 1–3)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "the other layer" is clear on its face. TriQuint proposes that "the other layer" is insolubly ambiguous and renders the claim indefinite, because it lacks antecedent basis.

The #922 patent describes "an acoustic reflector comprising a sequence of stacked layers having alternating high and low acoustic impedance." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. I at 6:13–15.) Therefore, where one layer has a high acoustic impedance, the other layer has a low acoustic impedance. This sequence can repeat to create a stack of layers, or as the patent describes "a plurality of layers." It is clear that, because each layer alternates in terms of high or low impedance, the reference to "the other layer" refers to the next layer in the stack having the opposite impedance (high v. low) as the previous layer (low v. high). For example, Claim 3 of the #922 patent provides "wherein the one layer is the layer having a low acoustic impedance, and wherein the other layer is the layer having a high acoustic impedance." (Id. at 6:32–35.) The Court does not find this disputed claim term is insolubly ambiguous as TriQuint proposes. The claim term "the other layer" is clear on its face and does not need to be construed by the Court.

3. "the acoustic reflector is a plurality of layers having a high acoustic impedance and comprises a plurality of layers having a low acoustic impedance" (Claim 4)

21 Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "the acoustic reflector is a plurality of layers having a high acoustic impedance and comprises a plurality of layers having a low acoustic impedance" is clear, because the use of "is" and "comprises" is an obvious typographical error. Alternatively, Avago proposes the disputed claim term means "the acoustic reflector comprises a plurality of layers having a high acoustic impedance and a plurality of layers having a low acoustic impedance." TriQuint proposes that the disputed claim term is unconstruable and must be struck down as indefinite, because the acoustic reflector cannot be (consist of) layers having high acoustic impedance, and also comprise layers with low acoustic impedance.

TriQuint asks the Court to find the disputed claim term is indefinite due to the use of "is" and "comprises" in the same sentence. TriQuint argues that it is not an obvious typographical error, and that Avago is stuck with any purported drafting errors in a patent. See Chef Am., Inc. v. Lamb–Weston, Inc., 358 F.3d 1371, 1374 (Fed.Cir.2004) ("Thus, in accord with our settled practice we construe the claim as written, not as the patentees wish they had written it. As written, the claim unambiguously requires that the dough be heated to a temperature range of 400° F. to 850° F ."). However, the Court finds the word "is" used in the context of the disputed claim term is synonymous with the term "comprises." The use of "is" and "comprises" is not insolubly ambiguous. Accordingly, the disputed claim term is not indefinite, because the meaning discernible after a reasonable attempt at construction. See Metabolite, 370 F.3d at 1366.

The patent specification makes it clear that the acoustic reflector is made up of a "sequence of stacked layers having alternating low and high impedance." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. I at 3:14–15.) Claim 1 of the #922 patent similarly states that the resonator apparatus is comprised of "an acoustic reflector comprising a sequence of stacked layers having alternating low and high acoustic impedance." (Id. at 6:13–15.) The Court construes this disputed claim term as "the acoustic reflector comprises a plurality of layers having a high acoustic impedance and a plurality of layers having a low acoustic impedance."

G. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 6,933,807

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 6,933,807, titled "Acoustic Reflector for a BAW Resonator Providing Specified Reflection of Both Shear Waves and Longitudinal Waves" (the "#807 patent"). The #807 patent teaches reducing a BAW resonator's energy loss by building an acoustic mirror that reflects both shear and longitudinal waves back into the piezoelectric mirror. The #807 patent describes the proper materials, number of layers, and thickness of layers to make an acoustic mirror that minimizes longitudinal and shear waves.

1. "wherein the performance of the acoustic reflector is determined by its reflectivity for a longitudinal wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator and by its reflectivity for a shear wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator" (Claims 1 & 10)

22 Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because the following disputed claim term is clear:

> [W]herein the performance of the acoustic reflector is determined by its reflectivity for a longitudinal wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator and by its reflectivity for a shear wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator.

TriQuint proposes that the disputed claim term is unconstruable and must be declared invalid, because the "wherein the performance" limitation is fatally indefinite.

As stated throughout this Order, courts should not determine a claim to be indefinite without first making a reasonable attempt at construction. Metabolite, 370 F.3d at 1366. Avago's brief offers no elucidation on the proper construction of the claim term. Rather, Avago directs the Court to the patent specification, in which the disputed claim term appears verbatim, and without further elaboration. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. F at 6:23–28.)

TriQuint argues that the claim is indefinite, because it is unclear how and when the limitation is satisfied. The Court agrees. The disputed claim term appears as a limitation, set apart from other clauses of claims 1 and 10; however, the claim term states that the performance of the acoustic reflector is determined by longitudinal and shear wave reflectivity at the acoustic resonator's resonance frequency. This claim term does not add to the invention, or describe the construction or functionality of the invention. Further, the claim term does not describe how, when or what happens as a result of its reflectivity of longitudinal and shear waves in the claimed invention.

Similar to the analysis of whether a preamble is limiting, Biolitec, 618 F.3d at 1358–59 (considering whether deletion of the preamble phrase affects the structure or steps of the claimed invention), deletion of the disputed claim term from claims 1 and 10 does not affect the remaining terms, claims or invention.

Accordingly, the Court finds the disputed claim term is indefinite and incapable of construction. The disputed claim term is invalid and must not be considered in determining whether the #807 patent has been infringed.

2. "performance of the acoustic reflector" (Claims 1 & 10)

Avago's proposed construction for "performance of the acoustic reflector" is "the acoustic reflector's reflectivity of both the longitudinal and shear waves at the resonance frequency of the resonator." TriQuint proposes that the disputed claim term is indefinite.

Avago directs the Court to the patent specification for a definition of the "performance of the acoustic reflector":

> [W]herein the performance of the acoustic reflector is determined by its reflectivity for a longitudinal wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator and by its reflectivity for a shear wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator.

23 (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. F at 6:23–28.) Although the Court agrees that Avago's proposed construction is the correct construction for the disputed claim term, the Court has already determined, in Section III(G)(1) of this Order, that the disputed claim term embodying the construction of "performance of the acoustic resonator" is fatally indefinite.

Therefore, to the extent the disputed claim term is required to determine whether the #807 patent has been infringed, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "the reflectivity for a longitudinal wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator and the reflectivity for a shear wave existing in the BAW resonator at the resonance frequency of the BAW resonator." However, the Court's construction of "performance of the acoustic reflector" does not alter the Court's earlier conclusion that the disputed claim term that embodies this construction is indefinite, and must be excluded from claims 1 and 10 of the #807 patent.

3. "wherein areas with layers with high acoustic impedance and areas with layers with low acoustic impedance are alternately adjacently disposed" (Claims 1 & 10)

Avago proposes that "wherein the areas with layers with high acoustic impedance and areas with layers with low acoustic impedance are alternately adjacently disposed" should be constructed to provide that " 'areas' includes a layer having a characteristic acoustic impedance (high or low) along with any connected thin intermediate layers." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is that " 'areas' includes a layer having a characteristic acoustic impedance (high or low) along with any connected thin intermediate layers that do not need to be taken into account acoustically." The parties agree that "areas" can include "connected thin intermediate layers," but disagree as to whether these intermediate layers may be taken into account acoustically.

In each of their briefs, the parties draw the Court's attention to the same description of the connected thin intermediate layers in the patent specification:

> With respect to the electrode materials ... single layer electrodes or other combinations of materials with high acoustic impedance and materials with low acoustic impedance may also be used. Furthermore, it is to be understood that between the layers there may also be thin intermediate layers, as they are conventional in semiconductor technology for priming, as seed layers, or as etch stop. These have not been mentioned here, because they are typically so thin they do not have to be taken into account acoustically.

(Doc. # 196–1, Ex. F at 10:41–52) (emphasis added). Avago argues that although the thin intermediate layers are "typically" so thin they do not have to be taken into account, typically does not mean these layers are never taken into account acoustically. TriQuint argues to the contrary. According to TriQuint, the disputed claim term means the thin intermediate layers do not have to taken into account acoustically. TriQuint ignores the word "typically" in the patent specification, and takes the position that the thin intermediate layers "must be thin enough to be acoustically insignificant." (Doc. # 196 at p. 31.)

24 The Court finds TriQuint's proposed construction of the disputed claim term goes too far in stating that the thin intermediate layers do not need to be taken into account acoustically. While the thin intermediate layers "typically" do not need to be taken into account, the patent does not state they are never taken into account acoustically. TriQuint's limitation contradicts the patent specification.

Accordingly, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "wherein areas with layers with high acoustic impedance and areas with layers with low acoustic impedance are alternately adjacently disposed, with the term 'areas' including a layer having a characteristic acoustic impedance (high or low) along with any connected thin intermediate layers."

4. wherein the layers of the acoustic reflector and layers disposed between the acoustic reflector and the piezoelectric layer are selected, with reference to their number, material, and thickness, such that the transmissivity for the longitudinal wave and the transmissivity for the shear wave in the area of the resonance frequency is smaller than –10 dB" (Claims 1 & 10)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because the following disputed claim term is clear:

> [W]herein the layers of the acoustic reflector and layers disposed between the acoustic reflector and piezoelectric layer are selected with reference to their number, material, and thickness, such that the transmissivity for the longitudinal wave and the transmissivity for the shear wave in the area of the resonance frequency is smaller than –10 dB.

Avago also proposes an addition to the disputed claim term's plain meaning:

> With the understanding that the layers need not all be selected for the specific purpose of achieving (a) a transmissivity for the longitudinal wave in the area of the resonance frequency of less than –10dB and (b) a transmissivity for the shear wave in the area of the resonance frequency of less than –10 dB.

TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is:

> [T]he number, the material and the thickness of the layers of the acoustic reflector and the number, the material and the thickness of the layers between the acoustic reflector and the piezoelectric layer must all be selected for the specific purposes of achieving (a) a transmissivity for the longitudinal wave in the area of the resonance frequency of less than –10 dB and (b) a transmissivity for the hear wave in the area of the resonance frequency of less than –10dB, and must achieve those effects.

The parties main disagreement concerns whether the layers "need not all," as Avago proposes, or "must all," as TriQuint proposes, be selected for the two specific purposes outlined in the proposed claim constructions. TriQuint argues that the phrasing "are selected ... such that" indicates that the selection of layers must be designed to achieve the transmissivity result specified in the disputed claim term. The Court agrees with TriQuint that some design intent is required, because the inventors included the phrase "are selected with reference to their number, material and thickness" in claims 1 and 10 of the # 807 patent. This phrase emphasizes how the BAW resonator is constructed to achieve longitudinal and shear wave transmissivities of less than –10dB.

25 Throughout its brief and reply, Avago argues that intent to infringe is irrelevant, and that it is improper to construe a claim to require a design intent. This is incorrect. First, Avago conflates an intent to infringe with an intent to assemble an invention in a certain manner or an intent to select certain materials. Second, intent may be an element of a claim when a claim reflects a design purpose, and that purpose is treated as a limitation of the claim. Jansen v. Rexall Sundown, Inc., 342 F.3d 1329 (Fed.Cir.2003) ("[The preamble] is a statement of the intentional purpose for which the method must be performed."); Koito Mfg. Co. v. Turn–Key–Tech, LLC, 381 F.3d 1142, 1150 n. 2 (Fed.Cir.2004) (constructing the term "predetermined general direction," and finding that the "designer must be aware of the flow direction that will result upon an injection of plastic so that he can assure himself that the next flow direction will be different ."). While intent may not be automatically imputed into claims, an applicant is not prevented from include an intent element in the claims. See Paragon Solutions, LLC v. Timex Corp., 566 F.3d 1075, 1091 (Fed.Cir.2009) ("Absent an express limitation to the contrary, any use of a device that meets all of the limitations of an apparatus claim written in structural terms infringes that apparatus claim.").

Contrary to Avago's proposed construction that "the layers need not all" be selected with the specific purposes in mind, the disputed claim term states "the layers of the acoustic reflector and layers disposed between the acoustic reflector and the piezoelectric layer." As TriQuint points out, the disputed claim term does not state "some of the layers" or "most of the layers." The disputed claim term states "the layers," which implies all of the layers. This understanding of the disputed claim term is confirmed by the patent specification in which "all layers below the piezoelectric layer ... are to be taken into account in their effect as acoustic reflector," (id. at 4:28–31), and " 'reflectivity' can only be associated with the entirety of all layers lying beneath the piezoelectric layer" (id . at 4:35–37).

TriQuint also directs the Court's attention to the portions of the patent specification, where the specific numbers, materials, and thicknesses of the layers are described in detail. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. F at 8:4–27, 9:58–66, 10:20–30.) The specification of the material and thickness of the individual layers and the number of the individual layers supports TriQuint's proposed construction that all the layers are selected to achieve the desired transmissivity.

Avago argues that the patent does not require "that each layer individually must be selected with the intent of achieving the desired transmissivity." (Doc. # 197 at p. 40.) The Court agrees. However, TriQuint's proposed construction does not require each layer individually be selected to achieve the desired result. Rather, TriQuint's proposed construction requires that each layer is selected such that, when combined or stacked, the layers achieve the desired transmissivity. The patent specification discloses the number material and thickness of each layer in order to achieve the desired transmissivity. This, of course, does not mean the layers cannot be selected for, or achieve, other results.

26 For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as:

> The number, the material and the thickness of the layers of the acoustic reflector and the layers between the acoustic reflector and the piezoelectric layer must all be selected for the specific purpose of achieving (a) the transmissivity for the longitudinal wave in the area of the resonance frequency of less than –10dB, and (b) the transmissivity for the shear wave in the area of the resonance frequency of less than –10dB.

5. "layers of the acoustic resonator are selected such that the BAW resonator has an unambiguous and desired dispersion performance" (Claim 4)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "layers of the acoustic resonator are selected such that the BAW resonator has an unambiguous and desired dispersion performance" is clear "with the understanding that the layers of the acoustic resonator need not be selected for the specific purpose of achieving an 'unambiguous and desired dispersion performance' for the BAW resonator." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the layers of the acoustic resonator must each be selected for the specific purpose of achieving a predetermined and unambiguous dispersion performance for the BAW resonator and have that effect."

The parties' disagreement over the construction of this disputed claim term is similar to their disagreement over the prior disputed claim term. Specifically, TriQuint argues that each layer must be selected for the specific purpose set forth in the claim term, and Avago argues that the layers do not need to be selected for the specific purpose. Again, the phrase "are selected such that" is at the core of the parties' disagreement.

Avago's proposed construction conflicts with the plain meaning of the disputed claim term. Avago proposes that "the layers of the acoustic resonator need not be selected for the specific purpose of achieving an 'unambiguous and desired dispersion performance' for the BAW resonator." However, the claim term explicitly states that the layers "are selected" to achieve the specified result. The Court finds Avago's proposed construction is inconsistent with the plain meaning of the disputed claim term.

Avago argues that each and every layer does not need to be selected for the specified result. The Court disagrees. The disputed claim term states "the layers," not "some of the layers" or "most of the layers." As stated above, the use of "the layers" in the disputed claim term implies all of the layers. Similar to the Court's discussion of the disputed claim term above, even though all of the layers are selected for a specific result, that does not mean the layers cannot be selected for, or achieve, other results, as well.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "the layers of the acoustic resonator must all be selected for the specific purpose of achieving an unambiguous and desired dispersion performance."

6. "unambiguous and desired dispersion performance" (Claim 4)

27 Avago's proposed construction for "unambiguous and desired dispersion performance" is "the first shear harmonic wave and the longitudinal main resonance are separated by at least a bandwidth of the resonator." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the layers are selected such that the first shear harmonic wave and the longitudinal main resonance of the BAW resonator are separated by at least the bandwidth of the longitudinal resonance." TriQuint's proposed construction reads into this disputed claim term the limitations of the prior disputed claim term: that the layers "are selected such that ...." It is not necessary to construe this disputed claim term with this extraneous limitation, because the Court has addressed the issue in the preceding claim construction.

The patent specification provides that "unambiguous and desired dispersion performance" occurs when "the distance between the longitudinal main resonance and the first shear harmonic wave is greater than a bandwidth of the resonator, preferably greater than the bandwidth of the longitudinal main resonance of the resonator." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. F at 6:52–56.) A subsequent definition in the patent specification describes the unambiguous and desired dispersion performance as "the frequency distance of first shear harmonic wave and longitudinal main resonance is greater than the bandwidth of the longitudinal main resonance." (Id. at 9:47–51 .)

The parties' proposed constructions reflect the definition in the patent specification. However, TriQuint requires that the bandwidth distance be at least the distance of the bandwidth of the longitudinal resonance. The patent specification initially states that this bandwidth is "preferable," and the subsequent definition describes the bandwidth as greater than that of the longitudinal main resonance. The Court will apply the less specific definition in constructing the disputed claim term. See Teleflex, 299 F.3d at 1326 (citing Comark Commc'ns, 156 F.3d at 1186). Accordingly, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "the first shear harmonic wave and the longitudinal main resonance of the BAW resonator are separated by at least a bandwidth of the resonator ."

7. "[layers] are selected such that the distance between the longitudinal main resonance and the first shear harmonic wave is greater than the bandwidth of the longitudinal main resonance of the resonator" (Claim 6)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "[layers] are selected such that the distance between the longitudinal main resonance and the first shear harmonic wave is greater than the bandwidth of the longitudinal main resonance of the resonator" is clear. TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the layers of the acoustic resonator must each be selected for the specific purpose of achieving a distance between the longitudinal main resonance and the first shear harmonic wave that is greater than the bandwidth of the longitudinal main resonance of the resonator and have that effect."

28 Again, the parties' disagreement concerns whether there is an element of intent in the phrase "are selected such that...." However, this time Avago argues that the disputed claim term is clear and does not require construction, rather than arguing, as it does in prior constructions, that the phrase "are selected such that" does not require each layer to be selected with the specific purpose in mind.

The Court agrees with TriQuint's construction that the layers are selected for the purpose of achieving a specific result, namely a certain distance between the longitudinal main resonance and the first shear harmonic wave. Further, the use of "the layers of the acoustic resonator" implies that all of the layers, not some or most of the layers, are selected to achieve a specific result. Again, the Court finds that even though all of the layers are selected for a specific result, that does not mean the layers cannot be selected for, or achieve, other results, as well.

Based on the foregoing, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "the layers of the acoustic resonator must all be selected for the specific purpose of achieving a distance between the longitudinal main resonance and the first shear harmonic wave that is greater than the bandwidth of the longitudinal main resonance of the resonator."

8. "longitudinal main resonance [of the resonator]" (Claim 6)

Avago's proposed construction for "longitudinal main resonance" is "the primary resonant frequency of the resonator in the direction of the applied electrical field." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the primary frequency at which the resonator resonates longitudinally (in the same direction as its elastic deflection)." The parties agree that this claim term relates to the primary resonant frequency, but disagree on how to construct "longitudinal."

Longitudinal waves shown in Figure 1 B of the #807 patent are labeled as 204 and 210. The patent specification provides that, as illustrated in Figure 1B, "the longitudinal waves 210 moving in a direction not exactly perpendicular to the substrate plans (see Fig. 1B) are at least partly converted to shear waves 212." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. F at 4:4–6.) TriQuint proposes that longitudinal waves travel in the same direction as the resonator's elastic deflection. Avago argues that TriQuint's proposed construction directly contradicts the patent specification, because the resonator's elastic deflection is perpendicular to the substrate, but the longitudinal waves do not always move exactly perpendicular to the substrate; therefore, the longitudinal waves cannot travel in the same direction as the resonator's elastic deflection. Although Avago is correct that the longitudinal waves and the elastic deflection may not both be exactly perpendicular to the substrate, TriQuint's proposed construction is taken directly from the patent specification.

The patent specification defines longitudinal waves as "waves propagating in the direction of the elastic deflection." (Id. at 3:26–27.) The Court does not find that TriQuint is seeking to add a limitation to the disputed claim term by defining "longitudinal" as the same direction of elastic deflection. Rather, the Court finds TriQuint has applied the definition of longitudinal waves contained in the #807 patent to its proposed construction of the disputed claim term.

29 For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "the primary resonant frequency at which the resonator resonates longitudinally (in the direction of the elastic deflection)."

H. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 6,909,340

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 6,909,340, titled "Bulk Acoustic Wave Filter Utilizing Resonators with Different Aspect Ratios" (the "#340 patent"). The #340 patent describes a design for BAW filters that allow for the suppression of "spurious modes" by designing each resonator in the BAW filter to have a different "surface shapes," "surface contents," and "aspect ratios" to wash out the effect of the spurious modes.

1. "A bulk acoustic wave filter, comprising: a plurality of bulk acoustic wave resonators" (Claims 1 & 12)

The parties agree that "a plurality of bulk acoustic wave resonators" means "at least two bulk acoustic wave resonators." Avago proposes that "[a] bulk acoustic wave filter, comprising: a plurality of bulk acoustic wave resonators," which is the preamble to claims 1 through 12, is limiting. TriQuint disagrees and asks the Court to find the preamble is not limiting.

"Whether to treat a preamble as a claim limitation is determined on the facts of each case in light of the claim as a whole and the invention described in the patent." Storage Tech. Corp. v. Cisco Sys., Inc., 329 F.3d 823, 831 (Fed.Cir.2003) (citing Catalina Mktg. Int'l v. Coolsavings.com, Inc., 289 F.3d 801, 808 (Fed.Cir.2002)). Generally, the preamble does not limit the claims. Am. Med. Sys., Inc. v. Biolitec, Inc., 618 F.3d 1354, 1358 (Fed.Cir.2010) (citing Allen Eng'g Corp. v. Bartell Indus., Inc., 299 F.3d 1336, 1346 (Fed.Cir.2002)). The preamble may be construed as limiting "if it recites essential structure or steps, or if it is 'necessary to give life, meaning and vitality' to the claim." Catalina Mktg., 289 F.3d at 808 (quoting Pitney Bowes v. Hewlett–Packard Co., 182 F.3d 1298, 1305 (Fed.Cir.1999)). However, a preamble is not limiting "when the claim body describes a structurally complete invention such that deletion of the preamble phrase does not affect the structure or steps of the claimed invention." Biolitec, 618 F.3d at 1358–59 (citing Catalina Mktg., 289 F.3d at 809).

Avago relies on Poly–America, L.P. v. GSE Lining Technology, Inc., 383 F.3d 1303 (Fed.Cir.2004), to support its position that the preamble is limiting. The preamble at issue in Poly–America was the phrase "blown-film." In Poly–America, the Federal Circuit agreed with the district court's conclusion that "blown-film" disclosed a fundamental characteristic of the claimed invention, rather than state a purpose or an intended use of the invention. Id. at 1310.

In this instance, the preamble "[a] bulk acoustic wave filter, comprising: a plurality of bulk acoustic wave resonators" does not affect the structure of the claimed invention. See Biolitec, 618 F.3d at 1358–59. The preamble does not recite an essential structure, because the claims are written in terms of the structure and characteristics of bulk acoustic wave resonators, and not bulk acoustic wave filters. Accordingly, the deletion of the preamble phrase does not affect the structure or steps of the bulk acoustic wave resonators with different aspect ratios. The Court finds the preamble states the purpose or intended use of the invention, and is not necessary to give meaning to the claims.

30 Based on the foregoing, the Court finds the preamble to claims 1 through 12 is not limiting.

2. "bulk acoustic wave resonator[s]" (Claims 1–4 & 9–12)

The parties agree that a "bulk acoustic wave resonator" or BAW resonator must include a layer of piezoelectric material between two electrodes. Avago's proposed construction for "bulk acoustic wave resonator[s]" is "an electromechanical resonator comprising a layer of piezoelectric material sandwiched between a top electrode and bottom electrode, wherein the active portion of the piezoelectric material is generally confined to the region of the piezoelectric material defined by the overlap of the top and bottom electrodes." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is that "bulk acoustic wave resonators include a layer of piezoelectric material arranged between two electrodes," and "need not be manufactured on-chip in a very-large scale integration (VLSI) process, and include, but are not limited to, various designs such as thin film resonators (TFR), semiconductor bulk acoustic resonators (SBAR), and film bulk acoustic resonators (FBAR)."

The #340 patent states that "[b]ulk acoustic wave resonators typically include two electrodes and a piezoelectric layer, which is arranged between the two electrodes." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. G at 1:19–21.) TriQuint seeks to limit this construction by describing the manufacturing process. As TriQuint notes in its brief, the patent itself does not state that the chips are manufactured using the VLSI process. Further, the Court does not find any support in the patent to construe the disputed claim term as explicitly including or excluding TFRs, SBARs, or FBARs. The Court does not find it necessary to either include, or exclude, the additional limitations in TriQuint's proposed construction concerning the method of manufacture of the resonators.

Avago states that its proposed construction includes a clause that reflects the description in the #340 patent that "the 'effective resonator surface' is regarded as the surface of the electrodes which results from the overlapping area of the electrodes when the two electrodes are projected in a plane." (Id. at 2:16–19.) The parties have stipulated that the "effective resonator surfaces" means "the overlapping area of the electrodes when the two electrodes are projected onto a plane." (Doc. # 209 at p. 3.) However, the Court does not find the second part Avago's proposed construction consistent with the # 340 patent. Accordingly, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "a resonator comprised of a layer of piezoelectric material sandwiched between a top electrode and bottom electrode with a specific effective resonator surface."

3. "surface contents" (Claims 1, 2, 5–8 & 12)

Avago's proposed construction for "surface contents" is "area." TriQuint proposes that "surface contents" is insolubly ambiguous and renders the claim indefinite. However, TriQuint concedes in its brief that "the [patent] specification is consistent with Avago's construction."

31 As set forth above, in construing a disputed claim term, the Court must first consider the words of the claim term itself. Next, the Court looks at "the [patent] specification to determine whether the inventor has used any terms in a manner inconsistent with their ordinary meaning." Vitronics, 90 F.3d at 1582. The meaning of "surface contents" is not readily apparent from the words themselves. Claim 1 states that bulk acoustic wave resonators have “different surface shapes and/or different surface contents.” (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. G at 6:61–62.) Accordingly, surface shapes and surface contents are different concepts.

While the patent claims make it clear that “surface contents” are not the same as “surface shapes,” the patent specification indicates that “surface contents” is properly construed as “area.” The patent specification states that Figure 5 “is a plan view of an inventive two-stage conductor filter formed from bulk acoustic wave resonators with the effective resonator surfaces having different surface contents.” (Id. at 5:40–43) (emphasis added). Figure 5 is a depiction of four resonators each with a different area, that is each with a different length and different width.

Avago further supports its proposed construction with reference to its German patent application. The term “surface contents” in the #340 patent corresponds to the German word “Flächeninhalt” in the German patent application. Flächeninhalt translates to “area.” (Doc. # 197–2, Ex. H–2, HARRAP'S CONCISE GERMAN & ENGLISH DICTIONARY (1982).)

Based on the foregoing, the Court finds that the claim term “surface contents” is not insolubly ambiguous, as TriQuint contends. Rather, the Court construes the disputed claim term to mean “area.”

4. “aspect ratios” (Claims 1 & 12)

The parties agree that the term “aspect ratios” is defined in the patent specification. However, the parties disagree as to whether the claim can be constructed. Avago's proposed construction for “aspect ratios” is “the smallest dimension of the resonator within the surface plane divided by the largest dimension of the resonator within the surface plane,” and that “[t]he directions of these two dimensions need not be perpendicular to each other.” TriQuint proposes that “aspect ratios” is insolubly ambiguous and renders the claim indefinite.

During the examination of the #340 patent application, the examiner stated, “[t]he specification needs to define ‘aspect ratio’ at the first occurrence thereof.” (Doc. # 198–1, Ex. H.3 at ¶ 2.) The patent examiner further stated, “if ‘aspect ratio’ is considered to be width: length, then the specification is unclear ... as to how one would determine the ‘aspect ratio’ when the effective resonator surface is ‘nonrectangular.’ “ (Id.) Avago responded to the patent examiner by adding Avago's proposed construction of the disputed claim term to the patent specification. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. G at 3:50–54.) The patent specification also offers an example for calculating the aspect ratio of a non-rectangular shape: “For a parallelogram, for instance, the aspect ratio would be the distance between the two opposing acute-angled corners divided by the distance between the two long opposing sides.” (Id. at 3:53–54–57.) This example provides an aspect ratio in which the two dimensions are not perpendicular to each other, as described in the patent specification and in the proposed construction. The patent examiner accepted this definition and example, and issued a “Notice of Allowance.”

32 The Court disagrees with TriQuint that the disputed claim term is indefinite. The term “aspect ratio” is properly given its meaning that the inventors of the #340 patent provided, and that the patent examiner found acceptable. Accordingly, the Court construes “aspect ratio” as “the smallest dimension of the resonator within the surface plane divided by the largest dimension of the resonator within the surface plane. The directions of these two dimensions need not be perpendicular to each other.”

5. “nonrectangular shape” (Claims 3 & 4)

Avago's proposed construction for “nonrectangular shape” is “a shape where the angles between the boundary lines of the shape are not equal to 90 degrees where they meet, i.e., any shape that is not a rectangle.” TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is “a shape whose outer adjacent boundary lines are all at 90° angles to each other.” TriQuint argues that “[w]here the corners of an object are rounded, its rectangularity is determined by examining the angles where the boundary lines would intersect if extended in a straight line. Thus, a rectangle with rounded corners qualifies as rectangular.” TriQuint proposes a construction in which the rectangularity of a shape is determined by examining the angles where the boundary lines would intersect if extended in a straight line, and not where the boundary lines actually intersect, as Avago's proposed construction states. The dispute over this claim term exists because Avago asserts that TriQuint's resonators are “nonrectangular” because they have rounded corners. (See Doc. # 196 at p. 40.)

In order to construct the meaning of “nonrectangular shape,” the Court must first understand what constitutes a rectangular shape. The American Heritage Science Dictionary defines "rectangle" as "a four-sided plane figure with four right angles." Accordingly, a shape that does not have four 90 degree angles (right angles) is not a rectangular shape.

The #340 patent specification provides: "A nonrectangular shape ... means a shape in which the angles between the boundary lines of the effective resonator surface are not equal to 90°." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. G at 4:4–7.) The patent specification further provides that "the individual resonators have a nonrectangular shape (the angles between the boundary lines of the effective resonator surfaces of the individual resonators are not equal to 90°)." (Id. at 6:47–50.) The patent specification makes it clear that the angles of the shape are measured "between the boundary lines," and not beyond the boundary lines as TriQuint proposes.

In further support of its proposed construction, Avago directs the Court's attention to the prosecution history. During the examination, the patent examiner found the shapes in a prior patent were "nonrectangular resonators because the corners are cut away." (Doc. # 197–2, Ex. H.3 at p. 8.) Applying TriQuint's proposed construction, a rectangle without corners would constitute a rectangular shape, because its outer adjacent boundary lines would intersect at 90 degree angles. Instead, the patent examiner applied the same understanding of a nonrectangular shape as Avago proposes.

33 The Court finds a plain meaning of the term "nonrectangular shape," together with the definitions in the patent specification, requires construction of the claim term such that the angles between boundary lines of the effective resonator are not all equal to 90 degrees. TriQuint's proposed construction narrows the plain meaning of the term "nonrectangular shape" to an extent that permits plainly nonrectangular shapes to be considered rectangular. There is no support in the patent or the prosecution history for this construction.

Based on the foregoing, the Court construes the claim term as "a shape where the angles between the boundary lines of the shape are not equal to 90 degrees where they meet, i.e., any shape that is not a rectangle."

6. "stage of a conductor filter" (Claim 9)

The parties have stipulated that the claim term "conductor filter" means "ladder filter." (See Doc. # 209 at p. 3.) Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because the meaning of "stage of a conductor filter" when used with reference to a ladder filter is readily apparent. Alternatively, Avago proposes the disputed claim term means "one series segment and one parallel segment of a ladder filter." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "one series resonator and one parallel resonator connected in a ladder configuration." In the industry, "stage" can refer to either of the parties' proposed constructions; therefore, the Court must look to the #340 patent in construing the disputed claim term.

In support of its proposed construction that a stage constitutes one series and one parallel resonator, TriQuint relies on Figures 9 through 12 of the # 340 patent. Each of these figures shows a "stage" that has exactly one series resonator and exactly one parallel resonator. Avago, in contrast, argues that in addition to the stages shown in the Figures 9 through 12 of the #340 patent, a stage also can be a series branch combined with a parallel branch, and can include two resonators in parallel. To support this proposition, Avago cites to Figure 2 in the #5,619 patent. The Court does not find it necessary to look to another patent in construing the claim terms of the #340 patent.

In further support of its proposed construction, TriQuint quotes the patent specification, which states that a 2–stage conductor filter has four resonators and a 3–stage conductor filter has six resonators:

> [Bulk acoustic wave filters] are connected in the form of a one and half-stage conductor filter, in the form of a two-stage conductor filter, in the form of a two and a half-stage conductor filter, in the form of a three-stage conductor filter or in the form of a three and a half-stage conductor filter, with three, four, five, six or seven bulk acoustic wave resonators being interconnected.

(Doc. # 196–1, Ex. G at 5:2–8) (emphasis added). The patent specification does not support Avago's proposed construction that multiple resonators may be included in each branch of the stage.

34 The Court finds TriQuint's proposed construction of the disputed claim term is consistent with the patent. Accordingly, the Court will construe "stage of a conductor filter" to mean "one series resonator and one parallel resonator connected in a ladder configuration."

7. "half-stage of a conductor filter" (Claim 9)

As stated above, the parties agree that a "conductor filter" is a "ladder filter." Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because the meaning of "half-stage of a conductor filter" when used with reference to a ladder filter is readily apparent. Alternatively, Avago proposes the disputed claim term means "a parallel or series segment of a ladder filter." TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "one additional parallel or series resonator included within a ladder configuration."

As stated above, TriQuint relies on Figures 9 through 12 of the #340 patent to support its proposed construction of the disputed claim term. TriQuint also quotes the patent specification, which states that a 1 ½-stage conductor filter has three resonators, a 2 ½-stage conductor filter has five resonators, and a 3 ½-stage conductor filter has seven resonators:

> [Bulk acoustic wave filters] are connected in the form of a one and half-stage conductor filter, in the form of a two-stage conductor filter, in the form of a two and a half-stage conductor filter, in the form of a three-stage conductor filter or in the form of a three and a half-stage conductor filter, with three, four, five, six or seven bulk acoustic wave resonators being interconnected.

(Doc. # 196–1, Ex. G at 5:2–8) (emphasis added). Avago's proposed construction that a stage may refer to a parallel or series segment, and that a segment may comprise multiple resonators is not supported by the #340 patent. Accordingly, the Court construes "half-stage of a conductor filter" as "one additional parallel or series resonator included within a ladder configuration."

I. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 6,864,619

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 6,864,619, titled "Piezoelectric Resonator Device Having Detuning Layer Sequence" (the "#4,619 patent"). The #4,619 patent describes a detuning layer sequence of at least a first layer having a high acoustic impedance and a second layer having a low acoustic impedance. This sequence of layers shifts the resonant frequency of a resonator as compared to other resonators in the filter, and allows for trimming without significantly affecting the frequency difference between the detuned and non-detuned resonators.

1. "[a detuning layer sequence] arranged on the first piezoelectric resonator" (Claims 1 & 12)

Avago's proposed construction for "[a detuning layer sequence] arranged on the first piezoelectric resonator" is "the detuning layer sequence is only added to the first piezoelectric resonator." TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "a sequence of detuning layers is only applied to the first piezoelectric resonator and is arranged above and in contact with the first piezoelectric resonator." The parties main disagreement concerns the scope of "arranged on."

35 TriQuint's proposed construction conforms with Avago's proposed construction to the extent that first resonator has a detuning layer sequence while the second resonator does not have a detuning layer sequence. However, TriQuint's proposed construction requires that the detuning layer sequence is not only arranged above the piezoelectric resonator, but is also in contact with the piezoelectric resonator. TriQuint argues that Avago's proposed construction fails to account for the use of "on" in the disputed claim term.

In support of its proposed construction, TriQuint cites to Figure 4A of the # 4,619 patent. The patent specification provides that "[p]referably, layers of the electrodes [28 and 30] and layers of the detuning layer sequence 52 which basically have the same acoustic properties are abutting." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. H at 7:39–41 .) However, the depiction of the detuning layer sequence between two top electrode layers of the first piezoelectric resonator in Figures 3 and Figure 4A is not the only location where the detuning layer sequence can be arranged on the resonator. (Id. at 9:16–28.) In fact, in its reply brief, TriQuint states that "Avago is correct that the specification indicates that a detuning layer sequence could be located in various places." (Doc. # 208 at p. 26 .)

The parties disagree whether it is proper to state the detuning layer sequence must be in contact with the piezoelectric resonator. The Court finds this limitation is obvious from the claim term itself, which requires the detuning layer sequence to be arranged on the first piezoelectric resonator. While the Court does not find TriQuint is attempting to impose an extraneous limitation to the disputed claim term, the Court finds TriQuint's proposed construction with the "clarifications" creates confusion, rather than alleviates ambiguity. The patent specification makes it clear where and how the detuning sequence is arranged on the first piezoelectric resonator. Further, using TriQuint's proposed term "applied," the Random House Dictionary defines "applied" as "to place in contact with."

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "the detuning layer sequence is only applied to the first piezoelectric resonator."

2. "[the detuning layer sequence comprises at least a first layer having a first acoustic impedance and a second layer having a second acoustic impedance] in order to shift a resonance frequency of the first piezoelectric resonator relative to the resonance frequency of the second piezoelectric resonator" (Claims 1 & 12)

Avago proposes that no construction of the bracketed language is necessary, because "the detuning layer sequence comprises at least a first layer having a first acoustic impedance and a second layer having a second acoustic impedance" is clear on its face. Avago's proposed construction for "[the detuning layer sequence comprises at least a first layer having a first acoustic impedance and a second layer having a second acoustic impedance] in order to shift a resonance frequency of the first piezoelectric resonator relative to the resonance frequency of the second piezoelectric resonator" is "the detuning layer sequence comprises at least a first layer having a first acoustic impedance and a second layer having a second acoustic impedance to change the resonant frequency of the first resonator so that it is different than the resonant frequency of the second resonator which does not have a detuning layer." TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term, including the construction of the bracketed language, is "the first layer of the detuning sequence has a first acoustic impedance and the second layer has a second acoustic impedance for the purpose and effect of causing a shift in the resonance frequency of the first piezoelectric resonator relative to the resonance frequency of the second piezoelectric resonator."

36 TriQuint argues that its proposed construction construes the phrase "in order to" consistent with its plain meaning "for the purpose of." See AMERICAN HERITAGE DICTIONARY 1273 (3d ed.1992) (defining "in order to" as "for the purpose of"). However, in constructing the disputed claim term, TriQuint further construes "in order to" as "for the purpose and effect of." The Court finds the additional limitation goes beyond the plain meaning of the phrase. Contrary to TriQuint's proposed construction, Avago's proposed construction does not even address the phrase "in order to ." Rather, Avago's proposed construction focuses on construing the phrase "shift a resonance frequency."

The #4,619 patent provides that the detuning layer sequence has advantages "when trimming, that is when fine-adjusting the resonance frequency." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. H at 7:54–46.) It is clear that the detuning layer sequence serves a purpose, which purpose is described in the disputed claim term as shifting the resonance frequency of the first detuned resonator relative to the second resonator in an advantageous manner. The Court agrees with TriQuint that "in order to" is an important phrase in the disputed claim term, because intent can be a requirement of the claims when they are drafted in such a manner. See Combined Sys., Inc. v. Defense Tech. Corp. of Am., 350 F.3d 1207, 1214 (Fed.Cir.2003) (affirming the district court's construction of "forming folds ..." as requiring a "deliberate and systematic" construction).

Avago also argues that TriQuint's proposed construction reads out the phrase "at least" in the disputed claim term. The disputed claim term explicitly provides that the detuning layer sequence has at least a first and second layer of material. In its reply brief, TriQuint states that it will not object if the Court changes TriQuint's proposed construction to read "have at least" rather than "have." (Doc. # 208 at p. 27.)

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "the detuning layer sequence comprises at least a first layer having a first acoustic impedance and a second layer having a second acoustic impedance for the purpose of shifting the resonance frequency of the first piezoelectric resonator relative to the resonance frequency of the second piezoelectric resonator."

J. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 6,812,619

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 6,812,619, titled "Resonator Structure and a Filter Comprising Such a Resonator Structure" (the "#2,619 patent"). The #2,619 patent describes a BAW resonator that includes a "frame-like zone" on the top of the BAW resonator to suppress unwanted resonances by causing the piezoelectric material to expand and contract more consistently over the surface of the center region of the resonator.

1. "the resonator is adapted in such a way that a width of the frame-like zone and acoustical property means of the layer structure in the frame-like zone are arranged so that displacement relating to the piezoelectrically excited strongest resonance mode is substantially uniform in the center area of the resonator" (Claims 1 & 35)

37 Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because the following claim term is clear:

> [T]he resonator is adapted in such a way that a width of the frame-like zone and acoustical property means of the layer structure in the frame-like zone are arranged so that displacement relating to the piezoelectrically excited strongest resonance mode is substantially uniform in the center area of the resonator.

TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the resonator is specifically designed so that the width of the frame-like zone and the 'acoustical property means' cause particles in the center area of the resonator to exhibit uniform displacement at all times during operation of the resonator."

Avago argues that TriQuint's proposed construction adds limitations that are not present in the disputed claim term. Specifically, Avago notes that the disputed claim term provides for displacement that "is substantially uniform." TriQuint's proposed construction provides that particles must "exhibit uniform displacement at all times." However, in its reply brief, TriQuint agrees that the displacement should be "substantially uniform," not "uniform," and amends its brief accordingly.

TriQuint argues that the use of "adapted" and "arranged" in the disputed claim term indicates that the results of the resonator being adapted and the frame-like zone and acoustical property means being arranged are intentional. In further support of its argument, TriQuint cites the patent specification, which provides "[t]he acoustical properties and width of the frame-like zone in a resonator ... are chosen so that ... the displacement ... is substantially uniform in the center area of the resonator ." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. J at 5:40–44) (emphasis added). The Court agrees that the use of these terms indicates purposeful construction of the device to achieve the result described. However, the Court does not find it necessary to combine and construe the terms "adapted" and "arranged" as "specifically designed," as TriQuint proposes.

TriQuint also argues that it is necessary to construe the disputed claim term to resolve the issue of when the substantially uniform displacement occurs. In support of this time limitation, TriQuint cites the patent specification, which provides, "[w]hen the piezoelectrically excited wave is a thickness extensional wave, this means that the thickness of the center area varies as a function of time so that at each time instance the thickness of the center area, at substantially each point of the area, is the same." (Id. at 5:57–62) (emphasis added). Based on the language in the #2,619 patent, the Court finds support for TriQuint's proposed time limitation of "at all times." However, because the patent specification is clear as to when the displacement is substantially uniform at the center area of the resonator, the Court does not find it necessary to read this limitation into the disputed claim term.

38 In construing the disputed claim term, the Court looks to the words of the claims themselves and gives them their ordinary and customary meaning, unless clearly stated otherwise. Vitronics, 90 F.3d at 1582. There is nothing in the #2,619 patent that requires the Court to give the words in the disputed claim term anything but their ordinary and customary meaning. Accordingly, the Court finds that no construction is necessary.

2. "the resonator is adapted to operate in the thickness extensional wave mode as a TE mode" (Claims 1 & 35)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "the resonator is adapted to operate in the thickness extensional wave mode as a TE mode" is clear. TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the resonator is specifically designed to operate such that the displacement of the particles of the piezoelectric material occurs only in the direction of the applied electrical field."

As argued with respect to the prior disputed claim term, TriQuint argues that "adapted" should be construed as "specifically designed." The Court does not find the term "adapted" to be confusing or ambiguous. However, the Court does agree that the phrase "TE mode" requires construction.

The patent specification distinguishes between TE modes and shear modes:

> In the presence of a piezoelectrically excited thickness extensional wave [,] the particles of the piezoelectrical material experience displacement in the vertical direction, in other words in the direction of the applied electrical field. In the presence of a piezoelectrically excited shear wave [,] the particles of the piezoelectrical material experience displacement in the horizontal direction, in other words in a direction perpendicular to the applied electric field.

(Doc. # 196–1, Ex. J at 5:47–54.) The inventors were required to amend the claims "to emphasize that the claimed device is actually operating in the TE mode." (Doc. # 196–4, Ex. 28 at p. 11.) This amendment was required in light of prior art. The patent examiner noted that "if the claims were limited to a device actually operating in the TE mode, then the claims would be allowable." (Id.) The Court finds the disputed claim term is clearly limited to operation in TE mode, and does not provide that the resonator is adapted to operate in shear modes.

Based on the foregoing, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "the resonator is adapted to operate such that the displacement of the particles of the piezoelectrical material occurs in the direction of the applied electrical field."

K. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 6,377,137

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 6,377,137, titled "Acoustic Resonator Filter with Reduced Electromagnetic Influence Due to Die Substrate Thickness" (the "#137 patent"). The #137 patent describes a method for reducing electromagnetic influence in a BAW resonator filter circuit by reducing the substrate upon which the BAW resonators are formed. By reducing the substrate, the distance between magnetic fields is reduced, which reduces the current induced by the magnitude of the magnetic fields.

1. "removing material from a bottom surface of said substrate to reduce the thickness of the substrate and to reduce an electromagnetic influence in a resulting filter" (Claim 1)

39 Avago's proposed construction for "removing material from a bottom surface of said substrate to reduce the thickness of the substrate and to reduce an electromagnetic influence in a resulting filter" is "removing material from a bottom surface of said substrate to reduce the thickness of the substrate and to reduce the effects caused by currents flowing through the filter." TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "removing material from the bottom surface of the substrate for the purposes of and with the effects of (a) reducing the thickness of the substrate and (b) reducing an electromagnetic influence in the filter."

Avago's proposed construction provides for an explanation of "an electromagnetic influence," while keeping the remaining disputed claim term in tact. TriQuint argues that Avago's proposed construction would leave the jury confused and misdirected. As stated throughout this Order, the Court does not construe the claim terms in a manner to be understood by a juror. Rather, disputed claim terms are given "their ordinary and accustomed meaning as understood by one of ordinary skill in the art." Dow Chem., 257 F.3d at 1372; see also Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1313.

TriQuint's seeks to construe "to reduce" as "for the purposes of and with the effects of [reducing]." The disputed claim term explicitly states "removing material ... to reduce." The Court finds the purpose of removing material from the substrate is clear in the disputed claim term without further construction. It is not necessary to construe the claim term in the manner proposed by TriQuint.

According to the patent specification, electromagnetic influence is "caused by the currents flowing through FBAR filter 226." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. K at 7:2–4.) Avago's proposed construction of the disputed claim term reflects this explanation of electromagnetic influence.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "removing material from a bottom surface of said substrate to reduce the thickness of the substrate and to reduce the effects caused by currents flowing through the filter."

2. "reduce an electromagnetic influence" (Claim 1)

Avago's proposed construction for "reduce an electromagnetic influence" is contained in Avago's proposed construction of the prior claim term. Avago proposes that the disputed claim term means "reduce the effects caused by currents flowing through the filter." TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "reduce the effects caused by currents flowing on alternate paths from input to output such that the signal bypasses the filter elements."

Because the disputed claim term currently at issue is contained in the prior construction, the Court must construe these claim terms consistently. As stated above, an electromagnetic influence is "caused by the currents flowing through FBAR filter 226." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. K at 7:2–4.) Avago argues that TriQuint's proposed construction of the disputed claim term confuses electromagnetic influence with victimizer loop and victim loop. (Id. at 7:9–17.) Victimizer loop and victim loop are both disputed claim terms and subject to construction below.

40 The Court finds Avago's proposed construction is consistent with the patent specification, and construes the disputed claim term as "reduce the effects caused by currents flowing through the filter."

3. "die cavity" (Claims 5, 6, 14 & 16)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "die cavity" is clear. TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "a recess in a support structure, positioned to receive a die."

In support of its proposed construction, TriQuint argues that the disputed claim term has no plain meaning to jurors. However, the Court is not required to construe a disputed claim term in a manner that can easily be understood by jurors. Rather, the Court is required to construe the disputed claim term in a manner that would be understood by a person of ordinary skill in the art. Dow Chem., 257 F.3d at 1372.

Both parties cite to the same description in the patent specification: "The die with FBAR resonators ... form a single FBAR filter 226. FBAR filter 226 may then be mounted into a die cavity 229 with a ceramic package 288, as shown in Figs. 9–10." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. K at 6:38–43.) Figure 10 shows a cross-section of the device, in which die cavity 229 is a hollow space in which the filter is mounted. According to Avago's brief, a "die cavity" is "an area in a package where the die is mounted." (Doc. # 197 at p. 56.) Avago argues that TriQuint's proposed construction should be rejected, because it introduces concepts such as "recess" and "support structure," which are not found in the patent specification. However, Avago's proposed construction does not attribute for the term "cavity" in the claim term. "Cavity" is defined in the American Heritage Science Dictionary as a "hollow area."

Because TriQuint's proposed construction lacks support in the #137 patent, and the disputed claim term is not entirely clear on its face, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "a hollow area in a package where the die is mounted."

4. "victim loop" (Claims 7, 15 & 18)

Victim loop is a term coined by the inventors, and does not have a plain meaning outside the #137 patent. Avago's proposed construction for "victim loop" is "a current path from the output pad to the ground pad."[8] TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "a current path formed by an output signal pad and a ground pad." TriQuint further defines the relationship between the victim and victimizer loops in the proposed claim construction below. The parties agree that the victim loop is formed on the output side.

The patent specification explains that the victim loop is on a path "such that the signal bypasses the filter elements." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. K at 7:8–11.) Figure 9 of the #137 patent depicts the victim loop as the current path between an output pad (240c) and a ground pad (240d). Therefore, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "a current path from the output pad to the ground pad such that the signal bypasses the filter elements."

5. "victimizer loop" (Claims 7, 15 & 18)

41 Victimizer loop, like the prior disputed claim term, is a term coined by the inventors, and does not have a plain meaning outside the #137 patent. Avago's proposed construction for "victimizer loop" is "a current path from the input signal pad to the ground pad."[9] TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "a current path formed by an input signal pad and a ground pad." TriQuint also proposes the Court construct the relationship between the victim loop and the victimizer loop as follows: "Current passing along the victimizer loop must create an image current in a ground plane beneath the victimizer loop. The image current and the victimizer loop current must together generate a current in the victim loop that is measurably reduced as a result of thinning the substrate." The parties agree that the victimizer loop is formed on the input side.

TriQuint's proposed construction attempts to explain the relationship between the victim loop and the victimizer loop as current paths formed by an output/input signal pad and a ground pad. Avago argues that TriQuint's proposed construction of the relationship between the claim terms is incorrect, and that output/input signal pads and ground pads can not form current pads. Rather, the patent specification provides that the current paths are formed by the "mutual inductance" between the victim loop and the victimizer loop and form between the output/input signal pads and the ground pads. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. K at 7:8–16.) The Court does not find it necessary to read TriQuint's proposed limitation into the construction of either "victim loop" or "victimizer loop ." The relationship between these two loops is explained in the patent specification. (Id. at 7:19–8:18.)

The patent specification also explains that the victimizer loop is on a path "such that the signal bypasses the filter elements." (Id. at 7:8–11.) Figure 9 of the #137 patent depicts the victimizer loop as the current path between an input pad (240a) and a ground pad (240b). For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "a current path from the input signal pad to the ground pad such that the signal bypasses the filter elements."

L. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 6,262,637

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 6,262,637, titled "Duplexer Incorporating Thin–Film Bulk Acoustic Resonators (FBARs)" (the "#637 patent"). A duplexer allows a device to receive signals within one band of frequencies and to transmit them at another band of frequencies while preventing the device's transmit signal from overloading the receive filter. The #637 patent describes a 90° phase shifter in series with either the transmit or receive filter to effectively decouple the transmit signal from the receive signal in a BAW duplexer. The 90° phase shifter protects the receive filter from being overloaded by the transmit signal by raising the impedance (flow resistance) of the receive path to block the transmit signal from following the receive path.

1. "film bulk acoustic resonator (FBAR)" (Claims 1 & 20–22)

42 Avago's proposed construction for "film bulk acoustic resonator (FBAR)" is "a bulk acoustic wave (BAW) resonator fabricated using thin film technology." TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "a piezoelectric resonator comprising a layer of piezoelectric material sandwiched between a top electrode and bottom electrode and suspended at its edges over a well in the substrate." TriQuint argues that Avago's proposed construction is intentionally vague with respect to thin-film technology. However, TriQuint acknowledges that the #637 patent describes thin-film technology in detail and explains its importance to the invention.

The patent specification supports Avago's proposed construction of the disputed claim term. The patent specification repeatedly defines FBAR as "a thin-film bulk acoustic resonator." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. L at 4:25–26, 4:45–46.)

TriQuint argues the FBAR must be suspended at its edges over a well in the substrate. However, there are multiple types of FBARs. The #637 patent incorporates U.S. Patent No. 5,5867,602. (Id. at 4:45–49.) Because this patent was expressly incorporated by referenced into the patent specification of the #637 patent, the Court may rely on the incorporated patent in constructing the disputed claim term. See Advanced Display Sys., Inc. v. Kent State Univ., 212 F.3d 1272, 1282 (Fed.Cir.2000) ("Incorporation by reference provides a method for integrating material from various documents into a host document ... by citing such material in a manner that makes clear that the material is effectively party of the host document as if it were explicitly contained therein."). The incorporated patent describes FBARs suspended over air (Doc. # 198–1, Ex. L. 1 at 1:23–26), and also FBARs constructed on a membrane (id. at 2:45–47, 3:31). Accordingly, the inventor did not depart from the broad or generic meaning of FBAR, which is understood by a person of ordinary skill in the art to be a thin-film bulk acoustic resonator.

The Court finds the claim term "FBAR" does not necessarily mean a resonator suspended over a well in the substrate. The #637 patent may further limit the construction of the particular FBAR described in the patent; however, the Court does not find it necessary to limit the claim term as narrowly as TriQuint proposes. When a term is known in the art and is used in the patent consistent with the known meaning, then the Court will not redefine the term, unless term is redefined in the patent specification. See Carroll Touch, 15 F.3d at 1577. The #637 patent specification does not redefine FBAR.

Further, it is a general principle of claim construction that while "a claim must be read in view of the specification," a court "may not read a limitation into a claim from the specification." Innova/Pure Water, 381 F.3d at 1117. The patent specification repeatedly describes FBAR as "a thin-film bulk acoustic resonator," and the Court does not find there is a clear intention to limit the scope of the claims to a resonator suspended over a well in the substrate, as TriQuint proposes.

43 Accordingly, the Court construes "film bulk acoustic resonator (FBAR)" as "a bulk acoustic wave (BAW) resonator fabricated using thin film technology."

2. "a 90° phase shifter" (Claim 1)

Avago's proposed construction for "a 90° phase shifter" is "a phase shifter that shifts the signal by approximately 90°." TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "a circuit that is designed to cause and does cause a 90° (quarter wavelength) phase shift at the center frequency of the other band pass filter" in which "[t]he 'other band pass filter' is the transmit or receive filter with which the circuit is not in series." TriQuint also proposes that the 90° phase shifter is located "between (1) the junction of the transmit path and the receive path and (2) either the transmit filter or the receive filter." However, during the Markman hearing, TriQuint acknowledged that the term "90° phase shifter" would be clear to someone of ordinary experience in the art.

A 90° phase shifter is something that shifts a signal's phase by 90 degrees or¼ of a wavelength. TriQuint argues that the 90° phase shifter must cause a 90° phase shift at the center frequency of the other band pass filter, because that is the logical place to measure the phase shift. Avago argues that the patent does not indicate that the 90° phase shift must occur at the center frequency of the other band pass filter.

Claim 1 describes a duplexer comprising, among other things, "a series circuit connected between the second port and the third port, the series circuit including a 90° phase shifter in series with a second band-pass filter." (Doc. # 196, Ex. L at 14:64–66.) Claim 1 clearly states that the 90° phase shifter is located between the second port and the third port. The Court does not find it necessary to limit the location of the 90° phase shifter in the manner proposed by TriQuint. The patent specification states: "Circuits suitable for use as the 90° phase shifter are known in the art. For example, the 90° phase shifter may be composed of lumped inductors and capacitors or a #/4 transmission line." (Id. at 7:5–8.) Although the patent provides little detail about the 90° phase shifter in the patent specification, TriQuint acknowledges that "those skilled in the art understood what 90° phase shifters do and why." (Doc. # 196 at p. 59.)

TriQuint also proposes to add an intent limitation to the claim term. The Court does not find any reason to read "designed to cause and does cause" into the claim term. A 90° phase shifter is an object that shifts the phase of a signal. The verb "shifts" is sufficient to describe what the object does without adding further intent qualifiers. It is not necessary to read additional limitations into the #637 patent.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes "a 90° phase shifter" as "a phase shifter that shifts the phase of a signal by 90 degrees."

3. "in series with a second band-pass filter" (Claim 1)

44 Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "in series with a second band-pass filter" is clear. TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "the circuit is located between (1) the junction of the transmit path, the receive path and the antenna port and (2) either the transmit filter or the receive filter."

TriQuint states that its proposed construction will be helpful to the jury to specify the location of the 90° phase shifter using language enabling the jury to locate it in the circuit. However, the Court does not construct claims so that the claim terms may be understood by potential jurors. Dow Chem., 257 F.3d at 1372 (stating that disputed claim terms are given "their ordinary and accustomed meaning as understood by one of ordinary skill in the art").

Figure 4 in the #637 patent shows the location of the 90° phase shifter (labeled as number 134), the transmit band-pass filter (130), and the second band-pass filter (132). Arrows in Figure 4 indicate the direction of the current. The numbered components in Figure 4 are explained clearly in the patent specification. (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. L at 5:61–67, 6:1–7.) The Court does not find it necessary to define the claim term "in series with a second band-pass filter" when Figure 4 depicts the location of the claim term precisely. TriQuint's description could only serve to confuse the jury, and add unnecessary limitations to the claim term. Therefore, the Court finds that no construction is necessary.

M. Avago's U.S. Patent No. 6,051,907

Avago is the owner by assignment of U.S. Patent No. 6,051,907, titled "Method for Performing On–Wafer Tuning of the Thin Film Bulk Acoustic Wave Resonators (FBARS)" (the "#907 patent"). The #907 patent describes a method for tuning multiple BAW resonators in one processing step by adjusting the thickness of multiple resonators on a semiconductor wafer by determining the average frequency across the resonators and adding or removing material from the resonators to reach the desired resonant frequency.

1. "Thin Film Bulk Acoustic Wave Resonators (FBARs)" (Claims 1, 7 & 10)

Avago's proposed construction for "Thin Film Bulk Acoustic Wave Resonators (FBARs)" is "a bulk acoustic wave (BAW) resonator fabricated using thin-film technology." TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "a FBAR is a Thin Film Bulk Acoustic Resonator that includes multiple layers having respective thicknesses, and exhibits series and/or parallel resonance at frequencies that are a function of the thickness of at least one of the layers."

The disputed claim term is defined in the patent specification as: "The [Thin Film Bulk Acoustic Wave Resonator] FBAR comprises a plurality of layers having respective thicknesses, and exhibits at least one of a series resonance and parallel resonance at respective frequencies that are a function of the thickness of at least one of the layers." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. M at 2:16–19.)

45 Avago proposes the same construction for the disputed claim term as it proposed for the same claim term in the #637 patent. As Avago argues in its brief, when a term is known in the art and is used in the patent consistent with the known meaning, then the Court should not redefine the term, unless term is redefined in the patent specification. See Carroll Touch, 15 F.3d at 1577 ("[T]he words of a claim are generally given their ordinary and accustomed meaning, unless it appears from the specification or the file history that they were used differently by the inventor."). Here, the disputed claim term is defined in the patent specification, and the Court finds the inventor intended to apply this specific definition to the disputed claim term. Vitronics, 90 F.3d at1582 ("The patent specification acts as a dictionary when it expressly defines terms used in the claims or when it defines terms by implication."). There is no evidence in the #907 patent that the inventor intended the disputed claim term to have a broad or more generic meaning.

The #637 patent and the #907 patent are unrelated; neither patent incorporates the other patent, nor refers to the other in any manner. The # 907 patent provides its own definition for "Thin Film Bulk Acoustic Wave Resonators (FBARs)," which the Court will apply in constructing the disputed claim term. The Court finds no reason to bind itself, with respect to the # 907 patent, to the definition of "film bulk acoustic wave resonator (FBAR)" contained in the #637 patent.

Based on the foregoing, the Court construes the term as it was used in the # 907 patent: "a thin film bulk acoustic wave resonator (FBAR) comprised of a plurality of layers having respective thicknesses, and exhibiting at least one of a series resonance and a parallel resonance at respective frequencies that are a function of the thickness of at least one of the layers."

2. "calculating an average of the measured frequencies" (Claim 10)

Avago proposes that no construction is necessary, because "calculating an average of the measured frequencies" is clear. TriQuint's proposed construction for this disputed claim term is "calculating a mean of all the measured frequencies."

The Court finds that a person of ordinary skill in the art would calculated the average of the measured frequencies by calculating the sum of the measured frequencies and then dividing that sum by the number of measured frequencies. However, the term "average" can generically refer to the arithmetic mean, the median, or the mode. Avago acknowledged, during the Markman hearing, that an average can be determined in a number of ways. TriQuint's proposed construction reflects the most common usage of the word "average." The American Heritage Science Dictionary defines average as "[a] number, especially the arithmetic mean, that is derived from and considered typical or representative of a set of numbers." The claim term expressly requires calculations, which involves performing a mathematical function. Merely selecting an intermediate value does not involve "calculating an average." During the Markman hearing, Avago argued that a person of ordinary skill in the art would know how to calculate the average, and would know to disregard any outlying measured frequencies. This restriction on outliers is not apparent from either the disputed claim term, or the patent specification. Contrary to Avago's position, the disputed claim term is not clear on its face. Accordingly, the term "average" as used in the #907 patent shall be construed as the "mean."

46 TriQuint further proposes to construe the disputed claim as "all measured frequencies." The Court finds no support in the #907 patent for this limitation. The Court therefore construes "calculating an average of the measured frequencies" as "calculating a mean of the measured frequencies."

3. "simultaneously altering the thickness of each of the plurality of the FBARs [by the amount (A)]" (Claim 10)

Avago's proposed construction for "simultaneously altering the thickness of each of the plurality of the FBARs by the amount (A)" is "altering the thickness of each film bulk acoustic resonator to be detuned on a wafer in one continuous processing step by the amount (A)." TriQuint's proposed construction of this disputed claim term is "changing the thickness of all the FBARs by the same amount (A) at the same time." The parties' primary dispute is whether "simultaneously" means "in one continuous processing step" or "at the same time."

The term "simultaneous" is defined as "existing, occurring, or operating at the same time." RANDOM HOUSE WEBSTER'S COLLEGE DICTIONARY 1205 (2d ed.1997). There is nothing in the patent specification that supports constructing the term "simultaneously" in a manner other than the plain meaning. Avago cites to the patent specification for support that the thickness of the plurality of each resonator is altered in one processing step; however, the Court finds this citation supports TriQuint's proposed construction. The patent specification provides that "the reduction of the top electrode thicknesses of the FBARs ... causes the respective FBARs to yield series resonant frequencies that are substantially equal to the design series resonant frequency.... In this manner, each of the FBARs on the wafer is tuned simultaneously." (Doc. # 196–1, Ex. M at 6:35–45.) Accordingly, the Court will construct the term "simultaneously" as "at the same time."

TriQuint's proposed construction provides for the changing of the thickness of "all the FBARs." However, the disputed claim term states that the thickness of "the plurality of the FBARs" will be simultaneously altered. Plurality of the resonators does not mean all of the resonators, and in this manner, TriQuint's proposed construction contains an extraneous limitation. See York Prods. v. Cent. Tractor Farm & Family Ctr., 99 F.3d 1568, 1575 (Fed.Cir.1996) ("The term [plurality] means, simply, 'the state of being plural.' ") (quoting AMERICAN HERITAGE DICTIONARY SECOND COLLEGE EDITION 955 (2d ed.1982)). The Court will not construct the term "plurality" to mean "all."

Based on the foregoing, the Court construes the disputed claim term as "altering the thickness of each film bulk acoustic resonator to be detuned on a wafer by the same amount (A) at the same time."

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court construes the disputed claim terms as set forth in the table above.

47 IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2011 WL 98948, 2011 Markman 98948

Footnotes

[1] The parties have stipulated to the construction of several claim terms. (See Doc. # 209 at pp. 2–3.) The Court will refer to these stipulated constructions when appropriate in this Order.

[2] During the Markman hearing, Avago revised its proposed construction of the disputed claim term to remove the requirement that the electrode cannot be physically connected to any other component.

[3] After filing its initial brief, Avago appears to have changed its proposed construction to use the word "patterned" rather than "defining." This change does not affect the Court's analysis.

[4] During the Markman hearing, Avago revised its proposed construction to exclude the following final phrase: "... and where the first electrodes are on one surface of the piezoelectric layer, and the second electrodes are on an opposing surface."

[5] In its reply brief, TriQuint is willing to modify its proposed construction to state that "[m]utually inverse polarization requires a connection such that when the electric field applied to the first area of the piezoelectric layer is in the same direction as the polarization of the first area, the electric field applied to the second area is in the opposite direction of the polarization of the second area, and vice versa." TriQuint offers this modification to avoid confusion as to whether the electric fields applied to resonators must always be in the same direction and of the same magnitude. (Doc. # 208 at p. 14.)

[6] During the Markman hearing, TriQuint revised its proposed construction of the disputed claim term to remove the final sentence: "The electric dipole moments must be impressed (imposed) upon the piezoelectric material during manufacture."

[7] During the Markman hearing, TriQuint revised its proposed construction to provide that technological limitations make it dificult, but do not prevent the manufacture of the layer at the certain thickness. TriQuint argued that its use of "prevent" in the original proposed construction was misinterpreted by Avago, and revised its construction to clarify its intent.

[8] Avago revised its proposed construction of the disputed claim term in its reply brief from "the nearest ground pad" to "the ground pad." TriQuint argued, and the Court agrees, that Avago's prior focus on the nearest ground pad was improper, because it is unclear from Figure 9 of the #137 patent, which ground pad is in fact "nearest."

[9] Avago revised its proposed construction of the disputed claim term in its reply brief from "the nearest ground pad" to "the ground pad." TriQuint argued, and the Court agrees, that Avago's prior focus on the nearest ground pad was improper, because it is unclear from Figure 9 of the #137 patent, which ground pad is in fact "nearest."

End of Document

2017 WL 1169528
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
D. Minnesota.

Boris A. MIKSIC, Plaintiff,
v.
BOECKERMANN GRAFSTROM MAYER, LLC, a Minnesota limited liability company f/k/a Johnson, West & Co. P.L.C., Boeckermann Grafstrom Mayer, P.A., and Johnson West & Co. P.L.C., Defendants.

Civil No. 15–539 (JRT/BRT)
|
Signed 03/28/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Gregory J. Stenmoe and Michael M. Sawers, Briggs & Morgan, PA, 80 South Eighth Street, Suite 2200, Minneapolis, MN 55402, for plaintiff.

Kyle A. Eidsness and Russell S. Ponessa, Hinshaw & Culbertson LLP, 333 South Seventh Street, Suite 2000, Minneapolis, MN 55402, for defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER ON DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO EXCLUDE EXPERT TESTIMONY

JOHN R. TUNHEIM, Chief Judge United States District Court

1 The Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") assessed substantial taxes, monetary penalties, and interest against Plaintiff Boris Miksic for his failure to file U.S. tax forms during tax years 2005 to 2010, and not disclosing his interests in and income from foreign trusts, businesses, and bank accounts. Miksic filed this accounting malpractice action alleging those errors were due to negligent tax preparation by Defendants Boeckermann Graftstrom Mayer LLC, formerly known as Johnson, West & Co. P.L.C., Boeckermann Graftstrom Mayer, P.A., and Johnson West & Co. P.L.C. (collectively "Defendants"). Miksic also contends that as a result of Defendants' negligence, he changed accountants and retained legal counsel to respond to the IRS audit and to bring this action.

Defendants move for summary judgment on Miksic's malpractice action and move to exclude testimony by Miksic's causation and liability expert, Arthur H. Cobb. Specifically, Defendants assert that: the six-year statute of limitations bars Miksic's malpractice action; Miksic failed to provide meaningful expert testimony as required by Minn. Stat. § 544.42; the doctrines of in pari delicto and laches bar Miksic's action; and Miksic cannot recover certain IRS penalties, all delinquent tax liabilities, and all attorneys' fees expended to bring the instant action.

The Court will deny in part and grant in part Defendants' motion for summary judgment. The Court will deny the motion as the Court finds that Miksic's claim is timely, Cobb's expert testimony provides a meaningful summary of his accounting malpractice opinion, and the in pari delicto and laches doctrines do not apply to the instant action. The Court, however, will grant Defendants' motion for summary judgment to preclude Miksic from recovering as damages abated Form 5471 penalties, payment for delinquent taxes, and attorneys' fees expended in the instant action. The Court finds Cobb is qualified to offer his expert opinion in this case and that his opinion will not confuse or mislead the jury, the Court will deny Defendants' motion to exclude Cobb's expert testimony.

BACKGROUND

I. MIKSIC'S RELATIONSHIP WITH DEFENDANTS

Miksic is a Croatian–American entrepreneur who lives in the United States. (Aff. of Michael M. Sawers ("Sawers Aff."), Ex. 1 ("Miksic Dep.") at 14:12–19, 18:22–19:25, Aug. 12, 2016, Docket No. 45.) English is not his first language. (Id. at 14:19–20.) Miksic owns several American and Croatian companies, including a Minnesota-based corporation named Cortec Corporation ("Cortec"), of which he is the sole shareholder, as well as a Croatian-based company named EcoCortec. (Id. at 18:24–20:21; 28:2–32:20.) Defendants provided accounting services for both Miksic and Cortec since 1988. (Id. at 49:9–50:18.) [1]

When Miksic first retained Defendants, his primary Certified Public Accountant ("CPA") was Cliff Lozinski. (Miksic Dep. at 76:20–77:20.) Once Lozinski retired in approximately 2006 (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. at 3, Aug. 12, 2016, Docket No. 43), CPAs Cory Parnell and Corey Edmunds took on a substantial role in providing Miksic accounting advice and services, (Miksic Dep. at 76:20–77:20; Sawers Aff., Ex. 8 ("Edmunds Aff.") ¶¶ 3–4; Ex. 9 ("Parnell Aff.") ¶ 4).

II. THE DELINQUENT IRS FORMS

2 In March 2010, the IRS notified Cortec that its federal return had been selected for examination. (Sawers Aff., Ex. 10.) As a result of that examination, the IRS notified Miksic that he failed to file various forms pertaining to his foreign interests, including (1) Form 5471 ("Information Return of a U.S. Person With Respect to Certain Foreign Corporations"), (id., Ex. 11); (2) Form 3520 ("Annual Return To Report Transactions With Foreign Trusts and Receipt of Certain Foreign Gifts"), (id., Ex. 12); (3) Form 3520–A ("Annual Information Return of Foreign Trust With a U.S. Owner"), (id., Ex. 12); and (4) Form TD F 90–22.1 ("Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts") (hereinafter "FBAR"), (id., Ex. 13), (collectively the "Delinquent Forms"). Miksic alleges that the IRS assessed substantial monetary penalties, interest, and taxes as a result of Miksic's failure to file the Delinquent Forms between tax years 2005 to 2010.[2] Miksic asserts he may recover those amounts as damages, as well as costs, fees, and expenses to change accountants and retain legal counsel to respond to the IRS audit and to bring this action.

III. TAX YEARS AT ISSUE

The parties agree that during tax years 2005 to 2010, Defendants sent Miksic an engagement letter and a questionnaire. (See Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. at 8, July 22, 2016, Docket No. 35; Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. at 9.) Miksic, however, signed Defendants' engagement letter only for tax year 2006. (Miksic Dep. at 57:5–58:5; Decl. of Michael T. Berger ("Berger Decl.), Ex. 4 at 2–3, Apr. 7, 2016, Docket No. 27.) That engagement letter states: "[y]ou have the final responsibility for the income tax returns and, therefore, you should review them carefully before you sign them." (Berger Decl., Ex. 4 at 2.) The questionnaire attached to that letter asked, "[d]id you have any foreign income or pay any foreign taxes during the year?," and "[w]ere you a grantor or transferor for a foreign trust, have an interest in or a signature or other authority over a bank account, securities account, or other financial account in a foreign country?" (Id. at 5–6.) Miksic asserts he did not return completed questionnaires for several of the tax years at issue. (See Sawers Aff., Ex. 4 at 67:4–10; 71:23–72:9.)

Instead, Miksic explained that he likely gave the questionnaire to Angie McGillivray, the Chief Financial Officer of Cortec. (Miksic Dep. at 46:20–24, 62:19–23, 63:16–65:6; see also Berger Aff., Ex. 5 at 33:10–34:9.) According to Miksic, McGillivray was "fully aware of all of the financial accounts in which [he] had an interest in the 2005 through 2010 timeframe," and he provided her with tax information to give to Defendants. (Miksic Dep. at 85:8–12; 48:7–49:8; 63:4–64:12.) Defendants counter that on three separate instances, one of Defendants' tax preparers (other than Parnell and Edmunds) inquired with McGillivray about Miksic's foreign financial accounts for tax years 2006, 2008, and 2010. (Berger Decl., Ex. 7, Ex. 10, Ex. 11; see Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. at 13–14.) However, Defendants maintain, McGillivray and Miksic did not disclose Miksic's foreign accounts which should have been reported on his FBARs.

Miksic, on the contrary, asserts that Defendants did not follow up with him regarding his blank questionnaires (Sawers Aff., Ex. 4 at 67:4–10; 71:23–72:9), that Parnell and Edmunds never asked Miksic about foreign accounts (Parnell Aff. ¶ 9; Edmunds Aff. ¶ 12), that Defendants' tax return software defaulted to an inaccurate statement of Miksic's foreign interests (Edmunds Aff. ¶ 12), and —notwithstanding that Defendants filed an FBAR for Miksic in 2006 and indicated on Miksic's 2008 and 2009 tax returns that he had foreign accounts—Defendants failed to file FBARS in the tax years at issue succeeding 2006 (Sawers Aff., Ex. 4 at 83:10–84:20; Edmunds Aff. ¶ 7–8, 11). Miksic also contends that Defendants knew about Miksic's ownership interest in EcoCortec—which needed to be disclosed on Miksic's Form 5471—but that Defendants failed to file that form for tax years 2007 to 2009.[3] (Edmunds Aff. ¶ 8.) Lastly, Miksic argues Defendants never inquired whether he owned a foreign trust and that Miksic did not know his interest in and distributions from a Lichtenstein foundation required filing Forms 3520 and 3520A in tax years 2005 through 2008. (Miksic Dep. at 116:16–18; 152:3–154:5.)

IV. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

3 On November 24, 2014, Miksic sued Defendants in Minnesota state court, and Defendants removed that action to federal court on December 22, 2014. (Case No.

14–5047 (DWF–TNL), Notice of Removal, Dec. 22, 2014, Docket No. 1.) The parties stipulated for dismissal of that action on February 17, 2015, and it was dismissed without prejudice on February 18, 2015. (Case No. 14–5047 (DWF–TNL), Joint Stipulation of Dismissal, Feb. 17, 2015, Docket No. 5; Dismissal Order, Feb. 18, 2015, Docket No. 6.) Miksic refiled this action on February 18, 2015, before the Court and asserted five claims against Defendants: accounting malpractice; breach of contract; unjust enrichment; negligent misrepresentation; and breach of fiduciary duty. Defendants moved for summary judgment and to exclude expert testimony on July 22, 2016.

DISCUSSION

I. MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

A. Standard of Review

Summary judgment is appropriate where there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). A fact is material if it might affect the outcome of the lawsuit, and a dispute is genuine if the evidence is such that it could lead a reasonable jury to return a verdict for either party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). A court considering a motion for summary judgment must view the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and give that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences to be drawn from those facts. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 (1986). Summary judgment is appropriate if the nonmoving party "fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986). "To defeat a motion for summary judgment, a party may not rest upon allegations, but must produce probative evidence sufficient to demonstrate a genuine issue [of material fact] for trial." Davenport v. Univ. of Ark. Bd. of Trs., 553 F.3d 1110, 1113 (8th Cir. 2009). If the plaintiff's version of events "is blatantly contradicted by the record, so that no reasonable jury could believe it, a court should not adopt that version of the facts for purposes of ruling on a motion for summary judgment." Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380 (2007).

B. Statute of Limitations

The parties dispute whether the applicable statute of limitations bars Miksic's state-law cause of action for accounting malpractice against Defendants. Minn. Stat. § 541.05, subd. 1(5) provides a six year limitation period for a professional malpractice claim. Bonhiver v. Graff, 248 N.W.2d 291, 296 (Minn. 1976) (stating the statute of limitations for an accounting malpractice action is six years and citing to Minn. Stat. § 541.05, subd. 1(5)). Although the statute does not specifically state when that period begins, the Minnesota Supreme Court has "consistently held that the statute begins to run when the cause of action accrues, that is, when the plaintiff can allege sufficient facts to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Antone v. Mirviss, 720 N.W.2d 331, 335 (Minn. 2006). The Minnesota Supreme Court also explained that a malpractice action accrues when the plaintiff sustained "some damage" as the result of the defendant's negligence. Id. at 335–36. [4]

4 Miksic first sued Defendants on November 24, 2014, and thus any claim that accrued as early as six years from then—i.e., November 24, 2008—is timely. Defendants assert that Miksic's claims accrued in April 2006 when he filed his tax forms for tax year 2005 and allegedly suffered "some damage," due to Defendants' tax preparation. Additionally, Defendants contend that the tax years at issue comprise a single course of representation such that all of Defendants' alleged negligence relates back to filing of Miksic's tax return in April 2006. Defendants rely upon Ames & Fischer Co., II v. McDonald, 798 N.W.2d 557, 563–64 (Minn. Ct. App. 2011) (finding that the applicable statute of limitations for an accounting malpractice claim accrued upon the filing of a tax return), Reid Enterprises, Inc., v. Deloitte & Touche, LLP, No. C8–99–1801, 2000 WL 665684, at *3 (Minn. Ct. App. May 23, 2000) (rejecting plaintiff's argument that there was separate negligence in each year the returns were prepared), and Herrmann v. McMenomy & Severson, 590 N.W.2d 641, 643–44 (Minn. 1999) (holding malpractice cause of action accrued when plaintiff took first prohibited tax action when such transactions spanned several years).

Miksic responds that his claims accrued no earlier than January 27, 2011, when the IRS issued its first penalty because prior to that date, not only would he have had no notice of the claim, but his damages would have been "[s]peculative, remote, or conjectural." See Anderson v. Benson, 394 N.W.2d 171, 175 (Minn. Ct. App. 1986) (rejecting buyer's alleged damages where buyer introduced no evidence that seller's failure to file a corporate tax return exposed the corporation to present or future tax liability to the IRS).

The Court finds that none of Defendants' proffered cases are controlling with regard to the statutes of limitations issue in the instant action. Ames is inapplicable because the certified question before the Minnesota Court of Appeals in that case was: "[d]oes a cause of action for professional malpractice arising out of a failure to make a [Internal Revenue Code] Section 754 election accrue when the tax return is filed without the election rather than when the automatic extension period expires?" Ames, 798 N.W.2d at 561–62. In deciding that narrow question, the Ames court held that the statute of limitations began to run "when the returns were filed without the Section 754 elections, which resulted in the immediate overpayment of taxes and the loss of the use of those funds." Id. at 564. In contrast to Ames, the failure to file the Delinquent Forms did not affect Miksic until January 27, 2011, the first date when the IRS levied penalties against him.

Furthermore, Defendants' attempt to fix the accrual date of Miksic's claims in April 2006 by characterizing the nature of Defendants' services as a continuous representation is misguided. Defendants assert Herrmann is apposite in that Miksic's opportunity to identify his interest in and income from foreign accounts and entities was identical in each of the relevant tax years and that this error related to damages Miksic allegedly suffered in April 2006. However, the tax professionals in Herrmann gave negligent advice once and the taxpayer acted on that advice for nearly a decade, 590 N.W.2d at 642–44; whereas in the instant action, Defendants were under a new obligation every year to conduct an investigation of the facts and prepare the appropriate tax documents for Miksic. Moreover, the Reid decision is factually distinguishable because in that case the IRS levied a single penalty "regardless of how many conformity violations Reid had during [a] six years [period]," 2000 WL 665684, at *2; whereas Defendants' supposed malpractice caused the IRS to assess substantial penalties for each tax year at issue.

According to Defendants, upon the failure to file the Delinquent Forms, Miksic should have sued Defendants, even though he was unaware of the failure, the IRS had not yet assessed penalties, and may never have assessed penalties. The Court is unpersuaded by Defendants' position. As the Supreme Court stated in United States v. Boyle, "[m]ost taxpayers are not competent to discern error in the substantive advice of an accountant or attorney. To require the taxpayer to challenge the [accountant or] attorney, to seek a 'second opinion,' or to try to monitor counsel on the provisions of the Code himself would nullify the very purpose of seeking the advice of a presumed expert in the first place." 469 U.S. 241, 251 (1985). Accordingly, it would have been impossible for Miksic to discover the omission of his Delinquent Forms at any time earlier than receipt of his first IRS penalty notice.

5 Only once the IRS first assessed penalties on January 27, 2011, Miksic incurred "some damage" to begin the statute of limitations period as the Minnesota Supreme Court described in Antone, 720 N.W.2d at 335. The Antone court explained that a malpractice cause of action accrues upon occurrence of "any compensable damage," not just the damage for which the precise relief is sought in the complaint. Id. at 336. "[T]he ability to ascertain the exact amount of damages is not dispositive with respect to the running of the statute of limitations." Id. at 338. Thus, at the time Miksic received his first assessed IRS penalty —although the extent of that and related penalties were unascertainable, and even if the IRS may later abate those penalties—Miksic incurred "some damage."[5] Thus, as Miksic's claim did not accrue until January 27, 2011, his instant action filed on November 24, 2014, is within the six year statute of limitations set forth in Minn. Stat. § 541.05, subd. 1(5).

C. Minnesota Statute § 544.42

Defendants also advocate for dismissal of Miksic's action on the grounds that Cobb's second affidavit fails to meet the Minnesota statutory requirements. Minnesota law requires a party asserting a claim for professional malpractice to serve a second affidavit of expert review, within 180 days after discovery begins, which sets forth the "substance of the facts and opinions to which the expert is expected to testify, and a summary of the grounds for each opinion." Minn. Stat. § 544.42, subds. 2, 4. Defendants rely upon Guzick v. Kimball, 869 N.W.2d 42, 51 (Minn. 2015), and Brown–Wilbert, Inc. v. Copeland Buhl & Co., 732 N.W.2d 209, 219 (Minn. 2007), in which the Minnesota Supreme Court held that the expert affidavits failed to provide meaningful information beyond conclusory statements and summaries of the expert's opinions.[6]

However, Cobb's second affidavit belies Defendants' reliance on Guzick and Brown–Wilbert. In Guzick, the plaintiff did not provide a second affidavit of expert disclosure and instead referred back to the first affidavit in place of its second affidavit. 869 N.W.2d at 45–46.[7] Moreover, the first affidavit did not provide any information regarding the expert's causation theory but instead stated in a conclusory manner that the defendants' negligent acts "caused damages." Id. at 45, 51. Similarly, in Brown–Wilbert, the Minnesota Supreme Court held allegations in a complaint and answers to interrogatories did not satisfy the requirements for a second affidavit under Minn. Stat. § 544.42 when such information did "not identify or define any specific accounting standard of care, state how [the defendants] deviated from that standard of care, or allege how that deviation caused injury." 732 N.W.2d at 219.

6 In contrast to those cases, Cobb's second affidavit lists several different accounting standards that form the applicable standard of care Defendants owed to Miksic, including specific provisions from the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants ("AICPA") Statements on Standards for Tax Service and the AICPA Code of Professional Conduct. (See Aff. of Arthur H. Cobb, Ex. 1 ¶¶ 8–10, Aug. 17, 2016, Docket No. 51.) The affidavit describes how Defendants breached that standard of care by not obtaining sufficient relevant data, not making a reasonable inquiry, not referring to Miksic's previous returns, allowing unanswered questions to default to "no," and not filing or advising Miksic to file various IRS forms. (Id. ¶¶ 11–17.) Furthermore, Cobb opines that Defendants' deviations from the applicable standards of care proximately and directly caused scrutiny by the IRS which caused Miksic to incur significant damages, including penalties and interest, as well as other costs, fees, and expenses. (Id. at ¶¶ 18–19.) Thus, Cobb's second affidavit goes well beyond conclusory statements that negligent acts "caused damages," as was the issue in Guzick, 869 N.W.2d at 51, and also meaningfully opines that Defendants' departure from the standard of care caused Miksic's injuries, as was the issue is Brown–Wilbert, 732 N.W.2d at 219.

D. In Pari Delicto

Defendants next seek to invoke the equitable defense of in pari delicto, a doctrine which bars a plaintiff's recovery due to his own wrongful conduct. See Pinter v. Dahl, 486 U.S. 622, 632 (1988). Defendants argue that Miksic is barred from recovering damages because not only did he fail to review and identify missing information from his tax returns, he also affirmatively withheld information about his foreign accounts and ownership in the Rust Foundation despite having received letters from a Swiss law firm about potential U.S. tax consequences associated with the foundation.

Defendants assert that Christians v. Grant Thornton, LLP is an instructive case. 733 N.W.2d 803 (Minn. Ct. App. 2007). In Christians, a company's Chief Executive Officer ("CEO") entered into a transaction contrary to his company's best interest, which he later concealed from the company's auditor, Grant Thornton, LLP. Id. at 806–07. Grant Thornton's audit resulted in an overstatement of the company's equity. Id. The company later went bankrupt and its trustee brought an auditor malpractice action against Grant Thornton. Id. at 807–08. The Minnesota Court of Appeals determined that in pari delicto barred such recovery because the CEO's inequitable conduct to deceive outsiders was imputed to the company, and thus the company bore "at least substantially equal responsibility for the injury it s[ought] to remedy [in the action]." Id. at 810, 814–15.

The Court finds Christians distinguishable from the instant action. In Christians, it was undisputed that the auditor was never presented with critical information about the company, despite the CEO's dishonest assertion that he had provided the auditor with all relevant financial records and related data. Id. at 814. In the instant action, however, the parties dispute whether Defendants inquired about Miksic's foreign financial accounts and entities during the tax years at issue. Although Defendants assert that they made such an inquiry for tax years in 2006, 2008, and 2010 regarding Miksic's foreign financial information (which primarily relates to FBARs), Defendants do not offer any argument regarding such an inquiry in tax years 2005, 2007, 2009. Furthermore, Miksic disputes Defendants' version of the facts and asserts that Defendants did not follow up with him—despite intimate and longstanding knowledge of his foreign affairs—to ensure the Delinquent Forms were timely filed. Miksic also asserts neither Parnell nor Edmunds ever asked Miksic if he had any foreign accounts, and that Defendants' tax return software defaulted to an inaccurate statement of Miksic's foreign interests.

The other cases Defendants rely upon in support of the in pari delicto defense are also distinguishable. Giordano v. UBS, AG, involved a plaintiff who sought to hold a Swiss bank responsible for the consequences of the plaintiff's own filing of false tax returns when the Swiss bank was not involved in preparing those returns. 134 F. Supp. 3d 697, 701, 708–09 (S.D.N.Y. 2015). The Giordano court found that the plaintiff failed to "allege[ ] any facts that would relieve her of her own culpability for knowingly filing false tax returns." Id. at 710. In re Hansel is also distinguishable. No. 08–3177, 2012 WL 3113849, at *10 (Bankr. D. Minn. June 15, 2012) (holding debtor did not plead facts negating wrongdoing on her part).

7 In contrast, Miksic asserts that Defendants—despite their intimate history of working with Miksic and general knowledge of his involvement with foreign entities—failed to inquire about Miksic's foreign financial accounts. Miksic specifically notes that notwithstanding that Defendants filed an FBAR for Miksic in 2006—and indicated on Miksic's 2008 and 2009 tax returns that he had foreign accounts – Defendants failed to file FBARS in the tax years at issue succeeding 2006. Miksic also contends that Defendants knew about Miksic's ownership interest in EcoCortec—which needed to be disclosed on Miksic's Form 5471—but that Defendants failed to file that form for tax years 2007 to 2009. Lastly, Miksic argues Defendants never inquired whether he owned a foreign trust and that Miksic did not know his interest in and distributions from a Lichtenstein foundation required filing Forms 3520 and 3520A in tax years 2005 through 2008. Based on this genuine material factual dispute of which party is at fault for the failure to file Miksic's Delinquent Forms, it is improper for the Court to apply the in pari delicto doctrine at this time.[8]

E. Damages

Defendants next contend that if this case proceeds, the Court must limit Miksic's claimed damages regarding FBAR penalties, Form 5471 penalties, delinquent taxes, and attorneys' fees. The Court will address each issue in turn.

1. FBAR Penalties

Defendants assert that because Miksic has appealed his FBAR penalties with the IRS, those damages should be considered too speculative and unrecoverable. In support of that argument, Defendants rely upon Lewin v. Miller Wagner & Co., 725 P.2d 736 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1986), and Olson, Clough & Straumann, CPA's v. Trayne Properties, Inc., 392 N.W.2d 2 (Minn. Ct. App. 1986). However, neither case is persuasive. In Lewin, the court held that the plaintiff's claimed accounting malpractice damages were speculative when the IRS agent had not levied any penalties and there was no evidence whether that agent's determination would be upheld at a higher IRS administrative level or in litigation. 725 P.2d at 740–41. In contrast, the IRS assessed substantial and fixed penalties based on Miksic's failure to file FBARs. Also unlike the instant action, in Olson, the court held reputation and loss of business damages which could not be reliably calculated were too speculative. 392 N.W.2d at 4.

Thus, the Court finds that Miksic's damages are not unduly speculative. See, e.g., J & M Assocs., Inc. v. Callahan, 753 F. Supp. 2d 1183, 1216 (S.D. Ala. 2010) (stating damages were "not speculative simply because [the taxpayer] ha [d] not paid the penalties, especially since the IRS ha[d] determined a specific amount owed"). Nevertheless, if this case proceeds to trial while Miksic's appeal with the IRS is still pending and if, as a result of trial, Miksic is entitled to recover from Defendants relating to his FBAR penalties, then the Court will order that amount of recovery be placed into escrow with the Court. The Court will require this because it recognizes that Miksic could doubly recover if the IRS abates Miksic's FBAR penalties. Furthermore, during the pendency of this case, Miksic's counsel is to provide a written report to the Court every six months providing any developments with Miksic's appeal with the IRS.

2. Form 5471 Penalties and Delinquent Taxes

8 Defendants assert that after Miksic commenced this action, the IRS abated his Form 5471 penalties; thus that amount must be excluded to prevent double recovery. Defendants also contend that Miksic cannot recover the amount he paid to the IRS as tax deficiencies. Miksic does not offer any counter argument.

The Court finds Miksic is precluded from recovering any of these amounts. As the IRS abated Miksic's Form 5471 penalties, he may not seek that amount as damages in this action. See e.g., Vesta State Bank v. Indep. State Bank of Minn., 518 N.W.2d 850, 855 (Minn. 1994) ("[I]f inconsistent remedies are sought and it is doubtful which one will bring relief, a party may claim either or both alternatively until one remedy is pursued to a determinative conclusion."). Holding otherwise would improperly permit a double redress for a single claim. Furthermore, Miksic cannot recover as damages the amount he paid to the IRS as tax deficiencies because, "when a tax advisor's negligence leads to an underpayment of tax, the taxpayer cannot recover as damages the tax deficiency itself because the tax liability arose not from the negligent advice, but from the ongoing obligation to pay the tax." O'Bryan v. Ashland, 717 N.W. 2d 632, 633 (S.D. 2006). Thus, the Court finds that Miksic may not recover as damages his abated Form 5471 penalties or his payment of delinquent taxes.

3. Attorneys' Fees

Defendants finally assert Miksic cannot recover any attorneys' fees he paid to bring the instant accounting malpractice action and cite to Whitney v. Buttrick, 376 N.W.2d 274 (Minn. Ct. App. 1985). Defendants, however, do not address whether Miksic may claim damages for attorneys' fees paid to respond to the IRS audit. Miksic counters he is entitled to recover attorneys' fees he paid during his tax appeal with the IRS, citing to Hill v. Okay Constr. Co., 252 N.W.2d 107, 121 (Minn. 1977), as well as attorneys' fees in the instant case to mitigate damages caused by Defendants' malpractice.

The Minnesota Supreme Court explained in Hill that, "[a]ttorneys fees and expenses are not generally included in the measure of recoverable damages for negligence. An exception is recognized, however, when the attorneys fees and expenses claimed are incurred in other litigation which is necessitated by the act of the party sought to be charged." 252 N.W.2d at 121 (citation omitted). Likewise, the Minnesota Court of Appeals in Whitney held that "appellant's claim that respondent is liable to him for attorney fees in suing respondent for legal malpractice fails in the absence of authorization by statute or case law. Attorney fees and expenses are not generally included in the measure of recoverable damages for negligence." 376 N.W.2d at 281 (citing Hill, 252 N.W.2d at 121).

Thus, although Hill appears to support Miksic's position that his attorneys' fees paid during his tax appeal with the IRS are recoverable—which Defendants do not contest—clearly under both Hill and Whitney, attorneys' fees expended in the instant accounting malpractice action are not recoverable. Miksic does not cite to any Minnesota case holding otherwise. The Court will therefore grant Defendant's motion for summary judgment that Miksic's request for attorneys' fees in connection with this action fails as a matter of law.

II. MOTION TO EXCLUDE EXPERT WITNESS TESTIMONY

9 Defendants move to exclude testimony from Miksic's expert witness, Cobb. Defendants assert that Cobb is not qualified to offer an expert opinion on the specific tax preparation issues involved in this litigation, that Cobb employs the wrong professional standards in reaching his liability and causation theories, and that Cobb's testimony is legally deficient.

A. Standard of Review

Expert testimony is governed by Federal Rule of Evidence 702. Rule 702 provides the following:

> A witness who is qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education may testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise if:
>
> (a) the expert's scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue;
>
> (b) the testimony is based on sufficient facts or data;
>
> (c) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods; and
>
> (d) the expert has reliably applied the principles and methods to the facts of the case.

Fed. R. Evid. 702. The district court has a gate-keeping obligation to make certain that all testimony admitted under Rule 702 satisfies these prerequisites and that "any and all scientific testimony or evidence admitted is not only relevant, but reliable." Daubert v. Merrell Dow

Pharm., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 589 (1993). The proponent of the expert testimony has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that the expert is qualified, that his or her methodology is scientifically valid, and that "the reasoning or methodology in question is applied properly to the facts in issue." Marmo v. Tyson Fresh Meats, Inc., 457 F.3d 748, 757–58 (8th Cir. 2006). The reliability inquiry is "designed to 'make certain that an expert, whether basing testimony upon professional studies or personal experience, employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field.' " Id. at 757 (quoting Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 152 (1999)).

The Eighth Circuit has held that "[c]ourts should resolve doubts regarding the usefulness of an expert's testimony in favor of admissibility." Id. at 758; see also Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 152 ("[T]he trial judge must have considerable leeway in deciding in a particular case how to go about determining whether particular expert testimony is reliable."). "Only if the expert's opinion is so fundamentally unsupported that it can offer no assistance to the jury must such testimony be excluded." Bonner v. ISP Techs., Inc., 259 F.3d 924, 929–30 (8th Cir. 2001) (quoting Hose v. Chi. Nw. Transp. Co., 70 F.3d 968, 974 (8th Cir. 1996)).

B. Cobb's Qualifications

The parties do not dispute that Cobb is not a tax preparer. Defendants assert Cobb is not qualified to offer an expert opinion because he has no education, training, or experience in tax preparation of the specific forms at issue and, as a result, has no experience in complying with the specific professional standards governing tax preparation services. Defendants principally rely on Khoday v. Symantec Corp., 93 F. Supp. 3d 1067, 1081 (D. Minn. 2015) (holding "general background" and "common sense" were "not adequate methods or techniques for formulating specific opinions," especially where the expert had not personally preformed any software downloads or used the websites at issue), and Noske v. Friedberg, 713 N.W.2d 866, 872 (Minn. Ct. App. 2006) (affirming the trial court's decision to preclude a law professor who taught torts and professional responsibility from testifying in a legal malpractice case because "lack of practical or academic experience in the criminal-law area" rendered his testimony about the duty of a criminal defense attorney inadmissible).

10 However, Defendants argument is refuted by Cobb's deposition testimony. Cobb indicated that some of his continuing education credits related to the preparation of individual tax returns and that he took a course within the last year specifically on tax preparation for individuals with foreign accounts or foreign investments. (Sawers Aff., Ex. 6 ("Cobb Dep.") at 40:11–41:5.) Cobb also testified that he has advised and analyzed FBAR and Form 5471 filings, analyzed tax returns, and served on the professional ethics committee of the Minnesota Society of Certified Public Accountants where he analyzed accountants in practice. (Id. at 34:7–36:18, 43:8–45:4.) Furthermore, Cobb explained that he applied various AICPA professional standards for tax services—including preparation of individual tax forms—and that he has had many instances throughout his career to analyze tax preparation and tax returns. (Id. at 43:8–48:25, 59:13–24.)

Thus, unlike Khoday, 93 F. Supp. 3d at 1081, and Noske, 713 N.W.2d at 872, the Court finds that Cobb has sufficient educational and practical experience relating to tax accounting and the applicable professional standards to testify regarding the professional duties applicable to the tax accountants in this dispute.

C. Cobb's Opinion Regarding AICPA AR § 100

Defendants also assert that Cobb's liability and causation views, which are based in part upon AICPA AR § 100, should be excluded because that standard was erroneously applied and will confuse the jury. (See Sawers Aff., Ex. 29 ("Cobb Report.") at 12; Cobb Dep. at 106:1–5.) Defendants specifically note that AICPA AR § 100 applies to audit and financial review services, whereas the instant malpractice action involves Defendants' performance of tax services. (See Cobb Dep. at 105:4–22.) Thus, Defendants assert, Cobb's liability or causation views are not derived from any reliable or accepted application of AICPA AR § 100 to this case.

However, Defendants' argument misunderstands Cobb's application of AICPA AR § 100 in this action. Cobb does not opine that AICPA AR § 100 applied to Defendants' tax preparation services specifically. (See Cobb Report. at 12.) Instead, Cobb explained during his deposition that, pursuant to its audit and financial review services of Cortec, Defendants had an independent duty to investigate and obtain a general understanding of Cortec's organization and financial dealings. (Cobb Dep. at 106:6–17.) That knowledge, Cobb asserts, should have informed Defendants' tax preparation services for Miksic and would have prevented many of the tax filings errors at issue. (Id. at 106:6–109:8.) As the Court does not find that this distinction would confuse a jury or would render Cobb's opinion unreliable, the Court will deny Defendants' motion to exclude Cobb's expert testimony.

This case will be placed on the Court's next available trial calendar.

ORDER

Based on the foregoing, and all the files, records, and proceedings herein, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 33] is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as follows:

a. To the extent the motion seeks to preclude Miksic from recovering as damages abated Form 5471 penalties, payment for delinquent taxes, and attorneys' fees expended to bring the instant action, the motion is GRANTED.

b. In all other respects, the motion is DENIED.

2. Defendants' Motion to Exclude Expert Witness Testimony [Docket No. 37] is DENIED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 1169528

Footnotes

[1] In 1988, Miksic retained Johnson, West & Co. P.L.C., which later merged with Boeckermann Graftstrom Mayer, LLC, in 2012. (Id. at 50:2–18; Sawers Aff., Ex. 7.)

[2] The Court was unable to determine, based on the parties' briefings and a thorough review of the record, the exact amount of IRS penalties, interest, and delinquent taxes assessed during the 2005 to 2010 tax years relating to the Delinquent Forms. The parties themselves offered different amounts, (compare Compl. ¶¶ 44–50, Feb. 18, 2015, Docket No. 1, with Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. at 17–19, July 22, 2016, Docket No. 35, and Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. at 5–6, Aug. 12, 2016, Docket No. 43), and the Court was unable to resolve the discrepancies based on the parties' citations to the record.

[3] The IRS, however, ultimately abated the $60,000 it initially assessed in penalties for Miksic's late Form 5471 filing. (Berger Decl., Ex.14.)

[4] Although Antone was a legal malpractice case and the instant action is an accounting malpractice case, the parties agree that the statute of limitations – Minn. Stat. § 541.05, subd. 1(5)—applies to both kinds of professional negligence cases. (See Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. at 21; Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. for Summ. J. at 19.)

[5] Defendants also contend that Miksic's claims are barred by the doctrine of laches because Miksic waited many years before filing this case and significant information was lost through the death of Cliff Lozinski, a critical witness in this malpractice action. However, because Miksic's accounting malpractice action is a legal action governed by an applicable statute of limitations, the equitable doctrine of laches has no application. See Aronovitch v. Levy, 56 N.W.2d 570, 573–574 (Minn. 1953) ("Where a party is seeking a legal remedy upon a legal right, we have held that the doctrine of laches has no application and that the remedy will be barred only by the statute of limitations.") (collecting cases).

[6] Defendants also assert that Cobb's second affidavit is speculative and did not include the substance of his opinions because he testified during his deposition that he reached those opinions after serving his second affidavit. (See Decl. of Michael T. Berger, Ex. 5 at 9:5–20, July 22, 2016, Docket No. 40; see also Aff. of Arthur H. Cobb, Ex. 1, Aug. 17, 2016, Docket No. 51.) However, there is no reason to doubt that Cobb's second affidavit reflected his analysis at the time it was submitted and that his expert opinions had not been cemented at that time because discovery was ongoing. This is consistent with the statutory requirement that a second affidavit of expert review be served within 180 days after discovery begins. Minn. Stat. § 544.42, subd. 2.

[7] In Guzick, the Minnesota Supreme Court refers to the first affidavit required by Minn. Stat. § 544.42 as the "affidavit of expert review" and the second affidavit as the "affidavit of expert disclosure." 869 N.W.2d at 46–47.

[8] Defendants also contend that Miksic's signature on his tax return serves as his constructive notice of the contents and is prima facie evidence that he understood questions on his tax return regarding FBAR and Form 3520 filing requirements. Defendants cite to United States v. Williams, 489 Fed.Appx. 655, 659 (4th Cir. 2012) (finding that a signature was prima facie evidence the taxpayer reviewed the return and that line 7a put the taxpayer on inquiry notice of FBAR requirements); United States v. McBride, 908 F. Supp. 2d 1186, 1208 (D. Utah 2012) (finding as a matter of law that a taxpayer who signs his return is charged with having reviewed that return and with having knowledge of his foreign account disclosure requirement); Thomas v. UBS AG, No. 11–4798, 2012 WL 2396866, at *5 n. 2 (N.D. Ill. June 21, 2012) (finding that "[t]he simple yes-or-no question of Schedule B makes it inconceivable that [a taxpayer] could have misinterpreted this question"). However, none of these cases were accounting malpractice cases or discussed the in pari delicto defense, and thus, they do not assist the Court in making such a determination. These cases instead generally involved whether the IRS could assess penalties against taxpayers for willfully violating the Internal Revenue Code section requiring an annual report of foreign financial interests.

End of Document

2017 WL 8941231
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Michael QUIEL, Defendant/Movant.

CV 16-1535-PHX-JAT (MHB)
|
CR 11-2385-PHX-JAT
|
Signed 06/06/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Gregory Bernstein, Timothy J. Stockwell, US Dept. of Justice, Washington, DC, Monica B. Edelstein, US Attorneys Office, Phoenix, AZ, for Defendant.

Alan Stuart Richey, Law Office of Alan Richey, Port Hadlock, WA, for Defendant/Movant.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Michelle H. Burns, United States Magistrate Judge

1 TO THE HONORABLE JAMES A. TEILBORG, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE:
Defendant/Movant Michael Quiel, who is represented by counsel, filed an amended Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody. (CV 16-1535 ("CV") Doc. 7.)[1] Plaintiff United States of America (the "government") filed a Response to the amended Motion, and Movant has filed a Reply. (CV Docs. 11, 14.)

BACKGROUND[2]

On December 8, 2011, a grand jury indicted Movant Michael Quiel with one count of Conspiracy to Defraud the United States, two counts of Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns, and two counts of Willful Failure to File Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR").[3] (CR Docs. 3, 463.)

On September 24, 2013, Movant was convicted on two counts of Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns, in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1).[4] He was sentenced to a 10-month term of imprisonment, to be followed by a one-year term of supervised release. Movant appealed his convictions to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals arguing, the following:

- "[Movant] was denied his constitutional right to cross-examine Rusch on three exhibits entered on redirect"
- "The Government's repeated reference to [Movant's] complicated securities transactions as fraud was prejudicial and the court's allowing such references over objection was error"
- "[Movant] was denied his constitutional right to counsel by the trial court's allowing Rusch to testify in violation of [Movant's] attorney-client privilege"
- "The trial court erroneously refused to require production of the special agent's report, [Movant's] individual master file, and the notes of the Government's chief investigator, and refused to review the documents in camera or even preserve them for review by this court"

(United States v. Quiel, No. 13-10503, Doc. 20.)

2 The Ninth Circuit affirmed Movant's convictions on December 19, 2014, and the mandate issued on February 6, 2015. United States v. Quiel, 595 Fed.Appx. 692 (9th Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S.Ct. 2336 (2015). The Ninth Circuit held, in pertinent part:

> The question of whether Defendants willfully failed to report income ... is one of fact for the jury. See Rykoff v. United States, 40 F.3d 305, 307-08 (9th Cir. 1994). The jury could have concluded that Kerr and Quiel knew they had a duty to report the income from their foreign accounts, because Christopher Rusch, their attorney and business partner, testified that the accounts were set up using nominees under Kerr's and Quiel's control in order to evade reporting requirements. Even without Rusch's testimony, the jury could have inferred control because (a) the > accounts were traded in Kerr's and Quiel's stock for their benefit; (b) the foreign firms never served their stated purpose of finding investors; and (c) these firms were not actual, functioning businesses. Additionally, even without Rusch's testimony, the jury could infer motive from Kerr's having recently paid high tax rates and Quiel's recent payment of a large tax penalty before either engaged in these transactions.

On March 13, 2015, Movant and Kerr filed a Joint Motion for New Trial pursuant to Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure alleging newly discovered evidence. (CR Doc. 454.) Specifically, Defendants' argued: (1) "evidence has emerged showing that Rusch engaged in fraudulent activities"; (2) "the Government has agreed 'to look the other way while its witness commits additional crimes' "; and (3) "Pierre Gabris, a Swiss-national and alleged participant in the structuring of the Swiss accounts, would testify that 'he did not prepare or send trial exhibits 51 and 52,' which were offered into evidence on Rusch's re-direct" and "contain emails originally sent from Gabris to Rusch, who forwarded them to Defendants, regarding accounting statements from Defendants' Swiss corporations." (CR Docs. 454, 463.) The Court denied the Joint Motion for New Trial on July 15, 2015, (CR Doc. 463), and on July 28, 2015, Movant and Kerr filed a Notice of Appeal from the July 15, 2015 Order (CR Doc. 467).

On December 28, 2015, in the appellate court case, Movant and Kerr filed a Joint Motion for Remand to the District Court & Motion to Stay Briefing Schedule, arguing that the Court of Appeals should remand the action to the district court so it can: (1) "consider evidence that was before it but which that [the district] Court did not consider," and (2) consider new evidence and argument that either came to light after the Joint Motion for New Trial was filed or "was [not] otherwise ... presented." (United States v. Kerr, et al., No. 15-10393, Doc. 17.)

The Ninth Circuit denied the Motion for Remand without prejudice to the filing of "a renewed motion accompanied by an indication that the district court is willing to entertain the limited remand motion." (United States v. Kerr, et al., No. 15-10393, Doc. 19.) On March 7, 2016, Movant and Kerr filed a Joint Motion to Accept Remand to Consider New Evidence for a New Trial in the district court. (CR Doc. 471.) Defendants argued: (1) "This Court should accept a remand so as to consider new evidence and argument that were not before this Court but which came to light while the motion was pending, after it was appealed, or that was otherwise not presented"; and (2) "This Court should accept remand so as to consider evidence that was presented to this Court" but "which this Court did not consider." (CR Doc. 471.) Defendants' newly discovered evidence consisted of four declarations, one of which came from Jerome Perucchi that was signed on June 4, 2015, and was used as part of civil lawsuit in a state court matter. (CR Doc. 471.)

3 While the Joint Motion was pending before the district court, on May 17, 2016, Movant filed a Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody. (CV Doc. 1; CR Doc. 474.) Thereafter, the district court directed the parties to show cause why the § 2255 proceeding should not be stayed pending the Court's determination on the Joint Motion to Accept Remand. (CV Doc. 3.)

Then, on July 22, 2016, the Court denied the Joint Motion to Accept Remand (CR Doc. 475),[5] and on August 2, 2016, the Court discharged the Order to Show Cause after concluding that it had been mooted by the Court's ruling on the Joint Motion (CV Doc. 6). In the same August 2, 2016 Order, the Court also denied Movant's § 2255 Motion with leave to amend and gave Movant 30 days to file an amended motion using the court-approved form. (CV Doc. 6.)

On September 1, 2016, Movant filed an amended Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody (CV Doc. 7). In the amended § 2255 Motion, Movant alleges four grounds for relief. In Ground One, he claims that he received ineffective assistance of counsel because his trial attorney refused to call any witnesses or submit any evidence after the government rested its case in chief. In Ground Two, Movant appears to argue that his due process rights were violated by the introduction at trial of perjured testimony that the government knew or should have known was false. Movant further alleges that the government failed or refused to produce evidence that would confirm that perjured testimony was introduced at trial. In Ground Three, Movant claims that the government has not produced evidence that it properly appointed the attorneys who prosecuted him, and the government has not demonstrated that it followed "proper procedure when it began prosecution." In Ground Four, Movant argues that he received ineffective assistance of counsel in connection with "matters that occurred pre and post trial." (CV Docs. 7, 10.)

DISCUSSION

In its Response, the government argues that: (1) both of Movant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims are meritless; (2) Movant's false testimony claim is either procedurally defaulted for failing to raise it on direct appeal, or that Movant cannot re-litigate a claim that was previously decided by the district court in its order denying the Joint Motion for New Trial and order denying the Joint Motion to Accept Remand; and (3) Movant's claim that the Court lacked jurisdiction because the attorneys who appeared on the government's behalf were not properly appointed public officers is procedurally defaulted. Thus, the government contends that Movant's amended Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence be denied and dismissed with prejudice.

A. Grounds One and Four

4 The two-prong test for establishing ineffective assistance of counsel was set forth by the Supreme Court in Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984). To prevail on an ineffective assistance claim, a convicted defendant must show (1) that counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. See id. at 687-88.

There is a strong presumption that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable assistance. See id. at 689-90. "A fair assessment of attorney performance requires that every effort be made to eliminate the distorting effects of hindsight, to reconstruct the circumstances of counsel's challenged conduct, and to evaluate the conduct from counsel's perspective at the time." Id. at 689. Review of counsel's performance is extremely limited. Acts or omissions that "might be considered sound trial strategy" do not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. Id. The prejudice component "focuses on the question whether counsel's deficient performance renders the result of the trial unreliable or the proceeding fundamentally unfair." Lockhart v. Fretwell, 506 U.S. 364, 372 (1993).

In the context of an uncalled witness, a petitioner must identify the witness, see United States v. Murray, 751 F.2d 1528, 1535 (9th Cir. 1985), show that the particular witness was willing to testify, see United States v. Harden, 846 F.2d 1229, 1231-32 (9th Cir. 1988), what the witness's testimony would have been, see United States v. Berry, 814 F.2d 1406, 1409 (9th Cir. 1987), and that the testimony would have been sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to guilt, see Tinsley v. Borg, 895 F.2d 520, 532 (9th Cir. 1990). See also Dows v. Wood, 211 F.3d 480, 486-87 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding the defendant did not establish IAC where there was no evidence, other than "[Defendant's] self-serving affidavit," that alibi witness "would have provided helpful testimony for the defense").

The court need not address both Strickland requirements if the movant makes an insufficient showing on one. See Strickland, 466 U.S. at 697 (explaining that "[i]f it is easier to dispose of an ineffectiveness claim on the ground of lack of sufficient prejudice, ... that course should be followed."); Rios v. Rocha, 299 F.3d 796, 805 (9th Cir. 2002) (stating that "[f]ailure to satisfy either prong of the Strickland test obviates the need to consider the other").

1. Ground One

In Ground One, Movant alleges that his trial counsel, Michael Minns, "provided Ineffective Assistance of Counsel by refusing to call any witnesses, including expert witnesses ...." Movant states:

> Gail Prather would have testified to the correctness of the 2007 and 2008 Forms 1040 filed by Mr. Quiel and that no tax was owed (Counts 4 and 5). Ms. Prather's report stated, "Michael Quiel ... owe[d] zero net tax." (Doc. 198-2 at 3) "If the unidentified deposits and resulting expenditures and losses were included substantial refunds would be generated." (Doc. 198-2 at 4). ...

Movant also states:

> Matthew Kadish was a defense expert who would have testified that Mr. Quiel was not required to file an FBAR form. His testimony contradicted Cheryl Bradley and Rusch that with only a credit card and no account in Belize, Mr. Quiel would not be required to file an FBAR. He also opinioned that because Mr. Quiel "would own less than 10%," "did not form the entity," "did not have signatory" authority over the accounts, nor entitlement to more than [his] proportionate ownership," then Mr. Quiel would not have known if the reporting requirement was triggered. (Doc. 350-1, pg 13-14) Because there was no tax owed for 2007 and 2008, there would be no civil penalties, no concealment of taxable income, and that the only problem was that Mr. Quiel was following "very bad professional advice, rather than willfully misreporting or failing to file [an FBAR form]." (Doc. 350-1 at 16).

5 Lastly, Movant states:

> Cynthia King was a defense securities expert who would have testified that there was no business wrongdoing by Mr. Quiel in: 1. Transacting in reverse mergers; 2. Investing in private start-up companies; 3. Receiving payment in the form of securities; 4. Signing a blank stock power; 5. Making stock purchase agreements; 6. Participating in forward and reverse stock splits; 7. Structuring investments so as to not own more than 4% of a company; 8. Lacking evidence that Mr. Quiel violated SEC rules, that he never fraudulently acquired stock nor filed false or misleading information with the SEC. (Doc. 398-3, pg 3-5).

Movant claims that he "was familiar with the witnesses, their reports, and the testimony they were prepared to give. Thus, contrary to the government's unsubstantiated allegations ... Mr. Quiel knew that the experts would have testified 'that [he] owed no tax for 2007 and 2008, that the Forms 1040 [he] filed for those years were accurate, that [he] did not ... do anything wrong'; in other words, there was no fraud or deceit, no willfulness, and the 2007 and 2008 returns were NOT incorrect as to a material matter. Thus, three elements under Section 7206(1) would have been negated." [6]

According to Defendant's Joint Submission of Expert Reports (CR Doc. 198), Matthew Kadish submitted an expert report stating that his "opinion in this matter is limited to foreign bank account reporting under Title 31 of the U.S. Code." (CR Doc. 198-1 at 2.) According to the report, Mr. Kadish's proposed testimony included a history of the FBAR reporting requirements and his opinion regarding its perceived complexity followed by two primary opinions: (1) that Defendants may not have had a filing obligation, and (2) that Defendants' did not act willfully in failing to file their FBARs disclosing their Swiss accounts. (CR Doc. 198-1 at 11.) At the end of his report, Mr. Kadish states, "if as Gail Prather opines, neither Quiel nor Kerr owes taxes for the years in question, that would appear to undermine the Government's assertion of a coordinated effort to conceal taxable income, and would seem to further support Quiel's and Kerr's assertion that they were following very bad professional advice, rather than willfully misreporting or failing to file the Form 90-22.1 as charged by the Government."

In the same Submission, Gail Prather provided an expert report stating, "[b]ased on the results of our calculations, we find that there is sufficient evidence to support the conclusion that

> 6 — Michael Quiel ("Quiel") and Stephen Kerr ("Kerr") owe zero net tax.
>
> — If the unidentified deposits and resulting expenditures and losses were included substantial refunds would be generated." (CR Doc. 198-2 at 2-3.)

Ms. Prather summarizes the findings in her report, stating:

> Quiel calculations include the deposits and sales of shares with interest, dividends, and foreign exchange transactions less the expenditures from the accounts and resulting capital losses.
>
> 2007—increase in tax of $516,303 less tax due to carry back of $762,997 for a refund of $246,694.
>
> 2008—increase in tax of $197,805
>
> Net operating loss of $2,304,770 available for carry back.

> Net due taxpayer as a result of recording additional income and resulting expenditures and losses $48,889.

Additionally, in their Response to Government's Motion to Preclude and/or Limit Testimony of Defendants' Proposed Expert Witnesses, Defendants' state, "Ms. Prather has two consistent opinions. The first is that no taxes are due because there is no duty to report the Swiss funds. The second is that even if there were such a duty, no taxes would be due and owing because of losses. For Mr. Quiel, a refund has been sent to him. Mr. Kerr and Mr. Quiel both have large loss carry-backs eliminating any tax due, if applicable." (CR Doc. 206 at 22.)

Lastly, the Joint Submission of Expert Reports contains the expert report submitted by Cynthia King. Defendants state that "[t]he purpose of Ms. King's testimony is to refute the 404(b) information." (CR Doc. 206 at 25.) According to her report, Ms. King stated, "I have been asked to analyze the facts discussed in this report by counsel for Stephen Kerr ("Kerr") and Michael Quiel ("Quiel"). I have done so. ... [M]y opinion is that none of the allegations in the Government's 404B notice substantiate any wrongdoing." (CR Doc. 198-3 at 1.)

The Court finds that Movant has failed to demonstrate a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. The counts of conviction required the government to prove that defendants "[w]illfully ma[de] and subscribe[d]" tax returns that they did "not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter," 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1).[7] None of these three experts opine that the 2007 and 2008 tax returns Movant filed with the IRS were true and accurate as to every material matter. (CR Docs. 198-1, 198-2, 198-3.)

7 According to his expert report, Mr. Kadish's opinion was "limited to foreign bank account reporting under Title 31 of the U.S. Code." (CR Doc. 198-1.) He would have testified that Movant may not have had a filing obligation, and that Movant did not act willfully in failing to file the FBARs. However, Movant was never convicted of the FBAR counts. The Court dismissed the FBAR counts with prejudice. (CR Doc. 308.) Thus, Movant cannot establish prejudice from counsel's failure to call Mr. Kadish at trial.

Second, according to her report, Ms. Prather would have testified that Movant "owe[s] zero net tax" and that "[i]f the unidentified deposits and resulting expenditures and losses were included substantial refunds would be generated." (CR Doc. 198-2.) However, Movant was convicted of violating 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1)—which does not require the government to prove a tax loss. Thus, since a tax due and owing is not an element of Section 7206(1), the Court fails to find a reasonable probability that the result of the proceeding would have been different because of Ms. Prather's testimony.

Movant claims, however, that Ms. Prather "would have testified to the 'validity' of the Forms 1040 filed by Defendant for 2007 and 2008." The Court's review of her expert report reveals that nowhere in her report does she opine that Movant's 2007 and 2008 returns were true and accurate as to every material matter. Instead, Ms. Prather's report concludes stating that in 2007, Movant had an increase in tax of $516,303, and in 2008, Movant had an increase in tax of $197,805, and that loss carry-backs eliminated any tax due. Based on this proposed testimony, the Court cannot say that there is a reasonable probability that the result of the proceeding would have been different.

Lastly, according to Movant's pleadings and Ms. King's expert report, she would have testified "to refute the 404(b) information." She would have opined that "none of the allegations in the Government's 404B notice substantiate any wrongdoing." Ms. King would have specifically testified to the legitimacy of Movant transacting in reverse mergers; investing in private start-up companies; receiving payment in the form of securities; signing a blank stock power; receiving stock purchase agreements; participating in forward and reverse stock splits; structuring investments so as to not own more than 4% of a company; and that she saw no evidence that Movant "fraudulently acquired stock in violation of SEC rules," or "caused forms to be filed with the SEC that contained false or misleading information." Again, however, none of specifics set forth in her testimony state that the 2007 and 2008 tax returns Movant filed with the IRS were true and accurate as to every material matter. Thus, the Court fails to find a reasonable probability that the result of the proceeding would have been different because of Ms. King's testimony.

Movant, however, alleges that he "was familiar with the witnesses, their reports, and the testimony they were prepared to give," and that he "knew that the experts would have testified 'that [he] owed no tax for 2007 and 2008, that the Forms 1040 [he] filed for those years were accurate, that [he] did not ... do anything wrong'; in other words, there was no fraud or deceit, no willfulness, and the 2007 and 2008 returns were NOT incorrect as to a material matter." Other than the fact that Movant "owed to no tax," Movant's allegations are speculative and unsupported by the expert reports. Such conclusory allegations are insufficient to support a claim for ineffective assistance of counsel. See, e.g., Shah v. United States, 878 F.2d 1156, 1161 (9th Cir. 1989) ("Mere conclusory allegations are insufficient to state a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel."); Jones v. Gomez, 66 F.3d 199, 204-05 (9th Cir. 1995) (stating that conclusory allegations with no reference to the record or other evidence do not warrant habeas relief).

2. Ground Four

8 In Ground Four, Movant argues that he received ineffective assistance of counsel in connection with "matters that occurred pre and post trial." Specifically, Movant states that his counsel "in the Maricopa County case and in the bond hearing," Joy Bertrand, had "ample access and knowledge to provide the dismissal in the Maricopa County case to this Court." Movant states that Ms. Bertrand's "failure to provide that information caused Mr. Quiel's custody level to rise and resulted in his incarceration at a 'low facility' rather than at a 'minimum' facility commonly referred to as a camp. As such, Mr. Quiel was held in El Paso, Texas, more than 500 miles from his family, as opposed to a camp in Tucson, Arizona, less than two hours from his family." Movant states that Ms. Bertrand "failed to obtain and file Mr. Perucchi's affidavit with this Court," would not communicate with him regarding the Rule 33 motion, and refused to file documents he sent to her, thus denying him access to the court.

The argument alleged in Ground Four is not entirely clear. The Court assumes that Ms. Bertrand was Movant's counsel in a Maricopa County case, during the federal bond hearing in this matter, and during various stages of the Rule 33 litigation. Initially, the Court notes that any allegation of ineffective assistance regarding Movant's "Maricopa County case" is not relevant and has nothing to do with the instant matter. Further, Movant has failed to provide any information on how his bond hearing proceedings, wherein Movant was ordered released, affected his trial. Lastly, to the extent Movant alleges that Ms. Bertrand failed to properly advise, represent, and discuss matters with him during the Rule 33 proceedings, the Court is not persuaded. Movant's cursory allegations, which are devoid of any factual support and are purely speculative in nature, cannot support a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. See, e.g., Shah, 878 F.2d at 1161 ("Mere conclusory allegations are insufficient to state a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel."); Jones, 66 F.3d at 204-05 (stating that conclusory allegations with no reference to the record or other evidence do not warrant habeas relief). Thus, the Court finds that Movant has failed to demonstrate ineffective assistance of counsel. Movant is not entitled to any relief.

B. Ground Two

In Ground Two, Movant appears to argue that his due process rights were violated by the introduction at trial of perjured testimony that the government knew or should have known was false. Movant further alleges that the government "failed or refused to produce the evidence that would verify the perjury."

In support of his claim, Movant states "[a]t trial, Christopher Rusch testified that he prepared TD F 90.22-1 (FBAR) forms for Mr. Quiel. Rusch testified that he prepared amended returns for Mr. Quiel that had FBARs attached. (Tr. March 19, 2013, pg 1614, 1619, 1622-24)." Movant states that "Cheryl Bradley testified that she sent Mr. and Mrs. Quiel a letter requesting various things," including the "FBAR forms for tax years ending after [2001] (Tr. March 7, 2013, pg 591). When asked, 'Did you receive the information that was listed in this letter, Items 1 through 9?' Ms. Bradley answered, 'Yes,' and that it came 'through Christopher Rusch.' (Tr. March 7, 2013, pg 592)." Movant states that he has the amended returns, but no FBARs are with the returns. Movant states that the IRS claims that it "needs additional time to respond," and argues that "[i]f those documents do not exist, then the evidence (or lack thereof) demonstrates that both Cheryl Bradley and Christopher Rusch offered perjured testimony during the trial. That testimony, if shown false, could be sufficient for the jury to have acquitted Mr. Quiel."

Movant also states, "Rusch testified on Day 12, 'Perucchi agreed to stand in as the nominee beneficial owner.' (Tr.

March 27, 2013 pg 2530, ln 12-13). Rusch further testified that he opened 'a new Swissquote account ... in the name of Jerome Perucchi.' (Tr. March 27, 2013, pg 2536, ln 9-10). And, Rusch testified that he was 'the notary for Mr. Perucchi, who [Rusch] said was not actually in front of [him] when [Rusch] notarized that [Perucchi] was.' (Tr. March 27, 2013, pg 2584 ln 20-22). The purpose of the document falsely notarized was 'to open an account at Sterne Agee ... [t]o sell stock, the ITLI or Intelligentias stock ... [which was] Mr. Perucchi authorizing to sell, assign or transfer these stocks.' (Tr. March 27, 2013, pg 2585 ln 12-19.) When questioned why he didn't have Mr. Perucchi in front of him, Rusch testified, 'He was in Switzerland and I needed to get it notarized ... so I just printed the notary on there and stamped it.' (Tr. March 27, 2013, pg 2585, ln 22-25). Rusch was asked, 'And why didn't you fly to Switzerland and have Mr. Perucchi sign this in front of you? A. It would have taken too long and been too costly.' (Tr. March 27, 2013, pg 2586, ln 1-3)."

9 Movant then quotes the affidavit of Jerome Perucchi stating, "[m]y involvement with the Fund was extremely limited. ... My business associate asked if I would serve as the director of the Fund for the first year of its existence. I agreed to do so. Perucchi Decl. ¶ 18. He declared, 'To the best of my recollection, the only documents that I signed regarding the Fund were [ ] to create the fund and nam[e] me as the director.' Perucchi Decl. ¶ 19. Most importantly, Perucchi verified, "I had no knowledge the Fund was ever incorporated and brought into existence. I never performed any functions as the director of the Fund, invested any money in the Fund, managed the Fund, or received any compensation of any kind from the Fund or Mr. Quiel.' Perucchi Decl. ¶ 20-21." Thus, Movant contends that Rusch "not only falsely notarized Mr. Perucchi's signature, he forged that signature multiple times to perpetuate his scheme and hide his lies, which he hid from Mr. Quiel and from this Court during trial."

Lastly, Movant addresses "additional false testimony," including, testimony regarding Exhibits 51 and 52 that Rusch testified that he "printed" and "faxed" to Movant —but that Movant never received; the use of Movant's passport and personal information without Movant's knowledge or permission; evidence at trial showing that Rusch arranged for and/or oversaw setting up Swiss entities and funds that Mr. Quiel had no control over; and "things Rusch testified to at trial, which included his criminal behavior, did not cease[,] rather they continued on under the pseudonym of Reeves."

Movant's claim alleged in Ground Two is vague, at times, and difficult to pin down. In addition to the litany of speculative and non-specific "supporting facts," Movant fails to specify whether he is alleging a claim pursuant to Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1963) or Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264 (1959). Although the Court recognizes that both Brady and Napue violations can overlap, the crux of Movant's claim relates to the alleged "introduction at trial of perjured testimony," in violation of Napue—rather than the suppression of evidence. [8]

"The knowing use of false evidence by the state, or the failure to correct false evidence, may violate due process." Towery v. Schriro, 641 F.3d 300, 308 (9th Cir. 2010). In order to establish a Napue claim, a movant must demonstrate "(1) the testimony (or evidence) was actually false, (2) the prosecution knew or should have known that the testimony was actually false, and (3) that the false testimony was material." United States v. Zuno-Arce, 339 F.3d 886, 889 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing Napue, 360 U.S. at 269-71).

1. Movant's allegation regarding the "amended returns"

Movant alleges that Rusch and Cheryl Bradley "testified that FBAR forms were prepared on behalf of Mr. Quiel accompanying amended returns filed for him." He states that he has the amended returns, "but there are no FBAR forms that he is aware of." Movant contends that if the FBAR forms do not exist "then the evidence (or lack thereof) demonstrates that both Cheryl Bradley and Christopher Rusch offered perjured testimony." At the outset, Movant must first demonstrate that the Rusch and Ms. Bradley's testimony was actually false on this point. Movant appears to assume that because the IRS "needs additional time to respond" to his "FOIA request," that no FBARs exist and therefore the testimony was false. Having reviewed the trial testimony cited by Movant and argument alleged in his briefing, the Court fails to draw the inference and finds that Movant has not demonstrated that either Rusch or Ms. Bradley's testimony was false. Movant's mere suggestions do not support his contention that Rusch or Ms. Bradley provided false testimony. If an assertion that testimony was perjured rests on "mere speculation," it is insufficient to establish a claim under Napue. See United States v. Aichele, 941 F.2d 761, 766 (9th Cir. 1991).

2. Movant's allegation regarding the Perucchi affidavit

10 Movant states that Rusch testified he opened "a new Swissquote account in the name of Jerome Perucchi," and that "he was 'the notary for Mr. Perucchi, who [Rusch] said was not actually in front of [him] when [Rusch] notarized that [Perucchi] was.' " The "purpose of the document falsely notarized was 'to open an account at Sterne Agee ... [t]o sell stock, the ITLI or Intelligentias stock ... [which was] Mr. Perucchi authorizing to sell, assign or transfer these stocks.' " Movant then compares Rusch's testimony on this point to the affidavit of Jerome Perucchi stating, "[m]y involvement with the Fund was extremely limited. ... My business associate asked if I would serve as the director of the Fund for the first year of its existence. I agreed to do so. Perucchi Decl. ¶ 18. He declared, 'To the best of my recollection, the only documents that I signed regarding the Fund were [ ] to create the fund and nam[e] me as the director.' Perucchi Decl. ¶ 19. Most importantly, Perucchi verified, 'I had no knowledge the Fund was ever incorporated and brought into existence. I never performed any functions as the director of the Fund, invested any money in the Fund, managed the Fund, or received any compensation of any kind from the Fund or Mr. Quiel.' Perucchi Decl. ¶ 20-21." Movant, therefore, alleges that Rusch forged Perucchi's signature multiple times.

Having reviewed Rusch's testimony, the Perucchi affidavit, and Movant's argument on this point, the Court finds that Movant has failed to demonstrate that Rusch testified falsely. Movant's presumed attempt to illustrate an inconsistency between certain portions of Rusch's trial testimony and the Perucchi affidavit fails as the Court finds no inconsistency. In any event, the mere fact that there may exist contradictions in testimony does not rise to the level of a due process violation. See, e.g., United States v. Croft, 124 F.3d 1109, 1119 (9th Cir. 1997) (fact that a witness makes inconsistent statements, or that other evidence conflicts with a witness's testimony, does not alone establish that the witness offered false evidence); Zuno-Arce, 339 F.3d at 889 (9th Cir. 2003) (rejecting Napue claim where petitioner failed to demonstrate testimony at trial was "actually false"); Lambert v. Blackwell, 387 F.3d 210, 249, 252 (3rd Cir. 2004) (discrepancies in testimony do not mean testimony is perjured). And, furthermore, although Rusch testified that he notarized account documents without Mr. Perucchi "in front of [him]," nothing in the Perucchi affidavit supports Movant's allegation that Rusch "forged" Mr. Perucchi's signature multiple times. Lastly, Movant has also failed to show that the government knew or should have known that any of the alleged testimony was actually false.

3. Movant's allegations regarding "additional false testimony"

Movant states that Rusch testified regarding Exhibits 51 and 52 that he "printed" the documents and "faxed" them to Movant. Citing to his own declaration, Movant claims that he never received the documents and, therefore, Rusch's testimony is false.[9] According to the record, specifically, Defendants' Joint Motion for New Trial and the District Court's Order on Defendants' Joint Motion for New Trial, Exhibits 51 and 52 contain emails originally sent from Pierre Gabris to Rusch, who forwarded them to Movant and Kerr, regarding accounting statements from Defendants' Swiss corporations. (CR Docs. 454, 463.)

At trial, Rusch testified as follows:

> BY MR. STOCKWELL:
>
> Q. There was a discussion on cross-examination about providing account statements and accountings of what's going on in these bank accounts to the defendants. Do you recall that?
>
> A. Yes.
>
> Q. Did you provide any information about what was transpiring in these accounts to the defendants?
>
> A. Yes, I did.
>
> Q. And what did you provide to—we'll start with Mr. Kerr. What did you provide to Mr. Kerr?
>
> A. I received accounting statements in Excel format that had been typed up by Mr. Gabris or his office, and I forwarded them on by fax to Mr. Kerr.
>
> Q. And how about Mr. Quiel?
>
> A. The same. I received information, accounting statementsfrom Mr. Gabris and his office, and printed them out and faxed them to Mr. Quiel.

11 Q. And what time frame would you have provided this information to Mr. Kerr or Mr. Quiel?

A. Over a number of years, 2008, '9 and '10, possibly there was—there were accounting statements. There was not—it wasn't done on a regular basis. For example, it wasn't every two weeks or month, but from time to time they would request and I would send.

Q. And if you can take a look at what's been marked as Government Exhibit 51, 52 and 53, please. Just 51 and 52.

A. I see 51 but not 52.

Q. I believe you'll have it shortly. Do you recognize what's in Government Exhibits 51 and 52?

A. 51, yes. 52, yes.

Q. And how do you recognize these documents?

A. These are e-mails that I received from Mr. Gabris that are accounting statements that I forwarded on to Messrs. Kerr and Mr. Quiel.

Q. Did you keep these in your files?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you produce them to the Government?

A. Yes, I did.

MR. STOCKWELL: Your Honor, at this time the Government moves to admit Government Exhibits 51 and 52.

MR. MINNS: They're beyond the scope. And they're the hearsay statements of Mr. Pierre Gabris, who I will not have an opportunity to cross-examine.

MR. STOCKWELL: May I be heard, Your Honor?

THE COURT: You may.

MR. STOCKWELL: The witness, again, was questioned on cross-examination about providing information to the defendants. The implication was he did not actually provide anything to the defendants. These are being offered to rebut that. And they're not being offered for the truth of anything in the document, but just to their existence.

THE COURT: The objection is overruled. 51, 52 are received.

MR. STOCKWELL: Permission to publish, Your Honor?

THE COURT: You may.

BY MR. STOCKWELL:

Q. Mr. Rusch, if you can take a look at Government Exhibit 51. MR. STOCKWELL: If we can publish this on the Government's computer, which we already have. Thank you.

BY MR. STOCKWELL:

Q. What is Government Exhibit 51?

A. It's an accounting statement provided by Pierre of the accounts at Red Rock, Legacy, and then Swissquote.

Q. And why did he provide this to you?

A. Mr. Quiel phoned me and asked me to get an accounting. I telephoned Mr. Gabris, obtained that accounting.

Q. And what did you do once you received this e-mail?

A. I printed it out and faxed it to Mr. Quiel and to Mr. Kerr, and then placed it in my file.

(CR Doc. 335 at 2532-2534.)

The Court finds that Movant's unsupported assertions set forth in his self-serving affidavit that Rusch "never faxed, emailed, or in any other way provided copies of Exhibits 51 and 52" to him, in contrary to Rusch's testimony, insufficient to make out a Napue claim. Other than the conclusory statement, Movant fails to demonstrate that Rusch's testimony was false, or that the government knew or should have known that his testimony was false when presented. See, e.g., Henry v. Ryan, 720 F.3d 1073, 1084 (9th Cir. 2013) (finding that petitioner's conclusory assertion that any testimony inconsistent with the truth must be not only inaccurate but also perjured, does not constitute evidence sufficient to make out a Napue claim); Aichele, 941 F.2d at 766 (Napue claim is not shown where defendant's contention that witness' statements during testimony "were perjured is mere speculation"); see also Abrante v. St. Amand, 595 F.3d 11, 18 (1st Cir. 2010) (rejecting Napue claim where defendant "engage[d] in a series of speculations in support of his view that [two witnesses] gave false testimony, but he offer[ed] no evidence that would lead to the conclusion that the government knew that the testimony was allegedly false").

12 Additionally, it appears that Movant's Napue claim related to Exhibits 51 and 52 is procedurally defaulted. "Habeas review is an extraordinary remedy and will not be allowed to do service for an appeal," Bousley v. United States, 523 U.S. 614, 621 (1998), absent a showing of cause and prejudice, a section 2255 movant procedurally defaults all claims which were not raised in a direct appeal, other than claims asserting that the movant was deprived of the right to the effective assistance of counsel. See United States v. Frady, 456 U.S. 152, 167-68 (1982); United States v. Ratigan, 351 F.3d 957, 964 (9th Cir. 2003); United States v. Johnson, 988 F.2d 941, 945 (9th Cir. 1993). "[T] o obtain collateral relief based on trial errors to which no contemporaneous objection was made, a convicted defendant must show both (1) 'cause' excusing his double procedural default, and (2) 'actual prejudice' resulting from the errors of which he complains." Frady, 456 U.S. at 167-68. A section 2255 movant who fails to show cause and prejudice can still obtain review of a claim on collateral attack by demonstrating the likelihood of his "actual," i.e., factual, innocence. See Bousley, 523 U.S. at 623; United States v. Braswell, 501 F.3d 1147, 1150 (9th Cir. 2007). To establish actual innocence the movant must demonstrate that, in light of all the evidence, including new evidence that might be introduced by both sides, it is more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have convicted him. See Ratigan, 351 F.3d at 964, quoting Bousley, 523 U.S. at 623.

Movant failed to allege his Napue claim related to Exhibits 51 and 52 on direct appeal, and he has not shown cause, prejudice, or any likelihood of his factual innocence. Accordingly, this claim is procedurally defaulted.

Lastly, as to Movant's "additional false testimony" set forth in his "supporting facts" and declaration regarding —the use of his passport and personal information without his knowledge or permission; evidence at trial showing that Rusch arranged for and/or oversaw setting up Swiss entities and funds that Mr. Quiel had no control over; and "things Rusch testified to at trial, which included his criminal behavior, did not cease[,] rather they continued on under the pseudonym of Reeves," Movant fails to demonstrate, much less allege, testimony (or evidence) that was actually false, or that the prosecution knew or should have known that any of this testimony (or evidence) was actually false. Moreover, any Napue claim raised pursuant to these "supporting facts" appears procedurally defaulted, and Movant has not shown cause, prejudice, or any likelihood of his factual innocence.

C. Ground Three

In Ground Three, Movant appears to allege defects in the prosecution of this matter because "U.S. has not been able to produce documents to show that the attorneys who appeared on the U.S.' behalf were properly appointed. Also, the U.S. refuses to produce the evidence that it followed proper procedure when it began prosecution against Mr. Quiel." Movant contends that the "assistant U.S. attorneys who prosecuted Mr. Quiel must be properly appointed public officers. Mr. Quiel sought through the FOIA process the proof of appointments of Ann B. Scheel, Monica Edelstein, Timothy Stockwell, Frank P. Cihlar, Alexander Robbins, Jeffrey A. Neiman, R. Alexander Acosta, Michael P. Ben'ary, Keven M. Downing, and John A. Dicicco." Movant alleges that "Edelstein and Scheel have nothing so far; Ben'ary, Downing and Neiman are no longer employees of the U.S., Acosta never worked for DOJ; Cihlar and Stockwell have outdated oaths; and Robbins and Dicicco may not be in compliance." Movant has also "sought a copy of the referral document for his prosecution through FOIA."

Initially, the Court notes that pursuant to Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 12, certain motions must be made before trial, including "a motion alleging a defect in instituting the prosecution" and "a motion alleging a defect in the indictment or information." See Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(b)(3)(A), (B); United States v. Kahlon, 38 F.3d 467, 469 (9th Cir. 1994). Subsection (c) provides, "[i]f a party does not meet the deadline for making a Rule 12(b)(3) motion, the motion is untimely." The court must rule on pretrial motions before trial unless it finds good cause to defer a ruling. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(d).

13 In United States v. Suescun, 237 F.3d 1284 (11th Cir. 2001), the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals considered whether claims similar to those raised by Plaintiff in Ground Three warranted reversal of the appellant's conviction. In that case, the appellant argued on direct appeal from his criminal conviction, that: (1) the indictment was a nullity because it was obtained by a U.S. Attorney who had not been properly appointed under U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2; and (2) his convictions were a nullity because the Appointments Clause and the Separation of Powers principle prevented the district court from appointing the interim U.S. Attorney. See Suescun, 237 F.3d at 1286. The Eleventh Circuit found that the appellant alleged a defect in the proceedings, and that, as a result, he was required to present his objections prior to trial or at the time set by the court, pursuant to Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(f), and noted that he failed to do so. See id. at 1286-87. The court concluded that appellant waived his challenges and that he had not sought relief from the waiver. See id. at 1287. In analyzing whether a jurisdictional exception to the waiver applied, the court further concluded that "[a]n appointment of a United States Attorney that is not made as provided by the Appointments Clause does not affect the Government's power to prosecute," so that, even if the appointment of the temporary U.S. Attorney was invalid, the district court had jurisdiction to entertain the case and adjudicate the appellant guilty of the offenses. See id. at 1287-88.

Here, Movant, in effect, challenges his criminal convictions on the basis that the United States Attorney for the District of Arizona, as well as, other members of the U.S. Attorney's Office were not properly appointed and that, as a result, Movant's prosecution was defective. However, as in Suescun, Movant should have raised these alleged defects in his criminal proceeding in a pre-trial motion made under Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(b)(3). More importantly, for purposes of this § 2255 Motion and as stated in Suescun, the Court still retained jurisdiction to entertain the case regardless of any alleged defects in the proceedings. See id.; see also United States v. Fitch, 2013 WL 1187422 (D. Nevada March 19, 2013). Accordingly, the Court will recommend that Movant's claim as alleged in Ground Three be denied.

CONCLUSION

Having determined that Movant's claims are meritless and/or procedurally defaulted, the Court will recommend that Movant's amended Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence be denied and dismissed with prejudice.

IT IS THEREFORE RECOMMENDED that Movant's amended Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody (CV Doc. 7 and CR Doc. 474) be DENIED and DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE;

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that a Certificate of Appealability and leave to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal be DENIED because Petitioner has not made a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right.

This recommendation is not an order that is immediately appealable to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Any notice of appeal pursuant to Rule 4(a)(1), Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, should not be filed until entry of the district court's judgment. The parties shall have fourteen days from the date of service of a copy of this recommendation within which to file specific written objections with the Court. See 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1); Rules 72, 6(a), 6(b), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Thereafter, the parties have fourteen days within which to file a response to the objections. Pursuant to Rule 7.2, Local Rules of Civil Procedure for the United States District Court for the District of Arizona, objections to the Report and Recommendation may not exceed seventeen (17) pages in length. Failure timely to file objections to the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation may result in the acceptance of the Report and Recommendation by the district court without further review. See United States v. Reyna-Tapia, 328 F.3d 1114, 1121 (9th Cir. 2003). Failure timely to file objections to any factual determinations of the Magistrate Judge will be considered a waiver of a party's right to appellate review of the findings of fact in an order or judgment entered pursuant to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation. See Rule 72, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 8941231

Footnotes

1 The original Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody is pending in the criminal matter—CR 11-2385 ("CR") Doc. 474.

2 The facts and background of this matter have been repeated multiple times in both the civil and criminal cases, as well as, the parties' briefing in both appellate court matters—United States v. Quiel, No. 13-10503 and United States v. Kerr, et al., No. 15-10393.

3 Co-defendant Stephen Kerr ("Kerr") was charged with these same counts, (CR Docs. 3, 463), and Christopher Rusch ("Rusch"), Movant and Kerr's former attorney, was also charged with one count of Conspiracy to Defraud the United States and an additional count of failure to file an FBAR, which was added later (CR Docs. 3, 463, 331 at 1607). Rusch subsequently entered into a plea agreement compelling him to testify at the request of the United States. (CR Docs. 463, 415.)

4 The record reflects that shortly after the jury returned its verdict, Movant filed a Motion for a Judgment of Acquittal or for a New Trial. (CR Docs. 301, 302, 304.) The Court denied the Motion on August 16, 2013. (CR Doc. 346.)

5 On July 27, 2016, Movant and Kerr filed a Joint Amended Notice of Appeal seeking to appeal both the district court's denial of the Joint Motion for New Trial (CR Doc. 463) and the denial of the Joint Motion to Accept Remand (CR Doc. 475). In their Joint Brief filed on December 12, 2016, Defendants argued:

> I. When A District Court Does Not Even Consider Evidence And Then Analyzes Other Allegations But Not The Evidence Itself, Is It An Abuse Of Discretion?
>
> II. When A District Court Fails To Properly Analyze The Evidence With The Appropriate Legal Standards, Is It An Abuse Of Discretion?
>
> III. When A District Court Fails To Properly Apply The Law To Newly Discovered Evidence, As Well As Analyze The Evidence, Is It An Abuse Of Discretion?

(United States v. Kerr, et al., No. 15-10393, Doc. 32.) The matter is fully briefed and pending before the Ninth Circuit.

6 Although Movant attempts to enlarge his claim by stating that trial counsel failed to call "any witnesses," Movant only lists the three experts in support of his ineffective assistance argument. The Court finds that Movant's attempt to enlarge his claim beyond counsel's failure to call the three experts specifically named in his Motion unpersuasive. Without identifying the witnesses, establishing that any of his unnamed witnesses were willing to testify, or what the unnamed witness' testimony would have been, any ineffective assistance of counsel claim alleged by counsel's failure to call "any witnesses" is entirely speculative and conclusory.

7 The Jury Instructions stated the following:

> In order for the defendants to be found guilty ..., the government must prove each of the following elements beyond a reasonable doubt (you must apply all three elements to each defendant individually):
>
> First, the defendant made and signed a tax return for the respective years that he knew contained false information as to a material matter;
>
> Second, the returns contained a written declaration that they were being signed subject to the penalties of perjury; and
>
> Third, in filing the false tax returns, the defendant acted willfully.
>
> A matter is material if it had a natural tendency to influence, or was capable of influencing, the decisions or activities of the Internal Revenue Service.

8 In order to establish a Brady violation (1) " '[t]he evidence at issue must be favorable to the accused, either because it is exculpatory, or because it is impeaching'; (2) 'that evidence must have been suppressed by the State, either willfully or inadvertently'; and (3) 'prejudice must have ensued.' " United States v. Williams, 547 F.3d 1187, 1202 (9th Cir. 2008) (emphasis added) (quoting Strickler v. Greene, 527 U.S. 263, 281-82 (1999)).

9 Contrary to Movant's Napue allegation in the instant Motion, the Court determined in its Order on Defendants' Joint Motion for New Trial, that Movant and Kerr were not contending that they were never forwarded the emails, but rather, that the exhibits themselves were falsified. (CR Docs. 454, 463.)

End of Document

792 F.3d 847
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
H. TY WARNER, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 14–1330.
|
Argued Sept. 17, 2014.
|
Decided July 10, 2015.

Synopsis
Background: Defendant was convicted, upon plea of guilty, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Charles P. Kocoras, J., of willful tax evasion, and was sentenced to two years' probation with community service, plus $100,000 fine and costs. Government appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Kanne, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] sentence was procedurally reasonable, and

[2] sentence was substantively reasonable.

Affirmed.

Flaum, Circuit Judge, concurred in judgment and filed opinion.

Attorneys and Law Firms

850 Stuart D. Fullerton, Attorney, Michelle Marie Petersen, Attorney, Office Of The United States Attorney, Chicago, IL, for Plaintiff–Appellant.

Paul D. Clement, Attorney, Erin Murphy, Attorney, Bancroft PLLC, Mark E. Matthews, Attorney, Caplin & Drysdale, Washington, DC, Michael Samuel Shapiro, Attorney, Scandaglia & Ryan, Chicago, IL, for Defendant–Appellee.

Before FLAUM, KANNE, and ROVNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

KANNE, Circuit Judge.

Defendant H. Ty Warner, the billionaire creator of Beanie Babies, evaded $5.6 million in U.S. taxes by hiding assets in a Swiss bank account. He pled guilty to one count of tax evasion, made full restitution, and paid a $53.6 million civil penalty. The Sentencing Guidelines provided a recommended 46- to 57–month term of imprisonment, but the district judge gave Warner a more lenient sentence: two years' probation with community service, plus a $100,000 fine and costs. The government claims his sentence is unreasonable because it does not include a term of incarceration.

[1] In a typical case, we might agree. But this is not a typical case. The district judge found Warner's record of charity and benevolence "overwhelming." Indeed, the judge remarked that Warner's conduct was unprecedented when viewed through the judge's more-than-three decades on the bench. In the district court's opinion, this and other mitigating factors—including the uncharacteristic nature of Warner's crime, his attempt to disclose his account, his payment of a penalty ten times the size of the tax loss, and the government's own request for a sentence well below the guidelines range—justified leniency. District courts enjoy broad discretion to fashion an appropriate, individualized sentence in light of the factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a). The court here did not abuse its discretion. Rather, it fully explained and supported its decision and reached an outcome that is reasonable under the unique circumstances of this case. We therefore affirm Warner's sentence.

I. BACKGROUND

Warner was born in Chicago in 1944 and grew up in a troubled family. He attended a military high school in Wisconsin and spent a year at Kalamazoo College, but ultimately dropped out because he could no longer afford tuition. To make ends meet, he worked a series of odd jobs, including stints as a busboy, a bellman, and a door-to-door salesman. Eventually, he found his feet selling children's plush toys for the Dakin Toy Company. Within a few years, he was Dakin's top salesman.

In 1985, Warner formed his own plush toy company, Ty Inc., which he initially ran by himself out of his condominium. His big break came in the early 1990s with the introduction of a new toy to the market: the Beanie Baby. A huge success, the Beanie Baby propelled Ty Inc. into a multi-billion-dollar company and made Warner rich. His net worth at the time of sentencing was roughly $1.7 billion.

A. Warner's Tax Evasion and Attempted Disclosure

In 1996, during the early period of Beanie Babies' success, Warner traveled to Zurich, Switzerland, and opened an offshore bank account at UBS AG ("UBS"). The record does not disclose how much money Warner originally deposited or where the funds came from, but within several years the account contained $93 million. Consistent with their advice, Warner instructed his bankers not to send him any correspondence and to destroy all account documents after five years. He did 851 not report the account to the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS").

Warner was not the only American taxpayer hiding assets at UBS. With the help of bankers in UBS's cross-border division, many others opened offshore accounts to avoid U.S. taxes. One of the bankers involved in this fraudulent scheme was Hansreudi Schumacher, who serviced Warner's account. After UBS entered into a Qualified Intermediary Agreement with the IRS in 2001 (which created certain tax reporting obligations), Schumacher left to join another Swiss bank.

Warner followed him. In late 2002, Warner traveled to Switzerland and, with Schumacher's help, transferred his funds from UBS to Zuercher Kantonalbank ("ZKB"), a smaller Swiss bank without a significant U.S. presence. He placed the funds at ZKB in the name of a Liechtenstein shell entity, the "Molani Foundation." And he instructed UBS "not to engage in any sort of communication with me re transfer," but instead to send all correspondence to Schumacher. At ZKB, Warner's account grew to over $107 million.

Warner did not disclose his offshore account to the IRS. On the contrary, he reported on his annual tax returns that he had no foreign financial account. And he did not report or pay taxes on the interest income generated by his offshore assets, which amounted to over $24.4 million through 2007. As a result, the government lost $5,594,877 in tax revenue—the second-highest loss among the former UBS clients who have been prosecuted to date.

In 2008 the Department of Justice launched a program to aggressively combat offshore tax evasion.[1] The program began with an investigation of UBS. In April the government indicted former UBS banker Bradley Birkenfeld. In February 2009 it filed a one-count information against UBS and quickly executed a deferred prosecution agreement, under which UBS admitted wrongdoing and agreed to hand over information on certain U.S. offshore clients. Several months later, the government brought charges against former UBS and Schumacher client Jeffrey Chernick. In August 2009 Schumacher himself was indicted.

At the same time, the government encouraged tax-evaders to come forward on their own by announcing an IRS offshore voluntary disclosure program in March 2009 (the "OVDP"). Under the program, taxpayers who voluntarily disclosed their offshore accounts could avoid criminal prosecution by paying back taxes, interest, and penalties, including 20% of the account's peak value. On the other hand, those who continued to hide their assets would face heightened enforcement and severe penalties. Taxpayers had a six-month window—until September 23, 2009 (later extended)—to take advantage of the OVDP. Thousands of taxpayers were admitted into the program.[2]

Warner was aware of the government's investigation of UBS, which was widely publicized, and of Schumacher's indictment. Warner says that he regretted his decision to open the offshore account from the beginning but felt stuck; and that he never withdrew or otherwise used the funds in the account. In 2009 he contacted his lawyer to discuss his options, and his lawyer told him about the OVDP. On September 18, 2009—just before the original 852 deadline—Warner applied to enter the program. Unbeknownst to him, however, he was already under investigation; the government had obtained his account information in 2008 or 2009, possibly from UBS. The pending investigation made Warner ineligible for the OVDP, see IRM § 9.5.11.9(4)(a), (b) (Sept. 9, 2004), so the government rejected his application.

Two years later, in 2011, a grand jury subpoenaed Warner's offshore banking records. He resisted the subpoena, but we ultimately required him to comply. In re Special Feb. 2011—1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d 903, 909 (7th Cir.2012), cert. denied, ––– U.S. ––––, 133 S.Ct. 2338, 185 L.Ed.2d 1064 (2013).

B. Warner's Information and Guilty Plea

In September 2013 the government filed a one-count information charging Warner with willful tax evasion in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7201. The information alleged that Warner evaded $885,300 in taxes for 2002 by: (1) excluding from his reported income the interest from his offshore assets; (2) fraudulently stating on his tax return that he had no foreign account; and (3) failing to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Account (an “FBAR” form), as required by the Bank Secrecy Act and implementing regulations, see 31 U.S.C. § 5314.

In October 2013 Warner pled guilty to the one-count information. As part of his plea agreement, he also admitted to similar misconduct from 1996 to 2007, which he agreed constituted “relevant conduct” under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.3 (Nov. 2012) (“USSG”). He promised to pay full restitution and a civil FBAR penalty of $53,552,248—equal to 50% of the maximum balance in his offshore account in 2008 (which is 30% higher than the penalty he would have owed had he been admitted to the OVDP). As far as we are aware, Warner's $53.6 million payment is the largest FBAR penalty the government has collected to date. Warner paid both the penalty and restitution before his sentencing hearing.

Warner's plea deal included an agreed-upon guidelines calculation. The base offense level for a tax loss of $5.6 million was 24 under USSG §§ 2T1.1 and 2T4.1(J). The parties agreed to add 2 levels under USSG § 2T1.1(b)(2) because the offense involved sophisticated means, subtract 2 levels for acceptance of responsibility under USSG § 3E1.1(a), and subtract 1 more under USSG § 3E1.1(b) because Warner's guilty plea obviated the need to prepare for trial—resulting in a final offense level of 23. Because Warner had no prior convictions, his criminal history category was I. This yielded an advisory guidelines range of 46 to 57 months' imprisonment. See USSG ch. 5, pt. A (sentencing table).

Beyond stipulating to the guidelines calculation, the plea agreement left each side free to argue for whatever sentence it deemed appropriate.

C. Sentencing

In their pre-sentencing submissions, neither side proposed a sentence within the guidelines range. The government requested incarceration “in excess of a year and a day,” a sentence well below the recommended minimum. The probation officer recommended a prison term of 15 months. Warner argued that a sentence of probation with community service would suffice, and that it would provide greater benefit to society. He offered to mentor students in business and product development at three urban high schools on Chicago's South Side. The president of one of the schools submitted a letter detailing specific ways that Warner could help. In addition, approximately seventy people— 853 business associates, employees, neighbors, charitable foundations, and others who knew Warner—submitted character-reference letters in his behalf.

The sentencing hearing took place on January 14, 2014, before District Judge Kocoras. After argument from both sides, the court pronounced Warner's sentence and explained its decision. The court also issued a short written statement of reasons to supplement its oral explanation. The hearing transcript runs fifty-five pages.

The district court adopted the findings in the presentence report and agreed with the calculation of the guidelines range. But the court decided to impose a below-guidelines sentence based on “the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant.” 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(1). The court was moved by the letters submitted in Warner's behalf, which were “quite different” from the letters it typically received in other cases: they were voluminous, detailed, and revealed Warner's “personal qualities, which differ from those he manifested in committing the crimes he has admitted.” The court read several letters into the record. For brevity's sake, we give only a partial summary.

One letter related that in 2012 Warner stopped to ask a stranger for directions in Santa Barbara, California. Her name was Jennifer Vasilakos, and she was holding a fundraiser called “Parking for Jenny.” In addition to directions, she gave him a flyer explaining that she suffered from kidney failure and needed money to pay for an expensive adult stem cell treatment. An hour later, after reading the flyer, Warner returned and promised to pay the full amount she needed ($20,000). He followed through, but "[his] generosity went further than simply donating." He helped her "raise awareness" and connected her with others interested in the potential of adult stem cells for treating kidney failure. As a result, she has met with leaders in the field, toured laboratories, and "altered the path of research."

Another letter came from the president of the Children's Hunger Fund, an organization serving needy children in orphanages, disaster-stricken areas, and elsewhere. Over thirteen years, Warner donated millions of plush toys valued at $70 million and enabled numerous charitable projects. The president called Warner's generosity "nothing short of amazing" and "unprecedented" in his thirty-plus years in the non-profit sector. What is more, "in every instance," he noted, Warner "ha[d] humbly requested that no special efforts be made to publicly acknowledge his philanthropy."

In a third letter, the director of financial reporting for Warner's company called him "the most benevolent person I have ever met." He explained, for example, that when Ty Inc. broke $1 million in annual sales, Warner surprised his employees with an annual bonus equal to one year's salary; he also maintained his sales team's high commission rates, making many of them millionaires.

The other letters that the district court read at the hearing told similar stories. For example, in honor of Princess Diana, Warner designed a plush toy and donated $20 million in profits to her memorial fund. To commemorate a friend's 18–year–old son who had succumbed to cancer, Warner created an Issy Bear and donated $2 million in profits for cancer research. He gave $6.3 million to a charter school in Las Vegas; donated $13 million to enable the acquisition and development of a park in Westmont, Illinois; and gave $2 million for disaster relief in Japan. In addition to these letters, the court noted that dozens more "describe[d] a host of other actions, large and small, which reflect on Mr. Warner 854 and are entitled to consideration in determining a just sentence for him."

The district court found that "Mr. Warner's private acts of kindness, generosity and benevolence are overwhelming." Moreover, many of them took place long before Warner knew he was under investigation; the court found they were "motivated by the purest of intentions" and "without a view toward using [them] at sentencing." Most were "done quietly and privately." The district judge, who has been on the bench for more than thirty years, then remarked: "Never have I had a defendant in any case—white collar crime or otherwise—demonstrate the level of humanity and concern for the welfare of others as has Mr. Warner."

The court also discussed the other § 3553(a) factors, which it acknowledged "run in different directions." On the one hand, the court emphasized the need to maintain the "dignity of the law," to treat "the rich and the poor similarly," and to deter other tax-evaders. It recognized that Warner "hid a substantial amount of money" for many years, and that his crime was "a serious one [which] goes to the essence of how we govern ourselves." The court also acknowledged the government's comparisons to other tax evaders who had received prison sentences despite having lower tax losses than Warner, though it found the comparisons unhelpful because Warner was "very unique."

On the other hand, the court found that Warner concealed only a "small fraction" of his total income and tried to come clean through the OVDP "prior to him knowing his name had been submitted to the [IRS]." Moreover, in one sense, Warner had already been "punished ... severely" by paying a penalty of over $53 million—possibly "the largest fine in history" and "more than he ever would have paid had he filed the returns and included all of the income," though it was admittedly only "a small percentage" of Warner's total wealth. He also suffered the "humiliation" of a "highly publicized prosecution." Warner was 69 years old, had no prior criminal history and, in the district court's view, was extremely unlikely to commit any further crimes. The district court also noted Warner's prompt payment of his civil liabilities and his compliance with the plea agreement.

Having examined the relevant factors, the district judge said it was now "left to me to weigh them all and balance them, as best ... I am humanly able." He candidly admitted that it was a "hard question" whether to incarcerate Warner, and that he "struggled over it." But in the end he found that Warner's good works "trump[ed]" his misconduct and that "society will be best served by allowing him to continue his good works" outside of prison. A sentence below the guidelines range was fitting, the court explained, because "the Guidelines do not describe similarly situated defendants"; Warner was "very unique." The government itself had recommended a well-below-guidelines sentence—an approach the court commended as "quite reasonable."

The district court sentenced Warner to two years' probation, subject to standard conditions and a special condition requiring at least 500 hours of community service at the three South Side high schools he had identified. The court also fined Warner $100,000—the maximum amount authorized by 26 U.S.C. § 7201—and ordered him to pay costs.

The government timely appealed. The district court had jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. § 3231, and we have appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and 18 U.S.C. § 3742(b).

II. ANALYSIS

The government contends that Warner's sentence is unreasonable because it does 855 not include a prison term. For the reasons that follow, we disagree.

For starters, no statute expressly required the district court to send Warner to prison. The law that Warner violated, 26 U.S.C. § 7201, permits the court to impose a fine instead, which it did here. And Warner was eligible for probation under 18 U.S.C. § 3561.

[2] [3] It was therefore up to the district court to select an appropriate sentence in accordance with the factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a). One of those factors is the type and range of sentence established by the guidelines. 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(4). After United States v. Booker, however, the guidelines are merely advisory. 543 U.S. 220, 245, 125 S.Ct. 738, 160 L.Ed.2d 621 (2005). While the § 3553(a) analysis still begins with a consideration of the guidelines, it does not end there. Rita v. United States, 551 U.S. 338, 351, 127 S.Ct. 2456, 168 L.Ed.2d 203 (2007). The sentencing judge may not perfunctorily impose a guidelines sentence or even presume that such a sentence is appropriate in a given case. See Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. 38, 50, 128 S.Ct. 586, 169 L.Ed.2d 445 (2007). The guidelines range is only "a rough approximation of sentences that might achieve § 3553(a)'s objectives" in the "mine run of cases." Rita, 551 U.S. at 350–51, 127 S.Ct. 2456. It supplies "the starting point and the initial benchmark," but nothing more. Gall, 552 U.S. at 49, 128 S.Ct. 586.

The district court must next consider the other § 3553(a) factors. Id. at 49–50, 128 S.Ct. 586. The first factor encompasses both "the nature and circumstances of the offense" and "the history and characteristics of the defendant." 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(1). The second demands a sentence that is "sufficient, but not greater than necessary" to accomplish the basic purposes of sentencing: just punishment, deterrence, incapacitation, and rehabilitation. Id. § 3553(a)(2). The sixth factor is "the need to avoid unwarranted sentence disparities" among similarly situated defendants. Id. § 3553(a)(6). The others are: the types of sentence available, sentencing policy statements, and the need for restitution. Id. § 3553(a)(3), (5), (7).

[4] [5] [6] [7] Ultimately, it falls on the district court to weigh and balance the various factors and to "make an individualized assessment based on the facts presented." Gall, 552 U.S. at 50, 128 S.Ct. 586; see also id. at 52, 128 S.Ct. 586 (viewing "every case as a unique study in the human failings that sometimes mitigate, sometimes magnify, the crime and the punishment to ensue" (citation omitted)). The open-endedness of the § 3553(a) factors leaves ample room for the court's discretion. See United States v. Wachowiak, 496 F.3d 744, 748 (7th Cir.2007). Once the court chooses a sentence, § 3553(c) requires the district judge to "state in open court the reasons" for imposing it. The explanation need not be exhaustive as long as it "allow[s] for meaningful appellate review and ... promote[s] the perception of fair sentencing." United States v. Omole, 523 F.3d 691, 697 (7th Cir.2008) (quoting Gall, 552 U.S. at 50, 128 S.Ct. 586). The court is free to select a sentence outside the guidelines range, see Kimbrough v. United States, 552 U.S. 85, 91, 128 S.Ct. 558, 169 L.Ed.2d 481 (2007), but it must explain and support the magnitude of the variance, United States v. Molton, 743 F.3d 479, 484 (7th Cir.2014).

[8] [9] [10] [11] [12] We review a district court's choice of sentence in two steps. Gall, 552 U.S. at 51, 128 S.Ct. 586. First, we assess de novo whether the court followed proper procedures. United States v. Nania, 724 F.3d 824, 830 (7th Cir.2013). If the decision below is procedurally sound, then we ask whether the resulting sentence is "substantively reasonable." Id. Unlike the 856 sentencing judge, we may presume on appeal that a within-guidelines sentence is reasonable. Rita, 551 U.S. at 341, 127 S.Ct. 2456. But we may not presume that a sentence outside the guidelines range is unreasonable. Gall, 552 U.S. at 51, 128 S.Ct. 586. Instead, we must decide whether the district court's justification is sufficient, applying a deferential abuse of discretion standard. Id. at 40, 128 S.Ct. 586; Molton, 743 F.3d at 484. We will not substitute our judgment for that of the district court. Wachowiak, 496 F.3d at 751. For we are mindful that substantive reasonableness occupies "a range, not a point," id., and that "the sentencing judge is in the best position to apply the § 3553(a) factors to the individual defendant," Omole, 523 F.3d at 698.

[13] [14] [15] Thus, we will uphold a variant (i.e., outside-the-guidelines) sentence so long as the district court's reasoning (1) rests on reliable evidence, United States v. England, 555 F.3d 616, 622 (7th Cir.2009); (2) is consistent with § 3553(a), Molton, 743 F.3d at 484; and (3) yields a sentence "within the broad range of objectively reasonable sentences in the circumstances," Wachowiak, 496 F.3d at 750. A variant sentence is most likely to pass muster if it is based on considerations particular to the defendant or the case, as opposed to "normal incidents of the offense or the judge's wholesale disagreement with the guidelines." Wachowiak, 496 F.3d at 750. In general, a disagreement about how much weight to give each § 3553(a) factor does not warrant reversal. See Molton, 743 F.3d at 485; accord United States v. Fernandez, 443 F.3d 19, 32 (2d Cir.2006) ("The weight to be afforded any given argument made pursuant to one of the § 3553(a) factors is a matter firmly committed to the discretion of the sentencing judge....").

A. Procedural Reasonableness

While the government primarily takes aim at the substance of Warner's sentence, it also claims in several footnotes that the district judge procedurally erred by overlooking two of the § 3553(a) factors: the need to deter other tax-evaders and to avoid unwarranted sentencing disparities. Setting aside the question whether the government preserved this argument, see Harmon v. Gordon, 712 F.3d 1044, 1053 (7th Cir.2013) ("[A] party can waive an argument by presenting it only in an undeveloped footnote."), we reject it on the merits.

[16] Failure to consider the § 3553(a) factors or to adequately explain the choice of sentence can amount to procedural error. See Gall, 552 U.S. at 51, 128 S.Ct. 586. But the "sentencing court need not comprehensively discuss each of the factors," United States v. Villegas–Miranda, 579 F.3d 798, 801 (7th Cir.2009), or march through them "in checklist fashion, explicitly articulating its conclusions regarding each one," United States v. Shannon, 518 F.3d 494, 496 (7th Cir.2008).

[17] The district court here addressed the § 3553(a) factors and explained their relevance to Warner's sentence, exactly as it was supposed to do. In particular, the court expressly addressed both deterrence (which it found sufficient) and sentencing disparities (finding "the variety of comparisons made by both sides" unhelpful because Warner was "very unique"). The government's real complaint is that the district court did not, in its view, adequately address its arguments. But that issue goes to the substance of Warner's sentence. As a procedural matter, the court's explanation was more than sufficient.

B. Substantive Reasonableness

[18] That brings us to the heart of this appeal. We begin our review for substantive 857 reasonableness by stating the obvious: Warner's sentence is well below the guidelines recommendation. He received both a shorter sentence (24 rather than 46 to 57 months) and a lighter one (probation rather than prison). Although, as noted above, Warner was eligible for probation under 18 U.S.C. § 3561, the guidelines advised imprisonment rather than probation due to the length of his sentencing range. See USSG § 5B1.1(a).

We must decide whether the district court's explanation justifies Warner's sentence, including the magnitude of its deviation from the guidelines. Molton, 743 F.3d at 484. No one disputes that he deserved a below-guidelines sentence. The dispute centers instead on how far below the guidelines the court should have gone. Warner requested probation. The government proposed over a year and a day in prison—which would have made Warner eligible for good-time credit, likely reducing his actual time served to less than a year. See 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1). While the court was not strictly bound by their recommendations, it was well within the court's discretion to use that range as a benchmark. See Gall, 552 U.S. at 49–50, 128 S.Ct. 586 (directing the court to determine whether the § 3553(a) factors "support the sentence requested by a party " (emphasis added)). The real choice before the district court, then, was between probation and roughly a year in prison—not 46 to 57 months.

Did the district court choose reasonably between those alternatives? The government says no. It argues that in analyzing the § 3553(a) factors, the court made numerous errors and ultimately put too much weight on Warner's charitable contributions and letters of support (factor 1), and too little weight on the seriousness of his offense (factor 2(A)), general deterrence (factor 2(B)), and sentencing disparities (factor 6). We address each factor in turn.

1. Characteristics of the Defendant

[19] [20] Section 3553(a)(1) instructs the sentencing judge to consider "the history and characteristics of the defendant." A defendant's record of charity may justify a lenient sentence. Though our earlier cases required "exceptional" good works, United States v. Repking, 467 F.3d 1091, 1095 (7th Cir.2006) (per curiam), the Supreme Court has since "reject[ed] ... an appellate rule that requires 'extraordinary' circumstances to justify a sentence outside the Guidelines range," Gall, 552 U.S. at 47, 128 S.Ct. 586. Accordingly, to survive appellate review, a defendant's good works must be sufficient to justify the variant sentence, but they need not necessarily be exceptional.

Relying mainly on Warner's letters of support, the district court found his charitable works and the generosity they bespeak overwhelming—indeed, unprecedented in the district judge's experience. This was the primary mitigating factor that drove the court toward a lenient sentence. The government attacks the court's assessment on two grounds.

First, the government questions the value of Warner's letters because many of them came from his employees, former employees, business associates, and attorneys; and because some of the good deeds they report took place after Warner knew he was under investigation. But the district court addressed both points. It noted the source of the letters and yet found them sincere and credible. And it specifically found that Warner's generosity went back many years, that his motivations were sincere, and that he was not trying to game the system or create a record to use at sentencing. Given the record before us, these findings are not clearly erroneous. See United States v. Gordon, 513 F.3d 659, 666 (7th Cir.2008).

858 Second, the government argues that Warner's charity amounts to no more than "writing checks [and] donating excess inventory," which is "nothing unique" considering his "enormous wealth." Though Warner says he donated $140 million, about 8% of his net worth, the government asserts the correct figure is $35.7 million, about 2% of his net worth.[3] The government raised this dispute below in a footnote, so the district court understandably did not resolve it.

Whatever the correct figure may be, the government misses the point of the district court's remarks. Although it praised Warner for giving away many millions of dollars, the court did not focus on the number of checks Warner wrote or their dollar amounts. It focused instead on what Warner's charitable acts reveal about his character, which is exactly what § 3553(a)(1) directs us to consider. For example, the court read the letter from Ms. Vasilakos first and in its entirety, even though the $20,000 Warner donated for her treatment was a relatively small sum. What was remarkable was that Warner helped a total stranger and that his "generosity went further than simply donating." The court also highlighted Warner's insistence that the Children's Hunger Fund not publicize his philanthropy, as well as Warner's kindness to his employees. None of the court's comments fixated on the amount of money involved. What struck the court was that Warner displayed such "humanity and concern for the welfare of others" and acted with "the purest of intentions," often "quietly and privately." Cf. Matt. 6:3–4(RSV) ("[W]hen you give alms, do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing, so that your alms may be in secret.")

The government was free to challenge the district court's assessment of Warner's character below, but we will not disturb the court's findings on appeal. As we stated above, they have ample support in the record and are not clearly erroneous. Nor did the district court err by placing as much weight as it did on Warner's character. Though we ourselves might have given this factor less weight compared to others, the court did not abuse its discretion. See Gall, 552 U.S. at 51, 128 S.Ct. 586 ("The fact that the appellate court might reasonably have concluded that a different sentence was appropriate is insufficient to justify reversal of the district court."); Fernandez, 443 F.3d at 32 (committing the assignment of weight to the § 3553(a) factors to the sentencing judge's discretion).

Our conclusion is consistent with the cases cited by the government, Repking and United States v. Vrdolyak, 593 F.3d 676 (7th Cir.2010). In Repking, we vacated as substantively unreasonable a below-guidelines one-day sentence for a bank president who misappropriated funds. 467 F.3d at 1091–92. The district judge's offhanded reference to "unspecified 'good works' " that were "entirely consistent with a bank's business development plan" did not justify such leniency. Id. at 1093, 1096. This case is different: among other mitigating facts, the district court specified in detail with reference to the record what good works Warner did and what they revealed about him as a person. The court found, moreover, that Warner was motivated by genuine benevolence rather than ulterior aims.

In Vrdolyak, we reversed a below-guidelines probationary sentence for conspiracy 859 to commit mail and wire fraud. 593 F.3d at 684. The defendant there had "a history of ethical misconduct," but the district court ignored it; it also overlooked the defendant's wealth. Id. at 682. Warner, by contrast, has a clean history apart from his tax evasion, and the district court recognized both his crime and his wealth. Moreover, because Vrdolyak was a procedural challenge, we expressed "no view on what a proper sentence would be." Id. at 684. But that is precisely the question before us now; Vrdolyak does not speak to it.

Nor are we allowing Warner to use his wealth as a "getout-of-jail card," id. at 682, as the government charges. The district court looked behind the numbers to Warner's character and found him to be a genuinely benevolent person. A non-wealthy defendant who showed similar qualities would be entitled to similar treatment (all else being equal). And a rich defendant who gave large gifts without real concern for others, or who did so cynically to give himself an argument at sentencing, would not deserve the same leniency.

2. Seriousness of the Offense

Section 3553(a) demands "a sentence sufficient, but not greater than necessary, to comply with the purposes" of sentencing. One of those purposes is "to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for the law, and to provide just punishment." 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2)(A). The district court here recognized Warner's crime as "a serious one" and respect for the law as "fundamental." According to the government, however, this was mere lip service, for Warner's sentence does not justly punish him or convey the seriousness of evading $5.6 million in taxes.

In another case, justice might demand a harsher sentence, but here it does not. To begin with, the government itself took a fairly lenient approach to Warner's punishment. It charged him with a single count of tax evasion for a single year and elected to treat his conduct in the other years as relevant for sentencing purposes rather than to charge them as separate crimes. Additionally, as we noted above, the government sought a sentence well below the guidelines range. Both decisions were within the government's prosecutorial discretion, and we do not second-guess them. But they started the district court down a path toward leniency.

It was reasonable for the district court to follow that path here. For a sentencing judge must consider not only the seriousness but also the "nature and circumstances of the offense." 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(1). The court noted several mitigating circumstances in Warner's case. His crime was isolated and uncharacteristic: he had kept only one offshore account containing "a small fraction" (about 6%) of his total wealth. He was 69 years old, had no prior criminal history, and posed no danger to society. In particular, the court found, there was "no question of him violating the tax laws in the future." Moreover, he cooperated by pleading guilty and promptly paying both full restitution and the FBAR penalty, although, it is true, his cooperation was incomplete (e.g., he resisted the government's subpoena and did not disclose the source of his offshore assets).

The district court also appropriately took into account Warner's attempt to enter the OVDP in September 2009. It is true that Warner already knew about the UBS investigation and Schumacher's indictment, so he was on notice of some probability that his own account would be discovered. That lessens the mitigating force of his attempted disclosure but does not eliminate it. Many other offshore-accountholders were similarly on notice, given the IRS's widely publicized prosecutions 860 and enforcement efforts; yet many of them were eventually admitted into the OVDP anyway. The salient fact, in the district court's view, is that Warner came forward before he knew the IRS had his name or that he was under investigation. It was reasonable to consider this a mitigating fact. Cf. United States v. Tenzer, 213 F.3d 34, 42–43 (2d Cir.2000) (treating as mitigating a defendant's failed attempt to enter an IRS voluntary disclosure program).

In these circumstances, we think probation was a sufficiently serious sentence. The Supreme Court reminded us in Gall that probation involves a "substantial restriction of freedom," and faulted the court below for discounting that fact. 552 U.S. at 48, 128 S.Ct. 586. For two years Warner will live under restrictions on his movement and activities, and he must perform at least 500 hours of community service. Moreover, he paid a $100,000 fine, the highest possible amount for a violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7201.

In addition, Warner paid full restitution and a $53.6 million FBAR penalty. Technically the FBAR penalty is civil rather than criminal in nature. See 31 U.S.C. § 5321. But it stems from the same conduct as his criminal conviction; in fact, the government specifically cited his FBAR violations in the information as evidence of his criminal tax evasion. Further, the FBAR penalty was part of Warner's plea agreement. It is therefore one of the circumstances that informs our assessment of his sentence's adequacy. Cf. USSG § 5E1.2(d)(5) (instructing the court, when determining fines, to consider "any collateral consequences of conviction, including civil obligations arising from the defendant's conduct"); United States v. Anderson, 267 Fed.Appx. 847, 850 (11th Cir.2008) (per curiam) (upholding a probationary sentence for insider trading based in part on the defendant's payment of restitution and a civil penalty to the SEC).

The government now tries to downplay Warner's FBAR penalty, claiming it represents only a fraction of the liability he faced. According to the government, it could have charged Warner a separate penalty for each year he hid his account. Even assuming the relevant statute, 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C)-(D), would allow separate annual penalties, the six-year limitations period would have restricted the government's recovery to two or maybe three years. See 31 U.S.C. § 5321(b)(1). In addition, the government would have had to prove that Warner's violations were willful. Id. § 5321(a)(5)(C). Moreover, if $53.6 million were insufficient, the government could have insisted on more before entering into the plea agreement.

The government points out, citing Gall, that "custodial sentences are qualitatively more severe than probationary sentences of equivalent terms." 552 U.S. at 48, 128 S.Ct. 586. That is true, and in that sense incarceration sends a stronger message than probation does. But § 3553(a) does not command courts to send the strongest message possible; it commands them to impose a sentence that is "sufficient, but not greater than necessary " in the circumstances of each case. 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) (emphasis added). The district court concluded that in Warner's case a probationary sentence met that standard. That conclusion was reasonable.

3. General Deterrence

[21] Another important goal of sentencing is "to afford adequate [general] deterrence to criminal conduct." 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2)(B). White collar criminals seem like "prime candidates for general deterrence," United States v. Peppel, 707 F.3d 627, 637 (6th Cir.2013), because they (presumably) act rationally, calculating 861 and comparing the risks and the rewards before deciding whether to engage in criminal activity. The guidelines thus make "deterring others from violating the tax laws ... a primary consideration." USSG § 2T1.1, intro. cmt. And they seek to increase the proportion of offenders who receive prison sentences above pre-guidelines levels. See USSG § 2T1.1, cmt. (background). Although the guidelines' policies are not controlling, see United States v. Bonner, 440 F.3d 414, 417 (7th Cir.2006), we have no quarrel with the general proposition that effective deterrence of tax crimes requires a credible threat of imprisonment. Cf. United States v. Heffernan, 43 F.3d 1144, 1149 (7th Cir.1994) (recognizing the need for significant penalties to compensate for the rewards and difficulty of detecting economic crimes). But that does not necessitate imprisonment in every case.

While incarcerating Warner undoubtedly would have sent a stronger message, the message sent by his existing sentence is, in our view, strong enough to satisfy § 3553(a)(2)(B). We reach this conclusion for two reasons. First, the veteran district judge found Warner to be one of a kind. Almost by definition, very few defendants will make that kind of impression on a sentencing judge. So Warner's sentence tells others very little, if anything, about what treatment they would receive for a similar crime. In particular, other, more typical defendants should take no comfort in the fact that Warner avoided imprisonment.

Second, even without a prison sentence, Warner's payment of a $53.6 million penalty already provides a measure of deterrence. See United States v. Sklena, 692 F.3d 725, 732 (7th Cir.2012) (recognizing that a large civil penalty can have a "deterrent effect ... similar to that of a criminal sentence"). From an economic point of view, deterrence is sufficient when the penalty for a crime multiplied by the probability of apprehension equals the harm done—in this case, the taxes evaded. See DirecTV, Inc. v. Barczewski, 604 F.3d 1004, 1010 (7th Cir.2010) (citing Gary S. Becker, Crime and Punishment: An Economic Approach, 76 J. Pol. Econ. 169 (1968)); United States v. Rogan, 517 F.3d 449, 454 (7th Cir.2008) (citing A. Mitchell Polinsky and Steven Shavell, Punitive Damages: An Economic Analysis, 111 Harv. L.Rev. 869 (1998)). If the prospect and severity of punishment are high enough, then the risks of tax evasion exceed the rewards, and so would-be offenders will refrain (at least in theory).

[22] Warner's FBAR penalty was nearly ten times the size of the tax loss he caused (not accounting for interest). The missing variable is the probability of apprehending the offshore tax-evader. Even without that figure, though, it is reasonable to think, as the district court did, that a tenfold penalty is sufficient in Warner's case. Congress apparently intended FBAR penalties to have a deterrent effect, see 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C), and it has employed multiples lower than ten to stem other types of economic harm, see, e.g., 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (authorizing treble damages for antitrust violations); 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (treble damages for RICO violations); 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1) (treble damages for False Claims Act violations). The fact that Warner's penalty was only 3% of his net worth does not, as the government contends, blunt its deterrent force. For "[t]he wrongdoer's wealth plays no role" in the economic approach to deterrence outlined above. DirecTV, 604 F.3d at 1010.

The government points to United States v. Engle, where the Fourth Circuit, citing the guidelines' view that deterrence requires a real risk of incarceration, vacated a probationary sentence for tax evasion. 592 F.3d 495, 502 (4th Cir.2010). Engle, 862 however, was at best a " 'mine-run' tax-evasion case." Id. at 503. The defendant there, unlike Warner, did not pay a large penalty or possess unique characteristics that could justify a low sentence. On the contrary, the facts in Engle "could perhaps be viewed as warranting an above-Guidelines sentence," id. at 503 (emphasis added), which no one suggests would have been appropriate here.

Finally, the government takes issue with the district court's statement that Warner's highly publicized prosecution and attendant humiliation provided some deterrence. The government argues that humiliation is a normal consequence of a fraud conviction. While Warner's prosecution has been more public than most, we agree that this fact deserves little, if any, weight. See Repking, 467 F.3d at 1096. But as we read the transcript, Warner's humiliation played no significant role in the court's sentencing determination. And in any event his sentence would stand without it.

4. Sentencing Disparities

The government's final contention is that Warner's sentence creates "unwarranted sentence disparities" in violation of § 3553(a)(6). The government points to four former UBS clients who received prison terms of a year and a day with tax losses lower than Warner's: Peter Troost (who evaded approximately $1 million), Christopher Berg ($270,000), Federico Hernandez ($500,000), and Richard Werdiger ($400,000). The government insists that Warner should have received a prison term at least as long as theirs. The district court disagreed—again, because Warner is unique.

We uphold the district court's conclusion. Section 3553(a)(6) forbids not all sentencing disparities but only "unwarranted" ones "among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct." 18 U.S.C. § 3556(a)(6). Warner is not similar to the government's comparators. None of them offered evidence of significant charity or otherwise impressed the district court with their personal character, as Warner did. None of them, with the exception of Werdiger, tried to enter the OVDP or paid an FBAR penalty comparable to Warner's. Two of them were convicted on numerous counts: six in Werdiger's case, five in Hernandez's. And in all four instances the government sought a sentence within the advisory guidelines range.[4] These were "mine run" cases. Rita, 551 U.S. at 351, 127 S.Ct. 2456. Warner's case is not.

Furthermore, probation is a common sentence in offshore tax evasion cases. The evidence introduced below shows that roughly half of the defendants convicted since 2008 have received terms of probation rather than imprisonment. And, of course, thousands more have avoided criminal prosecution altogether by entering the OVDP. The government correctly emphasizes that the defendants sentenced to probation were different from Warner: for example, they caused smaller tax losses, and several of them gave more information to the government. But they are at least as similar as the government's comparators. Paul Zabczuk, for example, tried to disclose his offshore account through the 863 OVDP, was rejected, and received three years' probation despite the government's request for an 18–month prison sentence. And Igor Olenicoff hid millions of dollars in offshore accounts, paid the IRS $52 million, and received two years' probation based in part on his "exemplary community service" and "humanitarian causes."[5] Both of them, however, caused much lower tax losses than Warner.

Ultimately, these examples prove the district court's point: Warner is unique, and neither side's comparisons are very helpful. As a result, his sentence does not cause any unwarranted disparities among similar defendants. And for the same reason, it does not restrict the government's ability to obtain a prison sentence in other, more typical cases, even where the tax loss at issue is less than Warner's.

5. Choice of Sentence

The district court recognized that the various § 3553(a) factors "run in different directions" and that it was up to the court to "weigh ... and balance them." In the end, it concluded that the mitigating factors outweighed the factors favoring incarceration, so it sentenced Warner to probation.

None of the errors that have led us to upend other sentences on substantive grounds are present here. In England, for example, the district court's sentence rested on a purported finding that the defendant would have attempted to murder the witnesses against him had he not been in custody. 555 F.3d at 621–22. That was nothing more than speculation, so we vacated the sentence. Id. at 623; see also United States v. Bradley, 628 F.3d 394, 399 (7th Cir.2010) (per curiam) (where the judge assumed the defendant had committed undiscovered crimes and would commit more if released). Here, by contrast, the record amply supports the district court's factual findings.

We vacated the sentence in United States v. Roberson because of a legal error: the district court imposed a 1–month sentence for bank robbery to avoid an 84–month statutory minimum on a related firearm offense. 474 F.3d 432, 433–34 (7th Cir.2007). A disagreement with Congress is not a valid basis to give a lenient sentence. Id. at 434–35. No such impermissible considerations intruded into the court's decision here, however.

We have also occasionally vacated sentences that were obviously unreasonable or arbitrary. In United States v. Goldberg, the district court gave a one-day sentence for child pornography based on "idiosyncratic penological views" that placed nearly exclusive emphasis on rehabilitation, rather than a "careful, impartial weighing of the statutory sentencing factors"; we reversed. 491 F.3d 668, 673–74 (7th Cir.2007). In Omole, the court gave a sentence 51 months below the guidelines range, but that result "directly contradict[ed]" the court's finding that the defendant had "contempt for the court" and "utter lack of feeling for other human beings." The court even told the defendant that "you've caught a break that I'm not at all sure you deserve." These contradictions compelled us to reverse. 523 F.3d at 698–700. And in Repking, which we discussed above, the court grossly overstated the impact of the defendant's unspecified good works and restitution payments. 467 F.3d at 1093, 1095–96.

By contrast, the district court's rationale here rests on specific facts about Warner rather than any peculiar penological theory; it is fully consistent with the sentence 864 imposed; and the factors the court emphasized bear the weight it gave them.

This case more closely resembles Wachowiak, where we affirmed a below-guidelines prison sentence for receiving and sharing child pornography based on mitigating facts found by the district judge: the defendant never produced any images, showed genuine remorse, and could count on family support to help him through rehabilitation. In addition, like Warner, he had a clean record, "excellent" character (evidenced by testimony and letters), and a low risk of recidivism. 496 F.3d at 745–47. These factors were "particularized to the individual circumstances of the case"—as were Warner's. Id. at 750. Even though we might have been harsher, we concluded that the district court's decision fell within the range of reasonable sentences. Id. at 754–55.

The Supreme Court's decision in Gall is also instructive. The defendant there pled guilty to limited participation in an ecstasy distribution ring. The district judge sentenced him to three years' probation, well below the guidelines range of 3037 months in prison. 552 U.S. at 41–45, 128 S.Ct. 586. The judge emphasized that the defendant had no significant criminal history, had voluntarily withdrawn from the conspiracy, and was “doing everything in his power to forge a new life.” Id. at 44, 128 S.Ct. 586. Additionally, a “small flood” of letters attested to his good character. Id. at 43, 128 S.Ct. 586. The Eighth Circuit thought the crime demanded a more serious sentence and reversed. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that “the Court of Appeals should have given due deference to the District Court's reasoned and reasonable decision that the § 3553(a) factors, on the whole, justified the sentence.” Id. at 59–60, 128 S.Ct. 586.

Due deference leads us to the same conclusion here. Considering (1) Warner's excellent character, as shown by his long history of charity and kindness to others; (2) the isolated and uncharacteristic nature of his tax evasion; (3) his attempt to enter the OVDP; (4) his guilty plea and prompt payment of his liabilities; (5) his $53.6 million FBAR penalty, which is nearly ten times the tax loss; and (6) the fact that the government charged him with only one count and itself sought a well-below-guidelines sentence, we conclude that Warner's probationary sentence is reasonable.

III. CONCLUSION

Because the district court did not abuse its considerable discretion, we AFFIRM Warner's sentence.

FLAUM, Circuit Judge, concurring in the judgment.
I concur in the judgment and write separately to express my considerable unease with the outcome of this appeal and the signal that it may send about how the criminal justice system treats wealthy tax evaders. In my view, Warner's commendable charitable spirit does not obviate the appropriateness of some period of incarceration. He purposely sought to deprive the federal government of millions of dollars of tax revenue simply to amass more of his enormous wealth. As Judge Kocoras put it, Warner's acts “go[ ] to the essence of how we govern ourselves.” I agree wholeheartedly, and, therefore, Warner's non-custodial sentence—regardless of his philanthropy—causes me concern.

Nevertheless, we review the sentence imposed for an abuse of discretion. And the deference we afford the sentencing judge here must be informed by the leniency with which the government approached Warner's prosecution. Despite years of willful tax evasion, the government chose to charge Warner with just one count. And further, with a Sentencing Guidelines range of 46–57 months, the government 865 recommended a relatively modest period of incarceration (“in excess of a year and a day”). For me, these two debatable acts of prosecutorial discretion point toward an affirmance in this case, as they provided a uniquely limiting context for the district judge's exceptional exercise of leniency. Without this backdrop, I would be inclined to vacate the sentence imposed and remand for resentencing. However, in light of a veteran jurist's thoughtful and thorough consideration of the case, I am compelled to conclude that Warner's sentence falls within a sentencing judge's broad band of discretion.

All Citations

792 F.3d 847, 116 A.F.T.R.2d 2015-5175, 2015-2 USTC P 50,379

Footnotes

[1] See generally http://www.justice.gov/tax/offshore-compliance-initiative (last visited July 9, 2015).

[2] Information on the 2009 disclosure program and its successors is available on the IRS's webpage at http://www.irs.gov/uac/2009–Offshore–Voluntary–Disclosure–Program (last visited July 9, 2015).

[3] Warner's figure includes the retail value of toys he donated to charities; the government claims those toys should be valued at their actual cost to the defendant. Warner's figure also includes donations for which, according to him, he did not claim deductions on his tax returns; the government's figure does not include those additional donations.

[4] See United States v. Troost, No. 1:13–cr–00185 (N.D. Ill.), plea agreement at 6, 11 (ECF No. 12), sent. hr'g tr. at 26–30 (ECF No. 23), judgment (ECF No. 19); United States v. Berg, No. 5:12–cr–00877–LHK (N.D. Cal.), gov't sent. mem. at 3 (ECF No. 15), sent. hr'g tr. at 50–53 (ECF No. 27), judgment (ECF No. 20); United States v. Hernandez, No. 1:10–cr–

00334–DC (S.D.N.Y.), gov't sent. mem. (ECF No. 11), judgment (ECF No. 12); United States v. Werdiger, No. 1:10–cr–00325–PGG (S.D.N.Y.), judgment (ECF No. 30), sent. hr'g tr. at 32, 45–55 (ECF No. 31).

[5] See United States v. Zabczuk, No. 0:10–cr–60112–WPD (S.D. Fla.), sent. hr'g tr. at 4, 9, 22–23 (ECF No. 35); United States v. Olenicoff, No. 8:07–cr–00227–CJC (C.D. Cal.), plea agreement at 4–5 (ECF No. 11), sent. hr'g tr. at 4–6, 8–9, 23 (ECF No. 18).

End of Document

2014 WL 552864
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
C.D. California.

UNITED STATES of America
v.
$4,656,085.10 IN BANK FUNDS.

No. SACV 12–0219–DOC (JPRx).
|
Jan. 27, 2014.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Frank D. Kortum, Office Of US Attorney, Los Angeles, CA, for United States of America.

PROCEEDINGS (IN CHAMBERS): ORDER DENYING MOTION TO SET ASIDE DEFAULT JUDGMENT [46][47]

Honorable DAVID O. CARTER, District Judge.

1 Julie Barrera, Courtroom Clerk.

Before the Court are Claimant Michael Brander and Evergreen Capital LLC's (together, "Defaulted Claimants' ") Motions to Set Aside Default Judgment of Forfeiture ("Motion" or "Mot.") (Dkts.46, 47). After considering the moving papers, opposition, and reply, and all filings attached thereto, the Court hereby DENIES the Motion.

I. BACKGROUND

Claimant Michael Brander ("Mr.Brander") was getting divorced from his wife, Sheila Brander. Compl. ¶ 8. In May 2008, during the course of divorce proceedings, Mr. Brander drove from Alaska to Panama with several cashier's checks that totaled approximately $3,250,000, opened an account in the name of Dakota Investment, and deposited checks into the account. Id. The Government contends, and Mr. Brander admits, that his purpose in moving the funds to Panama was to conceal them from his wife. Id.; Mot. at 1–2.

Mr. Brandner also failed to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR") with the Internal Revenue Service. Compl. ¶ 9. Mr. Brandner was allegedly told that he was required to file a FBAR, but he failed to do so. Id. Over the next few years, Mr. Brander shifted a total of $4,656,085.10 to his account in Panama, including through wire transfers.

On September 12, 2011, the Government seized the funds. On February 9, 2012, the Government filed a Complaint for forfeiture against the funds, alleging that they were subject to forfeiture as proceeds of wire fraud because they were involved in one or more money laundering transactions, and because Mr. Brander failed to file a FBAR. Id. at 13.

Mr. Brandner admits that he was "served copies of the Verified Complaint for Forfeiture in this case in February, 2012." Brandner Decl. ¶ 5. He explains that "his attorney at the time" advised him that he should not respond to the Complaint because his doing so "would increase the chances of federal criminal charges being filed against him." Mot. at 3; Brandner Decl. ¶ 5.

On June 4, 2012, the Clerk of the Court entered default against Defaulted Claimants. Default by Clerk (Dkt.13). On July 18, 2012, this Court entered default judgment against Defaulted Claimants. Order, July 18, 2012 (Dkt.23).

Now, Mr. Brandner moves the Court to set aside the default judgment. See generally Mot.

II. DISCUSSION

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(1), district courts have the discretion to relieve a party from a judgment or order for reason of "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." TCI Group Life Ins. Plan v. Knoebber, 244 F.3d 691, 695 (9th Cir.2001). The Ninth Circuit has admonished district courts that, as a general matter, Rule 60(b) is "remedial in nature and ... must be liberally applied." Falk v. Allen, 739 F.2d 461, 463 (9th Cir.1984) (per curiam). But, "[t]his does not mean, of course, that the moving party is absolved from the burden of demonstrating that, in a particular case, the interest in deciding the case on the merits should prevail over the very important interest in the finality of judgments." TCI Group, 244 F.3d at 696. There must still be "good cause" for vacating default judgments. Id. Good cause is absent when: the defendant's culpable conduct led to the default; the defendant has a meritorious defense; or reopening the default judgment would prejudice the plaintiff. Id. These three factors are disjunctive, and the district court may deny the motion "if any of the three factors was true." Franchise Holding II, LLC v. Huntington Rests. Group, Inc., 375 F.3d 922, 926 (9th Cir.2004) (quoting Am. Ass'n of Naturopathic Physicians v. Hayhurst, 227 F.3d 1104, 1108 (9th Cir.2000)).

2 Defaulted Claimants explain that, "the primary reason that [they] did not file a claim and Answer to the forfeiture Complaint was that [they] w[ere] advised by [their] then attorney not to do so ." Mot. at 3. In addition, "[Mr. Brandner] was advised by his doctors to attempt to limit his stress." Id. The Government argues that this conduct is, in fact, culpable. Opp'n at 6–7; Sur–Reply at 2–3. The Court agrees.

"[A] defendant's conduct is culpable if he has received actual or constructive notice of the filing of the action and intentionally failed to answer." TCI Group, 244 F.3d at 697 (citing Alan Neuman Prods. v. Albright, 862 F.2d 1388, 1392 (9th Cir.1988)). In other words, a defaulted claimant's conduct was culpable "where there is no explanation of the default inconsistent with a devious, deliberate, willful, or bad faith failure to respond." TCI Group, 244 F.3d at 698 (citations omitted).

Here, Defaulted Claimants admit that they made an intentional decision not to respond. Brandner Decl. ¶ 5. Indeed, they consulted their lawyer. This is not a case where, like in Hayworth v. Haddock, No. 06–CV–1713, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104171, at *8–9 (E.D.Cal. Dec. 15, 2008), defendants lacked actual or constructive notice of the action. Rather, Defaulted Claimants made a considered decision-albeit, perhaps, a bad one-with the advice of an attorney. Unfortunately, this type of prudential mistake is not enough to relieve Defaulted Claimants of the default judgment against them. See Franchise Holdings, 375 F.3d at 926 ("If a defendant has received actual or constructive notice of the filing of the action and failed to answer, its conduct is culpable.").

Therefore, the Court finds that Defaulted Claimants were culpable in their failure to respond to the Complaint.

III. DISPOSITION

For the reasons explained above, the Court hereby DENIES Defaulted Claimant's Motions to Set Aside Default Judgment.

The Clerk shall serve this minute order on the parties.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2014 WL 552864

End of Document

2011 WL 4597491
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
NOT FOR PUBLICATION
United States District Court,
E.D. New York.

Louis GALPERN and Eva Galpern, Plaintiffs,
v.
DE VOS & CO. PLLC, Attorneys and Counselors and Lloyd De Vos, Esq., Defendants.

No. 10–CV–1952 (CBA)(JMA).
|
Sept. 30, 2011.

Attorneys and Law Firms

David H. Singer, David H. Singer & Associates LLP, New York, NY, for Plaintiffs.

Lloyd De Vos, Lloyd De Vos & Co. LLP, New York, NY, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM & ORDER

AMON, Chief Judge.

1 This case arises out of a dispute over legal fees. Plaintiffs Louis Galpern ("Galpern") and Eva Galpern (collectively the "Galperns" or "plaintiffs") bring claims based upon their contention that defendants Lloyd De Vos ("De Vos") and De Vos & Co. PLLC ("DVC" and collectively "defendants") over-billed plaintiffs and sought extra fees in violation of the terms of their retainer agreement with the Galperns. They also assert related causes of action based upon defendants' efforts to collect claimed unpaid legal fees. Defendants move for summary judgment on plaintiffs' claims and defendants' counterclaims and to strike plaintiffs' jury demand. Plaintiffs move for summary judgment with respect to defendants' counterclaim and defendants' second, third, fourth, and seventh affirmative defenses.

BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On February 21, 2009, DVC sent a retainer letter (the "Retainer Agreement") to the Galperns that contained the terms under which DVC was prepared to provide legal services to them. (Pl. 56.1 Stmt. ¶ 1; Def. 56.1 Stmt. ¶ 1.) In a letter dated February 21, 2009, which the parties refer to as the "Retainer Agreement," the defendants set out two potential fee arrangements. (De Vos Aff. ¶ 10; Am. Compl., Exhibit A.) The first option was a fixed fee of $60,000. (Id.) In the second option, defendants would proceed on a time and disbursement basis of $500.00 per hour for De Vos's time and $300.00 per hour for the time of Sherry Ellenzweig, an associate at DVC. (Id.) The fees in the second option were to be capped at $75,000.00 unless the matter was referred to the United States Department of Justice. (Id.) To accept the second option, plaintiffs had to submit a check to defendants for $15,000.00. (Id.) Both parties acknowledge that an agreement was reached pursuant to which DVC would perform legal services. (Pl. 56.1 Stmt. ¶ 2; Def. 56.1 Stmt. ¶ 2.) Louis Galpern states that he chose the second alternative and paid Lloyd De Vos $15,000.00. (Galpern Aff. ¶ 14.) Defendants provide no facts controverting that assertion.

According to Galpern, in February 2009, he received notice that UBS might be releasing information regarding his foreign bank accounts to the Internal Revenue Service (the "IRS"). (Galpern Aff. ¶ 4.) He states that he was aware from various newspaper articles that the IRS had an amnesty program with respect to foreign bank accounts, and he wanted to take advantage of the amnesty program. (Id. ¶ 5.) It is for that reason, he states, that he entered into the Retainer Agreement with defendants. (Id. ¶ 6 .) He asserts that Lloyd De Vos explained to him that Amended Tax Returns and Foreign Bank Account Reports ("FBARs") would have to be filed and that they relied on defendants to comply with the requirements of the Voluntary Disclosure Program. (Id. ¶ 7.) Galpern states that Lloyd De Vos advised him that it was important that amended tax returns be filed as soon as possible and that the deadline for taking advantage of the Voluntary Disclosure Program was September 15, 2009. (Id. ¶ 8.) He attests that Lloyd De Vos advised him that all tax returns and FBARs had to be filed by that date and that it was imperative that the Galperns' tax returns be filed as rapidly as possible to prevent a criminal referral. (Id. ¶¶ 8–9.)

2 Between February 26, 2009 and October 14, 2009, Galpern states that he paid defendants a total of $56,000.00. (Id. ¶¶ 14, 20.) In conversations in August and September 2009, Galpern states that De Vos told him that the IRS had extended the filing due date to October 15, 2009. (Id. ¶ 37.) Galpern states that on October 14, 2009, he was advised that he could pick up the tax returns and FBARs for timely filing in order to comply with the Voluntary Disclosure Program. (Id. ¶ 42.) At a meeting at defendants' office on October 14, 2009, he states, defendants demanded payment of $112,000.00. (Id. ¶ 43.) Plaintiffs have submitted copies of defendants' invoices, which total $160,643.97 for the relevant time period, (Singer Aff., Exs. A–H.), and Galpern acknowledges that he received invoices totaling $168,937.46 in charges, which, less the $56,000.00 Galpern states that he had paid, would correspond to roughly $112,000.00 in unpaid charges at that time. (Galpern Aff. ¶ 56.) Galpern states that defendants refused to give him the amended tax returns and FBARs unless he agreed to pay the sum defendants claimed was owing. (Id. ¶ 43 .) Galpern states that he left defendants' office at that time. (Id. ¶ 44.)

Galpern states that De Vos called him later that day and told him to return to defendants' office, which the Galperns did. (Id. ¶ 47.) Both parties acknowledge that at that meeting plaintiffs agreed to pay DVC an additional $50,000.00 in legal fees in settlement of all outstanding fees owed to DVC for services through that date. (Pl. 56.1 ¶ 3; Def. 56.1 ¶ 3.) Both Galpern and De Vos state that after that agreement was reached, defendants turned over the tax returns and FBARs to plaintiffs. (Galpern Aff. ¶ 54; De Vos Aff. ¶ 8.) Defendants performed additional work after October 14, 2009, and submitted an invoice for an additional $3,000.00. (Def 56.1 ¶ 6–7; Pl. 56.1 ¶ 6; Singer Aff., Ex. I.) Plaintiffs, however, have not paid defendants the $50,000.00 or the $3,000.00 invoiced for additional work. (Galpern Aff. ¶ 55; Def. 56.1 ¶ 5.)

Galpern states that on or about December 30, 2009, Lloyd De Vos filed a proceeding against him in Zurich, Switzerland, which resulted in the seizure of his bank account in Switzerland in the approximate amount of $50,000.00. (Galpern Aff. ¶ 61.) In that proceeding, Galpern contends, De Vos made a representation that Galpern was indebted to De Vos in an amount in excess of $50,000.00. (Id. ¶ 62.)

Plaintiffs filed this action in New York State Supreme Court. The action was removed on April 30, 2010. On August 27, 2010, plaintiffs filed an amended complaint, alleging four counts. The first cause of action appears to be for breach of contract. In the second cause of action, plaintiffs appear to allege that defendants breached their fiduciary duty by using information obtained from the plaintiffs to seize the plaintiffs' foreign bank account in an in rem proceeding in Switzerland. The third cause of action alleges over-billing, and the fourth cause of action alleges that De Vos made fraudulent statements to the court in Switzerland. Defendants now move for summary judgment on the complaint in full or, in the alternative, to strike plaintiffs' jury demand. Plaintiffs cross-move for summary judgment on defendants' counterclaim and defendants' second, third, fourth and seventh affirmative defenses.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

3 Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56; accord Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322–23, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986); Belfi v. Prendergast, 191 F.3d 129, 135 (2d Cir.1999). The Court's function is not to resolve disputed issues of fact, but only to determine whether there is a genuine issue to be tried. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986).

The Court is required to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 26 L.Ed.2d 142 (1970). Nevertheless, the nonmoving party cannot rest on mere allegations or denials, but must instead set forth specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(e); Nat'l Westminster Bank USA v. Ross, 676 F.Supp. 48, 51 (S.D.N.Y.1987) (speculation, conclusory allegations, and mere denials are not enough to raise genuine issues of fact). No genuine issue exists unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249–50 (citations omitted).

DISCUSSION

I. Summary Judgment as to the Amended Complaint

Defendants Lloyd De Vos and De Vos & Co. move for summary judgment on each of the plaintiffs' causes of action. [1]

1. First Cause of Action

Plaintiffs allege that on October 14, 2009 defendants breached their contract by refusing to turn over their work product unless plaintiffs paid fees in excess of the $75,000.00 cap specified in the Retainer Agreement. Defendants argue that they could not have breached that contract because the plaintiffs and defendants agreed on October 14 that plaintiff would pay $50,000.00 to settle all outstanding legal fees in exchange for defendants' work product. Plaintiffs counter that any agreement reached on October 14, 2009 was procured through duress and therefore unenforceable. Both parties acknowledge that plaintiffs agreed to the accord. Thus, the only question, as the claim is argued to this court, is whether the accord was procured by duress.

Under New York law, "[a] contract is voidable on the ground of duress when it is established that the party making the claim was forced to agree to it by means of a wrongful threat precluding the exercise of his free will." Austin Instrument v. Loral Corporation, 29 N.Y.2d 124, 130, 324 N.Y.S.2d 22, 272 N.E.2d 533 (1971). In order to plead duress, the party must satisfy four elements: "(1) a threat; (2) which was unlawfully made; (3) and caused involuntary acceptance of contract terms; (4) because the circumstances permitted no other alternative." Kamerman v. Steinberg, 891 F.2d 424, 431 (2d. Cir.1989) (citing Gulf & W. Corp. v. Craftique Prod., Inc., 523 F.Supp. 603, 610 (S.D.N.Y.1981)).

4 Defendants argue that plaintiffs cannot satisfy the second and fourth elements: that the alleged threat was unlawfully made and that the circumstances permitted no other alternative. Generally, "tak[ing] action which is legally permissible" does not constitute an unlawful threat. Kamerman v. Steinberg, 891 F.2d 424, 432 (2d Cir.1989) (citing Hammelburger v. Foursome Inn Corp., 54 N.Y.2d 580, 593 n. 4, 446 N.Y.S.2d 917, 431 N.E.2d 278 (1981)). For example, an attorney threatening to stop representing a client until he is paid is typically lawful, provided the withdrawal would not cause prejudice to the client. Ehrlich v. Tullo, 274 A.D.2d 303, 710 N.Y.S.2d 572, 573 (App. Div., 1 st Dep't.2000) (explaining an attorney's " 'threats' to cease representing [the defendant, client, as attorney] unless [the attorney's fees] were paid were not wrongful," but noting that the client "would not have been prejudiced had her attorney actually withdrawn"); see also Duane Morris LLP v. Astor Holdings Inc., 61 A.D.3d 418, 877 N.Y.S.2d 250, 252 (App. Div., 1 st Dep't.2009) (finding an attorney's threat to cease representation of the client until paid was not unlawful). Where the attorney is demanding excessive and unreasonable fees, however, such action may be deemed unlawful. See First Nat'l Bank of Cincinnati v. Pepper, 547 F.2d 708, 714–15 (2d Cir.1976) (finding attorney's actions in withholding documents until the plaintiffs agreed to pay fees was unlawful because the amount attorney demanded was excessive and unreasonable). The reasonableness of defendants' demands is a contested issue, see infra Section I.3.

Even if a threatened action is considered "unlawful" for purposes of duress, the party claiming duress must also show that they had no other alternative than to agree to the contract in question. This element "places a burden on the threatened party to show that the threatened breach would result in irreparable harm." Indus. Recycling Sys., Inc. v. Ahneman Assoc., P.C., 892 F.Supp. 547, 550 (S.D.N.Y.1995). The party must show, for example, that there was no other source of supply for the withheld items and that there were no available adequate remedies at law, namely a breach of contract action. See e.g., Austin Instrument, Inc. v. Loral Corp., 29 N.Y.2d 124, 130–31, 324 N.Y.S.2d 22, 272 N.E.2d 533 (1971); Sosnoff v. Carter, 165 A.D.2d 486, 568 N.Y.S.2d 43, 46 (App.Div., 1st Dep't.1991); U S West Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Tollman, 786 F.Supp. 333, 339–40 (S.D.N.Y.1992); Universal Reinsurance Co., Ltd. v. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., No. 95 Civ. 8436(WHP), 1999 WL 771357, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Sept.29, 1999).

Defendants argue that plaintiffs cannot make a showing of duress because plaintiffs were not required to submit the tax returns and FBARs in order to qualify for the Voluntary Disclosure Program and, in any event, plaintiffs were not eligible. Defendants submit three memoranda issued by the Internal Revenue Service on March 23, 2009 that purportedly constitute the framework of the Voluntary Disclosure Program (De Vos Aff., Ex. 3), as well as a set of Frequently Asked Questions, or FAQs, about the Program, issued by the IRS on May 6, 2009 and updated on June 24, 2009 (De Vos Aff., Ex. 4). Defendants argue that these documents support their contention that plaintiffs need not have submitted the tax returns and were not eligible for the amnesty. Louis Galpern, however, has submitted an affidavit in which he states defendants specifically advised him that he and his wife were eligible to participate in the IRS's Voluntary Disclosure Program and that "Amended Tax Returns and Foreign Bank Account Reports would have to be filed," that "the deadline for taking advantage of the Amnesty Program was September 15, 2009, and that all tax returns and Foreign Bank Account Reports (FBARS) had to be filed by then." (Galpern Aff. ¶¶ 7–8.) Galpern states that De Vos later advised him that the filing date for the Voluntary Disclosure Program had been extended to October 15, 2009. (Galpern Aff. ¶ 37.)

5 Additionally, plaintiffs provide a letter from Lloyd De Vos to Louis Galpern in which De Vos writes, "It will be necessary as we go through this process of addressing this matter to prepare amended Federal and State tax returns." (Galpern Aff., Ex. A, at 3 .) (emphasis added). The letter does not indicate the date by which the tax returns needed to be filed. However, it does specify that "[t]here is time sensitivity in [preparing the amended tax returns and FBARs] because of our concern that your actions appear to be voluntary and that a criminal referral not be issued as a result of disclosures from the Swiss Federal Tax Administration to the Internal Revenue Service that took place last Wednesday, February 16, 2009, in Switzerland." (Id.) Thus, based on the statements allegedly made by De Vos, it would have been reasonable for Galpern to infer that the documents in question were required to be filed prior to the deadline for voluntary disclosure.

Although a claim of duress is evaluated under an objective standard, see Berman v. Parco, No. 96 Civ. 0375, 1996 WL 465749, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 15, 1996); DuFort v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 818 F.Supp. 578, 583 (S.D.N.Y.1993), a court will consider a party's objective choices based on the facts and circumstances as they were reasonably understood by the party at the time of the decision. Thus, where a party to a contract "soundly and reasonably believed [he] faced irreparable harm, with no other feasible remedy than to" agree to a defendant's demand, it could be sufficient to constitute duress. First Nat'l Bank of Cincinnati v. Pepper, 547 F.2d 708, 715 (citing First Nat'l Bank of Cincinnati v. Pepper, 454 F.2d 626 (2d Cir.1972)).

Although the case is not cited by either party, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals considered similar circumstances in First National Bank, 547 F.2d at 715. There, the Second Circuit considered the case of a lawyer, Pepper, who threatened to retain corporate documents unless certain fees were paid. Pepper had helped arrange a deal with the prospective purchaser of a corporation. Pepper, however, threatened that he would not turn over corporate papers and stock certificates that were required for the deal to close unless he was paid fees in the amount of $100,000.00. Id. at 713. The court found, first, that Pepper was entitled to the payment of some fees. Id. at 713–14. However, the court found that the claim for duress could proceed because the particular demand at issue was excessive. Id. at 714–15.

The court next turned to the question of whether shareholders, who had agreed to a settlement with Pepper so as to consummate the sale, had "no reasonable alternative" to settling. Id. at 715. The court found that the buyer might have temporarily delayed the closing, but that even under that circumstance, the shareholders had to be certain they could deliver in a timely fashion. Id. To deliver on the closing, Pepper's availability was essential. Id. However, Pepper's own representative stated that Pepper was about to leave on vacation, and that Pepper usually took a month or two off and traveled abroad. Id. Pepper later claimed that he in fact had no intention to engage in international travel during the relevant period. Id. at 715. The court found, however, that the shareholders were entitled to rely on the statements of Pepper's representative. Id. Thus the question was not whether Pepper would in fact have been available, but whether the shareholders could reasonably believe, based on the representations made, that Pepper may not be available. Id.

6 Here, likewise, defendants argue that plaintiffs were in fact under no pressure to file the amended tax returns and FBARs, as they were not required to file the documents and, in any event, were not even eligible for the voluntary disclosure program. But under the circumstances, the Galperns were entitled to rely on the representations of their attorney, who appears to have at least strongly implied that the documents must be filed and that the Galperns were required to do so by October 14, 2009, or else face potential financial and criminal liability.

Defendants also contest plaintiffs' characterization of the nature of their representation, arguing that Galpern's assertion that he entered into the Retainer Agreement with defendants "for the purpose of taking whatever steps were necessary to meet all the terms and conditions of the Amnesty Program" (Galpern Aff. ¶ 6.) is false. Defendants argue that plaintiffs could not have hired them for their assistance in participating in the Voluntary Disclosure Program because the Voluntary Disclosure Program for UBS AG accountholders was not introduced until March 23, 2009. However, the documents do indicate that defendants were hired to assist plaintiffs with some form of voluntary disclosure. Indeed, a letter from Lloyd De Vos to Louis Galpern, dated February 23, 2009, before the Voluntary Disclosure Program was allegedly announced, discusses the possibility of negotiated settlement with the IRS and that it was important that the Galperns' actions "appear to be voluntary". (See Galpern Aff., Ex. A, at 2–3.)

Moreover, defendants' invoices indicate that De Vos was in fact working on tasks related to voluntary disclosure. The invoices state that on February 25, 2009, for example, the defendants made "multiple telephone calls with IRS to establish voluntary disclosure procedures." (Pl.Aff., Ex. A.) Another invoice describes some of the defendants' activities on March 4, 2009 as follows: "E-mails to and from Urs [sic] regarding identification of documents turned over by UBS to IRS; Review Amnesty proposals." (Pl. Affirmation Exhibit B.) On March 5, 2009, the invoices list: "E-mail from and to Urs [sic] regarding confirmation of handover of files by UBS to IRS." (Id.) Even if defendants were not hired for the express purpose of complying with the specific Voluntary Disclosure Program allegedly announced in March 2009, that does not negate the assertions made in Galpern's affidavit that Galpern had multiple conversations with De Vos subsequent to the announcement in which he alleges that he expressed concern that the returns were not ready on a timely basis, but was assured that the IRS had extended the filing due date for the Voluntary Disclosure Program to October 15, 2009 (Galpern Aff. ¶ 37), and that he was advised that on October 14, 2009 he could pick up the tax returns and FBARs for timely filing in order to comply with Program (Galpern Aff. ¶ 42).

Defendants next argue that any predicament plaintiffs found themselves in as a result of defendants' decision to withhold the tax returns and FBARs was the result of the plaintiffs' own conduct, and therefore cannot make out a claim of duress. "Mere hard bargaining positions, if lawful, and the press of financial circumstances not caused by defendant, will not be deemed duress. The alleged duress must be proven to have been the result of defendant's conduct and not of plaintiff's own necessities." U.S. West, 786 F.Supp. at 340. However, this is not a case of mere hard bargaining. Although it is true that plaintiffs were potentially subject to criminal prosecution because they allegedly evaded United States taxes, it was the defendants' conduct in withholding the tax returns and FBARs that caused the immediate crisis.

7 Finally, defendants argue in their reply brief that plaintiffs cannot maintain a claim of duress because plaintiffs in fact negotiated with defendants. Galpern attests that he left defendants' office when first asked to pay more money and later came back to the office, at which point the parties agreed to a reduced fee demand of $50,000.00. (Galpern Aff. ¶¶ 44, 47, 50.) However, defendants have cited no case law standing for the proposition that a party subject to duress cannot have conducted any negotiations. Nor have defendants cited case law that suggests that there can be no claim for duress where a party leaves a negotiation and subsequently returns.

Certainly, the fact that a party participates in negotiations can be evidence that their free will was not overcome. See, e.g., Duane Morris LLP v. Astor Holdings Inc., 61 A.D.3d 418, 877 N.Y.S.2d 250 (App. Div., 1 st Dep't 2009) (finding client's free will was not overborn where client admitted participating in significant negotiations with attorney over legal fees and was represented by independent counsel). Courts have found, however, that parties that agree to a settlement of disputed claims may be subject to duress. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank, 547 F.2d at 715. Defendants have presented no evidence regarding the contents or timing of any such negotiations except that the parties eventually agreed to a settlement sometime on the same day that the plaintiffs made their demand. On the current record, the Court finds that there are disputed issues of material fact and accordingly will not grant summary judgment.

Although the issue was not raised by the parties, the Court notes here that under the theory of duress, a contract is voidable, not void. Universal, 1999 WL 771357, at *10 (citing Indus. Recycling Sys., Inc. v. Ahneman Assoc., P.C., 892 F.Supp. 547, 550 (S.D.N.Y.1995). "It is well-settled that 'one who would repudiate a contract procured by duress, must act promptly, or will be deemed to have elected to affirm it.' " Indus. Recycling Systems, 892 F.Supp. at 551 (quoting Fayard v. Henry Holt & Co., 726 F.Supp. 438, 447 (S.D.N.Y.1989)). The Court must determine "whether the party claiming duress acted reasonably under the circumstances in asserting the claim." U.S. West, 786 F.Supp. at 340. "The burden on a party seeking to avoid contractual obligations on the grounds of economic duress 'increases proportionately with the delay in initiating suit or otherwise repudiating the contract in question, since it is well established under New York law that a party asserting duress must do so promptly .' " VKK Corp. v. National Football League, 244 F.3d 114, 123 (2d Cir.2001) (quoting Int'l Halliwell Mines, Ltd. v. Cont'l Copper and Steel Indus., Inc., 544 F.2d 105, 108 (2d Cir.1976)).

Here, no claim of duress was made until the amended complaint was filed in August 2010, a total of ten months after the alleged accord. In Universal Reinsurance, the court found that pleading duress nine months after the agreement was not prompt enough to render the agreement void. Universal, 1999 WL 771357, at *10; see also DiRose v. PK Mgmt. Corp., 691 F.2d 628, 634 (2d Cir.1982) (collecting cases in which delays ranging from six months to two years constituted forfeiture of duress claim). Moreover, the Galperns acknowledge that after the alleged accord, they requested that defendants' perform additional work for them, work for which the defendants were not remunerated. In a December 7, 2009 letter from Lloyd De Vos, submitted by the Galperns, De Vos states that he received a telephone call from the Galperns on November 20, 2009, and that they "promised that we would receive the $53,000 for past services referred to in our letter of November 14, 2009 by wire transfer no later than Tuesday, November 24, 2009." As plaintiffs agreed to pay in November, not just the accord's amount but also the $3,000 for the services rendered in the month following the accord, plaintiffs delay in pleading duress may not be reasonable.

8 Because the parties have not briefed this issue, supplementary briefing is necessary as to whether the Galperns have acted promptly enough to repudiate the accord they claim was procured under duress.

2. Second Cause of Action

Plaintiffs' second cause of action alleges that defendants breached their fiduciary duty by using plaintiffs' confidential foreign bank account information to seize plaintiffs' assets. Plaintiffs further allege that defendants breached their fiduciary duty by bringing a collection action outside of New York. Defendants argue that summary judgment is proper because an attorney may use confidential information obtained during the representation in order to collect a fee and that jurisdiction for the collection action was not limited to New York.

To plead a breach of fiduciary duty, a plaintiff must allege that there was a breach of a duty owed to the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs incurred an injury as a result of the breach. Ulico Cas. Co. v. Wilson, Elser, Moskowitz, Edelman & Dicker, 56 A.D.3d 1, 865 N.Y.S.2d 14 (App. Div., 1 st Dep't.2008) (citing Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood, 60 N.Y.2d 377, 590 (1992)). New York courts recognize the fiduciary nature of the relationship between an attorney and his or her client. Ulico, 865 N.Y.S.2d at 21 ("It is well-settled that the relationship of client and counsel is one of unique fiduciary reliance and that the relationship imposes on the attorney the duty to deal fairly, honestly and with undivided loyalty ... including maintaining confidentiality, avoiding conflicts of interest, operating competently, safeguarding client property and honoring the clients' interests over the lawyer's." (citations omitted)).

One fiduciary duty an attorney owes to his or her client centers upon maintaining the confidentiality of the information obtained during a representation. Under New York Rule of Professional Conduct 1.6, "a lawyer shall not knowingly reveal confidential information, as defined in this Rule, or use such information to the disadvantage of a client or for the advantage of the lawyer or a third person." N.Y. Comp.Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 1200 (2011). However, under Rule 1.6(b)(5)(ii), a lawyer may use the confidential information "to collect a fee." [2] Id.; see also Model Rules of Prof'l Conduct R. 1.6 (2006 ed.).

Courts have held that the duty of confidentiality may be waived in a collection action to the extent that it is "necessary to establish or collect [such fees]," and consequently such action does not constitute a breach of fiduciary duty. See Eckhaus v. Alfa–Laval, Inc., 764 F.Supp. 34, 37 (S.D.N.Y.1991) ("confidences or secrets necessary to establish or collect the lawyer's fee" may be revealed); see also Treasure Lake Assoc. v. Oppenheim, 165

F.3d 15, 1998 WL 7774477, at *2 (2d Cir.1998) ("The defendant [ ] [attorneys] did not have a fiduciary duty to refrain from suing [plaintiff] to recover legal fees after their representation of [plaintiff] had ended.").

9 With respect to plaintiffs' allegations regarding the limit on jurisdiction, plaintiffs argue:

> the written Retainer Agreement never indicated that the Plaintiffs would use information obtained during the attorney/client relationship with the Plaintiffs in breach of their fiduciary duty to institute an action in a foreign jurisdiction with respect to a New York Plaintiff retaining a New York attorney to perform services wholly within the State of New York.

(Pl. Mem 11.) Plaintiffs assert that these actions constitute "a classic example of an attorney using his superior knowledge of the law to the disadvantage of his client." Plaintiffs rely on the following provision from the Retainer Agreement:

> By asking us to perform legal services, you understand that we retain both a charging and a retaining lien under New York law on all matters and files in respect of which we have acted on your behalf for any sums due and owing to us. This lien shall attach to any of your money or property, including but not limited to all records or property in our possession. In the event of our termination or withdrawal, all unpaid fees and disbursement shall immediately become due.

(Am. Compl., Ex. A, at 3.) The plain meaning of that clause, however, in no way limits the jurisdiction in which defendants were permitted to pursue a collection action.

Although an attorney "must shoulder the burden of demonstrating that a fee contract is fair, reasonable, and fully known and understood by the client," Ween v. Dow, 35 A.D.3d 58, 822 N.Y.S.2d 257, 261 (App.Div., 1st Dep't.2006) (citing Jacobson v. Sassower, 66 N.Y.2d 991, 993, 499 N.Y.S.2d 381, 489 N.E.2d 1283 (1985)), the Court is aware of no rule of law, and the parties have cited none, suggesting that an attorney is required to provide notice to a client as to every forum where the attorney might pursue a collection action. See Carey v. Mui–Hin Lau, 140 F.Supp.2d 291, 296 (S.D.N.Y.2001) ("An attorney has the burden of proving that the arrangement for compensation was fair and reasonable and fully comprehended by the client. However, under New York law, a private retainer agreement is viewed as presumptively fair in the absence of fraud, deceit, overreaching, or undue influence.") (citing Cohen v. Ryan, 34 A.D.2d 789, 311 N.Y.S.2d 644, 645 (App.Div., 2d Dep't, 1970)); see also Uy v. Bronx Mun. Hosp. Ctr., 182 F.2d 152 (2d Cir.1999) (internal quotations omitted); Baye v. Grindlinger, 78 A.D.2d 690, 432 N.Y.S.2d 624, 625 (App. Div., 2d Dep't 1980).

If plaintiffs deposited substantial assets in foreign bank accounts, it is not surprising that a creditor would seek to collect on a debt in that forum. Additionally, the mere assertion that certain liens exist under New York law in the Retainer Agreement cannot be transformed into a blanket choice of forum clause in the event of a fee dispute. Even if the quoted language is read to be a choice of law clause selecting New York law, such a clause would not prevent the defendants from filing a collection action in another jurisdiction. Accordingly, summary judgment is granted on the second cause of action.

3. Third Cause of Action

10 In the third cause of action, plaintiffs allege that defendants over-billed for legal fees incurred during the time that the defendants represented the plaintiffs in 2009. "Overbilling and padding of costs can constitute a breach of contract and give rise to a cause of action in favor of a client against an attorney." See O'Connor v. Blodnick, Abramowitz & Blodnick, 295 A.D.2d 586, 744 N.Y.S.2d 205, 206 (App. Div., 2d Dep't 2002) (citing Graphic Offset Co. v. Torre, 78 A.D.2d 788, 433 N.Y.S.2d 13, 14 (App. Div., 1 st Dep't 1980)). Overbilling may also create a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty. See U.S. Ice Cream Corp. v. Bizar, 240 A.D.2d 654, 659 N.Y.S.2d 492, 493–94 (App. Div., 2d Dep't 1997) (finding allegation that attorney charged client fees so excessive that client forced to enter into settlement with opposing party sufficient to raise cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty).

Defendants argue that to state a plausible claim for relief, plaintiffs must allege that they in fact overpaid for the services rendered. But plaintiffs do allege that they paid $56,000.00 to the defendants (Am.Compl.¶¶ 20–21) and that defendants' billing was excessive even with respect to the amount plaintiffs paid. For example, plaintiffs allege that defendants billed for consultations conducted prior to their entering into the Retainer Agreement. (Am.Compl.¶ 62). Plaintiffs attach invoices from DVC corroborating that assertion. (Singer Aff., Exs. A–J). They also allege that work was assigned to Ellenzweig at $300 per hour that the parties had agreed should be assigned to an accountant with a lower hourly rate. (Galpern Aff.; Mem. in Opp. at 12).

The manner in which the defendants assigned work and the diligence with which it was completed are disputed. The plaintiffs' amended complaint and supporting affidavits adequately allege facts that, taken in the light most favorable to them, establish that they overpaid for the services rendered. In the alternative, defendants again argue that plaintiffs' allegations of excessive billing are refuted by the accord allegedly forged on October 14, 2009. However, as stated before, the validity of the accord is contested based on the plaintiffs' claim of duress. Accordingly, the Court will not grant summary judgment on the third case of action at this time.

4. Fourth Cause of Action

The fourth cause of action alleges that defendants made fraudulent statements in pursuing their in rem action before the Swiss court. Defendants argue that summary judgment is proper because plaintiffs failed to plead fraud with particularity. Defendants also contend that the undisputed facts show that the alleged statements were not fraudulent.

As a preliminary matter, the Court has its doubts that plaintiffs in the Galperns' position have a free-standing tort claim for damages against a defendant merely for procuring an allegedly fraudulent default judgment against them. At most, it would seem that plaintiffs may seek to attack the validity of the foreign judgment. See, e.g., Clarkson Co., Ltd. v. Shaheen, 544 F.2d 624, 630–31 (2d Cir.1976). And such a claim would require not simply the “mere assertion of the party that the judgment was erroneous in law or in fact” or “a mere assertion of fraud,” but rather “[c]lear and convincing evidence of fraud.” Id. at 631. The parties have not addressed this issue. In any event, however, plaintiffs fail to state fraud with particularity as required by Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b) and cannot establish the substantive elements of any cause of action for fraud, which thus entitles the defendants to judgment as a matter of law.

A. Particularity

11 Defendants first argue that plaintiffs failed to plead fraud with particularity. “[In] all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity.” Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). Thus, Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b) requires that fraud claims be pleaded with a level of specificity beyond the usual “short and plain statement” standard of Fed.R.Civ.P. 8. A complaint alleging fraud must: “(a) specify the statements that the plaintiff contends were fraudulent; (b) identify the speaker; (c) state where and when the statements were made; and (d) explain why the statements were fraudulent.” See Rombach v. Chang, 355 F.3d 164, 170 (2d Cir.2004) (quoting Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F.3d 1170, 1175 (2d Cir.1993)).

Plaintiffs do not satisfy the second prong.[3] The Second Circuit has held that the complaint must specifically “link[ ] the alleged fraudulent statements to particular [defendants];” thus, asserting in the complaint, as plaintiffs do in this case, that “defendants” made the statements is not sufficient to satisfy Rule 9(b). Mills, 12 F.3d at 1175; DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Industries, Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1249 (2d Cir.1987) (allegations of fraud were insufficient where the complaint did not link any of the defendants to the alleged fraudulent statement). In Mills, the Second Circuit further found that even if the plaintiff alleged that the company, one of the defendants, made the statements, it would not be specific enough to meet the particularity requirement against the company or its directors, the other named defendants. 12 F.3d at 1175 (“The mere fact that the Directors were controlling persons at Polar, [the company], does not link them to the statements; the plaintiffs also had to allege that the Directors personally knew of, or participated in, the fraud.”). Thus, the amended complaint does not properly plead the identity of the speaker in the fraud cause of action.

B. Substantive Elements of Fraud

Even if the complaint is read to allege a particular speaker, defendants argue that summary judgment is proper because the alleged statement was not fraudulent. To plead fraud under New York law, “a party must establish that a material misrepresentation, known to be false, has been made with the intention of inducing its reliance on the misstatement, which caused it to reasonably rely on the misrepresentation, as a result of which it sustained damages." Nigro v. Lee, 63 A.D.3d 1490, 882 N.Y.S.2d 346, 348 (App.Div., 3d Dep't.2009) (citing Cohen v. Colistra, 233 A.D.2d 542, 649 N.Y.S.2d 540 (1996)).

Defendants argue that because plaintiffs agreed on October 14, 2009 to pay the $50,000.00 as part of the alleged accord and DVC subsequently performed services for which they billed $3,000.00, plaintiffs cannot show that a statement that defendants were owed such money was fraudulent. The Court agrees. Although the validity of the accord is now disputed, "a representation based on a good faith misinterpretation of the legal effect of an agreement does not provide a basis for a fraud claim." Allen v. WestPoint–Pepperell, Inc., 945 F.2d 40, 44 (2d Cir.1991) (citing George Backer Mgmt. Corp. v. Acme Quilting Co., 46 N.Y.2d 211, 220, 413 N.Y.S.2d 135, 385 N.E.2d 1062 (1978)).

12 Plaintiffs allege in a conclusory fashion that defendants knew or should have known that their statement to the Swiss court was false; however, they acknowledge that they in fact agreed to pay the defendants that sum of money. There are no factual allegations supporting the claim that the defendants knowingly misrepresented the validity of the accord. Moreover, when a contract or agreement is made under economic duress it is voidable, not void ab initio. Universal, 1999 WL 771357, at *10 (citing Indus,, 892 F.Supp. at 550). Plaintiffs did not file this action until March 2010 and did not claim duress until August 2010. There is no evidence in the record that they disputed the validity of the accord prior to that point. Accordingly, the Court finds that defendants' alleged statement to the Swiss court cannot have constituted a knowing misrepresentation at the time it was made. It therefore could not, as a matter of law, be fraud.

II. Summary Judgment as to Defendants' Counterclaim and Afirmative Defenses

Plaintiffs move for summary judgment as to defendants' counter-claim and defendants' second, third, fourth, and seventh affirmative defenses. Defendants cross-move for summary judgment with respect to the counter-claim.

1. Counterclaim

Counterclaim-plaintiffs (Lloyd De Vos and De Vos & Co.) and counterclaim-defendants (the Galperns) both move for summary judgment as to the counterclaim, which alleges that De Vos & Co. are to be reimbursed for legal fees for the present action in accordance with the Retainer Agreement. The relevant portion of the Retainer Agreement reads:

> Should we be brought into any legal action involving you or any related company either as a witness or as a party, you agree to reimburse us for our fees and disbursements for the time and expenses we are required to expend or deem necessary to expend in connection with that matter as if these services were provided to you.

Counterclaim-plaintiffs argue that summary judgment is proper because of the clear import of this provision and because the provision was not modified by the October 14, 2009 accord. Counterclaim-defendants submit that summary judgment in their favor is proper because the provision is invalid under New York law.

In Ween v. Dow, 822 N.Y.S.2d 261 (App. Div., 1st Dep't 2006), the court held that a reimbursement provision in a retainer agreement between an attorney and his client in which the attorney would be reimbursed for fees incurred in a collection action brought against the client was invalid. Id. at 261–262. The court began by explaining that "with regard to attorney fee arrangements, the courts, as a matter of public policy, give particular scrutiny to the reasonableness of the fee arrangements between attorneys and clients pursuant to their interest in, and statutory power to, regulate the practice of law." Id. at 261. In upholding this policy, the court examined the provision at issue and determined that it was unlawful for two reasons. Id. at 261–262. First, it lacked mutuality because the clients were not afforded the same right to reimbursement as the attorneys if they brought an action against the attorney.[4] Id. Second, "[a]side from its lack of mutuality, the clause, even if not so designed, has the distinct potential for silencing a client's complaint about fees for fear of retaliation for the nonpayment of even unreasonable fees." Id. Upholding Ween as controlling in federal court, the Southern District of New York stated, "Ween [i]s a per se bar on nonreciprocal fee provisions." In re Ernst, 382 B.R. 194, 198 (S.D.N.Y.2008).

13 Counterclaim-plaintiffs argue that Ween' s holding is limited to reimbursement agreements in which the attorney grants himself the right to reimbursement in actions that the attorney brings himself, whereas the provision at issue here affords the attorney reimbursement only in those actions brought by the client or third parties in which the attorney becomes involved. However, the provision nevertheless lacks mutuality by granting only the attorney the right to be reimbursed and by not affording the client the same right should the client be brought into a subsequent action and prevail. Second, although it is true that "fear of retaliation for the nonpayment of even unreasonable fees" is not implicated by this particular provision, other deterrent effects are.[5] Indeed, for all it appears, the provision at issue in this case requires that a client pay a legal fee even if the client wins. The provision thus deters even perfectly meritorious actions by offsetting the potential recovery by the costs of litigation.

Accordingly, the reimbursement provision of the Retainer Agreement is invalid as applied in this action.[6] The Court grants summary judgment for counterclaim-defendants as to the counterclaim.

2. Second Affirmative Defense

Plaintiffs also move for summary judgment as to several of defendants' affirmative defenses. The second affirmative defense alleges that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim against DVC. Since the first and third causes of action state a claim for which relief may be granted, summary judgment is entered as to the second affirmative defense with respect to those causes of action.

3. Third Affirmative Defense

The third affirmative defense alleges that the plaintiffs failed to state a claim against De Vos as an individual. De Vos moved for summary judgment on this defense and the Galperns moved for summary judgment against it. De Vos is not a party to the retainer agreement. Plaintiffs argue that under N.Y. LLC Law § 1205, since De Vos is a principal attorney, manager, shareholder and partner of DVC, he is "personally and fully liable and accountable for any negligent or wrongful acts or misconduct committed by him" while rendering professional services on behalf of the professional limited liability company ("PLLC").

Although the statute does hold shareholders or officers personally liable for certain acts, the provision is "simply a reflection of the common law rule that a shareholder is liable for those torts of the corporation in which he is a participant." We're Assocs. Co. v. Cohen, Stracher & Bloom, P.C., 103 A.D.2d 130, 132–36, 478 N.Y.S.2d 670 (App. Div., 2d Dep't 1984). "[I]ndividual defendants are not liable for a breach of agreement made with the Corporation ....“ Tannenbaum v. Rechenbaum & Silberstein, P.C., 226 A.D.2d 700, 642 N.Y.S.2d 43, 44 (App.Div.1996); see also See San Diego Cty. Employees Retirement Ass'n v. Mauonis, 749 F.Supp.2d 104, 128 (S.D.N.Y.2010) ("Under New York law, an individual who signs a contract on behalf of a corporation, indicates her representative capacity on the contract, and exhibits no intention to assume personal liability for the corporation's breaches is not subject to personal liability.") (quoting Hudson Venture Partners, LP v. Patriot Aviation Group, Inc., 1999 WL 76803, at *6 (S.D.N.Y.1999)). The Galperns therefore may not hold Lloyd De Vos personally liable for their first claim, which is based on breach of contract. The first cause of action as asserted against Lloyd De Vos is dismissed.

14 The Galperns' other remaining claim is for over-billing. As noted above, over-billing claims have been held to sound in both breach of contract, O'Connor v. Blodnick, Abramowitz & Blodnick, 295 A.D.2d 586, 744 N.Y.S.2d 205, 206 (App. Div., 2d Dep't 2002), and breach of fiduciary duty, See U.S. Ice Cream Corp. v. Bizar, 240 A.D.2d 654, 659 N.Y.S.2d 492, 493–94 (App. Div., 2d Dep't 1997). Under New York law, breach of fiduciary duty is a tort. Marino v. Grupo Mundial Tenedora, S.A., 2011 WL 1142887, *4 (S.D.N.Y.2011). The parties have not briefed whether § 1205 applies to over-billing claims sounding in breach of fiduciary duty. Accordingly, the Court does not think it appropriate to dismiss the third cause of action against Lloyd De Vos at this time.

4. Fourth Affirmative Defense

Defendants' fourth affirmative defense argues that the plaintiffs failed to plead fraud with particularity. Pursuant to the analysis supra Section I.4 regarding the fourth cause of action, summary judgment for plaintiffs is denied.

5. Seventh Affirmative Defense

Defendants' seventh affirmative defense asserts that plaintiffs' claims are barred by the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel due to the judgment rendered in Switzerland. Res judicata, or claim preclusion, bars relitigation of a claim "where the earlier decision was a final judgment on the merits rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, in a case involving the same parties or their privies, where the same cause of action is asserted in the later litigation." Amalgamated Sugar Co. v. NL Industries, Inc., 825 F.2d 634, 639 (2d Cir.1987) (citing In re Teltronics Services, Inc., 762 F.2d 185, 190 (2d Cir.1985)). Collateral estoppel bars litigants from relitigating any fact or issue that has been litigated and necessarily decided in a prior proceeding that produced a final judgment on the merits. See Bank of New York v. First Millenium, Inc., 607 F.3d 905, 918 (2d Cir.2010); Kaufman v. Eli Lilly & Co., 65 N.Y.2d 449, 455, 492 N.Y.S.2d 584, 482 N.E.2d 63 (1985). The party seeking the benefit of collateral estoppel with respect to an issue must demonstrate that the issue decided in the prior proceeding is identical to the issue in the subsequent action, but the party resisting the application of collateral estoppel "has the burden of establishing the absence of a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue." Evans v. Ottimo, 469 F.3d 278, 281–82 (2d Cir.2006) (internal quotation marks omitted).

The plaintiffs' motion is denied because this issue has not been sufficiently briefed for the Court to make a reasoned judgment. Here, the plaintiffs assert only that the Swiss court lacked jurisdiction based on the purported forum selection clause in the Retainer Agreement. As this Court decided above, however, the Retainer Agreement does not limit the forums in which either party may bring an action against the other. Whether the Swiss in rem default judgment has preclusive effect in this action is a complex legal question. Because the briefing on this issue is so scant, and because the Court has so few of the facts underlying the Swiss proceeding before it, the Court will not grant summary judgment as to seventh affirmative defense at this time.

III. Jury Demand

15 Defendants move to strike plaintiffs' jury demand of the amended complaint as untimely under Fed.R.Civ.P. 38(b). Plaintiffs submit that their amended complaint presented two new causes of action, changed the issues, and therefore revived their right to demand a jury.

Under Rule 38(b), a party may demand a jury "no later than 14 days after the last pleading directed to the issue is served." Id. "[F]ailure to demand a jury trial within the period designated by Rule 38(b) constitutes a waiver of that right as to all issues raised in the complaint." Lanza v. Drexel & Co., 479 F.2d 1277, 1310 (2d Cir.1973) (en banc). In some instances, however, an amended pleading may revive the right to demand a jury. "Where ... an amended pleading covers the same 'general area of dispute' as was covered in the original pleading, the filing of an amended complaint does not revive the right to demand a jury." Sea Carriers Corp. v. Empire Programs, Inc., 2007 WL 221521, at *1 (S.D.N.Y.2007) (citing Tuff–N–Rumble Mgmt., Inc. v. Sugarhill Music Publ'g, Inc., 75 F.Supp.2d 242, 245 (S.D.N.Y.1999)).

By contrast, an amended complaint may revive the right to a jury trial if it presents new "factual issues ... [not] fully discussed in the original pleadings," or "new legal theories [not] based on facts previously pleaded." Swan Brewery Co. Ltd. v. U.S. Trust Co. of N.Y., 143 F.R.D. 40, 44 (S.D.N.Y.1992) (citing Lanza, 479 F.2d at 1310; Rosen v. Dick, 639 F.2d 82, 94–96 (2d Cir.1980); Royal Am. Mgrs., Inc. v. IRC Holding Corp., 885 F.2d 1011, 1018 (2d Cir.1989). Here, each of the new causes of action arises out of the same facts and circumstances, and to the extent new legal theories are asserted, they arises out of those same facts. Accordingly, the jury demand is struck.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, the Court denies summary judgment for De Vos & Co. with respect to the first and third causes of action; grants summary judgment in favor of De Vos & Co. and Lloyd De Vos with respect to the second and fourth causes of action; grants summary judgment in favor of Lloyd De Vos individually with respect to the first cause of action; denies summary judgment for Lloyd De Vos with respect to the third cause of action; grants summary judgment in favor of the Galperns with respect to the counter-claim; grants summary judgment on the second affirmative defense as it applies to the first and third causes of action; and strikes the Galperns' jury demand.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2011 WL 4597491

Footnotes

[1] Lloyd De Vos also asserts that all claims against him as an individual must be dismissed. The Court agrees. This issue is discussed infra Section II.3.

[2] Plaintiffs assert that a portion of Rule 1.6 was repealed. That portion has no relevance to this case.

[3] Defendants also argue that plaintiffs do not satisfy the requirements of the first and third prongs. The Court disagrees. Under Rule 9(b), "the 'mere gist' of the nature of the fraudulent statements is insufficient;" the complaint should allege "the precise nature of the statements." Brown v. Royal Caribbean Cruises, Ltd., 2000 WL 34449703, at *4–5 (S.D.N.Y.2000). However, quoting the exact words of the alleged statements is unnecessary. Giuliano v. Everything Yogurt, Inc., 819 F.Supp. 240, 244 (E.D.N.Y.1993). Here, the amended complaint alleges the specific amount of money the defendants stated was owed to them by the plaintiffs to the Swiss court and the specific amount of money that was seized from their bank account as a result of the default judgment.

Plaintiffs also satisfy the third prong by adequately pleading when the statements were made. In Shaw v. Shaw, the Southern District found that a complaint alleging that statements were made "[i]n or around 1993," however "vague," was sufficient to satisfy the "when" requirement dictated by the Second Circuit. 356 F.Supp.2d 383, 386 (S.D.N.Y.2005). Here, the plaintiffs allege that the statements were made "on or about December 30, 2009 ."

[4] The Court does not consider the validity of the clause in a situation where the attorney is sued by a third-party.

[5] Of course, that fear is implicated by the following provision in the retainer agreement, which is nearly identical to that rejected in Ween.

[6] The Court is not entirely convinced that, despite its capacious language, this provision was meant to apply at all to fee disputes between clients and attorneys. Accordingly, the Court reiterates that its holding is limited to De Vos's attempt to invoke the provision in this particular action.

End of Document

505 F.2d 1
United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit.

FATTORE COMPANY, INC., Plaintiff-Appellee,
v.
METROPOLITAN SEWERAGE COMMISSION OF the COUNTY OF MILWAUKEE, Defendant-Appellant.

Nos. 73-1660 and 73-1661.
|
Argued May 24, 1974.
|
Decided Oct. 25, 1974.

Synopsis

Contractor brought action to recover damages under a changed condition and equitable adjustment provision of contract to construct sewer tunnel for municipal government. After remand, 454 F.2d 537, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, Myron L. Gordon, J., found that contractor was entitled to an equitable adjustment of $1,500,000 and was entitled to prejudgment interest, and both contractor and defendant sewerage commission appealed. The Court of Appeals, Laramore, Senior Judge, held that contractor was not required, in order to recover, to list with mathematical precision the amount of every item of damage flowing from the wrong, that evidence supported finding that contractor was entitled to an equitable adjustment of $1,500,000, that resolving of damage issue on basis of jury verdict with regard to monetary loss suffered by contractor as direct result of commission's wrong was proper, that profit was payable on specific cost items involved and that prejudgment interest could be awarded as of contract's final payment date.

Affirmed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

2 Ewald L. Moerke, Jr., Stewart G. Honeck, Milwaukee, Wis., for Metropolitan Sewerage Comm.

Elwin J. Zarwell, Richard W. Cutler, peter W. Bunde and Ronald L. Wallenfang, Milwaukee, Wis., for Fattore Co.

Before PELL and STEVENS, Circuit Judges, and LARAMORE, Senior Judge.[*]

Opinion

LARAMORE, Senior Judge.

This case is before the court on appeal by each party; both the plaintiff and defendant requesting review of the District Court's findings regarding damages due and the defendant also requesting review of a finding favoring the payment of prejudgment interest.[1]

3 The main issues in this case are the amount of damages under a changed condition and equitable adjustment provision of a municipal government construction contract and prejudgment interest on such a claim. The District Court, after carefully considering the evidence in its totality, found plaintiff entitled to a 'jury verdict' equitable adjustment of $1,500,000. The finding was based on this court's reasoning in the first appeal that a broad exculpatory clause should not operate to render another clause meaningless, freeing defendant from its liability.[2] The judgment included superintendence, overhead expense, home office expense, profit and any and all other items aside from interest. Prejudgment interest was awarded at the rate of five per cent per annum from and after June 18, 1964,[3] the date all plaintiff's accounting data necessary to compute the equitable adjustment under the changed conditions clause was complete and the retained percentage was paid.

[1] Plaintiff presented its damages,[4] in a very detailed accounting, as the difference between the actual costs[5] incurred, adjusted downward for events unrelated[6] to the changed condition, and its bid.[7] Plaintiff argues its method for computing damages is the most reliable and is clearly supported by the evidence; therefore, the 'jury' type verdict awarded is inappropriate, surpassed by plaintiff's proof. In effect, plaintiff contends that it used reasonable costs, not total costs, because it only used items affected by the changed conditions. Accordingly, the increase in cost was directly related to the increase in time required to complete the contract due to the changed condition.[8] Plaintiff also contends that it is correct and has always been appropriate for an equitable adjustment to include a profit[9] because it would be 'inequitable' for one to do two extra years work under the circumstances involved in this case, with a substantial increase in investment, for no additional return.

Defendant contends plaintiff, in effect, used the normally unacceptable total cost method of computing damages and that the total cost method is not acceptable because here there is an alternative in reasonable costs which the plaintiff failed to prove. Further, there is no right to recover the costs unreasonably incurred, when the changed geological conditions were discovered, by abandoning the shield technique for hand mining.[10] Accordingly, failure to 4 use the proper proof of damages, reasonable costs, requires dismissal of the case. It is further alleged that even if the equitable adjustment were applicable, it would be error to include profit because such an adjustment should only permit the contractor to break even on extra costs due to changed conditions. The defendant also asserts award of prejudgment interest is contrary to law because there is a genuine dispute regarding the amount due; it cannot be determined with the reasonable certainty necessary to bring it within the definition of liquidable or liquidated damages entitling it to an award of prejudgment interest.

The defendant's argument aimed at barring correction of a wrong for failure of proof, is untenable based on the principle that a judicially recognized wrong is not a bar to recovery of damages that would be difficult to establish with precision. Given the plaintiff's adequate proof, including the correlation between the increase in time and expense due to the changed condition, it would be unjust to only permit recovery for a recognized wrong by holding plaintiff to a near impossible standard of requiring him to list with mathematical precision the amount of every item of damage flowing from that wrong. See also, Dale Construction Co. v. United States, 161 Ct.Cl. 825 (1963); Luria Bros. & Co. v. United States, 369 F.2d 701, 712-713, 177 Ct.Cl. 676, 695-696 (1966); Adams v. United States, 358 F.2d 986, 993, 175 Ct.Cl. 288, 299 (1966); Specialty Assembling & Packing Co. v. United States, 355 F.2d 554, 572-573, 174 Ct.Cl. 153, 184 (1966).
[2] It is well settled that the one liable for established and proven harm shall not escape monetary responsibility because the one harmed failed to prove his damages with mathematical precision. This view is in consonance with the Supreme Court case, Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, at 562-563, 51 S.Ct. 248 at 250, 75 L.Ed. 544 (1931), which stated:

* * * The rule which precludes the recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong, not to those damages which are definitely attributable to the wrong and only uncertain in respect of their amount. * * * it will be enough if the evidence shows the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference, although the result be only approximate.

[3] In addition, recognition of defendant's argument concerning damages would have the effect of negating both the first decision in this case, Fattore Co. v. Metropolitan Sewerage Commission of Milwaukee, supra, which found plaintiff was entitled to relief, and the policy considerations upon which the changed conditions and equitable adjustment provisions are based. The purposes for institution and utilization of these two provisions includes eliminating the contractor's need for placing large contingencies and unknown costs into his pricing for the great risk he may be taking by encountering adverse subsurface conditions, Kaiser Industries Corporation v. United States, 340 F.2d 322, 169 Ct.Cl. 310 (1965), and providing administrative remedies involving negotiation for what otherwise would amount to a breach of contract requiring litigation for resolution.[11] The bidder will neither enjoy windfalls nor suffer 5 disaster. The municipal government benefits or pays according to the occurrence of adverse conditions. Foster Construction C.A. & Williams Bros. Co. v. United States, 435 F.2d 873, 887, 193 Ct.Cl. 587, 614 (1970). The contract solicitation procedure followed by defendant in this case is the common one for reducing costs by making the borings and providing the information to the bidders. In such a situation '* * * it is settled that the (municipal) government is deemed to warrant the adequacy of its plans and specifications to the extent that compliance therewith will result in satisfactory performance.' Jefferson Construction Company v. United States, 392 F.2d 1006, 1011, 183 Ct.Cl. 720, 727 (1968).

Foster Construction C.A. & Williams Bros. Co., supra, 435 F.2d at 875, held:

* * * all that is required is that there be enough of an indication on the face of the contract documents for a bidder reasonably not to expect 'subsurface or latent physical conditions at the site differing materially from those indicated in this contract.'[12]

[4] [5] Equally settled is the '* * * axiom that the parties may, by virtue of their contract, convert into a dispute arising under the contract a claim which is the result of deficient plans or specifications and, in the absence of an agreement, would be a sufficient predicate for an action based on a breach of the (municipal) government's implied warranty. Additional compensation which may be awarded for the damages incurred as a result of the deficient plans is limited by that conversion to the specific equitable adjustment provided for in the contract.' (Jefferson Construction Co. v. United States, supra, 392 F.2d at 1011.) Accordingly, the parties here are bound by their contract and are, therefore, protected and limited to the amount of damages permitted through the operation of the equitable adjustment in that contract.

[6] Given the inherently imprecise nature of an equitable adjustment, the existence of sufficient evidence for a court to come to a fair and reasonable conclusion, and the quantum issue presented in this case, the District Court's 'jury verdict' must stand.

'Jury verdicts' have always been supported if there was clear proof that the contractor was injured and there was no more reliable method for computing damages provided that the evidence adduced was sufficient to enable a court or jury to make a fair and reasonable approximation. Specialty Assembling & Packing Co. v. United States, supra; see, River Construction Corp. v. United States, 159 Ct.Cl. 254, 271 (1962); Western Contracting Corp. v. United States, 144 Ct.Cl. 318, 320, 333-336 (1958); Brand Investment Co. v. United States, 58 F.Supp. 749, 751, 102 Ct.Cl. 40, 45 (1944), cert. denied, 324 U.S. 850, 65 S.Ct. 853, 89 L.Ed. 1410 (1945).

The record in this case is replete with evidence upon which a jury or court could fairly and reasonably determine the approximate amount of damages.

[7] Plaintiff, by selecting and compiling all the costs of certain items that directly related to the changed condition, has rhetorically labeled its cost presentation as reasonable because this selective process does not include 'all' of the costs. However, the 'total cost' concept, even when applied to selective items and rhetorically labeled 'reasonable' based on selectivity of items, cannot be accepted. See, F. H. McGraw & Co. v. United States, 130 F.Supp. 394, 131 Ct.Cl. 501 (1955) and 6 Oliver-Finnie Co. v. United States, 279 F.2d 498, 150 Ct.Cl. 189 (1960) for complete rejection of the total cost concept.

Total costs cannot be generally accepted as the end for determining an equitable adjustment in a fixed-price contract because it would undermine the prospective costing approach thus negating the contract's basic incentive character. [13]

F. H. McGraw & Co. v. United States, supra, 130 F.Supp. at 400, held:

This method of proving damage is by no means satisfactory, because, among other things, it assumes plaintiff's costs were reasonable and that plaintiff was not responsible for any increase in cost, and because it assumes plaintiff's bid was accurately computed, which is not always the case by any means.

[8] A pure total cost method, even when applied to selective items, would allow for correction of bidding errors and reward possible inefficiency. [14] However, the defendant failed to offer an alternative for measuring damages in this case. [15] In this absence of a more reliable method for computing damages, justice, in this case, could only be done by resorting to the jury type verdict. [16] Western Construction Corp. v. United States, supra; Dale Construction Co. v. United States, 168 Ct.Cl. 692, 729 (1964); Houston Ready-Cut House Co. v. United States, 96 F.Supp. 629, 119 Ct.Cl. 120 (1951); Riess & Weinsier, Inc. v. United States, 116 F.Supp. 562, 126 Ct.Cl. 713 (1953).

The District Court addressed itself to the heart of the matter, the monetary loss suffered by the contractor as the direct result of the Commission's wrong, and in so doing avoided the danger of accepting the total costs as the true loss following from the wrong. Although it did not fully articulate its computations, the District Court's effort represents what we find to be its best judgment on the record before it, and this is all that the parties have a right to expect. Specialty Assembling & Packing Co. v. United States, supra.

[9] The short answer on the issue of including profit in the equitable adjustment is that profit is allowed on contract adjustments involving changed conditions and equitable adjustments. When the dispute arises under an equitable adjustment clause and is confined to that clause, profit is payable on the specific cost items involved. United States v. Callahan Walker Construction Co., 317 U.S. 56, 61, 63

S.Ct. 113, 87 L.Ed. 49 (1942); Bruce Construction Corp. v. United States, 324 F.2d 516, 163 Ct.Cl. 97 (1963).

Also, in General Builders Supply Co. v. United States, 409 F.2d 246, 249, 187 Ct.Cl. 477, 485 (1969), it was held that an equitable adjustment can cover an allowance for a profit on work actually done but does not encompass unearned or anticipated profits.

[10] The award of prejudgment interest in this case is just and proper. The major principles and guidelines for making such an award in Wisconsin were well stated in Laycock v. Parker, 103 Wis. 161, 79 N.W. 327, 335 (1899):

* * * The true principle, which is based on the sense of justice in the 7 business community and on our statute, is that he who retains money which he ought to pay to another should be charged interest upon it. The difficulty is that it cannot well be said one ought to pay money, unless he can ascertain how much he ought to pay with reasonable exactness. Mere difference of opinion as to amount is, however, no more a reason to excuse him from interest than difference of opinion, whether he legally ought to pay at all, which has never been held an excuse. * * * So, if there be a reasonably certain standard of measurement by the correct application of which one can ascertain the amount he owes, he should equally be held responsible for making such application correctly and liable for interest if he does not.

The ability to ascertain the amount payable with reasonable certainty is of primary importance if there is to be a recognized liquidable sum upon which prejudgment interest can be computed. Well kept cost figures existed in this case for all contract input, including those relating to the changed conditions, as of June 18, 1964. Defendant was free to inspect these records and the District Court found them generally acceptable. It also found that plaintiff did not pad the job with unreasonable costs and that the costs incurred correlated in a general way with the changed conditions.[17] Under these circumstances, one can conclude that at a minimum, the defendant, had it chosen to inquire, could have determined at least the upper limit of its liability with reasonable certainty.[18] If defendant had acted upon the possibilities presented herein, a fixed and determinate amount could have been tendered[19] and interest stopped. The amount of the claim was known or readily determinable. Valiga v. National Foods Co., 58 Wis.2d 232, 254, 206 N.W.2d 377, 389 (1973).

Defendant argues a 'genuine dispute' regarding the amount due eliminates reasonable certainty, thus thwarting payment of prejudgment interest. Congress Bar & Restaurant, Inc. v. Transamerica Insurance Co., 42 Wis.2d 56, 165 N.W.2d 409. By accepting this argument, we are faced with the danger of encouraging defendant to understate liability on clearly due and payable claims in order to create bargaining leverage as to such claims.[20] Dahl v. Housing Authority of City of Madison, 54 Wis.2d 22, 194 N.W.2d 618. If the requirement is a mere fact of disagreement concerning the amount due, this sham type operation of putting the amount into dispute would eliminate a right to interest on items clearly established, obviously due and clearly payable without resorting to litigation. Dahl v. Housing Authority of City of Madison, supra; Laycock v. Parker, supra.

As the exculpatory clauses have not and should not be interpreted to restrict the application of the changed conditions clause, Fattore Co. v. Metropolitan Sewerage Commission of Milwaukee, supra, so the raising of a dispute where no 'genuine' dispute exists should not deny one the interest due him. We find the District Court was correct in determining the sum liquidable or liquidated and subject to prejudgment interest. A liquidable claim should draw interest from the date payment was due, and at the time all the accounting data was 8 available to make the determination. In this case the final payment date was June 18, 1964,[21] not the date first demand was made.

Accordingly, the judgment of the District Court is

Affirmed.

All Citations

505 F.2d 1

Footnotes

* Senior Judge Don N. Laramore of the United States Court of Claims is sitting by designation.

[1] This case is the second part of a bifurcated trial that originated, based on diversity of citizenship, in United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin. The issues developed from a dispute regarding a 'changed' condition and liability under the 'changed' conditions and equitable adjustment provisions of a government contract involving the construction of a sewer tunnel for the defendant. On the merits, the District Court, theorizing that a broad exculpatory clause dominated, found the defendant free from liability under the changed conditions clause. On the subsequent appeal the issues were divided into the questions of liability and amount. This court reversed and remanded to the District Court for a determination of the amount of the equitable adjustment. See, Fattore Co. v. Metropolitan Sewerage Commission of Milwaukee, 454 F.2d 537 (7 Cir. 1971).

The facts considered relevant to the issues are stated in the opinion. For a more detailed discussion of the facts germane to liability and remand on damages see Fattore Co., id.

[2] 'Moreover, in the presence of a Changed Conditions' clause such as Paragraph 20, broad exculpatory clauses do not preclude the contractor-bidder from relying upon the existence of subsurface conditions of the nature indicated by the contract specification.' Id., at 542. See also, Woodcrest Construction Co. v. United States, 408 F.2d 406, 410, 187 Ct.Cl. 249 (1969) and cases cited therein.

[3] At the first trial defendant argued as an affirmative defense that final payment, precluding plaintiff's claim for equitable adjustment, occurred on June 18, 1964. Plaintiff, while accepting the retained percentage unequivocally reserved the right to pursue its equitable adjustment due to the 'changed condition.' The District Court found for the defendant and this court reversed, based on a determination of objective factors considered in the light of attending circumstances, that such was not the parties' intentions. Fattore Co. v. Metropolitan Sewerage Commission of Milwaukee, supra.

[4] $2,015,491.52.

[5] $4,972,170.00.

[6] As an example, a manhole collapse occurred; it delayed mining work approximately eight days.

[7] $2,946,822.00.

[8] The mining portion of the job was actually completed in 121 weeks, rather than the approximated 40 weeks anticipated mining time on which the bid was based. There was a direct correlation between the increase in expenses and the increase in time to finish the job.

[9] Bennett v. United States, 371 F.2d 859, 178 Ct.Cl. 61 (1967); General Builders Supply Co. v. United States, 409 F.2d 246, 187 Ct.Cl. 477 (1969).

[10] This contention was clearly rejected in this court's first opinion regarding liability: 'However, the actual underground conditions encountered in the performance of the work differed materially from those indicated by the defendant's test borings. Solid rock and mixed face were encountered at the sewer grade throughout the first 496 feet of the tunnel. Therefore, the shield method of tunneling and constructing the concrete sewer had to be abandoned, and once abandoned, it is impossible to again begin using the shield when conditions permit. The plaintiff was unable to use the shield and as a result the tunneling costs were substantially increased.' Fattore Co. v. Metropolitan Sewerage Commission of Milwaukee, supra, 454 F.2d at 539-540.

[11] The facts in both this case and Fattore Co. v. Metropolitan Sewerage Commission of Milwaukee, supra, make it clear defendant refused to resort to these government contract devices to alleviate the potential harm; i.e., the Commission engineers refusal to act on the changed conditions and a failure to attempt negotiation of the equitable adjustment.

[12] Generally, in the type of construction contract situation presented in this case, the doctrine of implied warranty of specifications will render the government liable for a changed condition. See, United Contractors v. United States, 368 F.2d 585, 598, 177 Ct.Cl. 151, 165-166 (1966); Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. v. United States, 74 F.Supp. 165, 167-168, 109 Ct.Cl. 517, 520-523 (1947); H. L. Yoh Co. v. United States, 288 F.2d 493, 153 Ct.Cl. 104 (1961).

[13] See, Spector, An Analysis of the Standard 'Changes' Clause, 25 F.Bar Jrnl. 177 (1965).

[14] Id., note 13.

[15] Note 11, supra; note 19, infra.

[16] The District Court began with the plaintiff's total cost and moved to a more reasonable figure by reducing it for what it considered, based on the evidence, to be questionable or dubious amounts, as in the case of the equipment costs which were found to be excessive by a large amount.

This use of 'total costs' does not appear unreasonable. It recognizes the fact that total costs have probative value and should be offered as evidence on the issue of reasonable costs. See, Spector, An Analysis of the Standard 'Changes' Clause, 25 F.Bar Jrnl. 177 (1965), supra, at note 13. On the other hand, it does not go to the other extreme of accepting the incurred cost approach for determining an equitable adjustment. See, McBride, Confusion in the Concept of Equitable Adjustments in Government Contracts, 22 F.Bar Jrnl. 235 (1962).

[17] See note 8, supra.

[18] Reasonably certain standards of measurement of less precision than the records existing in this case have been upheld for determining that a liquidable sum existed. See, Necedah Mfg. Corp. v. Juneau County, 206 Wis. 316, 237 N.W. 277, 283, 240 N.W. 405, where determination of the liquidable sum was left to the inquiry and judgment of real estate experts.

[19] After liability was determined, defendant did very little to facilitate ascertaining quantum. It chose instead, by the arguments presented herein, to continue a strategy of avoiding liability.

[20] The opposite danger (not present in this case) also exists of encouraging plaintiff to overstate claims as a bargaining tool for pretrial negotiations. Dahl v. Housing Authority of City of Madison, supra.

[21] See note 3, supra.

End of Document

2012 WL 2919450
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Stephen M. KERR; Michael Quiel;
Christopher M. Rusch, Defendants.

No. CR 11–2385–PHX–JAT.
|
July 17, 2012.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Monica B. Edelstein, Timothy J. Stockwell, U.S. Dept of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

ORDER

JAMES A. TEILBORG, District Judge.

1 Pending before the Court is Government's Motion for Determination of Crime Fraud Exception ("Motion"). Doc. 67. Defendant Stephen Kerr filed a Response to Government's Motion for Determination of Crime Fraud Exception ("Response"). Doc. 76. Government filed a Reply to Defendant Kerr's Response ("Reply"). Doc. 80. The Court now rules on the Motion.

I. BACKGROUND

On December 8, 2011, Stephen Kerr ("Kerr"), Michael Quiel ("Quiel"), and Christopher M. Rusch ("Rusch") (collectively, "Defendants") were indicted for conspiracy to defraud the United States pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 371. Both Kerr and Quiel were charged separately with two counts of willful failure to file Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBARs") in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5314 and § 5322(a), as well as two counts of willful filing of false returns for tax years 2007 and 2008 in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1). See Doc. 3.

On or about April 27, 2010, a Grand Jury issued subpoenas duces tecum to Rusch and his law firm, the Law office of Chris Rusch, requesting records related to several foreign entities and bank accounts used by Kerr and Quiel to further their alleged criminal conduct. Rusch and his law firm produced the requested records on or about May 3, 2010 pursuant to the subpoenas, after which counsel for both Kerr and Quiel objected on the basis of attorney-client privilege. In light of Kerr and Quiel's failure to produce a privilege log or return non-privilege materials to the Government, the Government employed a taint team to review the allegedly attorney-client privileged materials produced by Rusch and moved the court to conduct an in camera inspection of the materials.

On or about August 19, 2011, District Court Judge Martone ruled that the grand jury subpoenas requiring Rusch to produce documents were proper and that Defendants had failed to properly assert attorney-client privilege. Doc. 43–2 at 2–3. The Ninth Circuit subsequently declined to review the issue. As a result, this Court has not addressed whether the crime-fraud exception applies to any communications between Rusch, Kerr, and Quiel, including those made orally and in document form.

On April 27, 2012, Government filed this Motion for a ruling on whether the oral communications between Rusch, Kerr, and Quiel regarding legal advice and disclosures as they relate to the allegations contained in the indictment remain protected by the attorney-client privilege due to the application of the crime-fraud exception. Doc. 67.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A. Waiver of Attorney–Client Privilege

Generally, "[c]onfidential disclosures by a client to an attorney made in order to obtain legal assistance are privileged." Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 403, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (1976) (citation omitted). The purpose of attorney-client privilege "is to encourage full and frank communication between attorneys and their clients and thereby promote broader public interests in the observance of law and administration of justice." Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 389, 101 S.Ct. 677, 66 L.Ed.2d 584 (1981). But it is well-established that "[t]he privilege which protects attorney-client communications may not be used both as a sword and a shield." Chevron Corp. v. Pennzoil Co., 974 F.2d 1156, 1162–63 (9th Cir.1992) (citing United States v. Bilzerian, 926 F.2d 1285, 1292 (2d Cir.1991)). "Disclosing a privileged communication or raising a claim that requires disclosure of a protected communication results in waiver as to all other communications on the same subject." Hernandez v.

Tanninen, 604 F.3d 1095, 1100 (9th Cir.2010); see United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 95 S.Ct. 2160, 45 L.Ed.2d 141 (1975); Weil v. Inv./Indicators, Research & Mgmt., 647 F.2d 18, 24 (9th Cir.1981) ("[V]oluntary disclosure of the content of a privileged attorney communication constitutes waiver of the privilege as to all other such communications on the same subject."); Chevron Corp., 974 F.2d at 1162 ("Where a party raises a claim which in fairness requires disclosure of the protected communication, the privilege may be implicitly waived.").

2 Finally, a three-pronged test is used when determining whether attorney-client privilege has been waived:

> First, the court considers whether the party is asserting the privilege as the result of some affirmative act, such as filing suit. Second, the court examines whether through this affirmative act, the asserting party puts the privileged information at issue. Finally, the court evaluates whether allowing the privilege would deny the opposing party access to information vital to its defense.

United States v. Amlani, 169 F.3d 1189, 1195 (9th Cir.1999) (internal citations omitted).

B. Crime–Fraud Exception to Attorney–Client Privilege

"Because the attorney-client privilege is not to be used as a cloak for illegal or fraudulent behavior, it is well established that the privilege does not apply where legal representation was secured in furtherance of intended, or present, continuing illegality." United States v. Hodge & Zweig, 548 F.2d 1347, 1354 (9th Cir.1977) (citing United States v. Friedman, 445 F.2d 1076, 1086 (9th Cir.1971)). Thus, "[t]he government bears the burden of proving that the attorney-client privilege does not apply because of the crime-fraud exception." United States v. Martin, 278 F.3d 988, 1001 (9th Cir.2002) (citing United States v. Laurins, 857 F.2d 529, 540 (9th Cir.1988)).

For the crime-fraud exception to apply, the government must show that communications were made "in furtherance of an intended or present illegality and that there is some relationship between the communications and the illegality." Id. (quotations and citations omitted); see also Hodge & Zweig, 548 F.2d at 1354; United States v. Bauer, 132 F.3d 504, 509 (9th Cir.1997). Thus, there must be more than mere suspicion of illegal activity on the part of the government. Id. However, "the exception only applies when there is reasonable cause to believe that the attorney's services were utilized in furtherance of the ongoing unlawful scheme." Id. (citing In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 87 F.3d 377, 381 (9th Cir.1996)). Reasonable cause requires "evidence that, if believed by the jury, would establish the elements of an ongoing violation." United States v. Chen, 99 F.3d 1495, 1503 (9th Cir.1996). For example, "coordinated actions [between] codefendants are strong circumstantial evidence of an agreement." United States v. Hernandez, 876 F.2d 774, 778 (9th Cir.1989). "But proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not necessary to justify application of the crime-fraud exception." Id. at 1503 (citing In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 87 F.3d at 381). Instead, the Government must make a prima facie showing that a crime has been committed, and demonstrate a nexus between the prima facie showing and the communications sought. In re Sealed Case, 754 F.2d 395, 399 (D.C.Cir.1985).

Additionally, "[t]he attorney need not himself be aware of the illegality involved; it is enough that the communication furthered, or was intended by the client to further, that illegality." Friedman, 445 F.2d at 1086 (citing Clark v. United States, 289 U.S. 1, 15, 53 S.Ct. 465, 77 L.Ed. 993 (1933); United States v. Hoffa, 349 F.2d 20, 38 (6th Cir.1965) aff'd, 385 U.S. 293, 87 S.Ct. 408, 17 L.Ed.2d 374, (1966)).

3 Finally, "an adversarial minitrial is not required to determine whether the government shows a prima facie foundation for application of the crime-fraud exception." In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Doe), 983 F.2d 1076 (9th Cir.1993) (citing with approval In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Vargas), 723 F.2d 1461, 1467 (10th Cir.1983) ("[T]he determination of whether the government shows a prima facie foundation ... can be made ex parte and a preliminary minitrial is not necessary.") (internal quotations omitted)). Moreover:

> [S]o long as the district court may, in its discretion, decide whether the government's prima facie showing has been made and ma take whatever steps it deems necessary to convince itself of the applicability of the crime-fraud exception, it is > difficult to see how specification of any further requirements could reduce the chance of mistake. Requiring the district court to hear the client's rebuttal to the government's prima facie proffer would in many cases serve no purpose because the government's proof is clear.

Id. Thus, once the Court finds reasonable cause to believe that an attorney's services were employed in furtherance of a crime, "the seal of secrecy is broken." Clark, 289 U.S. at 15.

III. ANALYSIS

Attorney-client privilege may be waived where a party raises a claim or defense that, in fairness, requires the disclosure of protected communication. See Chevron Corp., 974 F.2d at 1162. In Chevron, the plaintiff sought to compel disclosure of documents that supported the defendant's affirmative claim that "[i]nsofar as the decision to proceed with an investment in Chevron was based upon tax considerations, it was made in reliance upon the advice of our tax counsel." Id. at 1163. In response, the defendant refused to supply the documents, arguing that the communications were protected by attorney-client privilege. The Ninth Circuit disagreed, holding that the defendant could not "invoke the attorney-client privilege" to deny the plaintiff of the information it needed to demonstrate the defendant's violation of disclosure requirements. Id. As a result, the defendant was found to have implicitly waived the attorney-client privilege with respect to all relevant communications.

Similarly, to the extent that Kerr claims that both his and Quiel's failure to file FBARs and their filing of allegedly false tax returns were based on the advice of counsel, Kerr places at issue the reporting and tax advice they received from Rusch. As Kerr argues in his Response, "the defendants were merely following Rusch's advice and did not engage in 'willful' misconduct, as required by the relevant statute." Doc. 76 at 7. Consequently, Kerr cannot invoke the attorney-client privilege to deny the government the very communications and information it must refute in order to prove that Defendants conspired to defraud the United States, willfully failed to file FBARs, and willfully filed false tax returns for tax years 2007 and 2008.

4 The Government also contends that Kerr further waived attorney-client privilege by disclosing "privileged communications contained in emails the government does not have in its possession." Doc. 80 at 6. For example, Kerr's Response references an email sent by Rusch to Defendants on October 12, 2006. Kerr claims that in this email "Rusch told the defendants that ... they would have limited FBAR reporting requirements" and that "Rusch assured the defendants that the scenario was 'very clean' and that any U.S. reporting would be based on the Swiss tax return." Doc. 76 at 4. Kerr also argues that in an email sent April 16, 2007, "Rusch told Quiel and his accountant how to report on his 2006 FBAR. Quiel followed these instructions." Id.

Due to Kerr's voluntary disclosure of these emails in support of a reliance defense, the Government argues that "[Kerr] cannot now claim that the government is only entitled to that which he is willing to disclose and nothing more." Doc. 80 at 6. The Court agrees. Under the Amlani test, Kerr effectively waived attorney-client privilege because: (1) he asserted the privilege as a result of some affirmative act; (2) he placed privileged information at issue; and (3) allowing the claim of privilege would deny the government access to vital information. See Amlani, 169 F.3d at 1195.

Finally, pursuant to Rule 47.1 of the Criminal Rules of Practice of the United States District Court for the District of Arizona, Quiel's failure to serve and file the required answering memoranda to Government's Motion may be deemed a consent to the granting of the motion and the Court may dispose of the motion summarily. D. Ariz LRCrim 47.1 (adopting D. Ariz. LRCiv 7.1 and 7.2; see D. Ariz. LRCiv 7.1(i)). Consequently, this Court deems Quiel's failure to file a responsive motion as consent to the Court granting Government's Motion.

With Defendants' attorney-client privilege implicitly waived, this Court need not address Kerr's contingent request for an evidentiary hearing or requirement that Government make a more detailed offer of proof in the event that Government's Motion is granted.

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that Kerr's disclosures and his assertion of the reliance defense waives the attorney-client privilege for all communications between Rusch and Kerr on issues directly relevant to Count I of the Indictment. Accordingly, the Government's Motion for Determination of Crime–Fraud Exception as to Kerr (Doc. 67) is denied as moot; the Motion is granted as to Quiel because it has been consented to.

DATED this 16th day of July, 2012.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2012 WL 2919450

End of Document

2016 WL 1399519
United States District Court, C.D. California.

UNITED STATES of America
v.
Shoaleh YERMIAN.

Case No. SACV 15-0820-DOC (RAOx)
|
Signed March 18, 2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

Benjamin L. Tompkins, AUSA – Office of US Attorney, Los Angeles, CA, for United States of America.

PROCEEDINGS (IN CHAMBERS): ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S APPLICATION FOR DEFAULT JUDGMENT [16]

THE HONORABLE DAVID O. CARTER, JUDGE

1 Before the Court is Plaintiff United States of America's ("Plaintiff") Application for Entry of Default Judgment ("Application") (Dkt.16). The Court finds this matter appropriate for resolution without oral argument. Fed.R.Civ.P. 78; L.R. 7–15. Having reviewed the moving papers and considered the parties' arguments, the Court hereby GRANTS the Motion.

I. Background

On May 27, 2015, Plaintiff commenced an action against Defendant Shoaleh Yermian ("Defendant" or "Yermian") to collect unpaid federal penalty assessments and interest. See Complaint ("Compl.") (Dkt.1).

Plaintiff states that Defendant had a Swiss Bank account from 2006 to 2008. Compl. ¶ 9. Plaintiff alleges that Defendant violated the law by failing to report this bank account by failing to file Treasury Form TD F 90–22.1, Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR") with the Internal Revenue Service. Id. ¶ 7, 10. Plaintiff further alleges that Defendant failed to timely report the interest or capital gains she earned from this foreign bank account. Id. ¶ 11.

On June 4, 2013, the IRS assessed Defendant with three $10,000 penalties for her failure to file an FBAR for tax years 2006 through 2008. Id. ¶ 13. Notice and a demand for payment of the penalty was sent to Defendant on that same day. Id. Interest has accrued on the penalty and remains unpaid. See id. ¶ 14.

On November 9, 2015, the Court granted Plaintiff's Renewed Ex Parte Application for Service by Publication ("Renewed Application") (Dkt.12). The United States subsequently served Defendant via publication in accordance with California Government Code § 6064. See Proof of Publication (Dkt.13–1) at 1. Further, on December 3, 2015, the United States emailed Defendant the summons and complaint, and served the same documents via registered mail and first class to Defendant's last known address, Defendant's nephew, and to Daniel Yermian's Beverly Hill address. See Declaration of Benjamin L. Tompkins ("Tompkins Decl.") (Dkt.13) ¶¶ 5–7.

Plaintiff requested an entry of default against Defendants on February 2, 2016 (Dkt.14), which was entered by the Clerk the following day (Dkt.15). Plaintiff then filed the present Application on March 7, 2016.

II. Legal Standard

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 55(b) provides that the Court may, in its discretion, order default judgment following the entry of default by the Clerk. Local Rule 55 sets forth procedural requirements that must be satisfied by a party moving for default judgment. Upon entry of default, the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint are taken as true, with the exception of allegations concerning the amount of damages. See, e.g., Geddes v. United Fin. Group, 559 F.2d 557, 560 (9th Cir. 1977). However, "necessary facts not contained in the pleading, and claims which are legally insufficient, are not established by default." Cripps v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 980 F.2d 1261, 1267 (9th Cir. 1992). Where the pleadings are insufficient, the Court may require the moving party to produce evidence in support of the motion for default judgment. See TeleVideo Sys., Inc. v. Heidenthal, 826 F.2d 915, 917–18 (9th Cir. 1987).

2 When deciding whether to enter default judgment, courts consider seven factors:

(1) the possibility of prejudice to the plaintiff; (2) the merits of plaintiff's substantive claim; (3) the sufficiency of the complaint; (4) the sum of money at stake in the action;

(5) the possibility of a dispute concerning material facts; (6) whether the default was due to excusable neglect; and (7) the strong policy underlying the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure favoring decisions on the merits.

Eitel v. McCool, 782 F.2d 1470, 1471–72 (9th Cir. 1986). If a plaintiff seeks money damages, "[t]he plaintiff is required to provide evidence of its damages, and the damages sought must not be different in kind or amount from those set forth in the complaint." Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(c). "When 'proving-up' damages, admissible evidence (including witness testimony) supporting ... damage calculations is usually required." Amini Innovation Corp. v. KTY Int'l Mktg., 768 F.Supp.2d 1049, 1054 (C.D.Cal.2011).

III. Discussion

A. Procedural Requirements

Plaintiff has satisfied the requirements of Local Rules 55–1 and 55–2 and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 55(b). Plaintiff has requested and received an entry of default against Defendants. Plaintiff has stated, by declaration, that the individual Defendant is not an infant or incompetent person and that the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, 50 U.S.C. § 521, is not implicated here. Tompkins Decl. ¶ 5. Having determined Plaintiff's procedural compliance, the Court turns to the substance of Plaintiff's Application.

B. Eitel Factors

The Court will now consider each Eitel factor in turn.

1. Possibility of Prejudice to Plaintiff

The first Eitel factor requires the Court to consider the harm to Plaintiff if a default judgment is not granted. See PepsiCo, Inc. v. California Sec. Cans, 238 F.Supp.2d 1172, 1177 (C.D.Cal.2002). Absent default judgment, Plaintiff would lack any other recourse for recovery since Defendant had failed to appear or defend this suit. Id.; Philip Morris USA, Inc. v. Castworld Products, Inc., 219 F.R.D. 494, 499 (C.D.Cal.2003). Therefore, the first factor supports granting default judgment against Defendant.

2. Merits of Plaintiff's Claim and Sufficiency of the Complaint

Courts often consider the second and third Eitel factors together. See PepsiCo, 238 F.Supp.2d at 1175; see also HTS, Inc. v. Boley, 954 F.Supp.2d 927, 941 (D. Ariz. 2013). The second and third Eitel factors look to whether Plaintiff's complaint has sufficiently stated a claim for relief. In its analysis of the second and third Eitel factors, the Court will accept as true all well-pleaded allegations regarding liability. See Fair Hous. of Marin, 285 F.3d at 906. The Court will therefore consider the merits of Plaintiffs' claim, and the sufficiency of its pleadings together.

Here, the United States asserts claims for willful failure to file Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5314. Section 5314 of Title 31 of the United States Code authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to require United States citizens to report certain transactions with foreign financial agencies. 31 U.S.C. § 5314. Under the implementing regulations of § 5314, "[e]ach United States person having a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, a bank, securities, or other financial account in a foreign country shall report such relationship" to the IRS for each year in which such relationship exists, and shall provide such information on the FBAR Form. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(a). United States citizens who have an interest in a foreign bank, securities, or other financial account must report that interest to the IRS by June 30 of the year following any calendar year in which the aggregate balance of such account exceeded, at any time during the year, $10,000. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.306(c). If any person willfully fails to timely report interest in a foreign bank, securities, or other financial account to the IRS, then the maximum penalty shall be increased to the greater of either (1) $100,000, or (2) fifty percent of the balance in the account at the time of the violation. 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C)–(D).

3 As summarized by a court in this Circuit, a FBAR claim consists of four elements: (1) an individual "is a United States person; (2) he or she has a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, a bank, securities, or other financial account; (3) the bank, securities, or other financial account is in a foreign country; and (4) the aggregate amount in the accounts exceeds $10,000 in U.S. currency at any time during the year." U.S. v. Hom, 45

F.Supp.3d 1175, 1178 (N.D.Cal.2014). Here, the United States has sufficiently alleged all of these elements. See Compl. ¶¶ 9–11. The United States has supplemented its allegations with supporting documentation. See generally Renewed Application Exs. A–C; Application Ex. 1. The second and third Eitel factors thus weigh in favor of granting default judgment.

3. Sum of Money at Stake

The fourth Eitel factor requires the Court to weigh the amount of money at stake against the seriousness of Defendants' conduct. “Default judgment is disfavored where the sum of money at stake is too large or unreasonable in relation to defendant's conduct.” Vogel v. Rite Aid Corp., 992 F.Supp.2d 998, 1012 (C.D.Cal.2014).

Plaintiff seeks $440,860.22 in damages against Defendant and $12,817 in attorney's fees and costs. App. at 6. While the amount Plaintiff seeks is significant, the Court finds that in light of Plaintiff's serious allegations, the amount is reasonable. Thus, the factor weighs slightly in favor of default.

4. Possibility of a Dispute Concerning Material Facts

The fifth Eitel factor requires the Court to consider whether it is likely that there would be a dispute as to material facts. Where a plaintiff's complaint is well-pleaded and the defendant makes no effort to properly respond, the likelihood of disputed facts is very low. See Landstar Ranger, Inc. v. Parth Enterprises, Inc., 725 F.Supp.2d 916, 921 (C.D.Cal.2010). “Because all allegations in a well-pleaded complaint are taken as true after the court clerk enters default judgment, there is no likelihood that any genuine issue of material fact exists.” Elektra Entm't Grp. Inc. v. Crawford, 226 F.R.D. 388, 393 (C.D.Cal.2005). As discussed above, Plaintiff has pleaded the necessary elements of its claims. Therefore, the risk of disputed facts is minimal, and therefore this factor weighs in favor of default.

5. Possibility of Excusable Neglect

While there is always a possibility that a defendant might show up claiming excusable neglect, where a defendant “[was] properly served with the Complaint, the notice of entry of default, as well as the papers in support of the instant motion,” this factor favors entry of default judgment. Shanghai Automation Instrument Co. Ltd. v. Kuei, 194 F.Supp.2d 995, 1005 (N.D.Cal.2001). Despite being properly served with Plaintiff's Complaint, Defendant has made no effort to defend this suit. Furthermore, it has been over one month since the Clerk entered default as to the Defendant. The likelihood of excusable neglect is low, and this factor favors default judgment.

6. Policy Favoring Decision on the Merits

Although decisions on the merits are preferred, this does not prevent a court from entering judgment where the defendants refuse to respond. PepsiCo, 238 F.Supp.2d at 1177. Here, because Defendant has failed to respond to Plaintiff's Complaint, the Court is unable to make a decision on the merits. This failure to appear does not preclude the entry of default judgment.

7. Conclusion

Taken together, the Eitel factors weigh in favor of granting default judgment against the Defendant.

C. Damages

Plaintiffs requesting default judgment “must also prove all damages sought in the complaint.” Dr. JKL Ltd. v. HPC IT Educ. Ctr., 749 F.Supp.2d 1038, 1046 (N.D.Cal.2010) (citing Philip Morris USA, Inc. v. Castworld Prods., Inc., 219 F.R.D. 494, 498 (C.D.Cal.2003)). Rule 55 does not require the court to conduct a hearing on damages, so long as it ensures there is an adequate basis for the damages awarded in the default judgment. Action S.A. v. Marc Rich & Co. Inc., 951 F.2d 504, 508 (2d Cir. 1991). “The Court considers Plaintiff's declarations, calculations, and other documentation of damages in determining if the amount at stake is reasonable.” Truong Giang Corp. v. Twinstar Tea Corp., No. 06–CV–03594, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100237, 2007 WL 1545173, at *12 (N.D.Cal. May 29, 2007).

4 A person who fails to file a required FBAR may be assessed a civil monetary penalty. See 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)

(5)(A). The amount of the penalty is capped at $10,000 unless the failure was willful. See 26 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(B)(i), (C).

Here, the United States seeks a total of $32,142.79. App. at 8. The United States' records indicate the requested amount consists of a principal amount of $29,459.18, a late-payment payment as authorized by 31 U.S.C. § 3717 and 31 CFR § 5.5(a) in the amount of $2,300.23, and interest as authorized by 31 U.S.C. § 3717 in the amount of $383.38. See App. Ex. 1 at 2. Based on the Court's review of the relevant statutes and the government's records, the Court finds the amount requested in reasonable.

IV. Disposition

In light of the above, the Court GRANTS Plaintiff's Application. Judgment shall be entered in favor of Plaintiff against Defendant in the amount of $32,142.79. An order entering final judgment will be filed concurrently with this Order.

The Clerk shall serve this minute order on the parties.

All Citations

Not Reported in Fed. Supp., 2016 WL 1399519, 117 A.F.T.R.2d 2016-1064

End of Document

2013 WL 5442960
United States District Court,
N.D. California.

John C. Hom, John C. Hom
& Associates, Inc., Plaintiffs,
v.
United States of America, Defendant.

No. C 13–02243 WHA
|
September 30, 2013

Attorneys and Law Firms

John C. Hom, San Rafael, CA, pro se.

Thomas Ford Koelbl, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, Thomas M. Newman, United States Attorney's Office, San Francisco, CA, for Defendant.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS

WILLIAM ALSUP, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

INTRODUCTION

1 In this action against the United States for unauthorized disclosures of plaintiffs' tax information, defendant moves to dismiss the complaint or alternatively moves for a more definite statement. To the extent stated below, defendant's motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

STATEMENT

Pro se plaintiffs John C. Hom and John C. Hom & Associates, Inc. filed this action for damages for violations of 26 U.S.C. 6103 in May 2013. Plaintiffs are seeking $40,874,000 in damages and "at least" $500,000 in punitive damages (Dkt. No. 1 at 21–22). Defendant United States now moves to dismiss or alternatively moves for a more definite statement under FRCP 12(b)(6) (Dkt. No. 13).

Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that the IRS conducted an investigation of plaintiffs' tax returns. The IRS then opened a Foreign Bank Account Report ("FBAR") investigation under 31 U.S.C. 5314 because it discovered Hom's online gambling activity and use of foreign bank accounts (Dkt. No. 1 at 2). Plaintiffs allege that tax return information, discovered during the tax return investigation, was inappropriately disclosed for the purpose of the FBAR investigation.

ANALYSIS

Failure to state a claim is grounds for dismissal under FRCP 12(b)(6). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face.' " Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)). FRCP 8(a) requires " 'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief,' in order to 'give the defendant fair notice of what the ... claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.' " Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47 (1957)). At a minimum, a plaintiff must provide "the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' [which] requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action.' Ibid. To ensure that pro se litigants do not lose their right to a hearing on the merits because of a technical procedural requirement, our court of appeals construes pro se pleadings liberally. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir.1990).

1. UNAUTHORIZED DISCLOSURE UNDER SECTION 6103.

Plaintiffs are authorized to file this suit under 26 U.S.C. 7431. Plaintiffs argue that, under 26 U.S.C. 6103, the use of information discovered in the tax return investigation cannot be used for an FBAR investigation. Section 6103(a) states:

> [r]eturns and return information shall be confidential, and except as authorized by this title —
>
> > (1) no officer or employee of the United States ... shall disclose any return or return information obtained by him in any manner in connection with his services as such an employee or otherwise or under the provisions of this section....

Defendant's motion to dismiss argues that Section 6103(h)(1) provides an exception that allows such a disclosure:

> [r]eturns and return information shall, without written request, be open to inspection by or disclosure to officers and employees of the Department of the Treasury whose official duties require such inspection or disclosure for tax administration purposes.

2 Tax administration is defined as "the administration, management, conduct, direction, and supervision of the execution and application of the internal revenue laws or related statutes ... and includes assessment, collection, enforcement, litigation, publication, and statistical gathering functions under such laws, statutes, or conventions." 26 U.S.C. 6103(b)(4).

Thus, the issue here is whether Section 5314 is either an internal revenue law or related statute (either designation would make the disclosure permissible). The United States argues that Section 5314 is a "related statute" under Section 6103 (Dkt. No. 13 at 6). This is correct. Congress intended for Section 5314 to fall under "tax administration." See STAFF OF JOINT COMM. ON TAXATION, 108TH CONG., GENERAL EXPLANATION OF THE TAX LEGISLATION ENACTED IN THE 108TH CONGRESS, 378 (Comm. Print 2005) ("The Congress ... believed that improving compliance with this reporting requirement is vitally important to sound tax administration ..."). Section 5314 is therefore a related statute under Section 6103 and the disclosures at issue in this action were lawful.

Plaintiffs' opposition argues that the IRS did not follow the proper procedure pursuant to the Internal Revenue Manual ("IRM") Sections 4.26.17.2 and 4.26.14.2.2. The IRM states: "[w]ithout a related statute determination, Title 26 information cannot be used in the Title 31 FBAR examination. Any such use could subject the persons making the disclosure to penalties for violating the disclosure provisions protecting Title 26 return information." IRM 4.26.17.2(1)(G). Plaintiffs argue that defendant IRS failed to properly obtain a related statute determination because they did not follow the stated procedure for doing so.

Plaintiffs' argument fails because the IRM holds no legal significance. Our court of appeals has held that "[t]he Internal Revenue Manual does not have the force of law and does not confer rights on taxpayers." Fargo v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 447 F.3d 706, 713 (9th Cir.2006). Even assuming that the IRS did not follow its own procedures, plaintiffs have no claim for relief.

Plaintiffs also argue that the IRS reports contained false statements and that these false statements are "actionable" under Section 6103 of Title 26. In support of this argument, plaintiffs cite Aloe Vera v. United States, 699 F.3d 1153 (9th Cir.2012). Aloe Vera is not dispositive here because that decision analyzed the disclosure under Section 6103(k)(4), which exempts information that is authorized by treaty. Id. at 1163. The treaty in Aloe Vera authorized the disclosure of "pertinent" information. The court in Aloe Vera held that "knowingly false information" could not be pertinent under the treaty. Id. at 1163–64. Aloe Vera is irrelevant here because neither Section 6103(k)(4) nor the treaty are at issue.

Plaintiffs finally argue that the type of information the IRS was soliciting from them suggested that defendant's purpose was "penalty assessment not tax administration" (Dkt. No. 1 at 20). This distinction is meaningless for the purposes of Section 6103. Under Section 6103, the term "Tax administration ... includes assessment, collection, enforcement...."

Even if by "penalty" plaintiffs mean that defendant IRS was acting maliciously and without merit, this argument fails as well. Plaintiffs have not alleged sufficient facts to support such an argument.

3 Defendant's disclosures were lawful under Section 6103(h)(1) and the motion by the United States is therefore GRANTED.

2. JOHN C. HOM & ASSOCIATES, INC. CANNOT PROCEED PRO SE.

Plaintiffs were previously informed at the September 12 case management conference that a corporation cannot be a pro se litigant. Individual plaintiff cannot continue to represent plaintiff corporation by appealing to California Procedure Code Section 1 16.540(b). Section 116.540 pertains to small claims actions. This is not a small claims action and plaintiffs cannot make it one by asking that the corporation's damages be limited to $5000.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, defendant's motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

Any amendment would be futile, so plaintiffs' claims are DISMISSED WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND. Judgment will be entered by separate order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2013 WL 5442960, 112 A.F.T.R.2d 2013-6271, 2013-2 USTC P 50,529

End of Document

2010 WL 3980310
United States District Court,
N.D. Indiana,
South Bend Division.

UNITED STATES of America
v.
James A. SIMON.

Cause No. 3:10cr56RM.
|
Oct. 8, 2010.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Jesse M. Barrett, South Bend, IN, for United States of America.

Carmen M. Piasecki, Nickle and Piasecki, South Bend, IN, Frank J. Gray, Gray & Friend LLP, Fort Wayne, IN, for Defendant.

OPINION AND ORDER

ROBERT L. MILLER, JR., District Judge.

1 James Simon is under indictment on four counts of filing false income tax returns, 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1), four counts of failure to file reports of foreign bank and financial accounts, 31 U.S.C. §§ 5314 & 5322, eleven counts of mail fraud involving private financial aid, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, and four counts of fraud involving federal financial aid, 20 U.S.C. § 1097. The charges revolve around the government's allegation that Mr. Simon and his wife received what were purported to be loans from organizations with which he was affiliated, and treated that money as personal income that he did not report on his personal income tax returns for the calendar years 2003 to 2006, and concerning which he filed no reports of foreign bank and financial accounts for the calendar years 2004–2007, and that he didn't include in applications for need-based financial aid from two private schools for his children. Mr. Simon has pleaded not guilty to each of the charges.

On September 28, the court heard argument on five motions by Mr. Simon: a motion for disclosure of grand jury transcripts, which is now moot; a motion to suppress and for a Franks evidentiary hearing; a motion for a bill of particulars; a motion to dismiss the counts relating to reports of foreign bank accounts; and a motion to dismiss the indictment based on tainted grand jury proceedings. Some of the motions are based on multiple grounds. For the reasons set forth in this opinion, the court denies each of the motions, except for the motion to suppress based on the manner of the search warrant's execution and the delay in returning seized material. The court also grants the government's motion to exclude expert testimony concerning the reasonableness of the application for the warrant based on Internal Revenue Service policies.

I

The court begins with the motion to suppress. On November 2, 2007, Internal Revenue Service Special Agent Paul Muschell submitted a search warrant affidavit to United States District Judge Theresa Springmann, who authorized the search of the Simon residence. On either November 4 or November 6 (the parties' submission disagree about the date the warrant was executed, but the date isn't pertinent to the issues now before the court), thirteen agents conducted a search of the Simon residence from around 7:30 a.m. to around 5:00 p.m. Denise Simon, Mr. Simon's wife, was present when the agents arrived. She called her husband and asked that her attorney be allowed to attend the search. Her attorney, Robert Nicholson, arrived about an hour later. The agents seized computers, computer-related devices, and financial documents; some computer-related items were imaged at the Simon home and left there.

A few days after the warrant was executed, Mrs. Simon died at her own hand.

Mr. Simon argues that all evidence obtained as a result of the search of his home and seizure of financial records, computers and other documents, and all derivative evidence should be suppressed because it was obtained in violation of his Fourth Amendment rights. Mr. Simon's motion to suppress is one of the motions based on a variety of arguments. Mr. Simon says:

- 2 Special Agent Muschell's affidavit contained false and misleading statements of fact and omitted facts that were material to the probable cause finding;
- The affidavit didn't establish probable cause for the offenses listed;

- the search warrant lacked sufficient specificity, and resulted in a "general search" of the Simon residence, in violation of the 4th Amendment;

- the warrant was unreasonable because it authorized intrusion into the defendant's residence and was issued contrary to guidelines contained in the Internal Revenue Service manual for search and seizure; and

- the warrant was executed in an unreasonable manner (agents exceeded scope of the warrant and seized unauthorized items).

The government agrees that an evidentiary hearing is needed with respect to the reasonableness of the warrant's execution. Mr. Simon seeks an evidentiary hearing concerning the statements and omissions in the affidavit and also seeks to present evidence concerning the IRS manual for search and seizure.

A

A court evaluating probable cause asks if there was a fair probability, given the totality of the circumstances, that evidence of a crime would be found in the place to be searched. United States v. Orozco, 576 F.3d 745, 748 (7th Cir.2009); see also United States v. Walker, 237 F.3d 845, 850 (7th Cir.2001) ("a practical, common-sense decision"). The supporting affidavit must set forth enough facts to lead a reasonably prudent person to believe that the requested search will find evidence of a crime. United States v. Romo, 914 F.2d 889, 898 (7th Cir.1990). The affidavit is reviewed in a common sense manner, not hypertechnically. United States v. Walker, 237 F.3d at 850.

"The Fourth Amendment requires an evidentiary hearing on the veracity of a warrant affidavit, and ultimately on the constitutionality of the search, when a defendant requests such a hearing and 'makes a substantial preliminary showing that a false statement knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth, was included by the affiant in the warrant affidavit, and [ ] the allegedly false statement is necessary to the finding of probable cause.' " United States v. Harris, 464 F.3d 733, 738 (7th Cir.2006) (quoting Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 155–56, 98 S.Ct. 2674, 57 L.Ed.2d 667 (1978)). "A defendant may also challenge an affidavit by showing that the affiant intentionally or recklessly omitted material information." Id.; see also Shell v. United States, 448 F.3d 951, 958 (7th Cir.2006); United States v. Williams, 737 F.2d 594, 604 (7th Cir.1984). "[T]o make a substantial preliminary showing, the defendant must identify specific portions of the warrant affidavit as intentional or reckless misrepresentations, and the defendant should submit sworn statements of witnesses to substantiate the claim of falsity." Id.; see also Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. at 171. A court then considers the affidavit, eliminating any false statements and incorporating omitted material facts, and determines whether probable cause existed. United States v. Harris, 464 F.3d at 738.

1

3 Discussion of Mr. Simon's attacks on the affidavits requires the court to recite an unfortunate degree of detail. Some of what Special Agent Muschell related in the affidavit related to what he has learned about tax offenders and their ways during his years as an IRS agent and as an accountant before that. He explained that tax offenders often use offshore entities, offshore trusts, foreign shell corporations, and foreign bank accounts, that sham loan transactions (those in which the borrower isn't really obligated to repay the loan) often are used to hide income, that tax offenders often use "tax haven" countries that are deemed "tax havens" because of their bank secrecy laws, like Cyprus, Gibraltar, and the Cook Islands, and that tax offenders often add layers to the scheme to try to make it harder to trace funds. Agent Muschell then explained computer terminology and how tax offenders are known to have used computers, and added that it can take weeks to find financial information in computers.

The affidavit then turned to James and Denise Simon, who were affiliated with several domestic entities, foreign trusts, foreign shell entities, and offshore bank accounts, some of which were established in countries earlier identified as "tax havens". The affidavit reported that the Simons sent funds to offshore countries, then transferred the funds back into domestic bank accounts, with funds eventually winding up in Denise Simon's checking account. The affidavit also reported that the Simons received mail at an address in Huntertown, Indiana, and transferred mail to their residential address.

The affidavit says Mr. Simon transferred personal assets to the Simon Family Trust, located in the Cook Islands for the benefit of his family. The trustees were an attorney named Doug Miller and a Cook Islands firm. The family trust contained a 99 percent interest in JAS Partners, and contained about $4 million in 2000. Although required to file tax returns, the family trust hadn't done so from 2004 through 2006, during which years the Simons prepared their own personal and business tax returns. Special Agent Muschell's affidavit said Mr. Simon was president of William R. Simon Farms, Inc., which he and his family inherited when his mother died. That corporation owned two properties in Huntertown, Indiana; the Simons received mail at one of the properties and Mrs. Simon was seen obtaining an envelope from that property. Mr. Simon signed the corporation's tax returns of the Farm in 2000, 2001, and 2004, but the corporation didn't file a return for 2002, 2003, 2005, and 2006. According to the affidavit, Mr. and Mrs. Simon received farm subsidy income from the corporation in those years.

The affidavit reported that Mr. Simon is the managing director and Denise Simon is an authorized representative of JS Elekta Leasing, an international telecommunications corporation based in Cyprus. Mr. and Mrs. Simon opened, and were the only authorized signers on, a bank account for J.S. Elekta Leasing Limited. Agent Muschell said Mr. Simon had received funds from investors on behalf of JS Elekta Leasing's behalf since 2002, and that JS Elekta Leasing had never filed a tax return.

4 The affidavit said the Simons had formed JAS Partners in 1981 in Colorado through attorney David Lockwood, who specializes in "achieving estate tax minimization and probate avoidance." Mr. Simon was quoted as saying JAS Partners was a "vehicle that engages in financial transactions: loans, money, et cetera, for the purpose of economic gain." JAS Partners reported little revenue, but significant business expenses and net losses from 2000 to 2005. The partnership's losses flowed through to the Simons' tax returns, so they reported adjusted gross incomes of -$37,364 in 2003, $5,130 in 2004, -$269,922 in 2005, and -$47,119 in 2006. Because of (and only because of) the partnerships' losses, the affidavit reported, Mr. and Mrs. Simon received earned income tax credits in 2003–04 and 2006, to which they would not have been entitled had they correctly reported their income. Special Agent Muschell's affidavit says Mrs. Simon's checking account received more than $500,000 in 2006 that came from companies affiliated with Mr. Simon. Some of these wire transactions referenced payment for "services," but those payments weren't reported as income.

The affidavit reported that Mr. Simon is the president and self-described managing director for Elekta Limited, which is based in Gibraltar and hasn't filed any tax return with the IRS. Mr. and Mrs. Simon opened, and were (along with Mr. Simon's sister) authorized signers on, an Elekta Limited bank account in 1997. In 2006, Mr. Simon transferred $2,700 from the Elekta Limited account to a Gibraltar company that specializes, inter alia, in "international tax and asset protection planning."

Mr. Simon, the affidavit continued, also was chief executive officer of Intellecom, the parent company of which is Ichua Limited, located in Cyprus. The affidavit reports that Mr. Simon, acting on Ichua Limited's behalf, had wired $417,000 in 2006 and 2007 to accounts the Simons controlled, and that most of that money went into Mrs. Simon's checking account. The Simons didn't disclose on their 2003 to 2005 tax returns that they had any interest in a foreign financial account, and from 2003 to 2006, didn't file Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBARs") disclosing their interest in foreign financial accounts.

Ichua Limited wired more than $270,000 to JS Elekta Leasing Limited in 2006 (referencing "services") and more than $370,000 to Elekta Limited which, in turn, wired more than $370,000 to JAS Partners, which transferred more than $350,000 to the personal bank account of Mrs. Simon, who also got more than $190,000 from Elekta Limited. Mrs. Simon, the affidavit says, spent between $34,000 and $120,000 per month in 2006, but the Simons reported total income of -$40,499.

Based on this affidavit, Judge Springmann found probable cause to issue a search warrant to look for financial records and other evidence of tax offenses in the Simon residence.

2

The court agrees with the government and Judge Springmann that Special Agent Muschell's affidavit established probable cause for the requested search. The affidavit set forth enough facts to lead a reasonable person to believe that the search of the residence would produce evidence that Mr. and Mrs. Simon had filed tax returns that were false because they omitted taxable income, and that Mr. and Mrs. Simon were required to file "FBARs" that they hadn't filed.

5 Most of Mr. Simon's arguments to the contrary intertwine with his separate argument for a Franks hearing, making it difficult to isolate his arguments about the insufficiency of the affidavit as written. Essentially, Mr. Simon contends that the affidavit's factual allegations don't establish each element of tax evasion. This was not an affidavit for an arrest warrant, though. It sought a warrant to search the Simon residence for evidence of tax evasion and failure to comply with reporting requirements concerning foreign bank accounts. Setting aside for the moment the facts that Mr. Simon contends were missing or were false, Special Agent Muschell's affidavit contains more than enough facts to support a finding of probable cause for the requested search.

3

Mr. Simon contends that Special Agent Muschell's affidavit contained false and misleading statements of fact and omitted material facts. He seeks an evidentiary hearing pursuant to Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 98 S.Ct. 2674, 57 L.Ed.2d 667 (1978), to pursue that inquiry. As already noted, Mr. Simon must make a substantial preliminary showing that Special Agent Muschell made one or more false statements knowingly, intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth, and that the false statement was necessary to the finding of probable cause. United States v. Harris, 464 F.3d at 738.

Mr. Simon says two of the statements in the affidavit were false: Cyprus has a tax treaty with the United States and doesn't have bank secrecy laws, so it isn't a "tax haven" as Special Agent Muschell defined the term; and the Simon Family Trust, described as being located in the Cook Islands, actually is a domestic trust.

Mr. Simon says the affidavit omitted the following facts: that Mr. Simon lived overseas and has business operations in foreign countries; that neither Mr. nor Mrs. Simon had any criminal history; that Mr. and Mrs. Simon had been audited in the past, and had cooperated with the IRS and resolved the audits successfully; that the Simon Family Trust's assets were held in domestic financial institutions, not in the Cook Islands; that a person could have legitimate reasons for using offshore bank accounts; that the Simon Family Trust's trustee's address was in the United States, and the Trust was involved in litigation in the United States, so it had submitted to the jurisdiction of an American court; that the Family Trust's trustee, rather than Mr. and Mrs. Simon, was required to file tax returns for the trust; that the Simons' personal tax returns included income generated by the Family Trust; that the farm subsidies to William R. Simon Farms, Inc., in 2000, 2001, and 2004, were less than $5,000, and that the farm historically had shown losses on its tax returns; that J.S. Elekta Leasing, Ltd. and Elekta Limited might not be required to file tax returns; that taxable income is different than revenues and JAS Partners might have received nontaxable sources of income, such as loans; and that while Elkta, Ltd. received payments from services from Ichua, Ltd., Mrs. Simon and JAS Partners didn't receive payments for "services."

4

6 The omissions of which Mr. Simon complains relate to matters that might, if included, make the inculpatory facts look less suspicious. For example, the Simons' use of offshore accounts seems less sinister if the reader also learns that there can be innocent reasons for using offshore accounts. But the Fourth Amendment doesn't require that an applicant for a search warrant include all facts that could support an innocent explanation for the apparently less innocent facts recited in the affidavit. United States v. Rambis, 686 F.2d 620, 623 (7th Cir.1982) (affidavit "need only allege specific facts establishing a reasonable probability that the items sought are likely to be at the location designated; [it] need not also negate every argument that can be asserted against that probability."); see also United States v. Carmel, 548 F.3d 571, 577 (7th Cir.2008) (affidavit described illegal use for object but omitted reference to a legal use for the same object; Franks hearing properly denied); United States v. Fama, 758 F.2d 834, 838 (2d Cir.1985) ("The fact that an innocent explanation may be consistent with the facts alleged ... does not negate probable cause.").

Nothing in Mr. Simon's submission suggests that the omitted facts go so far past the "innocent explanations" that needn't be included that Special Agent Muschell could be said to have omitted the specified facts "knowingly or intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth ...." Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. at 155–156.

That leaves the two statements that Mr. Simon says were false: that Cyprus is a "tax haven," and that the Simon Family Trust is located in the Cook Islands. First, the record contains precious little to support a finding that either statement is wrong. See United States v. Souffront, 338 F.3d 809, 823 (7th Cir.2003) ("The presumption of validity [of the affidavit] cannot be overcome by defendant's self-interested inferences and conclusory statements."); see also Shell v. United States, 448 F.3d 951, 958 (7th Cir.2006) (denying Franks hearing where defendant offered no support for the contention that the agent intentionally omitted information). The more important point is that even if those statements are disregarded, the affidavit contains more than enough factual information to lead a reasonable person to believe evidence of the specified criminal activities would be found at the Simon residence. The alleged omissions aren't material to the probable cause finding. See United States v. Klump, 536 F.3d 113, 120 (2d Cir.2008) (omission not material where innocent explanation doesn't negate probable cause); United States v. Harris, 464 F.3d at 738 (innocent explanation didn't materially detract from the totality of probable cause found in the affidavit); United States v. Maro, 272 F.3d 817,821 (7th Cir.2001) (unimportant allegation, even if viewed as intentionally misleading, doesn't trigger need for a Franks hearing).

5

7 Special Agent Muschell's affidavit supported a finding of probable cause to search the Simon residence, and Mr. Simon hasn't made a showing sufficient to support his request for a Franks hearing. To the extent the motion to suppress is based on those arguments, it must be denied.

B

Mr. Simon contends that the search warrant was overly broad and had insufficient specificity. The warrant had two attachments. The first attachment described and depicted the Simon residence. The second (Attachment B) set forth the items to be seized: (1) business records and correspondence related to Intellcom, Ichua Limited, Elekta Limited, JS Elekta Leasing, JAS Partners, Ltd., Fort Wayne Telstat, and Klondike Data Services from 2000 through 2006; (2) state and federal tax returns, and related forms and schedules, from 2000 through 2007; (3) documents related to domestic and foreign travel; (4) financial records showing the obtaining and concealing of assets and the expenditure of money; (5) photographs of real or personal property; and (6) indicia of occupancy. Attachment B authorized the agents to seize computers and electronically stored information, making every effort to image the information on site, but allowing seizure for enough time for off-site access and copying.

Mr. Simon contends that Attachment B's descriptions of items to be seized didn't satisfy the Fourth Amendment's particularity requirement. The description "all business records" didn't limit the seizure authority to evidence of violations of the statutes in the application, giving the agents unfettered discretion rather than providing specific guidance. See, e.g., United States v. Cardwell, 680 F.2d 75 (9th Cir.1982), citing Marron v. United States, 275 U.S. 192, 196, 48 S.Ct. 74, 72 L.Ed. 231 (1927); Alioto v. United States, 216 F.Supp. 48 (E.D.Wis.1963) (warrant was overbroad when only limitation on seizure of business records was that they be instrumentalities or evidence of violation of general conspiracy and tax evasion statutes). With respect to tax returns and financial documents, the warrant wasn't limited to any person or entity. The same was true with respect to records of foreign or domestic travel and photos, which weren't even limited to a particular time period. As a result, Mr. Simon argues, agents seized documents beyond those authorized by the warrant, such as records of financial aid from the schools his children attended.

A warrant satisfies the particularity requirement if the warrant tells a reasonable executing officer what items are to be seized. United States v. Hall, 142 F.3d 988, 996 (7th Cir.1998). The particularity needed in one case might be impossible in another, so the courts recognize that the requisite specificity varies from case to case, depending on the complexity of the suspected criminal activity. See Russell v. Harms, 397 F.3d 458, 464 (7th Cir.2005); United States v. Vitek Supply Co., 144 F.3d 476, 481 (7th Cir.1998); Wag–Aero, Inc. v. United States, 837 F.Supp. 1479, 1496 (E.D.Wis.1993). The description in the warrant must be as particular as the circumstances reasonably permit, United States v. Bentley, 825 F.2d 1104, 1110 (7th Cir.1987), allow so that an executing officer can identify the things to be seized with reasonable certainty. United States v. Jones, 54 F.3d 1285, 1290 (7th Cir.1995). Generic language is allowed if detailed particularity is impossible and the language used particularizes what is to be seized. United States v. Hall, 142 F.3d at 996.

8 This warrant listed the Simons' business affiliations and limited the records search concerning those businesses to a particular time frame. It specified tax documents within a particular time frame. The other categories of items are limited by subject matter rather than by time frame. Greater specificity would be needed for a search of an accountant's office, but this warrant related to a residence.

Seizure of the financial aid documents neither exceeded the warrant's scope nor demonstrated an impermissible lack of particularity. The financial aid applications contained information from the Simons about taxable income, expenses, and loans, and included copies of tax returns. The warrant specified evidence of the obtaining and concealment of assets by Mr. and Mrs. Simon, and the financial aid documents appear to fall within that category of items.

C

Mr. Simon argues that the execution of the search warrant was unreasonable, among other reasons because the agents departed from the IRS' administrative guidelines on search warrants. Mr. Simon's argument, though, addresses the decision to obtain a warrant and the adequacy of Special Agent Muschell's affidavit, rather than the execution of the search itself. Mr. Simon notes, for example, that section 9.4.9.2 of the Internal Revenue Manual says "CID will employ the least intrusive means necessary to acquire evidence in tax and tax-related Title 18 investigations," and that search warrants are to be used when crucial evidence "cannot be obtained by any other means." Special Agent Muschell used the search warrant rather than using IRS summonses and/or grand jury subpoenas, or simple requests. Sections 9.4.9.2 and 9.4.9.3.1.2 of the IRS manual say that an affidavit for a warrant must show "objective evidence of the subject's attempt to obstruct the investigation", or "objective evidence indicating the subject may destroy the evidence", or "facts that establish that other attempts to acquire the records were ineffective." Special Agent Muschell's affidavit made no such references.

A search warrant obtained in contravention of the IRS manual, Mr. Simon argues, is unreasonable. This is especially so since the warrant was directed at the Simon residence, in which he and his family had the highest degree of privacy. There would have been no search had the manual been followed, because the government would have employed less intrusive means of investigation first.

The court doesn't understand the law the same way Mr. Simon does. Mr. Simon cites no authority for the proposition that investigators must proceed incrementally by using the least intrusive investigative means before moving to the next stage of their investigation. The IRS might have internal procedures to that effect, but those procedures confer no rights on the person being investigated. United States v. Peters, 153 F.3d 445, 452 n. 9 (7th Cir.1998). The search warrant was based on probable cause and described the place to be searched and the items to be seized with sufficient particularity. Recognizing that the court defers ruling on the reasonableness of the warrant's execution until after hearing evidence, the Fourth Amendment requires no more.

9 That the Simon residence was the place to be searched doesn't change the analysis. No heightened standard of probable cause or reasonableness governs residential searches pursuant to search warrants. See, e.g., United States v. Jones, 54 F.3d 1285, 1289–1290 (7th Cir.1995); United States v. Stone, 471 F.2d 170, 175 (7th Cir.1972).

During argument on Mr. Simon's motion, the government moved to exclude the presentation, at the hearing concerning the method of execution of the warrant, of any expert testimony that the search and/or warrant did or didn't comport with the manual. Because the manual doesn't provide the yardstick by which reasonableness is judged for Fourth Amendment purposes, the court grants the government's motion.

D

Special Agent Muschell's affidavit supported a finding of probable cause to search the Simon residence, and

Mr. Simon hasn't made a showing sufficient to support his request for a Franks hearing. The warrant described with sufficient particularity the things to be seized, and the search was not made unreasonable by any failure to comply with the IRS manual. The court has deferred ruling on the aspect of Mr. Simon's motion that argues for suppression based on the execution of the warrant and retention of items seized; in all other respects, the motion to suppress is denied.

II

The court heard argument on the pending motions on September 28, Mr. Simon asked to submit supplemental authority on a couple of points, and the court afforded both sides until October 1 to file supplementary material. On October 5, as the court was drafting this opinion and after the court already had completed the section concerning the motion for a Franks hearing (this opinion would have been released a day earlier but for a gas leak that caused evacuation of an area of South Bend that includes the federal courthouse), Mr. Simon filed a motion for leave to file the affidavit of retired IRS agent George Scott in support of his motion to suppress. Mr. Simon explained that he didn't believe such an affidavit was required for his suppression motion, but the arguments at the hearing suggested the government disagreed. The government objected to Mr. Simon's motion to file the Scott affidavit.

The court has resolved the suppression motion (save issues concerning the warrant's execution) without relying on (though not without commenting on) the lack of an affidavit. Mr. Scott's affidavit wouldn't affect that ruling if the affidavit (as the court assumes) is limited to the issues previously raised. If the affidavit raises any new issues, it comes too late. In either event, there is no need to expand the record with Mr. Scott's affidavit, so the court denies Mr. Simon's motion to file the affidavit.

III

Mr. Simon asks the court to order the government to file a bill of particulars pursuant to FED. R.CRIM. P. 7(f) as to the amount of unreported income allegedly received from each of the entities referenced in ¶ 3 of the indictment for each tax year in question, and requiring an itemized statement of all of the expenditures alleged in ¶ 7 of the indictment (including dates, amounts and payee of each expenditure). The government responds that the indictment sufficiently alleges the elements of the offenses charged and provides significant detail regarding the source of the implicated funds and the manner in which they were spent, and that it's "open-file" discovery obviates the need for a bill of particulars in this case.

10 The motion deals with paragraphs 3 and 7 of the tax counts (counts 1–4), The indictment is unusually rich in detail with respect to the tax counts. After alleging ¶ 2 that Mr. Simon was involved with Elekta Limited, JS Elekta Leasing Limited, Ichua Limited, JAS Partners, and William R. Simon Farms, Inc., the indictment alleges in ¶ 3 specific annual amounts of money Mr. Simon and his family are said to have received from the entities listed in ¶ 2:

> 3. From 2003 through 2006, Simon and/or his family received approximately $1,799,502.60 from Elekta Limited, JS Elekta Leasing Limited, Ichua Limited, JAS Partners, and William R. Simon Farms, Inc., as follows: $245,800 in 2003; $341,143.71 in 2004; $472,637.96 in 2005; and $739,920.93 in 2006.

Paragraph 4 alleges that Mr. Simon didn't report the $1,799,502.60 as income on his tax returns. Paragraphs 5 and 6 allege that Mr. Simon's personal accounting records referred to most of the money as "loans" or "advances," but set forth about eleven reasons why the money wasn't loaned or advanced.

Paragraph 7 then alleges, with striking specificity, how Mr. Simon and his family spent most of the money from those entities from 2003 to 2006, breaking the expenditures down into 31 categories, with 14 sub-categories.[1] The expenditures are alleged down to the penny; for example, the indictment alleges that Mr. Simon and his family spent $5,054.18 on make-up from 2003 to 2006.

This indictment, in other words, is a far cry from the usual allegation that a defendant, together with others known and unknown, conspired to distribute cocaine base in excess of 50 grams in 2007 and 2008 within the Northern District of Indiana and elsewhere.

Mr. Simon seeks still greater detail. He notes that ¶ 3 doesn't specify how much allegedly unreported income was received from each entity, either in total or for each tax year in question. Without that information, he says, he won't be able to prepare a defense to these allegations. With respect to the expenditures collected in ¶ 7, Mr. Simon says the Government should itemize each transaction, the dates thereof, and the payees, so he can investigate. Mr. Simon says the Government had produced more than 40,000 pages of documents by the time he filed his motion (more pages were produced at the hearing), but hasn't provided any kind of index, categorization, or organizational aid. Mr. Simon believes it would be grossly unfair and prejudicial to leave it to him to go through so much discovery without the detailed schedule of all of the expenditures that the government already must have prepared.

A bill of particulars is not designed to help a defendant organize discovery materials; a bill of particulars helps clarify a minimally sufficient indictment so that a defendant might understand the nature of the charge against him. See United States v. Fassnacht, 332 F.3d 440, 446–447 (7th Cir.2003); United States v. Kendall, 665 F.2d 126, 134 (7th Cir.1981) ("The test for whether a bill of particulars is necessary is 'whether the indictment sets forth the elements of the offense charged and sufficiently apprises the defendant of the charges to enable him to prepare for trial.' "). This indictment provides more than enough information to inform Mr. Simon of the charges and to allow him to prepare to defend those charges. Moreover, the government is correct that a bill of particulars is even less necessary when, as here, the government provides open file discovery. United States v. Canino, 949 F.2d 928,949 (7th Cir.1991); United States v. Giese, 597 F.2d 1170, 1180 (7th Cir.1979).

11 The court denies Mr. Simon's motion for a bill of particulars.

IV

Mr. Simon moves to dismiss the indictment in its entirety on two grounds related to the grand jury. He contends the grand jury proceedings in this case were tainted because Special Agent Muschell gave misleading and false information to the grand jury and because the prosecutor gave misleading, confusing and inaccurate information to the grand jury, and didn't clarify and/or answer questions posed by the grand jury. He also seeks dismissal because the prosecutor excused a grand juror without court approval.

A

Mr. Simon contends that Special Agent Muschell led the grand jury to believe that $1.7 million had come into Mr. Simon's personal checking account, that Mr. Simon received transfers from the affiliated entities on a regular basis from 2003 to 2006, that Mr. Simon "did not report virtually any income" during those years, that the money was spent primarily on tennis lessons, that Mr. Simon had personally prepared affidavits for witnesses to sign, that money that actually went to affiliated entities went directly into Mr. Simon's checking account, that money "bounced around" before settling in Mr. Simon's bank account, that Mr. Simon pocketed "half" of the money investors were putting into the affiliated entities, and that no loan documents (or payments on the loans) were ever made. Mr. Simon believes the prosecutor misled the grand jury with respect to whether loans from certain people would be the basis of charges the grand jury was considering, whether loan documentation existed, whether promissory notes would be evidence of loans, and about a lawsuit Mr. Simon had filed against Special Agent Muschell and the IRS (relating to the search of his home and his wife's death).

To the extent Mr. Simon contends the indictment rested on false testimony, he must show (1) that the grand jury heard false testimony and (2) prejudice amounting to either "proof that the grand jury's decision to indict was substantially influenced, or that there is grave doubt that the decision to indict was substantially influenced, by testimony which was inappropriately before it." United States v. Useni, 516 F.3d 634,656 (7th Cir.2008); United States v. Anderson, 61 F.3d 1290, 1296 (7th Cir.1995). Mr. Simon hasn't met that burden. There might be a factual dispute between the parties with respect to documents that purport to be loan documents, but that's a matter for trial, not pretrial motion practice. None of the transcripts to which Mr. Simon points demonstrate that either the prosecutor or Special Agent Muschell made any false statements, or that the prosecutor failed to answer (or refused to allow) the grand jurors' questions.

Mr. Simon's complaints seem to rest instead on what he sees as skewed or slanted testimony and responses to grand jurors' questions. In presenting such an argument, Mr. Simon shoulders a heavy burden. A grand jury is an accusatory body rather than an adjudicatory body, United States v. Mahalick, 498 F.3d 475, 479–480 (7th Cir.2007), so its proceedings can't be judged by the same yardstick that applies to trials. The government isn't required to disclose even the existence of exculpatory evidence to the grand jury, United States v. Williams, 504 U.S. 36, 53, 112 S.Ct. 1735, 118 L.Ed.2d 352 (1992), or to provide instructions about material facts or legal terms. United States v. Lopez–Lopez, 282 F.3d 1, 8–9 (1st Cir.2002). The federal courts "have been reluctant to invoke the judicial supervisory power as a basis for prescribing modes of grand jury procedure. Over the years, we have received many requests to exercise supervision over the grand jury's evidence-taking process, but we have refused them all ...." United States v. Williams, 504 U.S. at 50.

12 In United States v. Hogan, 712 F.2d 757, 760 (1st Cir.1983), the prosecutor called the target a "hoodlum" who should be indicted as a matter of equity, presented hearsay testimony about unrelated murders of which the target was suspected, recounted news accounts and rumors suggesting that the target had taken bribes while a police officer, presented speculative testimony about why the target hadn't engaged in a drug deal with an informant, and presented concededly false testimony about someone overhearing the target discussing a heroin deal in a phone call. Mr. Simon's complaints about the conduct before the grand jury that indicted him fall well short of that conduct. The parties have cited no other instance in which a federal court upheld an indictment's dismissal for prosecutorial misconduct falling short of actual false testimony, and the court's research has found none. Cf. United States v. Feurtado, 191 F.3d 420 (4th Cir.1999) (upholding district court's dismissal of indictment without prejudice, rejecting appellants' contention that indictment should have been dismissed without prejudice).

At the hearing on his motion, Mr. Simon indicated that he wanted to be able to question Special Agent Muschell at a hearing to learn why answers were framed as they were. The court invited Mr. Simon to file supplemental citation of authority to support the proposition that a defendant is entitled to an evidentiary pretrial hearing to question a grand jury witness about why answers were phrased in certain way, or why certain information wasn't given. No authority was submitted, and the court knows of none. The court won't allow such questioning.

B

One of the grand jurors reported that he or she had attended Mrs. Simon's funeral. The Assistant United States Attorney told the grand juror:

> In situations like this, what we typically do assuming we have enough grand jurors, which we do is ask someone who would be that familiar with that situation to excuse themselves from the deliberations. So I guess what you can do is you can step out and so you won't need to be involved in the deliberations on this particular case hearing more testimony or deliberating because of your sort of personal knowledge and relationship with the family or in-laws or that sort of thing.

Grand jurors inquired whether that grand juror, who had been an active questioner to that point (this was an active grand jury with respect to questions), could remain to ask questions of witnesses and then leave only for the deliberations; the foreperson of the grand jury asked the grand juror to step out before the witnesses were called. Another grand juror reported an acquaintance with the Simon family: the grand juror taught tennis to the Simon children, and the Simons were neighbors of the grand juror. The prosecutor made no suggestion that this second grand juror should recuse.

Based on these exchanges, Mr. Simon contends that the prosecutor improperly suggested that the grand juror excuse himself, although that grand juror was (in Mr. Simon's estimation) asking the best questions about Mr. Simon's financial matters and seemed to have the most insight into Mr. Simon' position with respect to loans and taxable income. Mr. Simon moves the court, pursuant to its inherent supervisory power over the grand jury, to dismiss the indictment with prejudice.

13 Conceding the absence of any authority squarely on point, the government argues that a district court is not to inquire into grand jurors' bias after the grand jury has been selected, see United States v. Adamo, 742 F.2d 927, 936 n. 5 (6th Cir.1984), and that district judges are to have very little involvement with grand jury matters after calling the grand jurors together and administering their oaths. United States v. Williams, 504 U.S. at 48–50. The government views Mr. Simon's argument—that the prosecutor should have brought the arguably tainted grand jurors before the court rather than advise the grand jury himself—as inconsistent with those principles.

The government's argument on this point is staggered, if not knocked out altogether, by Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(h), which authorizes judges to excuse seated grand jurors, either permanently or temporarily. Whatever limits law or custom may place on judges' involvement with the grand jury's day-to-day operations, the Rule contemplates that judges will, at least occasionally, be called upon to decide whether to excuse a juror, even on a temporary basis. Given the terms of Rule 6(h), it doesn't appear that it would have been improper for the government to refer the grand juror's potential recusal to a judge.

But Rule 6(h) doesn't answer any more of the questions posed by Mr. Simon's motion, because it doesn't limit the authority to excuse a grand juror to the court. It simply vests the court with such authority without revealing whether anyone else shares the authority. It doesn't declare that the prosecutor can never excuse a grand juror with respect to a single matter, or that the foreperson or deputy foreperson can't do so, or that a grand juror can't recuse herself with respect to a particular inquiry. By the same token, it doesn't deny the authority to permanently excuse a grand juror to any of those people, but it seems improbable that the law contemplates either the prosecutor permanently barring a seated grand juror from the room, or a seated grand juror's authority to excuse himself from any further duty.

If the inquiry proceeded further, it would be difficult to identify precisely who had final responsibility for the grand juror's recusal on the grand jury's final day with this case. The prosecutor never told the grand juror that recusal was required, but since grand juries look to prosecutors for guidance on the law, the prosecutor's statement about what is "typically" done in similar situations might have been indistinguishable from a command. On the other hand, the grand juror seems to have had no disagreement with the course the prosecutor recommended, and the action might be seen as self-recusal. Modest precedent for a voluntary, but prosecutor-driven, recusal is found in United States v. Lopez, 854 F.Supp. 50, 54–55 (D.P.R.1994) (AUSA said, "Mr. Foreperson, this is the case of Franklin Delano López. As in the past, we would request that you recuse yourself, and I would request that the deputy foreperson assume his duties"; issue in case arose when deputy foreperson wasn't there). And as already noted, it was the foreperson who finally directed the grand juror to step outside.

14 The court needn't resolve either the factual issue or the threshold legal question about who can excuse a grand juror temporarily, because there is no authority for the premise of Mr. Simon's motion: that the court can dismiss an indictment if a grand juror was improperly excused from the proceedings and deliberations. A court can't dismiss an indictment for prosecutorial misconduct in grand jury proceedings if the misconduct didn't affect the defendant's substantial rights. Bank of Nova Scotia v. United States, 487 U.S. 250, 254–255, 108 S.Ct. 2369, 101 L.Ed.2d 228 (1988).

Unlike a petit jury that requires a unanimous verdict, the government wasn't required to persuade any particular combination of grand jurors to obtain this indictment. The government had to persuade twelve or more grand jurors to indict, out of at least sixteen grand jurors in attendance. That the indictment was returned demonstrates that twelve or more voted to indict; the vote of the excused grand juror wouldn't have affected the outcome. Mr. Simon had no right to a particular composition of the grand jury; as has already been discussed, grand jurors may be excused temporarily, so that the grand jury's composition might differ from session to session. Indeed, one member of the grand jury that indicted Mr. Simon had missed an earlier session, and the prosecutor properly produced a transcript of evidence from that session (which included exculpatory witnesses) for that grand juror to review. See United States v. Lang, 644 F.2d 1232 (7th Cir.1981).

If the excusing of the grand juror from the proceedings amounted to misconduct by anyone, that misconduct didn't affect Mr. Simon's substantial rights. Dismissal is not appropriate. Bank of Nova Scotia v. United States, 487 U.S. at 254–255.

C

Mr. Simon also had moved for disclosure of grand jury transcripts to allow him to seek any further issues with what was presented to the grand jury or what occurred during the proceedings. Since then, the government provided quite a few transcripts. At the hearing, the court asked Mr. Simon if those transcripts made his motion moot; he responded that if he has all the transcripts the government has, his motion is moot. The government then informed the court that Mr. Simon has all the transcripts it has. The court deems the motion moot and denies it as such.

V

Counts 1 through 4 of the indictment allege that Mr. Simon violated 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1) by filing tax returns for the years 2003 through 2006 because they didn't report certain income for each of those years and because they didn't disclose certain foreign bank accounts. Counts 5 through 8 of the indictment allege that Mr. Simon failed to file Reports of Foreign Bank Accounts—what the parties call "FBARs" for the years 2004 through 2007, and so violated 31 U.S.C. §§ 5314 and 5322. Mr. Simon moves to dismiss these counts because the IRS has extended any requirement for the filing of FBARs or any disclosure of them on tax returns and expressly made the extension retroactive, see Administrative Notice 2010–23, March 13, 2010; and Notice 2009–62, (August 31, 2009), and because Mr. Simon filed all FBARs that could have been required before the indictment.

15 31 C.F.R. § 24 (reports of foreign financial accounts) provides that:

> Each person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States having a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, a bank, securities or other financial account in a foreign country shall report such relationship to the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue for each year in which such relationship exists, and shall provide such information as shall be specified in a reporting form prescribed by the Secretary to be filed by such persons [Form TD F 90–22.1] ...

Under 31 C.F.R. § 27(c):

> Reports required to be filed by 103.24 shall be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on or before June 30 of each calendar year with respect to foreign financial accounts exceeding $10,000 maintained during the previous calendar year.

Mr. Simon argues that the IRS retroactively extended the filing deadline in § 27(c) (and the duty to disclose those accounts on tax returns) for (i) persons with no financial interest in a foreign financial account but with signature or other authority over that account, and (ii) persons with a financial interest in, or authority over, a foreign financial account in which the assets are held in a commingled fund, by Administrative Notice 2010–23 (March 13, 2010) and Administrative Notice 2009–62 (August 31,2009). Such people now have until June 30, 2011 to file FBARs for all calendar years before 2010. Mr. Simon says he filed all of the FBARs that could have been required before his indictment on April 15, 2010 and was in full compliance at the time, and that any earlier failure to file or disclose can't be the basis of any criminal violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7203.

As the government sees it, Mr. Simon doesn't qualify for relief under the IRS notices because he had a financial interest, not just signature authority, in the foreign accounts. Even if he did qualify, the government argues, administrative relief can't change any criminal liability incurred before amendment of the regulation. The government further contends that the notices haven't become final regulations under the Administrative Procedures Act, and that Congress didn't expressly grant retroactive rule-making authority to the Treasury Department under Title 31. Mr. Simon's January 2010 filing of FBARs for 2005–2007, the government says, doesn't absolve him of criminal liability because under the regulations existing at the time the FBARs had to be filed by June 30 of the following year (June 30 of 2006, 2007, and 2008). The government also notes that Mr. Simon never filed an FBAR for 2003 or 2004.

In reply, Mr. Simon argues that he doesn't have a financial interest in Ichua, JS Elekta or Elekta, that 31 C.F.R. § 103.55 gives the Treasury Secretary authority to make exceptions to the reporting requirements, that the exceptions made by the administrative notices were expressly retroactive, and that he wasn't required to file a FBAR for 2004 because the account balance was less than $10,000. No documentation supports his factual assertions.

16 Whether Mr. Simon had a financial interest in a foreign account is a matter for resolution at trial, not on pretrial motions. The court agrees with the government, though, that if Mr. Simon committed a crime by failing to file an FBAR when the regulations required him to do so, a later regulatory amendment can't absolve him of criminal liability without retroactive modification of the underlying statute. See United States v. Hark, 320 U.S. 531, 64 S.Ct. 359, 88 L.Ed. 290 (1944); United States v. Uni Oil, Inc., 710 F.2d 1078, 1086 (5th Cir.1983); City & County of Denver v. Bergland, 695 F.2d 465, 480 (10th Cir.1982); United States v. Resnick, 455 F.2d 1127, 1134 (5th Cir.1972); United States v. Masciandaro, 648 F.Supp.2d 779, 784 (E.D.Va.2009). The statute hasn't been changed.

Mr. Simon argues that the government is mistaken because none of these cases (or the several others the government cites) involved expressly retroactive regulations. Mr. Simon's description of the cited cases is accurate, but the court disagrees with Mr. Simon as to where that distinction leads. To agree with Mr. Simon that a regulation's self-declaration of retroactivity requires a different outcome would be to hold that an agency acquires the power to forgive crimes already committed by simply declaring its intent to exercise that power. The cited cases teach that even if an agency's regulations becomes intertwined in a crime's definition, it is Congress and not the agency that creates the crime, and only Congress can forgive the crime. See also United States v. U.S. Coin and Currency, 401 U.S. 715, 737–38, 91 S.Ct. 1041, 28 L.Ed.2d 434 (1971); Allen v. Grand Central Aircraft Co., 347 U.S. 535, 553–555, 74 S.Ct. 745, 98 L.Ed. 933 (1954); United States v. Curtiss–Wright Export Corp., 299 U.S. 304, 332, 57 S.Ct. 216, 81 L.Ed. 255 (1936).

The court denies Mr. Simon's motion to dismiss counts 5 through 8 of the indictment.

VI

For all of these reasons, the court:

1. DENIES the defendant's motion to suppress and motion for Franks hearing (Doc. No. 37) in all respects except for the issue of the manner of the warrant's execution and retention of items seized, hearing on which will be scheduled by a separate order;

2. GRANTS the government's oral motion, made at the September 28 hearing, to exclude the presentation, at the hearing concerning the method of execution of the warrant, any expert testimony that the search and/or warrant did or didn't comport with the IRS manual;

3. DENIES the defendant's motion for leave to file affidavit in support of his motion to suppress (Doc. No. 59);

4. DENIES the defendant's motion for bill of particulars (Doc. No. 35);

5. DENIES the defendant's motion to dismiss based on tainted grand jury procedures;

6. DENIES AS MOOT the defendant's motion for disclosure of grand jury transcripts; and

7. DENIES the defendant's motion to dismiss counts 5–8 relating to reports of foreign bank accounts (Doc. No. 36).

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2010 WL 3980310, 106 A.F.T.R.2d 2010-6739, 2010-2 USTC P 50,680

Footnotes

[1] Actually, one of those categories is "uncategorized." The rest are accounting fees, ATM & cash withdrawals, automobile, bank charges, boat, clothing, "Person One," "Person Two," computer, contributions, education, entertainment, gifts, hair care, household, insurance, interest, legal fees, make-up, medical, miscellaneous, office supplies, photography, postage, rent, service charges, subscriptions, taxes, telephone, and travel.

The "education" category is subdivided into School One, School Two, School Three, lessons, summer camp, and other.

The "household category is subdivided into carpet cleaning, decorating, flowers, furniture, groceries, improvements/repairs, lawn care, mortgage, supplies, utilities, and other.

End of Document

2017 WL 1703936
United States District Court,
D. Massachusetts.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Monica TOTH, Defendant.

Civil Action No. 15-cv-13367-ADB
|
Signed 05/02/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Andrew A. DeMello, United States Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Monica Toth, Weston, MA, pro se.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS

ALLISON D. BURROUGHS, U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

1 The United States of America filed this case to collect a civil penalty assessed against Defendant Monica Toth for her alleged failure to timely report her financial interest in, and/or her signatory or authority over, a foreign bank account for the 2007 calendar year. Currently before the Court is Toth's motion to dismiss [ECF No. 49]. For the reasons explained below, Toth's motion to dismiss is denied.

I. BACKGROUND

At the motion to dismiss stage, the Court accepts as true all well-pleaded facts, analyzes those facts in the light most hospitable to the plaintiff's theory, and draws all reasonable inferences from those facts in favor of the plaintiff. United States ex rel. Hutcheson v. Blackstone Med., Inc., 647 F.3d 377, 383 (1st Cir. 2011). The following facts are taken from the complaint. [ECF No. 1].

In 1999, a bank account was opened in Toth's name at UBS AG in Zurich, Switzerland (the "Account"). The Account has remained open continuously since 1999. At all times since the Account was opened, Toth had a financial interest in the Account and held the authority to control the disposition of the funds in the Account.

This case concerns Toth's tax liability related to the Account for the year 2007. At all times during the 2007 calendar year, Toth was a United States citizen and resident. Toth prepared her own federal income tax return for the year 2007, which she signed under penalty of perjury and filed in a timely manner. Toth failed to report any income or loss from the Account, or otherwise disclose the existence of the Account, in her 2007 return. Toth also failed to file a Financial Bank Account Reports form ("FBAR") prior to June 30, 2008, as required by 31 U.S.C. § 5314 and 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350.

The FBAR is required when a United States citizen has a financial interest in, or signatory or other authority over, any foreign financial accounts that individually or collectively have a maximum value greater than $10,000 during the calendar year. 31 U.S.C. § 5314; 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350. The Government alleges that the Account's balance exceeded $10,000 and that Toth had a financial interest in, and/or signatory or other authority over, the Account at all times during the 2007 calendar year.

Sometime after June 2008, the IRS initiated an audit as to Toth's tax liability for 2007, during which time the IRS investigated matters relating to the Account. As of June 30, 2008, the Account's balance was at least $4,347,407. On September 19, 2013, the Treasury Department assessed a civil penalty (the "FBAR Penalty") against Toth in the amount of $2,173,703, due to Toth's willful failure to disclose the Account to the IRS. Notice of the assessment of the FBAR Penalty and a demand for payment was sent to Toth on or about September 19, 2013. Toth has neglected, refused, or failed to pay the FBAR Penalty.

On September 16, 2015, the United States initiated this action against Toth. [ECF No. 1]. On October 13, 2016, Toth filed a motion to dismiss [ECF No. 49] and memorandum in support [ECF No. 50] arguing that the instant action should be dismissed pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2), (4), (5), and (6). The Government filed oppositions on October 27, 2016 [ECF No. 51] and December 14, 2016 [ECF No. 55].

II. LEGAL STANDARDS AND DISCUSSION

a. Toth's motion to dismiss pursuant to Rules 12(b)(4) and (5)

2 Toth first moves to dismiss this action for insufficient and defective service of process pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(4) and (5). [ECF No. 49]. She argues that the Government failed to comply with the time limitations of Rule 4(m). [ECF No. 50 at ¶ 20]. "The plaintiff is responsible for having the summons and complaint served" upon the defendant within "120 days after the complaint is filed" unless this time period is extended by the Court following a showing of good cause. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(c)(1), (m).[1] The complaint was filed on September 16, 2015. [ECF No. 1]. On February 1, 2016, the Government filed its proof of service, indicating that a professional process server had effected service upon Toth pursuant to Massachusetts Rule of Civil Procedure 4(d)(1) on January 11, 2016. [ECF No. 4 at 3]. As Toth was served within "120 days after the complaint [was] filed," the Government complied with the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil procedure 4(m).

Toth also argues that service was insufficient because the Government failed to have her personally served with the summons and complaint. [ECF No. 50 ¶ 19]. "Unless federal law provides otherwise, an individual ... may be served in a judicial district of the United States by ... following state law for serving a summons in an action brought in courts of general jurisdiction in the state where the district court is located or where service is made...." Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(e)(1). Massachusetts Rule of Civil Procedure 4(d)(1) allows for service to be made "by delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint ... by leaving copies thereof at [the plaintiff's] last and usual place of abode." Mass. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(1). Here, a copy of the summons and complaint were left at Toth's last and usual place of abode, 76 Hallet Hill Road, Weston, Massachusetts.[2] [ECF No. 4 at 3]. Thus, because the Government complied with Massachusetts state law in serving Toth, service was not defective.

b. Toth's motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2)

Next, Toth moves to dismiss this action for lack of personal jurisdiction pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2) "because the [Government] failed to reasonably notify [her]." [ECF No. 49]. "A district court faced with a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(2) may choose among several methods for determining whether the plaintiff has met its burden" to prove that the Court has personal jurisdiction over the defendant: "the 'prima facie' standard, the 'preponderance-of-the-evidence' standard, or the 'likelihood standard.' " Hilsinger Co. v. FBW Invs., 109 F. Supp. 3d 409, 416 (D. Mass. 2015) (citing Daynard v. Ness, Motley, Loadhold, Richardson & Poole, P.A., 290 F.3d 42, 50–51, 51 n.5 (1st Cir. 2002)). "When a district court considers a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction without first holding an evidentiary hearing, the prima facie standard governs its determination."[3] Id. (citing United States v. Swiss Am. Bank, 274 F.3d 610, 618 (1st Cir. 2001)). "In conducting a prima facie analysis, the court is required to take specific facts affirmatively alleged by the plaintiff as true ..., construing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff...." Id. (citing Ticketmaster-N.Y., Inc. v. Alioto, 26 F.3d 201, 203 (1st Cir. 1994)). "Although the court will construe the facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff in a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff still has the burden of demonstrating each jurisdictional requirement." Id.

3 "The prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction must be based on evidence of specific facts set forth in the record." Boit v. Gar-Tec Prods., Inc., 967 F.2d 671, 675 (1st Cir. 1992) (citing Kowalski v. Doherty, Wallace, Pillsbury & Murphy, 787 F.2d 7, 9 (1st Cir. 1986)). "The 'plaintiff must go beyond the pleadings and make affirmative proof.' " Id. (quoting Chlebda v. H.E. Fortna & Bro., Inc., 609 F.2d 1022, 1024 (1st Cir. 1979)). Although some circuits "hold that allegations in a complaint, unsupported by any evidence in the record before the court, are sufficient to make a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction so long as the defendant does not present evidence to contradict the allegations[,] ... [i]t has long been the rule of this circuit ... that plaintiffs may not rely on unsupported allegations in their pleadings to make a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction." Id. (internal citations omitted).

"[J]urisdiction based on physical presence alone constitutes due process because it is one of the continuing traditions of our legal system that define the due process standard of 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' " Burnham v. Super. Ct. of Cal., Cty. of Marin, 495 U.S. 604, 619 (1990). Here, the Government argues that Toth resides within the jurisdiction of this Court. [ECF No. 1 at ¶ 2]. The Government's proof of service of process upon Toth indicates that she was served at 76 Hallet Hill Road, Weston, Massachusetts. [ECF No. 4 at 3]. Toth herself confirms that the process server left "the summons on [her] door." [ECF No. 50 at ¶ 19]. Additionally, all of Toth's pleadings filed in the instant action, including the pending motion to dismiss, identify the Hallet Hill Road address as her primary address. See [ECF Nos. 49 at 2, 50 at 7]. Thus, the Government has gone beyond the pleadings and made affirmative proof that this Court has personal jurisdiction over Toth by way of her physical presence in Massachusetts. Boit, 967 F.2d at 675; Burnham, 495 U.S. at 619.

c. Toth's motion to dismiss pursuant to 12(b)(6)

Finally, Toth moves to dismiss this action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). [ECF No. 49]. To evaluate a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the Court must accept as true all well-pleaded facts, analyze those facts in the light most hospitable to the plaintiff's theory, and draw all reasonable inferences from those facts in favor of the plaintiff. United States ex rel. Hutcheson, 647 F.3d at 383. Although detailed factual allegations are not required, a pleading must set forth "more than labels and conclusions." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007). A "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action" is not enough. Id. To avoid dismissal, a complaint must set forth "factual allegations, either direct or inferential, respecting each material element necessary to sustain recovery under some actionable legal theory." Gagliardi v. Sullivan, 513 F.3d 301, 305 (1st Cir. 2008) (internal quotations and citation omitted). Further, the facts alleged, when taken together, must be sufficient to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." A.G. ex rel. Maddox v. Elsevier, Inc., 732 F.3d 77, 80 (1st Cir. 2013) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570).

The First Circuit has noted that "[t]he plausibility standard invites a two-step pavane." Id. "At the first step, the court 'must separate the complaint's factual allegations (which must be accepted as true) from its conclusory legal allegations (which need not be credited).' " Id. (quoting Morales-Cruz v. Univ. of P.R., 676 F.3d 220, 224 (1st Cir. 2012)). "At the second step, the court must determine whether the remaining factual content allows a reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (internal quotations and citation omitted). "The make-or-break standard ... is that the combined allegations, taken as true, must state a plausible, not a merely conceivable, case for relief." Sepulveda-Villarini v. Dep't of Educ. of P.R., 628 F.3d 25, 29 (1st Cir. 2010). "Although evaluating the plausibility of a legal claim requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense, the court may not disregard properly pled factual allegations, even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of those facts is improbable." Ocasio-Hernandez v. Fortuno-Burset, 640 F.3d 1, 12 (1st Cir. 2011) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

4 Here, the Government alleges that Toth has violated 31 U.S.C. § 5314 and 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350. 31 U.S.C. § 5314 provides:

> [T]he Secretary of the Treasury shall require a resident or citizen of the United States or a person in, and doing business in, the United States, to keep records, file reports, or keep records and file reports, when the resident, citizen, or person makes a transaction or maintains a relation for any person with a foreign financial agency.

31 C.F.R. § 1010.350 provides:

> Each United States person having a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, a bank, securities, or other financial account in a foreign country shall report such relationship to the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue for each year in which such relationship exists and shall provide such information as shall be specified in a reporting form prescribed under 31 U.S.C. [§] 5314 to be filed by such persons. The form prescribed under section 5314 is the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (TD-F 90-22.1), or any successor form.

A "United States person" includes both a citizen of the United States and a resident of the United States. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(b)(1)–(2). The types of reportable accounts under the regulation include a bank account, securities account, or other financial account.[4] Id. § 1010.350(c). "A foreign country includes all geographical areas located outside of the United States...." Id. § 1010.350(d). "A United States person has a financial interest in each bank, securities or other financial account in a foreign country for which [she] is the owner of record or has legal title." Id. § 1010.350(e)(1). "Signature or other authority means the authority of an individual ... to control the disposition of money, funds or other assets held in a financial account by direct communication ... to the person with whom the financial account is maintained." Id. § 1010.350(f)(1).

Here, the Government has alleged sufficient facts to "allow[ ] a reasonable inference that [Toth] is liable for the misconduct alleged." A.G. ex rel. Maddox, 732 F.3d at 80. The Government has asserted that during the 2007 calendar year, the year in which it alleges that Toth violated the reporting statute, Toth was both a citizen and resident of the United States. [ECF No. 1 ¶ 18]. The Government further alleges that the Account was a "foreign bank account" located in Switzerland, id. at 1–2, ¶ 4, that the Account was held in Toth's name, id. ¶ 4, and that Toth "held the authority ... to control the disposition of the funds in the Account by direct communication ... to UBS AG," id. ¶ 6. The Government also alleges that Toth failed to report "any income or loss from the Account, or otherwise disclose ... the existence of the Account" on her self-prepared 2007 federal income tax return filed with the Internal Revenue Service, id. ¶¶ 13–16, and that Toth failed to file the FBAR by the deadline to file, id. ¶ 17. Thus, the Government has set forth "factual allegations, either direct or inferential, respecting each material element necessary to sustain recovery under" 31 U.S.C. § 5314 and 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350. Gagliardi, 513 F.3d at 305 (internal quotations and citation omitted).

5 Toth also argues that the fine imposed by the Government violates the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment. "The Secretary of the Treasury may impose a civil money penalty on any person who violates, or causes any violation of, any provision of section 5314." 31 U.S.C. § 5321(5)(A). The penalty may not exceed $10,000 unless the violation is willful. Id. § 5321(5)(B)–(C). Whether Toth, in fact, violated § 5314, and, if so, whether that violation was willful is a question of fact that the Court cannot resolve at this stage. Accordingly, the Court does not address whether the fine to be imposed, if any, violates the Eighth Amendment.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons explained above, Toth's motion to dismiss is DENIED.[5]

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 1703936, 119 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-1688

Footnotes

[1] All citations to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure refer to the Rules as they existed on September 16, 2015, the date on which the instant action was commenced. Toth asserts that this case should be dismissed for insufficient and defective service of process because the Government failed to effect service of the summons and complaint within 90 days. [ECF No. 50 at ¶ 20]. Toth refers to the current version of Rule 4(m). On April 29, 2015, the Supreme Court amended the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, including Rule 4(m). See Order of the Supreme Court of the United States, Apr. 29, 2015, 305 F.R.D. 457 (amending the time for service under Rule 4(m) from 120 days to 90 days). The Supreme Court ordered that the amendments "shall take effect on December 1, 2015, and shall govern all proceedings in civil cases thereafter commenced and, insofar as just and practicable, all proceedings then pending." Id. at 460 (emphasis added). Therefore, the current version of Rule 4(m) does not apply in this case, and the United States was entitled to a period of 120 days to complete service.

[2] Toth's own filings in this Court demonstrate that the 76 Hallet Hill Road address is her "last and usual place of abode." See, e.g., [ECF Nos. 49 at 2, 50 at 7].

[3] The heightened standards of "preponderance-of-the-evidence" or "likelihood" govern "[i]n cases that feature conflicting versions of the facts." Hilsinger Co., 109 F. Supp. 3d at 417. Here, the facts related to personal jurisdiction have not been contradicted by Toth.

4 “The term ‘other financial account’ means (i) An account with a person that is in the business of accepting deposits as a financial agency; (ii) An account that is an insurance or annuity policy with a cash value; (iii) An account with a person that acts as a broker or dealer for futures or options transactions in any commodity on or subject to the rules of a commodity exchange or association; or (iv) An account with ... [a] mutual fund or similar pooled fund which issues shares available to the general public that have a regular net asset value determination and regular redemptions....” 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(c)(3).

5 Toth has included multiple items of correspondence as exhibits to her motion to dismiss. See [ECF No. 50 at 8–10]. Because the Court did not consider these materials in deciding the pending motion to dismiss, the submission of these materials did not convert the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d) (“If, on a motion under Rule 12(b)(6) or 12(c), matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion must be treated as one for summary judgment under Rule 56.”)

End of Document

2016 WL 10647265
United States District Court, C.D. California.

UNITED STATES
v.
Letantia BUSSELL

Case No.: CV 15–02034 SJO (VBKx)
|
Filed 09/15/2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

Indira J. Cameron–Banks, Thomas Derrick Coker, AUSA—Office of US Attorney, Los Angeles, CA, for United States.

Victor Sherman, Law Offices of Victor Sherman, Los Angeles, CA, for Letantia Bussell.

PROCEEDINGS (in chambers): ORDER DENYING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO REQUIRE THE GOVERNMENT TO ACCEPT DEFENDANT'S TENDERED PAYMENT OF THE FBAR PENALTY [ECF No. 73]

S. JAMES OTERO, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

1 This matter is before the Court on Defendant Letantia Bussell's ("Bussell" or "Defendant") Motion to Require the Government to Accept Defendant's Tendered Payment of the FBAR Penalty ("Motion"), filed on August 3, 2016. The United States ("Government" or "Plaintiff") opposed the Motion ("Opposition") on August 22, 2016. (ECF No. 74.) Bussell filed a reply ("Reply") on August 30, 2016.[1] (ECF No. 75.) The Court found the matter suitable for disposition without oral argument, and vacated the hearing set for September 12, 2016. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78(b). For the following reasons, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

In 2002, a jury found Bussell guilty of (1) conspiracy in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371; (2) false statements, false oaths and concealed assets in bankruptcy, and aiding and abetting and causing an act to be done, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 152(1); and (3) attempt to evade or defeat tax, and aiding and abetting and causing an act to be done, in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7201. United States v. Bussell, Case No. 8:01–cr–00056–AHS ("Criminal Action"), J. & Commitment ("Criminal Judgment" or "Restitution") 1, ECF No. 534.) Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3663, the court imposed a $2,393,527 Criminal Judgment for restitution owing to multiple businesses. (Criminal J. 2–3.) In 2003, the Government recorded notice of this lien in the Los Angeles County Recorder's Office. (Opp'n 2.) The Criminal Judgment was amended in 2005 and 2009, and ultimately Defendant was ordered to pay a special assessment of $300, a fine of $50,000.00, costs of prosecution of $55,626.09, and restitution to non-federal victims totaling $1,200,871.75. (No. 01–cr–56, Amended J. & Commitment, ECF No. 703; Final Order of Restitution Due and Payable by Def. Letantia Bussell, ECF No. 740.) Currently, Defendant makes monthly installment payments of $7,000 towards her Criminal Judgment pursuant to a 2012 order in the Criminal Action. (No. 01–cr–56, Order Increasing Amount Monthly Restitution Payment and Withdrawing Mots., ECF No. 776.) Defendant has made every payment since then. (Decl. of Victor Sherman ("Sherman Decl."), ¶ 9, ECF No. 73.) The outstanding balance of the Criminal Judgment is $411,882.16, of which $294,235.08 is for restitution to non-federal victims and $62,020.99 is for fines and fine interest. (Decl. of Indira J. Cameron–Banks ("Cameron–Banks Decl.") ¶ 1, ECF No. 74–1.)

2 In 2015, the Government initiated the instant case, seeking to reduce statutory penalties into a civil judgment. After partially granting summary judgment, the Court found that "Pursuant to 31 U.S.C. Section[s] 5321((a)(5)(c) [and 3717(e)(2)], [Bussell was] personally liable and indebted to the United States of America for the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ('FBAR') penalty assessment for the year 2006 in the amount of [...] $1,120,513, plus statutory interest accruing from the date of assessment on June 5, 2013, as provided by law, until such obligation is paid in full." (J. Favor of Gov't Against Bussell ("Civil Judgment" or "FBAR Penalty") 1–2, ECF No. 45.) In reaching this conclusion, the Court held that the penalty did not violate Bussell's Due Process rights, yet reduced the fine to comport with the Excessive Fines Prohibition. See U.S. CONST. amends. V, VIII. On March 8, 2016, the Government recorded an abstract of this judgment with the Los Angeles County Recorder's

Office. (Opp'n 3.) Currently, the balance on the Civil Judgment is over $1.3 million. (Id.)

The real property located at 2285 Worthing Lane, Los Angeles, CA 90077 (“Bussell Home”) is owned by an irrevocable trust (“Trust”) which was settled by Bussell and her husband on December 15, 1992. (Mot. 2). Bussell is a tenant at that property. Karen Tomczyk (“Trustee”) is the current trustee. (Mot. 2.) Since the Trust has authority to pay the debts of its trustor, the Trust seeks to refinance the Bussell Home to pay the Civil Judgment in full. But the Trust is unwilling to pay off the Criminal Judgment. (Sherman Decl. ¶ 9.) The Bussell Home is currently encumbered by the Civil Judgment, preventing refinancing. (Opp'n Ex. C, 1–3 (releasing the Bussell Home from the Criminal Judgment).)

II. DISCUSSION

In the instant Motion, Bussell seeks an Order from the Court compelling the Government to accept her proffered payment of the FBAR penalty adjudicated by the Court on January 11, 2016. (See generally Mot.) Bussell moves the Court to allow her to continue paying the Criminal Judgment at the court-ordered $7,000 per month; and to compel the Government to accept tendered payments toward the Civil Judgment. (Mot. 6.) Otherwise, Bussell contends that the Criminal Judgment will dwindle by $7,000 a month while the Civil Judgment grows by $8,000 a month. (Mot. 1.) Bussell asks the Court to order the Government to calculate the total outstanding balance, and to accept full payment within sixty-days. (Proposed Order Compelling Gov't to Accept Def.'s Tendered Payment FBAR Penalty, ECF No. 73–6.)

The Government opposes Bussell's Motion and contends that Bussell must pay the Criminal Judgment in full before payments are applied to the Civil Judgment. (Opp'n 3.) As support for its position, the Government first contends that the statutory scheme favors enforcement of the Criminal Judgment. Second, that because the Criminal Judgment lien is “senior to, and broader than” the Civil Judgment lien, payments should apply to the Criminal Judgment first. (Id.) Finally, the Government argues that Bussell has presented insufficient authority for the Court to grant Bussell's requested relief. (Opp'n 5.)

The Court addresses these arguments in turn and ultimately DENIES Defendant's Motion.

A. Legal Standard

Title 18 United States Code Section 3612(c) mandates that “[t]he [Government] is responsible for collecting unpaid criminal fines and restitution on behalf of all victims.” 18 U.S.C. § 3612(c). Additionally, the Government may enforce an order of restitution “by all [ ] available and reasonable means.” 18 U.S.C. § 3664(m)(1)(A)(ii). After surveying the statutory scheme, and considering that over $350,000 of the outstanding Criminal Judgment is for fines, fine interest and restitution to non-federal victims, the Court concludes that the Government's position is a reasonable means to ensure enforcement of the Criminal Judgment.

1. Statutory Scheme Favors Enforcement of Criminal Judgments

The Court first addresses Defendant's Motion by examining the statutory scheme regulating the enforcement of civil and criminal judgments. The Government argues that Congress enacted a statutory scheme granting the Government greater authority to collect criminal debts than civil debts. (See generally Opp'n 3, n. 1.) For instance, the Civil Judgment “create[s] a lien on all real property of [Defendant] on filing a certified copy of the abstract of the judgment in a manner in which a notice of tax lien would be filed ....” 28 U.S.C. § 3201(a) (emphasis added). Whereas, the Criminal Judgment establishes “a lien in favor of the United States on all property and rights to property of [Defendant] as if the liability of [Defendant] were a liability for a tax assessed under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.” 18 U.S.C. § 3613(c) (emphasis added); see also United States v. Kaczynski, 551 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009) (explaining that a criminal judgment lien arises “automatically upon entry of judgment ... and may be enforced against all property and property rights, regardless of the nature of the property.”). í

3 Accordingly, it follows that even if the Trust loaned Bussell money to pay off the Civil Judgment, a lien on those funds would automatically arise in favor of the Criminal Judgment. See 26 U.S.C. § 6321 (tax lien attaches to “all property and rights to property” of the liable person); see also Drye v. United States, 528 U.S. 49, 58–59 (1999) (tax liens attach to insurance proceeds which the taxpayer has a legal right to claim immediately).

In light of this statutory scheme, the Court is satisfied by the reasonableness of the Government's position that any payment above the court-mandated $7,000 monthly payment in the Criminal Judgment must be applied towards the Criminal Judgment before any payments may be applied to the Civil Judgment.

2. The Criminal Judgment Precedes the Civil Judgment

In addition to arguing that the statutory scheme favors the enforcement of criminal liens over civil liens, the Government also contends that Criminal Judgment is also the senior debt. (Opp'n 3.) In the absence of statutory authority to the contrary, the common-law governs the priority of liens under federal law by the rule that "first in time is the first in right." United States v. Pioneer Am. Ins., 374 U.S. 84, 87 (1963); United States v. McDermott, 507 U.S. 447, 449 (1993). Since the common-law rule was codified in 28 U.S.C. § 3201(b), the Civil Judgment "has priority over any other lien or encumbrance which is perfected later in time." 28 U.S.C. § 3201(b). Here, however, the Criminal Judgment was perfected in 2003, while the Civil Judgment was not perfected until 2016. Since the Criminal Judgment was entered years before the Civil Judgment, the seniority of the Criminal Judgment also supports a finding of reasonableness.

3. Bussell's Asserted Constitutional Rights Under the Fifth and Eighth Amendments

Without reference to any case law, Bussell also claims that her Fifth and Eighth Amendments compel the granting of her Motion. (Notice of Mot.) Having already concluded that the Government's position is reasonable and appropriate, the Court declines to addresses these arguments.

III. RULING

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2016 WL 10647265, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-6376

Footnotes

[1] Under L.R. 7–10, "[a] moving party may, not later than fourteen (14) days before the date designated for the hearing of the motion, serve and file a reply memorandum, and declarations or other rebuttal evidence." The Court notes that Defendant filed the instant Reply thirteen days before the hearing date, and advises all parties to strictly adhere to any and all future filing deadlines. Despite its untimeliness, the Court considers the arguments contained therein.

End of Document

2017 WL 4685252
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
M.D. Florida,
Orlando Division.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Gamal S. BADREG, Defendant.

Case No: 6:17-cv-886-Orl-18TBS
|
Signed 09/28/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Joanna L. Barry, US Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

ORDER

THOMAS B. SMITH, United States Magistrate Judge

1 This matter comes before the Court on Plaintiff's Motion for Default Judgment (Doc. 10). Defendant has not opposed the motion and the time within to do so has expired. For the reasons that follow, I respectfully recommend that the motion be granted.

I. Background

The government alleges that Defendant, a naturalized United States citizen, operates Vosges of America, Inc. ("Vosges") in Miami, Florida, which sells medical supplies to hospitals in the Middle East (Doc. 1 at ¶ 8). In 2002, Defendant opened (and was the beneficial owner of) a bank account at the Union Bank of Switzerland, now UBS AG (Id. at ¶¶ 10-11). Defendant "made various transfers and check requests for the account ... met with UBS representatives regarding his holdings ... and signed a series of documents requesting that UBS destroy correspondence with him regarding the account" (Id. at ¶¶ 12-13). Most of Vosges' income is derived from Defendant's family's business, Al-Rihan Medical ("Al-Rihan"), which is owned by his sister (Id. at ¶¶ 9, 16). Between 2003 and 2006, an Al-Rihan related entity deposited funds into Defendant's UBS account, and in 2008, Defendant held a high balance of $2,255,890 in the account (Id. at ¶¶ 14-15). The government contends that Defendant transferred the majority of the money to: "(i) another account he held at Emirates Islamic Bank, Dubai; (ii) to Global Vos Tech Int., a company owned by his father (who is now deceased), his mother, and his sister; and (iii) Al-Rihan" (Id. at ¶ 16). In March, 2009, UBS told Defendant that the U.S. Department of Justice was investigating account holders for possible tax evasion and recommended he voluntarily disclose his account information to the government (Id. at ¶ 17). Two months later, Defendant made a final fund transfer to Al-Rihan and closed his UBS account (Id. at ¶ 18).

The government claims that Defendant failed to disclose the UBS account to his accountant until 2011 and failed to include any income from the UBS account on his 2004-2008 year tax returns (Id. at ¶ 20). For example, "[i]n 2008 alone, [Defendant] failed to report [to the Department of Treasury] over $400,000 in income from his UBS account." (Id. at ¶¶ 20-23). "Despite the UBS account having a high balance of more than $2 million in 2008, [Defendant's] late filed [Form TD F 90-22.1, Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts] FBAR for tax year 2008 reported only $903,130.00 and [Defendant] refused to supply any account statements for the UBS account or his account at the Emirates Islamic Bank." (Id. at ¶ 23).

In response to Defendant's refusal to file the mandatory FBAR report for calendar year 2008, the Internal Revenue Service assessed a civil penalty of $100,000.00 against Defendant, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5) (Id. at ¶ 27). Defendant was given notice of the assessment and demand for payment (Id. at ¶ 28). In its complaint, the government acknowledges that since the assessment was levied, Defendant has made several payments to the IRS, however, $68,191.83 (comprised of the penalty and interest) remain unpaid (Id. at ¶¶ 29-30). On May 17, 2017, the government filed this action to reduce the civil penalty to judgment, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5) (Id. at ¶ 30). The government asks the Court to also award accrued interest from December 2, 2016 through the date of payment, as well as court costs and associated fees (Id.).

2 Defendant failed to respond to the complaint and on June 28, 2017, the government moved for entry of a clerk's default (Doc. 8), which was entered the next day (Doc. 9). Now, the government asks the Court to enter default judgment against Defendant in the amount of $44,191.83 as of July 18, 2017, plus interest accrued through the date of payment (Doc. 10). Defendant has failed to respond to the motion and the time within to do so has expired (Docket).

II. Discussion

A. Entry of Default

As an initial matter, I find that the entry of default by the Clerk was proper. Court clerks are required to enter a defendant's default "[w]hen service of process is properly effected, but the served party fails to respond in a timely manner ..." Kelly v. Florida, 233 Fed.Appx. 883, 885 (11th Cir. 2007) (citing FED. R. CIV. P. 55(a)).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(e) provides that an individual may be served by giving a copy of the summons and complaint to the individual personally; giving a copy of the summons and complaint to an age-appropriate person who lives at the individual's "dwelling or usual place of abode;" serving a copy on the person's agent "authorized by appointment or by law" to receive process; or by a manner permitted under the laws of the state in which the federal district court is located for an action brought in a court of jurisdiction in that state or in the state wherein service is made. FED. R. CIV. P. 4(e).

The Return of Service on file states that on May 25, 2017, the process server served Saeed Badreg, who is over the age of fifteen, at Defendant's usual place of abode: 9001 Southern Breeze Drive, Orlando, FL 32836. (Doc. 7). Service on this defendant complies with the federal rules (FED. R. CIV. P. 4(e)) and the rules of the State of Florida (FLA. STAT. § 48.031(1)(a)). Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12, Defendant was required to file a response by June 15, 2017. See FED. R. CIV. P. 12(a)(1)(A)(i). Defendant has not responded to the government's complaint and the time within to do so has expired. Therefore, I find that default was properly entered.

B. Servicemembers Civil Relief Act

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act ("SCRA") does not bar entry of default judgment against Defendant. The affidavit of the process server confirms that Defendant "is not an active duty member of the U.S. Armed Forces," as defined in 10 U.S.C. § 101(a)(4) (Doc. 7). Defendant's status is further confirmed by the copy of the Department of Defense's "Status Report" and the declaration of Joanna L. Barry, which are both attached to the motion (Doc. 10-2). This is sufficient to satisfy the SCRA's affidavit requirement. See Branch Banking and Trust Co. v. Chalifoux Bus. Park, LLC, Case No. 6:15-cv-2005-Orl-31TBS, 2016 WL 1238746, at *2 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 10, 2016); see also 50 U.S.C. § 3931.

C. Entry of Default Judgment

A district court may enter a default judgment against a properly served defendant who fails to defend or otherwise appear if the factual allegations of the complaint, which are assumed to be true, provide a sufficient legal basis for entry of a default judgment. Nishimatsu Constr. Co. v. Houston Nat'l Bank, 515 F.2d 1200, 1206 (5th Cir. 1975).[1]

A court may enter a default judgment only if the factual allegations of the complaint, which are assumed to be true, provide a sufficient legal basis for entry of a default judgment. Id. In defaulting, a defendant "admits the plaintiff's well-pleaded allegations of fact, is concluded on those facts by the judgment, and is barred from contesting on appeal the facts thus established." Id. "The defendant is not held to admit facts that are not well-pleaded or to admit conclusions of law. In short, despite occasional statements to the contrary, a default is not treated as an absolute confession by the defendant of his liability and of the plaintiff's right to recover." Id. (footnote omitted).

3 If the facts in the complaint are sufficient to establish liability, then the court must conduct an inquiry to ascertain the amount of damages. See Adolph Coors Co. v. Movement Against Racism & the Klan, 777 F.2d 1538, 1543-44 (11th Cir. 1985). "Damages may be awarded only if the record adequately reflects the basis for the award via a hearing or a demonstration of detailed affidavits establishing the necessary facts." Id. at 1544 (quoting United Artists Corp. v. Freeman, 605 F.2d 854 (5th Cir. 1979) (per curiam)).

1. Well-Pleaded Allegations

United States citizens are required to pay taxes on their gross income, regardless of where it is earned. See 26 U.S.C. § 61(a). To comply with this requirement, individuals must voluntarily report their interests in financial accounts held overseas by completing (a) Schedule B, Part III, Line 7 of the Form 1040 individual tax return and (b) an FBAR, if the balance in the foreign account is greater than $10,000. See 31 C.F.R. § 1010.306(c). The IRS is permitted to assess a civil penalty against any individual who fails to report his interest in a foreign account on an FBAR. See 31 C.F.R. § 1010.810(g). If the individual's failure to pay is deemed to be willful, then the IRS has the discretion to assess a maximum penalty of $100,000 or 50 percent of the balance in the foreign account at the time of the violation, whichever is greater. 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C)-(D).

The well-pleaded allegations of fact in the government's complaint establish that (1) Defendant became a naturalized United States citizen in 2000 and was the owner and operator of a bank account at the Union Bank of Switzerland, now UBS AG; (2) that in 2008, the monthly balance in his account exceeded $2 million; and (3) that he failed to include any of this foreign income on his tax returns or report it on an FBAR, as required by law (Doc. 1 at ¶¶ 7-20). The government further alleges that Defendant willfully attempted to evade the reporting requirement by failing to disclose the foreign account to his income tax preparer, instructing UBS to destroy his correspondence, and by transferring funds and closing the account instead of voluntarily reporting its existence as recommended by UBS (Id. at ¶¶ 13, 18, 20). By virtue of the default, Defendant has admitted the government's well-pled allegations. Nishimatsu, 515 F.2d at 1206. Therefore, I conclude that the government has adequately established its claim that Defendant willfully failed to report the earnings in his Swiss bank account.

2. Damages

The government assessed a civil penalty of $100,000 against Defendant for his willful failure to report; and even though Defendant has made some payments, $44,191.83, of the penalty still remains unpaid (Doc. 10).The amount requested is substantiated by the declarations of IRS revenue agent, Araceli Pardenila and Department of Justice Tax attorney, Joanna L. Barry, as well as the copy of the IRS's certified official record attached to the motion (Doc. 10-1; Doc. 10-2). On this record, I respectfully recommend the Court award the government damages in the amount of $44,191.83, "which represents the penalty plus interest and associated fees." (Doc. 10 at 4; Barry Decl., Doc. 10-2)

D. Costs

In its complaint, the government made a demand for the costs of this action (Doc. 1 at ¶ 30(a)), but no such demand was made in the motion for default judgment. The filing fee was waived (Doc. 1; Docket), and it is unclear what other costs were incurred by the government in the prosecution of this action.

III. Recommendation

4 Upon consideration of the foregoing, I respectfully recommend that the district judge

(1) GRANT the government's motion for default judgment (Doc. 10);

(2) Direct the Clerk to ENTER judgment against Defendant in the amount of $44,191.83; and

(3) Give the government fourteen (14) days from the rendition of its order to SUBMIT a bill of costs or a notice that it does not seek costs in this action.

IV. Notice to Parties

A party has fourteen days from this date to file written objections to the Report and Recommendation's factual findings and legal conclusions. A party's failure to file written objections waives that party's right to challenge on appeal any unobjected-to factual finding or legal conclusion the district judge adopts from the Report and Recommendation. See 11th Cir. R. 3-1.

RESPECTFULLY RECOMMENDED at Orlando, Florida on September 28, 2017.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 4685252

Footnotes

[1] In Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1209 (11th Cir. 1981) (en banc), the Eleventh Circuit adopted as binding precedent all decisions of the former Fifth Circuit handed down before October 1, 1981.

End of Document

2011 WL 8995
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
N.D. Indiana,
South Bend Division.

UNITED STATES of America
v.
James A. SIMON.

Cause No. 3:10–CR–56(01) RM.
|
Jan. 3, 2011.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Jesse M Barrett—AUSA, US Attorney's Office, South Bend, IN, for United States of America.

Carmen M. Piasecki, Nickle and Piasecki, South Bend, IN, Frank J. Gray, Gray & Friend LLP, Fort Wayne, IN, Anthony J. Laspada PHV, Tampa, FL, for James A. Simon.

OPINION and ORDER

ROBERT L. MILLER, JR., District Judge.

1 This matter is before the court on defendant James Simon's renewed motion for judgment of acquittal and alternative motion for new trial [Doc. No. 131]. For the reasons that follow, the court denies his motions.

I. BACKGROUND

A 23–count indictment was handed down in April 2010, charging Mr. Simon with filing false federal income tax returns (Counts 1–4), failing to file foreign bank account reports (FBARs) (Counts 5–8), mail fraud (Counts 9–19), and fraud involving federal financial aid (Counts 20–23). More than seventeen pretrial motions required four hearings, numerous oral rulings [Doc. Nos. 25, 33, 71 and 109], and three detailed written opinions and orders [Doc. Nos. 62, 74 and 100]. Trial began on November 2, 2010. Evidentiary objections were the rule, rather than the exception, during trial, and the court frequently had to restate earlier evidentiary rulings. Mr. Simon seemed to change his theory of defense mid-trial, requiring additional briefing.

On the trial's sixth and final day, the court presented the parties with a proposed set of final jury instructions based on the instructions the court and the parties had tendered before trial, along with an explanation of the sources of those proposed instructions and a set of proposed rulings, and conducted an instruction conference. Pursuant to the court's stated policy, the parties are to tender any proposed jury instructions by the first day of trial. The court, accordingly, denied as untimely the supplemental proposed instructions Mr. Simon tendered at the conference [Doc. No. 122].

Evidence and closing arguments concluded on November 9, final instructions were given, and the jury deliberated for several hours before returning a verdict. The jury found Mr. Simon guilty of Counts 1–4 (filing false tax returns in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1)), Counts 6–8 (failure to file reports of foreign bank and financial accounts in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 5314 and 5322), Counts 9–12, 15, and 17–19 (mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341) and Counts 20–23 (fraud involving federal financial aid in violation of 20 U.S.C. § 1097). Count 5 was dismissed on the government's motion at the close of its case in chief, and the jury found Mr. Simon not guilty on the mail fraud charges alleged in Counts 13, 14, and 16.

The court denied Mr. Simon's first motion for judgment of acquittal on November 4, at the close of the government's case in chief; and denied his second motion for judgment of acquittal on November 10, at the conclusion of the evidence. [Doc. No. 129]. Mr. Simon now renews his motion for acquittal, asking that the court either vacate the jury's verdict and enter a judgment of acquittal, or alternatively grant him a new trial.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 29(c) governs motions for judgment of acquittal made after a jury verdict. A judgment of acquittal should be entered only "if there is insufficient evidence to sustain the jury's findings." Unites States v. Murphy, 406 F.3d 857, 861 (7th Cir.2005)."[A] trial judge should reverse a jury verdict only if, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, the record contains no evidence on which a rational jury could have returned a guilty verdict." Id.; see also United States v. O'Hara, 301 F.3d 563, 569–570 (7th Cir.2002); United States v. Duprey, 895 F.2d 303, 310 (7th Cir.1989). Under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 29(d)(1), "If the court enters a judgment of acquittal after a guilty verdict, the court must also conditionally determine whether any motion for a new trial should be granted if the judgment of acquittal is later vacated or reversed ... [and] must specify the reasons for that determination."

2 Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 33 governs motions for new trial, and provides that: "Upon the defendant's motion, the court may vacate any judgment and grant a new trial if the interest of justice so requires ...." Rule 33 motions are to be granted "sparingly and with caution," and only in "exceptional cases." United States v. Reed, 875 F.2d 107, 113 (7th Cir.1989); see also United States v. DePriest, 6 F.3d 1201, 1216 (7th Cir.1993); United States v. Morales, 902 F.2d 604, 605–606 (7th Cir.1990.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Renewed Motion for Judgment of Acquittal

Mr. Simon's renewed motion for judgment of acquittal is premised on arguments previously raised, considered, and rejected. He contends that there was insufficient evidence to prove: (1) that the funds he received from JAS Partners Ltd., Elekta Ltd., JS Elekta Ltd, and Ichua were taxable income that should have been reported; (2) that he acted willfully, knowingly, or intentionally; and (3) that he failed to file timely FBARs. Mr. Simon has presented no new authority or argument that persuades the court that its previous rulings were erroneous.

The government presented sufficient evidence to prove not only that Mr. Simon falsely reported his taxable income on his 2003–2006 returns, but that he falsely reported that he had no financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, financial accounts in foreign countries in those years. The absence of direct evidence of Mr. Simon's state of mind (willfulness, knowledge, or intent) doesn't bar conviction when there is convincing circumstantial evidence supporting the jury's determination, United States v. Ytem, 255 F.3d 394, 396 (7th Cir.2001), as there was in this case. The government presented considerable and uncontradicted evidence that the Simons received large sums of money in 2003, 2004, 2005 and 2006 from various business entities that Mr. and/or Mrs. Simon created, owned, and/or controlled; that the funds were transferred from one entity to another before ultimately being deposited in Mrs. Simon's personal checking account; that the Simons used those funds to pay their personal expenses, and that they didn't report any of those funds as income on their 2003–2006 tax returns.

Although Mr. Simon initially argued that the funds were non-taxable loans, he seemed to change course mid-way through trial, arguing instead that the funds were non-taxable distributions of capital. But he provided little evidence to support the loan theory, and no evidence to support a capital distribution theory. The evidence presented at trial was more than sufficient to establish the elements of the offenses charged in the counts of conviction.

The court detailed its reasons for rejecting Mr. Simon's argument with respect to the FBARs in the Opinion and Order issued on October 8, 2010 [Doc. No. 62], and finds no basis for reconsidering that decision now.

B. Motion for New Trial

3 Mr. Simon argues, in the alternative, that he is entitled to a new trial under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 33 because the court erred when it: (1) denied his pretrial motions for change of venue, to suppress evidence seized during the search of his home, to dismiss the indictment in its entirety, and to dismiss the counts relating to foreign bank account reports (FBARs) in particular; (2) excluded his proffered evidence and testimony concerning the nature and character of the funds as non-taxable distributions—specifically, the testimony of Howard Richshafer and Herbert Long; and (3) failed to properly or adequately instruct the jury and rejected the defendant's proposed jury instruction with respect to the theory of defense (that the funds were non-taxable distributions) and his proposed instruction on good-faith reliance.

For the reasons stated in open court at the hearing on June 10, 2010, and in the Opinion and Orders issued on October 8 and October 20, 2010 [Doc. Nos. 62 and 74], the court rejects Mr. Simon's argument that it erred in denying his pretrial motions to change venue [Doc. No.

14]; to suppress and for an evidentiary hearing pursuant to Franks v. Delaware [Doc. No. 37], to dismiss the indictment based on tainted grand jury proceedings [Doc. No. 41], and to dismiss counts relating to reports of foreign bank accounts [Doc. No. 36].

The court already has considered Mr. Simon's arguments with respect to the admissibility of Mr. Richshafer's and Mr. Long's testimony, and stated its reasons for excluding their testimony on the record in open court on November 1 and November 5, 2010. Mr. Simon presented no authority then or now that warrants reconsideration of the court's earlier rulings. An expert may provide an opinion to help the jury understand the facts, but he may not give testimony stating ultimate legal conclusions based on those facts, or "usurp either the role of the trial judge in instructing the jury as to the applicable law or the role of the jury in applying that law to the facts before it." United States v. Bilzerian, 926 F.2d 1285, 1294 (2d Cir.1991); accord, Good Shepard Manor Found. Inc. v. City of Momence, 323 F.3d 557, 564 (7th Cir.2003) ("expert tetimony as to legal conclusions that will determine the outcome of the case is inadmissible"); United States v. Sinclair, 74 F.3d 753, 757–58 n. 1 (7th Cir.1996) ("Federal Rules of Evidence 702 and 704 prohibit experts from offering opinions about legal issues that will determine the outcome of a case."); Panter v. Marshall Field & Co., 646 F.2d 271, 294 n. 6 (7th Cir.1981) ("It is not for witnesses to instruct the jury as to applicable principles of law, but the judge.").

Mr. Simon's challenges to the adequacy of the jury instructions in this case are similarly without merit. The court requires the parties to tender proposed jury instructions by the first day of trial. When Mr. Simon tendered supplemental instructions [Doc. No. 122] on the last day of trial, the court denied them as untimely. Even had they been submitted in a timely fashion, the instructions must be correct statements of the law that are supported by the evidence. They were not.

4 The court carefully considered Mr. Simon's arguments, has given detailed reasons for rejecting them, and believes that it properly ruled on each of the issues raised. Mr. Simon hasn't presented any authority or identified any error or circumstance that would warrant reconsideration at this stage of the proceedings or a new trial.

IV. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the court DENIES Mr. Simon's renewed motion for a judgment of acquittal and alternative motion for new trial [Doc. No. 131].

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2011 WL 8995, 107 A.F.T.R.2d 2011-358

End of Document

2016 WL 3597579
United States District Court,
N.D. Indiana, South Bend Division.

United States of America
v.
James A. Simon.

CAUSE NO.:3:14-CV-2025-RLM
|
Signed 07/05/2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

Jesse M. Barrett - AUSA, US Attorney's Office, South Bend, IN, for United States of America.

Carmen M. Piasecki, Nickle and Piasecki, South Bend, IN, Frank J. Gray, Gray & Friend LLP, Fort Wayne, IN, Anthony J. Laspada PHV, Tampa, FL, for James A. Simon.

OPINION AND ORDER

Robert L. Miller, Jr., Judge

1 In November 2010, a jury found James A. Simon guilty of filing false tax returns, failing to report his interest in foreign bank accounts, mail fraud, and federal financial aid fraud. The court sentenced Mr. Simon to a total of 72 months imprisonment to be followed by three years of supervised release, and the court of appeals affirmed the conviction and sentence. Mr. Simon now moves to vacate, set aside, or correct his sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255. For the reasons that follow, the court denies Mr. Simon's motion.

I. BACKGROUND

The factual background underlying Mr. Simon's conviction is set out in detail in the court of appeals' opinion denying Mr. Simon's direct appeal. United States v. Simon, 727 F.3d 682 (7th Cir. 2013). Because Mr. Simon's "business dealings require a flowchart to unravel," id. at 683, the court recites only the facts needed to resolve the specific arguments Mr. Simon raises in his § 2255 motion.

Mr. Simon was a certified accountant, professor of accounting, and entrepreneur with interests in several businesses and entities. One of those ventures was JAS Partners, a domestic limited partnership in which Mr. Simon and his wife each had a one percent partnership stake and the Cook Islands-based Simon Family Trust owned the other 98 percent. Another of Mr. Simon's ventures was Elekta Ltd., a corporation chiefly owned by Mr. Simon's retired sisters but entrusted wholly to Mr. Simon's management. Elekta owned nineteen percent of a third venture that Mr. Simon managed, JS Elekta. JS Elekta in turn owned 75 percent of a fourth business, Ichua Company, also managed by Mr. Simon. Of those four businesses over which Mr. Simon had signature authority, three – Elekta, JS Elekta, and Ichua – were foreign entities possessing foreign bank accounts.

This case is about money that Mr. Simon paid to himself from those four entities and from another domestic venture, William R. Simon Farms. Between 2003 and 2006, Mr. Simon (or his immediate family members) received about $1.8 million combined from the businesses, which Mr. Simon spent on personal and family expenses and recorded as loans in his personal financial records. No promissory notes existed for these purported loans, and Mr. Simon paid no interest to the companies that made them. He repaid a small portion of the principal to JAS Partners after becoming aware of the government's investigation into his finances. He reported none of this money as income on his tax returns. In 2005 Mr. Simon paid less than $400 in taxes, and in each of the other three years between 2003 and 2006 he paid no taxes at all and claimed a refund. None of the tax returns disclosed that Mr. Simon had interests in or control over foreign bank accounts. Mr. Simon prepared and filed these tax returns himself.

During these years, Mr. Simon filled out need-based financial aid applications for the private schools his children attended. On these applications, he reported that he had no or very little income, suffered large debts or losses, spent no money on clubs or vacations, had only a few thousand dollars of assets, was in a precarious financial situation due to business failures and litigation, and had enough money to keep him "afloat but barely." These representations were all false: Mr. Simon had the payments from his businesses, spent lavishly on several expensive club memberships, and could afford vacations to Europe and Disney World in addition to a comfortable lifestyle for himself and his family. Based solely on these applications and the tax forms Mr. Simon submitted, the schools gave the Simon family a total of $120,000 in need-based financial aid. Mr. Simon also filled out federal “FAFSA” financial aid applications for one of his daughters to attend college. As he did on his private financial aid applications, Mr. Simon reported minimal gross income and assets on the FAFSA application.

2 In November 2007, IRS agents searched Mr. Simon's house pursuant to a warrant. Mr. Simon hired attorneys soon after that and began preparing a defense to possible charges. His attorneys hired a team of investigators and conducted their own investigation into Mr. Simon's finances, including interviewing the people already interviewed by government agents. Mr. Simon's defense team also met with prosecutors to discuss the probable charges, to guide their planning of colorable defenses.

In April 2010, Mr. Simon was charged in a 23-count indictment. Counts 1-4 alleged that Mr. Simon filed false tax returns for the years 2003-2006. The tax returns were allegedly false in that they underreported income, and in that they didn't check the “yes” box of Line 7a on Schedule B to IRS Form 1040. The question associated with Line 7a asked whether Mr. Simon had any interest in or authority over foreign accounts. Counts 5-8 charged Mr. Simon with failing to file forms called Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Account, or “FBARs,” for the years 2004-2007. FBARs concern foreign financial accounts, and a person is required to file them if he or she has an interest in or signature authority over foreign accounts worth more than $10,000. Counts 9-19 charged Mr. Simon with mail fraud related to the need-based financial aid applications he made to the private schools his children attended. Those counts alleged that Mr. Simon underreported his income on the forms, and that the tax returns he attached were fraudulent for the same reasons as alleged in counts 1-4. Counts 20-23 charged Mr. Simon with federal financial aid fraud based on the FAFSA forms he filled out on his daughter's behalf. The FAFSA application required Mr. Simon to include information from his tax returns; if the tax returns were false (as alleged in counts 1-4), the aid applications were fraudulent as well.

At trial, Mr. Simon's defense to the tax fraud counts was generally that the $1.8 million he received from his business entities wasn't taxable income. He primarily characterized the money as funds loaned to him legitimately by his businesses, and which he intended to pay back. He suggested in the alternative that the payments could be considered nontaxable partnership distributions rather than taxable income. With regard to not checking the “yes” box on the part of Schedule B of his tax returns asking whether he had interest in or control over any foreign bank accounts, Mr. Simon's defense was that he used TurboTax software to automatically fill out his tax forms. Based on how he answered the program's questions, the program didn't ask him anything about foreign accounts. His defense as to the FBAR reporting requirements was that the requirements were confusing, and in any case filing or not filing them had no effect on tax liability so there would be no reason for him to intentionally conceal his control over the foreign accounts. With regard to the mail fraud and financial aid fraud counts, Mr. Simon's defense was that if the jury accepted his explanations on the tax and FBAR issues – that the money wasn't taxable income and he didn't think he had to file the FBARS – then none of the statements on the financial aid applications were false. In addition, for the private financial aid applications, even if his statements about his income and assets were false they weren't materially so; because his children were high-performing academically, the schools wanted them to attend and essentially made price concessions on tuition. He argued that the schools themselves had instructed him to just estimate the information on the forms, because the answers wouldn't really affect the amount of tuition his family would have to pay.

3 After a six-day trial, the jury mostly rejected these explanations. The jury found Mr. Simon not guilty of three of the mail fraud counts but guilty as to the other twenty counts in the indictment. The court sentenced Mr. Simon to an aggregate term of 72 months imprisonment and an aggregate term of 3 years of supervised release. [1] The court of appeals affirmed the conviction in all respects, and Mr. Simon timely filed this motion to vacate under § 2255.

A federal prisoner can challenge his sentence on the ground that the sentence was “imposed in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States, or that the court was without jurisdiction to impose such sentence, or that the sentence was in excess of the maximum authorized by law, or is otherwise subject to collateral attack.” 28

U.S.C. § 2255. Mr. Simon is entitled to relief under § 2255 only if he can show a "fundamental defect which inherently results in a complete miscarriage of justice," United States v. Addonizio, 442 U.S. 178, 185 (1979), or "an omission inconsistent with the rudimentary demands of fair procedure," Hill v. United States, 368 U.S. 424, 428 (1962).

Issues not argued and decided on direct appeal can't ordinarily be raised in a § 2255 petition unless the petitioner can show good cause and actual prejudice for the procedural default. Galbraith v. United States, 313 F.3d 1001, 1006 (7th Cir. 2002). Claims of ineffective assistance of counsel are an exception, and can still be argued in a § 2255 petition even if not raised on direct appeal. See Massaro v. United States, 538 U.S. 500, 504 (2003) (holding that "an ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim may be brought in a collateral proceeding under § 2255, whether or not the petitioner could have raised the claim on direct appeal.").

The court in which a § 2255 motion is brought must hold an evidentiary hearing if affidavits or other competent proof establishes a dispute as to a material factual issue. See Taylor v. United States, 287 F.3d 658, 660 (7th Cir. 2002). An evidentiary hearing isn't required if "the motion and files and records of the case conclusively show that the petitioner is entitled to no relief," 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2012), or if the petitioner's factual allegations are purely speculative. See Gallo-Vasquez v. United States, 402 F.3d 793, 797 (7th Cir. 2005) ("[A] hearing is not necessary if the petitioner makes conclusory or speculative allegations rather than specific factual allegations.") (alteration in original) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Based on Mr. Simon's § 2255 motion and the record of this case, the court concludes that the factual and legal issues raised can be resolved on the record and no hearing is necessary. See Menzer v. United States, 200 F.3d 1000, 1006 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that a hearing is not required where the record conclusively demonstrates that a petitioner is entitled to no relief on his § 2255 motion). Even accepting all relevant facts as Mr. Simon alleges them, he hasn't shown that he is entitled to relief.

II. DISCUSSION

Mr. Simon brings two general claims, both grounded in the allegation that his trial counsel provided constitutionally ineffective assistance. The Sixth Amendment guarantees criminal defendants the right to constitutionally sufficient representation by an attorney. This right provides for only "a professionally competent defense, not for the best possible defense." Rutledge v. United States, 230 F.3d 1041, 1053 (7th Cir. 2000) (quoting Holman v. Gilmore, 126 F.3d 876, 883 (7th Cir. 1997)). To prevail on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim, Mr. Simon must show both that his attorneys' performance "fell below an objective standard of reasonableness" and that there is a reasonable probability that, but for his attorneys' errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688-693 (1984). This is a difficult standard to meet; to prevail, Mr. Simon must show both "that counsel made errors so serious that 'counsel' was not functioning as the counsel guaranteed the defendant by the Sixth Amendment" and "that counsel's errors were so serious as to deprive [Mr. Simon] of a fair trial, a trial whose result is reliable." Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. at 687; see also Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 374 (1986) ("The essence of an ineffective-assistance claim is that counsel's unprofessional errors so upset the adversarial balance between defense and prosecution that the trial was rendered unfair and the verdict rendered suspect.").

4 With regard to the performance prong of the Strickland inquiry, there is a strong presumption that counsel performed effectively. See Berkey v. United States, 318 F.3d 768, 772 (7th Cir. 2003). "A court's scrutiny of an attorney's performance is 'highly deferential' to eliminate as much as possible the distorting effects of hindsight, and we 'must indulge a strong presumption that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance.' " Vinyard v. United States, 804 F.3d at 1225 (quoting Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. at 687). The reasonableness of counsel's performance must be evaluated "from counsel's perspective at the time of the alleged error and in light of all the circumstances" known to counsel at the time. Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. at 381. An attorney's performance is judged holistically, and even a clear mistake doesn't amount to constitutionally ineffective assistance where the attorney's performance was competent on the whole. See Dahler v. United States, 143 F.3d 1084, 1086 (7th Cir. 1998) (noting that "it is essential to examine the attorney's entire work product; an isolated slip-up in an otherwise competent representation does not violate the sixth amendment"). Because reviewing courts shouldn't second-guess counsel's strategic choices, the burden of showing that counsel's decisions fell outside the wide range of reasonable strategic choices "rest[s] squarely on the defendant." Burt v. Titlow, 134 S. Ct. 10, 12, 187 L.Ed. 2d 348 (2013). "The question is whether an attorney's representation amounted to incompetence under prevailing professional norms, not whether it deviated from best practices or most common custom." Makiel v. Butler, 782 F.3d 882, 897 (7th Cir. 2015) (internal quotation marks omitted).

"Even if counsel's performance was deficient, a petitioner must also show that 'there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different,' meaning 'a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome.' " Eckstein v. Kingston, 460 F.3d 844, 848 (7th Cir. 2006) (quoting Strickland, 466 U.S. at 694). While a petitioner must do more than just show that counsel's errors had some conceivable effect on the outcome, he "need not show that counsel's deficient conduct more likely than not altered the outcome in the case." Strickland, 466 U.S. at 693. "In weighing the effect of counsel's errors, the court must consider the totality of the evidence...A verdict or conclusion that is overwhelmingly supported by the record is less likely to have been affected by errors than one that is only weakly supported by the record." Eckstein v. Kingston, 460 F.3d at 848 (quoting Hough v. Anderson, 272 F.3d 878, 891 (7th Cir. 2001)).

Both the performance and prejudice prongs of the Strickland inquiry must be satisfied before a prisoner is entitled to relief, and if a claim fails under either prong the claim fails and the court need not address the remaining prong. See United States v. Taylor, 569 F.3d 742, 748 (7th Cir. 2009) ("Courts may deny ineffective assistance of counsel claims for lack of prejudice without ever considering the question of counsel's actual performance."); Milone v. Camp, 22 F.3d 693, 703 (7th Cir. 1994) ("The Court need not address both Strickland prongs if it is clear that [the petitioner] cannot satisfy one of them").

As an initial matter, both Mr. Simon and the government focus heavily on matters that aren't actually material to resolving the claims in the § 2255 motion. The government points extensively to outward indicia of diligence on the part of Mr. Simon's lawyers – the number of attorneys Mr. Simon had, the quantity of investigators and experts they hired, the sheer volume of pretrial, mid-trial and post-trial motions, and the extensive presentation of evidence at trial and sentencing. The government is correct that the constitutional effectiveness of trial counsel should be examined holistically. "Isolated errors do not constitute ineffective assistance if the attorney's work product taken as a whole demonstrates competence." Rutledge v. United States, 230 F.3d 1041, 1053 (7th Cir. 2000).

But sheer activity doesn't equate to constitutional effectiveness. A large, expensive defense team filing a flurry of motions might still be ineffective if their decision making on a critical point falls below an objective standard of reasonableness, just as a single attorney doing nothing other than negotiating a quick plea can be constitutionally effective. See Premo v. Moore, 562 U.S. 115, 123-125 (2011). Pointing to all the dust Mr. Simon's attorneys kicked up before and during trial doesn't resolve the question of whether some specific acts or omissions fell below a professional standard of reasonableness such that Mr. Simon was denied the effective assistance of counsel.

5 At the same time, Mr. Simon makes voluminous factual allegations and arguments about the defense team's pre-trial game plan and whether his attorneys followed it. Mr. Simon insists that his pretrial agreement with his attorneys as to what defense they would pursue is relevant because it shows his counsel knew the agreed-on defense to be the best available one. Even if Mr. Simon is correct that he and counsel agreed on a strategy before trial and that the strategy eventually pursued at trial deviated from that plan, that doesn't show ineffectiveness. For one thing, whether his attorneys provided the "best" available defense isn't the issue in a § 2255 motion, because "[t]he Constitution calls for a professionally competent defense, not for the best possible defense." Rutledge v. United States, 230 F.3d 1041, 1053 (7th Cir. 2000). For another thing, which strategy appears optimal might shift over time. "Trial tactics are a matter of professional judgment" and a reviewing court "will not play 'Monday morning quarterback' when reviewing claims that an attorney rendered constitutionally deficient representation in making decisions on how to best handle a case." United States v. Malone, 484 F.3d 916, 920 & n. 1 (7th Cir. 2007).

There are countless legitimate strategic reasons an attorney might plan out a particular theory of the case before trial yet abandon it once proceedings are underway. A competent criminal defense attorney must adjust as the government's case unfolds and as government witnesses tell their story and experience cross examination. The need to see and experience those developments usually prevents pretrial plans from being set in stone. See Blake v. United States, 723 F.3d 870, 879 (7th Cir. 2013) ("Counsel's performance is to be evaluated in light of the discretion properly accorded an attorney to develop appropriate trial strategies according to the attorney's independent judgment, given the facts of the case, at least some of which may not be reflected in the trial record."). Concerns such as these occasionally lead experience criminal defense counsel to waive or defer opening statements.

In short, whether Mr. Simon got the defense he expected isn't at issue – the court asks only whether the defense he actually got passes constitutional muster. For this reason, the "factual disputes" that Mr. Simon believes entitle him to an evidentiary hearing don't. His affidavit and his counsel's affidavit present different stories about how and why various defense decisions were made, but resolving those disputes isn't necessary. In ruling on a § 2255 motion, the court looks at constitutional effectiveness from an "objective standard of reasonableness" – the question is whether there could have been any sound strategic reason for a particular act or decision, not what an attorney was actually thinking when making the choice. See Cullen v. Pinholster, 563 U.S. 170, 196 (2011) (emphasizing that Strickland mandates a strong presumption of reasonableness, so a court reviewing an ineffectiveness claim is "required not simply to give [the] attorneys the benefit of the doubt, but to affirmatively entertain the range of possible reasons [counsel] may have had for proceeding as they did.") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted) (emphasis added); see also Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 110 (2011) (holding that Strickland "calls for an inquiry into the objective reasonableness of counsel's performance, not counsel's subjective state of mind.").

Mr. Simon first alleges that his counsel mistakenly thought the defense could call experts to testify as to principles of tax law, and so neglected to prepare jury instructions on the relevant legal principles. The jury therefore never heard a critical part of Mr. Simon's defense, specifically that any mischaracterization of the payments he received wasn't willful because other alternative tax treatments for the payments would have had the same result. His second claim alleges several different alleged errors by trial counsel which cumulatively impeded Mr. Simon's attempt to present his defenses to the jury.

A. Ineffectiveness related to Mr. Simon's proposed willfulness-based defense

6 As Mr. Simon describes it, his "primary contention is that he received ineffective assistance because trial counsel failed to provide timely and adequate law to the court." In essence, he argues that he wanted to make a good-faith defense to the charge that he underreported his income on his tax returns, but his counsel made a fatal legal error that prevented him from presenting the legal basis for his planned defense to the jury.

According to Mr. Simon, counsel had always planned on a two-pronged defense to the portions of the tax fraud charges in counts 1-4 based on underreported income. First, counsel would argue that there was nothing false about the tax returns because the payments not reported as income were in fact legitimate nontaxable loans from the businesses to Mr. Simon. The argument would be that Mr. Simon honestly considered these legitimate loans, and intended to repay them. Second, counsel would argue that even if Mr. Simon was wrong to consider the payments nontaxable loans, the mistake couldn't have been willful because the payments would have been untaxable no matter how they were characterized. If the money didn't properly qualify as loans, it would have been either partnership distributions or advances on reimbursements for expenses that Mr. Simon paid on behalf of the businesses – and neither of those would have changed the tax treatment, because partnership distributions and reimbursements are both non-taxable. In other words, if the jury rejected his argument that the loans were legitimate, Mr. Simon wanted it to infer that he must not have intentionally lied about the payments because there would have been no tax benefit to doing so; at worst his mischaracterization of the money as loans was an honest mistake, because he would have owed no taxes on the payments no matter how they were classified. Mr. Simon emphasizes that he never intended "to present alternative or contradictory" defenses that the money was either loans or partnership distributions or expense reimbursements. Rather, he believes his attorneys should have presented the following "common sense" question to the jury: "why would [Mr. Simon] willfully mischaracterize the money as loans, which ultimately caused him to owe significant taxes, when he could have characterized the money as a partnership distributions [sic] or even income and owed none?"

For jurors to understand and accept that defense, they'd need to know how the tax laws treat all those different categories of payments. The proper way to educate the jury about tax law principles is by submitting timely and legally correct jury instructions, not by calling expert witnesses; only the court can instruct the jury on the law, and expert witnesses can't generally testify as to what the law is or whether someone's conduct was or wasn't lawful. See United States v. Jungles, 903 F.2d 468, 477 (7th Cir. 1990). Mr. Simon's attorneys tried to call tax law professionals as expert witnesses, telling the court that the witnesses would opine on how the tax laws treat various types of payments and whether the payments at issue here were taxable. The court refused to permit such testimony, a holding that was upheld on appeal. See United States v. Simon, 727 F.3d 682, 697 (7th Cir. 2013) ("The court was correct to preclude any witness from generally explaining the law to the jury.").

After the witnesses' testimony was excluded, the only available course for Mr. Simon's attorneys was to propose jury instructions supporting his theory of defense. Because his counsel thought they could call experts instead, Mr. Simon says, they were caught off guard when the experts were excluded and didn't have time to formulate adequate jury instructions. Counsel submitted jury instructions on how partnership distributions and expense reimbursements are treated under the tax laws, but didn't do so until the final day of trial. The court refused to give the instructions because they were untimely, and also because they were inadequate; they didn't explain to the jury how to calculate Mr. Simon's basis in JAS Partners, and without knowing Mr. Simon's basis the jury couldn't have determined whether distributions from the partnership were nontaxable. Accordingly, the jury was left without any instruction on how the tax laws applied to partnership distributions and reimbursements or expense advances, and Mr. Simon argues that this left him without a full defense.

7 "An attorney's ignorance of a point of law that is fundamental to his case combined with his failure to perform basic research on that point is a quintessential example of unreasonable performance under Strickland." Hinton v. Alabama, 134 S. Ct. 1081, 1089 (2014). Mr. Simon believes that his attorneys made such a fundamental misstep, erroneously believing that experts could testify as to what the law is and thus squandering the chance to prevent a meritorious defense. He argues that the attorneys clearly didn't make a strategic choice to jettison the good-faith defense based on alternative characterizations of the payments as partnership distributions or reimbursements, because they tried to present this defense and were only prevented from doing so by their own elementary legal mistakes. He insists that his attorneys couldn't have strategically chosen to call experts to testify on the law because such experts would obviously be excluded by the court, and they couldn't have strategically chosen to submit untimely and inadequate jury instructions.

That Mr. Simon's counsel wound up on the wrong side of an evidentiary ruling doesn't mean that they made a fundamental legal error that prevented Mr. Simon from mounting a full and reasonable defense. Counsel doesn't act deficiently simply by pushing the envelope. There is an obvious strategic logic in at least trying to admit favorable but likely inadmissible evidence, or proposing favorable but likely improper jury instructions; if successful such efforts might secure the defendant an unreviewable acquittal, and if unsuccessful there's no real cost to the defendant. Mr. Simon is certainly correct that there is never a valid strategic reason to submit untimely jury instructions as opposed to timely ones, but his argument that this mistake made his trial unfair presupposes that there was any legally valid way to present his chosen defense to the jury. In fact, there was not. The court wouldn't have permitted Mr. Simon's preferred good-faith defense to be presented to the jury even if his attorneys had submitted timely and correct jury instructions, because the defense Mr. Simon wanted to raise would have been wholly speculative given the evidence at trial. Even if his attorneys made a mistake by submitting jury instructions too late, this error couldn't possibly have prejudiced Mr. Simon because the instructions would have been rejected even if timely.

"A defendant is entitled to an instruction on his theory of defense only if '(1) the instruction provides a correct statement of the law; (2) the theory of defense is supported by the evidence; (3) the theory of the defense is not part of the government's charge; and (4) the failure to include the instruction would deprive the defendant of a fair trial.' " United States v. Campos, 541 F.3d 735, 744 (7th Cir. 2008) (quoting United States v. Millet, 510 F.3d 668, 675 (7th Cir. 2007)). Mr. Simon's theory doesn't meet the second criterion, because it was wholly speculative. To convict Mr. Simon on counts 1-4, the government was required to prove only that he filed a return that he did not believe was true and correct to "every material matter." United States v. Pansier, 576 F.3d 726, 736 (7th Cir. 2009). Accordingly, the focus is on Mr. Simon's own knowledge and intent; if he characterized the money as loans and the jury found that he knew the loans weren't legitimate, it is no defense that other hypothetical characterizations of the money unknown to Mr. Simon might have been available that could have resulted in no tax liability. Wholly hypothetical or speculative mental state defenses such as the one Mr. Simon now insists his attorneys should have mounted are often raised, but routinely excluded. See, e.g., United States v. Zayyad, 741 F.3d 452, 460 (4th Cir. 2014) ("If the defendant wants to present a theory or belief that might have justified his actions, then he must present evidence that he in fact relied on that theory or belief."); United States v. Curtis, 782 F.2d 593, 599 (6th Cir. 1986) ("Willfulness is personal. It relates to the defendant's state of mind. It does not exist in the abstract. Unless there is a connection between the external facts and the defendant's state of mind, the evidence of the external facts is not relevant.").

8 In United States v. Kokenis, 662 F.3d 919 (7th Cir. 2011), the defendant controlled a number of corporations and business entities and was charged with filing false tax returns by not reporting various payments as income. Id. at 922-926. The defendant wanted to call tax experts to testify about an obscure "pool of capital" accounting theory under which the payments at issue could have been excluded from taxable income, and wanted to argue that the pool of capital theory "would have provided a layer of credibility to [his] argument that he did not act willfully" in characterizing the money as nontaxable. Id. at 929-930. The district court refused to admit this testimony and declined to give a jury instruction on good faith. The court of appeals affirmed, noting that whether the "pool of capital" theory might have been available to the defendant was irrelevant to whether he willfully filed false returns, because the "mere existence of the theory without evidence of [the defendant's] knowledge of and reliance on the theory is insufficient to support the assertion of good faith." Id. at 928. Because there was "no evidence that he actually relied on the pooling capital theory," the defendant's proffered evidence "would be irrelevant, confusing, and perhaps even misleading." Id.

Mr. Simon's situation is much the same. He wanted to argue that his failure to list the payments as income wasn't willful because several possible characterizations of the payments would have resulted in no tax liability to him. But there was no evidence that Mr. Simon relied on these alternate possible bases for escaping tax liability, and no evidence that he ever considered the possibility of characterizing the payments as partnership distributions or expense reimbursements. A defendant "only needs to demonstrate a foundation in evidence, 'however tenuous,' to support his theory, but a 'mere scintilla of evidence...is not sufficient to warrant a defense instruction.' " United States v. Canady, 578 F.3d 665, 672–73 (7th Cir. 2009) (quoting United States v. Buchmeier, 255 F.3d 415, 427 (7th Cir. 2001)). Not only could Mr. Simon point to nothing suggesting that he relied on the alternative income characterizations when deciding not to report the payments as income, there was affirmative evidence to the contrary. Mr. Simon consistently recorded the payments as loans in his own records, noted them as loans on the tax returns of the businesses making the alleged loans, and characterized them as loans in UCC documents and bankruptcy filings. This evidence that Mr. Simon exclusively categorized the payments as loans negates any possible inference that he might have relied on a good faith belief that the payments were something else. Like the defendant in Kokenis, Mr. Simon "seems to be asserting that just because there may be evidence to show that someone could have had a good-faith belief that he wasn't violating the law, then he should be able to present such evidence to the jury. Not so. Without any connection to his state of mind, such evidence is irrelevant." Kokenis, 662 F.3d at 930; see also United States v. Trudeau, 812 F.3d 578, 591 (7th Cir. 2016) ("When a defendant offers nothing but speculation to link a piece of evidence to his state of mind, the evidence is properly excluded unless the defendant offers corroboration that the evidence in fact influenced his mental state.") (emphasis in original).

Moreover, there was no prejudice to Mr. Simon. The government points out that there was even less justification for treating the payments as partnership distributions or expense reimbursements than there was for treating them as loans; the loan-based defense truly was the only one with even a shadow of support in the record. It's unlikely the jury would have credited Mr. Simon's willfulness defense had it been presented to them, because the record didn't actually support characterizing the payments as the alternate forms of nontaxable transfers Mr. Simon proposes. It isn't necessary to review the problems with a partnership or reimbursement-based defense here, however, because even if Mr. Simon had presented his willfulness-based defense and the jury had credited it against all odds, he would still have been convicted on the tax fraud counts. Counts 1-4 of the indictment alleged that Simon's tax returns were fraudulent in two ways – underreporting income, and failing to disclose his interests in foreign accounts – and the jury only needed to find one willful, material falsehood to convict him on these counts. The willfulness-based argument that Mr. Simon claims was critical to his defense was only relevant to one of the two falsehoods, and would have provided no defense to the allegation that Mr. Simon's tax returns were false because they didn't disclose his foreign accounts on Schedule B of the returns.

9 The jury could have convicted on counts 1-4 based solely on the nondisclosure of foreign accounts and would almost certainly have done so, given that it convicted Mr. Simon of failing to file the required FBAR reports disclosing the same foreign accounts. Indeed, by convicting the FBAR counts the jury necessarily found that Mr. Simon had foreign accounts he was required to disclose. The only way the jury could have acquitted on the tax fraud counts, then, would be if jurors believed Mr. Simon's failure to disclose wasn't willful. Counts 5-8 also had a willfulness requirement, so this would have been highly unlikely; the jury would have had to find that Mr. Simon's failure to disclose his foreign accounts in the FBAR reports was willful but that his failure to disclose those accounts on his tax returns was an honest mistake. Both at trial and on appeal, Mr. Simon took the position that the Schedule B accusations and the FBAR accusations stood or fell together. See United States v. Simon, 727 F.3d at 698 ("Both Simon and the government treated [the Schedule B issues] as coterminous with the FBAR issue. That is, if Simon prevailed on the FBAR issue, he could prevail on the Schedule B issue. On the other hand, if he lost on the FBAR issue, he also lost on his Schedule B defense."). Because Mr. Simon lost on the FBAR issue, he would have lost on the Schedule B issue and the jury would have convicted him of tax fraud regardless of whether it believed his tax returns also understated his income.

Mr. Simon isn't entitled to relief on his "primary" claim: that his counsel's elementary legal mistakes prevented him from mounting his planned defense that any underreporting of his income wasn't willful, because the payments would still have been nontaxable if considered partnership distributions or expense reimbursements. He wouldn't have been entitled to present his alternative tax law theories or the good-faith defense based on them to the jury regardless of what counsel had done, because there was no evidence Mr. Simon had ever actually considered or relied upon those alternate characterizations of the payments in preparing his returns. The law simply doesn't support the willfulness-based defense Mr. Simon now insists he planned to raise, so counsel's inability to present that defense to the jury couldn't have been constitutionally ineffective performance. Moreover, the jury rejected Mr. Simon's defense to the other alleged falsity on his tax returns – the failure to report foreign accounts in Schedule B. He would therefore have been convicted on the tax fraud counts in any case, and could have suffered no prejudice from his attorneys' inability to present his willfulness-based defense regarding the characterization of the payments.

B. Ineffective assistance related to the mail fraud charges

Mr. Simon also argues that his attorneys provided constitutionally ineffective assistance in defending him against the mail fraud charges in the indictment. Counts 9-19[2] alleged that Mr. Simon committed mail fraud in the course of sending financial aid applications to the private schools his children attended or sought to attend. The indictment alleged that Mr. Simon underreported his income on applications for need-based financial aid in the same way he underreported his income on his tax returns as alleged in counts 1-4. Mr. Simon argues that his counsel failed to adequately investigate potential defenses to these charges. He says his counsel missed two legal infirmities in the indictment that could have formed the basis for meritorious motions to dismiss the mail fraud counts. He also claims that apart from these legal arguments, his attorney neglected to locate and call witnesses that would have been favorable to the defense.

"Money or property"

When a claim of ineffective assistance is based on counsel's failure to present a motion, the court looks to whether the proposed motion would have been meritorious. See United States v. Cieslowski, 410 F.3d 353, 360 (7th Cir. 2005); Owens v. United States, 387 F.3d 607, 610 (7th Cir. 2004). The inquiry turns to whether the legal arguments for dismissal that Mr. Simon now makes would have been successful if raised in a pretrial motion to dismiss or a mid-trial motion for judgment of acquittal.

The first legal infirmity that Mr. Simon identifies concerns whether his children's private schools had a property right in the full value of tuition. To convict Mr. Simon of mail fraud, the government needed to prove that he used the mails in furtherance of "any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises." 18 U.S.C.A. § 1341. The "money or property" targeted by the scheme need not be physical, tangible property, Carpenter v. United States, 484 U.S. 19 (1987), but the victim must actually have a recognized property right in the object of the scheme at the time the fraud is committed. Cleveland v. United States, 531 U.S. 12, 15 (2000) ("It does not suffice, we clarify, that the object of the fraud may become property in the recipient's hands; for purposes of the mail fraud statute, the thing obtained must be property in the hands of the victim.).

10 Mr. Simon insists that need-based financial aid doesn't result in the transfer of any money or property from a school to a student's family; the schools use need-based aid awards to reduce the amount of tuition they would otherwise charge, so they have no cognizable "property right" in the full price of tuition. The government responds that the private schools had a property right to the full amount of tuition, and that by fraudulently pleading poverty Mr. Simon induced the schools to offer his family a hefty tuition discount.

Mr. Simon's argument blinks the fact that he isn't constitutionally entitled to a perfect defense; so long as his attorneys mounted a professionally reasonable defense, they were under no obligation to bring every conceivably colorable motion Mr. Simon can identify after the fact. As Mr. Simon himself acknowledges, "what may constitute money or property for the purpose of the [mail fraud statute] has been the subject of numerous appellate court decisions" and "circuit court opinions vary as to when a money or property right is implicated." No controlling court opinion seems to have directly addressed whether underreporting income on financial aid forms satisfies the "money or property" element of the mail fraud statute, so to determine whether the charges against Mr. Simon should be dismissed his attorneys needed to navigate a tangled web of case law and compare his conduct to dozens of not-quite-analogous schemes. Given the imprecise contours of the "property right" requirement and the difficulty of harmonizing the cases, even an attorney who incorrectly concluded that his client's scheme fit the statute might not necessarily fall below the constitutional minimum of effective assistance. Put simply, on such complex and unsettled legal ground a professionally reasonable attorney is entitled to some room for error. That Mr. Simon can now in hindsight point to colorable legal arguments his attorneys didn't raise doesn't mean his constitutional right to counsel was violated.

In any event, Mr. Simon's counsel wasn't ineffective because his proposed legal argument isn't meritorious. He relies on Cleveland v. United States, 531 U.S. 12 (2000), for the proposition that the mail fraud statute only applies when a victim is deprived of property actually in its hands at the time of the fraud. Cleveland concerned a scheme in which the defendants made false statements to the State of Louisiana to obtain video poker licenses. The defendants were convicted of defrauding the state, but the Supreme Court held that the convictions had to be reversed; because the defendants paid the required licensing fees and a share of their revenue to the state, the state hadn't actually been deprived of any "money or property." Id. at 22-23. The Court held that the state had only a regulatory interest in who received the licenses, not a cognizable property right for purposes of the mail fraud statute.

Cleveland differs significantly from Mr. Simon's case. Mr. Simon is right that under Cleveland, gain to the defendant isn't enough to satisfy the mail fraud statutes without a corresponding loss to the victim of something in which the victim has a property right. But unlike in Cleveland, Mr. Simon's false statements about his income deprived the private schools of something of value – the full price of tuition – that they would otherwise have received. The private schools didn't have a mere "regulatory interest" in which students received need-based financial aid, because each award of aid meant an attending student paid less than full tuition; a spot in the class allocated to a student attending for free could otherwise have been occupied by a student paying full price.

11 Mr. Simon's reliance on United States v. Adler, 186 F.3d 574 (4th Cir. 1999) is misplaced. Adler concerned a situation in which the defendant controlled a business that owed a debt to the victim, and that business received a large settlement payment from an unrelated suit. The defendant told the victim that he could pay the debt once the settlement proceeds came in. Realizing that he would have no money left if he used the settlement money to pay the debt, the defendant instead paid the settlement money to himself as a bonus. When the company's creditor demanded to know where the settlement money was, the defendant provided a fraudulent list of transactions that left out the payment to himself. The Fourth Circuit held that while the creditor had a legitimate right to payment of the debt, it had no property right in the particular money the defendant received from the unrelated settlement because the defendant never promised to pay the debt with those specific proceeds. Id. at 579-580. Mr. Simon misreads Adler as holding that a defendant's promise to pay a debt isn't enough to create a property right in the creditor to whom the promise is made. The Adler court didn't reach that question at all because it explicitly found that no such promise existed. Id. at 578 ("Mr. Adler did undoubtedly tell Printgear that Adler Industries would be able to pay Printgear after it received the settlement ... But such a claim by Mr. Adler is a far cry from a promise to Printgear of that particular money, and the record reveals that no such promise was ever made."). In any event, the relevance of Adler isn't clear; there is no dispute here about whether the schools were entitled to any particular source of funds, only whether they were entitled to full tuition from someone who falsely claimed eligibility for a discount.

Mr. Simon insists that nothing entitled the school to the full amount of tuition payment. Because the school offered price discounts to some families, he argues, the school couldn't have had a property interest in the full amount of tuition; it only acquired an entitlement to the amount of tuition actually agreed upon after the need-based aid was awarded. The available authority belies that argument: the relevant cases hold that a defendant who uses fraud to avoid paying the full amount due for a good or service deprives the victim of property within the meaning of the mail fraud statute.

In Pasquantino v. United States, 544 U.S. 349 (2005), the Supreme Court held that defendants committed fraud[3] when they devised a scheme to smuggle liquor out of Canada without paying excise taxes. The Court noted that "[t]he right to be paid money has long been thought to be a species of property," so avoiding paying the taxes was no different than stealing money directly from the Canadian treasury. Id. at 355-356 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). The private schools Mr. Simon's children attended had a right to be paid money – children attending the schools were obligated to pay tuition. Mr. Simon made fraudulent statements to the schools to avoid paying the full amount due, and in so doing he deprived the schools of property in the form of their right to payment for the educational services they provided.

12 Persuasive authority from other circuits concerning even more closely analogous circumstances uniformly holds that a defendant who lies about his eligibility for a discount deprives his victim of a property right in the full price of the good or service bought. In United State v. Ali, 620 F.3d 1062 (9th Cir. 2010), the Ninth Circuit held that buyers deprived a software seller of property when they lied about their eligibility for a discount. The court held that the seller "had a right to full payment for its software and was deprived of that right when Defendants fraudulently obtained the software for less than full payment." Id. at 1067. Similarly, in United States v. Stewart, 872 F.2d 957 (10th Cir. 1989), the defendants lied about how they intended to distribute drugs to get a discount from the drug wholesaler. The court held that obtaining the fraudulent discount deprived the seller of property, because "the effect of the scheme was to deprive the manufacturers of money which they should have received" on the sale. Id. at 960. Just like the victims in Ali and Stewart, the private schools in this case established particular criteria a customer had to fulfill in order to obtain a price discount. And just like the defendants in those cases, Mr. Simon misrepresented that he met those criteria in order to obtain a price concession to which he wasn't legitimately entitled.

Mr. Simon tries to distinguish Ali by pointing out that in that case, the defendant and the victim had a contract before the fraud that entitled the victim to payment. He emphasizes that he had no similar contract with the private schools, and that the entitlement to money that forms the basis of a protected property right must come from a contract or statute. But the reasoning in Ali made no mention of the prior contract, relying instead on common law entitlements of a seller to payment. Mr. Simon's argument that a contract or statute is necessary to create a property right seeks to import into the case law limitations that don't appear in it. He also tries to distinguish Stewart based on its age, suggesting that its reasoning depended partly on the gain to the defendant and that Cleveland later held that such gain to a defendant alone can't support a mail fraud conviction. Mr. Simon misreads Stewart. Its reasoning doesn't hinge on gain to a defendant alone, but rather on the fact that falsely representing one's eligibility for a discount is intended to "gain money or property at the expense of the victim." United States v. Stewart, 872 F.3d at 960. It is precisely this deprivation of the victim's property that the mail fraud statute punishes. Stewart remains good law, its reasoning is persuasive, and its factual circumstances are so close to Mr. Simon's that it is fatal to his argument that his particular misstatements were outside the scope of the mail fraud statute.

For these reasons, Mr. Simon's misrepresentation of his financial status to his children's private schools deprived the schools of "money or property" under the mail fraud statutes and a motion to dismiss the mail fraud counts on that basis would have failed. Mr. Simon's attorneys weren't constitutionally ineffective in deciding not to bring a meritless motion to dismiss.

Timing of the mailings

The other argument Mr. Simon thinks should have been raised in a pretrial motion directed at some of the mail fraud charges concerns the timing of the mailings at issue. Counts 9-12 of the indictment concerned one particular private school, Canterbury School in Fort Wayne, Indiana. Three of Mr. Simon's children attended Canterbury for the 2004-2005 school year, and Mr. Simon applied for need-based financial aid on behalf of all three. Mr. Simon's financial aid applications were demonstrably false in a number of respects, including reporting that he spent no money on clubs or vacations the prior year when he was actually a dues-paying member of numerous expensive country clubs and had taken a vacation to Disney World. The mailings charged in counts 9-12 weren't the fraudulent financial aid applications, but rather the year-end billing statements confirming financial aid awards for each child that Canterbury mailed to Mr. Simon after the school year ended. Mr. Simon argues that if his attorneys had investigated further, they would have discovered that the statements were mailed at the end of the 2004-2005 school year and so came after the alleged fraud was complete and played no role in furthering it.

13 Mr. Simon isn't really complaining about evidence that could have been located but wasn't; he simply wishes his attorneys had mounted a particular defense that they chose not to. The only thing Mr. Simon says would have been revealed by more "investigation" was the date of the mailings relative to the posting of financial aid awards. No investigation is needed to know that schools award financial aid at the beginning of the school year, and it seems unlikely that Mr. Simon's large team of lawyers and investigators all remained wholly ignorant of the fact that the end-of-year billing statements charged in the indictment were mailed at the end of the year. Mr. Simon's real claim seems to be that his lawyers were constitutionally ineffective in not moving to dismiss the Canterbury charges based on the timing of the mailings.

Again, nothing in the constitution required Mr. Simon's counsel to make every conceivably colorable argument. Counsel reasonably chose to defend the mail fraud charges on materiality grounds, arguing that because the schools wanted Mr. Simon's academically gifted children to enroll, they were willing to make price concessions and told Mr. Simon that the financial information he put down in the applications wouldn't really matter. This wasn't an indefensible choice; that school officials didn't consider themselves defrauded and in fact continue to support the Simon family could certainly have convinced a jury that the government was overreaching with these particular charges. In contrast, moving to dismiss because of the timing of the mailings would risk wasting valuable trial preparation time briefing a complex legal issue – time that could otherwise have been spent working on issues that didn't concern only a tiny fraction of the government's case against Mr. Simon.

Regardless, Mr. Simon's claim – whether viewed as an attack on his lawyers' strategic choices or as a criticism of the scope of their investigation – falls apart for the independent reason that a motion to dismiss the charges based on the timing of the mailings wouldn't have succeeded. The mail fraud statute doesn't punish a scheme to defraud per se, but rather punishes use of the mails "for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice or attempting so to do." 18 U.S.C.A. § 1341. Even an innocent, routine mailing by a third party containing no false statements itself can satisfy the statutory mailing element, provided that the mailing was part of the scheme as contemplated by the schemer. See Carpenter v. United States, 484 U.S. 19, 28 (1987); Parr v. United States, 363 U.S. 370, 390 (1960). The mailing at issue need not itself be an essential element of the scheme, but must be at least "incident to an essential part of the scheme," Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1, 8 (1954), or "a step in [the] plot," Badders v. United States, 240 U.S. 391, 394, (1916). Even a mailing that occurs after the money or property targeted by the scheme has been received can fall within the scope of the statute, if it helps to conceal the fraud from detection or facilitates an ongoing scheme. See Schmuck v. United States, 489 U.S. 705, 711-712 (1989).

Mr. Simon emphasizes that the billing statements came in June 2005, after the 2004-2005 school year had ended and financial aid had already been awarded. He insists that the statements did nothing to conceal the scheme or make a later step in the scheme possible; they simply confirmed that no money was due on the accounts of Mr. Simon's children. While Mr. Simon is correct that financial aid had already been fully paid out for the 2004-2005 year by the time these mailings occurred, he takes too narrow a view of the fraudulent scheme. As the government notes, Mr. Simon's children continued to attend Canterbury for years after the 2004-2005 academic year. [4] Getting confirmation from the school that he owed no money at the end of the academic year proved to Mr. Simon that he had gotten away with it; a full year after the financial aid applications, Canterbury remained unsuspecting of his true financial status. "The relevant question at all times is whether the mailing is part of the execution of the scheme as conceived by the perpetrator at the time," even if the mailing later proves to be documentation of the fraud that comes back to bite the schemer. Schmuck v. United States, 489 U.S. 705, 715 (1989). The billing statements reassured Mr. Simon that he remained in the school's good graces, and because he hoped to continue sending his kids there (and would fill out further financial aid applications to do so), a rational jury could have found that the mailings were part of the scheme as conceived by Mr. Simon. Mr. Simon's attorneys were accordingly not ineffective in declining to bring a motion to dismiss based on the timing of the mailings in counts 9-12.

Mr. Turnbull's testimony

14 Mr. Simon's final claim about his mail fraud counts is that had his attorneys more thoroughly investigated the charges against him, they would have identified and called Michael Turnbull as a witness. Mr. Turnbull was the director of admissions at Culver Academies, another private school Mr. Simon's children attended, and oversaw the school's financial aid committee during the years in question. Mr. Simon presents an affidavit from Mr. Turnbull, in which Mr. Turnbull says he doesn't recall Mr. Simon's investigators or attorneys contacting him and was never asked to testify as a witness at trial. Mr. Turnbull also states that Culver exercises discretion in awarding financial aid and uses it as a tool to offer price concessions, that when asked by parents about how to fill out spending information on the applications Mr. Turnbull would tell them to give their best guess, and that he sometimes encouraged parents to write "0" on the part of the forms asking how much the family could pay or to leave that question blank. Mr. Simon argues that had his attorneys interviewed Mr. Turnbull, Mr. Turnbull would have corroborated certain elements of Mr. Simon's general defense that (1) his answers on the financial aid application weren't materially false because the school doesn't care much about those answers, and (2) he filled out the forms exactly as the school directed him to.

An attorney representing a criminal defendant has a duty to make "some investigation into the prosecution's case and into various defense strategies" or to "make a reasonable decision that makes particular investigations unnecessary." Brown v. Sternes, 304 F.3d 677, 691 (7th Cir. 2002) (quoting Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 384 (1986)). Accordingly, whether an attorney's decision not to investigate a particular witness constitutes ineffective assistance depends on factors such as "counsel's overall diligence, the likely relevance of the witness's testimony, whether alternative ways of proving the point exist, and the strength of the government's case." United States v. Best, 426 F.3d 937, 945 (7th Cir. 2005). As Mr. Simon's own affidavit shows, his counsel conducted an extensive investigation that included interviewing the many people who had been interviewed by government agents. Critically, his attorneys interviewed Scott Joyner, Culver's director of financial aid, four times before trial. Because Mr. Joyner sat on Culver's financial aid committee and was familiar with Mr. Simon's specific case, Mr. Simon's attorneys could very reasonably have determined that a fishing expedition for other Culver employees who might have relevant testimony wasn't an efficient use of their time. Even if Mr. Simon's attorneys had missed a more favorable Culver witness, that doesn't mean that the decision not to interview other Culver employees was unreasonable.

15 Moreover, even if the limited investigation of Culver employees constituted deficient performance, Mr. Simon hasn't met his burden of proving prejudice. A defendant raising an ineffective assistance of counsel claim regarding the failure to call a witness is only entitled to relief on such a claim if he makes a specific, affirmative showing as to what the missing evidence would have been, United States ex rel. McCall v. O'Grady, 908 F.2d 170, 173 (7th Cir. 1990), and proves that the witness's testimony would have produced a different result, United States ex rel. Cross v. DeRobertis, 811 F.2d 1008, 1014 (7th Cir. 1987). Mr. Turnbull's testimony, as reflected in his affidavit, falls far short of that showing. Mr. Turnbull says he can't recall anything about what he did or didn't discuss with Mr. Simon, and offers only general testimony about what he sometimes told other parents. He doesn't say that he gave Mr. Simon specifically any instructions at all on how to fill out the aid applications. Mr. Simon complains that if interviewed at the time of trial Mr. Turnbull's memory might have been clearer, but it is Mr. Simon's burden of showing that testimony favorable to him wasn't presented. A petitioner who claims his attorney's failure to investigate violated his Sixth Amendment rights must "provide the court sufficiently precise information, that is, a comprehensive showing as to what the investigation would have produced." Richardson v. United States, 379 F.3d 485, 488 (7th Cir. 2003). Mr. Simon's speculation that an uncalled witness might have been able to corroborate his story isn't enough to meet the exacting standards for habeas relief.

In addition, even if Mr. Turnbull testified at trial and recalled giving Mr. Simon instructions on how to fill out the aid forms, that testimony wouldn't have materially changed the outcome on the mail fraud counts. Even if Mr. Turnbull had told Mr. Simon to give a "best guess" as to his spending and encouraged him to write "0" for the amount of tuition he could pay, that wouldn't excuse Mr. Simon from making specific false statements about his financial situation (such as complaining of phantom "major business failures"). The jury heard a wealth of evidence from which it could conclude that Mr. Simon's financial aid form responses were not his "best guess" as to the previous year's spending, given the wholesale disconnect between his actual lifestyle and his answers on the application. To the extent that Mr. Simon wanted to call Mr. Turnbull to testify that Culver wanted his children to attend and was willing to make concessions to ensure that, the jury already heard such evidence from other witnesses.

Mr. Simon can't show either that his counsel's decision not to interview Mr. Turnbull was unreasonable nor that it prejudiced his defense.

C. Ineffective assistance related to the Schedule B filing requirements

Next, Mr. Simon claims that his attorneys were ineffective in failing to investigate the filing requirements related to reporting foreign accounts on a tax return. Counts 1-4 of the indictment alleged that Mr. Simon filed false tax returns for the years 2003-2006. One of the ways the government argued Mr. Simon's returns were false was that Mr. Simon hadn't checked the "yes" box on Line 7a of IRS form 1040 Schedule B, which asks whether the filer has control over foreign financial accounts. Mr. Simon argues that his counsel was unaware that Line 7a doesn't simply ask if the filer has control over any foreign account; rather, it asks whether the filer has control over one or more accounts with a combined value exceeding $10,000. Had his attorneys adequately investigated this requirement, Mr. Simon argues, they would have requested jury instructions concerning the $10,000 limit. The jury instructions actually given at trial didn't inform the jury that they had to find Mr. Simon's accounts totaled over $10,000 to find that his not checking "yes" on the Schedule B forms was a falsehood. Alternately, Mr. Simon argues that if his attorneys were aware of the filing requirement they could have moved to dismiss based on a lack of proof that the accounts held over $10,000.

Given that Mr. Simon's responses on the Schedule B forms wouldn't have been false if his accounts totaled under $10,000, it was professionally unreasonable not to ensure that the jury was instructed on that point. But Mr. Simon isn't entitled to relief because he can't show prejudice from counsel's error. For three of the four years at issue, the government proved at trial that Mr. Simon's accounts did exceed $10,000 – no rational jury could have found otherwise, and a motion to dismiss those counts would have been dead in the water. Notably, the jury instructions for counts 5-8 (concerning Mr. Simon's failure to file FBAR reports for the foreign accounts) did include the $10,000 requirement, so in convicting Mr. Simon on those counts the jury necessarily found that his accounts met the minimum balance. And while the jury instructions didn't mention the $10,000 limit specifically, the jury was still well aware of that limit; the government offered as an exhibit the IRS instructions for Schedule B, which clearly state that a taxpayer can check "no" on Line 7a if the combined value of the foreign accounts is under $10,000. The government's closing argument explicitly directed the jury to consult these instructions during deliberations.

16 For 2004, the situation is different. The government concedes that there was no evidence that Mr. Simon's accounts met the minimum balance in that year – in fact, the government agreed to dismiss the 2004 FBAR count on that basis. Once the government made that admission, there was no excuse for Mr. Simon's attorneys not moving to dismiss count 2 (the 2004 Schedule B count) on the same basis; as both sides maintained throughout trial, the Schedule B and FBAR issues for each year stood or fell together. Still, the court agrees with the government that this error was a minor one in the context of the entire trial. No attorney is perfect, and the Sixth Amendment doesn't entitle Mr. Simon to a flawless defense. His attorneys vigorously put the government to its burden of proof on every charge, and mounted colorable defenses on every issue. That they missed a clear winning argument on an issue relating to one part of a single count in a complex 23-count trial doesn't mean they fell so far below professional standards of reasonableness that they weren't functioning as counsel within the meaning of the Sixth Amendment.

More importantly, Mr. Simon ignores that count 2 alleged two falsehoods on the tax return: checking "no" on Schedule B and underreporting income. Even had his attorneys noticed the $10,000 issue as to the 2004 Schedule B and successfully moved to dismiss, it wouldn't have resulted in dismissal of count 2 entirely because the allegations about income underreporting would survive. Mr. Simon could still be convicted on count 2 if the jury found that he underreported his income on his 2004 tax return. Mr. Simon's defense to the income underreporting for 2004 was exactly the same as his defense to the alleged underreporting in every other year: he argued that the money he received constituted loans and didn't need to be reported. The government's evidence was strong that the money Mr. Simon considered loans actually wasn't. And the jury convicted Mr. Simon on every other count that depended on his misrepresenting his financial status, so it would be somewhat bizarre for the jurors to decide the payments from the 2004 returns were legitimate untaxable loans but all the other purported loans in the case were fraudulent.

There simply isn't a reasonable probability that the jury would have acquitted Mr. Simon on count 2 even if his attorneys had succeeded in getting the Schedule B allegations to that count dismissed, because the jury would have found that Mr. Simon's 2004 tax return was false in underreporting his taxable income. Even if his attorneys provided ineffective assistance by not investigating the filing requirements of Schedule B, Mr. Simon hasn't carried his burden of showing that such a deficiency prejudiced him.

D. Ineffective assistance related to the TurboTax program

Mr. Simon next claims that his attorneys conducted an inadequate investigation of the workings of the TurboTax software that Mr. Simon used to prepare his tax returns. As already discussed, counts 1-4 alleged that Mr. Simon didn't disclose his control of foreign financial accounts totaling over $10,000 on Line 7a of Schedule B to the tax forms. Mr. Simon had such accounts, and for three of the four years charged his accounts met the $10,000 threshold requiring disclosure. Accordingly, his only available defense concerned his mental state: he didn't realize he needed to disclose the accounts, and failed to check "yes" on Line 7a purely by mistake.

According to Mr. Simon, he used a computer program called TurboTax to prepare his tax returns for the years in question. He says he told his attorneys before trial that he didn't think TurboTax asked him about foreign accounts and so didn't prepare a Schedule B form for him. His attorneys subpoenaed a TurboTax representative to talk about what the version of the program Mr. Simon used would and wouldn't have asked a user when automatically filling in Form 1040, but apparently TurboTax never responded and no representative testified at trial. Mr. Simon insists that had his attorneys diligently followed up, a TurboTax representative could have testified in support of Mr. Simon's defense that the program didn't automatically prepare a Schedule B form because he never reported over $1,500 in interest income. Alternatively, his attorneys could simply have asked an expert witness to recreate Mr. Simon's 2003-2006 tax returns using the versions of TurboTax from those years. He believes his attorneys provided ineffective assistance when they didn't diligently pursue and develop his TurboTax-based defense.

17 The decision by Mr. Simon's counsel not to go into greater depth on the TurboTax program was very reasonable. The evidence Mr. Simon says should have been presented actually might have been fatal to his willfulness defense. The expert affidavit he attaches to his § 2255 motion makes absolutely clear that had he answered the programs' questions truthfully, it would have prepared a Schedule B form and asked him about foreign accounts. This is so because there are two independent things that prompted TurboTax to print a Schedule B form: a user reporting over $1,500 in interest income or the user answering "yes" to questions about whether the user "[had] an interest in a foreign account" (in the 2003-2005 version of TurboTax) or "owned or signed on a foreign bank or broker or other financial account" (in the 2006 version). The evidence at trial clearly established that Mr. Simon had interests or signature authority over such foreign accounts; even now he doesn't claim that he could have truthfully answered "no" to those questions. Had he answered those questions truthfully, TurboTax would have prepared a Schedule B form asking about the accounts regardless of the amount of interest income Mr. Simon reported. [5] His attorneys reasonably decided not to press the issue and stopped investigating the workings of TurboTax. When an attorney begins investigating an issue and correctly surmises that it won't come out in his client's favor, that attorney's decision to cease the investigation is itself a strategic choice entitled to deference.

Even if Mr. Simon's lawyers could be said to have been professionally unreasonable in not following up on the subpoena to the TurboTax representative or having an expert recreate the returns, the error didn't prejudice Mr. Simon. First and foremost, the jury heard this defense. Evidence was presented that Mr. Simon used TurboTax, and one of Mr. Simon's expert witnesses testified that if an individual doesn't report $1,500 of interest income in a particular year, "TurboTax doesn't even print out the Schedule B." The jury had Mr. Simon's tax returns for the years in question, and could readily see that he didn't report over $1,500 in interest income for any of the years between 2003 and 2006. While Mr. Simon's attorneys didn't emphasize the defense by asking an expert to actually recreate Mr. Simon's tax returns with the program, they nonetheless presented every necessary piece of the defense to the jury; the government even made clear in its closing argument that Mr. Simon's defense to the Schedule B issue was that TurboTax didn't print out Schedule B's for him. Mr. Simon complains that his attorneys didn't emphasize this defense enough, but doesn't identify any specific part of the defense that wasn't actually presented.

The aborted investigation into a possible TurboTax-based defense didn't constitute ineffective assistance of counsel, and even if it did there was no conceivable prejudice to Mr. Simon. Mr. Simon insists he is entitled to an evidentiary hearing on this issue, but doesn't identify any factual disputes whatsoever on this point so no hearing is necessary.

E. Ineffective assistance related to Mr. Simon's testimony

Lastly, Mr. Simon complains about the decision that he wouldn't testify at trial. Mr. Simon suggests several pieces of evidence that he claims could only have come in through his own testimony, and several pieces of evidence admitted at trial that he claims could only have been rebutted by his testimony. Through an affidavit attached to his motion, Mr. Simon relates in detail his recollection of how he and his attorneys discussed the prospect of Mr. Simon testifying. He identifies two errors that he believes constituted ineffective assistance: (1) his attorneys didn't adequately prepare him and didn't call him as a witness, and (2) they never explicitly informed him that the decision whether to testify was his alone.

Anthony LaSpada, Mr. Simon's lead defense counsel, submitted his own affidavit disputing essentially all the allegations in Mr. Simon's affidavit about how the defense team approached the possibility of Mr. Simon testifying. One expert and one investigator who were both part of Mr. Simon's defense team also submitted affidavits that generally corroborate Mr. LaSpada's story and refute Mr. Simon's. Mr. Simon believes these factual disputes necessitate an evidentiary hearing.

18 Mr. Simon isn't entitled to a hearing, for two reasons. The first is that a habeas petitioner can't ensure himself an evidentiary hearing simply by providing an affidavit saying that his lawyer stopped him from testifying. “[T]his barebones assertion by a defendant, albeit made under oath, is insufficient to require a hearing or other action on his claim that his right to testify in his own defense was denied him. It just is too facile a tactic to be allowed to succeed.” Underwood v. Clark, 939 F.2d 473, 476 (7th Cir. 1991). Because of the ease of making such a claim and the waste of judicial resources that would occur if every defendant were entitled to a hearing by saying the magic words “my lawyer kept me off the stand,” pragmatic considerations require that someone other than the defendant back up his story. See id. (holding that “some substantiation is necessary, such as an affidavit from the lawyer who allegedly forbade his client to testify” in order to “give the claim sufficient credibility to warrant a further investment of judicial resources in determining the truth of the claim.”).

Second, even taking his version of events as true, he isn't entitled to relief. With regard to Mr. Simon's argument that his counsel was constitutionally ineffective for not preparing him to testify and not calling him as a witness, Mr. Simon asserts that: (1) he and his attorneys initially planned for him to take the stand; (2) his attorneys spent no time preparing him to testify; and (3) on the morning of the last day of trial, his attorneys told him they didn't want to call him to testify and gave reasons. The decision about whether Mr. Simon would testify was his alone; his attorneys couldn't have prevented him from testifying and couldn't have forced him to testify against his will. To the extent that Mr. Simon is challenging not the decision to avoid calling him but rather the extent to which his attorneys prepared him for his testimony, whether they prepared him was irrelevant because he chose not to testify. Mr. Simon doesn't assert in his affidavit or his § 2255 motion that the alleged inadequacy of the preparation influenced his decision not to take the stand, so whether his attorneys spent enough time going over his testimony with him is a moot point.

Mr. Simon admits in his affidavit that his attorneys discussed the prospect of Mr. Simon testifying, and explained that having him testify would be a bad idea. He recalls them giving him two reasons for that recommendation: that the trial judge “did not like” him and that if he testified he risked an obstruction of justice enhancement at sentencing. Accurate or not, those are exactly the kind of strategic considerations Strickland insulates from hindsight review. And there were many other excellent reasons his attorneys may have had for advising Mr. Simon not to take the stand. Chief among these was that a federal judge in a separate bankruptcy proceeding had made several formal findings that Mr. Simon's testimony wasn't credible. The trial court might have allowed the government to cross-examine Mr. Simon about those findings. See United States v. Dawson, 434 F.3d 956, 959 (7th Cir. 2006). Reasonable counsel could certainly have concluded that Mr. Simon's testimony wasn't worth the risk that the jury would hear about a federal judge essentially calling Mr. Simon a liar.

The second facet of Mr. Simon's claim – that he is entitled to relief because his attorneys never let him know that the decision to testify was his alone –fares no better. For one thing, it is belied by Mr. Simon's own affidavit. He admits that his attorneys told him he had the right to testify. While he insists that he misinterpreted this statement (believing it meant that the government couldn't prevent him from testifying, but his own lawyer still could), he doesn't allege that his attorneys actually said anything that could be fairly construed as suggesting that interpretation. Mr. Simon's attorneys can't be blamed for assuming a client as educated and worldly as Mr. Simon would understand a clear statement in plain English that he had the right to testify. Mr. Simon also admits that on the last day of trial, his attorney asked him whether he would testify. Even if Mr. Simon wrongly believed that he had no choice before that, the question alone should have sufficed to correct his thinking. Mr. Simon tries to explain why he didn't infer from this question that the choice was his to make, but his explanations are too weak to warrant discussion. Even taking his affidavit as true, Mr. Simon's attorneys said enough to put him on notice that it was up to him whether to testify in his own defense.

19 Finally, failing to inform an client of the right to decide whether to testify doesn't fall below an objective standard of reasonableness. Mr. Simon concedes in his motion that “[t]he Seventh Circuit has indicated that the failure to inform a defendant that the right to testify is his alone is not ineffective assistance of counsel.” He is correct. See Taylor v. United States, 287 F.3d 658, 661 (7th Cir. 2002) (“There may be a factual dispute about whether counsel told [the defendant] in so many words that the accused alone makes the decision whether to testify, but this dispute is not material.”). Mr. Simon argues that other courts of appeal have held otherwise, and suggests that they take the better position. But the law of this circuit governs decisions by this court, and this court lacks the power to overrule opinions by the court of appeals.

Accordingly, Mr. Simon's attorneys didn't provide ineffective assistance regarding Mr. Simon's decision whether to testify. Because Mr. Simon hasn't identified any material factual dispute, he isn't entitled to an evidentiary hearing.

III. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the court DENIES Mr. Simon's § 2255 motion to vacate his sentence (Doc. No. 194). Moreover, because Mr. Simon hasn't made a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right, the court declines to issue a certificate of appealability. See 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c).

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2016 WL 3597579, 118 A.F.T.R.2d 2016-5065

Footnotes

[1] Mr. Simon notified the court that he anticipated being released to home confinement on June 1, 2016 and so may no longer be in custody. Nonetheless, he has notified the court that he intends to pursue relief under § 2255 despite his release, and he is entitled to do so because he was in custody when he filed his petition. See Virsnieks v. Smith, 521 F.3d 707, 717-718 (7th Cir. 2008).

[2] The jury convicted Mr. Simon of most of the mail fraud counts, but acquitted him with regard to the three specific mailings involved in counts 13, 14, and 16.

[3] Technically wire fraud, but the wire and mail fraud statutes use identical language (aside from the jurisdictional element) and decisions based on one are commonly consulted in interpreting the other. See United States v. Turner, 551 F.3d 657, 666 n.4 (7th Cir. 2008) (“Cases construing the mail-fraud statute are equally applicable to cases involving violations of the wire-fraud statute.”).

[4] Mr. Simon initially argued that his children never returned to Canterbury after 2004-2005, so there was no ongoing scheme for the mailings to further after he received the 2004-2005 financial aid. He abandons this argument in his reply brief, admitting that his children continued to attend Canterbury.

[5] Mr. Simon's only response on this point is that “any questions regarding an interest in a foreign account, distribution from a foreign trust, or owning or signing on a foreign account are asked at a different time in a catchall list of questions that are unrelated to interest income.” That is of course irrelevant; whenever the program asked the questions, Mr. Simon had an obligation to answer them truthfully.

End of Document

206 F.Supp.3d 1
United States District Court,
District of Columbia.

Eva MAZE, et al., Plaintiffs
v.
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, et al., Defendants.
Marie M. Green, et al., Plaintiff
v.
Internal Revenue Service, et al., Defendants.

Civil Action Nos. 15-1806 (CKK), 16-1085 (CKK)
|
Signed 07/25/2016

Synopsis
Background: Taxpayers who had failed to report funds held in foreign bank accounts and who had entered in the Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program (OVDP), a voluntary disclosure program established by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) brought action against IRS, alleging violation of the Administrative Procedure Act based on IRS's failure to provide direct method of entry into Streamlined Filing Compliance Procedures (SFCP), a subsequently established disclosure program, which imposed on taxpayers greater offshore penalties, exposure to additional civil penalties, increased filing burdens, disparate standard of review, and longer case-review time as compared to other similarly situated applicants, and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. IRS moved to dismiss.

Holdings: The District Court, Colleen Kollar-Kotelly, J., held that:

[1] requested relief was restraint of assessment and collection of accuracy-related penalties and failure-to-file penalties;

[2] requested relief to switch programs was restraint on assessment and collection of unpaid taxes;

[3] requested relief to directly enter into SFCP would have shifted burden of proof for finding of willfulness, and therefore restrained assessment and collection of unpaid taxes; and

[4] taxpayers possessed adequate alternative remedies.

Motion granted.

Attorneys and Law Firms

3 Joseph Brant Judkins, George M. Clarke, III, Baker & McKenzie, LLP, Washington, DC, for Plaintiffs.

4 Geoffrey John Klimas, Joseph E. Hunsader, Richard Jeremy Hagerman, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

COLLEEN KOLLAR-KOTELLY, United States District Judge

Plaintiffs are individuals who failed to report offshore income in foreign accounts, to file required documentation regarding these funds, and to pay the requisite amount of taxes associated with those funds. After they were made to see the error of their ways, each began to participate in a voluntary program of the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") to begin to unwind these errors. The program in which they began to participate is now one among a family of such programs designed to encourage delinquent taxpayers to correct their previous errors. Each of these programs encourages participation by providing benefits to would-be taxpayers, as well as replenishing the public fisc. Plaintiffs now seek injunctive and declaratory relief against the IRS and associated defendants in connection with these programs, including a declaration that certain rules regarding transitions between two of these programs are unlawful; an injunction against the enforcement of those rules; and a judgment that Plaintiffs can withdraw from one program and enter another, contrary to the existing rules governing those programs.

Before the Court is Defendants' [9] Motion to Dismiss filed in the case captioned Maze v. Internal Revenue Service (15-cv-1806).[1] Defendants first argue that this Court is deprived of subject matter jurisdiction over this case as a result of the Anti-Injunction Act and the tax exception to the Declaratory Judgment Act. They next argue that the United States has not waived its sovereign immunity over the claims in this case because the claims pertain to enforcement decisions that are committed to agency discretion by law. See 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2) (Administrative Procedure Act inapplicable when "(2) agency action is committed to agency discretion by law"). Upon consideration of the pleadings, [2] the relevant legal authorities, and the record for purposes of this motion, the Court GRANTS Defendants' [9] Motion to Dismiss. As explained further below, the Court concludes that it has no jurisdiction over this action in light of the Anti-Injunction Act and the tax exception to the Declaratory Judgment Act. Therefore, the Court does not reach Defendants' argument that this case must be dismissed because enforcement activities are committed to the agency's discretion by law. This case is dismissed in its entirety for want of subject matter jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1).

*5 I. BACKGROUND

The Court limits its presentation of the background to the key facts that are necessary for the Court's resolution of the fundamental issue presented in the pending motion: whether the Court is deprived of jurisdiction over this action in light of the jurisdiction-stripping provision of the Anti-Injunction Act and in light of the tax exception to the Declaratory Judgment Act.

A. Statutory and Regulatory Context

[1] [2] [3] The United States tax system has a broad reach. Notably, "[t]he United States income tax system reaches all U.S. citizens' income no matter where in the world it is earned, 'unless it is expressly excepted by another provision in the Tax Code.' " Rogers v. Comm'r of I.R.S., 783 F.3d 320, 322 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied ––– U.S. ––––, 136 S.Ct. 369, 193 L.Ed.2d 291 (2015) (citations omitted). In order to implement this system, as the Supreme Court has noted, "our tax structure is based on a system of self-reporting." United States v. Bisceglia, 420 U.S. 141, 145, 95 S.Ct. 915, 43 L.Ed.2d 88 (1975); see also Florida Bankers Ass'n v. U.S. Dep't of the Treasury, 799 F.3d 1065, 1073 (D.C.Cir.2015) (Henderson, J., dissenting), cert. denied ––– U.S. ––––, 136 S.Ct. 2429, 195 L.Ed.2d 780 (2016). Those reporting requirements are both detailed and complex, and they extend to certain foreign assets, accounts, and income. See, e.g., 26 U.S.C. § 6048(c) (reporting required by United States beneficiaries of foreign trusts). As the Supreme Court has further noted, "basically the Government depends upon the good faith and integrity of each potential taxpayer to disclose honestly all information relevant to tax liability." Bisceglia, 420 U.S. at 145, 95 S.Ct. 915. In addition to depending on the honesty of each taxpayer, the system includes an array of civil and criminal penalties, including, but not limited to, accuracy-related penalties for the underpayment of taxes and penalties for failing to file certain required documentation. See, e.g., 26 U.S.C. §§ 6046, 6046A, 6048, 6677, 6679 (failure to file penalties); id. § 6662 (accuracy-related penalties). This scheme includes criminal penalties for willful failures to comply with tax obligations. See, e.g., id. § 7201 ("Any person who willfully attempts in any manner to evade or defeat any tax imposed by this title or the payment thereof shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $100,000 ..., or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution."); id. § 7206 (criminal penalties for willful false statements in tax materials submitted).

The IRS engages in affirmative investigations of taxpayers suspected of non-compliance. However, in light of the limited resources available for such investigations, the IRS uses a variety of voluntary disclosure programs to encourage non-compliant taxpayers to come into compliance with the applicable law. Common to all such programs is that the IRS provides certain benefits for taxpayers in exchange for voluntary disclosure pursuant to the applicable guidelines. Providing some benefit for voluntary disclosure—even belated—encourages voluntary participation in those programs. [3] It is several such programs, all 6 with respect to foreign assets, accounts, and income, that are central to this case.

Two basic types of programs are at issue in this case: Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Programs ("OVDPs") and Streamlined Filing Compliance Procedures ("SFCP" or "Streamlined Procedures"). To participate in the 2012 OVDP, [4] which Plaintiffs entered, a taxpayer is required to comply with the following requirements, among others:

- file eight years of tax returns and Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBARs");
- pay tax and interest for eight years; and
- pay accuracy-related penalties for eight years.

Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program Frequently Asked Questions and Answers 2014 ("Revised 2012 OVDP FAQs"), https://www.irs.gov/individuals/international-taxpayers/offshore-voluntary-disclosure-program-frequently-asked-questions-and-answers-2012-revised (last visited July 18, 2016). [5]

In return for full compliance with the applicable requirements, the IRS offers participants the following three primary benefits. First, with the exception of the accuracy-related penalties under section 6662(a) of the Internal Revenue Code, a compromise of all penalties for which a taxpayer may be liable by paying 27.5% of the aggregate value of the taxpayer's foreign assets. Id. This compromise encompasses "FBAR and offshore-related information return penalties and tax liabilities for years prior to the voluntary disclosure period." Id. The compromise penalty, which consists of 27.5% of the value of a taxpayer's foreign assets, is referred to as the miscellaneous Title 26 offshore penalty. Id. Second, the IRS will not recommend to the Department of Justice criminal prosecution for any matter relating to tax noncompliance or failure to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts. [6] Id. As explained by the IRS, participation in an OVDP "generally eliminate [s] the risk of criminal prosecution for all issues relating to tax noncompliance and failing to file FBARs" for past tax years. AR 170, FAQ No. 4. Third, the IRS and the taxpayer sign a closing agreement, which constitutes a final settlement of all matters relating to the disclosure period and to years prior to the disclosure period. Id. Altogether these actions bar the IRS from taking action based on any tax delinquency in the 7 years before the eight-year disclosure period.

In 2014, the IRS introduced the 2014 Streamlined Procedures. The IRS explained that "[t]he expanded streamlined procedures are intended for U.S. taxpayers whose failure to disclose their offshore assets was non-willful." AR 146. To participate in the 2014 Streamlined Procedures, a taxpayer is required to comply with the following requirements, among others:

- file three years of tax returns and six years of FBARs;
- pay tax and interest for three years; and
- pay a miscellaneous Title 26 offshore penalty equivalent to 5% of the value of the taxpayer's foreign assets.

Streamlined Filing Compliance Procedures, https://www.irs.gov/individuals/international-taxpayers/u-s-taxpayers-residing-in-the-united-states (last visited July 18, 2016) ("2014 Streamlined Procedures (U.S.)"). A compromise miscellaneous offshore penalty payment is not required for non-U.S. residents. See U.S. Taxpayers Residing Outside the United States, https://www.irs.gov/individuals/international-taxpayers/u-s-taxpayers-residing-outside-the-united-states (last visited July 18, 2016) ("2014 Streamlined Procedures (Outside)"). In return, these filings and payments serve as a compromise for all penalties not involving willfulness for the three years covered by the program. See id.; 2014 Streamlined Procedures (U.S.). However, the IRS can pursue the taxpayer for fraud-related penalties for all years and for willful FBAR penalties for all years, as well as other penalties from the years prior to the three years subject to this program. See id. The Streamlined Procedures do not involve any assurance regarding a decision not to refer the matter for criminal prosecution—as the OVDP does—nor do they involve a final settlement agreement resolving tax issues pertaining to prior years. See id.

The relationship between these two programs is at the core of this case. A "taxpayer who submits an OVDP voluntary disclosure letter pursuant to OVDP FAQ 24 on or after July 1, 2014, is not eligible to participate in the streamlined procedures." AR 151; see also Streamlined Filing Compliance Procedures, https://www.irs.gov/individuals/international-taxpayers/streamlined-filing-compliance-procedures (last visited July 18, 2016) ("Streamlined Procedures Overview"). "A taxpayer eligible for treatment under the streamlined procedures who submits, or has submitted, a voluntary disclosure letter under the OVDP (or any predecessor offshore voluntary disclosure program) prior to July 1, 2014, but who does not yet have a fully executed OVDP closing agreement, may request treatment under the applicable penalty terms available under the streamlined procedures." AR 151 (emphasis added). "A taxpayer seeking such treatment does not need to opt out of OVDP, but will be required to certify, in accordance with the instructions set forth below, that the failure to report all income, pay all tax, and submit all required information returns, including FBARs, was due to non-willful conduct." AR 151-52. Finally, the IRS would consider a request for such treatment "in light of all the facts and circumstances of the taxpayer's case and will determine whether or not to incorporate the streamlined penalty terms in the OVDP closing agreement." AR 152.

In short, a taxpayer that enters an OVDP after July 1, 2014—shortly after the 2014 Streamlined Procedures were introduced—is categorically barred from the Streamlined Procedures. A taxpayer that had already entered an OVDP before that deadline, such as Plaintiffs in this case, may be able to receive the favorable penalty 8 terms of the Streamlined Procedures, but must remain in the OVDP in order to do so. The Court will refer to this option, as do Defendants, as the "Transition Treatment." An applicant is not automatically afforded the benefits of Transition Treatment. See Transition Rules: Frequently Asked Questions (FAQs), https://www.irs.gov/individuals/international-taxpayers/transition-rules-frequently-asked-questions-faqs (last visited on July 18, 2016) ("Transition FAQs"). Among other requirements for qualifying for this treatment, the IRS "must agree that the available information is consistent with the taxpayer's certification of non-willful conduct." Id. A taxpayer afforded the Transition Treatment will only be required to pay the miscellaneous Title 26 offshore penalty required under the Streamlined Procedures rather than the penalty required under the OVDP. Id. That is, for a domestic taxpayer, only a 5% penalty will be required as opposed to the 27.5% penalty mandated under the 2012 OVDP, as explained above. There is no alternative path for a taxpayer participating in an OVDP to leave such a program and enter the Streamlined Procedures on the terms applicable to new participants in that program.

Lastly, the treatment of participants in these several programs differs with respect to the availability of criminal non-prosecution letters. As noted above, under the OVDP, participants can receive a criminal non-prosecution letter, which provides assurance that the IRS will not refer related tax matters to the Department of Justice for criminal prosecution. Def.'s Mot. at 7. This benefit is not available under the 2014 Streamlined Procedures. See generally 2014 Streamlined Procedures (U.S.). By contrast, the benefit of non-prosecution letters remains available under the Transition Treatment because the participants never exit the OVDP itself; instead, they remain bound by the rules of that program, except that they are eligible to receive beneficial treatment regarding certain penalties, as detailed above. See generally Transition FAQs.

B. Plaintiffs' Claims and Relief Sought

Each plaintiff's claims emerges from a similar factual background: after a number of years of failing to report funds held in foreign bank accounts, each plaintiff entered the IRS's 2011 or 2012 Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program.[7] Compl. ¶¶ 82 (Eva Maze); 90 (Suzanne Batra); 97 (Margot Lichtenstein). Each subsequently sought to "directly enter" the 2014 Streamlined Procedures, and each was told that doing so was not possible. Id. ¶¶ 83-84 (Maze); 91-92 (Batra); 98-99 (Lichtenstein). Having received this response, they joined together to bring this action. The parties have not suggested any material differences 9 among the experiences of the several plaintiffs.

Based on these underlying allegations, Plaintiffs further allege that the "IRS blocked the Plaintiffs from withdrawing from the 2012 OVDP and entering the 2014 SFCP through any route other than the Transition Rules." Id. ¶ 103. Plaintiffs then claim that they were harmed by the IRS's "decision to deny Plaintiffs entry into the 2014 [Streamlined Procedures] through any route other than the Transition Rules." Id. ¶ 104. Plaintiffs further claim that "the IRS's failure to provide a direct method of entry into the 2014 SFCP imposed upon the Plaintiffs a greater offshore penalty, exposure to additional civil penalties, increased filing burdens, a disparate standard of review, and a longer case-review time (and thus attorneys' fees) as compared to other similarly situated applicants." Id.

On the basis of this claim of injury, Plaintiffs claim that Defendants actions violated two provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act. First, they claim that "Defendants actions in promulgating the Transition Rules were arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law." Id. ¶ 106 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A)). Second, they claim that the "Transition Rules" were procedurally defective because they "were contrary to the notice-and-comment rulemaking requirements" of the Administrative Procedure Act and were "without observance of procedure required by law." Id. ¶ 107 (citing 5 U.S.C. §§ 553, 706(2)(D)).

The Court presents in full the relief requested by Plaintiffs through the Complaint, as it pertains directly to the legal question before the Court. Plaintiffs request:

> A. A holding by the Court setting aside the Transition Rules as unlawful under 5 U.S.C. § 706(2);
>
> B. A judgment by the Court that, under 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A), the Transition Rules are arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law, and are therefore invalid;
>
> C. A judgment by the Court that the Transition Rules did not comply with the notice-and-comment rulemaking requirements of 5 U.S.C. § 553, were without observance of procedure required by law under 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(D), and are therefore invalid;
>
> D. A judgment that Plaintiffs may withdraw from the 2012 OVDP [Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program] and directly enter the 2014 SFCP [Streamlined Procedures] where the IRS must treat them the same as any other 2014 SFCP applicants;
>
> E. An injunction prohibiting Defendants or their agents from enforcing the Transition Rules;
>
> F. An award of attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses in this action; and
>
> G. Any other legal or equitable relief to which the Plaintiffs may show themselves to be justly entitled.

Compl., Request for Relief. To summarize, Plaintiffs request (1) judgments that the "Transition Rules" were unlawful under the Administrative Procedure Act, (2) an injunction allowing Plaintiffs to transfer from one IRS voluntary program to another, contrary to the IRS's existing rules prohibiting such a transfer; and (3) an injunction prohibiting the enforcement of the "Transition Rules." Moreover, it appears that Plaintiffs seek to retain benefits that are available only under the OVDP, specifically assurances from the IRS regarding the referral of matters for criminal prosecution for past tax years. Compare Defs.' Mot. at 13 (noting receipt of non-prosecution letters by Plaintiffs) and 10 Defs.' Reply at 3 (detailing benefits of non-prosecution letters) with Pls.' Opp'n at 20, 31 (failing to relinquish of benefits of non-prosecution letter). Finally, Plaintiffs never claim that they have paid all of the taxes and penalties they owe with respect to all eight tax years relevant to the voluntary programs considered in this case; they only claim that they have now paid taxes for the three years covered by the Streamlined Procedures.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

[4] [5] [6] [7] [8] [9] "Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction" and can adjudicate only those cases entrusted to them by the Constitution or an Act of Congress. Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 511 U.S. 375, 377, 114 S.Ct. 1673, 128 L.Ed.2d 391 (1994). The Court begins with the presumption that it does not have subject matter jurisdiction over a case. Id. To survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1), a plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that the Court has subject matter jurisdiction over its claim. Moms Against Mercury v. FDA, 483 F.3d 824, 828 (D.C.Cir.2007). In determining whether there is jurisdiction, the Court may "consider the complaint supplemented by undisputed facts evidenced in the record, or the complaint supplemented by undisputed facts plus the court's resolution of disputed facts." Coal. for Underground Expansion v. Mineta, 333 F.3d 193, 198 (D.C.Cir.2003) (citations omitted). "At the motion to dismiss stage, counseled complaints, as well as pro se complaints, are to be construed with sufficient liberality to afford all possible inferences favorable to the pleader on allegations of fact." Settles v. U.S. Parole Comm'n, 429 F.3d 1098, 1106 (D.C.Cir.2005). "Although a court must accept as true all factual allegations contained in the complaint when reviewing a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1)," the factual allegations in the complaint "will bear closer scrutiny in resolving a 12(b)(1) motion than in resolving a 12(b)(6) motion for failure to state a claim." Wright v. Foreign Serv. Grievance Bd., 503 F.Supp.2d 163, 170 (D.D.C.2007) (citations omitted).

III. DISCUSSION

Defendants argue that this Court has no jurisdiction over the claims in this case because of the jurisdiction-stripping provision of the Anti-Injunction Act and because of the analogous tax exception to the Declaratory Judgment Act. As explained below, the Court agrees with Defendants that this Court is deprived of jurisdiction over this action in its entirety by those statutes. Therefore, the Court does not reach Defendants' alternative argument that Plaintiffs may not bring these claims under the Administrative Procedure Act because the underlying enforcement regime is a matter committed to the IRS's discretion as a matter of law.

Under the Anti-Injunction Act, except as explicitly provided by the statute, "no suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court by any person."[8] 26 U.S.C. § 7421(a). "The Declaratory Judgment Act likewise prohibits most declaratory suits 'with respect to Federal taxes.' " Florida Bankers Ass'n v. U.S. Dep't of Treasury, 799 F.3d 1065, 1067 (D.C.Cir.2015) cert. denied ––– U.S. ––––, 136 S.Ct. 2429, 195 L.Ed.2d 780 (2016) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a)). Two acts are "coterminous." Id. (citing Cohen v. United States, 650 F.3d 717, 730–31 (D.C.Cir.2011) (en banc)). Practically that means that the scope of the Anti-Injunction Act governs 11 the outcome of this case, and there is no need to refer to the tax exception under the Declaratory Judgment Act further. See id. at 1068 ("For simplicity, we will refer only to the Anti–Injunction Act."); Cohen, 650 F.3d at 730–31 ("In this light, the case is greatly simplified. The DJA [Declaratory Judgment Act] falls out of the picture because the scope of relief available under the DJA is subsumed by the broader injunctive relief available under the AIA [Anti-Injunction Act].").

[10] [11] [12] [13] "The manifest purpose of § 7421(a) is to permit the United States to assess and collect taxes alleged to be due without judicial intervention, and to require that the legal right to the disputed sums be determined in a suit for refund." Enochs v. Williams Packing & Nav. Co., 370 U.S. 1, 7, 82 S.Ct. 1125, 8 L.Ed.2d 292 (1962). "As the Supreme Court explained, the provision reflected 'appropriate concern about the ... danger that a multitude of spurious suits, or even suits with possible merit, would so interrupt the free flow of revenues as to jeopardize the Nation's fiscal stability.' " Cohen v. United States, 650 F.3d at 724 (quoting Alexander v. "Americans United" Inc., 416 U.S. 752, 769, 94 S.Ct. 2053, 40 L.Ed.2d 518 (1974) (Blackmun, J., dissenting)). While the Anti-Injunction Act does not bar all legal claims pertaining to taxation, it does bar "those suits seeking to restrain the assessment or collection of taxes." Id. (quoting Bob Jones Univ. v. Simon, 416 U.S. 725, 737, 94 S.Ct. 2038, 40 L.Ed.2d 496 (1974)). Applying the Act "requires a careful inquiry into the remedy sought, the statutory basis for that remedy, and any implication the remedy may have on assessment and collection." Id. at 727; see also Z Street v. Koskinen, 791 F.3d 24, 30 (D.C.Cir.2015) (same). Upon careful consideration of the remedies sought by Plaintiffs, the basis for those remedies, and the implications for the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes, the Court concludes that it has no jurisdiction over this case and dismisses it accordingly.

Defendants present three ways in which this suit seeks to restrain the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes. First, Defendants argue that, if Plaintiffs were permitted to directly participate in the 2014 Streamlined Procedures, as they request, it would directly interfere with the ability of the IRS to assess and collect accuracy-related penalties and failure-to-file penalties, which are treated as taxes under the Anti-Injunction Act. Second, Defendants argue that, if Plaintiffs were permitted to directly participate in the 2014 Streamlined Procedures, it would result in the IRS being forced to compromise Plaintiffs' outstanding tax liability without receiving eight years of tax returns and payments—as required under the 2011 and 2012 OVDPs. Third, Defendants argue that, under the relief requested by Plaintiffs, if the IRS chose to investigate whether Plaintiffs actually qualified for the 2014 Streamlined Procedures, the IRS would be required to prove fraud before assessing additional taxes and penalties. Defendants also emphasize that Plaintiffs seek to retain the benefit of the non-prosecution letters that are issued under the OVDP, while also enjoying the benefits of the 2014 Streamlined Procedures. In addition to presenting these three pathways through which the requested relief would restrain the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not suffered a harm for which no alternative remedy exists and that, therefore, the attendant exception to the Anti-Injunction Act's jurisdictional bar is inapplicable.

With respect to each of these purported effects on tax assessment and collection, Plaintiffs respond that none of them constitutes 12 a restraint on the IRS's ability to assess or collect taxes. Plaintiffs present several additional arguments in response. First, they argue that, because they claim they have paid the three-years of taxes required under the streamlined procedures, there is nothing to "assess or collect." (They do not argue that they have paid taxes for the five earlier years encompassed by the OVDPs.) Second, they characterize the "Transition Rules" as a procedural rule and argue that the Anti-Injunction Act does not bar a challenge to such a procedural rule. Third, Plaintiffs argue that the requested relief would not restrain the assessment or collection of taxes because it would not bar the IRS from seeking tax payments for certain years that would not be covered by the 2014 Streamlined Procedures, including the five earlier years that are covered by the OVDPs. Finally, Plaintiffs argue that Anti-Injunction Act is inapplicable because Plaintiffs have no adequate alternative remedy to the current litigation.

The Court first considers whether this action seeks to restrain the assessment or collection of unpaid taxes in the first instance. The Court agrees with Defendants that it does. Then, the Court turns to the question of whether Plaintiffs lack an alternative remedy such that this case falls into that exception to the Anti-Injunction Act's jurisdictional bar. The Court once again agrees with Defendants that adequate alternative remedies are available. Therefore, the Court is deprived of jurisdiction over this action.

A. Restraint of Collection or Assessment of Unpaid Taxes

As noted above, Defendants argue that three facets of the relief sought by Plaintiffs constitute a restraint on the assessment or collection of unpaid taxes. The Court evaluates each of those facets, together with Plaintiffs' arguments that none of these facets constitutes a restraint on the assessment or collection of taxes. The Court then turns to Plaintiffs' additional arguments as to why this case does not entail the restraint of the assessment or collection of taxes.

1. Penalties Treated as Taxes

[14] [15] Certain penalties are treated as taxes for the purposes of the Anti-Injunction Act and of the Declaratory Judgment Act. Florida Bankers Ass'n, 799 F.3d at 1067 ("Because of its location in the U.S. Code, that penalty is treated as a tax for purposes of the Anti–Injunction Act."). Defendants argue that this case seeks to restrain the assessment and collection of taxes —specifically taxes that are owed but as of yet unpaid— because the relief it seeks would directly restrain the IRS's ability to collect certain penalties that are treated as taxes. The Court addresses the impact of the requested relief on various types of penalties in turn.

Under section 6662(a), an accuracy-related penalty of 20% is applicable to any "underpayment of tax required to be shown on a return." 26 U.S.C. § 6662(a). A provision in Chapter 68 of the Internal Revenue Code provides that the penalties in that chapter, which include the accuracy-related penalties, are considered taxes: "Any reference in this title to 'tax' imposed by this title [that is, the Internal Revenue Code] shall be deemed also to refer to the additions to the tax, additional amounts, and penalties provided by this chapter." Id. § 6665(a)(2). In Florida Bankers Association, the D.C. Circuit concluded that identical language in Chapter 68, Subchapter B, results in penalties in that subchapter being considered taxes under the Anti-Injunction Act. See Florida Bankers Ass'n, 799 F.3d at 1068. Because there is no basis to distinguish between the language analyzed 13 by the D.C. Circuit in Florida Bankers Association and the language in section 6665(a)(2), it is necessarily true that the accuracy-related penalties in Chapter 68 are similarly considered taxes for the purposes of the Anti-Injunction Act.

As explained above, participants in the 2012 OVDP must pay eight years of accuracy-related penalties (insofar as they are applicable to individual tax returns). The miscellaneous Title 26 offshore penalty does not serve as a compromise for these accuracy-related penalties. These requirements remain applicable to OVDP participants who receive the benefit of the Transition Treatment. See Transition FAQs, FAQ No. 9. By contrast, participants in the Streamlined Procedures are not required to pay accuracy-related penalties; instead, the 5% miscellaneous Title 26 offshore penalty serves as a compromise for all non-willful penalties for the three years in question, including the accuracy-related penalties. As a result, Plaintiffs' requested relief would bar the IRS from collecting accuracy-related penalties for the three years covered by the Streamlined Procedures. Because the accuracy-related penalties are considered taxes, the inability of the IRS to collect these penalties constitutes a restraint on the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes and penalties. Moreover, with respect to the five years covered by the OVDP but not covered by the Streamlined Procedures, the requested relief would substantially increase the difficulty in collecting the unpaid taxes and penalties. Specifically, while the IRS would not be barred from collecting accuracy-related penalties, it would not benefit from the automatic submission of tax returns required under the OVDP. The Court concludes that the substantial increase in the difficulty in the collection of those penalties constitutes a restraint on the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes, as well. That is, for both of these reasons, the requested relief constitutes a restraint on the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes.

In addition to the impact of the requested relief on the assessment and collection of accuracy-related penalties, Defendants identify other penalties that would be affected by the requested relief. As described above, participants in the 2012 OVDP are required to pay 27.5% of foreign assets as a compromise for all penalties other than accuracy-related penalties that may be owed by the taxpayers. These penalties include failure-to-file penalties under section 6677 in the following circumstances: for failure to file a return reporting a transaction with a foreign trust, see 26 U.S.C. § 6048(a); for failure to file a return to report ownership in a foreign trust, see id. § 6048(b); for failure to file a return for a foreign corporation, see id. § 6046; and for failure to file a return for a foreign partnership, see id. § 6046 A. As explained above, under the Streamlined Procedures, domestic taxpayers are required to pay only a miscellaneous Title 26 offshore penalty of 5% as a compromise for all penalties, including these failure-to-file penalties. In short, under the Streamlined Procedures, taxpayers compromise their penalties for a significantly lower payment than under the OVDP. [9]

The remaining question is whether the reduced-value compromise of these several penalties constitutes a restraint on the assessment or collection of taxes. All of the 14 failure-to-file penalties listed above are found in Subchapter B of Chapter 68 of the Internal Revenue Code. Therefore, they are considered taxes for the purposes of the Anti-Injunction Act. Florida Bankers Ass'n, 799 F.3d at 1068 (considering penalties in Subchapter B of Chapter 68). Accordingly, the Court concludes that the substantial reduction in the amount of the miscellaneous offshore penalty—from 27.5% of assets under the 2012 OVDP to 5% of assets—in order to compromise the failure-to-file penalties, among others, constitutes a restraint on the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes. [10]

In response, Plaintiffs focus on the FBAR penalty, arguing that it does not constitute a tax under the Anti-Injunction Act. See Pls.' Opp'n at 12-15. But Defendants never argue that the FBAR penalty in fact constitutes a tax. The impact of the requested relief on the IRS's ability to collect the FBAR penalty does not serve as one of the bases for Defendants' argument that this Court is deprived of jurisdiction over this action. Instead, there are other penalties—specifically the accuracy-related and failure-to-file penalties discussed above—that serve as the basis for Defendants' argument. Plaintiffs never discuss those specific penalties, let alone argue that they cannot serve as a basis for depriving this Court of jurisdiction under the Anti-Injunction Act. Plaintiffs also focus on the miscellaneous Title 26 offshore penalty, which they argue that the IRS "made up." But they are mistaking the nature of the miscellaneous penalty. It is not a new penalty that the IRS invented; it is a label that the IRS developed to refer to standard payments required of taxpayers in order to compromise other statutorily-created penalties, including the accuracy and failure-to-file penalties. In effect, it is a substitute for those other penalties. Because those penalties are considered taxes under the Anti-Injunction Act for the reasons explained above, so too is the substitute miscellaneous Title 26 offshore penalty. Finally, Plaintiffs emphasize that the IRS collects a miscellaneous penalty under any of programs involved. But that statement ignores the fact that the miscellaneous penalty is substantially reduced in size under the Streamlined Procedures—5% of foreign assets—compared to 27.5% under the 2012 OVDP. [11] That reduction itself constitutes a restraint on the collection and assessment of unpaid taxes.

For these reasons, the Court concludes that the impacts of the requested relief on the ability of the IRS to collect the accuracy and failure-to-file penalties discussed here constitute a restraint on the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes, depriving the Court of jurisdiction over this suit.

2. Submission of Tax Returns and Payments

[16] Defendants next argue that allowing Plaintiffs to switch from the 2012 OVDP to the 2014 Streamlined Procedures would restrain the assessment and collection 15 of unpaid taxes because the IRS would only receive tax returns for three years, rather than eight years under the 2012 OVDP. The Court agrees.

As explained above, participants in the 2012 OVDP, including the Transition Treatment under the OVDP, are required to file eight years of tax returns and to pay the associated taxes. By contrast, participants in the 2014 Streamlined Procedures are only required to file three years of tax returns and to pay the associated taxes. Under the Streamlined Procedures, Plaintiffs are correct that the IRS is not barred from seeking the tax returns for the previous five years. However, the burden on the IRS of taking affirmative action to ensure that those returns are filed and that the associated taxes are paid is higher than the burden under the 2012 OVDP, under which the filing of eight years of tax returns and the submission of tax payments for all of those years is a condition of participation. As noted above, Plaintiffs have never claimed that they have paid all of the taxes, interest, and penalties associated with the five years under the OVDP that are not covered by the Streamlined Procedures. Nor are they willing to undergo IRS examination with respect to those five years—which is required as a condition for exiting the OVDP. See Revised 2012 OVDP FAQs, No. 51. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' requested relief would shift the burden to the IRS to collect the unpaid taxes, as well as any associated penalties and interest, that are due for the five years that are not covered by the Streamlined Procedures. Accordingly, the Court has little trouble concluding that relief allowing Plaintiffs to switch from a program under which eight years of returns are filed to one under which only three years of returns are filed constitutes a restraint on the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes.

3. Shifting Burden of Proof Regarding Willfulness

[17] Taxpayers that qualify for the Transition Treatment within the OVDP or directly enter the 2014 Streamlined Procedures must certify, under the penalty of perjury, that they acted non-willfully with respect to the related tax activities. See Streamlined Procedures (Overview); Transition FAQs, FAQ No. 6 ("[Y]ou must provide to the IRS ... a written statement in the appropriate certification form that would be required under the Streamlined Filing Compliance Procedures signed under penalty of perjury certifying their non-willfulness with respect to all foreign activities/assets, specifically describing the reasons for the failure to report all income"). Even though the requirement that taxpayers certify non-willfulness is common to the Transition Treatment and to direct participation in the 2014 Streamlined Procedures, the IRS's treatment of this information is materially different. Applications do not automatically qualify for the Transition Treatment. Rather, "[b]efore transitional treatment is given, the IRS must agree that the taxpayer is eligible for transitional treatment and must agree that the available information is consistent with the taxpayer's certification of non-willful conduct." Id., FAQ No. 7. In making the determination about whether to allow Transitional Treatment for a particular taxpayer, the IRS assesses this information along with other information submitted. Id., FAQ No. 8. In short, before OVDP participants can receive the benefits of the Transition Treatment, the participants must convince the IRS that their activity was not willful. By contrast, to enter the Streamlined Procedures directly, the taxpayer must simply certify non-willfulness. See Streamlined Procedures (U.S.). The returns filed are then subject to auditing under the standard IRS procedures, 16 which necessarily places the burden on the IRS for showing willfulness. See Streamlined Procedures (Overview) ("Returns submitted under either the Streamlined Foreign Offshore Procedures or the Streamlined Domestic Offshore Procedures will not be subject to IRS audit automatically, but they may be selected for audit under the existing audit selection processes applicable to any U. S. tax return and may also be subject to verification procedures in that the accuracy and completeness of submissions may be checked against information received from banks, financial advisors, and other sources."). Accordingly, the relief that Plaintiffs request—directly entering the 2014 Streamlined Procedures rather than being subject to the Transition Treatment—would shift the burden to the IRS for finding willfulness before it could levy associated taxes, penalties, and interest.

Moreover, Defendants emphasize that Plaintiffs are receiving the benefits of assurances that the IRS will not refer them for criminal prosecution, which are only available under the OVDP but not under the Streamlined Procedures. See Defs.' Mot. at 13. Yet, Plaintiffs have not agreed to relinquish these benefits, even though they seek "direct" entry to the Streamlined Procedures, which do not offer the benefit of criminal non-prosecution letters. See Pls.' Opp'n at 20, 31.

Plaintiffs argue that the burden of proof for willfulness is established by statute and cannot be modified by agency practice. But the statute sets the burden of proof for willfulness in the litigation context. No litigation as to willfulness is involved here. Instead, what is involved is two different voluntary disclosure schemes set up by the IRS. For direct entry into the Streamlined Procedures, the IRS has set up the scheme such that taxpayers can participate upon certification of non-willfulness; they need not convince the IRS of their non-willfulness before receiving the benefits of this program. Instead, the IRS must establish willfulness before assessing additional taxes, penalties, and interest that may not otherwise be due under the Streamlined Procedures. By contrast for OVDP participants to receive the Transition Treatment, they must convince the IRS, through the documentation they submit, of the non-willfulness of their conduct. This difference is significant because the additional effort to show non-willfulness could easily hamper the IRS in its tax collection efforts, and because the additional burden on the IRS of proving willfulness—a precondition to certain additional taxes and penalties—restrains the assessment and collection of those unpaid taxes.

Plaintiffs are right that the two programs are established by the IRS. But that fact is immaterial. Plaintiffs are seeking a legal judgment allowing them to switch from one of those programs to the other contrary to the rules established for those programs. Because a greater burden is placed on the IRS under the Streamlined Procedures as compared to the Transition Treatment, a judgment allowing Plaintiffs to be considered directly under the 2014 Streamlined Procedures necessarily restrains the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes. Therefore, the Court concludes that the impact of the requested relief on the burden regarding willfulness is yet another reason that this Court is deprived of jurisdiction over this suit under the Anti-Injunction Act.

4. Plaintiffs' Additional Responses

In addition to Plaintiffs' arguments addressing the three specific bases for Defendants' claim that Plaintiffs seek to restrain the assessment and collection of taxes through this suit, Plaintiffs present several additional arguments as to why 17 there is no restraint on the assessment or collection of taxes in this case and, therefore, why this case is not barred by the Anti-Injunction Act. The Court concludes that none of those arguments have merit.

First, Plaintiffs claim that they have paid the three years of tax, interest, and penalties required under the Streamlined Procedures. (They never argue that they have paid all of the taxes, interest, and penalties due for the eight years encompassed by the OVDP.) On this basis, they argue that there is nothing left for the IRS to collect and, as a result, the Anti-Injunction Act is applicable. For this argument, they rely on Cohen v. United States, in which the D.C. Circuit sitting en banc concluded that the claims in that case did not "seek to restrain the assessment or collection of any tax" because, in part, "the IRS previously assessed and collected the excise tax at issue." 650 F.3d at 725. The facts in that case bear no resemblance to those in the case before this Court. In that case, "the money [was] in the U.S. treasury," and the "legal right to it has been previously determined." Id. Not so here. In support of this argument, Plaintiffs only state that they have paid the tax, interest, and penalties that would be due under the Streamlined Procedures—that is, for three years. But they never state that they have paid the taxes, penalties, and interest for the previous five years, which are required to be paid under the 2012 OVDP. Plaintiffs are not simply seeking entry into the Streamlined Procedures, as if writing on a blank slate; rather, they are seeking to transition from the OVDP into the Streamlined Procedures. Therefore, the entire eight years that are relevant under the OVDP are also relevant to the question of whether this suit seeks to restrain the assessment or collection of unpaid taxes. Because Plaintiffs have never claimed, let alone shown, that the "the money is in the U.S. treasury," id. at 725, with respect to all eight years at issue, this argument fails.

Second, Plaintiffs argue that the Anti-Injunction Act does not apply to this challenge to the Transition Treatment because it is a challenge to a procedural rules for sorting between two IRS programs. Once again, the cases on which Plaintiffs rely bear no resemblance to the case at hand. In Seven–Sky v. Holder, the D.C. Circuit considered a challenge to the individual mandate of the Affordable Care Act. 661 F.3d 1, 9 (D.C.Cir.2011) abrogated by Nat'l Fed'n v. Sebelius, 567 U.S. 519, 132 S.Ct. 2566, 183 L.Ed.2d 450 (2012). The court held that the challenge was not barred by the Anti-Injunction Act because the "shared responsibility payment" was separate and distinct from the individual mandate and because the suit was aimed at the mandate, rather than at the payment. Id. In this case, the relief Plaintiffs seek would directly restrain the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes, as amply demonstrated above. It cannot be characterized as a challenge to "regulatory requirements that bear no relationship to tax revenues or enforcement." Id. Indeed, the Seven–Sky court noted that the Anti-Injunction Act "bars suits that interfere with ancillary functions to tax collection." Id. at 10. While "[m]andating the purchase of health insurance is plainly not such a function," the voluntary disclosure programs subject to this suit are far more than ancillary to tax collection. Id. Therefore, they are encompassed within the jurisdictional bar of the Anti-Injunction Act—unlike the challenge to the individual mandate in Seven–Sky. So, too, Plaintiffs' reliance on Foodservice and Lodging Institute, Inc. v. Regan, 809 F.2d 842 (D.C.Cir.1987), is wholly unavailing. In Foodservice, the D.C. Circuit concluded that a challenge to a regulation imposing certain requirements on submission of 18 data to assess compliance with tip requirements was not barred by the Anti-Injunction Act. Id. at 846. The court reasoned that "[o]n its face, the regulation does not relate to the assessment or collection of taxes, but to IRS efforts to determine the extent of tip compliance in the food and beverage industry." Id. This case could not be more dissimilar. On their face, the rules challenged here pertain wholly to the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes, not to any unrelated regulatory goals. For all of these reasons, Plaintiffs' argument that this case is a challenge to a regulatory command untouched by the Anti-Injunction Act is wholly unsuccessful.

Third, Plaintiffs argue that that relief requested in this case does not restrain the assessment or collection of taxes because the IRS is not prohibited from seeking tax returns and payments from all eight years that would be covered by the 2012 OVDP. Once again, notably, Plaintiffs never claim that they have actually paid taxes and associated penalties for all eight of those years. The Court explained above why releasing Plaintiffs from the obligation to file tax returns and pay taxes on the first five of those eight years—and only requiring returns and payments for the last three years—constitutes a restraint on the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes. Plaintiffs offer three additional arguments why that is not the case. To the extent the Court has not addressed these arguments above, the Court explains here why none of Plaintiffs' arguments are persuasive.

Plaintiffs present a cursory argument, with no legal support whatsoever, that Defendants have somehow waived reliance on the Anti-Injunction Act because they created the multiple voluntary disclosure programs that are subject to dispute in this case. There is no basis for this argument. Defendants created multiple disclosure programs, with distinct eligibility rules for each, as well as rules for the hybrid Transition Treatment. By doing so, they in no way waived their ability to rely on the Anti-Injunction Act to fend off this challenge, which is targeted at the very gatekeeping rules that establish who may participate in each program.

Next, Plaintiffs argue that the D.C. Circuit and the Supreme Court have foreclosed the theory that the entire tax system should be consider a "single mechanism" for the purposes of applying the Anti-Injunction Act. Cohen, 650 F.3d at 726 (citing Hibbs v. Winn, 542 U.S. 88, 102, 104, 124 S.Ct. 2276, 159 L.Ed.2d 172 (2004)). This entire argument is inapplicable because the Defendants have not pressed an argument based on a "single mechanism" theory. Instead, they argue that there is no jurisdiction over this case because it directly seeks to restrain the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes. As explained above, the Court agrees with Defendants that the relief requested in this case would restrain the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes, and therefore, Plaintiffs' argument regarding a single mechanism theory is inapposite.

Lastly, Plaintiffs rely on the Supreme Court's recent interpretation of the Tax Injunction Act in Direct Marketing Association v. Brohl, ––– U.S. ––––, 135 S.Ct. 1124, 191 L.Ed.2d 97 (2015), to argue for a narrower meaning of the word "restrains," as used in the Anti-Injunction Act. This argument is unavailing because the law in the two cases is different and because the facts are distinguishable.

With respect to the law, in Direct Marketing, the Supreme Court was interpreting the Tax Injunction Act, "which provides that federal district courts 'shall not enjoin, suspend or restrain the assessment, levy or collection of any tax under State law.' " Id. (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 1341). That case did not concern either the Anti-Injunction 19 Act or the Declaratory Judgment Act. Indeed, although the Supreme Court explained that it looks to federal law for the interpretation of the Tax Injunction Act, id. at 1129, its analysis focused on the specific language of the Tax Injunction Act, id. at 1132–33, which differs in material respects from the language of the Anti-Injunction Act. Specifically, while the Tax Injunction Act forbids "enjoin[ing], suspend[ing] or restrain[ing] the assessment, levy or collection of any tax," the Anti-Injunction simply forbids suits "restraining the assessment or collection of any tax." 26 U.S.C. § 7421(a). For the Supreme Court, it was important that the word "restrain" kept company with "suspend" and "enjoin" in the Tax Injunction Act. 135 S.Ct. at 1132. The Supreme Court explained that the words "suspend" and "enjoin" "refer to different equitable remedies that restrict or stop official action to varying degrees, strongly suggesting that 'restrain' does the same." Id. Under the Anti-Injunction Act, the word "restrain" keeps no such company and, therefore, no such inference would be either possible or proper.

With respect to the facts, Direct Marketing concerned a Colorado state law that imposed notice and reporting obligations regarding sales taxes on certain retailers. Id. at 1128. The Supreme Court concluded that the notice and reporting requirements were separate and distinct from the enumerated actions of "the [1] assessment, [2] levy or [3] collection of any tax" and therefore not subject to the Tax Injunction Act's jurisdictional bar that applies to such activities. Id. at 1131 (alterations added). The Supreme Court concluded that the notice and reporting requirements merely inhibited, but did not "restrain" the "assessment, levy or collection of any tax." Id. at 1133. Once again, notwithstanding Plaintiffs' contentions to the contrary, this case could not be more different. As demonstrated thoroughly above, Plaintiffs seek relief that would directly restrain the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes by presenting a challenge to the eligibility rules for the IRS's voluntary disclosure program, which set out different schemes for collecting unpaid taxes and associated penalties, and by seeking a judgment allowing them entry to a program from which they would otherwise be barred. Direct Marking is wholly distinguishable and, accordingly, provides no basis to disturb the conclusion that this Court is deprived of jurisdiction over this case by the Anti-Injunction Act.

* * *

In sum, the Court concludes that, for all of the reasons discussed above, this case constitutes a suit "for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax." 26 U.S.C. § 7421(a). Therefore, if no exception to that rule is applicable, this Court is deprived of jurisdiction over this action. The Court now turns to Plaintiffs' argument that just such an exception applies in this case.

B. No Alternative Remedy Available

[18] [19] The Anti-Injunction Act "does not apply at all where the plaintiff has no other remedy for its alleged injury." Z Street, 791 F.3d at 31. As the Supreme Court explained in South Carolina v. Regan, the "Act's purpose and the circumstances of its enactment indicate that Congress did not intend the Act to apply to actions brought by aggrieved parties for whom it has not provided an alternative remedy." 465 U.S. 367, 378, 104 S.Ct. 1107, 79 L.Ed.2d 372 (1984). "Put another way, 'the Act was intended to apply only when Congress has provided an alternative avenue for an aggrieved party to litigate its claims.' " Z Street, 791 F.3d at 29 (quoting South Carolina, 465 U.S. at 381, 104 S.Ct. 1107).

[20] 20 Defendants identify two alternative remedies that Plaintiffs can pursue: specifically, to pursue a settlement with the IRS independent of the established voluntary disclosure programs and, if those settlement talks fail, to pay the full assessed liabilities and seek a refund through a refund suit. That is, it is not necessary to participate in one of the programs established by the IRS to pursue a settlement with the IRS. Although Plaintiffs seek the specific relief regarding taxes and penalties that would be afforded them if they were allowed to directly enter the 2014 Streamlined Procedures, they are not barred from seeking such benefits through separate negotiations with the IRS outside the OVDPs in which they are currently enrolled. See Defs.' Reply at 12. In short, as an alternative to the remedies sought through this action, Plaintiffs may negotiate directly with the IRS.

If those negotiations do not yield the results they seek, Plaintiffs may avail themselves of a second alternative opportunity to pursue these results. They can opt-out of the OVDP, allow the IRS to determine their liabilities by examination, pay the assessed liabilities, and file an administrative claim for a refund for the difference between the liability determined and the amount that would be due under the Streamlined Procedures; if that administrative refund claim is denied, they may then file a refund suit in federal court. See Revised 2012 OVDP FAQs, No. 51 (explaining opt-out process); 26 U.S.C. § 7422(a) (setting out conditions for federal suit for refund).

Because Plaintiffs are equipped with these alternative remedies, they do not face circumstances like those faced by the State of South Carolina in South Carolina. 465 U.S. at 380, 104 S.Ct. 1107. As the D.C. Circuit has explained, "because South Carolina paid no taxes, it was 'unable to utilize any statutory procedure to contest the constitutionality of [the tax].' " Z Street, 791 F.3d at 29 (quoting South Carolina, 465 U.S. at 380, 104 S.Ct. 1107) (alteration in original). In other words, the State of South Carolina had no alternatives whatsoever. Here, by contrast, the taxpayers themselves may engage in settlement negotiations with the IRS in order to pursue the relief that is substantively equivalent to the relief they seek through this suit. And, if any such attempts fail, they may follow the procedure outlined above to pay the assessed liabilities and file a suit in federal court for a refund.

Plaintiffs emphasize that they may not now file a suit in federal court (1) because they have not been issued a notice of deficiency and (2) because they claim that they are not actually seeking the refund of any taxes they have already paid—as they claim they have paid the amount that would be required under the Streamlined Procedures. But once again they ignore the five years prior to those covered by the Streamlined Procedures that are within the eight-year framework of the OVDP. Plaintiffs have never claimed that they have paid all liabilities that would be due on a full examination of all of those years—either during the years in which the respective taxes were owed or in the process of rectifying their prior errors. Upon examination and payment of liabilities for all of those years, they could seek any refund compared to the amounts that would be due under the Streamlined Procedures—or as compared to whatever amount they claim they should be due under the applicable law. The Court concludes that these remedies are both available and adequate with respect to the relief Plaintiffs seek in this court. See Cohen, 650 F.3d at 733 (requiring an alternative remedy to be "adequate").

21 Because Plaintiffs possess adequate alternative remedies to the current suit, the Court concludes that this suit remains within the ambit of the jurisdiction-stripping provision of the Anti-Injunction Act and, concomitantly, within the tax exception to the Declaratory Judgment Act). Therefore, the Court need not consider Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs have no legal right to settlement terms offered to other taxpayers.

* * *

The details of the schemes at issue in this case are complex, but it is useful to close by returning to the core of this case. Plaintiffs claim that they have been harmed because "the IRS's failure to provide a direct method of entry into the 2014 SFCP imposed upon the Plaintiffs a greater offshore penalty, exposure to additional civil penalties, increased filing burdens, a disparate standard of review, and a longer case-review time (and thus attorneys' fees) as compared to other similarly situated applicants." Compl. ¶ 107 (emphasis added). And Plaintiffs seek, through this case, a judgment allowing them to participate in the 2014 Streamlined Procedures under the same terms as an applicant who had not previously participated in another related IRS voluntary disclosure program. See id. Request for Relief, ¶ D. That is, they seek to undo the alleged harm they claim was caused by their inability to enter the 2014 Streamlined Procedures directly: "greater offshore penalty, exposure to additional civil penalties, increased filing burdens, a disparate standard of review, and a longer case-review time (and thus attorneys' fees) as compared to other similarly situated applicants." Id. ¶ 107. Notably, Plaintiffs never claim that they have paid all of the taxes and associated penalties owed under all of the tax years covered by the programs at issue in this case. Notwithstanding Plaintiffs' attempts to minimize the effect that this lawsuit would have on their bottom line and on the public fisc, they are not simply bringing this lawsuit because they are philosophically dismayed by what they claim was the unlawful promulgation of the "Transition Rules." It is not simply that they seek to have that putative legal wrong remedied in the abstract. They are seeking for that wrong to be remedied as it applies to them, with all of the attendant effects on the taxes, penalties, and other payments that they must make to the United States Treasury via the IRS.

With that background, the question before the Court is whether the unwinding of the impacts alleged by Plaintiffs' through the specific relief they request would restrain the assessment or collection of unpaid taxes. Because the Court answers that question in the affirmative, and because Plaintiffs are not seeking relief for which they would have no adequate alternative remedy, this Court is deprived of subject matter jurisdiction over this case by the Anti-Injunction Act and by the tax exception to the Declaratory Judgment Act. Accordingly, the Court dismisses this case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. [12]

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendants' [9] Motion to Dismiss. The Court dismisses this case for want of subject matter jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1). This case is dismissed in its entirety.

22 An appropriate Order accompanies this Memorandum Opinion.

All Citations

206 F.Supp.3d 1, 118 A.F.T.R.2d 2016-5226, 2016-2 USTC P 50,359

Footnotes

[1] The Court granted the parties' joint motion to consolidate Case No. 15–cv–1806 (Maze v. Internal Revenue Service) and Case No. 16–cv–1085 (Green v. Internal Revenue Service). Pursuant to the parties' stipulation and the Court's order granting the motion to consolidate, the resolution of the motion to dismiss filed in Maze will bind all parties to this consolidated action. For the remainder of this Memorandum Opinion, however, the Court only refers to the parties in Maze and to the briefing that they filed for the sake of clarity.

[2] The Court's consideration has focused on the following documents:

- Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss (“Defs.' Mot.”), ECF No. 9;
- Pls.' Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss (“Pl.'s Opp'n”), ECF No. 13; and
- Defs.' Reply in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss (“Defs.' Reply”), ECF No. 14.

In an exercise of its discretion, the Court finds that holding oral argument in this action would not be of assistance in rendering a decision. See LCvR 7(f).

[3] Taxpayers who are undergoing a civil examination or a criminal investigation are not eligible for participation in such programs. See, e.g., Streamlined Filing Compliance Procedures, https://www.irs.gov/Individuals/International-Taxpayers/Streamlined-Filing-Compliance-Procedures (last visited July 18, 2016); Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program Frequently Asked Questions and Answers 2014, https://www.irs.gov/individuals/international-taxpayers/offshore-voluntary-disclosure-program-frequently-asked-questions-and-answers-2012-revised (last visited July 18, 2016).

[4] Those provisions were revised when the IRS announced the 2014 Streamlined Procedures. When discussing the 2012 OVDP, the Court refers to the OVDP as revised, given that the revised program is now at issue.

[5] Defendants note that taxpayers under the 2012 OVDP must pay any applicable failure-to-file penalties under section 6651(a)(1) and failure-to-pay penalties under 6651(a)(2)-(3) for eight years. Defs.' Mot. at 8 n.3; see also Revised 2012 OVDP FAQs, FAQ No. 7. But Defendants also note that it is unlikely that such penalties would be applicable to Plaintiffs. Defs.' Mot. at 8 n.3. Accordingly, like Defendants, the Court does not discuss those penalties further.

[6] Defendants state that, upon the completion of the requirements of the program, a taxpayer will receive a non-prosecution letter from the IRS, which they describe as essentially assurance from the Commission of the Internal Revenue that the IRS will not refer the matter to the Department of Justice for prosecution. Defs.' Mot. at 7. But Defendants do not point to any material in the record or any legal authority that shows that such letters are automatically issued. In any event, this distinction is immaterial to the resolution of this case.

[7] As Defendants have noted, Plaintiffs include contradictory allegations about whether Plaintiff Batra entered the 2011 Program or the 2012 Program. Compare Compl. ¶ 1 (all plaintiffs participated in the 2012 program) with id. ¶ 90 (describing participation of Batra in 2011 program). It appears that all references to Batra individually refer to participation in the 2011 Program. See id. ¶ 90; Pls.' Opp'n at 4 (citing Decl. of William Sweeney at ¶ 7, Ex. A); id. at 5–6. It may be that Plaintiffs' references to all of them participating in the 2012 program and seeking to exit that program are simplifications or misstatements. See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 101-103, Request for Relief ¶ D. In any event, these discrepancies are immaterial for the purposes for the pending motion because the programs are substantially similar. See Defs.' Mot. at 13 n.5. The one difference that the parties all note is that the 2011 OVDP required a payment of 25% of foreign assets, while the 2012 OVDP required a payment of 27.5% of foreign assets. See id.; Pls.' Mot. at 13. But that difference has no effect on the result in this case.

[8] Plaintiffs do not claim that this action falls under one of the statutorily enumerated exceptions to the jurisdiction-stripping provision.

[9] Other than the several failure-to-file penalties listed above, Defendants have not identified any specific penalties affected by the requested relief. Nor have they provided any basis for the Court to conclude that those unidentified penalties should be treated as taxes under the Anti-Injunction Act. With that in mind, the Court finds no basis to treat these unidentified penalties as taxes.

[10] It is immaterial that, under the Transition Treatment, participants are able to compromise the outstanding penalties for a miscellaneous offshore penalty of only 5% of their foreign assets. It is yet unclear whether Plaintiffs would even qualify for the Transition Treatment. Yet, they seek a judgment allowing them to exit the 2012 OVDP and to participate “directly” in the Streamlined Procedures. Compl., Relief Requested ¶ D. Therefore, the relevant comparison on this issue is between the 2012 OVDP, outside of the Transition Treatment, and the Streamlined Procedures.

[11] The penalty is 25% under the 2011 ODVP. The reduction of that amount to 5% is also a substantial reduction and constitutes a restraint on the assessment and collection of unpaid taxes.

[12] As a result, the Court does not reach Defendants' alternative argument that Plaintiffs may not bring this case under the Administrative Procedure Act because the challenge addresses matters that are committed to the IRS's discretion as a matter of law.

End of Document

2014 WL 4979735
NOT FOR PUBLICATION
United States District Court, D. New Jersey.

UNITED STATES of America, Petitioner,
v.
Eli CHABOT and Renee Chabot, Respondents.

Civ. No. 14–3055 (FLW).
|
Signed Oct. 3, 2014.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Melissa Lynn Dickey, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Petitioner.

Justin P. Walder, Alan Silber, Walder Hayden P.A., Roseland, NJ, for Respondents.

OPINION

WOLFSON, District Judge.

1 Before the Court is United States of America's ("Government") petition to enforce an Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") summons compelling Eli and Renee Chabot ("the Chabots" or "Respondent") to produce all documents concerning any foreign bank accounts that were required to be maintained by the Bank Secrecy Act of 1970 ("BSA") and regulations under that Act. For the following reasons, the Government's petition is GRANTED.

I. Background

On or around April 6, 2010, the IRS received information from the French competent authority pursuant to the United States–France income tax treaty that provided "information concerning U.S. Persons maintaining undisclosed bank accounts at HSBC bank." Danilack Declaration, at ¶¶ 3, 5–6. The IRS claims it has information regarding Pelsa Business Inc. ("Pelsa") accounts at HSBC for the years 2005–2007 and that according to the information provided, Eli Chabot is the beneficial owner of Pelsa. Id. at ¶¶ 7–8. On March 12, 2012, the IRS issued an administrative summons requesting that the Chabots appear to testify. On May 12, 2012, the Chabots appeared and, on the advice of counsel, asserted their Fifth Amendment privilege and refused to answer any IRS questions about foreign bank accounts. Gratsy Declaration, at ¶ 5.

On June 20, 2012, the IRS issued another summons to Eli Chabot and one to Renee Chabot. The summons requested both parties to appear on July 13, 2012 to give testimony and produce extensive documents about foreign bank accounts for the period January 1, 2006 to December 31, 2009. Id. at ¶¶ 7, 10; see also Eli Chabot Summons, Renee Chabot Summons. On July 13, 2012, the Chabots' counsel advised the IRS that the Chabots would not appear, were asserting their Fifth Amendment privilege, and declined to produce the requested documents. Id. at ¶ 12, Ex. 3. On November 16, 2012, the IRS amended its summons, narrowing the scope of the information sought to request only those documents required to be maintained by 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 ("Section 1010.420"). Id. at ¶ 13; Pet. To Enforce Summons, at ¶ 8. The Chabots continued to assert their privilege.

On May 14, 2014, the IRS filed a petition to enforce the November 16th summons. See Pet. To Enforce Summons. On May 19, 2014, this Court entered an Order to Show Cause, which was adjourned by consent until September 22, 2014. The Order to Show Cause directed Respondents to present any defense or opposition to the petition to enforce the summons.

In their written response, Respondents assert the Fifth Amendment Act of Production Privilege and claim that the Required Records Doctrine, which precludes assertion of the Fifth Amendment privilege, does not apply. The Government replied and urges this Court to adopt the reasoning of six federal courts of appeal in finding that foreign bank account information requested under the Bank Secrecy Act, including under 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420, falls within the Required Records Doctrine. The Third Circuit has not yet ruled on this issue.

2 On September 22, 2014, this Court held a hearing on its Order to Show Cause and reserved its decision. This Opinion follows.

II. Standard of Review

The Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution states that "[n]o person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. U.S. Const. Amend. 5. The Supreme Court has clarified that the privilege extends to the act of producing potentially incriminating documents. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (1976) ("The act of producing evidence in response to a subpoena ... has communicative aspects of its own, wholly aside from the contents of the papers produced."); see also United States v. Hubbell, 530 U.S. 27, 120 S.Ct. 2037, 147 L.Ed.2d 24 (2000).

The Required Records Doctrine was first articulated in Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948). Viewed by some courts as an exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege and by others as a "threshold inquiry to determine whether the privilege attaches in the first place," see In re Special February 11–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d 903 (7th Cir.2012) ("Special February Grand Jury Subpoena"),[1] the doctrine prevents individuals, who possess records the Government requires them to maintain as a result of voluntary participation in certain regulated activities, from asserting their Fifth Amendment privilege. Shapiro, 335 U.S. at 33.[2] In a subsequent decision, the Court specified three "premises," or factors, in determining whether the Required Records Doctrine applies: "first, the purposes of the United States' inquiry must be essentially regulatory; second, information is to be obtained by requiring the preservation of records of a kind which the regulated party has customarily kept; and third, the records themselves must have assumed 'public aspects' which render them at least analogous to public documents." Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968).[3]

The Bank Secrecy Act of 1970 ("BSA") regulates offshore banking, and identifies as its purpose "to require certain reports or records where they have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings." 31 U.S.C. § 5311. Under Section 241(a) of the Act, which requires U.S. citizens to "keep records and file reports" of their foreign financial transactions and relationships, the Treasury Department promulgated regulations requiring U.S. citizens with foreign bank accounts to disclose their foreign bank accounts in the form of what is called a foreign bank account report ("FBAR"). 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350. If the citizen possesses, otherwise has a financial interest in, or has signatory authority over such accounts, she must retain the records of such accounts for at least five years, to be kept "available for inspection as authorized by law." Id. 1010.420. Failure to file an FBAR is a felony under 31 U.S.C. § 5322.

III. Analysis

Respondents argue that, under the three-pronged test articulated in Grosso, (1) Section 1010.420 does not literally require that records be kept, only that information be "retained" and, to the extent it does require records, it is essentially criminal, not regulatory; (2) the information sought is not "customarily kept" by foreign account holders and beneficiaries, especially those in "secrecy" jurisdictions; and (3) the bank records in question, to the extent they exist, are private, informally recorded, and cannot reasonably be said to have a "public aspect." Further, Respondents contend that the required records doctrine should not be extended to a situation such as the present one, in which "the nexus between the recordkeeping requirement and the potential crime is so connected."[4] Resp. Brief at 26.

3 The Third Circuit has not yet decided whether the documents sought in a summons for foreign bank account information under Section 1010.420 fall within the Required Records Doctrine. However, the Second, Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits have all reached the issue and found that the Required Records Doctrine applies. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated February 2, 2012, 741 F.3d 339 (2d Cir.2013); U.S. v. Under Seal, 737 F.3d 330 (4th Cir.2013); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 707 F.3d 1262 (11th Cir.2013); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d 428 (5th Cir.2012); Special February Grand Jury Subpoena, 691 F.3d 903 (7th Cir.2012); In re M.H., 648 F.3d 1067 (9th Cir.2011), cert. denied sub. nom. M.H. v. U.S., ––U.S. ––, 133 S.Ct. 26, 183 L.Ed.2d 676 (2012). The Government contends that the arguments found persuasive by these other circuit courts should convince this Court, as well. In contrast, Respondents assert that these decisions (1) do not control this Court, (1) are incorrectly decided, and (3) are distinguishable on the facts.

A. Three-pronged Test

1. "Essentially Regulatory"

The Supreme Court has noted that in those cases where the Fifth Amendment privilege was found to protect against statutory disclosures, "the disclosures condemned were only those extracted from a highly selective group inherently suspect of criminal activities and the privilege was applied only in an area permeated with criminal statutes—not in an essentially noncriminal and regulatory area of inquiry." California v. Byers, 402 U.S. 424, 430, 91 S.Ct. 1535, 29 L.Ed.2d 9 (1971).

Respondents argue that Section 1010.420 only requires that five items of information "shall be retained" and "be kept at all times available for inspection," which, when read literally, does not necessarily require the keeping of records. However, Respondents cite no textual support for this proposition. The Government points to Section 1010.420's text to belie Respondent's argument. Section 1010.420 states:

> Records of accounts required by § 1010.350 to be reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be retained by each person having a financial interest in or signature or other authority over any such account. Such records shall contain the name in which each such account is maintained, the number or other designation of such account, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during the reporting period. Such records shall be retained for a period of 5 years and shall be kept at all times available for inspection as authorized by law.

31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 (emphasis added).[5]

Respondents further argue that Section 1010.420's requirements, when read in isolation from the rest of the BSA, are essentially criminal because Section 1010.420(1) requires records to be retained for five years, which parallels the five-year statute of limitations for federal non-capital crimes, and (2) is administered by a self-proclaimed criminal enforcement agency, the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network ("FinCEN").[6] Respondents cite to Marchetti, Grosso, Leary, and Haynes, all cases in which the Supreme Court found the Fifth Amendment privilege to apply because the statutes in question targeted inherently illegal activity.[7]

4 However, all six circuit courts have found that the BSA is essentially regulatory, not criminal, in nature, and does not exceed constitutional limits it its regulation. For one, the statute targets a group of individuals not necessarily engaging in illegal activity, distinguishing these facts from those in Marchetti, Grosso, Leary, and Haynes. In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074 ("There is nothing inherently illegal about having or being a beneficiary of an offshore foreign bank account."); see also Grand Jury Subpoena Dated February 2, 2012, 741 F.3d at 348. Second, the information sought under the statute is used for a variety of purposes, not just for criminal prosecution. Id. ("[T]his multifaceted statute clearly contributes to civil and intelligence efforts wholly unrelated to any criminal purpose."); California Bankers Ass'n v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 76–77, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 39 L.Ed.2d 812 (1974) (In the BSA, "Congress seems to have been equally concerned with civil liability which might go undetected by reason of transactions of the type required to be recorded or reported."); Grand Jury Proceedings, 707 F.3d at 1271 ("[T]he Treasury Department shares the information it collects pursuant to the Act's requirements with other agencies ... none of which are empowered to bring criminal prosecutions."); see also 31 U.S.C. § 5311.

Further, the Government argues—and this Court agrees —that Section 1010.420 in particular has both criminal and civil purposes.[8] First, the disclosure requirements assist the IRS in gathering evidence of undetected civil liability. Second, the regulation at its core seeks basic information about the plausibly innocuous activity of maintaining a foreign bank account. Other district courts have held similarly. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated February 2, 2012, 908 F.Supp.2d 348, 355 (E.D.N.Y.2012) aff'd, 741 F.3d 339 (2d Cir.2013) ("Because the record-keeping requirements of 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 do not target inherently illegal activity, the provision is essentially regulatory in nature."). Third, as the Second Circuit aptly notes, the fact that FinCEN uses Section 1010.420, a "multi-purposed statute" for criminal enforcement purposes "is neither surprising nor persuasive," and does not change the conclusion that the regulation is essentially regulatory.

Respondents next argue that the other circuits that have considered this issue have ruled incorrectly because they failed to focus on the close connection between the disclosure under Section 1010.420 and the potential crime at issue (i.e., willful failure to file an FBAR under Section 1010.350 of the same statute). Respondents argue that because responding to the IRS's summons may essentially result in admitting to a FBAR violation, they would be potentially forced to admit an element of the crime. Respondents cite to extra-circuit cases involving the attorney-client privilege. See Baird v. Koerner, 279 F.2d 623, 633 (9th Cir.1960) (finding that privilege applied when the disclosure of the client's name would implicate the client in a crime); Tillotson v. Boughner, 350 F.2d 663 (7th Cir.1965) (finding that privilege applies when "disclosure of the identity of the client ... would lead ultimately to disclosure of the taxpayer's motive for seeking legal advice").

5 Respondents' arguments do not hold sway here. First, in order to establish that Respondents have violated the BSA, the Government would have to prove that Respondents acted willfully. "That fact distinguishes this case from Marchetti and Grosso, where the activity being regulated—gambling—was almost universally illegal, so that paying a tax on gambling wagers necessarily implicated a person in criminal activity. Admitting to having a foreign bank account carries no such risk. "That the information contained in the required record may ultimately lead to criminal charges does not convert an essentially regulatory regulation into a criminal one." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074–75; see also Grand Jury Subpoena dated February 2, 2012, 741 F.3d at 352 ("[A]n account owner who was truly unaware of the recordkeeping requirement would not incur related criminal sanctions by acknowledging in response to a production order his negligent failure to maintain the required record.").

At the September 22nd hearing, Respondents also attempted to distinguish the facts of this case from the six appellate courts which have considered the applicability of the Required Records Doctrine to records requested under Section 1010.420. Respondents argue that here, while they are subjects of a civil investigation, they have nonetheless been brought in for formal interrogation by the IRS, which can also open a parallel criminal investigation—whereas the appellate courts that have ruled on this issue dealt with individuals who were the targets of grand jury investigations. See, e.g., M.H., 648 F.3d at 1070. Respondents also request the Court to take judicial notice of (1) deferred prosecution agreements between the government and UBS and HSBC that resulted in UBS turning over the account information for "certain United States customers of UBS's cross-border business"[9] as well as (2) transcripts from the May 2, 2012 meeting between Respondents and the IRS submitted on the eve of the September 22nd hearing. At the hearing, Respondents argued that the interrogations evidenced from the transcripts, taken together with the deferred prosecution agreements and the totality of the circumstances, created an essentially criminal atmosphere for Respondents that meaningfully differed from the atmosphere encountered by the individuals targeted by grand jury investigations in the six appellate cases.

However, Respondents' attempts to distinguish their case from the six appellate cases that have reached this issue are unconvincing. First, at least one district court has addressed the validity of an IRS administrative summons requesting information under Section 1010 .420, and found no reason to distinguish the Fifth Amendment jurisprudence examined by the appellate courts. See U.S. v. Chen, 952 F.Supp.2d 321, 330–31 (D.Mass.2013). Second, even if the IRS began civilly investigating Respondents due to information the IRS received from the deferred prosecution agreements, it does not follow that such a fact transforms Section 1010.420, or even the IRS's use of the regulation in this case, into an "essentially criminal" regulation. As has been represented by the IRS here, there is currently no ongoing criminal investigation or one currently contemplated,[10] which, if anything, makes the application of the Required Records Doctrine here more compelling than in the six appellate cases, where the prospect of criminal charges loomed larger because the relevant individuals had been issued grand jury subpoenas and were identified as targets of grand jury investigations.[11] Respondents also fail to cite any case law that requires, or even sanctions, case-by-case speculation under the Required Records Doctrine about the subjective, long term intention behind each records request issued pursuant to a valid regulatory scheme.[12]

6 Finally, at the September 22nd hearing, Respondents contended that expanding the Required Records Doctrine to Section 1010.420 and depriving them of the Fifth Amendment protection has the effect of allowing the IRS to administratively summon individuals, question them about whether they have foreign bank accounts, and, if they refuse to answer, make an end run around the Fifth Amendment by asking for records under Section 1010.420. Once the individuals respond with the requested information, the IRS can commence criminal proceedings. Respondents apparently argue against viewing offshore bankers as having "waived" their Fifth Amendment rights by quoting the following dicta in Marchetti:

> The constitutional privilege was intended to shield the guilty and imprudent as well as the innocent and foresighted; if such an inference of antecedent choice were alone enough to abrogate the privilege's protection, it would be excluded from the situations in which it has historically been guaranteed, and withheld from those who most require it. Such inferences, bottomed on what must ordinarily be a fiction, have precisely the infirmities which the Court has found in other circumstances in which implied or uninformed waivers of the privilege have been said to have occurred. To give credence to such 'waivers' without the most deliberate examination of the circumstances surrounding them would ultimately license widespread erosion of the privilege through ingeniously drawn legislation.

390 U.S. at 51–52. I find Respondents' reliance on Marchetti in this case unpersuasive because this Court has examined the surrounding circumstances and determined that the BSA, including Section 1010.420, does not target a group engaged in inherently criminal activity as was present in Marchetti; in Marchetti, the underlying statute targeted "wagerers," or gamblers, whose activities were "very widely prohibited under both federal and state law." Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 44. Compare In re Special February 11–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d at 309 ("The voluntary choice to engage in an activity that imposes record-keeping requirements under a valid civil regulatory scheme carries consequences, perhaps the most significant of which, is the possibility that those records might have be turned over upon demand, notwithstanding any Fifth Amendment privilege."). And, again, construing the Required Records Doctrine in this manner does not amount to criminalizing offshore banking. Moreover, it bears emphasizing that compliance with the record keeping requirements of the Act is not incriminating on its face. Compare Grosso, 390 U.S. at 66–67, 88, with Byers, 402 U.S. at 430–31. "This is not a situation, as petitioners insist, where Congress can completely avoid the Fifth Amendment self-incrimination privilege by simply passing a law that requires a person to keep documents of illegal activities and if such records of illegal activities are not kept that the same be designated as a crime." Keeping an offshore bank account, like "buying and selling automobiles, is not, in and of itself, an illegal activity." In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Served Upon Underhill, 781 F.2d at 69. Therefore, under the Grosso test, the BSA—including Section 1010.420—is essentially regulatory.

2. "Customarily Kept"

7 Next, I consider whether the disclosures sought are of information customarily kept. Grosso, 390 U.S. 62, 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906. Here, Respondents contend that (1) the information sought under Section 1010.420 do not constitute "records";[13] (2) Section 1010.420 applies to individuals who may not even know of the existence of the bank account(s) in question, and therefore would not keep any records to such account(s); and (3) the inherent nature of foreign banking is so secretive that individuals regulated by Section 1010.420 may not ever possess, much less maintain, records required under the regulation.

However, the appellate courts that have already considered this issue have all rejected Respondents' second and third arguments and found that records requested under Section 1010.420 are customarily kept. "The information that § 1010.420 requires to be kept is basic account information that bank customers would customarily keep, in part because they must report it to the IRS every year as part of the IRS's regulation of offshore banking, and in part because they need the information to access their foreign bank accounts." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1076. Regarding the argument that foreign banking can be inherently secretive, "even if those who possess foreign bank accounts for the purposes of avoiding some specific U.S. tax or criminal laws may be less likely to maintain these records, the BSA covers the entire group of foreign bank account holders. We decline to look at the custom of only the miscreants among the larger group of foreign bank account holders." Grand Jury Subpoena Dated February 2, 2012, 741 F.3d at 350–51. The Court agrees with the existing case law on this issue and finds such basic and easily-accessible account information to be "customarily kept" under Grosso and its progeny.

3. "Publicly Kept"

The third prong of analysis invites this Court to examine whether the records sought possess a public aspect. Grosso, 390 U.S. 62, 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906. Here, Respondents argue again that the requested information (1) does not constitute a record,[14] because such information can be comprised of hastily scrawled numbers on a napkin and (2) is private, analogous to general taxpayer records. See Smith v. Reichert, 35 F.3d 300 (7th Cir.1994).

First, Respondents' argument that records do not include information such as bank account numbers or amounts held in a bank account is not well-taken. Section 1010.420 states that "records of reports required [to be reported] under Section 1010.350 shall be retained for a period of five years and shall be kept at all times available for inspection as required by law." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1077; see also 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420. Further, Merriam–Webster defines the verb "record" as "to write (something) down so that it can be used or seen again in the future."[15] Information that is required by law to be annually reported, retained, and kept available for inspection indeed constitutes records—regardless of whether the information can fit on a napkin.

8 Second, the information sought under Section 1010.420 cannot be considered private under the Required Records Doctrine. Smith, which concerned taxpayer records such as W–2s and 1099s, is distinguishable. In fact, Smith states, "[t]he hypothetical case in which every individual is required to maintain a record of everything he does that interests the government is remote from the case of the individual who enters upon a regulated activity knowing that the maintenance of extensive records available for inspection by the regulatory agencies is one of the conditions of engaging in that activity."). See also In re Special February 11–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d 300, 309 (7th Cir.2012) ("The voluntary choice to engage in an activity that imposes record-keeping requirements under a valid civil regulatory scheme carries consequences, perhaps the most significant of which, is the possibility that those records might have be turned over upon demand, notwithstanding any Fifth Amendment privilege.").

The Court agrees with the six appellate courts in concluding that because "the personal information is compelled in furtherance of a valid regulatory scheme, as is the case here, that information assumes a public aspect." This is especially true because the Treasury Department typically shares the information it collects under BSA regulations such as Section 1010.420 with other agencies, serving "important public purposes sufficient to imbue otherwise private foreign bank account records with public aspects." In re Grand Jury Proceedings, No. 4–10, 707 F.3d at 1273.

Because the Grosso test's premises are met, the Required Records Doctrine applies and Respondents may not claim the Fifth Amendment privilege to refuse responding to the IRS's summons.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court grants the Government's petition to enforce the IRS summons served on Respondents. An appropriate order shall follow.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2014 WL 4979735, 114 A.F.T.R.2d 2014-6235, 2014-2 USTC P 50,466

Footnotes

[1] The Third Circuit has not explicitly ruled on whether the Required Records Doctrine is an exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege. Nonetheless, the circuit has recognized that the doctrine places certain records and filings "outside the prohibition against compulsory self-incrimination." U.S. v. Buck, 730 F.2d 129, 132 (3d Cir.1984).

[2] Shapiro cautions "that there are limits which the government cannot constitutionally exceed in requiring the keeping of records which may be ... used in prosecuting statutory violations committed by the record-keeper himself." 335 U.S. at 32. However, Respondents do not argue that the Bank Secrecy Act exceeds those limits. Further, the Constitution explicitly allows Congress to "regulate Commerce with Foreign Nations, a category into which offshore banking falls." U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

[3] Some circuit courts view the three "premises" as requirements. See Special February Grand Jury Subpoena, 691 F.3d at 906. Other courts view the test articulated in Grosso as more flexible. See In Re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d 428, 433 (5th Cir.2012) ("Although the Fifth Circuit has applied the first and third prongs of the Required Records Doctrine, it has not applied the second prong ...."). The Third Circuit has not yet taken a position on this issue.

[4] For purposes of these proceedings, Respondents do not contest that the Government has met its burden of proof under U.S. v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48, 85 S.Ct. 248, 13 L.Ed.2d 112 (1964) to establish a prima facie case for issuing a summons in good faith—by showing that (1) "the investigation will be conducted pursuant to a legitimate purpose," (2) "the inquiry may be relevant to the purpose," (3) "the information sought is not already within the IRS's possession," and (4) "the administrative steps required by the Internal Revenue Code have been followed." U.S. v. Clarke, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 2361, 189 L.Ed.2d 330 (2014) (quoting Powell, 379 U.S. at 57–58); see also Gratsky Decl. at ¶¶ 9–12.

[5] Additional arguments regarding whether the information sought constitutes "records" are analyzed in the second prong of the Grosso test. See infra at 11.

[6] Additionally, Respondents cursorily argue that "[a]ny averment by the IRS that the information collected from FBARs and/or collected pursuant to 1010.420 is used for essentially regulatory purposes should be the subject of a hearing pursuant to the teaching of United States v. Clarke." ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 2361, 189 L.Ed.2d 330 (2014). Basically, Respondents attach a bad faith motive to the IRS for taking the position that Section 1010.420 is "essentially regulatory" to support the IRS summons here. However, Respondents offer no specific facts that would support an inference of bad faith on the part of the IRS. Clarke, 134 S.Ct. at 2365 (The taxpayer only "has a right to question IRS officials about their reasons for issuing a summons .... when he points to specific facts or circumstances plausibly raising an inference of bad faith."). Further, Respondents conceded at the hearing that it did not intend to pursue an evidentiary hearing.

[7] The statutes at issue in these four cases imposed the following requirements: (1) in Marchetti and Grosso, a tax on wagering, which was virtually banned at the time; (2) in Haynes, the registration of illegal firearms; and (3) in Leary, registering marijuana traffickers. Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 47, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968); Grosso, 390 U.S. at 64; Haynes v. United States, 390 U.S. 85, 96, 88 S.Ct. 722, 19 L.Ed.2d 923 (1968); and Leary v. United States, 395 U.S. 6, 16, 18, 89 S.Ct. 1532, 23 L.Ed.2d 57 (1969).

[8] It is not even clearly necessary to read Section 1010.420 apart from the BSA to determine whether the law at issue is essentially criminal or regulatory. Other circuits have only generally analyzed the underlying statute. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena To Custodian of Records, 497 F.2d 218, 220 (6th Cir.1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1009, 95 S.Ct. 328, 42 L.Ed.2d 283 (statute should be read "as a whole" to determine whether regulatory in nature); see also In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Served Upon Underhill, 781 F.2d 64, 67 (6th Cir.1986) ("Although the specific provisions of the Act and the regulations ... may have criminal application, these provisions serve the overall purpose of enforcement of an essentially regulatory program."). The Third Circuit has not yet addressed this issue.

[9] On September 30, 2014, Respondents filed a post-hearing submission elaborating on the significance of the deferred prosecution agreements. Respondents argue that the "certain customers" whose accounts UBS turned over "were inherently those who were suspected of criminal conduct—failure to file an FBAR as required by 31 CFR 1010.350, and made criminal by 31 U.S.C. § 5322." See Sept. 30 letter, at 2. Respondents also cite to a DOJ press release publicizing the deferred prosecution agreement in which the DOJ noted it had "successfully prosecuted six U.S. customers of UBS whose information was provided pursuant to the Deferred Prosecution Agreement, and is conducting investigations of dozens of other UBS customers." Id.

[10] However, to be clear, the IRS has not represented that a criminal investigation could never develop from the current civil investigation.

[11] To reiterate, "[t]hat the information contained in the required record may ultimately lead to criminal charges does not convert an essentially regulatory regulation into a criminal one." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074–75.

[12] See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Served Upon Underhill, 781 F.2d at 67.

[13] The Government does not respond to the first part of Respondents' argument on this issue, presumably because it already addressed whether information requested under Section 1010.420 constitutes a record.

[14] Again, the Government does not explicitly address Respondents' arguments that that information under Section 1010.420 are not records.

[15] Record, MERRIAM–WEBSTER, http://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/record (last visited Oct. 2, 2014).

End of Document

2014 WL 2009004
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Stephen M. KERR, et al., Defendants.

No. CR–11–02385–002–PHX–JAT.
|
Signed May 16, 2014.

ORDER

JAMES A. TEILBORG, Senior District Judge.

1 Pending before the Court is Defendant Quiel's Motion to Supplement the Record (Doc. 394), Defendant Kerr's Notice of Joinder to Defendant Quiel's Motion to Supplement the Record (Doc. 395), Defendant Quiel's Motion to Supplement the Record (Doc. 396), and Defendant Kerr's Notice of Joinder to Defendant Quiel's Second Motion to Supplement the Record (Doc. 397). The Court now rules on the motions.

I. Background

The Court has previously recounted the facts of this case:

> In the Indictment (Doc. 3), Kerr was charged with Conspiracy to Defraud the United States (Count 1), Willful Subscription to False Individual Tax Returns for 2007 and 2008 (Counts 2 and 3), and Failure to File Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBARs) for 2007 and 2008 (Counts 6 and 7). Count 1 charged Kerr, Quiel, and Christopher Rusch ("Rusch"), their former attorney, with conspiring to establish companies and bank accounts in Switzerland to move money out of the United States and defraud the IRS. Counts 2 and 3 charged Kerr with intentionally omitting income from the foreign accounts on his 2007 and 2008 tax returns and intentionally failing to mark the box in Schedule B indicating an interest in a foreign bank account. Counts 6 and 7 charged Kerr with willfully failing to file FBARs to report his interest in the foreign accounts. On April 11, 2013, a jury acquitted Kerr of Count 1, and convicted him of Counts 2, 3, 6, and 7 ....
>
> Quiel was charged with Conspiracy to Defraud the United States (Count 1), Willful Subscription to False Individual Tax Returns for 2007 and 2008 (Counts 4 and 5), and Failure to File FBARs for 2007 and 2008 (Counts 8 and 9). Count 1 charged Kerr, Quiel, and Rusch with conspiring to establish companies and bank accounts in Switzerland to move money out of the United States and defraud the IRS. Counts 4 and 5 charged Quiel with intentionally omitting income from the foreign accounts on his 2007 and 2008 tax returns and intentionally failing to mark the box in Schedule B indicating an interest in a foreign bank account. Counts 8 and 9 charged Quiel with willfully failing to file FBARs to report his interest in the foreign accounts. On April 11, 2013, a jury acquitted Quiel of Count 1, and convicted him of Counts 4 and 5.

(Doc. 346 at 1–2). On September 24, 2013, Quiel and Kerr ("Defendants") appealed their convictions to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ("Court of Appeals") (Doc. 372; Doc. 375). Quiel filed his first motion to supplement the record on October 18, 2013, and his second motion on October 22, 2013. (Doc. 394; Doc. 396). Kerr has joined in both motions. (Doc. 395; Doc. 397).

II. Motions to Supplement the Record

Quiel and Kerr ask this Court to supplement the record with documents that they allege tend to show that the third defendant in the case, Christopher Rusch, entered into secret agreements with the government by which Rusch could continue to provide international tax advice. (Doc. 394 at 2–4; Doc. 396 at 1–5). The legal basis for their request is the Court's inherent authority to supplement a record, or alternatively Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure ("FRAP") 10(e). (Doc. 394 at 4; Doc. 396 at 5).

2 Contrary to Defendants' contention, the Court has no inherent authority to supplement the record after the filing of a notice of appeal. "As a general rule, the filing of a notice of appeal divests a district court of jurisdiction over those aspects of the case involved in the appeal." Stein v. Wood, 127 F.3d 1187, 1189 (9th Cir.1997). There are a limited number of exceptions to this general rule, namely to correct clerical errors or clarify a judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60, supervising the status quo during the pendency of an appeal, or when specified by statute. Id. No such exception applies in this case. Defendants' filings of notices of appeal on September 24, 2013 divested the Court of jurisdiction with respect to "those aspects of the case involved in the appeal." See Stein, 127 F.3d at 1189. Courts' inherent powers "are those which 'are necessary to the exercise of all others.' " Roadway Express, Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752, 764, 100 S.Ct. 2455, 65 L.Ed.2d 488 (1980) (quoting United States v. Hudson, 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 32, 34, 3 L.Ed. 259 (1812)). Because the Court has no jurisdiction over this case, it has no inherent powers to supplement the record.

Defendants' alternative reliance upon FRAP 10(e) is unpersuasive. The rule provides two narrow methods by which a district court may correct the record transmitted to the Court of Appeals:

> (1) If any difference arises about whether the record truly discloses what occurred in the district court, the difference must be submitted to and settled by that court and the record conformed accordingly.
>
> (2) If anything material to either party, is omitted from or misstated in the record by error or accident, the omission or misstatement may be corrected and a supplemental record may be certified and forwarded: ... (B) by the district court before or after the record has been forwarded; ....

Fed. R.App. P. 10(e). "All other questions as to the form and content of the record must be presented to the court of appeals." Id. 10(e)(3).

"It is a basic tenet of appellate jurisprudence ... that parties may not unilaterally supplement the record on appeal with evidence not reviewed by the court below." Lowry v. Barnhart, 329 F.3d 1019, 1024–25 (9th Cir.2003). As FRAP 10(e) clearly states, only the Court of Appeals has the authority to consider a request to supplement the record with evidence not presented to the district court. See Nat'l Ass'n for Advancement of Multijurisdiction Practice v. Ariz. Supreme Court, 2013 WL 5718962, at *2 (D.Ariz.2013) (holding that a request to supplement the record with materials not reviewed by the court "should be directed to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals"). Defendants have not shown that their proposed evidence was "omitted from or misstated in the record by error or accident." See Fed. R.App. P. 10(e)(2). Indeed, Defendants' stated purpose in seeking to add this evidence to the record is precisely because it was not before the Court at the time of trial or sentencing. See (Doc. 394 at 3). This request is appropriately directed to the Court of Appeals, and this Court lacks jurisdiction to consider it. [1]

III. Conclusion

3 For the foregoing reasons,

IT IS ORDERED that Defendant Quiel's Motion to Supplement the Record (Doc. 394) and Defendant Quiel's Motion to Supplement the Record (Doc. 396) are denied. [2]

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2014 WL 2009004

Footnotes

[1] Defendants cite several cases in support of their contention that this Court has authority to supplement the record. (Doc. 394 at 4; Doc. 396 at 5). Each of these cases are distinguishable. See Cruz v. Astrue, 2012 WL 3011491, at *1 (D.Ariz. July 23, 2012) (remarking that 42 U.S.C. § 405(g) provided the court with the authority to order the Commission of Social Security to supplement the record); LimoStars, Inc. v. N.J. Car & Limo, Inc., 2011 WL 3471092, at *3 n. 5 (D.Ariz. Aug.8, 2011) (noting that a district court may order the record supplemented for the purpose of obtaining accurate information when ruling on pending motions); Mangini v. United States, 314 F.3d 1158, 1160–61 (9th Cir.) (noting that the Court of Appeals had in a separate order granted a motion to supplement the record on appeal "to correct a material misstatement in the record"), amended by 319 F.3d 1079 (9th Cir.2003).

[2] Because Kerr joined in these motions, they are denied with respect to Kerr as well.

End of Document

2017 WL 5433201
United States District Court,
E.D. Virginia.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
George FORBES, Defendant.

Case No. 1:17–cv–00530 (LMB/IDD)
|
Signed 08/24/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Kieran O'Neill Carter, US Department of Justice—Tax Division, Washington, DC, Gerard J. Mene, United States Attorney's Office, Alexandria, VA, for Plaintiff.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Ivan D. Davis, United States Magistrate Judge

1 This matter is before the Court on Plaintiff's Motion for Default Judgment against Defendant George Forbes ("Defendant") pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 55(b)(2). (Dkt. No. 12.) After neither Defendant nor a licensed attorney for Defendant appeared at the hearing on August 18, 2017, the undersigned Magistrate Judge took this matter under advisement to issue this Report and Recommendation. Upon consideration of the Complaint, the Motion for Entry of Default Judgment, and the supporting documents, the undersigned Magistrate Judge makes the following findings and recommends that Plaintiff's Motion be GRANTED.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff, United States of America ("Plaintiff"), filed the Complaint on May 5, 2017 to collect unpaid federal income taxes assessed against Defendant for the years 2008, 2009, and 2010 (Compl. at 1.) Plaintiff has moved for default judgment against Defendant and seeks damages in the amount of $1,657,812.23 as of May 3, 2017, plus statutory additions to tax accruing until paid. (Compl. ¶ A.)

A. Jurisdiction and Venue

Rule 55 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides for the entry of default judgment when "a party against whom a judgment for affirmative relief is sought has failed to plead or otherwise defend." FED. R. CIV. P. 55(a). The court must have both subject matter and personal jurisdiction over a defaulting party before it can render a default judgment.

This Court has original jurisdiction over all civil actions arising under the Constitution, any civil action expressly authorized by Act of Congress, as well as any civil action arising under any Act of Congress providing for internal revenue. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1345, and 1355(a). Therefore, this Court has subject matter jurisdiction. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Defendant because he resides in Virginia and was personally served in Virginia. See Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316–17 (1945). Venue is proper in this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1396.

B. Service of Process

For a court to have personal jurisdiction over a defendant for the purpose of entering default judgment, the plaintiff must properly serve the defendant under federal or state law. Miss. Publ'g Corp. v. Murphree, 326 U.S. 438, 444–45 (1946) (stating that "service of summons is the procedure by which a court having venue and jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit asserts jurisdiction over the person of the party served"); Cent. Operating Co. v. Util. Workers of Am., 491 F.2d 245, 249–51 (4th Cir. 1974) (reversing the district court's entry of default judgment because the court lacked personal jurisdiction where the plaintiff failed to effectively serve the defendant with summons and complaint). The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide the manner in which service must occur.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(e) governs service upon an individual and allows service by "delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to the individual personally [or] leaving a copy of each at the individual's dwelling or usual place of abode with someone of suitable age and discretion who resides there." FED. R. CIV. P. 4(e)(2)(A)–(B). On May 23, 2017, a certified process server served Defendant by personally serving him with the Summons and Complaint. (Dkt. No. 6.) Therefore, Plaintiff properly served Defendant pursuant to Rule 4(e).

C. Grounds for Default

2 On May 5, 2017, Plaintiff filed its Complaint against Defendant seeking unpaid federal income taxes and statutory additions to tax accruing and continuing until paid. (Dkt. No. 1.) A certified process server served Defendant on May 23, 2017. (Dkt. No. 6.) On June 28, 2017, after Defendant failed to respond, the Clerk of Court entered default against Defendant. (Dkt. No. 9.) On July 21, 2017, Plaintiff filed the pending Motion for Default Judgment. (Dkt. No. 12.) This Court held a hearing on the Motion on August 18, 2017. (Dkt. No. 16.) After Defendant failed to appear at the August 18, 2017 hearing, the undersigned Magistrate Judge took this matter under advisement to issue this Report and Recommendation.

II. EVALUATION OF PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT

Rule 55 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides for the entry of default judgment when "a party against whom a judgment for affirmative relief is sought has failed to plead or otherwise defend." FED. R. CIV. P. 55(a). A defendant in default concedes the factual allegations of the complaint. See, e.g., DIRECTV, Inc. v. Rawlins, 523 F.3d 318, 322 n.2 (4th Cir. 2008); Partington v. Am. Int'l Specialty Lines Ins. Co., 443 F.3d 334, 341 (4th Cir. 2006); Ryan v. Homecomings Fin. Network, 253 F.3d 778, 780 (4th Cir. 2001). Default does not, however, constitute an admission of the adversary's conclusions of law, and is not to be "treated as an absolute confession by the defendant of his liability and of the plaintiff's right to recover." Ryan, 253 F.3d at 780 (quoting Nishimatsu Constr. Co., Ltd. v. Hous. Nat'l Bank, 515 F.2d 1200, 1206 (5th Cir. 1975)). Instead, the Court must "determine whether the well-pleaded allegations in [the plaintiff's] complaint support the relief sought in [the] action." Id.

Thus, in issuing this Report and Recommendation, the undersigned Magistrate Judge must evaluate Plaintiff's claims against the standards of Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to ensure that the Complaint contains plausible claims upon which relief may be granted. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (explaining the analysis for examining a plaintiff's claims under a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss). To meet this standard, a complaint must set forth "sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face." Id. (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)). In determining whether allegations are plausible, the reviewing court may draw on context, judicial experience, and common sense. Francis v. Giacomelli, 588 F.3d 186, 193 (4th Cir. 2009) (citing Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679).

III. FINDINGS OF FACT

Upon a full review of the pleadings, the undersigned Magistrate Judge finds that Plaintiff has established the following facts. Plaintiff is the United States of America. (Compl. ¶ 3.) Defendant is a resident of Virginia who failed to file Form TDF 90–22.1, Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR"), for the years of 2008, 2009, and 2010. (Compl. ¶¶ 5, 11.) Defendant, a United States Citizen, lived and worked in Qatar from 2004 to 2011. (Compl. ¶ 9.) During 2008, 2009, and 2010, Defendant owned or had an interest exceeding $10,000.00 in each of his financial accounts at the Commercial Bank of Qatar, UBS, Bank Julius Baer, Barclays Wealth (Monaco), and Ashton Funds Management. (Compl. ¶ 10.) Defendant was aware of his obligation to file FBARs with respect to his interest in his foreign financial accounts because Defendant previously filed FBARs for the calendar years of 2004 through 2007. (Compl. ¶ 12.) Defendant did not report any underreported income for the calendar years of 2008, 2009, and 2010. (Compl. ¶ 24(b).) Defendant used fictitious names and numbered bank accounts in an attempt to conceal his ownership of, or interest in, the foreign financial accounts at issue. (Id. at ¶ 24(c).) Defendant has been sent notice and demand for payment for the penalties assessed against him for his willful failure to file FBARs for 2008, 2009, and 2010. (Compl. ¶ 25.)

3 A delegate of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States assessed civil penalties under 31 U.S.C. § 5321 against Defendant for his willful failure to report his interests in foreign bank accounts for the calendar years of 2008, 2009 and 2010, as follows:

(Dkt. No. 13 ¶ 7.) As of May 3, 2017, Plaintiff seeks $1,657,812.23 for federal civil penalties, plus interest that has accrued and will continue to accrus by statute until paid. (Dkt. No. 13 at ¶ 9; see also 28 U.S.C. §§ 3717(a), 3717(e)(2), 1961(a).)

The undersigned finds that Plaintiff has set forth sufficient factual matter to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face and that Plaintiff has established Defendant's liability for unpaid federal income taxes with reasonable certainty.

IV. RECOMMENDATION

For the reasons set forth above, the undersigned Magistrate Judge recommends the entry of default judgment in favor of Plaintiff, United States of America, against Defendant, George Forbes. Plaintiff is entitled to $1,657,812.23 as of May 3, 2017, for federal civil penalties, plus statutory interest that has since accrued pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 3717(a), 3717(e)(2), and interest that will continue hereafter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1961(a), until paid.

V. NOTICE

By mailing copies of this Report and Recommendation, the parties are notified as follows. Objections to this Report and Recommendation, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636 and Rule 72(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, must be filed within fourteen (14) days of service on you of this Report and Recommendation. A failure to file timely objections to this Report and Recommendation waives appellate review of the substance of the Report and Recommendation and waives appellate review of a judgment based on this Report and Recommendation.

The Clerk is directed to send a copy of this Report and Recommendation to all counsel of record and to the Registrant at the following address:

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 5433201, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-6018

End of Document

2017 WL 4803823
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

Michael QUIEL, Petitioner,
v.
USA, Respondent.

No. CV-16-01535-PHX-JAT (MHB)
|
CR-11-02385-PHX-JAT
|
Signed 10/24/2017
|
Filed 10/25/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Alan Stuart Richey, Law Office of Alan Richey, Port Hadlock, WA, for Petitioner.

Gregory Bernstein, Timothy J. Stockwell, US Dept. of Justice, Washington, DC, Monica B. Edelstein, US Attorneys Office, Phoenix, AZ, for Respondent.

ORDER

James A. Teilborg, Senior United States District Judge

1 Pending before the Court is Movant's amended Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside or Correct a Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody (Doc. 7.) The Government has answered, (Doc. 11), and Movant has replied, (Doc. 14.) Magistrate Judge Michelle H. Burns has issued a Report and Recommendation ("R&R") recommending that Movant's claims be denied and dismissed with prejudice, that a Certificate of Appealability be denied, and that leave to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal be denied. (Doc. 17.) Movant objects to the R&R. (Doc. 18.)

Relatedly, pending before the Court is Movant's Motion to Compel Government to Produce Documents. (Doc. 19.) The Government opposes this request. (Doc. 20.)

I. Background

Movant does not dispute the procedural background provided by the Magistrate Judge. Therefore, this Court adopts that background, except regarding Movant's subsequently decided appeal:

> On December 8, 2011, a grand jury indicted Movant Michael Quiel with one count of Conspiracy to Defraud the United States, two counts of Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns, and two counts of Willful Failure to File Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR").[1] (CR Docs. 3, 463.)
>
> On September 24, 2013, Movant was convicted on two counts of Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns, in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1).[2] He was sentenced to a 10-month term of imprisonment, to be followed by a one-year term of supervised release. Movant appealed his convictions to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals arguing, the following:
>
> - "[Movant] was denied his constitutional right to cross-examine Rusch on three exhibits entered on redirect"
> - "The Government's repeated reference to [Movant's] complicated securities transactions as fraud was prejudicial and the court's allowing such references over objection was error"
> - "[Movant] was denied his constitutional right to counsel by the trial court's allowing Rusch to testify in violation of [Movant's] attorney-client privilege"
> - "The trial court erroneously refused to require production of the special agent's report, [Movant's] individual master file, and the notes of the Government's chief investigator, and refused to review the documents in camera or even preserve them for review by this court"
>
> (United States v. Quiel, No. 13-10503, Doc. 20.)
>
> The Ninth Circuit affirmed Movant's convictions on December 19, 2014, and the mandate issued on February 6, 2015. United States v. Quiel, 595 Fed.Appx. 692 (9th Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S.Ct. 2336 (2015). The Ninth Circuit held, in pertinent part:
>
>> The question of whether Defendants willfully failed to report income ... is one of fact for the jury. See Rykoff v. United States, 40 F.3d 305, 307-08 (9th Cir. 1994). The jury could have concluded that Kerr and > Quiel knew they had a duty to report the income from their foreign accounts, because Christopher Rusch, their attorney and business partner, testified that the accounts were set up using nominees under Kerr's and Quiel's control in order to evade reporting requirements. Even without Rusch's testimony, the jury could have inferred control because (a) the accounts were traded in Kerr's and Quiel's stock for their benefit; (b) the foreign firms never served their stated purpose of finding investors; and (c) these firms were not actual, functioning businesses. Additionally, even without Rusch's testimony, the jury could infer motive from Kerr's having recently paid high tax rates and Quiel's recent payment of a large tax penalty before either engaged in these transactions.

2 On March 13, 2015, Movant and Kerr filed a Joint Motion for New Trial pursuant to Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure alleging newly discovered evidence. (CR Doc. 454.) Specifically, Defendants' argued: (1) "evidence has emerged showing that Rusch engaged in fraudulent activities"; (2) "the Government has agreed 'to look the other way while its witness commits additional crimes' "; and (3) "Pierre Gabris, a Swiss-national and alleged participant in the structuring of the Swiss accounts, would testify that 'he did not prepare or send trial exhibits 51 and 52,' which were offered into evidence on Rusch's re-direct" and "contain emails originally sent from Gabris to Rusch, who forwarded them to Defendants, regarding accounting statements from Defendants' Swiss corporations." (CR Docs. 454, 463.) The Court denied the Joint Motion for New Trial on July 15, 2015, (CR Doc. 463), and on July 28, 2015, Movant and Kerr filed a Notice of Appeal from the July 15, 2015 Order (CR Doc. 467).

On December 28, 2015, in the appellate court case, Movant and Kerr filed a Joint Motion for Remand to the District Court & Motion to Stay Briefing Schedule, arguing that the Court of Appeals should remand the action to the district court so it can: (1) "consider evidence that was before it but which that [the district] Court did not consider," and (2) consider new evidence and argument that either came to light after the Joint Motion for New Trial was filed or "was [not] otherwise ... presented." (United States v. Kerr, et al., No. 15-10393, Doc. 17.)

The Ninth Circuit denied the Motion for Remand without prejudice to the filing of "a renewed motion accompanied by an indication that the district court is willing to entertain the limited remand motion." (United States v. Kerr, et al., No. 15-10393, Doc. 19.) On March 7, 2016, Movant and Kerr filed a Joint Motion to Accept Remand to Consider New Evidence for a New Trial in the district court. (CR Doc. 471.) Defendants argued: (1) "This Court should accept a remand so as to consider new evidence and argument that were not before this Court but which came to light while the motion was pending, after it was appealed, or that was otherwise not presented"; and (2) "This Court should accept remand so as to consider evidence that was presented to this Court" but "which this Court did not consider." (CR Doc. 471.) Defendants' newly discovered evidence consisted of four declarations, one of which came from Jerome Perucchi that was signed on June 4, 2015, and was used as part of civil lawsuit in a state court matter. (CR Doc. 471.)

While the Joint Motion was pending before the district court, on May 17, 2016, Movant filed a Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody. (CV Doc. 1; CR Doc. 474.) Thereafter, the district court directed the parties to show cause why the § 2255 proceeding should not be stayed pending the Court's determination on the Joint Motion to Accept Remand. (CV Doc. 3.)

Then, on July 22, 2016, the Court denied the Joint Motion to Accept Remand (CR Doc. 475),[3] and on August 2, 2016, the Court discharged the Order to Show Cause after concluding that it had been mooted by the Court's ruling on the Joint Motion (CV Doc. 6). In the same August 2, 2016 Order, the Court also denied Movant's § 2255 Motion with leave to amend and gave Movant 30 days to file an amended motion using the court-approved form. (CV Doc. 6.)

On September 1, 2016, Movant filed an amended Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody (CV Doc. 7). In the amended § 2255 Motion, Movant alleges four grounds for relief. In Ground One, he claims that he received ineffective assistance of counsel because his trial attorney refused to call any witnesses or submit any evidence after the government rested its case in chief. In Ground Two, Movant appears > to argue that his due process rights were violated by the introduction at trial of perjured testimony that the government knew or should have known was false. Movant further alleges that the government failed or refused to produce evidence that would confirm that perjured testimony was introduced at trial. In Ground Three, Movant claims that the government has not produced evidence that it properly appointed the attorneys who prosecuted him, and the government has not demonstrated that it followed "proper procedure when it began prosecution." In Ground Four, Movant argues that he received ineffective assistance of counsel in connection with "matters that occurred pre and post trial." (CV Docs. 7, 10.)

3 (Doc. 17 at 1–5.)

On August 22, 2017, Movant filed Movant's Motion to Compel Government to Produce Documents, requesting that the Court order the Government to produce "amended Forms 1040 for the tax years 2000-2003, along with the FBAR returns for 2000-2003 allegedly prepared with these amended forms." (Doc. 19.) On August 29, 2017, the Government filed a motion opposing this request. (Doc. 20.)

On September 27, 2017, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed this Court's denial of Movant's motion for a new trial and motion for remand in the underlying criminal matter. United States v. Kerr, No. 15-10393, 2017 WL 4284757 (9th Cir. Sept. 27, 2017).

II. Legal Standard

This Court may "accept, reject, or modify, in whole or in part, the findings or recommendations made by the magistrate judge" in the R&R. 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1) (2012). "Within fourteen days after being served with a copy, any party may serve and file written objections" to the R&R. Id. This Court "must review the magistrate judge's findings and recommendations de novo if objection is made, but not otherwise." United States v. Reyna-Tapia, 328 F.3d 1114, 1121 (9th Cir. 2003) (en banc) (emphasis in original); see also Schmidt v. Johnstone, 263 F. Supp. 2d 1219, 1226 (D. Ariz. 2003) ("Following Reyna-Tapia, this Court concludes that de novo review of factual and legal issues is required if objections are made, 'but not otherwise.' " (internal citation omitted) (emphasis in original)). Movant objects to all of the Magistrate Judge's legal findings and many of her factual findings, (Doc. 18); therefore, this Court will review all of Movant's claims de novo.

III. Discussion

A. Jurisdiction

4 Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255, this Court has limited jurisdiction to adjudicate a collateral action by a "prisoner in custody under sentence of a court established by Act of Congress." 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2012); see United States v. Reves, 774 F.3d 562, 565 (9th Cir. 2014) (noting that the "in custody" requirement is jurisdictional and must be satisfied before consideration of the merits). One is in custody when sentenced by a federal court to incarceration or conditional release. Maleng v. Cook, 490 U.S. 488, 491 (1989) (per curiam); see Reves, 774 F.3d at 565. This jurisdictional requirement is satisfied when a collateral action is initiated before custody ends. Maleng, 490 U.S. at 491.

According to Movant, his term of supervised release terminates on January 13, 2017. (CR Doc. 477.) Movant initiated this collateral action on May 17, 2016. (Doc. 1.) Therefore, because Movant initiated his collateral action before the end of custody, this Court has jurisdiction under Section 2255.

B. Timeliness

Under the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 ("AEDPA"), collateral actions under Section 2255 are subject to a 1-year statute of limitations. 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f) (2012). As relevant, the limitations period proceeds from the date that a movant's conviction becomes final Id.

The statute of limitations is not jurisdictional, and is treated as an affirmative defense to be raised by the Government, unless a court discretionarily raises the issue sua sponte. Day v. McDonough, 547 U.S. 198, 209 (2006). Each claim that is challenged by the government as time-barred, or which a court considers sua sponte, must individually meet the requirements of the statute of limitations. See Mardesich v. Cate, 668 F.3d 1164, 1170–

71 (9th Cir. 2012) (applying a "claim-by-claim" approach to Section 2244's statute of limitations); see also Clay v. United States, 537 U.S. 522, 528–30 (2003) (reading portions of the statute of limitations requirements in Sections 2244 and 2255 to have the same meaning despite "verbal differences"). When a defendant petitions the Supreme Court for certiorari, the conviction "becomes final when the Supreme Court either denies the writ or issues a decision on its merits." Clay, 537 U.S. at 529 n.4 (internal citation omitted).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 6(a) provides four guides for calculating Section 2255's statute of limitations. Patterson v. Stewart, 251 F.3d 1243, 1246 (9th Cir. 2001); see also Rule 12 of Rules Governing Section 2255 Proceedings ("The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to the extent that they are not inconsistent with any statutory provisions or these rules, may be applied to a proceeding under these rules."). First, exclude the day of the triggering event. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a)(1). Second, include all intermediate days. Id. Third, include the last day, but if it is a Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday, then proceed to the end of the next unqualified day. Id. Fourth, the last day ends at midnight when filing electronically or when the clerk's office closes when filing by other means. Id. A year is 365 days in a normal year and 366 days in a leap year. See United States v. Tawab, 984 F.2d 1533, 1534 (9th Cir. 1993); United States v. Marcello, 212 F.3d 1005, 1010 (7th Cir. 2000).

The Government asserts that the statute of limitations bars "much of [Movant's] false testimony claim." (Doc. 11 at 4.) The Supreme Court denied certiorari, making Movant's claim final, on May 18, 2015. Quiel v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2336 (mem.) (2015). Movant filed this collateral attack in a leap year on May 17, 2016. (Doc. 1.) Therefore, Movant's claim was timely filed on the day before the limitations period ended. The Government concedes that Movant's filing was punctual, but argues that any new facts that surfaced in the September 1, 2016 amendment, particularly Movant's quotations from a declaration by Jerome Perucchi ("Perucchi Declaration"), are time-barred. (Doc. 11 at 4–5.) Movant, in contrast, claims that he cited the Perucchi Declaration in the original filing, making the time-bar inapplicable. (Doc. 14 at 10.)

5 In a Section 2255 action, relation back of claims is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(c). Mayle v. Felix, 545 U.S. 644, 649 (2005). Under Rule 15(c), relation back occurs when an "amendment asserts a claim or defense that arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set out—or attempted to be set out—in the original pleading." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c)(1)(B). Meaning, in the context of a Section 2255 proceeding, that the amended claims must "arise from the same core facts as the timely filed claims," and not "depend upon events separate in 'both time and type' from the originally raised episodes." Mayle, 545 U.S. at 657 (internal citation omitted).

Contrary to Movant's characterization, (Doc. 14 at 10), the Perucchi Declaration was not cited in the original filing. See (Doc. 1 at 21.) Nor was the Perucchi Declaration attached to the original filing, as it was with the amended filing. (Doc. 7-4.) Rather, the original filing discusses Rusch's allegedly perjured testimony that he surreptitiously notarized Perucchi's signature and references Perucchi's involvement with one of the Swiss funds. (Id.) As part of this discussion, Movant cites documents that themselves cite the Perucchi Declaration. (Id.) (citing CR Docs. 471 & 473.) The disputed quotations from the Perucchi Declaration concern the same narrow grouping of facts as the discussion in the original filing; namely, Perucchi's role in the Swiss fund, his awareness of the fund's operations, and which documents he personally signed. (Doc. 7 at 6; Doc. 7-1 at 8.) Thus, because both the new quotations and the original filing discuss the same common core of operative facts, which concern events that occurred at the same time and were of the same type, the quotations relate back to the original filing date and are not time-barred. The Government does not specifically identify, and the Court does not find, any other claims barred by the statute of limitations. Thus, none of Movant's claims are time-barred.

C. The Law of the Case, Waiver, and Procedural Default

The Government argues that many of Movant's claims have been waived, procedurally-defaulted, or already considered by this Court. (Doc. 11.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed this Court's determination that the information in the Perucchi Declaration and information relating to Rusch continuing to practice law under a pseudonym do not provide any basis for relief. United States v. Kerr, No. 15-10393, 2017 WL 4284757 (9th Cir. Sept. 27, 2017); see (CR Doc. 475 at 12 n.5; CR Doc. 463; CR Doc. 475 at 12.) Under the law of the case doctrine, this Court is generally prohibited from reconsidering issues already decided by an appellate court, United States v. Alexander, 106 F.3d 874 (9th Cir. 1997); therefore, this Court cannot reconsider these issues.

For the Court to reach the merits of Movant's remaining claims, Movant must show that his claims are neither procedurally defaulted nor waived. Bousley v. United States, 523 U.S. 614, 622 (1998). A defendant waives defenses or objections, not raised before trial, regarding "defect[s] in instituting the prosecution"—including "error[s] in the grand-jury proceeding"—and "defect[s] in the indictment." Fed. R. Crim. P. 12(b)(3); see also Davis v. United States, 411 U.S. 233, 241–42 (1973) (holding that Rule 12 waiver applies to Section 2255 proceedings). Procedural default bars habeas review of a movant's viable claims that were not raised on direct review. Bousley, 523 U.S. at 622.

In the Section 2255 context, a movant can only overcome waiver and procedural default by showing either "cause" and "prejudice" or "actual innocence." Id. Failure to satisfy either of the cause-and-prejudice factors obviates the need to evaluate the other. See United States v. Frady, 456 U.S. 152, 167 (1982). Learning that a new claim is a possibility—based upon previously undiscovered facts that were discoverable with reasonable diligence—does not, alone, amount to cause. See Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488 (1986). There must be some "objective factor external to the defense" that impeded counsel's ability to comply with a procedural rule, such as "a factual or legal basis for a claim [that] was not reasonably available to counsel" or a severe error rendering counsel constitutionally ineffective that "impute[s]" default to the Government. Id. (applying these rules to the analogous Section 2254 exhaustion context); see Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 745–46 (1991) (discussing the overlapping policy interest in finality that influences procedural default rules in Section 2255 and Section 2254 actions); Frady, 456 U.S. at 166 (noting that federal prisoners under Section 2255 do not receive "preferred status when they seek postconviction relief," when compared to Section 2254 prisoners). The actual innocence exception is "very narrow," Sawyer v. Whitley, 505 U.S. 333, 339–41 (1992), requiring a showing that " 'in light of all the evidence,' 'it is more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have convicted' " the movant. Bousley, 523 U.S. at 623 (quoting Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 327–28 (1995)).

6 Waiver and procedural default do not apply to claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel, Massaro v. United States, 538 U.S. 500, 509 (2003), or claims that challenge a court's subject-matter jurisdiction, Sebelius v. Auburn Reg'l Med. Ctr., 568 U.S. 145, 153 (2013); United States v. Durham, 941 F.2d 886, 892 (9th Cir. 1991) (refusing to evaluate procedural default due to challenge to court's jurisdiction based upon allegedly improper appointment of a government attorney).

Therefore, Movant's Ground One and Ground Four ineffective assistance of counsel claims are neither procedurally defaulted nor waived.

1. Ground Two

In Ground Two, Movant makes four Due Process arguments alleging Government perjury. (Doc. 7 at 6; Doc. 7-1 at 7–13.) First, Movant claims that Cheryl Bradley and Christopher Rusch, Government witnesses, committed perjury by testifying that Movant had prepared FBAR forms, which Movant claims do not exist. (Doc. 7-1 at 7.) Second, Movant claims that Rusch perjured himself by testifying that he printed and faxed emails that would become Exhibits 52 and 53 to Movant; Movant claims he never received these documents. (Id. at 9.) Third, Movant claims that Rusch provided "false testimony" by using Movant's "passport and personal information without [Movant's] knowledge or permission." (Id.) Fourth, Movant claims that Rusch perjured himself by testifying that Rusch created and oversaw the Swiss funds for Movant's benefit, while Movant contends that he was only "to be the initial investor into the foreign hedge funds." (Id. at 9–10.)

All of Movant's remaining Ground Two claims are procedurally-defaulted. Movant did not raise any of these arguments on direct appeal and he fails to show cause. Movant's second, third, and fourth claims concern facts Movant knew before appeal. Movant's first claim, concerning the existence of the FBARs, involves information that Movant could have learned with reasonable diligence prior to appeal. Finally, Movant does not suggest, and the Court does not find, that he has made a showing of actual innocence.

2. Ground Three

Whether Movant has waived or procedurally defaulted his Ground Three claims turns on their meaning. In Ground Three, Movant makes two arguments. One challenges the appointment of the Government attorneys who prosecuted the underlying criminal case. (Doc. 7 at 7; Doc. 7-1 at 17.) The other concerns his criminal referral. (Id.)

First, Movant argues that the Government should be compelled to disclose the documents proving that the attorneys representing the United States were properly appointed. (Doc. 7-1 at 16.) If such disclosure establishes that the attorneys were improperly appointed, Movant argues, then "the charges were wrongfully brought" against Movant. (Id.) Movant's suggested import of this claim is not clear. Movant could be arguing that because the Government attorneys were improperly appointed, the indictment is nullified. Alternatively, Movant could be arguing that the Article III case and controversy requirement was not satisfied, because the United States was not a party to the action, preventing the Court from having had subject-matter jurisdiction over the criminal matter. See (Id.)

Second, Movant asks that the Court to order Government disclosure of Movant's criminal referral from the IRS, which Movant claims an "appellate body" has already ordered the Government to disclose. (Doc. 7 at 7.)

7 To the extent that both of Movant's Ground Three claims relate to defects in the indictment or with the criminal referral, they are waived and procedurally defaulted. Movant did not raise these issues pretrial, as required by Rule 12(b), and did not raise them on direct review, as required by the procedural default standard. Further, Movant has not shown cause, because information relating to the appointment of attorneys and the criminal referral was discoverable with reasonable diligence prior to trial. Movant does not allege that the factual or legal basis for the claim was not reasonably available to counsel or that counsel was constitutionally ineffective for failing to uncover these facts or make these claims.

Furthermore, Movant has not presented any evidence that would meet the extremely narrow test of actual innocence. Errors in the indictment or with the grand jury process, taken as true, would not be so forceful as to prevent any reasonable juror from convicting Movant, taking all evidence into consideration. Thus, Movant's claims, as stylized, will not be considered, because Movant has shown neither cause nor actual innocence.

In contrast, to the extent that Movant's appointment claim can be read as suggesting that this Court did not have subject-matter jurisdiction in the underlying criminal case, it is neither waived nor procedurally-defaulted.

D. Grounds One and Four: Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

Movant identifies two attorneys who allegedly provided him with constitutionally ineffective assistance of counsel. The first is Michael Minns, Movant's attorney during trial and on appeal. (Doc. 7 at 5; Doc. 7-1 at 1–6.) The second is Joy Bertrand, Movant's local counsel (Doc. 7 at 8.)

The Sixth Amendment provides criminal defendants who face incarceration with the right to effective assistance of counsel at "all critical stages of the criminal process." Iowa v. Tovar, 541 U.S. 77, 80–81 (2004); see U.S. Const. amend. VI; Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 686 (1984). Critical stages of the criminal process include, but are not limited to, the guilt-phase of a trial, United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 226–27 (1967), sentencing, Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 137 (1967), and motions for a new trial filed before a direct appeal-by-right is waived or decided, Rodgers v. Marshall, 678 F.3d 1149, 1156–59 (9th Cir. 2012), rev'd on other grounds, 569 U.S. 58 (2013) (per curiam); United States v. Del Muro, 87 F.3d 1078, 1080 (9th Cir. 1996) (per curiam); Menefield v. Borg, 881 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1989); but cf. Rodgers, 569 U.S. at 61 (assuming, without deciding, that the posttrial, preappeal period for a new trial motion is a critical stage of the proceeding).

To establish ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of the Sixth Amendment, a movant must show both deficient performance and prejudice. Strickland, 466 U.S. at 687. A court is free to evaluate either factor first and need not proceed with the inquiry if a movant fails to satisfy the first considered factor. Id. at 696.

Deficient performance exists where counsel's performance "fell below an objective standard of reasonableness" in light of "prevailing professional norms." Id. at 688. "Judicial scrutiny of counsel's performance must be highly deferential," given "the variety of circumstances faced by defense counsel [and] the range of legitimate decisions regarding how best to represent a criminal defendant." Id. at 689. Given "the distorting effects of hindsight," a court "must indulge a strong presumption" that counsel's performance is not objectively unreasonable. Id. at 689–90. "Strategic choices made after thorough investigation of law and facts relevant to plausible options are virtually unchallengeable." Id. at 691. Professional standards of conduct serve as non-dispositive guides for evaluating counsel's performance. Id. at 688. Mere conclusory allegations of ineffective assistance do not provide the basis for Section 2255 relief. See James v. Borg, 24 F.3d 20, 26 (9th Cir. 1994).

8 Prejudice requires a movant to "show that there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different." Id. at 694. "The likelihood of a different result must be substantial, not just conceivable." Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 112 (2011). A court evaluates a movant's showing in light of "the totality of the evidence" that was before the trial court. Strickland, 466 U.S. at 695–96.

Ultimately, this analysis is aimed at determining "whether counsel's conduct so undermined the proper functioning of the adversarial process that the trial cannot be relied on as having produced a just result." Id. at 686.

1. Ground One

Movant claims that his trial counsel, Mr. Minns, was constitutionally ineffective for failing to call any witnesses or to present any evidence after the Government rested its case-in-chief. (Doc. 7 at 5.) Movant alleges that Mr. Minns acted upon a belief that the Government had not met its burden of proof. (Id.) Specifically, Movant cites four defense expert witnesses that had prepared reports, but who Mr. Minns did not call during the guilt-phase; "multiple factual witnesses ready to testify on" Movant's behalf, who Mr. Minns did not call during the guilt-phase; Movant's unfulfilled desire to testify at trial; and unfavorable statements made by Mr. Minns as to his own performance. (Id.; Doc. 7-1 at 1–6.)

The Court rejects the factual basis that Mr. Minns was ineffective for not calling any witnesses at trial. While Mr. Minns did not personally call any witnesses, Mr. Kimerer, attorney for Movant's co-defendant, called Gary Stuart, a joint-defense expert witness. (CR Doc. 336.) Mr. Stuart was retained by both Movant and his co-defendant, had met with Mr. Minns and Movant, referred to both Movant and his co-defendant when giving testimony, formed his opinion, in part, on documents provided by both Movant and his co-defendant, (Id. at 2648, 2654, 2657, 2664–65, 2670), and Mr. Minns referred to the witness as "a joint witness" as to which Mr. Kimerer and Mr. Minns "both had a great deal of input," (CR Doc. 323 at 45.) Mr. Stuart testified that Cristopher Rusch, Movant's former attorney turned Government witness, had engaged in multiple violations of The California Rules of Professional Conduct. (Id.) If believed, Mr. Stuart's testimony could have served to impeach Rusch as a witness and to insulate Movant and his co-defendant from criminal liability by establishing a reliance-on-counsel defense based, in part, upon Rusch's alleged violation of his duties as an attorney. See (CR Doc. 336 at 2658.) Thus, while it is technically not false that Mr. Minns did not personally call nor directly examine a witness as part of the defense's case-in-chief, it is certainly factually incorrect to suggest that Mr. Minns was not involved in the presentation of an expert witness for the defense.

Furthermore, insofar as Movant is claiming that counsel was ineffective for failing to call unidentified witnesses or to call identified factual witnesses whose purported testimony has not been established, Movant has not shown prejudice. Prejudice cannot be established by mere speculation that unidentified witnesses could be found, that they would agree to testify, and that the content of their testimony would be favorable. Wildeman v. Johnson, 261 F.3d 832, 839 (9th Cir. 2001); Dows v. Wood, 211 F.3d 480, 486 (9th Cir. 2000); United States v. Harden, 846 F.2d 1229, 1231–32 (9th Cir. 1988) (denying a movant's ineffective assistance claim, in part, upon failure to show that a proposed witness would be willing to testify); United States v. Murray, 751 F.2d 1528, 1535 (9th Cir. 1985) (denying an ineffective assistance claim, in part, on a movant's failure to "identify any witnesses that his counsel should have called that could have been helpful."); Evans v. Cockrell, 285 F.3d 370, 377 (5th Cir. 2002) ("[C]omplaints of uncalled witnesses are not favored in federal habeas corpus review because allegations of what the witness would have testified are largely speculative.").

9 Additionally, Movant has not shown that counsel was deficient by declining to call the four identified expert witnesses: Matthew Kadish, Gail Prather, Cynthia King, and Ron Braver. There are a number of reasonable strategic considerations that could influence an attorney's decision to call, or refrain from calling, an expert witness, including: the attorney's theory of the case, the strength and focus of the opposing party's case, the conclusions and the certainty of the expert's report, an evaluation of the expert's potential demeanor and presence on the stand, the expert's vulnerability to cross-examination, the role the expert will have in either clarifying or diluting issues in the case, and financial considerations. As the American Bar Association describes in its aspirational rules for criminal defense counsel:

> Defense counsel has no obligation to present evidence, and should always consider, in consultation with the client, whether a decision not to present evidence may be in the client's best interest. In making this decision, defense counsel should consider the impact of any evidence the defense would present and the potential damage that prosecution cross-examination or a rebuttal case could do, as well as the quality of the prosecution's evidence.

ABA Criminal Justice Standard for the Defense Function 4-7.6 (4th ed. 2017).

Movant was convicted under 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1) for willfully filing a false tax return, which required the Government to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that (1) "the defendant made and signed a tax return for the respective years that he knew contained false information as to a material matter," (2) "the returns contained a written declaration that they were being signed subject to the penalties of perjury," and (3) "in filing the false tax returns the defendant acted willfully." (CR Doc. 339 at 3018.) A matter is material if "it had a natural tendency to influence or was capable of influencing the decisions or activities of the Internal Revenue Service." (Id.)

The primary focus of these witnesses' testimony was on matters for which Movant was ultimately not convicted. Mr. Kadish's opinion was expressly limited to Movant's duty to file FBARs, (CR Doc. 198-1 at 1), a charge that was dismissed with prejudice, (CR Doc. 308.) Ms. Prather and Mr. Braver concluded that Movant owed no net tax, (CR Doc. 198-2 at 2; CR Doc. 370), which is not an element of Section 7206(1). Ms. King's report only discusses securities laws, (CR Doc. 198-3), under which no charges were filed.

Beyond the general considerations that bear on an attorney's decision to call a witness, and the irrelevancy of most the proposed experts' opinions, there were specific reasons that could have influenced Mr. Minns' decision not to call Mr. Kadish and Mr. Braver. Rusch, to the defense's surprise, testified that the shares in the Swiss funds were bearer shares. (Doc. 335 at 2605.) Mr. Kadish told Mr. Minns that this may trigger FBAR reporting duties for U.S. citizens holding those shares. (Id.) Mr. Minns became concerned that this might raise "a question of first impression" as to the FBAR reporting requirements, because Movant never held bearer shares, but was accused of accessing the account through a nominee who did hold those shares. (Id.) Thus, there was a risk on cross-examination that Mr. Kadish would admit that Movant had an FBAR reporting duty. (Id.) Given that Mr. Kadish's testimony was meant to rebut the FBAR reporting charge, it would have been risky to call him given his newfound uncertainty of Movant's duty to report.

Furthermore, there were reasonable strategic reasons not to call Mr. Braver during the guilt-phase of the trial. While Mr. Braver ultimately concluded that Movant owed no net tax, which benefitted Movant during sentencing, he did testify that Movant had unreported income during 2007 and 2008, which would have reinforced the Government's case for the crime that Movant was ultimately convicted. (CR Doc. 370 at 125–26, 131.) Additionally, it made sense to not call both Mr. Braver and Ms. Prather, as Mr. Braver disagreed with Ms. Prather's calculations, which would have allowed the Government to highlight inconsistency in defense expert testimony. (CR Doc. 370 at 105–06.)

10 Additionally, Mr. Minns' decision regarding when to call witnesses seemed to be influenced by the witnesses the Government actually called; thus establishing that Mr. Minns was making a reasoned choice of which witnesses to utilize rather than unreasonably failing to call witnesses. (Doc. 370 at 104) (stating that Mr. Minns did not call Mr. Braver during the guilt-phase of the trial due to the Government not calling particular experts).

Movant claims that it was "not a sound trial strategy" for Mr. Minns to refuse to call these experts based upon his evaluation of the strength of the Government's case. (Doc. 18 at 3.) Movant's argument, however, is conclusory, and does not rebut the extensive presumption of reasonableness given to trial counsel's strategic decisions. Mr. Minns investigated the possibility of using these experts, observed the strength and focus of the Government's case, and ultimately chose not to call on them to testify. Thus, even if the witnesses' testimony would have been tangentially responsive to the Government's case, Mr. Minns acted within the wide range of reasonableness in refusing to call them.

For this same reason, Movant cannot show prejudice. Movant contends that as part of their testimony, these expert witnesses would have presented evidence that could have negated willfulness. (Doc. 18 at 4–11.) Weighing the expert's testimony in their reports against the Government evidence during trial, there is not a reasonable probability that the jury would not have found willfulness. Movant is attempting to dissect and magnify the conclusions in these expert reports. While small portions of these experts' testimony would have been relevant in responding to the Government's case, they do not present the necessary evidentiary force to show a reasonable probability that the outcome would have been different.

Movant argues that this Court's finding during sentencing, where Mr. Minns did directly call an expert witness, that the Government did not establish a tax loss on a preponderance of the evidence standard shows a reasonable probability that the outcome of the guilt-phase of the proceeding would have been different had Mr. Minns called the experts. (Doc. 14 at 8.) As noted above, however, tax loss is not an element of the offense of which Movant was convicted. This Court's finding was relevant as to the sentence imposed and not as to Movant's guilt. A specific finding by a specific authority following testimony on a specific topic by a specific witness does not establish, as Movant suggests, that other findings by another authority would be made following testimony on other topics by other witnesses. See (Id. at 9) ("Had witnesses testified and evidence [been] presented at trial, the fact finder, like this Court, reasonably would have found that the government had not met its burden of proof on any count.").

Additionally, Mr. Minns' recommendation that Movant not testify at trial establishes neither deficient performance nor prejudice. It is reasonable for an attorney to recommend that a criminal defendant not waive their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. Cf. U.S. Const. amend. V; Brown v. United States, 356 U.S. 148, 155–56 (1958) (discussing Fifth Amendment waiver). Mr. Minns, after consideration, ultimately decided that it would be imprudent to call Movant as a witness given Rusch's testimony. See (CR Doc. 330 at 1417–18) (noting that Mr. Minns' recommendation that Movant testify was contingent on Rusch's testimony); (CR Doc. 338 at 2948) (noting that Mr. Minns told his client, after deliberation, not to testify); see also (CR Doc. 323 at 9) (discussing Mr. Kimerer's pretrial uncertainty as to whether Movant and his co-defendant would testify). Further, Movant does not describe the content of his proposed testimony, and thus cannot show prejudice due to a failure to show a reasonable probability that the outcome of the proceeding would have been different.

11 Furthermore, Mr. Minns' statements regarding his own performance do not establish constitutionally ineffective assistance of counsel. First, Movant highlights Mr. Minns' statement "we really shouldn't have professional witnesses. We should have experts. We need experts," (Doc. 7-1 at 1), as an admission that Mr. Minns believed the defense needed to call experts to put on their case. Movant fails to appreciate the context surrounding this statement. Mr. Minns was not admitting that the defense needed experts, but was criticizing the Government for using what he calls "professional witnesses," who he claims "go to witness-testifying school," while conceding that experts are important to the adversarial process. (CR Doc. 338 at 2953.) Second, Mr. Minns' statement during sentencing that he made "some seriously bad strategy decisions" does not establish that he provided constitutionally ineffective assistance of counsel. An admission of imperfect performance is not necessarily an admission to the sort of seriously grave error required to establish constitutional ineffectiveness.

This is particularly true in the sentencing context, where an attorney could wrongfully surmise that such prostration would garner sympathy for the soon-to-be-sentenced client. Additionally, attorneys are equally subject to the hindsight bias that courts must guard against when evaluating past performance with the benefit of future knowledge, making their own after-the-fact admissions suspect.

Finally, Movant's claim that Mr. Minns presented no evidence, making him ineffective, shows neither deficient performance nor prejudice, because it is conclusory and does not suggest what evidence Mr. Minns should have presented and how this would have affected the outcome of the case. See Secrease v. Walker, No. 2:09-cv-299 JAM TJB, 2011 WL 2790155, at *10 (E.D. Cal. July 13, 2011) (citing James v. Borg, 24 F.3d 20, 26 (9th Cir. 1994)), adopted by, No. 2:09-cv-299 JAM TJB (E.D. Cal. July 22, 2011).

2. Ground Four

Movant makes four claims of ineffective assistance of counsel concerning Ms. Bertrand's work before and after trial. First, Movant claims that Ms. Bertrand was paid for work, regarding the investigation of jurors, that she did not complete. (Doc. 7 at 8.) Second, Movant argues that Ms. Bertrand's representation of him in an ultimately dismissed state court proceeding and in a federal bond hearing behooved her to present that dismissal to this Court. (Id.) The effect of this presentation, Movant claims, would have been to lower his custody level, which would have resulted in incarceration in Arizona, near his family, rather than in Texas. (Id.) Movant's third claim is difficult to dissect. It appears that Movant is claiming that Ms. Bertrand was aware of an affidavit by Pierre Gabris and that she told Movant of this fact, but later claimed that she learned of this affidavit from Movant. (Id.) Further, she was allegedly in direct contact with Mr. Gabris, Mr. Perucchi, and Movant's counsel in Movant's civil case against Mr. Perucchi. (Id.) Despite all of this, Movant claims, Ms. Bertrand failed to "obtain and file" the Perucchi Declaration with this Court. (Id.) Finally, Movant's fourth claim is that following Movant's incarceration, Ms. Bertrand refused to directly communicate with Movant, except for occasional phone calls, even regarding Movant's Rule 33 motion for a new trial, effectively "denying [Movant] access to the [C]ourt." (Id.) This prevented Movant from providing allegedly new information to the Court, such as the Perucchi Declaration. (Id.)

The Government argues that Movant was not owed constitutionally effective assistance of counsel in preparing his Rule 33 motion for a new trial. (Doc. 11 at 6.) Because this Court previously treated that motion as a collateral action for the purposes of AEDPA's statute of limitations, the Government argues, it should treat it similarly for determining Movant's constitutional protections. (Id.) This Court disagrees; its previous holding was limited to the statute of limitations context and is not determinative for Movant's right to effective assistance of counsel. Therefore, following the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals precedent discussed above, Movant had a right to effective assistance of counsel in filing his Rule 33 motion.

First, assuming that it is objectively unreasonable for an attorney to fail to perform work for which the attorney was paid, Movant was not prejudiced by Ms. Bertrand's alleged failure to "complete[ ] her work [or her] refus[al] to return unused funds." (Id.) Movant's claim suggests that Ms. Bertrand could have remedied her allegedly incomplete performance by returning the unearned funds. (Id.) Thus, Movant's claim is focused on compensation, not procedural outcome. Therefore, because Movant does not suggest that there is a reasonable probability that the outcome of the proceedings would have been different if Ms. Bertrand completed her allegedly deficient jury investigation, Movant is not prejudiced.

12 Second, assuming that Ms. Bertrand knew of, and failed to disclose, the information relating to the dismissal of Movant's state court proceeding, Movant has failed to show prejudice. Movant does not argue that the result of the sentence would have been different, but rather that Movant's custody level would have been lowered if this information was known. Custody level determinations, however, are not made by this Court, but by the Bureau of Prisons, and cannot be reviewed in a Section 2255 action. Johnson v. United States, Nos. 3:11-cv-345-FDW, 3:07-cr-173-FDW, 2012 WL 6642085, at *3 (W.D.N.C. Dec. 20, 2012). Therefore, Movant has failed to show that there is a reasonable probability that the result of the proceeding would have been different; therefore, he fails to show prejudice.

Third, even assuming that Ms. Bertrand was aware of the Gabris affidavit before Movant was, that she was in contact with Mr. Gabris, Mr. Perucchi, and Movant's state-court attorney, and that she failed to obtain and submit the Perucchi Declaration, Movant has failed to show prejudice. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed this Court's express rejection of the claim that the Perucchi Declaration contained information that would provide any basis for requiring a new trial. United States v. Kerr, No. 15-10393 (9th Cir. Sept. 27, 2017); (CR Doc. 475 at 12 n.5). Thus, because Movant has not shown a reasonable probability that the outcome of the proceeding would have been different had Ms. Bertrand submitted the Perucchi Declaration, he was not prejudiced.

Fourth, assuming that Ms. Bertrand refused to communicate with Movant directly, Movant fails to show prejudice. Movant's only specific claim in this regard is that the failure to communicate resulted in Ms. Bertrand failing to file the Perucchi Declaration. As discussed in the previous paragraph, that alleged failure does not constitute prejudice. For the same reason, the purported cause of that non-prejudice—Ms. Bertrand's alleged failure to communicate—does not constitute prejudice.

E. Ground Three: Appointment and Criminal Referral Issues

The strongest formulation of Movant's non-defaulted and un-waived appointment claim proceeds in five steps. See (Doc. 7 at 7; Doc. 7-1 at 13–17.) The Assistant United States Attorneys ("AUSAs") and Department of Justice ("DOJ") trial attorneys who initiated and pursued prosecution were improperly appointed. Therefore, they were not proper representatives of the United States in the criminal proceeding. Thus, the United States was not a party to the action. As a result, this Court had no subject-matter jurisdiction over the criminal proceeding. Accordingly, this Court must vacate the criminal conviction that was rendered without proper authority.

Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction and must have subject-matter jurisdiction to authoritatively render judgment. United States v. Jacobo Castillo, 496 F.3d 947, 951 (9th Cir. 2007) (en banc); see Restatement (Second) of Judgements § 1 (Am. Law. Inst. 1982). For circuit and district courts, the outer bounds of this jurisdiction are defined by the Constitution, while the inner bounds are defined by federal law. U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cls. 1 & 2 (stating that the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court cannot be modified by federal law). Article III requires that a "case" or "controversy" exist for a federal court to have subject-matter jurisdiction over a proceeding. U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1; see Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83, 94–96 (1968) ("[T]he judicial power of federal courts is constitutionally restricted to 'cases' and 'controversies.' ").

The Constitution enumerates particular cases and controversies over which federal courts have subject-matter jurisdiction, including those "Controversies to which the United States" is a party and "Cases ... arising under ... the Laws of the United States." U.S. Const. art. III, § 2. Thus, in a federal criminal proceeding, federal courts have jurisdiction where the United States is a party for two reasons. First, by the mere fact that the United States is a party. Second, because the United States has standing to bring criminal proceedings under federal law. In contrast, when the United States is not a party to a federal criminal proceeding, a federal court has no subject-matter jurisdiction, because the United States is not a party and because private individuals have no standing to claim alleged violations of federal criminal law. See Linda R.S. v. Richard D., 410 U.S. 614, 619 (1973) (holding that private individuals have no "judicially cognizable interest in the prosecution or nonprosecution of another"); cf. Young v. United States ex rel. Vuitton et Fils S.A., 481 U.S. 787, 797–801 (1987) (discussing the rare situation, motivated by separation of powers concerns and the inherent power of courts to regulate judicial proceedings, where a court can empower a private individual to prosecute criminal contempt proceedings as a representative of the United States).

13 It is well-settled that a federal court's jurisdiction cannot be expanded by statute to extend beyond the Constitution's limits. See U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2 ("This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof ... shall be the supreme Law of the Land"); Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 180 (1803) ("[A] law repugnant to the constitution is void."); Hodgson v. Browerbank, 9 U.S. (5 Cranch) 303, 304 (1809) (A "statute cannot extend the jurisdiction [of a federal court] beyond the limits of the constitution."). By statute, district courts have original jurisdiction over "offenses against the laws of the United States." 18 U.S.C.

§ 3231 (2012). This broad statutory grant of authority over criminal matters is constrained, however, by the Article III case-and-controversy requirement.

When a trial court rendered a judgment without subject-matter jurisdiction, a habeas court can provide relief. Bowen v. Johnston, 306 U.S. 19, 23–24 (1939).

The United States is a party to a proceeding if a single "proper representative" participates, United States v. Providence Journal Co., 485 U.S. 693, 708 (1988); United States v. Durham, 941 F.2d 886, 892 (9th Cir. 1991); United States v. Garcia-Andrade, No. 13-CR-993-IEG, 2013 WL 4027859, at *5 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 6, 2013). This designation is not defeated by the presence of improper representatives. United States v. Plesinski, 912 F.2d 1033, 1038 (9th Cir. 1990). Indeed, an unauthorized attorney may appear "in court alone on several occasions" and jurisdiction is not defeated so long as that attorney "was at all times acting under the direction and supervision of" a proper representative. Plesinski, 912 F.2d at 1038. Only "officers of the Department of Justice, under the direction of the Attorney General" may be proper representatives of the United States in criminal proceedings, "[e]xcept as otherwise authorized by law." 28 U.S.C. § 516 (2012); accord Fed. R. Crim. P. 1(b).

Officers must be appointed in accordance with the Appointments Clause. U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2. AUSAs and DOJ trial attorneys are inferior officers of the United States. See Plesinski, 912 F.2d at 1036–37. The default rule is that inferior officers may be appointed only by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. U.S. Const. art. 2, § 2, cl. 2. Congress, however, may vest this appointment authority "in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments." Id.

Congress has vested the appointment power of AUSAs, 28 U.S.C. § 542(a) (2012), and DOJ trial attorneys, id. § 515, in the Attorney General, who is the head of the Department of Justice, id. § 503. The Attorney General may delegate this appointment power to others within the Department of Justice. See id. § 510 (permitting delegation of "any function of the Attorney General"); Plesinski, 912 F.2d at 1036–37.

AUSAs are required to take an oath of office "to faithfully execute [their] duties," 28 U.S.C. § 544 (2012), and failure to take this oath prevents an AUSA from being a proper representative of the government, Plesinski, 912 F.2d 1039; see Fed. R. Crim. P. 1(b). Mere failure to re-administer a lapsed oath, however, does not prevent an attorney from properly representing the United States if that attorney is unaware of the lapse. Plesinski, 912 F.2d at 1039. DOJ trial attorneys must also take an oath, see 28 U.S.C. § 515(a) (2012); 5 U.S.C. § 3331 (2012); however, there is no caselaw in this circuit discussing whether this oath is a condition precedent to their representative capacity. This Court assumes, without deciding, that this oath must be taken before DOJ trial attorneys can act in their representative capacity.

14 According to Movant, Timothy J. Stockwell, a DOJ trial attorney who prosecuted Movant's case, was properly appointed and originally took an oath which has since lapsed. (Doc. 7-1 at 13; Doc. 7-22.) According to the Court's records, Mr. Stockwell was involved throughout the entire life of the underlying criminal case. Thus, Mr. Stockwell was a proper representative of the government in the underlying criminal case, providing this Court with subject-matter jurisdiction in that proceeding.

Movant also "questions whether the present attorney appearing for the government" in this Section 2255 action is properly appointed. (Doc. 14 at 11 n.8.) Movant fails to provide evidence establishing that there is no properly appointed attorney who took their oath in the present action; therefore, this Court is satisfied as to its present subject-matter jurisdiction. [4]

F. Discovery, Evidentiary Hearing, and Motion to Compel

In a Section 2255 proceeding, a court need not order an evidentiary hearing or permit discovery where a movant's claims, if true, would not entitle him to relief. Rule 6(a) of Rules Governing Section 2255 Proceedings (stating that discovery is discretionarily allowed on a finding of good cause); Bracy v. Gramley, 520 U.S. 899, 908–09 (1997) (defining good cause as movant's showing that if his claims were true he would be entitled to relief (quoting Harris v. Nelson, 394 U.S. 286, 300 (1969))); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(b) (2012) (requiring an evidentiary hearing except where "the motion and the files and records of the case conclusively show that the prisoner is entitled to no relief.").

Because Movant's un-waived and non-defaulted claims, taken as true, would not entitle him to relief, this Court will not allow any form of discovery.

IV. Conclusion

This Court has reviewed all of Movant's claims de novo and finds that Movant is not entitled to Section 2255 relief.

Based on the foregoing,

IT IS ORDERED that the Magistrate Judge's Report & Recommendation, (Doc. 17), is ACCEPTED and Movant's objections, (Doc. 18), are OVERRULED; accordingly,

- Movant's amended Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence by a Person in Federal Custody (Doc. 7; CR Doc. 474) is denied and dismissed with prejudice and the Clerk of the Court shall enter judgment accordingly;
- Leave to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal is denied;
- A Certificate of Appealability is denied, because Movant has not made a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right, see Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 483–84 (2000);

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Movant's Motion to Compel Government to Produce Documents, (Doc. 19), is DENIED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 4803823, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-6458

Footnotes

[1] Co-defendant Stephen Kerr ("Kerr") was charged with these same counts, (CR Docs. 3, 463), and Christopher Rusch ("Rusch"), Movant and Kerr's former attorney, was also charged with one count of Conspiracy to Defraud the United States and an additional count of failure to file an FBAR, which was added later (CR Docs. 3, 463, 331 at 1607). Rusch subsequently entered into a plea agreement compelling him to testify at the request of the United States. (CR Docs. 463, 415.)

[2] The record reflects that shortly after the jury returned its verdict, Movant filed a Motion for a Judgment of Acquittal or for a New Trial. (CR Docs. 301, 302, 304.) The Court denied the Motion on August 16, 2013. (CR Doc. 346.)

[3] On July 27, 2016, Movant and Kerr filed a Joint Amended Notice of Appeal seeking to appeal both the district court's denial of the Joint Motion for New Trial (CR Doc. 463) and the denial of the Joint Motion to Accept Remand (CR Doc. 475). In their Joint Brief filed on December 12, 2016, Defendants argued:

> I. When A District Court Does Not Even Consider Evidence And Then Analyzes Other Allegations But Not The Evidence Itself, Is It An Abuse Of Discretion?
>
> II. When A District Court Fails To Properly Analyze The Evidence With The Appropriate Legal Standards, Is It An Abuse Of Discretion?
>
> III. When A District Court Fails To Properly Apply The Law To Newly Discovered Evidence, As Well As Analyze The Evidence, Is It An Abuse Of Discretion?

(United States v. Kerr, et al., No. 15-10393, Doc. 32.)

[4] Because subject-matter jurisdiction is a condition precedent to this Court's adjudicatory power, the Government must inform the Court if it knows that no Government attorney, appearing in the underlying criminal case or the present Section 2255 action, satisfies the appointment and oath requirements.

End of Document

2011 WL 924264
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
N.D. Indiana,
South Bend Division.

UNITED STATES of America
v.
James A. SIMON.

Cause No. 3:10–CR–00056(01)RM.
|
March 14, 2011.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Jesse M. Barrett-AUSA, U.S. Attorney's Office, South Bend, IN, for United States of America.

Carmen M. Piasecki, Nickle and Piasecki, South Bend, IN, Frank J. Gray, Gray & Friend LLP, Fort Wayne, IN, Anthony J. Laspada PHV, Tampa, FL, for James A. Simon.

ORDER AND OPINION ON BRADY MOTION; SENTENCING FINDINGS

ROBERT L. MILLER, JR., District Judge.

1 For several years, James Simon supported his family with money taken from a variety of entities in which he had an ownership interest. During those years, he executed no loan documents with those entities, repaid none of the entities, and didn't report the money as income on either his federal tax returns or applications for financial aid for his children's schooling. He also failed to disclose on his tax returns that he had an interest in foreign bank accounts. A jury found Mr. Simon guilty of four counts of filing false federal income tax returns, 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1), three counts of failing to report foreign financial interests, 31 U.S.C. § 5314, six counts of mail fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, and four counts of federal financial aid fraud, 20 U.S.C. § 1097.

Mr. Simon and the government filed a breathtaking range of objections to the presentence report. The court addresses each as the issues arise. A sentencing court must first compute the guidelines sentence correctly, then decide whether the guidelines sentence is the correct sentence for that defendant. United States v. Santiago, 495 F.3d 820, 825 (7th Cir.2007). The court applies the 2010 version of the sentencing guidelines. Before reaching the sentencing objections, the court addresses Mr. Simon's most recent motion to dismiss.

I. Motion to Dismiss Under Brady v. Maryland

At trial, Mr. Simon's counsel requested and received a copy of a report prepared by IRS Special Agent Paul Muschell that contained a summary of the government's tax loss computations for the years 2003–2006. An appendix to that report (Appendix A) containing Special Agent Muschell's actual computations and notations wasn't included. One of the notations in the appendix provided:

> For purposes of computing Criminal Tax Due and Owing, all income and loss items flowing from JAS PARTNERS are not being considered. JAS PARTNERS was incorporated for the sole purpose of creating artificial business losses and disguising income as loans.

Mr. Simon made a post-trial motion for disclosure of Brady material for sentencing purposes [Doc. No. 143], seeking, among other things, the government's computation of tax harm. In response, the government argued that Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215 (1963), doesn't apply to its computations of tax loss because the computations weren't "favorable to the accused." Citing Mosley v. City of Chicago, 614 F.3d 391, 397 (7th Cir.2010). Still, the government agreed to provide Mr. Simon with copies of those computations, which included Appendix A to the Special Agent Report produced at trial. Mr. Simon now contends that the agent's computations (and more specifically the notation just quoted) constitute exculpatory evidence that should have been produced before trial under Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215. He now moves to dismiss all charges based on the government's alleged failure to provide the appendix [1]

To establish a Brady violation, a defendant must show: "(1) the evidence at issue was favorable to the accused, either because it was exculpatory or impeaching; (2) the evidence was suppressed by the Government, either willfully or inadvertently; and (3) the denial was prejudicial." United States v. Roberts, 534 F.3d 560, 572 (7th Cir.2008); United States v. Baker, 453 F.3d 419, 422 (7th Cir.2006). Mr. Simon contends that: (1) the information contained in the appendix was exculpatory because it "revealed that the Government was taking inconsistent positions and that the concealed position was more favorable to the Defendant with respect to the taxability of funds issue;" (2) the government intentionally concealed and withheld that information when it produced the Special Agent's report without the appendix; and (3) the government's failure to disclose was prejudicial because "it precluded the defense from many avenues of cross examination and undermined its unsuccessful arguments at trial for the introduction of its evidence regarding the non-taxability of the funds."

2 The government renews its argument that Brady v. Maryland doesn't apply to Special Agent Muschell's computations of tax loss or the notations to those computations because the amount of loss isn't an element of the offenses with which Mr. Simon was charged and wasn't material to the issues at trial or favorable to Mr. Simon. Citing United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 675, 105 S.Ct. 3375, 87 L.Ed.2d 481 (1985) ("the prosecutor is not required to deliver his entire file to defense counsel, but only to disclose evidence favorable to the accused that, if suppressed, would deprive the defendant of a fair trial"). The government contends that it produced the bulk of the information in the computations during trial, although it wasn't required to do so, and that its position at trial wasn't inconsistent with the notations in Appendix A, or prejudicial to the defendant. It maintains that it didn't present any evidence or take any position with respect to the amount of loss at trial because the amount of the loss wasn't an element of the offenses charged and wasn't material to Mr. Simon's guilt, so Agent Muschell's computations and notations aren't covered by Brady. The government also contends that it's position was then, and is now, that money Mr. Simon received from JAS Partners was taxable income that should have been reported on his tax returns, and that Agent Muschell's computations and notations are consistent with that position. The court agrees.

Mr. Simon's counsel's suggestion that the court might have allowed Mr. Simon's experts to testify had the information in the appendix been disclosed before trial is unfounded. As noted in its opinion and order of January 3, 2011 denying Mr. Simon's third motion for acquittal and new trial [Doc. No. 139], the court repeatedly has considered and rejected Mr. Simon's arguments with respect to the admissibility of expert testimony, holding that an expert may provide an opinion to help the jury understand the facts, but he can't give testimony stating ultimate legal conclusions based on those facts, or "usurp either the role of the trial judge in instructing the jury as to the applicable law or the role of the jury in applying that law to the facts before it," United States v. Bilzerian, 926 F.2d 1285, 1294 (2d Cir.1991); accord, Good Shepard Manor Found. Inc. v. City of Momence, 323 F.3d 557, 564 (7th Cir.2003) ("expert tetimony as to legal conclusions that will determine the outcome of the case is inadmissible"); United States v. Sinclair, 74 F.3d 753, 757–58 n. 1 (7th Cir.1996) ("Federal Rules of Evidence 702 and 704 prohibit experts from offering opinions about legal issues that will determine the outcome of a case."); Panter v. Marshall Field & Co., 646 F.2d 271, 294 n. 6 (7th Cir.1981) ("It is not for witnesses to instruct the jury as to applicable principles of law, but the judge."), and finds no basis for reconsidering those prior determinations now.

Mr. Simon's contention that the government's trial position was inconsistent with the comments in Appendix A ignores the second sentence of the quoted comment: "JAS PARTNERS was incorporated for the sole purpose of creating artificial business losses and disguising income as loans." The government consistently has taken the position that JAS Partners was created for the sole purpose of funneling funds from other corporate entities to Mr. and Mrs. Simon for their personal use under the guise of loans to avoid tax consequences. As the following discussion demonstrates, the government's position was amply supported by the evidence presented at trial, and was known to Mr. Simon well in advance of trial.

3 Special Agent Muschell's computations of tax loss and how he arrived at those numbers weren't material to guilt or favorable to Mr. Simon and weren't subject to pretrial disclosure under Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215 (1963). See United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 682, 105 S.Ct. 3375, 87 L.Ed.2d 481 (1985) (evidence is material under Brady if there is a reasonable probability that had the evidence been disclosed, the result of the proceedings would have been different). Accordingly, the court denies Mr. Simon's motion to dismiss for failure to provide Brady material [Doc. No. 147].

II. Facts of the Offenses

Mr. Simon was a principal of a dizzying array of corporations and partnerships—sufficiently dizzying that in testimony at the sentencing hearing, a director of two of the corporations seemed to confuse the names of two of the entities. Mr. Simon had a history of entrepreneurship, and was engaged in a telecommunications venture in Ukraine during the years at issue at trial. One of the entities, Ichua Ltd., solicited investments for that venture. Distinguished and respected people invested in Ichua and sat on its board of directors with Mr. Simon.

Money weaved through Ichua and a number of other entities that Mr. Simon controlled: JS Elekta Leasing Limited, Elekta Limited, JAS Partners, and William R. Simon Farms, Inc. Millions of those dollars wound up in the personal accounts of James and Denise Simon, and were spent for personal expenses of the Simon family. The Simons didn't report any of that money as income on their federal income tax returns. In the bookkeeping of their personal accounts and the business accounts that they maintained, the Simons showed these payments as loans. None of the loans (other than one in 1997, which isn't at issue here) were repaid or memorialized by notes during the years in question.

Mr. Simon also had an interest—no more than signatory authority in some instances—in foreign bank accounts as a result of his involvement with these entities. He didn't disclose those interests on his tax returns and didn't file the required reports concerning those interests in a timely manner.

Mr. Simon obtained financial aid for his children to attend private schools—Culver Academies and the Canterbury School in Indiana and Mary Baldwin College in Virginia. When applying for that aid, Mr. Simon attached the federal income tax returns that omitted the millions of dollars that had been funneled to him and his wife through the entities, and also falsified reports of expenditures of those funds, such as vacations and other travel.

Mrs. Simon took her own life shortly after federal authorities executed a search warrant at the Simon home. Mr. Simon was indicted on four counts of filing false federal income tax returns, 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1), four counts of failing to file reports of foreign bank and financial accounts, 31 U.S.C. § 5314, eleven counts of mail fraud relating to the financial aid applications to the Indiana schools, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, and four counts of federal financial aid fraud relating to Mary Baldwin College, 20 U.S.C. § 1907. The charges related to the Simons' tax returns for 2003–2006. One of the foreign bank account report counts was dismissed on the government's motion on the eve of trial. The jury acquitted Mr. Simon on three of the mail fraud counts—evidence that the financial aid documents in those counts had been mailed was thin—and convicted him on all other counts.

4 Mr. Simon objects to ¶¶ 8–16 of the presentence report, which comprise the government's version of the crimes. The court finds none of those objections to be persuasive. The statements in those paragraphs to which objection is made are supported by credible evidence presented at trial. The court overrules Mr. Simon's objections to ¶¶ 8–16 of the presentence report.

A. The Tax Counts

1. Base Offense Level

a. Duplicitness of Counts of Conviction

The guidelines direct that the counts of conviction be grouped for purposes of determining the offense level. U.S.S.G. § 3D 1.2(d). Counts 1–4 are grouped and treated as a single offense for purposes of determining their offense level. U.S.S.G. § 3D1.2(d). The presentence report and the government contend that the tax loss for those counts consists of $3,167,506 in unreported income from 1999 to 2007 (the trial addressed only 2004–2007; the remaining years are included as relevant conduct, see U.S.S.G. § 1B1.3(a) (2)) multiplied by 28 percent, U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(c), or $886,901. A tax loss in that amount produces a base offense level of 20. U.S.S.G. § 2T4.1(H).

Mr. Simon objects to that calculation. He contends, for two reasons, that no tax loss can be assessed. First, Mr. Simon argues that the general verdict on counts 1–4 doesn't tell us whether the jury found his tax returns to be false because income was understated, or rather because (as was also charged) the returns didn't include disclosure of the foreign accounts. Failure to check the box that indicates foreign accounts, Mr. Simon argues, isn't a crime that causes a tax loss; since we can't say for certain that the jury found him guilty of any crime that caused a tax loss, we can't compute his offense level with reference to tax loss. So, he says, his offense level must be six.

Mr. Simon grounds this argument on United States v. Sturdivant, 244 F.3d 71 (2d Cir.2001). Mr. Sturdivant sold 3.4 grams of crack cocaine to an informant in the afternoon of February 9, 1997. In the evening of the same day, Mr. Sturdivant sold another 2.8 grams of crack cocaine to the same informant, but Mr. Sturdivant had gotten the drug from another supplier. Mr. Sturdivant went to trial on one count of conspiracy to distribute more than five grams of crack cocaine and distribution of more than five grams of crack cocaine. At the conclusion of the government's case, the district judge found that the evidence was insufficient to establish the existence of the single conspiracy charged in the first count, and dismissed that count. The case proceeded on the second count, and the jury returned a general verdict of guilty. The district court applied the mandatory minimum and guidelines triggered by more than five grams of crack cocaine, and sentenced Mr. Sturdivant to 63 months.

The court of appeals held that Mr. Sturdivant (who, like Mr. Simon in our case, hadn't objected to the count's duplicitness at or before trial) had waived a duplicitness argument because the duplicity wasn't apparent on the face of the indictment at the outset: given the conspiracy charge, the two same-day sales appeared to have been part of a single continuing scheme. 244 F.3d at 76. Further, the court held, plain error analysis would be available in any event. 244 F.3d at 77. Because the only count of conviction charged two crimes and the sentencing judge made no relevant conduct findings, the court of appeals held, a sentence based on both crimes alleged in the count couldn't stand. 244 F.3d at 77–79. The remedy, the court decided, was for Mr. Sturdivant to be re-sentenced on the basis of the less serious of the two possible crimes of conviction: the evening 2.8 gram sale. 244 F.3d at 80. Importantly, the court of appeals specifically said that the resentencing court could consider whether the 3.4 gram afternoon sale should be considered as relevant conduct. Id.

5 Sturdivant doesn't affect the calculation of Mr. Simon's sentencing range because counts 1–4 of Mr. Simon's indictment are not duplicitous. A charge is duplicitous when it alleges more than one crime, United States v. Starks, 472 F.3d 466, 470 (7th Cir.2006), a situation often seen when the statute cited in the count defines more than one crime. See, e.g., United States v. Savoires, 430 F.3d 376, 379–380 (6th Cir.2005) (18 U.S.C. § 924(c) creates two separate crimes of “use” and “possession”). “Duplicity creates a risk that the jury might return a less than unanimous guilty verdict, potentially exposes the defendant to prejudice at trial and sentencing, and in some cases subjects the defendant to double jeopardy.” United States v. Pansier, 576 F.3d 726, 734 (7th Cir.2009). But when the statute defines a single crime that can be committed in any of several ways, a count that charges that the defendant committed that single crime in more than one way, the “ways in which [the statutory crime] can be committed may be alleged in the conjunctive in one count ... and proof of any of them will support [a] conviction.” United States v. Haynes, 582 F.3d 686, 704 (7th Cir.2009).

The crime charged in counts 1–4 of Mr. Simon's indictment alleges commission of the crime charged in 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1):

> Any person who—
>
> > (1) Declaration under penalties of perjury.-Willfully makes and subscribes any return, statement, or other document, which contains or is verified by a written declaration that it is made under the penalties of perjury, and which he does not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter ...
>
> shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $100,000 ($500,000 in the case of a corporation), or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

That statute defines a single crime, committed by wilfully making and subscribing a sworn return not believed to be true in every manner. The making and subscribing the false return is the crime; the statute doesn't make each false entry in a single return a separate crime.

Counts 1–4 of Mr. Simon's indictment, then, were not duplicitous. They didn't raise the risk that Mr. Simon would, like Elbert Sturdivant, be convicted by a jury consisting of some jurors thinking him guilty of one crime and some jurors thinking him guilty of another. Mr. Simon's jury found, beyond a reasonable doubt, that Mr. Simon wilfully made a subscribed a sworn return he didn't believe to be true for the calendar year 2003, did so again in 2004, and again in 2005, and again in 2006. There is no uncertainty as to the crimes of which Mr. Simon was convicted in counts 1–4, so there is no need to ignore any provision of the sentencing guidelines (or, eventually, any other sentencing consideration under 18 U.S.C. § 3553) triggered by convictions for violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1).

b. Sufficiency of Evidence of Tax Loss

6 Mr. Simon also objects to the presentence report's tax loss calculation on the grounds set forth in testimony by Herbert Long, an accountant and former Internal Revenue Service agent, hearing officer, and associate chief of the appeals office. Mr. Long has offered, either through testimony or proffer, various opinions in these proceedings that various payments to the Simons were reimbursements of expenses, loan receipts, loan repayments, or distribution of capital. He has evaluated the tax loss at anywhere from zero to $173,000.

Mr. Long was a very likeable witness, but in the end was not a persuasive one. When asked what caused him to change or expand his opinions at various points during these proceedings, he seemed to say that he proposed any plausible scenario that would favor his client. He supported his opinions by assuming the truth of what Mr. Simon said or wrote, and by inferring that since Mr. Simon loaned to others, others loaned to him.

The trial evidence is far more persuasive to the court than Mr. Long's suppositions. The moneys that the Simons funneled to themselves were taken without authorization and used as income would have been used. No one viewed them as reimbursements or as distributions of capital.

Nor, despite the accounting entries the Simons made, did anyone truly view them as loans. There was scant evidence (and no credible evidence) that anyone associated with the entities from which the money came knew that they were “loaning” Mr. Simon anything; it does not appear that Mr. Simon negotiated or bargained with anyone to get the money; no note or other instrument memorializes any loan to Mr. Simon after 1997, much less any terms for time or method of repayment or interest due. The lack of documentation is particularly noteworthy with respect to JAS Partners, which claimed to have been in the business of lending, but actually seems to have done little but serve as a pipeline into the Simons' personal accounts.

The court finds, by a preponderance of the evidence, that Mr. Simon received from the entities at issue, and did not report or pay taxes on, the following sums in the following years (these figures include years as to which no charges were filed, pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 1B1.3(a)(2):

1999	$177,400
2000	$380,781
2001	$258,228
2002	$158,402
2003	$245,800
2004	$341,143
2005	$472,637
2006	$739,920
2007	393,195
	$3,167,506

Because the crimes involved filing tax returns that under-reported gross income, the tax loss is defined at 28 percent of the unreported gross income, unless a more accurate determination of the loss can be made. U.S.S.G. § 2T 1.1(c)(1)(A). No more accurate determination can be made on this record—other calculations are possible, but none are more accurate.

The court overrules Mr. Simon's objections to ¶¶ 11, 13, 16, 20–22, and 65 of the presentence report. The tax loss is 28 percent of $3,167,506, or $886,901.69. The offense level is 20. U.S.S.G. § 2T4.1(H).

2. Tax Counts Enhancements

a. Sophisticated Means

7 U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(b) requires a two-level offense enhancement if "the offense involved sophisticated means...." The presentence report and the government contend this enhancement applies. Mr. Simon objects, arguing that the entities primarily involved in the transactions (JS Elekta and Elekta Limited) used domestic bank accounts and that in any event, the use of offshore accounts is unremarkable for one with twenty years of experience as an international businessman.

Mr. Simon insists on greater sophistication than the guidelines require for this enhancement. Application Note 4 tells us that

> For purposes of subsection (b)(2), "sophisticated means" means especially complex or especially intricate offense conduct pertaining to the execution or concealment of an offense. Conduct such as hiding assets or transactions, or both, through the use of fictitious entities, corporate shells, or offshore financial accounts ordinarily indicates sophisticated means.

This definition, while more demanding than the earlier standard of " 'a greater level of planning or concealment' than a typical fraud of that kind," United States v. Wayland, 549 F.3d 526, 528 (7th Cir.2008) (citing United States v. Robinson, 538 F.3d 605, 607–608 (7th Cir.2008), doesn't require sophistication so great that nothing more intricate can be imagined.

Mr. Simon used multiple entities to hide and disguise income. There were no apparent legitimate reasons for so many business entities. JAS Partners seems to have existed solely as a chute for money into the Simons' personal accounts. He used accounts in foreign countries one wouldn't associate with either the entity or his business. Funds were broken into other checks, often routed through two or three entities to Mrs. Simon, all in a single day, as on July 15, 2004 and July 26, 2005. Those complexities and intricacies allowed Mr. Simon to walk off with tax-fee compensation for about eight years, see United States v. Wayland, 549 F.3d at 529 ("his overall scheme, which lasted nine years and involved a series of coordinated fraudulent transactions, was complex and sophisticated"), bamboozled worldly and urbane investors in Ichua, and involved especially complex and especially intricate offense conduct pertaining to the execution or concealment of the scheme. The court overrules Mr. Simon's objection to ¶¶ 23 and 66 of the presentence report. His offense level on counts 1–4 is increased by two levels, to level 22.

b. Role in the Offense

The guidelines require a two-level enhancement for a defendant who was an organizer, leader, manager, or supervisor of another criminal participant. U.S.S.G. § 3B 1.1(c). The government and the presentence report contend this enhancement is required because Mr. Simon led his wife Denise in the process that led to the false income tax returns. Mr. Simon objects, arguing that the record establishes neither that he led or supervised his wife nor that she was a criminal participant. He also challenges the enhancement's applicability when the participants are spouses.

8 The law doesn't support Mr. Simon's proposition that the role in offense enhancement doesn't apply when one spouse directs another. In United States v. Herrera, 878 F.2d 997 (7th Cir.1989), the defendant directed his wife's participation in drug distribution. The court of appeals rejected the argument Mr. Simon makes today: "It is also irrelevant that the criminal participants happen to be husband and wife. The guidelines contain no spousal exception; rather, 3B 1.1(c) applies any time there is more than one participant, regardless if the participants happen to be husband and wife." Id. at 1002 (citation omitted).

Denise Simon was a participant in the tax fraud scheme. She received most of the money, often via several checks in the same day. She was the primary record-keeper who entered the money as "loans ." She was an account signatory for JAS Partners, Elekta Limited, and J.S. Elekta Ltd. She signed the false tax returns and apparently filed some of them by mailing them. Mrs. Simon served as bookkeeper for several of the related entities, kept minutes for them, and participated in several of their board meetings and some of their correspondence.

Denise Simon was a knowing participant, and so a criminal participant, in the tax fraud scheme. Many (perhaps most) of the money arrived at the Simons' doorstep by way of checks payable to Mrs. Simon. She had to have known when she entered those checks as "loans" in the records she maintained that she hadn't borrowed money from the payor entity. Her knowledge is demonstrated by her false statement to I.R.S. Special Agent Paul Muschell, on the morning that the search warrant was executed at the Simon residence, that no financial records were in the residence and that all the records were with James Simon in Ukraine; in truth, the records were on a computer at the residence, under Mrs. Simon's screen name.

Finally, Mr. Simon directed Denise Simon in the execution of the tax fraud scheme, as demonstrated by the e-mails admitted into evidence at the sentencing hearing as Government Exhibits 4 through 8, in which James Simon instructed Denise Simon as to what to do with various financial instruments.

Mr. Simon managed Denise Simon in this criminal activity. The court overrules Mr. Simon's objections to ¶¶ 15, 24, and 68 of the presentence report. His offense level on counts 1–4 is increased by two levels, to level 24, because of his role in the offense.

c. Abuse of Position of Trust

U.S.S.G. § 3B 1.3 requires a two-level offense enhancement for a defendant who abused a position of trust in a way that significantly facilitated the commission or concealment of the offense. The government and the presentence report contend that Mr. Simon did both: that his use of the entities' money abused the trust of the entities themselves and the entities' other owners, who placed Mr. Simon in a lightly supervised position of extraordinary discretion; and that Mr. Simon's training and experience as an accountant and financial expert facilitated his weaving a web of accounts, some in unexpected offshore locations, through which he could pass money to himself. Mr. Simon objects on several grounds. He denies that he held positions of trust in the entities, and denies that he used his skills and knowledge in any sophisticated way the facilitated the crimes or their concealment.

9 Mr. Simon's argument is difficult to understand. Mr. Simon was managing director of Ichua Limited and JS Elekta Leasing Ltd. He was president of William R. Simon Farms, Inc. and Elekta Ltd. He was general partner of JAS Partners. Beyond the repose of trust inherent in naming a person to such positions (much less to all the positions) with broad inherent discretion, Mr. Simon had significantly less supervision than would employees whose responsibilities are generally less discretionary. He (and in some instances his wife) had signature authority on the business accounts, and he had (as evidence by the way things played out) authority to issue checks without board or majority partner approval. The sentencing hearing testimony of Roland Bopp demonstrates that while Ichua and JS Elekta Leasing had conscientious and capable board members, Mr. Simon had sufficiently thinly supervised discretion to pilfer hundreds of thousands of dollars that investors (including some of the directors) had intended for construction of a telecommunication system in Ukraine.

That lightly supervised discretion in the operation of these companies and partnerships made it possible for Mr. Simon to divert millions of the entities' dollars to his personal use. He abused a position—indeed, five positions—of private trust. The court overrules Mr. Simon's objections to ¶¶ 25 and 69 of the presentence report. His offense level on counts 1–4 is increased by two levels, to level 26, because of his abuse of his positions of trust.

The pre-grouping offense level for counts 1–4 is 26.

B. The FBAR Counts

1. Base Offense Level

Counts 6–8, the foreign bank account report ("FBAR") counts, are grouped as a single offense, as well. U.S.S.G. § 3D 1,2(d). The base offense level for violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5314 is "6 plus the number of offense levels from the table in § 2B 1.1 (Theft, Property Destruction, and Fraud) corresponding to the value of the funds...." U.S.S.G. § 2S1.3(a)(2). The total value of the foreign bank accounts (according to the return Mr. Simon belatedly filed in 2010) from 2003 to 2007 was $50,064,000. The referenced table assigns 24 levels to a value of more than $50 million. U.S.S.G. § 2B 1.1(b)(1)(M). The offense level for Mr. Simon's FBAR counts, then, starts at 30.

The presentence report recommends that calculation of the pre-grouping offense level for counts 6–8 end there. The parties disagree, though for different reasons.

Mr. Simon argues for application of U.S.S.G. § 2S1.3(b)(3), which requires that the offense level be reduced to six if (a) the defendant didn't know or believe that the funds were proceeds or, or were intended to promote, unlawful activity, and the crime didn't involve bulk cash smuggling, (b) the offense wasn't committed as part of a pattern of unlawful activity involving more than $100,000 in a twelvemonth period, (c) the defendant didn't act with reckless disregard of the source of the funds, (d) the funds were the proceeds of lawful activity, and (e) the funds were to be used for a lawful purpose. Mr. Simon bears the burden of demonstrating the applicability of this "safe harbor" provision by a preponderance of the evidence. United States v. Keleta, 552 F.3d 861, 866 (D.C.Cir.2009).

10 Mr. Simon has met this burden. He has shown that the money that went into the related entities were proceeds of lawful activity—raising funds to develop and construct a telecommunications company in Ukraine. Mr. Simon hasn't accounted for each dollar that went into the related entities, but the guideline doesn't require him to do so; guideline issues must be proven by a preponderance of the evidence. See, e.g., United States v. Saenz, 623 F.3d 461, 467 (7th Cir.2010) (defendant must prove entitlement to reduction by preponderance). He has explained why people put money into those entities, and the record contains no suggestion that any of these accounts were used to launder proceeds from sales of weaponry, drugs, classified secrets, gambling, prostitution, or other racketeering activities. Unlike the district courts in United States v. Sweeney, 611 F.3d 459, 477 (8th Cir.2010) and United States v. Keleta, 552 F.3d 861 (D.C.Cir.2009), this court has enough information to find that it is more likely than not that the funds in the entities' accounts were the proceeds of lawful activity.

The funds were to be used for lawful purposes—again, to develop and construct a telecommunications company in Ukraine. Even after Mr. Simon diverted them from that purpose, they were used for lawful purposes—the support, education, and entertainment of the Simon family. It might be true, as the government suggests, that Mr. Simon committed wire fraud to divert those funds, but that crime simply shifted the money from one lawful purpose to another.

The safe harbor provision in U.S.S.G. § 2S1.3(b)(3) applies. The court sustains Mr. Simon's objections to the presentence report's recommendation against application of the safe harbor provision, and reduces Mr. Simon's offense level for counts 6–8 to six.

2. FBAR Count Enhancements

The government argues that the enhancements for sophisticated means, aggravating role, and abuse of position of trust or use of a special skill apply to the FBAR counts (indeed, to all the counts), not just to the tax counts.

The government doesn't identify a guideline under which an offense level calculated under U.S.S.G. § 2S1.3(b)(3) might be enhanced for the use of sophisticated means. In any event, whatever the sophistication and complexity of the overall scheme, there is nothing complex about failing to file reports with a federal income tax return. Mr. Simon strove mightily and stealthily to extract tax-free dollars from the entities with which he was associated, but that's not what he was charged with having done in counts 6–8. In those counts, as Mr. Simon's was told, jury the criminal activity consisted of (1) Mr. Simon having signature or other authority over bank, securities, or other financial accounts in a foreign country in the year addressed in the count, (2) that had a balance exceeding $10,000 in aggregate value; (3) that Mr. Simon knew that he had a legal duty to file a report of foreign financial accounts; and (4) that Mr. Simon knowingly and willfully failed to file the report on or before June 30 of the year addressed in the count. There is no sophistication involved in not filing those reports.

11 On the same reasoning, Mr. Simon's positions of private trust and his special skills as an accountant had much to do with Mr. Simon being in a position in which he was supposed to file these reports, but had no facilitating role in his failure to do so. No enhancement under U.S.S.G. § 3B 1.3 is appropriate with respect to counts 6–8.

Denise Simon signed the tax returns and filed at least one by mailing it. She knew of the foreign accounts and had signature authority with respect to several of the accounts. She was a knowing participant, managed by Mr. Simon, in the scheme that led her to that circumstance. The court agrees with the government that Mr. Simon's offense level must be increased by two levels under U.S.S.G. § 3B 1.1(c) with respect to the FBAR counts. The court sustains the government's objection to ¶ 62 of the presentence report and increases Mr. Simon's offense level by two levels, to level eight, on counts 6–8.

The court overrules the government's objections to ¶¶ 60 and 64 of the presentence report. The pre-grouping offense level for counts 6–8 is eight.

C. The Mail Fraud and Education Fraud Counts

1. Base Offense Level

Mail fraud is punishable by imprisonment for as long as twenty years, so the base offense level for counts 9–12, 15, and 17–23 is seven. U.S.S.G. § 2B 1.1(a)(1). The court is to enhance that offense level according to a loss table if the loss exceeded $5,000. Mr. (and Mrs.) Simon attached false returns to private and federal financial aid applications that produced a total of $166,670.35 in financial aid for their children. The loss table requires a ten-level enhancement in offense level if the loss amount is more than $120,000 but not more than $200,000. U.S.S.G. § 2B 1.1(b)(F). The government and the presentence report recommend that the court apply that ten-level enhancement.

Mr. Simon objects to the ten-level enhancement because, he contends, there was no tax loss. His argument stands on two legs. First, the court denied the government's forfeiture motion with respect to the mail fraud counts because the government had presented too little evidence "that the Simons wouldn't have received any need-based financial aid from Culver or Canterbury had they reported their income honestly." December 21, 2010 Opinion and Order (Doc. No. 138 at p. 4). And second, the Indiana schools have disclaimed any desire for restitution.

Mr. Simon's argument misapprehends what the court is to measure. "Loss," for purposes of U.S.S.G. § 2B 1.1(b), is the greater of actual loss and intended loss. Application Note 3(A). Intended loss is the pecuniary harm that was intended to result from the offense. Application Note 3(A)(ii). The government was unable to prove, for forfeiture purposes, actual loss from the mail fraud with respect to the Indiana schools, and appears to fall short as well with respect to proof of actual loss that is needed for an order of restitution.

None of those concerns address intended loss. It is inescapable to the court that the Simons attached their false federal income tax returns, with numbers bolstered by their omission of large sums spent on family travel (into which the applications inquired) because they intended to get financial aid that they wouldn't have received otherwise. But for their sham pretenses of need, the financial aid awards they sought might have gone to other applicants or not been awarded at all. What the Simons received from the financial institutions as a result of their fraudulent applications is within what the guidelines mean by "intended loss."

12 The loss—here, the intended loss—from these fraudulent applications for financial aid was more than $120,000 but not more than $200,000, requiring a ten-level enhancement in offense level. U.S.S.G. § 2B 1.1(b)(F). The court overrules Mr. Simon's objections to ¶¶ 14, 16, 35, and 73 of the presentence report. Mr. Simon's offense level for 9–12, 15, and 17–23 is increased by ten levels, to level 17, because of the amount of the loss.

2. Mail Fraud and Education Fraud Counts Enhancements

The guidelines require a two-level enhancement if the fraud crime involved sophisticated means. U.S.S.G. § 2B1.1(b)(9)(C). "Sophisticated means" has the same meaning for the fraud guidelines that it had with respect to the tax fraud calculation. U .S.S.G. § 2B 1.1 Application Note 8(B). The presentence report and Mr. Simon recommend against applying this enhancement; the government objects. Once the tax forms were created and filed (completing the crime of filing a false tax return), there was nothing especially complex or intricate about using the forms as attachments to financial aid forms. The court agrees with the presentence report and Mr. Simon that the fraud crimes didn't involve sophisticated means within the meaning of U.S.S.G. § 2B1.1(b)(9)(C). The court overrules the government's objection to ¶ 73 of the presentence report. Mr. Simon's offense level for counts 9–12, 15, and 17–23 remains at 17.

The government contends that the two-level role in the offense enhancement applies with respect to counts 9–12, 15, and 17–23 because Mr. Simon directed Denise Simon in the commission of the financial aid fraud. The court agrees with the government. Evidence at trial indicated that Mrs. Simon delivered papers to the schools in conjunction with the financial aid applications, pursuant to James Simon's direction. The court sustains the government's objection to ¶ 75 of the presentence report. Mr. Simon's offense level with respect to counts 9–12, 15, and 17–23 is increased by two levels, to level 19, because of his managerial role in the fraud.

The government contends that Mr. Simon's offense level on the fraud counts should be increased by another two levels pursuant to U .S.S.G. § 3B1.3, the “abuse of position of trust or use of a special skill” enhancement applied in calculating the offense level for the tax counts. Mr. Simon and the presentence report disagree, as does the court. Enhancement of Mr. Simon's offense level for his role in the offense forecloses any further enhancement for use of a special skill, U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3 (“if this adjustment is based solely on the use of special skill, it may not be employed in addition to an adjustment under § 3B1.1 (Aggravating Role)”), and Mr. Simon held no position of private trust with respect to Culver Academies, Canterbury School, or Mary Baldwin College. The court overrules the government's objection to ¶ 77 of the presentence report.

The pre-grouping final adjusted offense level for counts 9–12, 15, and 17–23 is 19.

D. Grouping the Offense Levels

13 Mr. Simon's offense level for counts 1–4 is 26; his offense level for counts 6–8 is 8; his offense level for counts 9–12, 15, and 17–23 is 19. The group with the highest offense level—counts 1–4, at level 26—is counted as one unit. U.S.S.G. § 3D 1.4(a). The group that is seven levels less serious than the most serious—counts 9–12, 15, and 17–23, at level 19—is counted as one-half a unit. U.S.S.G. § 3D 1.4(b). The group that is 18 levels less serious than the most serious group—counts 6–8, at level 8—is disregarded for purposes of calculating the post-grouping offense level. U.S.S.G. § 3D 1.4(c).

Because there are one and one-half units in Mr. Simon's guideline calculation, the offense level of the most serious group is increased by one level. The post-grouping offense level is 27.

E. Acceptance of Responsibility

The sentencing guidelines require a two-level offense level reduction for a defendant who clearly accepted responsibility for the offenses of conviction. U.S.S.G. § 3E1.1(a). Mr. Simon's decision to go to trial steepens his climb to this reduction, but doesn't make it impossible; “[i]n rare situations a defendant may clearly demonstate an acceptance of responsibility for his criminal conduct even though he exercises his constitutional right to a trial. This may occur, for example, where a defendant goes to trial to assert and preserve issues that do not relate to factual guilt....” Application Note 2 to U.S.S.G. § 3E1.1. Mr. Simon contends that he didn't deny the conduct alleged in the tax counts—the transactions themselves—but rather challenged the funds' proper legal characterization. With respect to the FBAR counts, he says he was trying to preserve his claim that an IRS notice meant that he didn't have to file FBARs during the years charged. Mr Simon says that the financial aid was awarded without reliance on the tax returns or expenditure information he submitted with the applications.

Mr. Simon hasn't accepted responsibility within the meaning of the sentencing guidelines. Through the sentencing hearing, he has denied that the money that cascaded into his personal accounts was income. He moved for judgment of acquittal on all counts at the close of the government's case in chief, at the close of all the evidence, and post-trial, based on the insufficiency of the evidence. Mr. Simon has expressed no remorse whatsoever.

Mr. Simon denied essential factual elements at trial and put the government to its burden of proof. He had every right to do so. But he hasn't accepted responsibility within the meaning of the guidelines, and is not entitled to a reduction in offense level for having done so. The court overrules Mr. Simon's objections to ¶ 76 of the presentence report. His final post-grouping adjusted offense level is 27.

III. Summary of Rulings on Objections

Although the objections don't affect the advisory guideline range, the government has objected to the presentence report to the extent it opines that Mr. Simon doesn't have the money to pay a fine. Noting Mr. Simon's substantial income in 2009, what would appear to be extraordinary expenditures by Mr. Simon during this prosecution, and that JAS Partners had assets of just under $4 million as of the end of 2008. The presentence report responds that Mr. Simon reported having liquidated most of JAS Partners for his defense. The government voices a very reasonable suspicion, given Mr. Simon's handling of these accounts in the past, but a party objecting to a presentence report's factual content bears a higher burden. The objector must furnish some evidence that calls into question the reliability or correctness of the presentence report. United States v. Mays, 593 F.3d 603, 608 (7th Cir.2010). The party that agrees with the presentence report has the burden of demonstrating the report's accuracy only when the objector creates real doubt as to the information's reliability. United States v. Maiden, 606 F.3d 337, 339 (7th Cir.2010); United States v. Panice, 598 F.3d 426, 439 (7th Cir.2010). The government has not raised real doubt about Mr. Simon's present ability to pay a fine in addition to restitution that will, according to the presentence report, exceed $1 million. The court overrules the government's objection to ¶¶ 127 and 128 of the presentence report.

14 In summary, the court sustains Mr. Simon's objections to the presentence report's recommendation against application of the safe harbor provision in U.S.S.G. § 2S1.3(b)(3), and sustains the government's objections to ¶¶ 62 and 75 of the presentence report. Those rulings require the court to reject the grouping paragraphs (¶¶ 78–84) of the presentence report, as well. The court adopts as its own findings ¶¶ 1–61, 63–74, 76–77, and 85–144 of the presentence report, specifically including ¶¶ 90–127 concerning Mr. Simon's financial condition and earning ability.

IV. Calculation of Advisory Range

This is Mr. Simon's first criminal conviction of any sort, so he is assigned to criminal history category I. Given the offense level of 27, the sentencing guidelines recommend a sentencing range of 70 to 87 months' imprisonment. A hearing to determine a reasonable sentence will be scheduled in a separate order after consultation with counsel's schedules.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2011 WL 924264, 107 A.F.T.R.2d 2011-1393

Footnotes

[1] In closing argument at the sentencing/motion hearing on March 8, defense counsel argued for the first time that the government's production of the Special Agent's report at trial was also untimely, and requested leave to amend the motion to dismiss to include that allegation. The court denied the request as untimely.

End of Document

272 F.Supp.3d 96
United States District Court, District of Columbia.

Donald DEWEES, Plaintiff,
v.
UNITED STATES of America, Defendant.

Case No. 16–cv–01579 (CRC)
|
Signed 08/08/2017

Synopsis
Background: Taxpayer brought action against the United States, alleging that the government violated the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment, and violated his due process and equal protection rights under the Fifth Amendment with respect to collection assistance provisions of the United States-Canada Tax Convention, pursuant to which the Canadian Revenue Agency withheld his Canadian tax refund in abeyance due to his outstanding $120,000 debt to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) for the penalty it imposed after taxpayer failed to report his foreign financial assets for 12 years. United States moved to dismiss.

Holdings: The District Court, Christopher R. Cooper, J., held that:

[1] imposition of $120,000 penalty did not violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment;

[2] taxpayer was not denied adequate due process; and

[3] taxpayer lacked standing to bring claim alleging that his Fifth Amendment equal protection rights were violated because he was not allowed to participate in streamlined program that imposed lower penalties for failure to report foreign financial assets.

Motion granted.

Attorneys and Law Firms

98 Mark A. Feigenbaum, Thornhill, ON, for Plaintiff.

Christopher James Williamson, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Defendant.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

CHRISTOPHER R. COOPER, United States District Judge

The arm of the U.S. tax man is long, but in this case it needed extend only over our northern border to find Plaintiff Donald Dewees. Dewees is a U.S. citizen living in Canada, where he operates a consulting business. Because the business is incorporated abroad, Dewees was required to furnish certain annual information about the company to the IRS. 26 U.S.C. § 6038(b). Unfortunately for Dewees, he neglected to do so for over a decade.

Enter the tax man. After Dewees voluntarily disclosed his failure to file the required informational returns, the IRS assessed a statutory penalty of $120,000, $10,000 for each year of non-compliance. Dewees challenged the penalty before the IRS without success and refused to pay it. But what Dewees likely did not anticipate is that, pursuant to the U.S.–Canada tax treaty, the Candian tax authority would hold Dewees' domestic tax refund in abeyance until the IRS penalty was paid in full. After paying the penalty, Dewees filed suit in this Court challenging the relevant treaty provisions as unconstitutional under the Eighth Amendment and both the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fifth Amendment. The Government now moves to dismiss. Finding that Dewees has failed to state a claim for relief on his Eighth Amendment and due process claims, and lacks standing to bring his equal protection claim, the Court will grant the Government's motion and dismiss the case.

I. Background

U.S. citizens who hold controlling interests in foreign corporations must annually file IRS Form 5471, which discloses certain ownership and financial information about the corporation. In addition, U.S. citizens living abroad must disclose holdings in foreign bank accounts over certain thresholds by filing a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR"). See Def.'s Mot. to Dismiss ("MTD") 7; Compl. ¶ 12. In 2009, Dewees learned that he had failed to comply with these requirements, 99 and, on the advice of a tax specialist, applied to participate in the IRS's Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program ("OVDP"). See Compl. ¶¶ 13–16. OVDP is intended to encourage taxpayers who have not disclosed their offshore assets, and who are not already under investigation by the agency, to voluntarily comply with applicable disclosure requirements. See IRS, 2009 Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program, https://www.irs.gov/uac/2009–offshore-voluntary-disclosure-program; Maze v. IRS ("Maze I"), 206 F.Supp.3d 1, 5–6 (D.D.C. 2016), aff'd, 862 F.3d 1087 (D.C. Cir. 2017). In return for their disclosures, the program offers taxpayers compromise terms on penalties for outstanding taxes, assurance that the IRS will not refer the matter to the Department of Justice for criminal prosecution, and finality regarding previous non-disclosures. See Maze I, 206 F.Supp.3d at 6–7. The IRS assessed a penalty of $185,862 against Dewees for not filing FBARs from 2003 to 2008, but did not at that time calculate a penalty for Dewees' failure to file Form 5471. See Compl. ¶¶ 22, 24–25; IRS, Taxpayers with Foreign Assets May Have FBAR and FATCA Filing Requirements in June, https://www.irs.gov/uac/newsroom/taxpayers-with-foreign-assets-may-have-fbar-and-fatca-filing-requirements-in-june. Dewees refused to pay the assessed penalty and withdrew from the OVDP. See id. ¶¶ 26–27.

In September 2011, the IRS notified Dewees that it had assessed a different penalty of $120,000 against him for failing to file Form 5471 from 1997 to 2008. See id. ¶¶ 1, 29. Section 6038(c) of the Tax Code authorizes the IRS to impose a $10,000 penalty for each missed filing. See 26 U.S.C. § 6038(c). The total penalty was based entirely on Dewees' failure to file; he was not liable for any unpaid taxes. See Compl. ¶ 47. Dewees requested an abatement of this penalty for reasonable cause, which was denied, as was his subsequent appeal of that decision. See id. ¶¶ 35–36.

Well after Dewees' appeal had been rejected, the IRS introduced another program to encourage taxpayers to voluntarily disclose offshore assets—the Streamlined Filing Compliance Procedures ("SFCP"). The SFCP differs from the OVDP in several respects: The SFCP involves less paperwork and imposes lower penalties than the OVDP, but only covers three years of non-compliance as opposed to the OVDP's eight-year coverage period. See Def.'s MTD 3–4; Compl. ¶ 50; Maze v. IRS, 862 F.3d 1087, 1089 (D.C. Cir. 2017) ("Maze II"). And, unlike the OVDP, the SFCP does not offer immunity from criminal prosecution. See id., at 1092 n.2. Transferring between the two programs is generally disfavored, but taxpayers who are otherwise eligible for the SFCP and made their OVDP submissions before July 1, 2014, may remain in the OVDP while requesting the more favorable terms available under the SFCP. See Maze I, 206 F.Supp.3d at 7–8.

In May 2015, the Canadian Revenue Agency notified Dewees that it was holding his Canadian tax refund in abeyance due to his outstanding $120,000 debt to the IRS. See Compl. ¶ 37. This international collection assistance is permitted by Article XXVI(A) of the United States-Canada Income Tax Convention. See Def.'s MTD 9–10; Compl. ¶ 37. Dewees promptly sent the Canadian Revenue Agency a check for $134,116.34, representing the $120,000 penalty plus interest. See Compl. ¶ 38. In September 2015, he filed a claim seeking a refund of that amount, which was rejected in May 2016. See Compl. ¶ 5. He then brought this action, requesting that the Court find the collection assistance provisions of the United States-Canada Tax Convention unconstitutional for violating 100 (1) the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment, (2) the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment, and (3) the Equal Protection Clause of the Fifth Amendment. See id. ¶¶ 42–47, 66–67, 52–53.

II. Standards of Review

[1] [2] The Government moves to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted with respect to all three of Dewees' claims. See Def.'s MTD 1. Alternatively, it asks that Dewees' equal protection claim be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. See id. at 18. Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1), the Court must dismiss any action over which it cannot properly exercise jurisdiction. "[D]efect[s] of standing" constitute "defect[s] in subject matter jurisdiction." Haase v. Sessions, 835 F.2d 902, 906 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The "plaintiff bears the burden of ... establishing the elements of standing," and each element " 'must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i.e., with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation.' " Arpaio v. Obama, 797 F.3d 11, 19 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992)).

To survive a 12(b)(6) motion, a "complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.' " Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007)). A court "accept[s] as true all of the allegations contained in [the] complaint," disregarding "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action" and "mere conclusory statements." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937. The court then examines the remaining "factual content [to determine if it may] draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. A court must also consider "documents incorporated into the complaint by reference." Tellabs, Inc. v. Makor Issues & Rights, Ltd., 551 U.S. 308, 322, 127 S.Ct. 2499, 168 L.Ed.2d 179 (2007).

III. Analysis

A. Excessive Fines Claim

[3] [4] "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." U.S. Const. amend. VIII. In analyzing an excessive fines claim, the Court must first decide whether a penalty is a fine before determining if it is unconstitutionally excessive. See United States v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321, 334, 118 S.Ct. 2028, 141 L.Ed.2d 314 (1998). A payment to the government is only considered a "fine" under the Eighth Amendment if it is "punishment for some offense." Bajakajian, 524 U.S. at 328, 118 S.Ct. 2028 (quoting Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602, 609–10, 113 S.Ct. 2801, 125 L.Ed.2d 488 (1993)). In other words, the purpose of the penalty must be primarily retributive or deterrent rather than remedial. Id. In the context of forfeiture, for example, a penalty that is solely "designed to punish the offender" is considered punishment and is thus limited by the Excessive Fines Clause. Id. at 333–34, 118 S.Ct. 2028.

[5] Tax penalties, by contrast, having been held to fulfill a remedial purpose are therefore not subject to the Excessive Fines Clause. The Supreme Court first articulated this principle almost 80 years ago in Helvering v. Mitchell, 303 U.S. 391, 58 S.Ct. 630, 82 L.Ed. 917 (1938), reasoning that tax penalties are remedial because they exist as "a safeguard for the protection 101 of the revenue and to reimburse the Government for the heavy expense of investigation and the loss resulting from the taxpayer's fraud." Id. at 401, 58 S.Ct. 630 (citing a string of supporting precedent). Since then, the lower courts have erected "an insurmountable wall of tax cases" to support this proposition. See, e.g., McNichols v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 13 F.3d 432, 434 (1st Cir. 1993) (holding that the Excessive Fines Clause does not apply to civil tax penalties and characterizing the proposed extension of rule from forfeiture cases to tax penalties as an unsupported "giant leap"); Little v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 106 F.3d 1445, 1455 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that the Excessive Fines Clause was not violated because plaintiff "failed to establish that the additions to tax in question [were] penal sanctions unrelated to the government's fundamental interest in raising revenue"); Thomas v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 62 F.3d 97, 102–03 (4th Cir. 1995) (same). A Bankruptcy Court recently applied this precedent in holding the same Form 5471 non-compliance penalties challenged here are not fines. See In re Wyly, 552 B.R. 338, 606 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. 2016). The Court concludes likewise. Because "a small, fixed-penalty provision," such as the $10,000 penalty here, "can be said to do no more than make the Government whole," it is outside the Eighth Amendment's reach. Austin, 509 U.S. at 622 n.14, 113 S.Ct. 2801 (internal quotations omitted).

Dewees nonetheless attempts to scale this "insurmountable wall" of precedent by arguing that a smaller penalty would have achieved the same objective of making the Government whole. See Pl.'s Opp'n 3. But that is beside the point. Congress authorized a $10,000 penalty for every instance of non-compliance because it recognized the expenses and loss that could result if U.S. taxpayers no longer felt obligated to disclose their foreign assets. The IRS strictly applied that statutorily authorized amount across Dewees' twelve years of non-compliance, resulting in a total penalty of $120,000 —an amount designed to mitigate the harm suffered by the Government. Because Congress authorized this penalty for a legitimate remedial purpose, Dewees' Eighth Amendment claim fails.

B. Due Process Claim

[6] [7] Dewees likewise fails to establish a due process violation because he has been afforded an adequate "opportunity to be heard at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner." Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 333, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18 (1976) (quoting Armstrong v. Manzo, 380 U.S. 545, 552, 85 S.Ct. 1187, 14 L.Ed.2d 62 (1965)). Courts judge procedural due process challenges to property deprivations by weighing (1) "the private interest that will be affected by the official action;" (2) "the risk of an erroneous deprivation of such interest through the procedures used, and the probable value, if any, of additional or substitute procedural safeguards;" and (3) "the Government's interest, including the function involved and the fiscal and administrative burdens that the additional or substitute procedural requirement would entail." Id. at 335, 96 S.Ct. 893.

[8] [9] [10] Mere postponement of an opportunity to challenge the imposition of a tax penalty "is not a denial of due process, if the opportunity given for the ultimate judicial determination of the liability is adequate." Phillips v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 283 U.S. 589, 596–97, 51 S.Ct. 608, 75 L.Ed. 1289 (1931). Such delays are "an inevitable consequence" of disputes between taxpayers and the IRS, and are not unconstitutional. Bob Jones Univ. v. Simon, 416 U.S. 725, 747, 94 S.Ct. 2038, 40 L.Ed.2d 496 (1974). Federal district courts 102 have jurisdiction over lawsuits against the Government for the refund of tax penalties. See 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1). Full payment of the amount owed followed by a lawsuit in a district court seeking a refund is a proper procedure for challenging penalties assessed under § 6038. See Wheaton v. United States, 888 F.Supp. 622, 627 (D.N.J. 1995) (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)). Section 1346 gives district courts original jurisdiction over "any civil action against the United States for the recovery of ... any penalty claimed to have been collected without authority or any sum alleged to have been excessive on in any manner wrongfully collected under the internal-revenue laws[.]" Id. That is so even if this results in the taxpayer being "in the position of paying a substantial tax penalty without prepayment review." Id.; see also Nat'l Fed'n of Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius, 567 U.S. 519, 543, 132 S.Ct. 2566, 183 L.Ed.2d 450 (2012) ("[T]axes can ordinarily be challenged only after they are paid, by suing for a refund.").

Dewees claims that he was denied adequate due process because he had no opportunity to appeal his penalty "through administrative means or the U.S. Tax Court" before it was collected. Compl. ¶ 67. But the absence of Dewees' requested avenue of relief does not mean his due process rights have been violated. The ability to challenge tax penalties in district courts under § 1346(a)(1) fulfills the Fifth Amendment's requirements. Accordingly, Dewees has failed to state a claim for relief under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

C. Equal Protection Claim

[11] [12] [13] Finally, the Government moves to dismiss Dewees' equal protection claim for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Def.'s MTD 18. The Court must start with the jurisdictional issue. In order to have standing to litigate a claim in federal court, a plaintiff must establish an injury in fact, which is traceable to the defendant, and which is likely to be redressed by prevailing in court. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560–61, 112 S.Ct. 2130. A sufficient injury in fact is concrete and particularized, and actual or imminent as opposed to merely hypothetical. Id. at 560, 112 S.Ct. 2130. It is the plaintiff's burden to demonstrate that his claim satisfies all of these elements. Id. at 561, 112 S.Ct. 2130. In considering a motion to dismiss for lack of standing, the Court must assume the truth of the plaintiff's factual allegations but not his legal conclusions, which must be supported by more than "mere conclusory statements." Williams v. Lew, 819 F.3d 466, 472 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 663, 129 S.Ct. 1937).

Dewees bases his equal protection claim on the contention that he was not allowed to participate in the SFCP while other similarly situated taxpayers were, and thus he was denied the opportunity to have a lower penalty imposed. See Compl. ¶¶ 52–53. This argument suffers from a fatal flaw because, as the Government points out, Dewees has not pled that he sought entrance into the SFCP or that his application was denied. See Def.'s MTD 18. And because Dewees has not shown (or attempted to show) that the IRS ever denied him the opportunity to participate in the SFCP, he cannot establish that he suffered an actual injury. By failing to show that he was injured, Dewees lacks standing and this Court lacks jurisdiction to hear his claim.[1]

*103 IV. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed above, the Court finds that Dewees has failed to state a viable claim with respect to his excessive fines and due process claims, and that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction over Dewees' equal protection claim. Accordingly, it will grant the Government's motion to dismiss. A separate Order accompanies this Memorandum Opinion.

All Citations

272 F.Supp.3d 96, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-5429, 2017-2 USTC P 50,321

Footnotes

[1] The Government alternatively moves to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. Because the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction, it will not consider this contention. The Court notes, however, that a fellow court in this district denied a similar equal protection claim, holding that a taxpayer who participated in OVDP prior to July 1, 2014 "may be able to receive the favorable penalty terms of the Streamlined Procedures, but must remain in the OVDP in order to do so." Maze I, 206 F.Supp.3d at 7–8. Applying that principle here, Dewees' decision to leave the OVDP—and not the IRS's actions—rendered him ineligible for the SFCP.

End of Document

2016 WL 416377
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
C.D. California, Western Division.

United States of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Letantia Bussell, Defendant.

Case No. CV 15-02034-SJO(VBKx)
|
Signed January 11, 2016.

Attorneys and Law Firms

EILEEN M.DECKER, United States Attorney, SANDRA R. BROWN, Assistant United States Attorney, Chief, Tax Division, THOMAS D. COKER [SBN 136820], Assistant United States Attorney, Room 7211 Federal Building, 300 North Los Angeles Street, Los Angeles, California 90012, Telephone: (213) 894-2454, Facsimile: (213) 894-0115, Attorneys for the United States of America.

JUDGMENT IN FAVOR OF PLAINTIFF UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND AGAINST DEFENDANT LETANTIA BUSSELL

S. JAMES OTERO, United States District Judge

1 Pursuant to the Court's Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part the Government's Motion for Summary Judgment Reducing Penalty Assessment to Judgment filed on December 8, 2015 (ECF Docket No. 25),

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that:

1. Pursuant to 31 U.S.C. Section 5321(a)(5)(C), defendant Letantia Bussell is personally liable and indebted to the United States of America for the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (“FBAR”) penalty assessment for the year 2006 in the amount of in the reduced amount of $1,120,513, plus statutory interest accruing from the date of assessment on June 5, 2013, as provided by law, until such obligation is paid in full.

2. Defendant Letantia Bussell is personally liable and indebted to the United States of America for the failure-to-pay the assessed FBAR penalty, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. Section 3717(e)(2), as provided by law.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2016 WL 416377

End of Document

2011 WL 1304438
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
N.D. Indiana,
South Bend Division.

UNITED STATES of America
v.
James A. SIMON.

Cause No. 3:10–CR–56(01) RM.
|
April 5, 2011.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Jesse M. Barrett–AUSA, US Attorney's Office, South Bend, IN, for United States of America.

OPINION AND ORDER

ROBERT L. MILLER, JR., District Judge.

1 James Simon was sentenced to six years in prison on March 29 on four counts of filing false income tax returns, 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1), three counts of failing to file reports of foreign bank and financial accounts, 31 U.S.C. §§ 5314, 5322, eight counts of mail fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, and four counts of federal financial aid fraud, 20 U.S.C. § 1097. Mr. Simon now seeks bail pending appeal under 18 U.S.C. § 3143(b), (c).

I

To be released pending appeal, Mr. Simon must show (1) by clear and convincing evidence that he presents no danger or flight risk and (2) that his appeal raises a substantial question of law or fact likely to result in reversal, a new trial, or a sentence that includes either no imprisonment or imprisonment for a shorter time than the appeal is expected to take. 18 U.S.C. § 3143(b). A substantial question is "a 'close' question or one that very well could be decided the other way." United States v. Bilanzich, 771 F.2d 292, 299 (7th Cir.1985). In other words, "a toss-up or nearly so." United States v. Shoffner, 791 F.2d 586, 590 n. 6 (7th Cir.1986). In making these determinations, a district court should be humble with respect to the correctness of its own decisions.

A

Mr. Simon has satisfied his burden of proof concerning danger and flight. The government agrees that Mr. Simon poses no danger to the community or to any person in it. The government suspects that Mr. Simon has stashed away enough untaxed money to finance flight; the government points to the sums Mr. Simon must have spent in defending these charges. The government might be right; Mr. Simon has woven a sufficiently complex web that one can never be certain that everything is accounted for. Nonetheless, the court is persuaded by clear and convincing evidence (though not to a certainty) that Mr. Simon will not flee and leave his children behind.

B

Were that sufficient to provide the court with discretion to allow bail pending appeal, the court wouldn't hesitate to grant Mr. Simon bail. His children would benefit from another year or so of direct parenting, and Mr. Simon and his family might accept his imprisonment better after the court of appeals affirmed the judgment they haven't yet accepted.

But Congress doesn't grant courts such discretion until a convicted defendant makes a further showing that a substantial question of law or fact is likely to (in the sense that the issue is nearly a toss-up) result in reversal, a new trial, or a much shorter sentence. Mr. Simon hasn't made that showing.

1

Mr. Simon raises arguments that would challenge first his FBAR convictions and less directly his tax convictions. Mr. Simon argues that because the Internal Revenue Service extended the deadlines for filing FBARs (and indeed purported to foreswear enforcement under certain circumstances), his failure to file the forms when they otherwise would have been due wasn't a crime. This court denied Mr. Simon's dismissal motion based on that argument on October 8, reasoning that if Mr. Simon committed a crime by not filing a required form when he was supposed to, the Internal Revenue Service had no magic wand to absolve him of that crime retroactively. Mr. Simon will appeal that ruling.

2 From this argument, Mr. Simon reasons that if he succeeds, his convictions on the tax counts must fall, as well, because they charged that his income tax returns were false, not solely because he omitted what the government contends was taxable income, but also because he denied having reportable interests in foreign accounts. See Yates v. United States, 354 U.S. 298, 311–312, 77 S.Ct. 1064, 1 L.Ed.2d 1356 (1957); United States v. Lee, 558 F.3d 638 (7th Cir.2009).

The government cites a horde of cases that support the proposition that amendment of a regulation doesn't relieve criminal liability for pre-amendment conduct, citing United States v. United States Coin and Currency, 401 U.S. 715, 737–738, 91 S.Ct. 1041, 28 L.Ed.2d 434 (1971); Allen v. Grand Central Aircraft Co., 347 U.S. 535, 553–555, 74 S.Ct. 745, 98 L.Ed. 933 (1954); United States v. Hark, 320 U.S. 531, 536, 64 S.Ct. 359, 88 L.Ed. 290 (1944); United States v. Curtiss–Wright Export Corp., 299 U.S. 304, 332, 57 S.Ct. 216, 81 L.Ed. 255 (1936); United States v. Grimaud, 220 U.S. 506, 522, 31 S.Ct. 480, 55 L.Ed. 563 (1911); United States v. Uni Oil, Inc., 710 F.2d 1078, 1986 (5th Cir.1983); City & County of Denver v. Bergland, 695 F.2d 465, 480 (10th Cir.1982); United States v. Resnick, 455 F.2d 1127, 1134 (5th Cir.1972); Crary v. Porter, 157 F.2d 410, 415 (8th Cir.1946); Bowles v. Jones, 151 F.2d 232, 234 (10th Cir.1945); O'Neal v. United States, 140 F.2d 908, 913–914 (6th Cir.1944); United States v. Philipp, 63 F.Supp. 853 (E.D.Pa.1945), and notes that the Notice on which Mr. Simon relies didn't rise to the level of a regulation. The government notes that the only case on which Mr. Simon relies (United States v. Tenzer, 950 F.Supp. 554 (S.D.N.Y.1996)) is “a reversed district court case, the reasoning of which, according to Westlaw, no court anywhere has ever followed.”

The court agrees with the government that Mr. Simon's argument on this point doesn't raise a close question of law. The court can't describe this issue as anything resembling a “toss-up.”

2

Mr. Simon next points to evidentiary rulings he plans to appeal, specifically the rulings excluding evidence of loans to the entities with which Mr. Simon was associated but not involving Mr. Simon, and the court's refusal to allow witnesses to give opinions or explanations of the law. As to the first, the court ruled before trial that evidence of transactions between Mr. Simon and the entities with which he was associated would be relevant to Mr. Simon's claim that the moneys he and his family got from those entities were loans. The court doesn't believe that evidence of any such transactions was excluded, unless the court excluded evidence of transactions that were too remote from the time period covered by the indictment. But the court also ruled that where the entities got the money that eventually went to Mr. Simon was irrelevant and very likely to confuse the jury.

Neither Mr. Simon's earlier arguments nor those put forth in his motion has persuaded the court that the source of the funds, as they went into the related entities before moving on to Mr. Simon or his family, makes more or less likely any fact of consequence to the case. When the motion was addressed on the eve of trial (and often during trial), the question for the jury was to be whether the moneys Mr. Simon received from those entities were loans or taxable income. As the trial went on and after the trial, an additional issue arose: whether the moneys from the related entities were distributions that weren't taxable because they didn't exceed Mr. Simon's basis. The court remains unable to discern how loans or other transactions among the related entities or others (apart from Mr. Simon) would help resolve those issues. If the money to Mr. Simon consisted of loans or distributions, it wasn't because of where or how the related entities got the money.

3 Mr. Simon cites, without extensive analysis, Boulware v. United States, 552 U.S. 421, 128 S.Ct. 1168, 170 L.Ed.2d 34 (2008), in support of his evidentiary argument. Whatever Boulware might be thought to have said about the admissibility of basis evidence in cases involving facts far different from those before the Boulware Court, it says nothing about the relevancy of evidence that an entity borrowed money that was then transferred to one of the entity's principals. Moreover, as the government notes in its opposition to the motion for bail, Mr. Simon's arguments and offers (which rarely attained any degree of specificity) elided the distinction between partnerships and corporations—and Mr. Simon was involved with, and received money from, both.

For Mr. Simon to succeed on his claim that the court should have allowed him to present expert testimony on the law, he would have to persuade the court of appeals to jettison decades of case law holding that it's the judge's job (and not that of an expert witness) to tell the jury what the law is. See, e.g., United States v. Lupton, 620 F.3d 790, 799–800 (7th Cir.2010) ("The court was correct in noting that the meaning of statutes, regulations, and contract terms is 'a subject for the court, not for testimonial experts. The only legal expert in a federal courtroom is the judge.' "); United States v. Caputo, 517 F.3d 935, 942 (7th Cir.2008) ("The 'expert' would have testified about the meaning of the statute and regulations. That's a subject for the court, not for testimonial experts."); Bammerlin v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp., 30 F.3d 898, 900 (7th Cir.1994) ("The meaning of federal regulations is not a question of fact, to be resolved by the jury after a battle of experts. It is a question of law, to be resolved by the court."); Harbor Ins. Co. v. Continental Bank Corp., 922 F.2d 357, 366 (7th Cir.1990) ("By allowing the insurance companies' witness to tell the jury what the witness's legal research had turned up on the meaning of a key term in the case, the judge allowed the jury to infer that it could look to that witness for legal guidance; and by doing this the judge impermissibly tilted the balance of power between the parties toward the insurance companies."). Mr. Simon hasn't disclosed to this court (either at trial or since) the argument by which hopes to persuade the court of appeals to do so.

For these reasons, the court can't find that Mr. Simon has identified an evidentiary issue that satisfies the bail statute's requirements.

3

Finally, Mr. Simon says he will appeal his sentence because the court ruled against his argument based on United States v. Sturdivant, 244 F.3d 71, 78–79 (2d Cir.2001). He contends that since the tax counts each allege that the returns were false in either of two respects (stated income or denial of foreign accounts) and the record doesn't reflect which theory the jury accepted, Sturdivant compels that the sentence be calculated based on the less serious charged conduct—which Mr. Simon sees as the denial of foreign accounts because that conduct carries no tax loss. This argument doesn't persuade the court that the bail statute's requirements are met for two reasons. First, Mr. Simon has simply repeated his earlier argument without giving the court any new perspective as to why the reasoning at pages 9–12 of its sentencing findings (doc. # 156) should be seen as wrong. Second, as the government notes, success on this argument wouldn't reduce his sentence to the brevity the bail statute requires.

4 If the false tax return counts were held to have caused no loss, the base offense level on those counts would be 6. U.S.S.G. § 2T4.1(A). His offense level on those counts would be increased by two levels because of the use of sophisticated means, U.S.S.G. § 2T1 .1(b), by two more levels because of his management role over his wife, U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1(c), and by two more levels because of his abuse of his positions of trust, U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3, producing a post-remand offense level of 12 on Counts 1–4. The other groups would be unaffected (though the FBAR counts might be grouped with the tax return counts), so the offense level for the FBAR counts still would be 8 and the offense level for the fraud counts still would be 19. The guidelines still would treat these as one-and-a-half units, U.S.S.G. § 3D1.4(a, b), so the fraud group's offense level of 19 would be increased by one, producing a post-grouping offense level of 20, rather than the 27 the court computed in its sentencing findings. Because Mr. Simon is a Category I first offender, the sentencing guidelines would recommend a sentencing range of 33 to 41 months' imprisonment. U.S.S.G. § 5A.

The court has no reason to believe the appeal process would exceed the sentencing range the guidelines would recommend if Mr. Simon prevails on his Sturdivant argument, so the requirements of the bail statute are not satisfied.

II

The bail statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3143(b), limits the courts' authority to grant bail pending appeal to situations in which the defendant makes specified showings. Mr. Simon hasn't made those showings, so the court DENIES his motion for bond pending appeal (doc. # 161).

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2011 WL 1304438

End of Document

2010 WL 2842931
United States District Court, E.D. Virginia,
Alexandria Division.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
J. Bryan WILLIAMS, Defendants.

Civil Action No. 1:09–cv–437.
|
March 19, 2010.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Gerard J. Mene, United States Attorney's Office, Alexandria, VA, for Plaintiff.

David H. Dickieson, Schertler & Onorado, Washington, DC, for Defendants.

ORDER

LIAM O'GRADY, District Judge.

1 This matter comes before the Court on Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment (Dkt. no. 11). A hearing on the matter was held on March 12, 2010 before the Court. Upon consideration of the motion, Defendant's response thereto, and for the reasons that follow, it is hereby ORDERED that Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment (Dkt. no. 11) is DENIED. The parties continue to dispute genuine issues of material fact and this case must proceed to trial.

I. Background

In this case, the government seeks to enforce two "Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts" ("FBAR") penalties it assessed against Defendant J. Bryan Williams ("Williams") for failing to report his interest in two Swiss bank accounts for the year 2000 as required by 31 U.S.C. § 5314 and the Department of Treasury's corresponding promulgations under 31 C.F.R. § 103.24–27. The following factual background is undisputed.

In 1993 Williams opened two bank accounts at Credit Agricole Indosuez, SA, in the name of ALQI Holdings, Ltd., a British Corporation ("ALQI"). From that point in 1993 to the year 2000, an amount in excess of $7,000,000 was deposited in the two accounts. In August 2000, the Swiss government requested to interview Williams with respect to the ALQI accounts and Williams thereafter retained Swiss and U.S. attorneys. On November 13, 2000, Williams discussed the ALQI accounts with Swiss authorities working with the U.S. Government. In June 2001, Williams retained tax attorneys to advise him with respect to the two ALQI accounts. The deadline for filing the FBAR form for the tax year 2000 was June 30, 2001. In January 2002, Williams' attorneys met with IRS attorneys to discuss a possible resolution to unfreeze the two accounts and pay taxes on the income derived from those accounts, and in January 2003, Williams applied to participate in an IRS amnesty program for individuals with undeclared overseas accounts. Then, in February 2003, Williams filed amended returns for 1999 and 2000 which disclosed information about the ALQI accounts.

The government subsequently informed Williams in April 2003 that he would not be accepted into the amnesty program.[1] Thereafter, in May 2003, Williams agreed to plead guilty to tax fraud and on June 12, 2003, Williams pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy to defraud the United States and to one count of criminal tax evasion in connection with funds held in the Swiss bank accounts during the years 1993 through 2000. See Gov. Ex. 2 (criminal plea hearing transcript in the case United States v. J. Bryan Williams, 03–cr–406 (S.D.N.Y.2003)). On January 18, 2007, Williams filed a Form TDF 90–22.1 for all years going back to 1993.

II. Legal Standard

Summary judgment is appropriate where "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." FED.R.CIV.P. 56(c). In evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the Court "view[s] the facts and the reasonable inferences drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." See EEOC v. Navy Fed. Credit Union, 424 F.3d 397, 405 (4th Cir.2005); see also Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986). "The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 247–48 (emphasis in original).

III. Jurisdiction

2 Title 28, § 1345 of the U.S.Code provides subject matter jurisdiction over this case, as this is a suit "commenced by the United States." Further, the government states that it commenced this action at the request and with the authorization of the Chief Counsel for the IRS and at the direction of the Attorney General, pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 7401, which mandates that "[n]o civil action for the collection or recovery of taxes, or of any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, shall be commenced unless the Secretary authorizes or sanctions the proceedings and the Attorney General or his delegate directs that the action be commenced."

IV. Analysis

a. Statutory Framework

The FBAR penalty at issue in this case arises from 31 U.S.C. § 5314, which requires qualifying individuals to disclose their interests in foreign bank accounts. Section 5314(b) allows the Secretary of Treasury to delegate its authority for enforcement of the section and to prescribe the methods for doing so. In 31 C.F.R. § 103.24–27, the Department of Treasury promulgated the disclosure requirements at issue here, including the requirement to file the Form TDF 09–22.1.[2] As the government notes, an individual is required to file the Form if: (1) the individual was a resident or a person doing business in the United States; (2) the individual had a financial account or accounts that exceeded $10,000 during the calendar year; (3) the financial account was in a foreign country; and (4) the U.S. person had a financial interest in the account or signatory or other authority over the foreign financial account. See 31 C.F.R. § 103.24; 103.27.

Civil penalties for willful violations of § 5314 are provided in 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(B),[3] which allows for a maximum assessment of $100,000, two of which were assessed here. Section 5321(b)(1) states that the Secretary of Treasury can assess these penalties and § 5321(b)(2) states that the Secretary of Treasury can commence a civil action to enforce the penalties. In turn, 31 CFR § 103.56(g) delegates the authority to assess these penalties to the IRS.

b. Whether Williams "Willfully" Violated the Statute

The initial and primary issue at this point in the case is a question of intent: whether Williams' failure to submit the Form TDF 90–22.1 by June 30, 2001 was a "willful" act. This is an inherently factual question about which too many material disputes remain to permit the entry of summary judgment in favor of the government.

On this point, the parties' briefs initially focus on the effect the Court should give to Williams' 2003 guilty plea. In the Fourth Circuit, the doctrine of judicial estoppel can prevent a party in a civil action from re-litigating previously-established facts underlying a criminal plea. See Lowery v. Stovall, 92 F.3d 219, 223–224 (4th Cir.1996). This Circuit also applies the doctrine of collateral estoppel when a criminal defendant accepts a guilty plea and later seeks to re-litigate the same issues in a civil proceeding. See United States v. Wight, 839 F.2d 193, 195–197 (4th Cir.1987). According to this doctrine, "a defendant is precluded from retrying issues necessary to his plea agreement in a later civil suit." Id.; see also United States v. Moore, 765 F.Supp. 1251, 1255 (E.D.Va.1991); United States v. One 1987 Mercedes Bern 300E, 820 F.Supp. 248, 253 (E.D.Va.1993).

3 In applying either doctrine, the question is not whether, as a general proposition, Williams can be precluded from disaffirming the facts underlying his 2003 guilty plea. He can. Rather, as became clear at the March 12 hearing, the issue presented in this case is defining which specific facts were necessarily part of Williams' plea.

For instance, in his plea, Williams clearly admitted "[in] the calendar year returns for #93 through 2000, I chose not to report the income to my—to the Internal Revenue Service in order to evade substantial taxes owed" on the ALQI accounts. Gov. Ex. 2 at 18. However, Williams argues that there is a disconnect between this broad factual basis underlying his plea and the specific question at issue here: whether on June 30, 2001, Williams willfully failed to submit a Form TDF 90–22.1 for tax year 2000.

At that point in 2001, Williams contends that U.S. authorities were already on notice of the accounts, and indeed, the assets in the accounts had already been frozen.[4] Thus, according to Williams, he did not have the requisite intent to "willfully" fail to disclose the accounts by filing the Form TDF 90–22.1 on June 30, 2001 because he believed their existence had already been disclosed. Further, Williams claims he had no knowledge that Form TDF 90–22.1 existed, nor had his attorneys advised him as to its existence or significance before June 30, 2001. Lastly, Williams also contests whether he had "signatory or other authority over" the accounts as required by 31 C.F.R. § 103.24 by June 30, 2001 because the accounts were frozen.

These disputes are surely material in this case. Drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of Williams as the non-moving party, the Court concludes that genuine issues of material fact remain in dispute in this case. Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment must be denied.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2010 WL 2842931, 106 A.F.T.R.2d 2010-5158

Footnotes

[1] In his Brief in Opposition, Williams argues that the IRS denied him entry into the amnesty program because the government already knew about the accounts before Williams applied to the program.

[2] As the government advises, Form 1040, Schedule B, Part III instructs a taxpayer to report an interest in a financial account in a foreign country by checking "Yes" or "No" in the appropriate box on the form. Form 1040 then refers the taxpayer to use Form TD F 90–22.1 which provides that it should be used to report a financial interest in or authority over bank accounts, securities accounts, or other financial accounts in a foreign country.

[3] As that statute existed prior to amendment in 2004. Willful violations are now addressed in 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5)(C), which provides a different calculation of the maximum available penalty.

[4] At the March 12 hearing, it also appeared that a dispute remains as to when these assets were actually frozen and as to when Williams met with certain authorities about the Swiss accounts.

End of Document

2015 WL 3767147
United States District Court,
S.D. New York.

UNITED STATES of America
v.
Peter CANALE, Defendant.

No. 14 Cr. 713(KBF).
|
Signed June 17, 2015.

OPINION & ORDER

KATHERINE B. FORREST, District Judge.

1 Before the Court is defendant's motion to dismiss the Indictment as time-barred or, in the alternative, to transfer this case to the Western District of Kentucky. (ECF No. 26.)[1] On June 12, 2015, the Court informed the parties on the record that it would deny defendant's motion and issue its decision in a separate order. This Opinion & Order sets forth the predicted rationale for the Court's decision.

I. BACKGROUND[2]

On October 28, 2014, a grand jury sitting in the Southern District of New York returned an Indictment charging Peter Canale ("defendant" or "Canale"), a resident of Kentucky, with one count of conspiracy to defraud the United States and to commit substantive tax offenses, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371. (Indictment ("Ind.") ¶¶ 1, 32, ECF No. 2.) The Indictment alleges that between about 1993 and April 2011, Canale conspired with others to open and maintain undeclared bank accounts in Switzerland —and to hide those accounts, and the income generated therefrom, from the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS"). (Ind.¶ 12 .) Specifically, the Indictment alleges that Canale, his brother Michael Canale, and a now-deceased relative of the brothers (the "Relative") worked with Swiss advisers Beda Singenberger ("Singenberger") and Hans Thomann ("Thomann") to establish and maintain undeclared accounts at Swiss banks. (See Ind. ¶¶ 1–4, 6, 13(a).) The Indictment further alleges that the Canale brothers used sham entities to conceal their ownership of the undeclared Swiss accounts from the IRS, filed false and fraudulent federal income tax returns which failed to report their interest in, and income from, the accounts, and failed to file Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBARs") disclosing their authority over the accounts.[3] (Ind.¶¶ 13(b)-(d), 28–31.)

The Indictment alleges that the following overt acts occurred in the Southern District of New York in furtherance of the conspiracy:

1. In July 2000, the Relative, who maintained an undeclared account in Switzerland, introduced defendant to Thomann in Manhattan, New York, where they discussed the Relative's undeclared account. (Ind.¶¶ 14, 16.)

2. In late 2000 or 2001, after the Relative's death, defendant and Michael Canale met with Thomann and Singenberger at a Manhattan hotel and discussed continuing to maintain the undeclared assets the two brothers had inherited from the Relative in an undeclared account for the brothers' benefit. (Ind.¶¶ 17–18.)

3. In the mid–2000s, Michael Canale met with Singenberger in Manhattan to discuss his undeclared account. (Id. ¶ 36(f).)

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Statute of Limitations

"For offenses involving the defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not," the period of limitations is six years. See 26 U.S.C. § 6531(1); see also United States v. Aracri, 968 F.2d 1512, 1517 (2d Cir.1992). For a § 371 conspiracy charge to be within the statute of limitations, (1) the conspiracy must still have been ongoing within the six-year period preceding the indictment, and (2) at least one overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy must have been performed within that period. United States v. Ben Zvi, 242 F.3d 89, 97 (2d Cir.2001); see also United States v. Fletcher, 928 F.2d 495, 498 (2d Cir.1991) ("The limitations period begins to run after the last overt act in furtherance of the main goals of the conspiracy." (citations omitted)); Grunewald v. United States, 353 U.S. 391, 396–97, 77 S.Ct. 963, 1 L.Ed.2d 931 (1957). The Government is not required to prove that each member of the conspiracy committed an overt act within the statute of limitations. See Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347, 369–70, 32 S.Ct. 793, 56 L.Ed. 1114 (1912); United States v.

Read, 658 F.2d 1225, 1233–34 (7th Cir.1981) (interpreting Hyde). "[T]he crucial question in determining whether the statute of limitations has run is the scope of the conspiratorial agreement, for it is that which determines both the duration of the conspiracy, and whether the act relied on as an overt act may properly be regarded as in furtherance of the conspiracy." United States v. Salmonese, 352 F.3d 608, 614 (2d Cir.2003) (quoting Grunewald, 353 U.S. at 397) (internal quotation marks omitted).

B. Venue

2 A criminal defendant has the right to be tried in the "district wherein the crime shall have been committed." U.S. Const. amend. VI; see also id. art. III, § 2, cl. 3 ("The Trial of all Crimes ... shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed."); Fed.R.Crim.P. 18 ("Unless a statute or these rules permit otherwise, the government must prosecute an offense in a district where the offense was committed."). The Second Circuit has held that:

> there is no single defined policy or mechanical test to determine constitutional venue. Rather, the test is best described as a substantial contacts rule that takes into account a number of factors-the site of the defendant's acts, the elements and nature of the crime, the locus of the effect of the criminal conduct, and the suitability of each district for accurate factfinding.

United States v. Rowe, 414 F.3d 271, 278 (2d Cir.2005) (quoting United States v. Reed, 773 F.2d 477, 481 (2d Cir.1985)). "[T]he two chief ills that the constitutional venue provisions are meant to guard against" are "bias and inconvenience ." Id. at 280–81.

"The crime of conspiracy, 18 U.S.C. § 371, is a continuing offense, the prosecution of which is proper 'in any district in which such offense was begun, continued or completed.' " United States v. Tannenbaum, 934 F.2d 8, 12 (2d Cir.1991) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 3237(a)). Thus, in a conspiracy prosecution, "venue may lie in any district in which the conspiracy was formed or in any district in which a conspirator committed an overt act in furtherance of the criminal scheme." United States v. Rommy, 506 F.3d 108, 119 (2d Cir.2007) (citations omitted).

The Government bears the burden of proving venue by a preponderance of the evidence. United States v. Bala, 236 F.3d 87, 95 (2d Cir.2000). Prior to trial, however, "it suffices for the government to allege with specificity that the charged acts support venue in this district." United States v. Martino, No. S1 00 CR 389(RCC), 2000 WL 1843233, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Dec.14, 2000) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

C. Rule 21(b)

Rule 21(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides that "[u]pon the defendant's motion, the court may transfer the proceeding ... to another district for the convenience of the parties, any victim, and the witnesses, and in the interest of justice." Fed.R.Crim.P. 21(b). "Disposition of a Rule 21(b) motion is vested in the sound discretion of the district court." United States v. Maldonado–Rivera, 922 F.2d 934, 966 (2d Cir.1990) (citations omitted). In considering a motion to transfer, a district court should consider the so-called Platt factors: "(1) location of the defendant; (2) location of possible witnesses; (3) location of events likely to be in issue; (4) location of documents and records likely to be involved; (5) possible disruption of defendant's business if the case is not transferred; (6) expense to the parties; (7) location of counsel; (8) relative accessibility of the place of trial; (9) docket conditions of each district involved"; and (10) any other special elements that might affect the transfer. United States v. Keuylian, 602 F.2d 1033, 1038 (2d Cir.1979) (citing Platt v. Minnesota Min. & Mfg. Co., 376 U.S. 240, 243–44, 84 S.Ct. 769, 11 L.Ed.2d 674 (1964)). "No one of these considerations is dispositive, and '[i]t remains for the court to try to strike a balance and determine which factors are of greatest importance.' " Maldonado–Rivera, 922 F.2d at 966 (quoting United States v. Stephenson, 895 F.2d 867, 875 (2d Cir.1990)).

3 As a general rule, a criminal prosecution should be retained in the district in which it was filed, and the criminal defendant bears the burden of justifying a transfer. United States v. Riley, 296 F.R.D. 272, 275 (S.D.N.Y.2014).

III. DISCUSSION

Defendant's principal argument as to timeliness is that the conspiracy count is time-barred because the Government has not alleged overt acts or offenses personally involving him which occurred both in this district and within the six-year statute of limitations. This argument fails as a matter of law. Defendant is not charged with the substantive offenses of tax evasion or the willful filing of false tax returns; he is charged with a conspiracy. As a result, the Indictment is not time-barred so long as at least one overt act in furtherance of the main goals of the conspiracy occurred within the limitations period. The law is clear that this overt act may be committed anywhere-and not necessarily in the district where the defendant is charged. See Tannenbaum, 934 F.2d at 13 (holding that "[r]ules governing venue and limitations serve distinct purposes" and that overt acts establishing venue need not have been committed within the statute of limitations).

Here, the Indictment is clearly timely. The charged conspiracy was allegedly ongoing until April 2011–well within the six-year period preceding the Indictment, which was filed on October 28, 2014–and the Indictment alleges at least one overt act that was performed in furtherance of the conspiracy within the six-year limitations period. See Ben Zvi, 242 F.3d at 97. Specifically, the Indictment alleges that "[i]n or about March 2010, PETER CANALE, the defendant, filed, and caused to be filed, tax returns for 2009 that falsely and fraudulently claimed that CANALE did not maintain an interest in or signature or other authority over a financial account in a foreign country during 2009." (Ind.¶ 36(g).) This alleged act was clearly within the scope of-and committed in furtherance of-the charged conspiracy to defraud the IRS, engage in tax evasion, and file false tax returns. (See Ind. ¶¶ 33–35.)[4] Accordingly, defendant's motion to dismiss the Indictment as time-barred is DENIED.

Defendant's venue objection is also baseless: as set forth above, the Indictment alleges that a number of overt acts in furtherance of the charged conspiracy occurred in this district, including two meetings during which defendant and his co-conspirators discussed the maintenance of undeclared Swiss accounts for the benefit of the Canale brothers. That is sufficient to make venue proper in this district. See Rommy, 506 F.3d at 119. As set forth above, it is immaterial that the overt acts in this district occurred outside the statute of limitations.

In response, defendant argues that the overt acts alleged to have occurred in this district were merely preparatory and thus could not support venue here. According to defendant, "[o]ther than arranging the foreign account in the Southern District of New York, the government does not have a scintilla of evidence which would support a charge that Mr. Canale either attempted to evade or defeat a tax in violation 26 U.S.C. § 7201, or that Mr. Canale filed a fraudulent and false statement in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206." (Memorandum of Law in Support of Change of Venue ("Def.'s Venue Mem .") at 6, ECF No. 28.) This argument once again misinterprets the crime charged in the Indictment. Defendant is charged not with substantive tax offenses but with a conspiracy-and the objects of this conspiracy include not only the offenses under 26 U.S.C. §§ 7201 and 7206 but also the object of defrauding the IRS.[5] The overt acts alleged to have occurred in this district-multiple meetings by various co-conspirators in which they discussed the establishment and continued maintenance of undeclared Swiss accounts for the benefit of the Canale brothers-were not "preparatory"; they were part and parcel of the charged conspiracy.[6] Accordingly, venue is proper in this district.[7]

4 Finally, upon carefully considering the Platt factors, the Court finds that a transfer to the Western District of Kentucky pursuant to Rule 21(b) is unwarranted. This case was investigated and charged in this district. Manhattan is a more accessible location than Bowling Green, Kentucky-where this case would likely be tried if transferred. Moreover, defendant's local counsel in Kentucky has indicated that he intends to withdraw, such that counsel-of-record for both parties will be located in New York. The "expense" factor also weighs against transfer: While defendant has represented that it would cost substantially more to defend this case in New York than in Kentucky, he has not estimated his projected expenses and has not alleged that he has insufficient funds to cover them. See Riley, 296 F.R.D. at 277 (the expense factor is generally afforded serious weight only in cases involving indigent defendants). On the other hand, a trial in Kentucky would require the Government to transport and house two prosecutors, as well as a paralegal and several case agents, in a remote location. See United States v. Carey, 152 F.Supp.2d 415, 422 (S.D.N.Y.2001) (denying a motion to transfer where, inter alia, the effect of a transfer would be "merely to shift the economic burden to the government").

As to the location of trial witnesses, while defendant has represented that a substantial majority of the potential defense witnesses are in Kentucky, there is no suggestion that any of these witnesses will be unable to appear to testify in New York. See United States v. Brooks, No. 08 CR. 35(PKL), 2008 WL 2944626, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. July 31, 2008) ("Generally, a defendant is required to give 'specific examples of witnesses' testimony and their inability to testify because of the location of the trial.' " (quoting United States v. Spy Factory, Inc., 951 F.Supp. 450, 456 (S.D.N.Y.1997))); see also United States v. Estrada, 880 F.Supp.2d 478, 483 (S.D.N.Y.2012). Given that many of the Government's witnesses are in New York, the "location of the witnesses" factor does not support transfer. As to the location of the relevant events, the conduct alleged in the Indictment occurred in several states, including New York, as well as internationally; this factor does not support a transfer of this action to Kentucky. As to location of documents, the Court has no reason to believe that a significant number of relevant documents are located in Kentucky, much less that they are not available in easily accessible electronic format. See Estrada, 880 F.Supp.2d at 484 ("[G]iven the conveniences of modern transportation and communication, the location of the documents is a minor concern." (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)). As to docket conditions, it appears that judges in the Western District of Kentucky have a lower civil caseload but a higher criminal caseload than judges in this district. More important than caseload statistics, however, is the fact that this Court has already made itself available, familiarized itself with this case, and scheduled a trial date that is convenient for both parties. See United States v. Stein, 429 F.Supp.2d 633, 645 (S.D.N.Y.2006) (denying defendants' motions to transfer where, inter alia, the court had already "scheduled trial ... ensuring that defendants will receive ample attention regardless of docket conditions"). Transferring this case to Kentucky would very likely result in delays and duplication of judicial resources.

5 The sole factor in favor of transfer is defendant's location; there is no dispute that defendant resides in Kentucky. However, while courts in this Circuit have recognized a policy of trying defendants where they reside where possible, see Spy Factory, 951 F.Supp. at 456, the Supreme Court has made clear that a defendant's residence "has no independent significance" and should not be given dispositive weight. Platt, 376 U.S. at 245; see also Riley, 296 F.R.D. at 276. Here, any inconvenience to defendant is reduced by the fact that the trial is unlikely to last more than one week. Defendant also has not represented that any business or profession with which he may be involved would be disrupted if he were tried in this district.

In sum, the balance of the Platt factors favors a trial in this district.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, defendant's motion to dismiss the Indictment as time-barred and for a change of venue is DENIED. The Clerk of Court is directed to terminate the motion at ECF No. 26.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2015 WL 3767147, 115 A.F.T.R.2d 2015-2249

Footnotes

[1] Defendant filed this motion on May 8, 2015. The Government filed an opposition on May 29, 2015. Defendant did not file any reply in support of his motion.

[2] The Court sets forth only those facts which are relevant to resolving defendant's motion.

[3] FBARs must be filed by all U.S. taxpayers who have a financial interest in, or signature authority over, a foreign financial account with an aggregate value of over $10,000. (Ind.¶ 10.)

[4] Defendant argues that "[e]ven if Mr. Canale filed fraudulent and false tax returns in 2007, 2008, 2009 and 2010, those violations would be a separate charge and would be unrelated to the charged conspiracy" because "[t]here is absolutely no evidence that Mr. Canale conspired with anyone to file his tax returns." (Memorandum of Law in Support of Dismissal of the Indictment as Time Barred Pursuant to the Statute of Limitations ("Def.'s SL Mem.") at 4, ECF No. 29.) This argument is meritless. Co-conspirators may-and very often do-play distinct roles in a conspiracy. See United States v. Ulbricht,

31 F.Supp.3d 540, 561 (S.D.N.Y.2014) ("The law of conspiracy recognizes that members of a conspiracy may serve different roles." (citing cases)). Co-conspirators need not reach agreement as to every overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, or carry out all overt acts together.

5 The Government may simultaneously prosecute the same conduct under both the "defraud" and "offense" clauses of the conspiracy statute. United States v. Bilzerian, 926 F.2d 1285, 1301–02 (2d Cir.1991).

6 United States v. Beech–Nut Nutrition Corp., 871 F.2d 1181 (2d Cir.1989), on which defendant relies, is distinguishable. In Beech–Nut, the Second Circuit held that venue was improper as to substantive counts alleging violations of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act ("FDCA"). The FDCA provision at issue prohibited introduction, or delivery for introduction, into interstate commerce of any adulterated or misbranded food. The Government argued that prosecution in the Eastern District of New York was proper because the defendants' subordinates telephoned brokers to place orders for adulterated apple juice concentrate and mailed confirmations for these concentrate orders into the Eastern District. The Second Circuit disagreed, holding that these acts were merely preparatory to the eventual introduction of the juice into commerce. The Court specifically noted, however, that these acts were in furtherance of the charged conspiracy to sell misbranded and adulterated apple juice in interstate commerce.

Unlike in Beech–Nut, the charged offense here is a conspiracy rather than a substantive offense-and the alleged overt acts in this district go to the essential elements of this conspiracy, namely "(1) an agreement among two or more persons, the object of which is an offense against the United States; (2) the defendant's knowing and willful joinder in that conspiracy; and (3) commission of an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy by at least one of the alleged co-conspirators." United States v. Svoboda, 347 F.3d 471, 476 (2d Cir.2003) (citations omitted).

7 In support of his motion as to venue, defendant cites to the sentencing transcript of his brother Michael Canale. However, Michael Canale pled guilty to an FBAR violation, which is a substantive violation distinct from the conspiracy charged here.

End of Document

134 F.Supp.3d 697
United States District Court,
S.D. New York.

Susan GIORDANO, as Executrix of the Estate of Ida Giordano, Plaintiff,
v.
UBS, AG, Defendant.

No. 14 Civ. 8252.
|
Signed Sept. 25, 2015.

Synopsis

Background: Bank customer brought action against Swiss bank for breach of fiduciary duty, malpractice, breach of contract, disgorgement, and fraud. Bank moved to dismiss complaint.

Holdings: The District Court, Sweet, J., held that:

[1] customer was subject to forum-selection and choice-of-law clauses designating Switzerland as exclusive place of jurisdiction;

[2] bank was not subject to general or specific jurisdiction in New York; and

[3] claims were barred under doctrine of in pari delicto.

Motion to dismiss granted.

Attorneys and Law Firms

699 Ancona Associates, by: Dustin A. Levine, Esq., Mineola, NY, for Plaintiff.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, by: Gabriel Herrmann, Esq., New York, NY, for Defendant.

OPINION

SWEET, District Judge.

Defendant UBS, AG ("UBS–AG" or the "Defendant") has moved pursuant to Rules 12(b)2, 12(b)6 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the common law doctrine of forum non conveniens to dismiss the complaint of plaintiff Susan Giordano, executrix of the Estate of Ida Giordano ("Giordano" or the "Plaintiff") alleging breach of fiduciary duty, malpractice, breach of contract, disgorgement, and fraud. Based upon the conclusions set forth below, the motion of UBS–AG is granted, and the complaint is dismissed.

Prior Proceeding

Giordano filed her complaint on October 15, 2014 containing the following allegations. Plaintiff Susan Giordano, Executrix of the Estate of Ida Giordano, resides in Queens, New York. Compl. ¶ 6. From July 700 2000 to May 2009, Plaintiff and the now-deceased Ida Giordano maintained a joint account with UBS in Geneva, Switzerland (the "Swiss Account"). Id. at ¶ 13; Müller Aff. ¶¶ 6–7. UBS has a 152–year history as a Swiss financial institution. Müller Aff. ¶ 3. The present-day UBS was formed in 1998, when Union Bank of Switzerland and Swiss Bank Corporation merged to form a new company. Id. UBS is incorporated in and has its principal place of business in Switzerland. Id. It operates under Swiss law as an "Aktiengesellschaft," a corporation that has issued shares of common stock to investors. Id. Between May and July 2000, both Plaintiff and Ida Giordano personally executed several contractual account documents with UBS that governed the account relationship for the Swiss Account (collectively, the "Account Agreements"). The Account Agreements contain at least three provisions designating Swiss law as the governing law for the account relationship and designating Switzerland as the exclusive place of jurisdiction for "any disputes" arising out of the account relationship. Müller Aff. Exs. B, E–F. For example, the account opening document for the Swiss Account contains the following forum-selection and choice-of-law provisions:

> The present Agreement and/or Declaration shall be exclusively governed by and construed in accordance with Swiss law. The place of performance of all obligations of both parties, the place of debt collection, the latter only for Customers domiciled outside Switzerland, as well as the exclusive place of jurisdiction for any disputes arising out of and in connection > with the present Agreement and/or Declaration shall be Geneve.

Id. Ex. B at 2.

Plaintiff admits that, in years prior to 2009, she "failed to disclose [the] Swiss Account on her U.S. tax returns or pay tax on the income derived from the assets and transactions in the UBS Swiss Account." Compl. ¶ 52. Then, in October 2009, Plaintiff, as Executrix of the Estate of Ida Giordano, participated in the IRS Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program ("VDP"), which afforded U.S. taxpayers who had hidden foreign income from the IRS an opportunity to admit their misconduct, pay fines and penalties, and receive amnesty from criminal prosecution. Compl. ¶ 15; see Declaration of Gabriel Herrmann ("Herrmann Decl.") Ex. 7. Plaintiff's allegation in this case is that UBS should be held responsible for the consequences of Plaintiff's concealment of the Swiss Account from the IRS, and her eventual participation in the VDP, given that she has since "been assessed and has paid back taxes, penalties, and interest to the IRS as a result of her ownership of the UBS Swiss Accounts." Compl. ¶¶ 15–18. The Complaint asserts that UBS "undertook a fiduciary duty" to advise the Giordanos of their U.S. tax obligations by entering into a tax treaty with the U.S. government (the Qualified Intermediary ("QI") Agreement). Compl. ¶ 20. Plaintiff further alleges that UBS breached its alleged fiduciary duty by failing to inform her of her U.S. tax obligations and failing to "prepare and deliver to the Plaintiff the QI agreed IRS Forms W–9 which would have identified [her] as someone who either needed to pay taxes on offshore assets" or needed to "withhold" a portion of the profits of the Swiss Account. Compl. ¶ 23.

Each year, U.S. taxpayers are required to complete an IRS Form 1040, which includes a Schedule B that must be completed if the taxpayer has (1) taxable interest or dividends from, (2) any sort of financial interest in, or (3) signature authority over, a foreign bank account. See Herrmann Decl. Ex. 2. Schedule B directs these taxpayers to answer the following straightforward question under penalty of perjury: "did you have a financial interest in or signature authority over a financial account 701 (such as a bank account, securities account, or brokerage account) located in a foreign country?" Id.

Taxpayers who have any such interest in or authority over a foreign account typically must also identify the location of the foreign account and complete Form TD F 90–22.1, a form better known as the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts, or "FBAR." The FBAR's instructions provide that a taxpayer must file an FBAR if, as Plaintiff alleges here, he or she has more than $10,000 in foreign accounts. See, e.g., id. Ex. 5 at 6. The FBAR form also makes clear that failure to disclose may lead to severe criminal penalties. Id. at 1 ("Civil and criminal penalties, including in certain circumstances a fine of not more than $500,000 and imprisonment of not more than five years, are provided for failure to file a report, supply information, and for filing a false or fraudulent report.").

Plaintiff also makes reference to a Deferred Prosecution Agreement ("DPA") UBS entered into with the U.S. government in 2009, which acknowledged that UBS had participated in a scheme to "facilitate the evasion of U.S. taxes" by certain of its accountholders. Compl. ¶ 50. However, the DPA does not describe any misconduct directed at those UBS accountholders—it concerned steps that were undertaken to assist the efforts of certain UBS clients to conceal their income from the U.S. tax authorities, not a scheme by UBS to trick its own customers into committing tax violations (which would serve neither UBS's interests nor those of its clients). Notably, Plaintiff does not allege that UBS was ever engaged to provide her any tax advice, that it ever assisted her in preparing tax returns, that it ever advised her about what to report in her tax returns, or that it ever told her not to report the Swiss Account on her IRS Form 1040s or FBARs.

The UBS motion was heard and marked filed fully submitted on May 13, 2015.

The Applicable Standard

On a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), all factual allegations in the complaint are accepted as true, and all inferences are drawn in favor of the pleader. Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F.3d 1170, 1174 (2d Cir.1993). However, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007) (internal quotation marks omitted). A complaint must contain "sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.' " Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 663, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570, 127 S.Ct. 1955).

A claim is facially plausible when "the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 663, 129 S.Ct. 1937 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556, 127 S.Ct. 1955). In other words, the factual allegations must "possess enough heft to show that the pleader is entitled to relief." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 127 S.Ct. 1955 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The Forum Selection Clause is Enforceable

[1] Courts, including the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, have recognized that a party may not maintain a suit in federal court when it has committed to litigate claims against its contract counter-party in another jurisdiction, such as the courts of a particular state or foreign nation. See, e.g., Martinez v. Bloomberg LP, 740 F.3d 211, 219 (2d Cir.2014) (recognizing "a strong federal public policy supporting the enforcement of forum selection 702 clauses" citing Atlantic Marine Const. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for W. Dist. of Texas, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 568, 574, 187 L.Ed.2d 487 (2013), for the proposition that, "in all but the most unusual cases, the interest of justice is served by holding parties to their bargain" (internal quotation and alterations omitted)). Since at least 1972, when the Supreme Court issued its seminal decision in M/S Bremen v. Zapata Off–Shore Co., forum-selection clauses "are prima facie valid and should be enforced" absent extraordinary circumstances. 407 U.S. 1, 10, 92 S.Ct. 1907, 32 L.Ed.2d 513 (1972). In Atlantic Marine, the Supreme Court reconfirmed this principle and explained that "a valid forum-selection clause [should be] given controlling weight in all but the most exceptional cases." 134 S.Ct. at 581 (alteration in original) (internal quotation omitted); accord, e.g., Martinez, 740 F.3d at 219. Atlantic Marine clarified that, as a doctrinal matter, enforceability of forum-selection clauses should be analyzed under a modified version of the standard that governs forum non conveniens motions and it reaffirmed the principle that, "[w]hen parties have contracted in advance to litigate disputes in a particular forum, courts should not unnecessarily disrupt the parties' settled expectations." 134 S.Ct. at 583.

[2] [3] Courts in the Second Circuit "employ a four-part analysis" in determining whether to "dismiss[ ] a claim based on a forum selection clause." Martinez, 740 F.3d at 217; Phillips v. Audio Active Ltd., 494 F.3d 378, 383 (2d Cir.2007). The four factors are:

> (1) whether the clause was reasonably communicated to the party resisting enforcement; (2) whether the clause is mandatory or permissive, i.e., whether the parties are required to bring any dispute to the designated forum or simply permitted to do so; and (3) whether the claims and parties involved in the suit are subject to the forum selection clause. If the forum clause was communicated to the resisting party, has mandatory force and covers the claims and parties involved in the dispute, it is presumptively enforceable. A party can overcome this presumption only by (4) making a sufficiently strong showing that enforcement would be unreasonable or unjust, or that the clause was invalid for such reasons as fraud or overreaching.

Martinez, 740 F.3d at 217 (internal quotation, citations, and alterations omitted). While the enforceability of the forum-selection clause is analyzed under this federal law framework, "courts must apply the law contractually chosen by the parties to interpret the clause." Martinez, 740 F.3d at 220, 224. Thus, to the extent the language of the parties' forum-selection clause requires interpretation, Swiss law governs matters of contractual construction, as designated by the parties in the Account Agreements. See Martinez, 740 F.3d at 220.

[4] Plaintiff and her mother, Ida Giordano, each signed at least three account documents containing contractual forum-selection and choice-of-law provisions that designate Switzerland as the "exclusive place of jurisdiction" for "any disputes" arising out of the account relationship, and that designate Swiss law as the law governing all such disputes, as follows:

> The present Agreement and/or Declaration shall be exclusively governed by and construed in accordance with Swiss law. The place of performance of all > obligations of both parties, the place of debt collection, the latter only for Customers domiciled outside Switzerland, as well as the exclusive place of jurisdiction for any disputes arising out of and in connection 703 with the present Agreement and/or Declaration shall be GENEVE.

E.g., Müller Aff. Ex. B at 2.

Here, the forum-selection clause was communicated to Susan and Ida Giordano, as evidenced by their signatures immediately below the forum-selection clauses in at least three Account Agreements. See id. Ex. B, E–F. The forum-selection clauses contain operative language in boldface, underlined type, stressing that Geneva was designated as "the exclusive place of jurisdiction" for all disputes arising out of the account relationship. Id.

[5] Also, the clause at issue is mandatory because it states that "the exclusive place of jurisdiction" for any disputes "shall be Geneve." See, e.g., Phillips, 494 F.3d at 386 ("The parties' use of the phrase 'are to be brought' establishes England as an obligatory venue for proceedings within the scope of the clause."); Müller Aff. Exs. B, E–F. "A forum selection clause is viewed as mandatory when it confers exclusive jurisdiction on the designated forum." Phillips, 494 F.3d at 386.

In addition, the broad, inclusive language applying the clause to "any disputes arising out of and in connection with the present Agreement" establishes that the claims and parties involved in the dispute are subject to the forum-selection clauses. See Phillips, 494 F.3d at 389.

[6] Finally, because "the forum clause was communicated to the resisting party, has mandatory force and covers the claims and parties involved in the dispute, it is presumptively enforceable." See Phillips, 494 F.3d at 383. In the Second Circuit, that presumption cannot be rebutted unless: (1) the "incorporation [of the forum-selection clauses into the agreement] was the result of fraud or overreaching; (2) the law to be applied in the selected forum is fundamentally unfair; (3) enforcement contravenes a strong public policy of the forum [in which suit is brought]; or (4) trial in the selected forum will be so difficult and inconvenient that the plaintiff effectively will be deprived of his day in court." Phillips, 494 F.3d at 392. Plaintiff has not alleged any facts suggesting that the inclusion of the forum-selection clauses in the Account Agreements was a product of fraud or overreaching. As discussed further below, there is no public policy that weighs against enforcement of the clause. And Switzerland is a viable and efficient forum for Plaintiff's claims, so Plaintiff would not be deprived of her day in court by enforcing the forum-selection clause. See id. Dasser Aff. ¶¶ 24–43. Plaintiff has not met the burden of alleging adequately that the mandatory forum-selection clause here should be set aside.

The Atlantic Marine Court held that enforcement of a valid forum-selection clause calls for application of a version of the federal forum non conveniens standard that is circumscribed in two critical respects. See 134 S.Ct. at 581.

[7] When a defendant seeks to enforce a forum-selection clause, "as the party defying the forum-selection clause, the plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that [litigating in] the forum for which the parties bargained is unwarranted," and Plaintiff's choice of forum "merits no weight." Id. Here, Plaintiff cannot show that there are any exceptional circumstances that would warrant setting aside the valid forum-selection clause. Because Switzerland is a viable alternative forum, Plaintiff would not be deprived of her day in court, and the relevant private and public interest factors all weigh in favor of dismissal.

Plaintiff does not allege that Switzerland is an inadequate forum for this dispute and Atlantic Marine in any event precludes such argument, because it explains that a "valid forum-selection clause ... 'represents the parties' agreement as to the most proper forum.' " Id. (quoting Stewart 704 Org. v. Ricoh Corp., 487 U.S. 22, 31, 108 S.Ct. 2239, 101 L.Ed.2d 22 (1988)). As explained by UBS's expert on Swiss law, the Swiss courts would accept jurisdiction of this case, would allow Plaintiff to bring claims to address the alleged misconduct described in her Complaint, and would provide Plaintiff with an efficient legal system. Dasser Aff. ¶¶ 16, 27–28; see also LaSala v. UBS AG, 510 F.Supp.2d 213, 222–23 (S.D.N.Y.2007) (holding Switzerland is an adequate alternative forum); Rosario Veiga v. World Meteorological Org., 486 F.Supp.2d 297, 304–06 (S.D.N.Y.2007) (same); Dickson Marine Inc. v. Panalpina, Inc., 179 F.3d 331, 342 (5th Cir.1999) (same); Brunswick GmbH v. Bowling

Switz., Inc., 2008 WL 2795936, at *2 (D.Del. July 18, 2008) (same).

[8] [9] Moreover, in evaluating the applicable private —and public-interest factors, when a valid forum-selection clause is present the court "must deem the private-interest factors to weigh entirely in favor of the preselected forum." Atlantic Marine, 134 S.Ct. at 582. "As a consequence, a district court may consider arguments about public-interest factors only"-and because those factors will only "rarely" overcome the parties' designation of an exclusive forum, the "practical result" of this analysis is that "a valid forum-selection clause should be given controlling weight in all but the most exceptional cases." Id. at 581–83 (internal quotation and alteration omitted).

The Supreme Court has recognized the following "public interest" factors relevant to forum non conveniens analysis:

> [1] the administrative difficulties flowing from court congestion; [2] the local interest in having localized controversies decided at home; [3] the interest in having the trial of a diversity case in a forum that is at home with the law that must govern the action; [4] the avoidance of unnecessary problems in conflict of laws, or in the application of foreign law; and
>
> [5] the unfairness of burdening citizens in an unrelated forum with jury duty.

Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 241 n. 6, 102 S.Ct. 252, 70 L.Ed.2d 419 (1981) (internal quotation omitted). Here, each of those factors weighs in favor of litigation in Switzerland.

Here, Switzerland's court system is not unduly congested such that any "administrative difficulties" would arise if this dispute is litigated there. A litigant can expect timely resolution of a claim brought in Switzerland; indeed, the average time for resolution of a civil dispute in Switzerland is 368 days. Dasser Aff. ¶ 25. According to the most recent Federal Court Management Statistics, the median time from filing to trial in civil cases in the Southern District of New York is more than 32 months. Plaintiff has not claimed that she would be prejudiced by any supposed court congestion attendant to litigation in Switzerland.

This is not a "localized controversy" for which there is any local interest in having the case decided in New York. The vast majority of alleged facts and conduct arise in Switzerland. Plaintiff's account was located in Switzerland, administered by Swiss personnel, and maintained under Swiss law, and all transactions took place in Switzerland. Müller Aff. ¶¶ 6, 13–14. Thus, if this controversy is localized anywhere, it is in Switzerland.

Voiding the parties' forum-selection clauses would not further any interest in having this case tried "in a forum that is at home with the law," because the parties designated Swiss law as the law governing any disputes arising out of the account relationship. Piper, 454 U.S. at 241 n. 6, 102 S.Ct. 252. Thus, it would be more burdensome to litigate here rather than in Switzerland, because this Court would be 705 required to consider expert evidence on foreign law relating to virtually all of the issues in the case. For the same reasons, dismissal would further the public interest in "avoidance of unnecessary problems in conflict of laws, or in the application of foreign law." Id.

Finally, it would be unfair to burden the New York jury pool with a trial of Plaintiff's claims, which relate to Plaintiff's Swiss Account and alleged misconduct that would have transpired entirely in Switzerland. New York's citizenry has little, if any, interest in this dispute, while Switzerland "possesses a strong interest in regulating the conduct of banks within its borders," LaSala, 510 F.Supp.2d at 229, as well as conduct "involving contracts governed by its laws," Yavuz v. 61 MM, Ltd., 576 F.3d 1166, 1181 (10th Cir.2009).

Because "a valid forum-selection clause [should be] given controlling weight in all but the most exceptional cases," Atlantic Marine, 134 S.Ct. at 581, and Plaintiff has not met her burden of alleging adequately that any exceptional circumstances exist here.

Plaintiff has not disputed that the governing UBS account documents contain forum selection clauses that are before the Court. Pl.'s Ex. D; Opp. ¶¶ 9–14, 23. Nor does she challenge the four-factor test Second Circuit courts apply in deciding whether to "dismiss[ ] a claim based on a forum selection clause." Martinez v. Bloomberg LP, 740 F.3d 211, 217 (2d Cir.2014), cited in Opp. ¶ 10. She does not contest UBS AG's showing as to two of those factors: that "the clause is mandatory" and "the claims and parties involved in the suit are subject to the forum selecti[o]n clause." Opp. ¶¶ 10–14. Rather, she has disputed only two of the relevant factors.

[10] [11] Plaintiff cannot avoid the forum selection clause by alleging fraud relating to the contract generally; she must show that her assent to the clause itself was fraudulently induced. See, e.g., Scherk v. Alberto–Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506, 519 n. 14, 94 S.Ct. 2449, 41 L.Ed.2d 270 (1974) ("This qualification does not mean that any time a dispute arising out of a transaction is based upon an allegation of fraud ... the clause is unenforceable. Rather, it means that a[ ] ... forum-selection clause ... is not enforceable if the inclusion of that clause in the contract was the product of fraud or coercion."); Mercury W. A.G., Inc. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 2004 WL 421793, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 5, 2004) ("[I]n order to invalidate the forum selection clause, the clause itself would have to have been the product of fraud."); Gen. Elec. Capital Corp. v. Mehta, 2002 WL 511553, at *2 n. 6 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 4, 2002) ("A party challenging a forum selection clause on the basis of fraudulent inducement must allege facts with respect to the specific clause, not the contract as a whole."). Nor does an alleged absence of negotiations concerning the forum selection clause permit Plaintiff to avoid its enforcement. See, e.g., Exp.-Imp. Bank of U.S. v. Hi–Films S.A. de C.V., 2010 WL 3743826, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 24, 2010) ("Luna contends that he did not have an 'opportunity to negotiate the terms of the agreements ... and that the agreements were presented on an as is basis.' This is not sufficient to establish fraud or overreaching.").

The Plaintiff claims the forum selection clause should not be enforced because it "was never communicated to either plaintiff or her mother." Id. ¶ 11. Although Plaintiff admits that the clause appeared on the face of the document she signed, see, e.g., id.; Pl.'s Ex. D, she claims it was not communicated to her because "[t]he UBS documents [were] complicated," the "type was in very small print," and UBS "never explained that the signing of the joint account agreement would subject me 706 to bringing my case in Switzerland." Giordano Aff. ¶¶ 16, 21.

[12] These assertions do not evince a failure to "reasonably communicate" the forum clause to Plaintiff. "Absent substantive unconscionability or fraud of a type not alleged here, parties are charged with knowing and understanding the contents of documents they knowingly sign." Horvath v. Banco Comercial Portugues, S.A., 461 Fed.Appx 61, 63 (2d Cir.2012) (clause was reasonably communicated to plaintiff despite his claim that it appeared in separate "terms and conditions" document he did not receive and was written in a language he did not understand); accord Effron v. Sun Line Cruises, Inc., 67 F.3d 7, 9 (2d Cir.1995) (clause found "in fine print" of multipage airline ticket); Spataro v. Kloster Cruise, Ltd., 894 F.2d 44, 46–47 (2d Cir.1990) (clause printed "in small type" on page 6 of 8–page ticket); Arial Tech., LLC v. Aerophile S.A., 2015 WL 1501115, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2015) ("The forum selection clause ... was reasonably communicated to Arial, as it appears on the face of the contract that Arial signed and now seeks to enforce.").

Indeed, even when such a clause does not appear in the actual document a plaintiff signs, but is merely incorporated into it by reference, courts consistently reject the contention that the clause was not "reasonably communicated" to the plaintiff. See, e.g., Horvath, 461 Fed.Appx. at 63; Bank Leumi USA v. Ehrlich, 98 F.Supp.3d 637, 650, 2015 WL 1609854, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 23, 2015) (enforcing clause found in separate "terms and conditions" incorporated by reference into application for bank account despite plaintiff's claim that he did not receive them). The clause at issue here was far more clearly communicated to Plaintiff; it appears prominently in underlined type, just above the place where Plaintiff signed the document, in a straightforward, two-page contract that Plaintiff concedes was made available to her. See Pl.'s Ex. D. Plaintiff cannot now credibly claim that the clause was not reasonably communicated to her. See, e.g., Martin v. Creative Mgmt. Grp., 2010 WL 2629580, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. June 29, 2010) ("The forum selection clause was located on the signature page, in the same size type as the rest of the Agreement. These facts reflect notice well beyond that required by established precedent.").

In addition, Plaintiff attempts to overcome the "presumption" of enforceability that attaches to the parties' forum selection clause by arguing that enforcement "would be unreasonable and unjust to plaintiff, who is 56 years old and unable to travel to Switzerland ... [ ]or obtain counsel there," and who supposedly would be "unable to stay in Switzerland during a pendency of a trial." Opp. ¶ 13. Courts in this Circuit routinely reject such boilerplate objections to enforcement of a forum selection clause based on allegations of advanced age or the supposed inconvenience of litigating abroad. The same result is compelled here. Indeed, Plaintiff, who claims no special circumstances that would preclude her from litigating in Switzerland, cites no case holding that such bare claims of inconvenience suffice to overcome a forum selection clause-and UBS AG is aware of none.

Jurisdiction Has Not Been Adequately Alleged

[13] Jurisdiction over Defendant has also not been established. With respect to general jurisdiction, Plaintiff cannot credibly deny that the Supreme Court's decision in the Daimler case fundamentally narrowed that analysis to focus on those jurisdictions where a defendant is incorporated and maintains its principal place of business-a standard that does not reach UBS AG here. Plaintiff claims that UBS AG's reliance on Daimler is misplaced, 707 Opp. ¶ 6, but she cites no authority for that contention.

Plaintiff also disputes the principle that " 'a foreign bank is not subject to general jurisdiction ... simply because it maintains branches here,' " id. (quoting UBS Mem. at 14), but she does not distinguish the Second Circuit precedent that has so held. See Gucci Am., Inc. v. Weixing Li, 768 F.3d 122, 135 (2d Cir.2014); accord AM Trust v. UBS AG, 78 F.Supp.3d 977, 986–87 (N.D.Cal.2015).

Plaintiff's factual claims fail to adequately allege general jurisdiction. Plaintiff asserts that "UBS AG[ ] is UBS Group AG," Opp. ¶ 7. However, UBS Group AG is a holding company that holds a controlling stake in UBS AG. See Herrmann Reply Decl. Ex. 9 at 18–19.4. In any event, the fact that UBS Group AG, or UBS AG, has corporate affiliates that, in turn, are present in New York does not render UBS AG "at home" in New York. Plaintiff cannot aggregate all of the forum contacts of the entire UBS family of entities and attribute them all to UBS AG and does not address UBS AG's specific contacts with the forum. Indeed, that is precisely the sort of analysis the Daimler Court rejected because it would unfairly "stack[ ] the deck" in favor of jurisdiction for any foreign corporation that has an in-state affiliate. 134 S.Ct. at 759–60.

[14] Even if the forum contacts of the entire UBS corporate family were imputed to UBS AG, it still would not suffice to establish general jurisdiction over UBS AG, because "even a company's 'engage[ment] in a substantial, continuous, and systematic course of business' is alone insufficient to render it at home in a forum." Sonera Holding B.V. v. Cukurova Holding A. S., 750 F.3d 221, 226 (2d Cir.) (quoting Daimler AG v. Bauman, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 746, 761, 187 L.Ed.2d 624 (2014)), cert. denied, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 2888, 189 L.Ed.2d 837 (2014). Plaintiff's recitation of various alleged New York contacts fails to make the relevant comparison compelled by Daimler, which requires that UBS AG's in-forum contacts be "judged against" all of its "national and global activities." Gucci, 768 F.3d at 135 (emphasis added). Plaintiff offers nothing to show that UBS AG's alleged New York contacts are such a substantial portion of its total global operations that it should be deemed to be "at home" here.

[15] Plaintiff fails to adequately allege specific jurisdiction over UBS AG for purposes of this action. The Complaint and Opposition do not identify the specific alleged contacts, or the account, out of which her claims arise. None of Plaintiff's factual assertions would suffice to show that any of those claims arise out of any contacts UBS AG had with New York. If, as the Complaint initially suggested, Plaintiff's tax liability relates to the Swiss account Ida Giordano allegedly opened sometime in the 1980s, Compl. ¶ 13, 16, then Plaintiff's claims must be dismissed because Plaintiff fails to identify any contacts UBS AG ever had with New York relating to that account.

If, on the other hand, Plaintiff's claims arise out of the account she and Ida Giordano opened in 2000, Plaintiff fails to establish a basis for asserting specific jurisdiction because her claims all arise out of UBS AG's alleged failure to advise her of her tax reporting obligations, to provide her with an IRS Form W–9, and to properly "administer" her IRS reporting obligations. See Compl. ¶¶ 23–24, 30, 36, 45, 48. However, Plaintiff does not claim that any of that misconduct transpired in New York. Plaintiff claims only that a UBS banker met with her and her parents in New York at times to discuss their "investment options," to collect occasional deposits, and to socialize with them. Giordano Aff. ¶¶ 6–13. She admits, however, that 708 she and Ida Giordano traveled to Canada to open that joint account in 2000. Id. ¶ 14. Moreover, she claims a UBS banker told her that her mother's investments "would not cause her any tax consequence with the IRS," id. ¶ 25, but does not aver that any such alleged discussions occurred in New York. These allegations fail to establish specific jurisdiction as a result of "transacting business" under CPLR 302(a), and thus surely cannot satisfy the jurisdictional demands of constitutional due process either. See, e.g., Siverls–Dunham v. Lee, 2006 WL 3298964, at *10–*11 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 13, 2006) (finding that "a defendant may not be subject to personal jurisdiction under CPLR § 302(a)(1) simply because her contact with New York was a link in a chain of events giving rise to the cause of action," and that "mere solicitation of business within the state does not constitute the transaction of business within the state absent some other New York-directed activities" (citations omitted)).

The Plaintiff's Causes of Action Are Inadequately Alleged and Barred as Claims for Indemnification

[16] Finally, Plaintiff's claims are barred. "On a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), a court must assess whether the complaint 'contain[s] sufficient factual matters, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.' " N.J. Carpenters Health Fund v. Royal Bank of Scotland Grp., 709 F.3d 109, 119–20 (2d Cir.2013) (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009)). Plaintiff's Complaint fails to satisfy this standard for any of the claims alleged. Plaintiff's Complaint is one of a series of cases brought by former UBS accountholders seeking to hold UBS responsible for their own tax fraud. See, e.g., Thomas v. UBS AG, 706 F.3d 846 (7th Cir.2013); Olenicoff v. UBS AG, 2012 WL 1192911, at *1 (C.D.Cal. Apr. 10, 2012). UBS has acknowledged its role in facilitating U.S. clients' concealment of their accounts from the IRS but denies that it defrauded those clients. As the Complaint has alleged, Plaintiff's theory of the case is that UBS facilitated its clients' own knowing concealment of their Swiss accounts from the IRS. See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 50 (alleging that UBS "participat[ed] in a scheme to facilitate the evasion of U.S. taxes" by its clients and was "actively assisting or otherwise facilitating a number of U.S. individual taxpayers in establishing accounts at UBS in a manner designed to conceal the U.S. taxpayers' ownership or beneficial interest in said accounts," thereby "allowing such U.S. taxpayers to evade reporting requirements").

In dismissing a similar claim, the court in Olenicoff v. UBS AG explained that UBS "only admitted to assisting willing clients with tax fraud, not forcing unsuspecting clients into tax evasion. While its argument is ironic, UBS is right. Even assuming that UBS gave Olenicoff fraudulent tax advice, that makes UBS a co-conspirator, not a defendant in this litigation." 2012 WL 1192911, at *1. Similarly, in affirming the dismissal of Thomas v. UBS AG on appeal, Judge Posner, writing for the Seventh Circuit, explained the absurdity of the claim, stating that "[t]he plaintiffs are tax cheats, and it is very odd, to say the least, for tax cheats to seek to recover their penalties ... from the source, in this case UBS, of the income concealed from the IRS." 706 F.3d at 850. Judge Posner went on to call the Thomas negligence and malpractice claims "frivolous squared," and admonished plaintiffs that "[t]his lawsuit, including the appeal, is a travesty. We are surprised that UBS hasn't asked for the imposition of sanctions on the plaintiffs and class counsel." Id. at 854.

[17] New York's "fundamental concept[ ]" of in pari delicto, which "has been 709 wrought in the inmost texture of [New York] common law for at least two centuries," bars Plaintiff's claims, which all amount to an attempt to seek reimbursement from UBS for the consequences of her own filing of false tax returns. Kirschner v. KPMG LLP, 15 N.Y.3d 446, 464, 912 N.Y.S.2d 508, 938 N.E.2d 941 (2010). Even assuming for purposes of this motion to dismiss that Plaintiff's allegations of UBS's wrongdoing are correct, "[t]he doctrine of in pari delicto mandates that the courts will not intercede to resolve a dispute between two wrongdoers." Id. As the New York Court of Appeals has explained, "the principle that a wrongdoer should not profit from his own misconduct is so strong in New York" that it should apply even "where both parties acted willfully" and "in difficult cases," and it "should not be 'weakened by exceptions.' " Id.

In addition, Plaintiff's concealment of her Swiss Account from the IRS prevents her from making a prima facie showing of causation for any of her claims, because on the face of her allegations, her own conduct is responsible for any harm she allegedly suffered. See, e.g., Rothstein v. UBS AG, 708 F.3d 82, 97 (2d Cir.2013) (affirming dismissal of complaint because the plaintiff's "conclusory allegations [did] not meet Twombly's plausibility standard with respect to the need for a proximate causal relationship between the cash transferred by UBS to Iran and the terrorist attacks by Hizbollah and Hamas that injured plaintiffs"); Citibank, N.A. v. K–H Corp., 968 F.2d 1489, 1496 (2d Cir.1992) (holding complaint was properly dismissed because the plaintiff failed to "adequately allege that the damages it suffered were proximately caused by the alleged misrepresentations").

Plaintiff has asserted five causes of action: (1) breach of fiduciary duty; (2) malpractice/negligence; (3) breach of contract or in the alternative, unjust enrichment; (4) declaratory relief for equitable disgorgement of profits; and (5) fraud and constructive fraud. Plaintiff's own admitted failure to report her UBS Account and income to the IRS prevents her from establishing the required element of causation for each of those causes of action, particularly given the absence of any factual allegation that UBS advised Plaintiff not to report the Swiss Account on her tax returns or was in any way assisted with the preparation of Plaintiff's tax returns. Plaintiff has not alleged any conduct on the part of UBS that was the proximate cause of Plaintiff's purported injury-namely, the obligation to pay back taxes, penalties, and interest as part of her participation in the VDP. Plaintiff admits that she "failed to disclose [her] UBS Swiss Account on her U.S. tax returns or pay tax on the income derived from the assets and transactions in the UBS Swiss Account." Compl. ¶ 52. This means that she falsely answered "no," under penalty of perjury, to a straightforward question on Schedule B of her Form 1040: "did you have a financial interest in or signature authority over a financial account (such as a bank account, securities account, or brokerage account) located in a foreign country?" Herrmann Decl. Ex. 2. She has not alleged that UBS told her to answer "no" to that question. She claims UBS should reimburse her for her tax penalties because it failed to prevent her from violating the law. That theory has no legal support. See, e.g., Thomas, 706 F.3d at 851 (there is "no common law duty to prevent another person from violating the law").

Plaintiff's own failure to disclose the Swiss Account to the IRS is an insurmountable barrier to proving causation for all of her claims, and it bars recovery under the fundamental doctrine of in pari delicto. Thus, even if all facts alleged are taken as true, Plaintiff fails to state a 710 claim, and the entire Complaint should be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6).

Plaintiff's Opposition fails to address that the principle of in pari delicto prevents her from recovering damages relating to her own participation in a scheme to avoid paying taxes. Even accepting arguendo Plaintiff's allegation that a UBS representative told her she would not have to pay taxes on the income from her account, does not explain why she would conceal the existence of the account.

Plaintiff's failure to disclose her foreign account therefore precludes her from suing UBS AG for damages resulting from her own misconduct. "The doctrine of in pari delicto mandates that the courts will not intercede to resolve a dispute between two wrongdoers." Kirschner v. KPMG LLP, 15 N.Y.3d 446, 464, 912 N.Y.S.2d 508, 938 N.E.2d 941 (2010). This "fundamental concept" of New York law holds that a "wrongdoer should not profit from his own misconduct," even "where both parties acted willfully." Id. Plaintiff fails to address (or even acknowledge) that settled principle, but she simply cannot hold UBS AG responsible for her own failure to meet her tax obligations.

Plaintiff's eventual participation in the Voluntary Disclosure Program—and the back taxes and penalties she paid as a result—arose because she had filed false tax returns denying that she had an interest in foreign accounts when she knew that she did. Even taking the Plaintiff's allegations as true, the Complaint fails to satisfy the basic Rule 8(a) standard of stating a claim that is plausible on its face or the heightened Rule 9(b) standard for pleading fraud. Plaintiff has not alleged any facts that would relieve her of her own culpability for knowingly filing false tax returns, which is fatal to all of her claims.

Moreover, each of Plaintiff's claims suffers from other fatal deficiencies. The fraud claim fails because Plaintiff cannot establish reasonable reliance, see, e.g., N.Y. City Educ. Constr. Fund v. Verizon N.Y. Inc., 114 A.D.3d 529, 530, 981 N.Y.S.2d 11 (1st Dep't 2014) (no reliance by plaintiff who "fail [ed] to use ordinary intelligence to ascertain the truth of defendant's representations"), and because she fails to allege specific facts—such as when and where misrepresentations were made—with particularity under Rule 9(b), see, e.g., DeBlasio v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 2009 WL 2242605, at *14 (S.D.N.Y. July 27, 2009). The fiduciary duty claim sounds in fraud—it alleges that UBS AG's knowingly "failed to inform the Plaintiff" of her tax obligations, compl. ¶ 24—and thus fails for the same reasons. See, e.g., id. at *10. The "malpractice/negligence" claim is barred by the economic-loss rule, County of Suffolk v. Long Island Lighting Co., 728 F.2d 52, 62 (2d Cir.1984), and because UBS cannot be liable for "malpractice" here, see, e.g., Deutsche Bank Sec., Inc. v. Rhodes, 578 F.Supp.2d 652, 670 (S.D.N.Y.2008). The contract claim fails because it does not identify any contract provision that UBS AG breached. See, e.g., 767 Third Ave. LLC v. Greble & Finger, LLP, 8 A.D.3d 75, 75, 778 N.Y.S.2d 157 (1st Dep't 2004). The disgorgement claim fails because it seeks a remedy that is available only to the SEC—not to private litigants. See, e.g., SEC v. Wyly, 56 F.Supp.3d 260, 270–71 (S.D.N.Y.2014).

The Plaintiff has failed to adequately allege her five causes of action.

Conclusion

Based on the conclusions set forth above, the motion of UBS is granted, and the complaint is dismissed. In view of the enforcement of the forum selection clause leave to re plead is not granted.

It is so ordered.

All Citations

134 F.Supp.3d 697

End of Document

648 F.3d 1067
United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H.,
M.H., Witness–Appellant,
v.
United States of America, Appellee.

No. 11–55712.
|
Argued and Submitted June 24, 2011.
|
Filed Aug. 19, 2011.

Synopsis
Background: Individual, as the target of grand jury investigation seeking to determine whether he used secret Swiss bank accounts to evade paying federal taxes, was found in contempt by the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Irma E. Gonzalez, Chief Judge, for refusing to comply with grand jury subpoena duces tecum demanding that he produce certain records related to his foreign bank accounts. Individual appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Tallman, Circuit Judge, held that requested records fell under the required records doctrine, rendering Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination inapplicable.

Affirmed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

1069 Pamela J. Naughton and Rebecca S. Roberts, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Diego, CA, for appellant M.H.

Frank P. Cihlar, Gregory Victor Davis, Alexander P. Robbins, Tax Division, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., for appellee United States of America.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Irma E. Gonzalez, Chief District Judge, Presiding. D.C. No. 10–GJ–0200.

Before: WILLIAM C. CANBY, JR., RONALD M. GOULD, and RICHARD C. TALLMAN, Circuit Judges.

OPINION

TALLMAN, Circuit Judge:

Appellant M.H. is the target of a grand jury investigation seeking to determine whether he used secret Swiss bank accounts to evade paying federal taxes. The district court granted a motion to compel M.H.'s compliance with a grand jury subpoena duces tecum demanding that he produce certain records related to his foreign bank accounts. The court declined to condition its order compelling production upon a grant of limited immunity and, pursuant to the recalcitrant witness statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1826, held M.H. in contempt for refusing to comply. M.H. appealed.

The foreign bank account information the Government seeks is information M.H. is required to keep and maintain for inspection under the Bank Secrecy Act of 1970 (BSA), 31 U.S.C. § 5311, and its related regulations. M.H. argues that if he provides the sought-after information, he risks incriminating himself in violation of his Fifth Amendment privilege. He asserts that the information he is being asked to produce might conflict with other information M.H. has previously reported to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). Production might reveal, for instance, that he has accounts he has not reported or that the information he has previously reported is inaccurate. On the other hand, if M.H. denies having the records, he risks incriminating himself because failing to keep the information when required to do so is a felony.

The district court concluded that under the Required Records Doctrine, the Fifth Amendment did not apply. That doctrine recognizes that when certain conditions are met, records required to be maintained by law fall outside the scope of the privilege. We agree that, under the Required Records Doctrine, the Fifth Amendment does not apply. We therefore affirm the district court's order of contempt for failing to produce the information the grand jury sought.

I

In 2009, as part of a deferred-prosecution agreement with the United States Department 1070 of Justice, the Swiss bank UBS AG (UBS) provided the federal government with bank account records identifying approximately 250 U.S. taxpayers UBS might have aided in committing tax evasion. The UBS records showed that in 2002, M.H. transferred securities from his UBS account to a different Swiss bank, UEB Geneva. IRS agents began investigating him.

In June 2010, a San Diego federal grand jury issued a subpoena duces tecum to M.H. for records he was required to keep pursuant to Treasury Department regulations governing offshore banking. The subpoena demanded production of:

> [a]ny and all records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 103.32 [subsequently relocated to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420] relating to foreign financial accounts that you had/have a financial interest in, or signature authority over, including records reflecting the name in which each such account is maintained, the number or other designation of such account, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during each specified year.

(Emphasis added).[1] M.H. declined to provide the requested information and also declined to deny having it, reasoning that either response posed a risk of self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The district court ordered him to comply anyway. When he again refused to produce the requested documents, the court conducted a show-cause hearing for failing to comply with its order and found him in contempt. However, because the district court considered M.H.'s arguments "substantial and worthy of appellate review," the court stayed the contempt order pending appeal, contingent on M.H.'s posting of a $250,000 cash bond. M.H. is not currently incarcerated and may travel without restriction.

The information identified in the subpoena mirrors the banking information that 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420[2] requires taxpayers using offshore bank accounts to keep and maintain for government inspection. The information the subpoena seeks is also identical to information that anyone subject to § 1010.420 already reports to the IRS annually through Form TD F 90–22.1, known as a "Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts," or "FBAR." Therefore, the information at issue in this contempt proceeding is information that M.H.—if he has a foreign bank account and meets other qualifications specified in the BSA—must keep, report to the Treasury Department, and maintain for IRS inspection.

II

[1] [2] We review de novo mixed questions of law and fact contained within the 1071 analysis of a civil contempt proceeding. Shoen v. Shoen, 48 F.3d 412, 414 (9th Cir.1995). We review for clear error any factual findings underlying the contumacious behavior. United States v. Bright, 596 F.3d 683, 694 (9th Cir.2010). Where incarceration has been stayed pending appeal and no party is harmed by the delay, we may exceed the thirty-day time limit for deciding appeals that § 1826 would otherwise impose. In re Grand Jury Witness, 695 F.2d 359, 361 n. 4 (9th Cir.1982).

III

A

[3] As a preliminary matter, M.H. argues that—for a number of reasons—§ 1010.420 does not apply to him, so he is not required to comply with the grand jury's subpoena and we need not reach the Fifth Amendment question. But at this point in its investigation, the Government need not prove the regulation or the BSA apply. It need only show a "reasonable possibility" that the subpoena will serve the grand jury's legitimate investigative purpose. United States v. R. Enters., Inc., 498 U.S. 292, 300–01, 111 S.Ct. 722, 112 L.Ed.2d 795 (1991).

The Government is not required to justify the issuance of a grand jury subpoena by presenting evidence sufficient to establish probable cause because the very purpose of its inquiry is to establish whether probable cause exists to accuse the taxpayer of violating our tax laws. See id. at 297, 111 S.Ct. 722 ("The grand jury occupies a unique role in our criminal justice system. It is an investigatory body charged with the responsibility of determining whether or not a crime has been committed. Unlike this Court, whose jurisdiction is predicated on a specific case or controversy, the grand jury 'can investigate merely on suspicion that the law is being violated, or even just because it wants assurance that it is not.' " (citation omitted)).

There are, of course, limits to the grand jury's authority. See, e.g., id. at 299, 111 S.Ct. 722 (stating that a grand jury may not "engage in arbitrary fishing expeditions" or base its investigation on "malice or an intent to harass"). But there is no evidence of excess here. We have examined the evidence in the sealed record along with the evidence the district court reviewed in camera. That evidence confirms that the grand jury's inquiry is a legitimate exercise of its investigatory authority. If it is later established that, for whatever legal reason, the regulation at issue does not apply to M.H., then the Government will be unable to successfully prosecute him and there is no risk of a Fifth Amendment violation. Until then, however, M.H.'s obligation to comply with the grand jury subpoena is not contingent upon whether the Government has proven the BSA and its regulations apply to him as a U.S. taxpayer who has previously filed FBARs with the Department of the Treasury.

B

M.H. argues that the Required Records Doctrine—which, if it applies, renders the Fifth Amendment privilege inapplicable—does not apply to this case and that the district court erred in finding otherwise. The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution states that "[n]o person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." The Supreme Court has held that where documents are voluntarily created and kept, compelling their disclosure does not implicate the privilege against self-incrimination. See United States v. Doe, 465 U.S. 605, 611–12, 104 S.Ct. 1237, 79 L.Ed.2d 552 (1984) (citing Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 409–10, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (1976)). Where documents are required to be kept and then produced, they are arguably compelled. However, the Supreme 1072 Court has recognized that in such circumstances, the privilege does not extend to records required to be kept as a result of an individual's voluntary participation in a regulated activity. See Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 17, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948) (noting that the nature of documents and the capacity in which they are held may indicate that "the custodian has voluntarily assumed a duty which overrides his claim of privilege" (quoting Wilson v. United States, 221 U.S. 361, 380, 31 S.Ct. 538, 55 L.Ed. 771 (1911))). Our task is to determine whether the records sought in this case fall into the former or latter category. If they fall into the latter, the Required Records Doctrine applies and the privilege is unavailable to M.H., who has voluntarily participated in a regulated activity.

In Shapiro—credited for establishing the principles of what has come to be known as the Required Records Doctrine—the Supreme Court required a wholesaler of fruit and produce to turn over certain records he was obliged to keep and maintain for examination pursuant to the Emergency Price Control Act, which applied in part to records "customarily kept." See Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 55, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968). The Court reasoned that the Required Records "principle applies not only to public documents in public offices, but also to records required by law to be kept in order that there may be suitable information of transactions which are the appropriate subjects of governmental regulation, and the enforcement of restrictions validly established." Shapiro, 335 U.S. at 17, 68 S.Ct. 1375.

Twenty years after Shapiro, the Court considered two cases that examined whether being required to pay an excise tax on one's gambling wagers violated the Fifth Amendment. Those two cases were Marchetti and Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968). In its analysis in those cases, the Court identified three principles from Shapiro that distinguished it from Grosso and Marchetti where, the Court concluded, the Required Records Doctrine did not apply. See Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 56–57, 88 S.Ct. 697 ("We think that neither Shapiro nor the cases upon which it relied are applicable here.... Each of the three principal elements of the [Required Records Doctrine], as it is described in Shapiro, is absent from this situation."); Grosso, 390 U.S. at 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709 ("The premises of the [Required Records Doctrine], as it is described in Shapiro, are evidently three: first, the purposes of the United States' inquiry must be essentially regulatory; second, information is to be obtained by requiring the preservation of records of a kind which the regulated party has customarily kept; and third, the records themselves must have assumed ' public aspects' which render them at least analogous to public documents.... [B]oth the first and third factors are plainly absent from this case." (emphasis added)).

Since Grosso and Marchetti, the Supreme Court has applied Shapiro and the principles underlying the Required Records Doctrine broadly to "items that are the legitimate object of the government's noncriminal regulatory powers," Baltimore City Dept. of Soc. Servs. v. Bouknight, 493 U.S. 549, 557, 110 S.Ct. 900, 107 L.Ed.2d 992 (1990), regardless of whether they are required to be kept and regardless of whether they are records. See, e.g., California v. Byers, 402 U.S. 424, 427–31, 91 S.Ct. 1535, 29 L.Ed.2d 9 (1971) (applying Required Records Doctrine principles and concluding that a state statute requiring drivers involved in vehicle accidents to stop at the scene of the accident and leave their names and addresses for police did not infringe the Fifth Amendment); Bouknight, 493 U.S. at 558, 110 S.Ct. 900 (applying 1073 the Required Records Doctrine to determine that a parent lacked a Fifth Amendment privilege in producing her child in response to a court's order).

We have recognized that the three principles announced in Grosso define the Required Records Doctrine, but have also adopted the Supreme Court's flexibility in applying those principles. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Doe M.D.), 801 F.2d 1164, 1168 (9th Cir.1986) ("Under [the Required Records Doctrine], the Fifth Amendment privilege does not apply if: (1) the purpose of the government's inquiry is regulatory, not criminal; (2) the information requested is contained in documents of a kind the regulated party customarily keeps; and (3) the records have public aspects."); see also U.S. SEC v. Fehn, 97 F.3d 1276, 1291–92 (9th Cir.1996) (observing that we have applied the Required Records Doctrine "principles in a variety of contexts, and have accorded them varying emphasis").

Even though M.H. is being asked to turn over reports he is required to keep pursuant to the BSA and its regulations, the Government, citing Byers, Bouknight, and Fehn, suggests that all three requirements need not be met. While it is true that when the Required Records Doctrine is applied to items other than records a rigid application of all three factors may not be necessary, see, e.g., Bouknight, 493 U.S. at 558–60, 110 S.Ct. 900 (applying the "principles" of the Required Records Doctrine and concluding that a mother compelled to produce her child through a court order could not invoke a Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination to resist the order); United States v. Des Jardins, 747 F.2d 499, 507–09 (9th Cir.1984) (concluding that the Fifth Amendment privilege does not apply to a requirement under the BSA that travelers transferring more than $5,000 out of the country file a written report, but considering only whether the regulation at issue was essentially regulatory or criminal in nature), rev'd on other grounds, 772 F.2d 578 (9th Cir.1985), we need not resolve that issue here. Even if we assume, for purposes of decision, that all three prongs of the test set forth in Grosso apply, we conclude that all three requirements are met in this case.

1. "Essentially regulatory"

[4] [5] We begin by recognizing that when compelled disclosure has incriminating potential, "the judicial scrutiny is invariably a close one." Byers, 402 U.S. at 427, 91 S.Ct. 1535. In evaluating the danger of incrimination, we consider whether the requirement in question is essentially regulatory or criminal in nature. Doe M.D., 801 F.2d at 1168. In doing so, "[i]t is irrelevant that records kept for regulatory purposes may be useful to a criminal grand jury investigation." Id. Instead, we consider whether the statutory or regulatory requirement involves an area "permeated with criminal statutes," whether it is "aimed at a highly selective group inherently suspect of criminal activities," Des Jardins, 747 F.2d at 508 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted), and whether complying with the requirement would "generally ... prove a significant 'link in a chain' of evidence tending to establish guilt." Id. at 509 (internal quotation marks omitted). M.H. argues that, for several reasons, the BSA's record-keeping provision is criminal in nature, not regulatory. Our precedent indicates otherwise.

M.H. first argues that § 1010.420 is criminal in nature because the BSA's "primary purpose is to detect criminal conduct, specifically money laundering, terrorism and tax evasion." To support this position, M.H. points to language in the BSA describing the purpose of the statute as requiring "certain reports or records, where they have a high degree of usefulness 1074 in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings, or in the conduct of intelligence or counterintelligence activities, including analysis, to protect against international terrorism." See 31 U.S.C. § 5311. M.H. also cites language from the IRS Web site describing the BSA as the first law to fight money laundering in the United States, along with legislative history indicating congressional interest in combating criminal activity.

The Supreme Court has already considered and rejected these arguments as they relate to the BSA generally. In California Bankers Ass'n v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 76–77, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 39 L.Ed.2d 812 (1974), the Court observed that the goal of assisting in the enforcement of criminal laws "was undoubtedly prominent in the minds of the legislators," as they considered the BSA. However, it noted that "Congress seems to have been equally concerned with civil liability which might go undetected by reason of transactions of the type required to be recorded or reported." Id. at 76, 94 S.Ct. 1494. The Court concluded that "the fact that a legislative enactment manifests a concern for the enforcement of the criminal law does not cast any generalized pall of constitutional suspicion over it." Id. at 77, 94 S.Ct. 1494. Therefore, that Congress aimed to use the BSA as a tool to combat certain criminal activity is insufficient to render the BSA essentially criminal as opposed to essentially regulatory.

Turning to the specific regulation in question, our analysis in Des Jardins is informative. There, we considered whether a particular BSA record-reporting provision, which required travelers to report transporting more than $5,000 in monetary instruments across the United States border, was essentially criminal in nature and determined it was not. In that case, a U.S. Customs Agent working at the Los Angeles International Airport—as part of a project to detect narcotics-related criminal activity—noticed that Des Jardins's travel route paralleled those drug couriers frequently took. Des Jardins, 747 F.2d at 501. The agent inspected Des Jardins's luggage and found $5,000. Upon searching Des Jardins's person, the agent discovered several thousand more dollars. Id. at 502. Des Jardins was ultimately convicted for violating the reporting requirement.

We considered whether the reporting requirement violated Des Jardins's Fifth Amendment privilege, and we analyzed whether the fact that the regulation was not "exclusively regulatory" made it essentially criminal. Id. at 508–09 (emphasis added). We determined it did not. Id. at 509. We reasoned in part that "[s]ince the transportation of monetary instruments in such amounts is not itself illegal and since there is no reason to suppose that the transportation of monetary instruments in such amounts is generally connected with criminal activity, the vast majority of people subject to the requirement are not suspect of illegality." Id.

[6] The same can be said here. There is nothing inherently illegal about having or being a beneficiary of an offshore foreign banking account. According to the Government, § 1010.420 applies to "hundreds of thousands of foreign bank accounts—over half a million in 2009." Nothing about having a foreign bank account on its own suggests a person is engaged in illegal activity. That fact distinguishes this case from Marchetti and Grosso, where the activity being regulated—gambling—was almost universally illegal, so that paying a tax on gambling wagers necessarily implicated a person in criminal activity. Admitting to having a foreign bank account carries no such risk. That the information contained in the required record may ultimately lead to criminal charges does not convert an essentially 1075 regulatory regulation into a criminal one. See Des Jardins, 747 F.2d at 508; see also Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. 697.

Considering whether the sought-after information would likely serve as a significant chain in a link of evidence establishing guilt, we found relevant in Des Jardins the nature of the specific information travelers were required to report (the legal capacity in which the person filing the report was acting; the origin, destination, and route being traveled; and the amount and kind of monetary instruments transported). We concluded that because such evidence lacked an inherently criminal quality, it would not likely serve as a significant link in a chain of evidence. Des Jardins, 747 F.2d at 508–09.

M.H. was required to maintain, and through the subpoena is being asked to produce, the following information:

> (1) The name in which each account is maintained;
>
> (2) The number or other designation of such account;

> (3) The name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained;
>
> (4) The type of such account;
>
> (5) The maximum value of each such account during the reporting period.

This information is not inherently criminal. As in Des Jardins, it is the act of not reporting (or in this case the act of not maintaining for inspection) the information that suggests criminality, not the information itself. Because the information being requested of M.H. is not inherently criminal, being required to provide that information would generally not establish a significant link in a chain of evidence tending to prove guilt. See Des Jardins, 747 F.2d at 509 ("Since the requirement concerns such relatively innocuous matters ... any information obtained would be at best tangentially related to criminal activity."); see also Wilson, 221 U.S. at 380, 31 S.Ct. 538 ("But the physical custody of incriminating documents does not of itself protect the custodian against their compulsory production. The question still remains with respect to the nature of the documents and the capacity in which they are held.").

M.H. suggests that Des Jardins should not apply because in that case we considered a reporting requirement instead of a record-keeping requirement. But Des Jardins 's analysis of whether the regulation in question was essentially regulatory did not hinge on the "reporting" aspect of the regulation. Des Jardins relied on cases interpreting the Required Records Doctrine and is clearly applicable to the "essentially regulatory" aspect of that doctrine, which does not turn on whether a reporting requirement exists, but—as we have already explained—on whether the information sought is inherently criminal in nature. While Des Jardins does not answer the precise question at issue in this case, we apply the rules recognized there to inform our Fifth Amendment inquiry. Those rules suggest that because § 1010.420 does not target inherently illegal activity or a highly selective group of people inherently suspect of criminal activity, it is essentially regulatory, not criminal.

We have held that whether a requirement to maintain records involves a reporting requirement is not determinative for purposes of deciding whether it is essentially regulatory. See United States v. Rosenberg, 515 F.2d 190, 199–200 (9th Cir.1975) (holding that the Required Records Doctrine applied even though the statute in question only required records to be kept for two years and did "not expressly provide that records shall be open to inspection by state officials"). Thus, the lack of an "automatic" reporting requirement does not mean § 1010.420 is not essentially regulatory. This conclusion 1076 makes sense because, as we have already explained, the heart of the "essentially regulatory" inquiry is whether the regulation in question targets inherently illegal activity. As we observed in Rosenberg, where the purpose of the record-keeping requirement "is to aid in the enforcement of" the statutory scheme, the Required Records Doctrine may apply, regardless of whether the regulation itself includes a reporting requirement, automatic or otherwise. Id. at 200.

Moreover, § 1010.420 has a reporting requirement. The regulation mandates that the required records "shall be kept at all times available for inspection as authorized by law." The Supreme Court has indicated that no meaningful difference exists "between an obligation to maintain records for inspection, and such an obligation supplemented by a requirement that those records be filed periodically with officers of the United States." Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 56 n. 14, 88 S.Ct. 697.

Because § 1010.420 is essentially regulatory in nature, we conclude that the first prong of the Required Records Doctrine is satisfied.

2. Customarily Kept

[7] We have not assigned a specific definition to the term "customarily kept," but records appear to be customarily kept if they would typically be kept in connection with the regulated activity. As the case law dealing with this requirement suggests, the Fifth Amendment does not apply when the Government compels individuals to create records that they would customarily keep.

In Shapiro, the records a fruit wholesaler "customarily kept" in compliance with the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 were not privileged. By contrast, in Marchetti, records regarding a person's gambling expenses were deemed not customarily kept and were privileged. Some courts have recognized records as "customarily kept" where they are required to be retained as part of the general regulatory scheme, as they were in Shapiro. See, e.g., In re Doe, 711 F.2d 1187, 1191 (2d Cir.1983) ("That the W–2s are records of a kind customarily kept by taxpayers is not open to dispute."). Most, however, seem to simply make a cursory statement that the records are, or are not, customarily kept. See, e.g., Doe M.D., 801 F.2d at 1168 (concluding without analysis that "it is evident that Doe customarily maintained the documents in his possession").

[8] The information that § 1010.420 requires to be kept is basic account information that bank customers would customarily keep, in part because they must report it to the IRS every year as part of the IRS's regulation of offshore banking, and in part because they need the information to access their foreign bank accounts. That M.H.'s bank keeps the records on his behalf does not mean he lacks access to them or that they are records offshore banking customers would not customarily keep. A bank account's beneficiary necessarily has access to such essential information as the bank's name, the maximum amount held in the account each year, and the account number. Both common sense and the records reviewed in camera support this assessment. We conclude that the records sought are customarily kept.

3. "Public aspects"

The Supreme Court has recognized that if the government's purpose in imposing the regulatory scheme is essentially regulatory, then it necessarily has some "public aspects." Shapiro, 335 U.S. at 33, 68 S.Ct. 1375 (noting that "the privilege which exists as to private papers cannot be maintained in relation to records required by law to be kept in order that there may be suitable information of transactions which 1077 are the appropriate subjects of governmental regulation, and the enforcement of restrictions validly established" (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)); id. at 34, 68 S.Ct. 1375 (observing that because the Price Control Act required the records in question to be kept, they had "public aspects").

[9] [10] [11] The mere fact that the government has "formalized its demands in the attire of a statute" does not automatically ascribe "public aspects" to otherwise private documents. See Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. 697. However, that the information sought is traditionally private and personal as opposed to business-related does not automatically implicate the Fifth Amendment. Where personal information is compelled in furtherance of a valid regulatory scheme, as is the case here, that information assumes a public aspect. See Byers, 402 U.S. at 431–32, 91 S.Ct. 1535 (holding that a California statutory requirement that drivers involved in automobile accidents provide their names and addresses to police did not infringe on the Fifth Amendment privilege because "[d]isclosure of name and address is an essentially neutral act. Whatever the collateral consequences of disclosing name and address, the statutory purpose is to implement the state police power to regulate use of motor vehicles"). Similarly, disclosure of basic account information is an "essentially neutral" act necessary for effective regulation of offshore banking.

[12] M.H. argues that the records in question, even if they are essentially regulatory, lack public aspects because "nothing in the record keeping provision of the BSA requires [M.H.] to produce bank records to the Government." However, we have held that a regulation need not have an express reporting requirement in order to have public aspects. See Rosenberg, 515 F.2d at 199–200 (finding no Fifth Amendment violation even though the statute required records to be kept but not produced (citing Shapiro, 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, and Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. 709)).

[13] Furthermore, as we have already noted, § 1010.420 does require M.H. to produce to the Government the information being sought upon request, as long as that request is authorized by law. The regulation states that records "shall be retained for a period of 5 years and shall be kept at all times available for inspection as authorized by law." § 1010.420. Additionally, the information required to be kept under § 1010.420 is the same information disclosed in FBAR forms. For purposes of the Required Records Doctrine, it does not matter whether the production of that information is requested through a subpoena (as in this case and Shapiro), a court order (as in Bouknight), or the regulation itself (as in Byers). See Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 56 n. 14, 88 S.Ct. 697 (rejecting the argument that "the crucial issue respecting the applicability of Shapiro is the method by which information reaches the Government"). Even if § 1010.420 lacked any reporting requirement whatsoever, it would still have public aspects because, as was the case in Rosenberg, the documents in question are required to be kept to aid in the enforcement of a valid regulatory scheme.

[14] M.H. next suggests that because the BSA provides that a person need only disclose records "as required by law" and the House report accompanying the legislation specified that the records "will not be made automatically available for law enforcement purposes," the records are not public because they are not "easily accessed" by the Government. But court orders and subpoenas are legal processes that prevent law enforcement from automatically retrieving information, and whether a document is easily accessible has nothing to do with whether a document 1078 has public aspects. See Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 56 n. 14, 88 S.Ct. 697; see also Rosenberg, 515 F.2d at 199–200. The language "as required by law" does not prevent the sought-after records from assuming public aspects for purposes of the Required Records Doctrine.

[15] M.H.'s argument that, because the law recognizes special privacy interests in bank records and tax documents, those documents cannot have "public aspects" is also flawed. The fact that documents have privacy protections elsewhere does not transform those documents into private documents for the purpose of grand jury proceedings. See Doe M.D., 801 F.2d at 1168 (finding that confidential patient records have "public aspects" for purposes of the Required Records Doctrine and that "expectations of privacy do not negate a finding that there is a public aspect to the files under the ... regulatory schemes"); see also Fisher, 425 U.S. at 401, 96 S.Ct. 1569 ("We adhere to the view that the Fifth Amendment protects against 'compelled self-incrimination, not the disclosure of private information.' " (citation and internal markings omitted)).

M.H. emphasizes decisions from other circuits that have found certain personal income tax documents beyond the scope of the Required Records Doctrine. Those cases are not binding in this Circuit, but even if they were, they fail to support M.H.'s position. For example, M.H. relies heavily on Smith v. Richert, 35 F.3d 300, 303 (7th Cir.1994). There, the court held that where the "production of personal tax records of the character of W–2's and 1099's would have testimonial force and incriminate the taxpayer ... the required-records doctrine is inapplicable and that production is excused by the self-incrimination clause." Smith, 35 F.3d at 304. But the rationale behind that ruling was that "[t]he decision to become a taxpayer cannot be thought voluntary ... [because] [a]lmost anyone who works is a taxpayer, along with many who do not." Id. at 303. The court reasoned that the obligatory nature of paying taxes was distinguishable from "the case of the individual who enters upon a regulated activity knowing that the maintenance of extensive records available for inspection by the regulatory agency is one of the conditions of engaging in the activity." Id. In the latter scenario—which is precisely the situation here because no one is required to participate in the activity of offshore banking—the required records doctrine would apply.

Furthermore, in Smith the subpoena did not indicate that the records being sought related to a regulated activity, whereas in this case the subpoena so indicates. See id. (determining that the Required Records Doctrine did not apply in part because "[n]othing in the subpoena identifies the records sought as records required by the state's agricultural statutes to be kept"). Here, the subpoena explicitly requires the production of banking records required to be kept and maintained for inspection pursuant to regulations implemented through the BSA.

[16] Finally, M.H. argues that allowing the regulatory nature of a requirement to render it as having "public aspects" allows the exception to swallow the rule that "[t]he Government's anxiety to obtain information known to a private individual does not without more render that information public." Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. 697. But, as stated above, a statute or regulation "directed at a selective group inherently suspect of criminal activities" fails to render the privilege against self-incrimination inapplicable. Id. Determining whether a regulation is essentially regulatory or criminal requires analysis that goes beyond the label Congress or an agency provides, thus safeguarding against the exception swallowing the rule. Furthermore, in this instance, 1079 M.H. has not made a compelling argument that the information he is being asked to provide lacks "public aspects" despite its essentially regulatory nature. We therefore conclude that the records in question have public aspects.

IV

Because the records sought through the subpoena fall under the Required Records Doctrine, the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination is inapplicable, and M.H. may not invoke it to resist compliance with the subpoena's command. See Doe M.D., 801 F.2d at 1167 ("Records that are required to be maintained by law are outside the scope of the privilege [against self-incrimination]."). Because M.H.'s Fifth Amendment privilege is not implicated, we need not address his request for immunity. Bouknight, 493 U.S. at 562, 110 S.Ct. 900 (declining to "define the precise limitations that may exist upon the State's ability to use the testimonial aspects of Bouknight's act of production in subsequent criminal proceedings").

The district court's order is AFFIRMED.

All Citations

648 F.3d 1067, 108 A.F.T.R.2d 2011-5880, 11 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 10,616, 2011 Daily Journal D.A.R. 12,661

Footnotes

[1] The regulation cited in the subpoena, 31 C.F.R. § 103.32, has since been relocated to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420. For ease of reference, this opinion will refer to the current citation.

[2] The regulation reads, in relevant part:

> Records of accounts required by [31 C.F.R. § 103.24 (relocated to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350)] to be reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be retained by each person having a financial interest in or signature or other authority over any such account. Such records shall contain the name in which each such account is maintained, the number or other designation of such account, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during the reporting period. Such records shall be retained for a period of 5 years and shall be kept at all times available for inspection as authorized by law.

End of Document

852 F.Supp.2d 1020
United States District Court,
N.D. Illinois,
Eastern Division.

In re: SPECIAL FEBRUARY 2011–1 GRAND JURY SUBPOENA DATED SEPTEMBER 12, 2011.

No. 11 GJ 792.
|
Nov. 22, 2011.

Synopsis
Background: Individual subpoenaed to testify and produce records before the grand jury moved to quash the subpoena.

[Holding:] The District Court, James F. Holderman, Chief Judge, held that the required records doctrine did not apply to preclude the individual's assertion of a Fifth Amendment privilege.

Motion granted.

1020 MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

JAMES F. HOLDERMAN, Chief Judge:

The movant in this matter was personally subpoenaed to testify and produce records before the grand jury. He was told by the Government that he is a target of the grand jury's investigation (hereinafter referred to as “T.C.” for Target Citizen). 1021 T.C. has moved to quash the subpoena based on his Fifth Amendment privilege against incrimination. The Government has opposed the motion. For the following reasons, the motion to quash is granted.

BACKGROUND

The grand jury as a part of its investigation of T.C. issued the subpoena dated September 12, 2011 that is the subject of T.C.'s motion. That subpoena in addition to seeking T.C.'s testimony[1] compels him to produce “any and all” of his foreign financial account records covering the time period from October 1, 2006, to the present. Under the regulations authorized by the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA), 31 U.S.C. §§ 5311–5332, any foreign financial account holder is required to keep records of his foreign financial accounts and to file annual reports with the IRS. The subpoena at issue specifically commands T.C. to appear and testify before the grand jury and bring with him the following:

> [a]ny and all records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 103.32 [subsequently relocated to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420] relating to foreign financial accounts that you had/have a financial interest in, or signature authority over, including records reflecting the name in which each such account is maintained, the number or other designation of such account, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during each specified year.
>
> The records that the subpoena compels contain information T.C. was required to report concerning his foreign financial accounts to the IRS annually for the years he held such accounts by filing Form TD F 90–22.1, the “Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts” (FBAR). T.C. declined to provide that information on his 2009 and 2010 FBAR forms, citing his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. It appears that T.C. did not file the form in 2006, 2007, or 2008. Transcript of Nov. 8, 2011 Hearing at 8:13–9:1 (under seal).

ANALYSIS

[1] The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution states that “[n]o person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.” There is no dispute here that the contents of the subpoenaed documents enjoy no Fifth Amendment privilege. Because the foreign banks holding T.C.'s accounts created the documents that the government seeks, the documents do not include T.C.'s testimony, much less his compelled testimony. See United States v. Hubbell, 530 U.S. 27, 36, 120 S.Ct. 2037, 147 L.Ed.2d 24 (2000). Nonetheless, T.C.'s “act of producing documents in response to a subpoena may have a compelled testimonial aspect,” if producing the documents would require T.C. to “admit that the papers existed, were in [T.C.'s] possession or control, and were authentic.” Id. Here, T.C. contends, and the Government does not dispute, that producing the requested records would be an admission by T.C. that he has one or more foreign bank accounts and that he had knowledge of the account or accounts that he held during the period covered by the subpoena. That information incriminates T.C. if he failed to report those foreign accounts properly to the IRS or failed to pay the proper amount of tax due from the income generated by those foreign 1022 accounts. See 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1); 31 U.S.C. § 5322; 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(a).

[2] Even though T.C.'s act of production may be incriminating, the Government contends that the Fifth Amendment does not apply in this instance under the required records doctrine. That doctrine provides an exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege for "records which are required to be kept by law." United States v. Lehman, 887 F.2d 1328, 1332 (1989). The Supreme Court first recognized the required records doctrine in Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948), a case requiring the production of a fruit wholesaler's price records required by law to be maintained and open to Government inspection. Because the Government had a legitimate regulatory interest in the price records (for the enforcement of emergency war-time price controls), the Supreme Court reasoned, "the privilege which exists as to private papers cannot be maintained in relation to 'records required by law to be kept in order that there may be suitable information of transactions which are the appropriate subjects of Governmental regulation, and the enforcement of restrictions validly established.' " Id. at 33, 68 S.Ct. 1375 (footnote omitted). The Supreme Court later interpreted Shapiro to establish a three-part test for the application of the required records doctrine: "first, the purpose of the compulsion must be 'essentially regulatory'; second, the records sought must contain the type of information that the regulated party would customarily keep; and third, the records must have 'public aspects' making them at least comparable to public documents." Lehman, 887 F.2d at 1332 (citing Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968)).

The Ninth Circuit recently applied the three-part test to enforce a subpoena identical to the one in this case requesting foreign bank account records maintained under 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420. In re M.H., 648 F.3d 1067, 1070 (9th Cir.2011). The Ninth Circuit applied the required records doctrine after concluding that all three prongs of the test were met. The Ninth Circuit reasoned, first, "[n]othing about having a foreign bank account on its own suggests a person is engaged in illegal activity," so the requirement to maintain records was "essentially regulatory," rather than criminal. Id. at 1074. Second, investors in foreign banks would typically keep basic information about their accounts, thus making the records "customarily kept." Id. at 1076. Finally, the Ninth Circuit held that "[w]here personal information is compelled in furtherance of a valid regulatory scheme ..., that information assumes a public aspect," and found the third prong was met as well. Id. at 1077. Consequently, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court's order requiring M.H.'s compliance with the subpoena.

The question here regarding the subpoena to T.C. is not as straightforward as the subpoena to M.H. The Seventh Circuit, unlike the Ninth, has recognized that the application of the required records doctrine has become more complex in the more than half a century since the Supreme Court decided Shapiro. To understand the complexity, one must recall that Shapiro was decided under the regime of Boyd v. United States, a nineteenth-century case which established the now-discredited rule prohibiting all compelled production of incriminating documents in private hands. 116 U.S. 616, 630, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746 (1886). When that rule was the law of the land, there was a concern that the Government lacked the investigative tools necessary to enforce many of its legitimate regulatory regimes. See Richard A. Nagareda, 1023 Compulsion "To Be a Witness" and the Resurrection of Boyd, 74 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1575, 1643–44 (1999). The need for an exception to Boyd 's categorical rule was thus plain. Moreover, the rationale behind Boyd focused on an owner's right of privacy in his possessions.[2] It therefore made sense, at that time, to carve out the necessary exception by focusing on the attributes that distinguish "public" documents from "private." And indeed, the Supreme Court in Shapiro proceeded along precisely those lines when establishing the required records doctrine, stating that "there is an important difference in the constitutional protection afforded their possessors between papers exclusively private and documents having public aspects, a difference whose essence is that the latter papers, once they have been legally obtained, are available as evidence." Shapiro, 335 U.S. at 33–34, 68 S.Ct. 1375 (quotation marks and citation omitted). The three-part test distills the Supreme Court's reasoning in Shapiro by distinguishing public documents from the private property protected under Boyd.

The problem with the Shapiro three-part test today is that the Boyd principle no longer defines the parameters of the Supreme Court's application of the Fifth Amendment.[3] Instead of focusing on an individual's right to shield his private property from Government inquiry, the Supreme Court has recognized that the Fifth Amendment protects "a person only against being incriminated by his own compelled testimonial communications." Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 409, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (1976); see also id. at 401, 96 S.Ct. 1569 ("We cannot cut the Fifth Amendment completely loose from the moorings of its language, and make it serve as a general protector of privacy—a word not mentioned in its text and a concept directly addressed in the Fourth Amendment. We adhere to the view that the Fifth Amendment protects against 'compelled self-incrimination, not (the disclosure of) private information.' " (citation omitted)). The Supreme Court's focus on whether a communication is "testimonial" led it to abandon the Boyd rule and to recognize that there is no privilege protecting the contents of documents, so long as their creation was the author's voluntary choice. Id. at 407–09, 96 S.Ct. 1569. In other words, when a person has already made an incriminating statement in a document, the mere production of the document does not require the producing person to restate the document's contents. Nonetheless, the Supreme Court has recognized that a document may still be protected from compelled production because the act of producing the document may 1024 have testimonial aspects, such as an admission that the document is authentic. United States v. Doe, 465 U.S. 605, 612–13, 104 S.Ct. 1237, 79 L.Ed.2d 552 (1984).

In that context, the distinction between public and private documents that formed the foundation of Shapiro can no longer be the dominant rationale for the required records doctrine. See Alito, supra note 3, at 71–72 ("The required records rule ... also seems likely to be reexamined in light of Fisher and Doe, because this rule ... was developed without any consideration of the act of production."). Indeed, the Seventh Circuit in 1989 considered doing away with the doctrine because of Fisher and Doe. See Lehman, 887 F.2d at 1332. Although the Seventh Circuit retained the required records doctrine, it did so by articulating two new rationales for its existence in light of Fisher and Doe. First, the Seventh Circuit in Smith v. Richert tied the required records doctrine to Doe 's emphasis on the testimonial aspects of production, noting that if the law requires an individual to keep documents, "the only acknowledgment conveyed by [producing them] would be of the existence and applicability of the regulatory program that required him to maintain the records," an acknowledgment that is not incriminating. 35 F.3d 300, 302 (7th Cir.1994); accord In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Served Upon Underhill, 781 F.2d 64, 70 (6th Cir.1986) ("[B]ecause required records must have taken on a 'public aspect' and because the law requires that they be kept, an individual admits little of significance by producing them."); see also Lehman, 887 F.2d at 1332 (adopting the Sixth Circuit's reasoning in Underhill). The Seventh Circuit thereby established that in general, the production of required records will lack the testimonial significance that protects a subpoenaed witness's refusal to produce some documents under Fisher and Doe.

The second rationale squares the required records doctrine with Fisher's focus on the voluntariness of the individual's testimony. One might assume that the maintenance and production of all "required" records would by definition be compelled and thus not voluntary. The Seventh Circuit reasoned, however, that so long as the individual has voluntarily chosen to enter a regulated field, the maintenance or production of any records under the compulsion of government regulation of that field is also voluntary. See Smith, 35 F.3d at 302–03 (explaining the voluntariness requirement and reasoning that it is met by "the individual who enters upon a regulated activity knowing that the maintenance of extensive records available for inspection by the regulatory agency is one of the conditions of engaging in the activity"); Underhill, 781 F.2d at 70 ("[I]f an individual chooses to begin or continue to do business in an area in which the government requires record keeping, he may be deemed to have waived any Fifth Amendment protection.").

Although the Shapiro three-part test remains viable after Fisher and Doe, see Lehman, 887 F.2d at 1333, one can discern from the Seventh Circuit's new rationales for the required records doctrine two additional factors that may make the required records exception inapplicable even when the three-part test is met. The first factor is whether the individual's compelled production of the subpoenaed records causes him to admit any incriminating fact beyond the mere existence and applicability of the regulatory program that requires the records' maintenance and production. The second factor is whether the individual claiming Fifth Amendment protection has voluntarily entered the field of regulation by the government so as to waive Fifth Amendment protection from any production that the government's regulatory scheme may require.

1025 This latter factor is the main rationale behind the Seventh Circuit's decision that the required records doctrine does not cover individual taxpayers' domestic tax records. See Smith, 35 F.3d at 303 ("The decision to become a taxpayer cannot be thought voluntary in the same sense [as the decision to enter upon a regulated activity]. Almost anyone who works is a taxpayer, along with many who do not."). This factor does not present an obstacle to the application of the required records doctrine here, however. Only about half a million taxpayers choose to use foreign bank accounts each year, so the activity of foreign bank account usage lacks the near universality of the decision to earn sufficient income to become a taxpayer. See In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074. Moreover, T.C.'s counsel conceded at the November 8, 2011 closed hearing on the motion to quash that T.C.'s decision to put funds in a foreign bank account was voluntary. Transcript of Nov. 8, 2011 Hearing at 6:6–10 (under seal).

Consequently, the issue to be decided regarding T.C.'s pending motion is whether T.C.'s compelled production of the subpoenaed records causes him to admit any incriminating fact beyond the mere existence and applicability of the regulatory program. On that point, this court finds that T.C.'s compelled production of the subpoenaed information would compel him to admit that he has an interest in one or more foreign bank accounts and that he is thus participating in the regulated activity.[4] As described above, that fact may incriminate him under 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1) and 31 U.S.C. § 5322.

In the typical required records case, of course, there is no danger that producing the required records will compel the individual engaging in the regulated activity to admit his participation in the regulated activity, for that fact is usually obvious. The individual's participation in the regulated activity is obvious because in the typical case, the individual engages in the regulated activity in public. In the Shapiro case itself, for example, the fruit wholesaler subject to the price controls conducted his business in public and with the public, so the Government already knew that he was, in fact, a fruit wholesaler subject to the regulations. The same could be said of all of the typical entities found to be subject to production under the required records doctrine. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 21 F.3d 226 (8th Cir.1994) (regulation of an automobile dealer); Lehman, 887 F.2d at 1330 (cattle dealer); Underhill, 781 F.2d at 65 (automobile dealer); United States v. Scherer, 523 F.2d 371 (7th Cir.1975) (firearms dealer); United States v. Rosenberg, 515 F.2d 190, 199–200 (9th Cir.1975) (physician). In all of those cases, the very purpose of the regulations was to protect consumers and the public from the individuals engaged in domestic commercial activity in the public market.

[3] By contrast, the purpose of the BSA, according to its statutory declaration of purpose, is not to regulate a public market or to protect consumers, but rather to advance the Government's "criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings," or to "protect against international terrorism." 31 U.S.C. § 5311. The people subject to BSA regulation have not 1026 necessarily engaged in activities with the public or in the public sphere. An individual's voluntary decision to obtain a foreign bank account is private, unlike the voluntary decision to conduct business with the public in a regulated area. Without some disclosure by the individual such as the FBAR—which in this case T.C. has declined to fill out—the Government has no direct way to discover T.C.'s participation in the regulated activity.[5] Forcing T.C. to produce the foreign bank account records would compel him to admit that he has a foreign bank account, a compelled admission that the Fifth Amendment protects him from having to make.[6]

[4] [5] A bedrock principle of Fifth Amendment jurisprudence is that the Government cannot obtain access to information merely by expressing its "anxiety to obtain information known to a private individual," or even by "formaliz[ing] its demands in the attire of a statute." Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 57, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968). Thus, "a statute that required all Americans to keep a diary in which they recorded every arguably illegal act that they committed, or make a tape-recorded confession whenever they committed an illegal act, would not empower the authorities ... to compel the production of the diary or the tape." Smith, 35 F.3d at 303. The required records doctrine establishes a limited exception to that principle by allowing the government to compel the production of certain information merely by formally demanding the information in a statute. The required records doctrine only applies, however, in the limited case in which the individual's decision to participate in a regulated activity has already revealed the information that he seeks to protect under the Fifth Amendment. To expand the required records doctrine beyond that restricted class of cases would erode the protection that, in the words of Justice Joseph Story in his landmark Commentaries on the Constitution, "is of inestimable value." The origin of that protection, Justice Story reminded us, is to avoid the fate of countries in which, "not only are criminals compelled to give evidence against themselves, but are subjected to the rack or torture in order to procure a confession of guilt." 3 Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Constitution § 1782 (1833), in 5 The Founders' Constitution 295, 296 (Philip B. Kurland & Ralph Lerner eds., 1987). If such important protection can be eroded "merely because [records are] required to be kept by law ..., we are indeed living in glass houses." Shapiro, 335 U.S. at 50, 68 S.Ct. 1375 (Frankfurter, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). The Government must do more work than simply requiring T.C. to incriminate himself by producing his own files if it wishes to find evidence during this grand jury investigation that T.C. 1027 has an incriminating interest in foreign bank accounts.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, T.C.'s motion to quash the subpoena is granted.

All Citations

852 F.Supp.2d 1020

Footnotes

[1] The Government in its Response stated it extended the date for T.C.'s compliance and stated, "His [T.C.'s] personal appearance was also tentatively excused in the event documents were produced assuming the documents were properly authenticated." (Govt. Resp. 1, fn. 1.)

[2] See Boyd, 116 U.S. at 627–28, 6 S.Ct. 524 (" 'Papers are the owner's goods and chattels; they are his dearest property, and are so far from enduring a seizure, that they will hardly bear an inspection ....' " (quoting Entick v. Carrington and Three Other King's Messengers, (1765) 95 Eng. Rep. 807 (K.B.); 19 How. St. Tr. 1029)); see also Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 484, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510 (1965) ("The Fourth and Fifth Amendments were described in Boyd as protection against all Governmental invasions 'of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of life.' " (citation omitted)); 3 Wayne LeFave et al., Criminal Procedure § 8.12(a) (3d ed. rev. 2010) ("Boyd relied on what has been described as a 'property oriented' view of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments, built upon the owner's right of privacy in the control of his lawfully held possessions. It recognized a special Fifth Amendment interest in the privacy of documents, viewing the forced production of their contents as equivalent to requiring a subpoenaed party to reveal that content through his testimony." (footnote omitted)).

[3] See Samuel A. Alito, Jr., Documents and the Privilege Against Self–Incrimination, 48 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 27, 39–40 (1986) ("Boyd 's property-based interpretation of the fourth amendment could not accommodate the needs of modern law enforcement or modern concepts of privacy."). See generally 1 Sara Sun Beale et al., Grand Jury Law and Practice § 6:14 (2d ed. 2008) (describing the erosion of Boyd).

[4] The court notes that this compelled self-incriminating admission is different from a non-self-incriminating admission that the regulatory program is applicable to taxpayers who have an interest in foreign bank accounts. The self-incriminating admission that the Fifth Amendment protects here is a compelled admission by T.C. to the grand jury that reveals he himself has an interest in a foreign bank account and is thus one of those taxpayers.

[5] If the Government could discover the information from a third-party or through other investigation, such as from a foreign bank, if any, in which T.C. has invested. The Government may argue that it is difficult to obtain the information from a third-party in this case, given that all of the relevant information is overseas and protected by foreign banks. The Government's difficulty in otherwise obtaining the subpoenaed information, however, is not a reason to eviscerate an individual's Fifth Amendment protection.

[6] The private nature of opening a foreign bank account also casts doubt on whether the account records meet the "public aspects" prong of the Shapiro three-part test. The Seventh Circuit has stated that records have "public aspects" if they "are usually known to the public in general rather than records which are essentially personal to the individual." United States v. Campos–Serrano, 430 F.2d 173, 176 (7th Cir.1970). The fact that an individual maintains a foreign bank account and the records thereof are not "usually known to the public in general."

End of Document

2015 WL 4275183
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Stephen M. KERR, Michael Quiel, Defendants.

No. CR–11–02385–PHX–JAT
|
Signed July 14, 2015
|
Filed July 15, 2015

Attorneys and Law Firms

Monica B. Edelstein, US Attorneys Office, Phoenix, AZ, Timothy J. Stockwell, US Dept. of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Michael D. Kimerer, Rhonda Elaine Neff, Kimerer & Derrick PC, Phoenix, AZ, Joy Malby Bertrand, Joy Bertrand Esq LLC, Scottsdale, AZ, Michael Louis Minns, Ashley Blair Arnett, Minns Law Firm, Houston, TX, Michael Ware, Michael Ware, Ft. Worth, TX, for Defendants.

ORDER

JAMES A. TEILBORG, Senior District Judge

1 Pending before the Court is Defendants' Joint Motion for New Trial or to Dismiss. (Doc. 454).

I. Background

On December 8, 2011, a grand jury indicted Michael Quiel ("Quiel") and Stephen Kerr ("Kerr") on a variety of crimes concerning failure to pay taxes on funds held in Swiss corporations. (Doc. 3). Each Defendant was charged with one count of Conspiracy to Defraud the United States, two counts of Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns, and two counts of Willful Failure to File Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR"). (Id.).

Defendants were not alone in the indictment. Christopher Rusch ("Rusch"), Defendants' former attorney, was charged with one count of Conspiracy to Defraud the United States. (Id.). An additional charge of failure to file an FBAR was later added. (Doc. 331 at 1607). Rusch entered into a plea agreement, which compelled him to testify at the request of the United States. (Doc. 415).

A month-long jury trial began in early March. (Doc. 221); (Doc. 281). At trial, Rusch testified against Defendants. (Doc. 331). On direct examination, he admitted to engaging in illegal activity by improperly structuring the Swiss businesses controlled by Quiel and Kerr. (Id. at 1675). On cross-examination, Defendants introduced evidence to impeach Rusch. (Doc. 454 at 5); (Doc. 457 at 2).

Both Defendants were acquitted of Count One (Conspiracy to Defraud the United States). Kerr was found guilty of Counts Two & Three (Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns for 2007 and 2008) and Counts Six & Seven (Willful Failure to File FBARs for 2007 and 2008). (Doc. 281). Quiel was found guilty of Counts Four & Five (Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns for 2007 and 2008). (Id.). In addition, the jury hung as to Counts Eight & Nine (Willful Failure to File FBARs for 2007 and 2008). (Id.).

Following the verdict, Defendants were each sentenced to ten months in prison. (Doc. 373); (Doc. 376). Subsequently, Defendants moved for acquittal or alternatively a new trial. (Doc. 299); (Doc. 300). These motions were denied. (Doc. 345); (Doc. 346).

On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the convictions. United States v. Quiel, 595 F. App'x 692 (9th Cir.2014), cert. denied, No. 14–1237, 2015 WL 1692989 (May 18, 2015). Now, Defendants request a new trial or alternatively an evidentiary hearing, in light of allegedly newly discovered evidence. (Doc. 454). Defendants have three different pieces of allegedly newly discovered evidence.

A. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

First, Defendants claim that evidence has emerged showing that Rusch engaged in fraudulent activities, before and during the trial, under the alias Christian Reeves. (Id. at 1–9). Defendants contend that examples of this fraud include Rusch: blogging as Reeves in early 2013, (Id. at 4); posting on ex-pat investing sites as Reeves starting in 2012, (Id. at 6); giving tax advice as Reeves, (Id.); podcasting as Reeves, (Id.); marketing himself as a rehabilitated lawyer, (Id.); and publishing an offshore tax guide after pleading guilty, but before trial, (Id.). Furthermore, Defendants allege that Rusch has admitted to being Reeves. (Doc. 459 at 3).

2 Defendants argue that they could have used the evidence of Rusch's ongoing fraud to impeach his testimony at trial. (Doc. 454 at 13). Defendants further claim that if the Government was aware of Rusch's illegal activity, but did not disclose this information to Defendants, then a Brady violation has occurred, justifying a new trial. (Id. at 12–14).

Defendants further argue that even if the Government was not aware of this information, the newly discovered evidence, of its own force, justifies a new trial. (Id. at 14).

B. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Second, Defendants allege that the Government has agreed "to look the other way while its witness commits additional crimes." (Id. at 10). Defendants claim that the Government has given Rusch a "fresh start" by allowing him to continue his allegedly fraudulent activity. (Doc. 458 at 7). Defendants argue that this "fresh start" is the product of an undisclosed agreement between Rusch and the Government. (Id. at 7) ("Brady and due process require that the Government turn over information about the full benefits and promises that the witness received for his co-operation, to include non-enforcement of civil penalties.") (citing United States v. Shaffer, 789 F.2d 682 (9th Cir.1986)).

C. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

Third, Defendants allege that Pierre Gabris, a Swiss-national and alleged participant in the structuring of the Swiss accounts, would testify that "he did not prepare or send trial exhibits 51 and 52," which were offered into evidence on Rusch's re-direct. (Id. at 15). These exhibits contain emails originally sent from Gabris to Rusch, who forwarded them to Defendants, regarding accounting statements from Defendants' Swiss corporations. (Doc. 335 at 2533). Defendants argue that these allegedly forged documents provide further support for a new trial. (Doc. 454 at 15–16).

II. Applicable Legal Standards

Defendants claim that their newly discovered evidence satisfies the Rule 33 new trial test. (Id. at 14). This test requires Defendants to show: (1) that the evidence is newly discovered; (2) that Defendants' failure to discover the evidence sooner was not the result of a lack of diligence; (3) that the evidence is material; (4) that the evidence is neither cumulative nor merely impeaching; and (5) that a new trial would likely result in acquittal. United States v. Kulczyk, 931 F.2d 542, 548 (9th Cir.1991).

In addition, Defendants argue that they are due a new trial under Brady v. Maryland. (Doc. 454 at 12?14); Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87 (1963). To prove a Brady violation, Defendants must show that: (1) the evidence is newly discovered; (2) the evidence was suppressed by the prosecution; and (3) the evidence was material. United States v. Williams, 547 F.3d 1187, 1202 (9th Cir.2008).

Finally, Defendants allege that trial exhibits 51 and 52 are forgeries. (Doc. 454 at 15). While Defendants assert that these forgeries entitle them to a new trial under Brady, this evidence is properly considered under Napue v. Illinois, because the evidence was not suppressed.[1] Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264 (1959). To establish a Napue violation, Defendants must prove that: (1) there was false evidence; (2) the prosecution knew, or should have known that the evidence was false; and (3) the evidence was material. Towery v. Schriro, 641 F.3d 300, 308 (9th Cir.2010) (citing United States v. Zuno ? Arce, 339 F.3d 886, 889 (9th Cir.2003)).

3 Because both Brady and Napue violations are implicated by Defendants' allegations, the Court will use a two-step test described in further detail below, see supra Part II.D, to determine materiality.

Finally, to determine whether Defendants are entitled to an evidentiary hearing, the Court will presume that their allegations are true.

A. Rule 33 New Trial Test

Under Rule 33, a defendant may "move for a new trial on newly discovered evidence" within three years of the verdict. Fed.R.Crim.P. 33. The Court may "grant a new trial if the interest of justice so requires." Id. These motions "are not favored by the courts and should be viewed with great caution." United States v. Marcello, 568 F.Supp. 738, 740 (C.D.Cal.1983), aff'd 731 F.2d 1354 (9th Cir.1984) (citing 3 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure: Criminal § 557 (2d ed.1982)). To obtain a new trial, Defendants must satisfy each prong of a five-part test:

> (1) the evidence must be newly discovered;
>
> (2) the failure to discover the evidence sooner must not be the result of a lack of diligence on ... [Defendants'] part;
>
> (3) the evidence must be material to the issues at trial;
>
> (4) the evidence must be neither cumulative nor merely impeaching; and
>
> (5) the evidence must indicate that a new trial would probably result in acquittal.

United States v. Kulczyk, 931 F.2d 542, 548 (9th Cir.1991).

The materiality and probability prongs are essentially the same. United States v. Krasny, 607 F.2d 840, 845 n.3 (9th Cir.1979). Accordingly, they will be treated concurrently.

1. Newly Discovered

Rule 33 requires that evidence be newly discovered. Kulczyk, 931 F.2d at 548. Evidence is not newly discovered if it "was known to, or was in the possession of, the defense" before the trial concluded. United States v. Hinkson, 585 F.3d 1247, 1284 (9th Cir.2009) (en banc) (Fletcher, J., dissenting).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud and Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Defendants allege that they discovered Rusch's fraudulent activities performed under the Reeves alias after trial. (Doc. 454 at 4). Because Defendants allegedly learned of this information after trial, the newly discovered test is satisfied.

b. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

Notwithstanding the Reeves allegation, Defendants do not allege when they learned that Gabris did not send the emails constituting trial exhibits 51 and 52. (Id. at 15). The heading above Defendants' claim reads: "The Discovery of Allegedly Forged Documents Further Provides the Basis for a New Trial." (Id.). This does not indicate when the discovery occurred. Additionally, the evidence allegedly arose from "conversations between Mr. Quiel's attorney, Mr. Gabris' attorney, and conversations between Mr. Gabris and Mr. Quiel outside the presence of Counsel"; there is no mention of when these conversations took place. (Id.). Furthermore, the Government noted the temporal-vacancy of the allegation, (Doc. 457 at 8), but Defendants failed to address this concern in their Reply, (Doc. 458).

Consequently, without a description of when this discovery was made, the Court cannot find a concrete allegation that the evidence is newly discovered. Therefore, because Defendants fail to meet their burden, the alleged evidence regarding trial exhibits 51 and 52 cannot be considered newly discovered.

2. Diligence

4 "Due diligence means ordinary, rather than extraordinary, diligence." United States v. Walker, 546 F.Supp. 805, 811 (D.Haw.1982). The trial judge "has a large discretion in ... determining what diligence is necessary." Prlia v. United States, 279 F.2d 407, 408 (9th Cir.1960). In United States v. Harrington, the court found that the movant was not diligent in obtaining photographs of the crime scene and a map of the surrounding streets because this information "could have been obtained at any time." United States v. Harrington, 410 F.3d 598, 600 (9th Cir.2005).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud and Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

While it is possible that the evidence of Rusch's alleged out-of-court activities could have been "discovered at any time" in the literal sense, this situation is distinguishable from Harrington, as the evidence in that case concerned the actual crime of which the defendant was convicted: selling LSD in that area. Id. In the present case, the proposed evidence concerns Rusch's conduct which was not associated with the activity of which Defendants were convicted. Therefore, an ordinarily-diligent defendant would not be expected to discover this evidence. Accordingly, Defendants' failure to discover this evidence in time for trial does not violate the diligence standard.

3. Cumulative/Impeachment Evidence

Generally, impeachment evidence does not justify a new trial. United States v. Davis, 960 F.2d 820, 825 (9th Cir.1992). Nevertheless, a new trial is warranted where "impeachment evidence [is] ... so powerful that, if it were to be believed by the trier of fact, it could render the witness' testimony totally incredible." Id. In these situations, the new evidence nullifies "an essential element of the government's case." Id.

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud and Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

While Defendants do describe Rusch's allegedly impeaching activity, they do not show how this evidence would negate an essential element of the Government's case. (Doc. 454). Therefore, because Defendants have not met their burden, their allegations do not warrant a new trial under Rule 33.

4. Probability of Acquittal and Materiality

Because Defendants claims do not satisfy the prior elements of this test, materiality and probability of acquittal will not be considered at this juncture.

B. Napue Test

Under Napue, "[t]he knowing use of false evidence by the state, or the failure to correct false evidence, may violate due process." Towery v. Schriro, 641 F.3d 300, 308 (9th Cir.2010) (citing Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264, 269 (1959)). To demonstrate a Napue violation, the movant must show that: "(1) the testimony (or evidence) was actually false, (2) the prosecution knew or should have known that the testimony was actually false, and (3) ... the false testimony was material." Id. (quoting United States v. Zuno ? Arce, 339 F.3d 886, 889 (9th Cir.2003)).

1. Falsity

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud and Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Defendants do not allege that Rusch's illegal activity or the undisclosed leniency agreement caused false evidence or perjury to be introduced at trial. (Doc. 454). Therefore, these claims do not satisfy Napue.

b. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

In contrast, Defendants do allege that trial exhibits 51 and 52 were falsified. (Doc. 454 at 15). Defendants claim that Gabris will testify that he did not send the emails to Rusch that constitute trial exhibits 51 and 52. (Id.). However, even if true, this does not establish that the evidence itself was false.

5 Allegedly, trial exhibits 51 and 52 were used to " 'prove' distributions that were never made." (Doc. 454 at 15). Defendants claim that this evidence "supported the 'nominee theory' " of structuring, whereby an American impermissibly controls a foreign company through a nominee without paying taxes on funds held in that company. Defendants allege that had the jury known that the exhibits were falsified, they may have "acquitted Quiel on the tax charges." (Id. 16–17). Exhibit 51 is an email from Gabris to Rusch containing an accounting statement for the Swiss business accounts owned by Quiel. (Doc. 335 at 2534). This email was subsequently forwarded to Quiel. (Id.). Exhibit 52 was not mentioned after it was introduced into evidence. (See id.).

When the exhibits were introduced, defense counsel objected, arguing that "[t]hey're beyond the scope. And they're the hearsay statements of Mr. Pierre Gabris, who [defense counsel] will not have an opportunity to cross-examine." (Doc. 335 at 2534). In response, the prosecutor argued that during cross-examination Rusch was questioned "about providing information to the defendants. The implication was [that] he did not actually provide anything to defendants. These are being offered to rebut that. And they're not being offered for the truth of anything in the document, but just to their existence." (Id.). After hearing the explanation, the Court overruled the objection, and the evidence was admitted. (Id.).

Defendants do not contend that they were never forwarded the emails by Rusch. (See Doc. 454). Therefore, the evidence, which was used to establish that Rusch sent Quiel financial information regarding Quiel's Swiss accounts, is not changed by the fact that Gabris allegedly did not send the original emails to Rusch.

For evidence to be false under Napue, the falsity must be material to the purpose for which the evidence was used. Cf. United States v. Vozzella, 124 F.3d 389, 392 (2d Cir.1997) (emphasis added) (finding falsity where "records were known to be partially false and were presented to the jury in a fashion so highly misleading as to amount to falsity regarding their veracity as a whole."). Where evidence is partially false, but the false portion of the evidence has no bearing on the purpose for which the evidence is used, there is no risk that "a state has contrived a conviction through the pretense of a trial which in truth is but used as a means of depriving a defendant of liberty through a deliberate deception of court and jury." Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U.S. 103, 112 (1935). Consequently, insofar as trial exhibit 51 was used to support Rusch's testimony that he sent an email containing Swiss accounting statements to Quiel, the evidence was not false.

2. Knowledge and Materiality

Because Defendants fail to show that any of the allegedly newly discovered evidence was falsified, they fail to satisfy the Napue test. Therefore knowledge and materiality do not need to be considered.

C. Brady Test

Under Brady, "the suppression by the prosecution of evidence favorable to an accused upon request violates due process where the evidence is material either to guilt or to punishment, irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution." Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87 (1963). For a Brady violation to occur, three elements must be present: "(1) the evidence at issue must be favorable to the accused, either because it is exculpatory, or because it is impeaching; (2) that evidence must have been suppressed by the State, either willfully or inadvertently; and (3) prejudice must have ensued." United States v. Williams, 547 F.3d 1187, 1202 (9th Cir.2008) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Strickler v. Greene, 527 U.S. 263, 281?82 (1999)). The Defendants have the burden of establishing the presence of these elements. United States v. Lopez, 577 F.3d 1053, 1059 (9th Cir.2009).

1. Favorable Evidence

6 Under Brady, newly discovered evidence that is favorable to the defense must be admissible, or must be able to impeach the Government's witness. United States v. Kohring, 637 F.3d 895, 903 (9th Cir.2010).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

Defendants wish to introduce evidence allegedly showing that Rusch engaged in fraudulent activities before and during trial. (Doc. 454). This evidence is both admissible and useful for impeachment. Fed.R.Evid. 608 (allowing in extrinsic evidence on cross-examination if it is "probative of the character for truthfulness or untruthfulness of" the witness). Therefore, because the evidence is admissible as impeachment material, it is favorable under Brady.

b. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Defendants further allege that the Government has made an undisclosed agreement for leniency with Rusch. (Doc. 458 at 7). Such evidence would be admissible at trial and would be useful for impeaching Rusch, therefore it is favorable under Brady.

c. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

Finally, Defendants claim that trial exhibits 51 and 52 were forged, and thus constitute false evidence. (Doc. 454 at 15). Such evidence is favorable because either Gabris's testimony that he did not send the emails would be admissible or the emails themselves might be inadmissible.

2. Suppression

The Government must disclose any exculpatory evidence within its possession, regardless of whether Defendants requested such evidence. Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 433 (1995) (citing United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 682 (1985)). This duty applies even if those "acting on the government's behalf" have exculpatory evidence without the prosecutor's knowledge. Id. at 437. A prosecutor's failure to disclose an agreement with a coconspirator in exchange for their testimony at trial constitutes suppression under Brady. Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154?55 (1972).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

Defendants assert that the Government may have known of Rusch's illegal activity, and that this information was not disclosed to Defendants. (Doc. 454 at 9–10). They claim that without an evidentiary hearing the Court cannot know whether the Government possessed, but did not disclose, this evidence. (Id.). If Defendants allegations are true, the suppression element of Brady is satisfied.

b. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Furthermore, Defendants allege that the Government made an undisclosed agreement with Rusch to treat him with leniency after trial. (Doc. 458 at 7). Failure to disclose agreements of leniency satisfy the suppression prong of Brady. Therefore, if true, this allegation establishes suppression.

c. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

Finally, Defendants allege that the Government may have known that trial exhibits 51 and 52 were forged, and that by not disclosing this information, the Government violated Brady. (Doc. 454 at 15–16). Defendants are not alleging that the Government suppressed the exhibits, by that the evidence was forged. Therefore, this evidence does not satisfy the suppression prong of Brady.

3. Materiality

Evidence is material "only if there is a reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different." Bagley, 463 U.S. at 682. The reasonable probability standard does not require the defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that "disclosure of the suppressed evidence would have resulted ... in acquittal," but merely that suppression "undermines confidence in the outcome of the trial." Kyles, 514 U.S. at 434. The Court "may find a 'reasonable probability' even where the remaining evidence would have been sufficient to convict the defendant." Jackson v. Brown, 513 F.3d 1057, 1071 (9th Cir.2008) (citing Strickler v. Greene, 527 U.S. 263, 290 (1999)).

7 Newly discovered impeachment evidence is merely cumulative, and does not violate Brady, where a witness's credibility was eroded by "significant impeachment evidence" at trial. Morris v. Ylst, 447 F.3d 735, 741 (9th Cir.2006); accord United States v. Endicott, 869 F.2d 452, 456 (9th Cir.1989) (holding that newly discovered impeachment evidence "does not warrant a new trial when the evidence would not have affected the jury's assessment of the witness' credibility and when the witness was subjected to vigorous cross-examination.") (citing United States v. Steel, 759 F.2d 706, 714 (9th Cir.1985)). However, "impeachment evidence ... [is] not 'merely cumulative' where the withheld evidence was of a different character than evidence already known to the defense." United States v. Kohring, 637 F.3d 895, 904 (9th Cir.2010) (quoting Banks v. Dretke, 540 U.S. 668, 702–03 (2004)).

Brady claims are considered "collectively, but ... [the Court] 'must first evaluate the tendency and force of each item of suppressed evidence and then evaluate its cumulative effect at the end of the discussion.' " Id. at 903 (quoting Barker v. Fleming, 423 F.3d 1085, 1094 (9th Cir.2005)).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

First, Defendants claim that Rusch engaged in fraudulent activities before and during the trial without Defendants' knowledge. (Doc. 454 at 6–9). Allegedly, this evidence could have been used to impeach Rusch. (Id.) The Government argues that Rusch was already subjected to significant impeachment evidence at trial, including Defendants: "pointing out inconsistencies in [Rusch's] prior statements," emphasizing Rusch's "motives as a cooperator," extracting "concessions concerning his violations of the ethical rules and rules of professional conduct," using "surreptitious recordings," and calling "a legal ethics expert." (Doc. 457 at 5). As such, the Government claims, further impeachment evidence would be merely cumulative. (Id.).

There is no proposed evidence indicating that any of Rusch's activities as Reeves before or during trial were criminal in nature. While Defendants argue that Rusch has committed a felony by practicing law as a disbarred attorney, and has committed fraud by holding himself out as a rehabilitated attorney, (Doc. 454 at 11), neither of these activities occurred before or during the trial. In fact, as Defendants note, Rusch was not prohibited from practicing law until June 21, 2013, (Id. at 6), while the verdict in this case was rendered on April 11, 2013, (Doc. 288); (Doc. 289). There is no indication that Rusch was doing anything more under the Reeve's pseudonym than what he was doing prior to his involvement with Defendants: providing tax advice for U.S. citizens seeking to do business and bank overseas. Done properly, this activity is not illegal.

Additionally, there is nothing inherently fraudulent with using a pseudonym. Therefore, it is not clear in what manner Defendants wish to use Rusch's activities before and during the trial as impeachment evidence. To the extent that they wish to reinforce his engagement with offshore tax schemes, such evidence would be merely cumulative, as he readily admitted to this sort of activity on direct. (Doc. 331 at 1613).

To the extent that Defendants allege that Rusch's engaged in post-trial illegal activity, such evidence is irrelevant for Brady purposes, because the Government did not possess, at or before trial, evidence it could suppress.

b. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Second, Defendants allege that the Government has allowed Rusch to engage in illegal activity without consequence as the result of an undisclosed agreement that prompted Rusch's trial testimony. (Doc. 458 at 7). The Government argues that "at no time was the United States aware of Rusch's post-trial conduct except with regard to the information provided by the U.S. Probation Department." (Doc. 460 at 2). Given that the Government did not directly deny the existence of an agreement, it is possible that there was an agreement for leniency, even without the Government's present awareness of Rusch's post-trial activities. Therefore, taking this allegation as true, a material violation under Brady has occurred. Brady. Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 155 (1972) (finding that an undisclosed agreement for leniency with an important witness violated Brady). However, as will be discussed below, Defendants offer no evidence that such an agreement actually exists.

D. Brady/Napue Two–Step Materiality

8 While Brady and Napue both have their own tests, they each require materiality. If Brady and Napue violations are both alleged, their materiality should be considered collectively. Jackson v. Brown, 513 F.3d 1057, 1076 (9th Cir.2008). However, because Napue 's materiality test is easier to meet, Napue violations must be considered first, as not to "overweight" the Brady violations. Id. This process is performed in two steps.

First, the Court weighs the Napue violations and asks whether there is "any reasonable likelihood that the false testimony could have affected the judgment of the jury." Id. If the answer is yes, then reversal of judgment is the proper remedy. Id. If not, then the Napue and Brady violations are considered collectively. Id. Under this second test, the Court asks whether "there is a reasonable probability that, but for [the prosecutor's] unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different." Id. If the answer to this question is yes, the remedy is generally a new trial. Id.

While both the allegedly forged trial exhibits and the allegations regarding Rusch engaging in fraud do not satisfy the Napue and Brady tests, the allegation regarding an undisclosed agreement satisfies Brady. No weight can be given to the allegations that do not satisfy either test. Therefore, the only question in this consideration is whether there is a reasonable probability that, but for the undisclosed agreement, the outcome of the trial would have been different. Because the Supreme Court has determined that the nondisclosure of an agreement for leniency with an important witness satisfies this test, Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972), materiality under the dual Brady/Giglio test would be satisfied if Defendants' allegations are true. Again, however, Defendants offer no evidence that such an agreement actually exists.

III. Evidentiary Hearing

Generally, motions for a new trial are "decided solely upon affidavits." United States v. Colacurcio, 499 F.2d 1401, 1406 n.7 (9th Cir.1974). However, "[t]he decision on whether to hold a hearing or to proceed by affidavit is within the sound discretion of the trial court." United States v. Nace, 561 F.2d 763, 772 (9th Cir.1977). An evidentiary hearing should only be granted if the facts alleged, taken as true, would constitute grounds for a new trial. See United States v. Scott, 521 F.2d 1188, 1196 (9th Cir.1975) (finding that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in denying an evidentiary hearing where "there was nothing to be gained by such a hearing."). "Evidentiary hearings ... are not meant to be 'fishing expeditions for ... [Defendants] to explore their case in search of its existence.' " Morgan v. Gonzales, 495 F.3d 1084, 1091 (9th Cir.2007) (quoting Rich v. Calderon, 187 F.3d 1064, 1067 (9th Cir.1999)).

Defendants provide no affidavit to bolster their allegation that the Government has made an undisclosed agreement with Rusch. (Doc. 454). On the other hand, the Government does not explicitly deny Defendants' allegations, but rather sidesteps the issue by stating that they have not monitored Rusch's post-trial conduct. (Doc. 460 at 1–2). The Government's statements do not preclude the existence of an undisclosed agreement.[2] However, ultimately, absent an affidavit, Defendants do nothing more than speculate.

9 Defendants' failure to include an affidavit does not give the Court the choice between holding an evidentiary hearing or making a decision based upon affidavits; it leaves only one option. Allowing an evidentiary hearing in this case would encourage Defendants in the future, uncertain of their case for newly discovered evidence, to fail to include affidavits in an attempt to force the Court to allow an evidentiary hearing. The Court does not wish to create such an incentive. Therefore, Defendants' motion for an evidentiary hearing is denied, because on this record it would be nothing more than a fishing expedition.

Thus, although Defendants' claim that Rusch has an ongoing, undisclosed leniency agreement with the Government would entitle Defendants to relief, because Defendants offer no affidavit or other evidence showing that such an agreement exists, and the Government has effectively denied the existence of an agreement, the Court will not hold an evidentiary hearing or grant a new trial. Indeed, Defendants do not even suggest what witnesses they would call or what evidence they would produce at an evidentiary hearing that would substantiate the allegation that Rusch has an agreement with the Government beyond the plea agreement already disclosed. Thus, the Court will not allow a fishing expedition on this topic.

IV. Conclusion

A. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

First, this evidence does not satisfy the Rule 33 test, because it is impeachment evidence that does not negate an essential element of the Government's case.

Second, this Court already determined this evidence was immaterial under Brady, because there is no alleged evidence regarding Rusch's conduct, both before and during trial, that would constitute more than merely cumulative impeachment material.

Third, this evidence was determined to not satisfy the Napue test, because there is no allegation that this evidence resulted in false evidence or perjured testimony being introduced at trial.

B. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

First, this evidence fails the Rule 33 test because it is impeachment evidence which does not negate an essential element of the Government's case.

Second, this evidence, taken as true, satisfies the Brady test, because the existence of an undisclosed agreement is material under Brady. Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154–55 (1972). However, Defendants have offered no evidence beyond their speculation that any such agreement exists; therefore, Defendants are not entitled to relief as to this claim.

Third, this evidence fails the Napue test, because there is no allegation that this evidence resulted in false evidence or perjured testimony being introduced at trial.

C. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

First, the allegations regarding trial exhibits 51 and 52 being forged do not satisfy the Rule 33 test, because there is no allegation that this evidence is newly discovered.

Second, this evidence does not satisfy the Brady test, because there is no allegation that this evidence was suppressed.

Third, this evidence does not satisfy the Napue test. This evidence was introduced for the purpose of supporting the proposition that Rusch sent an email containing financial statements to Quiel. For this purpose, the evidence was not false, and thus fails to satisfy the falsity prong of the Napue test.

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that Defendants Joint Motion for New Trial or to Dismiss and Request for an Evidentiary Hearing, (Doc. 454), is denied.

All Citations

Not Reported in Fed. Supp., 2015 WL 4275183

Footnotes

[1] The Court notes that neither party cited the Napue test with regard to trial exhibits 51 and 52. While Brady and Napue violations can overlap, see Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972) (finding both violations where the prosecution did not disclose an informant-witness's plea deal and did not correct the witness who committed perjury by denying the existence of a plea deal while testifying), the essence of Defendants' allegation is that this evidence was false; not that it was suppressed. Therefore, this evidence is properly considered under Napue; not Brady.

[2] Specifically, the Government does not expressly deny that the reason it has not monitored Rusch's post-trial activity is because of an undisclosed agreement to not monitor him and grant him leniency in his future dealings. For purposes of this order, the Court has interpreted the Government's statements as a denial of having any undisclosed agreement regarding future activities with Rusch. If the Government actually has any such agreement, and has artfully worded its representations to not directly address Defendants' allegations, the Government is ordered to correct the Court's interpretation immediately and the Court would deem any failure to correct the Court's understanding to be a fraud on the Court and a Giglio violation.

End of Document

2017 WL 4773358
United States District Court,
N.D. California.

John C. HOM, John C. Hom
& Associates, Inc., Plaintiffs,
v.
UNITED STATES of America, Defendant.

No. C 17-02525 WHA
|
Signed 09/22/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

John C. Hom, San Rafael, CA, pro se.

Laura C. Beckerman, Robert Silverblatt, US Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Defendant.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS

William Alsup, United States District Judge

INTRODUCTION

1 In this "re-filed" pro se action against the United States for unauthorized disclosures of plaintiffs' tax information, the United States moves to dismiss. The United State's motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

STATEMENT

Pro se plaintiffs John Hom and John C. Hom & Associates, Inc. "re-filed" this action for unauthorized disclosure of tax information in May 2017. The complaint in this action is a facsimile of a complaint plaintiffs filed in May 2013 (No. 13–cv–02243 WHA), which was dismissed in its entirety for failure to state a claim (id. Dkt. No. 19). Plaintiffs appealed that dismissal, and on appeal this Court's decision was affirmed (id. Dkt. No. 27).

Plaintiffs now re-file their complaint claiming that a change in law and the discovery of additional facts warrant re-examination of their claims. Defendant, the United States of America, moves to dismiss on the grounds that res judicata bars plaintiffs claims. For the reasons herein, the United State's motion is GRANTED.

ANALYSIS

1. RES JUDICATA.

Res judicata, also known as claim preclusion, bars litigation in a subsequent action of any claims that were raised or could have been raised in the prior action. Owens v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc., 244 F.3d 708, 713 (9th Cir. 2001). Res judicata applies when there is: "(1) an identity of claims; (2) a final judgment on the merits; and (3) identity or privity between parties." Stewart v. U.S. Bancorp, 297 F.3d 953, 956 (9th Cir. 2002).

Here, all the requirements of res judicata are met. Plaintiffs are the same parties that filed the 2013 action against the same defendant, the United States. That action contained identical claims (No. 13–cv–02243 WHA, Dkt. No. 1). The action was dismissed in its entirety (id. Dkt. No. 19), and final judgment was entered for the United States (id. Dkt. No. 20). Plaintiffs then appealed, and our court of appeals affirmed the dismissal (id. Dkt. No. 27). Therefore, barring an exception, plaintiffs are bound by the earlier determination, and their claims must be dismissed.

Plaintiffs argue that res judicata does not apply here due to (1) a change in the law and (2) discovery of previously unavailable material facts (Opp. at 1). "[I]t is the general rule that res judicata is no defense where between the time of the first judgment and the second there has been an intervening decision or a change in the law creating an altered situation." State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Duel, 324 U.S. 154, 162 (1945); see also Clifton v. Attorney Gen. of State of Cal., 997 F.2d 660, 663 (9th Cir. 1993). No such rule applies to the discovery of new facts, however, and typically "An action that merely alleges new facts in support of a claim that has gone to judgment in a previous litigation will be subject to claim preclusion." Gospel Missions of America v. City of Los Angeles, 328 F.3d 548, 558 (9th Cir. 2003).

Here, there have been no relevant changes in the law. Plaintiffs argue that two decisions, Taylor v. United States, No. 14-12446 (11th Cir. 2013), and United States v. Hom, No. 14-16214 (9th Cir. 2016), have changed the law in such a way that plaintiffs' claims for unauthorized disclosure are now viable. As an initial matter, plaintiffs already presented Taylor to our court of appeals in a supplemental authority letter (No. 13-17195, Dkt. No. 24), and our court of appeals, with full notice of Taylor, affirmed the dismissal of plaintiffs' action. Plaintiffs now seek to overturn our court of appeals' affirmance by relying upon this same unpublished out-of-circuit 2013 decision. But Taylor does not lend support to plaintiffs' argument. There, the Eleventh Circuit held that an IRS agent's compliance with the Internal Revenue Manual is relevant to determination of whether he can invoke a good-faith defense in a wrongful disclosure action. Taylor, No. 14-12446 at 8. The good-faith exception, however, was not at issue in this action. Instead, the order dismissing plaintiffs' claims found that, under Section 6103 of Title 26 of the United States Code, the disclosures were lawful (see No. 13–cv–02243, Dkt. No. 19).

2 Nor does our court of appeals' decision in plaintiff Hom's Foreign Bank Account Report ("FBAR") action, United States v. Hom, No. 14-16214 No. 14-16214, signal a change in the law. That action dealt with Hom's alleged failure to file his FBAR tax forms, which is irrelevant to this action, in which plaintiffs are alleging the IRS improperly disclosed their tax information.

Finally, even if plaintiffs could overcome a prior final determination by presenting new facts, they have failed to present any facts that have legal bearing on this action, or any potential to change the outcome here. Indeed, the primary "fact" that plaintiffs rely upon is the Aloe Vera decision, which the order dismissing plaintiffs' 2013 action addressed and distinguished (No. 13–cv–02243 WHA, Dkt. No. 19 at 3–4), and which our court of appeals likewise considered in affirming that order (see No. 13-17195, Dkt. No. 9). The March 2017 unpublished decision in Aloe Vera, No. 15-15672 Dkt. No. 11-1, which plaintiffs cite also lends no support. It is a narrow holding concerning a damages issue that has nothing to do with this action.

Plaintiffs are barred from re-litigating this action by the doctrine of res judicata. Their arguments have already been considered and rejected. Plaintiffs offer no grounds for granting them a second bite at the apple. Accordingly, their action is DISMISSED.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' claims are barred by res judicata. Accordingly, the United State's motion to dismiss is GRANTED. Plaintiffs' action is DISMISSED. The Clerk SHALL CLOSE THE FILE.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 4773358, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-5872

End of Document

2016 WL 3947102
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Stephen M. KERR, Michael Quiel, Defendants.

No. CR-11-02385-PHX-JAT
|
Signed 07/22/2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

Monica B. Edelstein, US Attorneys Office, Phoenix, AZ, Timothy J. Stockwell, US Dept. of Justice, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Michael D. Kimerer, Rhonda Elaine Neff, Kimerer & Derrick PC, Phoenix, AZ, Joy Malby Bertrand, Joy Bertrand Esq. LLC, Scottsdale, AZ, Michael Louis Minns, Ashley Blair Arnett, Minns Law Firm PLC, Houston, TX, Michael Ware, Ft. Worth, TX, Barbara Howe Murray, Michael L. Lipman, Duane Morris LLP, San Diego, CA, for Defendants.

ORDER

James A. Teilborg, Senior United States District Judge

1 On July 14, 2015, this Court issued an Order denying Defendant Kerr's and Defendant Quiel's (Defendants) motion for new trial. Defendants appealed that Order. Defendants now ask this Court to accept remand from the Court of Appeals to consider what Defendants claim is even more evidence in support of the previous motion for new trial (which itself was supplemented). The Court's prior Order stated as follows: [1]

> Pending before the Court is Defendants' Joint Motion for New Trial or to Dismiss. (Doc. 454).
>
> I. Background
>
> On December 8, 2011, a grand jury indicted Michael Quiel ("Quiel") and Stephen Kerr ("Kerr") on a variety of crimes concerning failure to pay taxes on funds held in Swiss corporations. (Doc. 3). Each Defendant was charged with one count of Conspiracy to Defraud the United States, two counts of Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns, and two counts of Willful Failure to File Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR"). (Id.).

Defendants were not alone in the indictment. Christopher Rusch ("Rusch"), Defendants' former attorney, was charged with one count of Conspiracy to Defraud the United States. (Id.). An additional charge of failure to file an FBAR was later added. (Doc. 331 at 1607). Rusch entered into a plea agreement, which compelled him to testify at the request of the United States. (Doc. 415).

A month-long jury trial began in early March. (Doc. 221); (Doc. 281). At trial, Rusch testified against Defendants. (Doc. 331). On direct examination, he admitted to engaging in illegal activity by improperly structuring the Swiss businesses controlled by Quiel and Kerr. (Id. at 1675). On cross-examination, Defendants introduced evidence to impeach Rusch. (Doc. 454 at 5); (Doc. 457 at 2).

Both Defendants were acquitted of Count One (Conspiracy to Defraud the United States). Kerr was found guilty of Counts Two & Three (Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns for 2007 and 2008) and Counts Six & Seven (Willful Failure to File FBARs for 2007 and 2008). (Doc. 281). Quiel was found guilty of Counts Four & Five (Willful Subscription to False Individual Income Tax Returns for 2007 and 2008). (Id.). In addition, the jury hung as to Counts Eight & Nine (Willful Failure to File FBARs for 2007 and 2008). (Id.).

Following the verdict, Defendants were each sentenced to ten months in prison. (Doc. 373); (Doc. 376). Subsequently, Defendants moved for acquittal or alternatively a new trial. (Doc. 299); (Doc. 300). These motions were denied. (Doc. 345); (Doc. 346).

On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the convictions. United States v. Quiel, 595 Fed.Appx. 692 (9th Cir. 2014), cert. denied, No. 14—1237, 2015 WL 1692989 (May 18, 2015). Now, Defendants request a new trial or alternatively an evidentiary hearing, in light of allegedly newly discovered evidence. (Doc. 454). Defendants have three different pieces of allegedly newly discovered evidence.

A. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

2 First, Defendants claim that evidence has emerged showing that Rusch engaged in fraudulent activities, before and during the trial, under the alias Christian Reeves. (Id. at 1—9). Defendants contend that examples of this fraud include Rusch: blogging as Reeves in early 2013, (Id. at 4); posting on ex-pat investing sites as Reeves starting in 2012, (Id. at 6); giving tax advice as Reeves, (Id.); podcasting as Reeves, (Id.); marketing himself as a rehabilitated lawyer, (Id.); and publishing an offshore tax guide after pleading guilty, but before trial, (Id.). Furthermore, Defendants allege that Rusch has admitted to being Reeves. (Doc. 459 at 3).

Defendants argue that they could have used the evidence of Rusch's ongoing fraud to impeach his testimony at trial. (Doc. 454 at 13). Defendants further claim that if the Government was aware of Rusch's illegal activity, but did not disclose this information to Defendants, then a Brady violation has occurred, justifying a new trial. (Id. at 12—14).

Defendants further argue that even if the Government was not aware of this information, the newly discovered evidence, of its own force, justifies a new trial. (Id. at 14).

B. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Second, Defendants allege that the Government has agreed "to look the other way while its witness commits additional crimes." (Id. at 10). Defendants claim that the Government has given Rusch a "fresh start" by allowing him to continue his allegedly fraudulent activity. (Doc. 458 at 7). Defendants argue that this "fresh start" is the product of an undisclosed agreement between Rusch and the Government. (Id. at 7) ("Brady and due process require that the Government turn over information about the full benefits and promises that the witness received for his co-operation, to include non-enforcement of civil penalties.") (citing United States v. Shaffer, 789 F.2d 682 (9th Cir. 1986)).

C. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

Third, Defendants allege that Pierre Gabris, a Swiss-national and alleged participant in the structuring of the Swiss accounts, would testify that "he did not prepare or send trial exhibits 51 and 52," which were offered into evidence on Rusch's re-direct. (Id. at 15). These exhibits contain emails originally sent from Gabris to Rusch, who forwarded them to Defendants, regarding accounting statements from Defendants' Swiss corporations. (Doc. 335 at 2533). Defendants argue that these allegedly forged documents provide further support for a new trial. (Doc. 454 at 15—16).

II. Applicable Legal Standards

Defendants claim that their newly discovered evidence satisfies the Rule 33 new trial test. (Id. at 14). This test requires Defendants to show: (1) that the evidence is newly discovered; (2) that Defendants' failure to discover the evidence sooner was not the result of a lack of diligence; (3) that the evidence is material; (4) that the evidence is neither cumulative nor merely impeaching; and (5) that a new trial would likely result in acquittal. United States v. Kulczyk, 931 F.2d 542, 548 (9th Cir. 1991).

In addition, Defendants argue that they are due a new trial under Brady v. Maryland. (Doc. 454 at 12—14); Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87 (1963). To prove a Brady violation, Defendants must show that: (1) the evidence is newly discovered; (2) the evidence was suppressed by the prosecution; and (3) the evidence was material. United States v. Williams, 547 F.3d 1187, 1202 (9th Cir. 2008).

Finally, Defendants allege that trial exhibits 51 and 52 are forgeries. (Doc. 454 at 15). While Defendants assert that these forgeries entitle them to a new trial under Brady, this evidence is properly considered under Napue v. Illinois, because the evidence was not suppressed.[2] [footnote numbered 1 in the original order] Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264 (1959). To establish a Napue violation, Defendants must prove that: (1) there was false evidence; (2) the prosecution knew, or should have known that the evidence was false; and (3) the evidence was material. Towery v. Schriro, 641 F.3d 300, 308 (9th Cir. 2010) (citing United States v. Zuno—Arce, 339 F.3d 886, 889 (9th Cir. 2003)).

3 Because both Brady and Napue violations are implicated by Defendants' allegations, the Court will use a two-step test described in further detail below, see supra Part II.D, to determine materiality.

Finally, to determine whether Defendants are entitled to an evidentiary hearing, the Court will presume that their allegations are true.

A. Rule 33 New Trial Test

Under Rule 33, a defendant may "move for a new trial on newly discovered evidence" within three years of the verdict. Fed. R. Crim. P. 33. The Court may "grant a new trial if the interest of justice so requires." Id. These motions "are not favored by the courts and should be viewed with great caution." United States v. Marcello, 568 F. Supp. 738, 740 (C.D. Cal. 1983), aff'd 731 F.2d 1354 (9th Cir. 1984) (citing 3 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure: Criminal § 557 (2d ed. 1982)). To obtain a new trial, Defendants must satisfy each prong of a five-part test:

(1) the evidence must be newly discovered;

(2) the failure to discover the evidence sooner must not be the result of a lack of diligence on...[Defendants'] part;

(3) the evidence must be material to the issues at trial;

(4) the evidence must be neither cumulative nor merely impeaching; and

(5) the evidence must indicate that a new trial would probably result in acquittal.

United States v. Kulczyk, 931 F.2d 542, 548 (9th Cir. 1991).

The materiality and probability prongs are essentially the same. United States v. Krasny, 607 F.2d 840, 845 n.3 (9th Cir. 1979). Accordingly, they will be treated concurrently.

1. Newly Discovered

Rule 33requires that evidence be newly discovered. Kulczyk, 931 F.2d at 548. Evidence is not newly discovered if it "was known to, or was in the possession of, the defense" before the trial concluded. United States v. Hinkson, 585 F.3d 1247, 1284 (9th Cir. 2009) (en banc) (Fletcher, J., dissenting).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud and Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Defendants allege that they discovered Rusch's fraudulent activities performed under the Reeves alias after trial. (Doc. 454 at 4). Because Defendants allegedly learned of this information after trial, the newly discovered test is satisfied.

b. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

Notwithstanding the Reeves allegation, Defendants do not allege when they learned that Gabris did not send the emails constituting trial exhibits 51 and 52. (Id. at 15). The heading above Defendants' claim reads: "The Discovery of Allegedly Forged Documents Further Provides the Basis for a New Trial." (Id.). This does not indicate when the discovery occurred. Additionally, the evidence allegedly arose from "conversations between Mr. Quiel's attorney, Mr. Gabris' attorney, and conversations between Mr. Gabris and Mr. Quiel outside the presence of Counsel"; there is no mention of when these conversations took place. (Id.). Furthermore, the Government noted the temporal-vacancy of the allegation, (Doc. 457 at 8), but Defendants failed to address this concern in their Reply, (Doc. 458).

Consequently, without a description of when this discovery was made, the Court cannot find a concrete allegation that the evidence is newly discovered. Therefore, because Defendants fail to meet their burden, the alleged evidence regarding trial exhibits 51 and 52 cannot be considered newly discovered.

2. Diligence

4 "Due diligence means ordinary, rather than extraordinary, diligence." United States v. Walker, 546 F. Supp. 805, 811 (D. Haw. 1982). The trial judge "has a large discretion in...determining what diligence is necessary." Prlia v. United States, 279 F.2d 407, 408 (9th Cir. 1960). In United States v. Harrington, the court found that the movant was not diligent in obtaining photographs of the crime scene and a map of the surrounding streets because this information "could have been obtained at any time." United States v. Harrington, 410 F.3d 598, 600 (9th Cir. 2005).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud and Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

While it is possible that the evidence of Rusch's alleged out-of-court activities could have been "discovered at any time" in the literal sense, this situation is distinguishable from Harrington, as the evidence in that case concerned the actual crime of which the defendant was convicted: selling LSD in that area. Id. In the present case, the proposed evidence concerns Rusch's conduct which was not associated with the activity of which Defendants were convicted. Therefore, an ordinarily-diligent defendant would not be expected to discover this evidence. Accordingly, Defendants' failure to discover this evidence in time for trial does not violate the diligence standard.

3. Cumulative/Impeachment Evidence

Generally, impeachment evidence does not justify a new trial. United States v. Davis, 960 F.2d 820, 825 (9th Cir. 1992). Nevertheless, a new trial is warranted where "impeachment evidence [is]...so powerful that, if it were to be believed by the trier of fact, it could render the witness' testimony totally incredible." Id. In these situations, the new evidence nullifies "an essential element of the government's case." Id.

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud and Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

While Defendants do describe Rusch's allegedly impeaching activity, they do not show how this evidence would negate an essential element of the Government's case. (Doc. 454). Therefore, because Defendants have not met their burden, their allegations do not warrant a new trial under Rule 33.

4. Probability of Acquittal and Materiality

Because Defendants claims do not satisfy the prior elements of this test, materiality and probability of acquittal will not be considered at this juncture.

B. Napue Test

Under Napue, "[t]he knowing use of false evidence by the state, or the failure to correct false evidence, may violate due process." Towery v. Schriro, 641 F.3d 300, 308 (9th Cir. 2010) (citing Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264, 269 (1959)). To demonstrate a Napue violation, the movant must show that: "(1) the testimony (or evidence) was actually false, (2) the prosecution knew or should have known that the testimony was actually false, and (3)...the false testimony was material." Id. (quoting United States v. Zuno—Arce, 339 F.3d 886, 889 (9th Cir. 2003)).

1. Falsity

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud and Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Defendants do not allege that Rusch's illegal activity or the undisclosed leniency agreement caused false evidence or perjury to be introduced at trial. (Doc. 454). Therefore, these claims do not satisfy Napue.

b. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

In contrast, Defendants do allege that trial exhibits 51 and 52 were falsified. (Doc. 454 at 15). Defendants claim that Gabris will testify that he did not send the emails to Rusch that constitute trial exhibits 51 and 52. (Id.). However, even if true, this does not establish that the evidence itself was false.

5 Allegedly, trial exhibits 51 and 52 were used to " 'prove' distributions that were never made." (Doc. 454 at 15). Defendants claim that this evidence "supported the 'nominee theory' " of structuring, whereby an American impermissibly controls a foreign company through a nominee without paying taxes on funds held in that company. Defendants allege that had the jury known that the exhibits were falsified, they may have "acquitted Quiel on the tax charges." (Id. 16—17). Exhibit 51 is an email from Gabris to Rusch containing an accounting statement for the Swiss business accounts owned by Quiel. (Doc. 335 at 2534). This email was subsequently forwarded to Quiel. (Id.). Exhibit 52 was not mentioned after it was introduced into evidence. (See id.).

When the exhibits were introduced, defense counsel objected, arguing that "[t]hey're beyond the scope. And they're the hearsay statements of Mr. Pierre Gabris, who [defense counsel] will not have an opportunity to cross-examine." (Doc. 335 at 2534). In response, the prosecutor argued that during cross-examination Rusch was questioned "about providing information to the defendants. The implication was [that] he did not actually provide anything to defendants. These are being offered to rebut that. And they're not being offered for the truth of anything in the document, but just to their existence." (Id.). After hearing the explanation, the Court overruled the objection, and the evidence was admitted. (Id.).

Defendants do not contend that they were never forwarded the emails by Rusch. (See Doc. 454). Therefore, the evidence, which was used to establish that Rusch sent Quiel financial information regarding Quiel's Swiss accounts, is not changed by the fact that Gabris allegedly did not send the original emails to Rusch.

For evidence to be false under Napue, the falsity must be material to the purpose for which the evidence was used. Cf. United States v. Vozzella, 124 F.3d 389, 392 (2d Cir. 1997) (emphasis added) (finding falsity where "records were known to be partially false and were presented to the jury in a fashion so highly misleading as to amount to falsity regarding their veracity as a whole."). Where evidence is partially false, but the false portion of the evidence has no bearing on the purpose for which the evidence is used, there is no risk that "a state has contrived a conviction through the pretense of a trial which in truth is but used as a means of depriving a defendant of liberty through a deliberate deception of court and jury." Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U.S. 103, 112 (1935). Consequently, insofar as trial exhibit 51 was used to support Rusch's testimony that he sent an email containing Swiss accounting statements to Quiel, the evidence was not false.

2. Knowledge and Materiality

Because Defendants fail to show that any of the allegedly newly discovered evidence was falsified, they fail to satisfy the Napue test. Therefore knowledge and materiality do not need to be considered.

C. Brady Test

Under Brady, "the suppression by the prosecution of evidence favorable to an accused upon request violates due process where the evidence is material either to guilt or to punishment, irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution." Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87 (1963). For a Brady violation to occur, three elements must be present: "(1) the evidence at issue must be favorable to the accused, either because it is exculpatory, or because it is impeaching; (2) that evidence must have been suppressed by the State, either willfully or inadvertently; and (3) prejudice must have ensued." United States v. Williams, 547 F.3d 1187, 1202 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Strickler v. Greene, 527 U.S. 263, 281—82 (1999)). The Defendants have the burden of establishing the presence of these elements. United States v. Lopez, 577 F.3d 1053, 1059 (9th Cir. 2009).

1. Favorable Evidence

6 Under Brady, newly discovered evidence that is favorable to the defense must be admissible, or must be able to impeach the Government's witness. United States v. Kohring, 637 F.3d 895, 903 (9th Cir. 2010).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

Defendants wish to introduce evidence allegedly showing that Rusch engaged in fraudulent activities before and during trial. (Doc. 454). This evidence is both admissible and useful for impeachment. Fed. R. Evid. 608 (allowing in extrinsic evidence on cross-examination if it is "probative of the character for truthfulness or untruthfulness of" the witness). Therefore, because the evidence is admissible as impeachment material, it is favorable under Brady.

b. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Defendants further allege that the Government has made an undisclosed agreement for leniency with Rusch. (Doc. 458 at 7). Such evidence would be admissible at trial and would be useful for impeaching Rusch, therefore it is favorable under Brady.

c. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

Finally, Defendants claim that trial exhibits 51 and 52 were forged, and thus constitute false evidence. (Doc. 454 at 15). Such evidence is favorable because either Gabris's testimony that he did not send the emails would be admissible or the emails themselves might be inadmissible.

2. Suppression

The Government must disclose any exculpatory evidence within its possession, regardless of whether Defendants requested such evidence. Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 433 (1995) (citing United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 682 (1985)). This duty applies even if those "acting on the government's behalf" have exculpatory evidence without the prosecutor's knowledge. Id. at 437. A prosecutor's failure to disclose an agreement with a coconspirator in exchange for their testimony at trial constitutes suppression under Brady. Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154—55 (1972).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

Defendants assert that the Government may have known of Rusch's illegal activity, and that this information was not disclosed to Defendants. (Doc. 454 at 9—10). They claim that without an evidentiary hearing the Court cannot know whether the Government possessed, but did not disclose, this evidence. (Id.). If Defendants allegations are true, the suppression element of Brady is satisfied.

b. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Furthermore, Defendants allege that the Government made an undisclosed agreement with Rusch to treat him with leniency after trial. (Doc. 458 at 7). Failure to disclose agreements of leniency satisfy the suppression prong of Brady. Therefore, if true, this allegation establishes suppression.

c. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

Finally, Defendants allege that the Government may have known that trial exhibits 51 and 52 were forged, and that by not disclosing this information, the Government violated Brady. (Doc. 454 at 15—16). Defendants are not alleging that the Government suppressed the exhibits, by that the evidence was forged. Therefore, this evidence does not satisfy the suppression prong of Brady.

3. Materiality

Evidence is material "only if there is a reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different." Bagley, 463 U.S. at 682. The reasonable probability standard does not require the defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that "disclosure of the suppressed evidence would have resulted...in acquittal," but merely that suppression "undermines confidence in the outcome of the trial." Kyles, 514 U.S. at 434. The Court "may find a 'reasonable probability' even where the remaining evidence would have been sufficient to convict the defendant." Jackson v. Brown, 513 F.3d 1057, 1071 (9th Cir. 2008) (citing Strickler v. Greene, 527 U.S. 263, 290 (1999)).

7 Newly discovered impeachment evidence is merely cumulative, and does not violate Brady, where a witness's credibility was eroded by "significant impeachment evidence" at trial. Morris v. Ylst, 447 F.3d 735, 741 (9th Cir. 2006); accord United States v. Endicott, 869 F.2d 452, 456 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that newly discovered impeachment evidence "does not warrant a new trial when the evidence would not have affected the jury's assessment of the witness' credibility and when the witness was subjected to vigorous cross-examination.") (citing United States v. Steel, 759 F.2d 706, 714 (9th Cir. 1985)). However, "impeachment evidence...[is] not 'merely cumulative' where the withheld evidence was of a different character than evidence already known to the defense." United States v. Kohring, 637 F.3d 895, 904 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Banks v. Dretke, 540 U.S. 668, 702—03 (2004)).

*Brady*claims are considered "collectively, but...[the Court] 'must first evaluate the tendency and force of each item of suppressed evidence and then evaluate its cumulative effect at the end of the discussion.' " Id. at 903 (quoting Barker v. Fleming, 423 F.3d 1085, 1094 (9th Cir. 2005)).

a. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

First, Defendants claim that Rusch engaged in fraudulent activities before and during the trial without Defendants' knowledge. (Doc. 454 at 6—9). Allegedly, this evidence could have been used to impeach Rusch. (Id.) The Government argues that Rusch was already subjected to significant impeachment evidence at trial, including Defendants: "pointing out inconsistencies in [Rusch's] prior statements," emphasizing Rusch's "motives as a cooperator," extracting "concessions concerning his violations of the ethical rules and rules of professional conduct," using "surreptitious recordings," and calling "a legal ethics expert." (Doc. 457 at 5). As such, the Government claims, further impeachment evidence would be merely cumulative. (Id.).

There is no proposed evidence indicating that any of Rusch's activities as Reeves before or during trial were criminal in nature. While Defendants argue that Rusch has committed a felony by practicing law as a disbarred attorney, and has committed fraud by holding himself out as a rehabilitated attorney, (Doc. 454 at 11), neither of these activities occurred before or during the trial. In fact, as Defendants note, Rusch was not prohibited from practicing law until June 21, 2013, (Id. at 6), while the verdict in this case was rendered on April 11, 2013, (Doc. 288); (Doc. 289). There is no indication that Rusch was doing anything more under the Reeve's pseudonym than what he was doing prior to his involvement with Defendants: providing tax advice for U.S. citizens seeking to do business and bank overseas. Done properly, this activity is not illegal.

Additionally, there is nothing inherently fraudulent with using a pseudonym. Therefore, it is not clear in what manner Defendants wish to use Rusch's activities before and during the trial as impeachment evidence. To the extent that they wish to reinforce his engagement with offshore tax schemes, such evidence would be merely cumulative, as he readily admitted to this sort of activity on direct. (Doc. 331 at 1613).

To the extent that Defendants allege that Rusch's engaged in post-trial illegal activity, such evidence is irrelevant for Brady purposes, because the Government did not possess, at or before trial, evidence it could suppress.

b. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

Second, Defendants allege that the Government has allowed Rusch to engage in illegal activity without consequence as the result of an undisclosed agreement that prompted Rusch's trial testimony. (Doc. 458 at 7). The Government argues that "at no time was the United States aware of Rusch's post-trial conduct except with regard to the information provided by the U.S. Probation Department." (Doc. 460 at 2). Given that the Government did not directly deny the existence of an agreement, it is possible that there was an agreement for leniency, even without the Government's present awareness of Rusch's post-trial activities. Therefore, taking this allegation as true, a material violation under Brady has occurred. Brady. Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 155 (1972) (finding that an undisclosed agreement for leniency with an important witness violated Brady). However, as will be discussed below, Defendants offer no evidence that such an agreement actually exists.

D. Brady/Napue Two-Step Materiality

8 While Brady and Napue both have their own tests, they each require materiality. If Brady and Napue violations are both alleged, their materiality should be considered collectively. Jackson v. Brown, 513 F.3d 1057, 1076 (9th Cir. 2008). However, because Napue's materiality test is easier to meet, Napue violations must be considered first, as not to "overweight" the Brady violations. Id. This process is performed in two steps.

First, the Court weighs the Napue violations and asks whether there is "any reasonable likelihood that the false testimony could have affected the judgment of the jury." Id. If the answer is yes, then reversal of judgment is the proper remedy. Id. If not, then the Napue and Brady violations are considered collectively. Id. Under this second test, the Court asks whether "there is a reasonable probability that, but for [the prosecutor's] unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different." Id. If the answer to this question is yes, the remedy is generally a new trial. Id.

While both the allegedly forged trial exhibits and the allegations regarding Rusch engaging in fraud do not satisfy the Napue and Brady tests, the allegation regarding an undisclosed agreement satisfies Brady. No weight can be given to the allegations that do not satisfy either test. Therefore, the only question in this consideration is whether there is a reasonable probability that, but for the undisclosed agreement, the outcome of the trial would have been different. Because the Supreme Court has determined that the nondisclosure of an agreement for leniency with an important witness satisfies this test, Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972), materiality under the dual Brady/Giglio test would be satisfied if Defendants' allegations are true. Again, however, Defendants offer no evidence that such an agreement actually exists.

III. Evidentiary Hearing

Generally, motions for a new trial are "decided solely upon affidavits." United States v. Colacurcio, 499 F.2d 1401, 1406 n.7 (9th Cir. 1974). However, "[t]he decision on whether to hold a hearing or to proceed by affidavit is within the sound discretion of the trial court." United States v. Nace, 561 F.2d 763, 772 (9th Cir. 1977). An evidentiary hearing should only be granted if the facts alleged, taken as true, would constitute grounds for a new trial. See United States v. Scott, 521 F.2d 1188, 1196 (9th Cir. 1975) (finding that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in denying an evidentiary hearing where "there was nothing to be gained by such a hearing."). "Evidentiary hearings...are not meant to be 'fishing expeditions for...[Defendants] to explore their case in search of its existence.' " Morgan v. Gonzales, 495 F.3d 1084, 1091 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting Rich v. Calderon, 187 F.3d 1064, 1067 (9th Cir. 1999)).

Defendants provide no affidavit to bolster their allegation that the Government has made an undisclosed agreement with Rusch. (Doc. 454). On the other hand, the Government does not explicitly deny Defendants' allegations, but rather sidesteps the issue by stating that they have not monitored Rusch's post-trial conduct. (Doc. 460 at 1—2). The Government's statements do not preclude the existence of an undisclosed agreement. [3] [footnote numbered 2 in the original order] However, ultimately, absent an affidavit, Defendants do nothing more than speculate.

9 Defendants' failure to include an affidavit does not give the Court the choice between holding an evidentiary hearing or making a decision based upon affidavits; it leaves only one option. Allowing an evidentiary hearing in this case would encourage Defendants in the future, uncertain of their case for newly discovered evidence, to fail to include affidavits in an attempt to force the Court to allow an evidentiary hearing. The Court does not wish to create such an incentive. Therefore, Defendants' motion for an evidentiary hearing is denied, because on this record it would be nothing more than a fishing expedition.

Thus, although Defendants' claim that Rusch has an ongoing, undisclosed leniency agreement with the Government would entitle Defendants to relief, because Defendants offer no affidavit or other evidence showing that such an agreement exists, and the Government has effectively denied the existence of an agreement, the Court will not hold an evidentiary hearing or grant a new trial. Indeed, Defendants do not even suggest what witnesses they would call or what evidence they would produce at an evidentiary hearing that would substantiate the allegation that Rusch has an agreement with the Government beyond the plea agreement already disclosed. Thus, the Court will not allow a fishing expedition on this topic.

IV. Conclusion

A. Rusch's Alleged Fraud

First, this evidence does not satisfy the Rule 33 test, because it is impeachment evidence that does not negate an essential element of the Government's case.

Second, this Court already determined this evidence was immaterial under Brady, because there is no alleged evidence regarding Rusch's conduct, both before and during trial, that would constitute more than merely cumulative impeachment material.

Third, this evidence was determined to not satisfy the Napue test, because there is no allegation that this evidence resulted in false evidence or perjured testimony being introduced at trial.

B. Rusch's Alleged Undisclosed Benefit

First, this evidence fails the Rule 33 test because it is impeachment evidence which does not negate an essential element of the Government's case.

Second, this evidence, taken as true, satisfies the Brady test, because the existence of an undisclosed agreement is material under Brady. Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154—55 (1972). However, Defendants have offered no evidence beyond their speculation that any such agreement exists; therefore, Defendants are not entitled to relief as to this claim.

Third, this evidence fails the Napue test, because there is no allegation that this evidence resulted in false evidence or perjured testimony being introduced at trial.

C. Trial Exhibits 51 and 52

First, the allegations regarding trial exhibits 51 and 52 being forged do not satisfy the Rule 33 test, because there is no allegation that this evidence is newly discovered.

Second, this evidence does not satisfy the Brady test, because there is no allegation that this evidence was suppressed.

Third, this evidence does not satisfy the Napue test. This evidence was introduced for the purpose of supporting the proposition that Rusch sent an email containing financial statements to Quiel. For this purpose, the evidence was not false, and thus fails to satisfy the falsity prong of the Napue test.

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that Defendants Joint Motion for New Trial or to Dismiss and Request for an Evidentiary Hearing, (Doc. 454), is denied.

Doc. 463.

In their currently pending motion, Defendants seek remand for the Court to consider "new evidence and new argument." Doc. 471 at 9. Defendants recount the legal standard for receiving a new trial under Rule 33, Napue, and Brady. Id. at 10-12. However, Defendants fail to argue which (if any) of these tests their "new evidence" falls under. Nonetheless, the Court will consider the evidence under all 3 tests.

10 Defendants' first piece of "new evidence" is the affidavit of Jerome Perucchi that was signed on June 4, 2015, as part of a civil lawsuit with Defendant Quiel. Id. at 12. As stated above, this Court issued its prior Order denying new trial on July 14, 2015; thus, the affidavit is not "newly discovered" for purposes of remand and could have been filed with the prior motion. Additionally, it fails to fall within the time limits of Rule 33.[4] As for Napue and Brady, it does not appear the government ever had access to Mr. Perucchi or his testimony; therefore Defendants have failed to show any knowledge on the part of the government. Accordingly, remand to consider this evidence is denied.[5]

Defendants' second piece of "new evidence" is further evidence that Defendant Rusch (acting under a pseudonym) is continuing to engage in the behavior that was the crime in Defendants' trial. Id. at 12-14. Even if Mr. Rusch is committing on-going, future criminal behavior, such behavior would not satisfy Rule 33, Napue, or Brady for purposes of Defendants being entitled to a new trial. Further, there is no evidence that the government has a secret immunity agreement with Mr. Rusch; and indeed the Government has now twice (Docs. 464 and 472) expressly denied the existence of any such agreement. Accordingly, remand to consider this evidence is denied.

Because the Court has addressed the only allegedly "new" evidence identified by Defendants and has denied remand to consider such evidence,

IT IS ORDERED that the Motion to Accept Remand to Consider New Evidence for a New Trial (Doc. 471) is denied.

Dated this 22nd day of July, 2016.

All Citations

Not Reported in Fed. Supp., 2016 WL 3947102

Footnotes

[1] The Court acknowledges that block quoting a 17-page Order is generally unnecessary. However, Defendants' currently pending request to accept remand retreads so much of the exact same ground, the totality of the prior order is relevant.

[2] The Court notes that neither party cited the Napue test with regard to trial exhibits 51 and 52. While Brady and Napue violations can overlap, see Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972) (finding both violations where the prosecution did not disclose an informant-witness's plea deal and did not correct the witness who committed perjury by denying the existence of a plea deal while testifying), the essence of Defendants' allegation is that this evidence was false; not that it was suppressed. Therefore, this evidence is properly considered under Napue; not Brady.

[3] Specifically, the Government does not expressly deny that the reason it has not monitored Rusch's post-trial activity is because of an undisclosed agreement to not monitor him and grant him leniency in his future dealings. For purposes of this order, the Court has interpreted the Government's statements as a denial of having any undisclosed agreement regarding future activities with Rusch. If the Government actually has any such agreement, and has artfully worded its representations to not directly address Defendants' allegations, the Government is ordered to correct the Court's interpretation immediately and the Court would deem any failure to correct the Court's understanding to be a fraud on the Court and a Giglio violation.

[4] If the Court of Appeals remands this case at some point in the future, it is now more than three years since the April 11, 2013 verdict.

[5] Moreover, the Court has reviewed the affidavit (Doc. 471-2 at 2-5) and none of the allegations made by Defendants in their motion (specifically that Defendant Rusch forged Mr. Perucchi's signature) are in Mr. Perucchi's affidavit. Thus, Defendants have no admissible evidence in support of their allegations against Mr. Rusch.

End of Document

707 F.3d 1262
United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

In re GRAND JURY PROCEEDINGS, NO. 4–10.

No. 12–13131.
|
Feb. 7, 2013.

Synopsis
Background: In grand jury proceedings, subpoena duces tecum was issued to target and his wife requiring them to produce records concerning their foreign financial accounts. After target and his wife refused to comply, asserting their Fifth Amendment privilege against self–incrimination, government moved to compel. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, No. 113E–1: GJ 4–10, Richard W. Story, J., granted motion. Target and his wife appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Hull, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] government's interest in subpoenaed records was “essentially regulatory”;

[2] target's and his wife's records were “customarily kept” in connection with regulation activity; and

[3] target's and his wife's records had “public aspects.”

Affirmed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

1264 Frank Phillip Cihlar, Gregory Victor Davis, Alexander Patrick Robbins, U.S. Dept. of Justice, Tax Div., App. Sec., Washington, DC, Steven D. Grimberg, Lawrence R. Sommerfeld, Sally Yates, U.S. Attys., Atlanta, GA, for Plaintiff–Appellee.

Jerome J. Froelich, McKenney & Froelich, Atlanta, GA, for Defendants–Appellants.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia.

Before HULL, WILSON and HILL, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

HULL, Circuit Judge:

This appeal concerns a grand jury investigation and the issuance of subpoenas duces tecum to a target (the “Target”) and his wife, which required the production of records concerning their foreign financial accounts. The Target and his wife refused to comply with the subpoenas by producing their records, asserting their Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. The government moved to compel, pointing out that the Supreme Court has recognized an exception (the “Required Records Exception”) to the self-incrimination privilege when certain records are kept pursuant to a valid regulatory scheme. See Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 32–33, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 1391–93, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948). The government contended that the foreign financial account records sought in this case fell within that Exception. The district court agreed, ruling that the Required Records Exception applied to the subpoenaed records, and therefore, the records were not subject to the Target and his wife's privilege against self-incrimination.

After review and oral argument, we join the three of our sister circuits that have 1265 considered the same issue here about foreign financial account records and conclude that the subpoenaed records fall within the Required Records Exception. We thus affirm the district court's grant of the government's motion to compel.

I. BACKGROUND

The relevant facts are both brief and undisputed. The present appeal arises out of a grand jury investigation in the Northern District of Georgia, jointly conducted by the Internal Revenue Service (“IRS”), the U.S. Department of Justice Tax Division, and the U.S. Attorney's Office (collectively, the “government”). The government suspected that the Target, along with his wife, maintained foreign bank accounts both together and individually. For the years under investigation, the Target and his wife filed joint tax returns. Among other things, the government's investigation focused on the Target and his wife's failures to: (1) disclose on their tax returns their ownership of or income derived from their foreign accounts; and (2) file, with the U.S. Department of the Treasury, Forms TD F 90–22.1, Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR") for these alleged accounts. [1]

During the course of its investigation, on June 29, 2011, the grand jury, at the request of the U.S. Attorney, issued subpoenas duces tecum to both the Target and his wife. These subpoenas required the Target and his wife to produce any foreign financial account records that they were required to keep pursuant to the federal regulations governing offshore banking. Specifically, the subpoenas requested:

> [f]or the tax years 2006 to the present: any and all records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 103.32 relating to foreign financial accounts that you had/ have a financial interest in, or signature authority over, including records reflecting the name in which each such account is maintained, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during each specified year. [2]

The Target and his wife informed the government that they would not produce the subpoenaed records. Thereafter, on September 20, 2011, the government filed a motion seeking to compel their compliance with the subpoenas. In its motion, filed in the district court, the government argued that the Bank Secrecy Act ("BSA"), 31 U.S.C. § 5311 et seq., and its implementing regulations, required the Target and his wife to keep the foreign financial account records sought by the subpoenas. Because the subpoenas were directed at only those records kept "within the requirements of [the] regulations," the Required Records Exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination applied, such that the Target and his wife could not resist complying with the subpoenas on Fifth Amendment grounds. The government requested that the district court grant the motion to compel and enter an order directing the Target and his wife "to show cause why they should not be held in contempt for failing to comply with the subpoenas."

1266 The Target and his wife filed a response to the government's motion to compel, arguing that the Required Records Exception did not apply to them based on the particular facts and circumstances of their case.

On November 7, 2011, the district court granted the government's motion to compel. In pertinent part, the district court found that the documents requested in the subpoenas fell within the Required Records Exception because: (1) federal law required the Target and his wife to maintain and make available for inspection records regarding their foreign financial accounts; (2) that recordkeeping requirement, imposed by federal statute and implemented by federal regulations, was part of a civil regulatory scheme that was " 'essentially regulatory' and not criminal in nature"; (3) the records were of the sort that "bank customers would customarily keep"; and (4) the records had "public aspects" because they contained information that federal law required the Target and his wife to maintain and make available for inspection by the IRS, as well as report to the Treasury Department. The district court ordered the Target and his wife to produce the subpoenaed foreign financial account records "or be subject to contempt."

The Target and his wife did not comply with the district court's order. On March 5, 2012, the government moved the district court to hold the Target and his wife in contempt, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1826. The district court issued an order holding the Target and his wife in contempt for their failure to comply with the district court's earlier November 7 order. The district court, however, stayed the enforcement of its contempt order pending the outcome of any appeal. The Target and his wife timely appealed.

II. DISCUSSION

[1] [2] On appeal, the Target [3] argues that he properly invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, and that the district court erred in concluding that the Required Records Exception applied to the subpoenaed records. The Target also argues that because his act of producing the subpoenaed records could potentially be incriminating, his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination should apply to his act of production, as well as applying to the records themselves. [4]

Before discussing these privilege issues, we review the Bank Secrecy Act and its related regulations.

A. The Bank Secrecy Act

The Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act of 1970, Pub.L. 91–508, 84 Stat. 1118 (1970), is generally referred to as the Bank Secrecy Act ("BSA"). The BSA's purpose is "to require certain reports or records where they have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings...." 31 U.S.C. § 5311. Section 241 of the BSA, codified at 31 U.S.C. § 5314, provides that the "Secretary of the Treasury shall require a resident or citizen of the United States or a person in, and doing business in, the United States, to 1267 keep records, file reports, or keep records and file reports, when the resident, citizen, or person makes a transaction or maintains a relation for any person with a foreign financial agency." Id. § 5314(a). In short, the Secretary of the Treasury must require U.S. citizens and residents, as well as any person doing business in the United States, to "keep records and file reports" regarding their foreign financial transactions and relationships. See id.

Pursuant to this Section 241 instruction, the Secretary of the Treasury has implemented regulations that require U.S. citizens, residents, and business entities to report their foreign financial accounts to the IRS. See 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350. Specifically, the reporting regulation requires that:

> Each United States person having a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, a bank, securities, or other financial account in a foreign country shall report such relationship to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for each year in which such relationship exists and shall provide such information as shall be specified in a reporting form prescribed under 31 U.S.C. 5314 to be filed by such persons. The form prescribed under section 5314 is the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (TD–F 90–22.1), or any successor form.

31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(a) (emphasis added).

A separate regulation mandates that those persons who are required to report foreign financial interests under § 1010.350 retain certain foreign financial records for at least five years, making them "available for inspection as authorized by law." Id. § 1010.420. These foreign financial records must contain (1) "the name in which each such account is maintained"; (2) "the number or other designation of such account"; (3) "the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained"; (4) "the type of such account"; and (5) "the maximum value of each such account during the reporting period." Id. [5]

The records named in the subpoenas here mirror the records that § 1010.420 requires persons maintaining foreign financial interests to keep and maintain for government inspection. The information contained in those subpoenaed records is also identical to information that persons subject to § 1010.420 annually report to the U.S. Department of the Treasury through FBAR, Form TD F 90–22.1. Thus, the records at issue contain information that the Target—if he has a foreign financial account and meets other qualifications specified in the BSA—must keep, report to the Treasury Department, and maintain for inspection.

The question here is whether records that federal law requires a person to keep and make available for inspection by the federal government can be subpoenaed by the government in a grand jury investigation when the holder of the records asserts his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. We now turn to a discussion of the Fifth Amendment and the Required Records Exception to that 1268 Amendment's privilege against self-incrimination.

B. The Fifth Amendment's Privilege against Self–Incrimination

The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution states that "[n]o person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself...." This provision applies "when the accused is compelled to make a [t]estimonial [c]ommunication that is incriminating." Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 408, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 1579, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (1976); see also United States v. Doe, 465 U.S. 605, 610, 104 S.Ct. 1237, 1241, 79 L.Ed.2d 552 (1984) ("[T]he Fifth Amendment protects [a] person ... from compelled self-incrimination.").

[3] Courts have interpreted broadly what constitutes a "testimonial communication." In Fisher, the Supreme Court stated that "[t]he act of producing evidence in response to a subpoena ... has communicative aspects of its own, wholly aside from the contents of the papers produced." 425 U.S. at 410, 96 S.Ct. at 1581; see also Doe, 465 U.S. at 612, 104 S.Ct. at 1242 ("A government subpoena compels the holder of the document to perform an act that may have testimonial aspects and an incriminating effect."). For instance, by complying with a subpoena, the subpoena recipient may "tacitly concede[ ] the existence of the papers demanded and their possession or control," as well as his "belief that the papers are those described in the subpoena." Fisher, 425 U.S. at 410, 96 S.Ct. at 1581; see also Baltimore City Dep't of Soc. Servs. v. Bouknight, 493 U.S. 549, 554–55, 110 S.Ct. 900, 904–05, 107 L.Ed.2d 992 (1990) ("[T]he act of complying with the government's demand testifies to the existence, possession, or authenticity of the things produced."). The issue then becomes whether the "tacit averments" made by producing the requested materials are both " 'testimonial' and 'incriminating' for purposes of applying the Fifth Amendment." Fisher, 425 U.S. at 410, 96 S.Ct. at 1581; see also In re Three Grand Jury Subpoenas Duces Tecum Dated Jan. 29, 1999, 191 F.3d 173, 178 (2d Cir.1999) ("[I]t is now settled that an individual may claim an act of production privilege to decline to produce documents, the contents of which are not privileged, where the act of production is, itself, (1) compelled, (2) testimonial, and (3) incriminating.").

C. The Required Records Exception

[4] Although the Fifth Amendment protects an individual against self-incrimination by barring the government from "compelling [him] to give 'testimony' that incriminates him," its protective shield is not absolute. Fisher, 425 U.S. at 409, 96 S.Ct. at 1580. In some instances, Congress may, without violating an individual's Fifth Amendment privilege, require that individual "to report information to the government," despite the fact that the information "may incriminate the individual." United States v. Garcia–Cordero, 610 F.3d 613, 616 (11th Cir.2010).

[5] [6] Of relevance to the present case, the Supreme Court has made clear that when the government is authorized to regulate an activity, an individual's Fifth Amendment privilege does not prevent the government from imposing recordkeeping, inspection, and reporting requirements as part of a valid regulatory scheme. See Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 32–33, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 1391–93, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948). Based on the Required Records Exception, the government may mandate the retention or inspection of records as "to public documents in public offices, [and] also [as] to records required by law to be kept in order that there may be suitable information of transactions which 1269 are the appropriate subjects of governmental regulation, and the enforcement of restrictions validly established." Id. at 17, 68 S.Ct. at 1384 (quoting Wilson v. United States, 221 U.S. 361, 380, 31 S.Ct. 538, 544, 55 L.Ed. 771 (1911)).

The rationale underlying the Required Records Exception is "twofold." In re Two Grand Jury Subpoenae Duces Tecum, 793 F.2d 69, 73 (2d Cir.1986). First, voluntary participation in an activity that, by law or statute, mandates recordkeeping may be deemed a waiver of the act of production privilege because the "obligations to keep and produce the records are in a sense consented to as a condition of being able to carry on the regulated activity involved." In re Grand Jury Proceedings ("McCoy & Sussman"), 601 F.2d 162, 171 (5th Cir.1979). [6] Second, because such recordkeeping is done pursuant to legal mandate, "the mere response by production is no more a violation of the privilege against self-incrimination than requiring the creation of the record itself, for it is the record, presumably, that might incriminate [the recordholder]." Id.; see also Two Grand Jury Subpoenae, 793 F.2d at 73 ("[B]ecause the records must be kept by law, the record-holder 'admits' little in the way of control or authentication by producing them.").

[7] Building on Shapiro, the Supreme Court later articulated three "premises" or elements of the Required Records Exception in a pair of cases that dealt with whether the Exception applied to the payment of an excise tax on illegal gambling wagers. See Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709, 713, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968); Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 56–57, 88 S.Ct. 697, 707, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968). The Supreme Court described the three "premises" as follows: (1) "the purposes of the United States' inquiry must be essentially regulatory"; (2) the "information is to be obtained by requiring the preservation of records of a kind which the regulated party has customarily kept"; and (3) "the records themselves must have assumed 'public aspects' which render them at least analogous to public documents." Grosso, 390 U.S. at 67–68, 88 S.Ct. at 713. Concluding that the Required Records Exception was inapplicable in Grosso and Marchetti, the Supreme Court stressed that any recordkeeping or inspection requirement under Shapiro must be directed at "an essentially non-criminal and regulatory area of inquiry," Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. at 707, rather than "directed almost exclusively to individuals inherently suspect of criminal activities," Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. at 713.

In the nearly 45 years that have elapsed since the Supreme Court laid out the Required Records Exception's three "premises" in Grosso and Marchetti, many of our sister circuits have recognized and applied these "premises" as though they were elements of the Required Records Exception. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d 428, 432–36 (5th Cir.2012); In re Special Feb. 2011–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d 903, 905–09 (7th Cir.2012), petition for cert. filed, 2013 WL 152456 (U.S. Jan. 9, 2013) (No. 12–853); In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H., 648 F.3d 1067, 1071–79 (9th Cir.2011), cert. denied, ––– U.S. ––––, 133 S.Ct. 26, 183 L.Ed.2d 676 (2012); In re Grand Jury Subpoena ("Spano"), 21 F.3d 226, 228–30 (8th Cir.1994); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Served upon Underhill ("Underhill"), 781 F.2d 64, 67–70 (6th Cir.1986); 1270 United States v. Dichne, 612 F.2d 632, 638–41 (2d Cir.1979); United States v. Webb, 398 F.2d 553, 556 (4th Cir.1968).

Importantly here, in several of these cases—In re M.H. (9th Cir.), Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011 (7th Cir.), and In re Grand Jury Subpoena (5th Cir.)—our sister circuits upheld the application of the Required Records Exception to individuals who were served with subpoenas that sought the production of financial records required to be kept pursuant to the BSA and its implementing regulations. In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 430–31; Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d at 909; In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1069; see also Dichne, 612 F.2d at 638–41 (applying the Required Records Exception to the BSA's currency reporting requirements).

D. Analysis—Application of the Required Records Exception

With this analytical framework in place, we now turn to our application of the Required Records Exception to the particular records at issue here. For the reasons set forth below, we conclude that the government has met its burden of proving that the foreign financial account documents sought from the Target, which the BSA and its implementing regulations require him to maintain, satisfy the "premises" of the Required Records Exception.[7] Because the Exception applies, both the documents themselves and the act of producing them fall outside the purview of the Fifth Amendment.

1. "Essentially Regulatory"

[8] The Target argues that the text of the BSA and its legislative history indicate Congress intended for the recordkeeping and reporting requirements imposed on foreign financial accountholders to aid law enforcement, and therefore, that the purpose of the Act is criminal in nature rather than "essentially regulatory." Grosso, 390 U.S. at 67–68, 88 S.Ct. at 713. He asserts that because the Act lists first among its purposes the gathering of information that has a "high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations," 31 U.S.C. § 5311 (emphasis added), the Act's chief purpose is to fight crime.

[9] The Target also acknowledges, however, that the BSA has multiple purposes. That a statute relates both to criminal law and to civil regulatory matters does not strip the statute of its status as "essentially regulatory." See Cal. Bankers Ass'n v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 76–77, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 1525, 39 L.Ed.2d 812 (1974); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 434–35; In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074. In Shultz, the Supreme Court observed that the goal of assisting in the enforcement of criminal laws was "undoubtedly prominant [sic] in the minds of the legislators," as they considered the Bank Secrecy Act. Shultz, 416 U.S. at 76–77, 94 S.Ct. at 1525. The Supreme Court further observed that 1271 "Congress seems to have been equally concerned with civil liability which might go undetected by reason of transactions of the type required to be recorded or reported...." Id. at 76, 94 S.Ct. at 1525. The Supreme Court therefore concluded that "the fact that a legislative enactment manifests a concern for the enforcement of the criminal law does not cast any generalized pall of constitutional suspicion over it." Id. at 77, 94 S.Ct. at 1525.

Furthermore, the BSA also requires records to be kept "where [the records] have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations...." 31 U.S.C. § 5311 (emphasis added). The House Report, that accompanied the Act, acknowledged that the Act's recordkeeping and reporting requirements not only would "aid duly constituted authorities in lawful investigations," but also would "facilitate the supervision of financial institutions properly subject to federal supervision" and would "provide for the collection of statistics necessary for the formulation of monetary and economic policy." H.R.Rep. No. 91–975 (1970), reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4394, 4405. As the Fifth Circuit recently noted, > the Treasury Department shares the information it collects pursuant to the Act's requirements with other agencies—including the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the National Credit Union Administration, and the Office of Thrift Supervision—none of which are empowered to bring criminal prosecutions.

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 434–35 (citing 31 U.S.C. § 5319; 31 C.F.R. § 1010.950(a)–(b)). Furthermore, violations of the BSA can be enforced by civil or criminal means, and Congress emphasized that the availability of civil sanctions is "of great importance in assuring compliance with regulations of the type contemplated by [the BSA]." H.R.Rep. No. 91–975, reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4394, 4405; see 31 U.S.C. §§ 5321(a)(3) and (d), 5322(a) and (b).

[10] Even ignoring the non-criminal purposes of the BSA, the question is not whether Congress was subjectively concerned about crime when enacting the BSA's recordkeeping and reporting provisions, but rather whether these requirements apply exclusively or almost exclusively to people engaged in criminal activity. See Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. at 707. "Therefore, that Congress aimed to use the BSA as a tool to combat certain criminal activity is insufficient to render the BSA essentially criminal as opposed to essentially regulatory." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074.

In Dichne, the Second Circuit held that a similar recordkeeping and reporting requirement of the BSA was not subject to the Fifth Amendment's privilege against self-incrimination. 612 F.2d at 638–41. The provision at issue in Dichne required anyone exporting or importing monetary instruments worth more than $5,000 (now $10,000) to file a report with the Secretary of the Treasury. See 31 U.S.C. § 5316 (previously codified at 31 U.S.C. § 1101). The Second Circuit noted that because "the transportation of such amounts of currency is by no means an illegal act, the District Court was correct in its finding that the reporting requirement was not addressed to a highly selective group inherently suspect of criminal activities." Dichne, 612 F.2d at 639 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Second Circuit therefore held that "[i]n view of the lack of a direct linkage between the required disclosure and the potential criminal activity, and in view of the fact that the statute is not directed at an inherently suspect 1272 group, ... the reporting requirement does not present such a substantial risk of incrimination so as to outweigh the governmental interest in requiring such a disclosure." Id. at 641 (internal quotation marks omitted). Consequently, activity required by the BSA statute was not subject to the Fifth Amendment's privilege against self-incrimination. Id.; see also United States v. Sturman, 951 F.2d 1466, 1487 (6th Cir.1991) ("The Bank Secrecy Act applies to all persons making foreign deposits, most of whom do so with legally obtained funds. The requirement is imposed in the banking regulatory field which is not infused with criminal statutes. In addition, the disclosures do not subject the defendant to a real danger of self-incrimination since the source of the funds is not disclosed.... Thus, the defendant has failed to show that the Bank Secrecy Act violated any individual right [that] ... Grosso seek[s] to protect.").

The BSA and its implementing regulations at issue here apply to a wide range of individuals. "There is nothing inherently illegal about having or being a beneficiary of an offshore foreign banking account," and "[n]othing about having a foreign bank account on its own suggests a person is engaged in illegal activity." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074. We agree with our three sister circuits that the recordkeeping requirements of the BSA, as implemented by 31 C.F.R. §§ 1010.350 and 1010.420, are essentially regulatory in nature, as they do not target inherently illegal activity or a group of persons inherently suspect of criminal activity. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 435 (holding that "[b]ecause the BSA's recordkeeping requirements serve purposes unrelated to criminal law enforcement and because the provisions do not exclusively target people engaged in criminal activity, we conclude that the requirements are 'essentially regulatory,' satisfying the [Required Records Exception]'s first prong"); Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d at 909 (concluding that the first "premise" of the Required Records Exception, as it pertained to BSA records, was satisfied); In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1075 (holding that 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 was "essentially regulatory" because the information sought was "not inherently criminal," and therefore, "being required to provide that information would generally not establish a significant link in a chain of evidence tending to prove guilt").

For these reasons, we conclude that the requested foreign financial account records satisfy the first "premise" of the Required Records Exception, as the government's interest is "essentially regulatory" in nature.

2. "Customarily Kept"

[11] The second "premise" of the Required Records Exception examines whether the records sought are of the type typically kept in connection with the regulated activity. Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. at 713; Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. at 707. The Target argues that the foreign financial account records sought from him do not satisfy this "premise" because the records generally relate to "secret accounts of which records are normally not maintained."

The Ninth Circuit has held that the foreign financial account information required to be kept under 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 is "basic account information that bank customers would customarily keep, in part because they must report it to the IRS every year as part of the IRS's regulation of offshore banking, and in part because they need the information to access their foreign bank accounts." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1076. The Fifth Circuit has concluded similarly, stating that foreign financial account records are "customarily kept" in satisfaction of the Required 1273 Records Exception's second "premise" where they "are of the same type that the witness must report annually to the IRS pursuant to the IRS's regulation of offshore banking: the name, number, and type of account(s), the name and address of the bank where an account is held, and the maximum value of the account...." In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 435; see also Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d at 909 (concluding that the second prong of the Required Records Exception was met).

We agree. Simply put, the Target's argument that these records are not "customarily kept" is a non-starter. In addition to needing these foreign financial account records to comply with tax and Treasury Department reporting obligations, "the records sought are also of the same type that a reasonable account holder would keep in order to access his account." Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 435. We conclude that the subpoenaed foreign financial account records here are of a kind "customarily kept" in connection with the regulated activity of offshore banking, thereby satisfying the second "premise" of the Required Records Exception.

3. "Public Aspects"

[12] The third "premise" of the Required Records Exception requires that the requested records "have assumed 'public aspects' which render them at least analogous to public documents." Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. at 713. The Target asserts that an individual's personal financial records do not possess sufficient "public aspects" to satisfy this prong of the test.

[13] Generally, "[w]here personal information is compelled in furtherance of a valid regulatory scheme, as is the case here, that information assumes a public aspect." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1077. The fact "that the records sought are typically considered private does not bar them from possessing the requisite public aspects." In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 436. As we concluded above, the BSA is a valid regulatory regime, and therefore, the information sought pursuant to the Act "assumes a public aspect." In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1077. The Fifth Circuit noted that "the Treasury Department shares the information it collects pursuant to the [Bank Secrecy] Act's record-keeping and reporting requirements with a number of other agencies. That this data sharing [serves] an important public purpose sufficient to imbue otherwise private foreign bank account records with 'public aspects' is not difficult to imagine." In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 436.

The fact that 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 requires foreign accountholders to keep foreign financial account records, but to file only the TD F 90–22.1 FBAR form concerning those records with the Treasury Department, does not extinguish the public aspects of the records here. The Supreme Court has recognized that there is no material distinction between records required to be kept by law and those regularly or "easily accessed" by the government. See Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 56 n. 14, 88 S.Ct. at 706 n. 14 ("We perceive no meaningful difference between an obligation to maintain records for inspection, and such an obligation supplemented by a requirement that those records be filed periodically with officers of the United States.").

Thus, this Court finds that the Target's records sought here have "public aspects," satisfying the third and final "premise" of the Required Records Exception. See Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d at 909 (concluding that respondent could not resist a subpoena on Fifth Amendment grounds because the requested 1274 records met the three prongs of the Required Records Exception).[8]

E. The Act–of–Production Privilege

[14] We now address the Target's contention that the Required Records Exception is not applicable to a case such as this where the act of producing the records would be compelled, testimonial, and self-incriminating. We reject the Target's attempt to draw a distinction, for Fifth Amendment privilege purposes, between his act of producing the records and the records themselves. As the Seventh Circuit has persuasively stated,

> [o]ne of the rationales, if not the main rationale, behind the Required Records Doctrine is that the government or a regulatory agency should have the means, over an assertion of the Fifth Amendment Privilege, to inspect the records it requires an individual to keep as a condition of voluntarily participating in that regulated activity. That goal would be easily frustrated if the Required Records Doctrine were inapplicable whenever the act of production privilege was invoked.
>
> The voluntary choice to engage in an activity that imposes record-keeping requirements under a valid civil regulatory scheme carries consequences, perhaps the most significant of which, is the possibility that those records might have to be turned over upon demand, notwithstanding any Fifth Amendment privilege. That is true whether the privilege arises by virtue of the contents of the documents or [by the] act of producing them.

Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d at 908–09 (citations omitted) (emphasis added).

Although the Supreme Court decided its "act-of-production" privilege cases after it decided Shapiro, Grosso, and Marchetti, it has since applied the rationale behind the Required Records Exception to negate a witness's act-of-production privilege. See Bouknight, 493 U.S. at 555–62, 110 S.Ct. at 905–09 (holding, in a case involving a mother's refusal, on Fifth Amendment grounds, to comply with a court order to turn her child over to a social services agency, "[e]ven assuming that this limited testimonial assertion is sufficiently incriminating and 'sufficiently testimonial for purposes of the privilege,' Bouknight may not invoke the privilege to resist the production order because she has assumed custodial duties related to production and because production is required as part of a noncriminal regulatory regime" (citation omitted)); see also Spano, 21 F.3d at 228–30 (holding that "the required records exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege will apply to the act of production by a sole proprietor even where the act of production could involve compelled testimonial self-incrimination"); Underhill, 781 F.2d at 70 ("In our view, in order to have meaning the required records exception must apply to the act of production as well 1275 as the contents of documents to which the doctrine applies.").

Indeed, in McCoy & Sussman, our predecessor Court determined that the act-of-production privilege discussed in Fisher was "not directed at the production of 'required records,' " and that "[t]he proper designation by the government of certain records to be kept by an individual necessarily implies an obligation to produce them." 601 F.2d at 170–71. The Court added that the "obligation to keep and produce the records are in a sense consented to as a condition of being able to carry on the regulated activity involved." Id. at 171. Further, "[i]n this respect, the mere response by production is no more a violation of the privilege against self-incrimination than requiring the creation of the record itself, for it is the record, presumably, that might incriminate." Id.[9]

We likewise reject the Target's assertion that the resolution of this question is controlled by our decision in United States v. Argomaniz, 925 F.2d 1349 (11th Cir.1991). In Argomaniz, this Court concluded that a criminal defendant was entitled to invoke his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination as it pertained to his act of producing incriminating business records to the IRS. 925 F.2d at 1355–56. However, the Argomaniz Court did not address the Required Records Exception as it pertained to the defendant's assertion of privilege, and there is no indication that the records sought by the IRS in Argomaniz were records that the defendant was required by federal law to maintain, present for inspection, or file pursuant to a valid exercise of congressional authority. Accordingly, Argomaniz is materially distinguishable from the present case.

In sum, to the extent that the Required Records Exception operates to extinguish the Target's Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, it necessarily extinguishes this privilege as to both the act of producing the records and the records themselves.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, and after oral argument and our review of the record in the present case, we affirm the district court's order granting the government's motion to compel the Target and his wife to comply with the subpoenas duces tecum for their foreign financial account records. [10]

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

707 F.3d 1262, 111 A.F.T.R.2d 2013-794, 2013-1 USTC P 50,182, 23 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 1864

Footnotes

[1] “Each United States person” must file an FBAR form if that person has a financial interest in, or signature authority over, any financial account or other financial interest maintained in a foreign country. See 31 U.S.C. § 5314; 31 C.F.R. §§ 1010.350, 1010.420.

[2] On March 31, 2011, 31 C.F.R. § 103.32 became 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420. Compare 31 C.F.R. § 103.32 (2010) with id. § 1010.420 (2011); see also Transfer and Reorganization of Bank Secrecy Act Regulations, 75 Fed.Reg. 65806–01 (Oct. 26, 2010).

[3] Although both the Target and his wife received identical subpoenas and both are appealing the district court's contempt order, we refer to the Target as a singular entity in our discussion, for ease of reference.

[4] “We review the district court's findings of relevant facts for clear error, ... and review the district court's application of the Fifth Amendment privilege de novo.” In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Dated Mar. 25, 2011, 670 F.3d 1335, 1338 (11th Cir.2012) (citations omitted). In the present case, because the issue on appeal is solely a legal one, our review is de novo. Id.

[5] We note that the Target has raised no challenge to the constitutionality or legality of either the Bank Secrecy Act or its implementing regulations. And it is plainly within Congress's power to regulate foreign financial transactions undertaken by U.S. citizens and residents by mandating that such financial activity be reported yearly to the federal government. See U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 3 (vesting Congress with the authority “[t]o regulate Commerce with foreign Nations”); Cal. Bankers Ass'n v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 59, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 1516, 39 L.Ed.2d 812 (1974) (upholding the constitutionality of the Bank Secrecy Act, noting that “[t]he plenary authority of Congress to regulate foreign commerce, and to delegate significant portions of this power to the Executive, is well established”).

[6] In Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1209 (11th Cir.1981) (en banc), we adopted as binding precedent all decisions of the former Fifth Circuit handed down prior to October 1, 1981.

[7] Our predecessor Court, the Fifth Circuit, applied the first and third “premises”—the “essentially regulatory” and “public aspects” elements—but did not explicitly mention the “customarily kept” element. See McCoy & Sussman, 601 F.2d at 167–71; cf. Garcia–Cordero, 610 F.3d at 616–18 (discussing and applying the “regulatory regime exception” to the Fifth Amendment, in a case that did not involve physical records, without mention of a “customarily kept” element). In light of this precedent, the government encourages us to apply only the first and third “premises” in the present case. We need not decide if the second “premise” or element applies because, like the Fifth Circuit in its more recent decision, even if we were to “assume, for purposes of decision, that all three prongs of the test set forth in Grosso apply,” we would nevertheless “conclude that all three requirements are met in this case.” In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 433–34 (quoting In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1073).

8 We also reject the Target's argument that the Required Records Exception is only triggered where there is some level of licensure or heightened government regulation at issue. We agree with the government's position that it is up to Congress to determine the appropriate level of regulation that should accompany its mandate that certain records be kept. We note that the Fifth Circuit recently arrived at the same conclusion, holding that "[i]f the witness's argument were correct, then Congress would be prohibited from imposing the least regulatory burden necessary; it would instead be required to supplement a reporting or recordkeeping scheme with additional and unnecessary 'substantive restrictions' for the sole purpose of upholding its record keeping and reporting requirements," and thus, "adopting a rule that the legitimacy of a recordkeeping requirement depends on Congress first enacting substantive restrictions would lead to absurd results." In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 436 (internal quotations omitted).

9 McCoy was the sole proprietor and operator of a customshouse brokerage office. McCoy & Sussman, 601 F.2d at 166. Representatives of the U.S. Customs Service sought to inspect McCoy's records "in accordance with regulations [19 C.F.R. §§ 111.21 et seq.] requiring customshouse brokers to maintain records of their business and allow access to them." Id. McCoy refused to permit the inspection. Id. As part of a grand jury investigation, McCoy was later served with a subpoena duces tecum requiring the production of certain records. Id. McCoy contended that "even if the subpoena were limited to 'required records,' he would be privileged from producing the records because the mere act of producing them would be, in effect, testimonial." Id. at 170. This Court rejected that contention as to "required records." Id. at 170–71.

10 In this appeal, the government has never sought any oral testimony from the Target or his wife, and thus this case involves only records and the act of producing those records.

End of Document

2017 WL 4417826
United States District Court,
N.D. Illinois, Eastern Division.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Jung Joo PARK, Charles C. Park, James Park,
Nina Park, and John Doe, as representative of the estate of Que Te Park, Defendants.

No. 16 C 10787
|
Signed 10/05/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

W. Damon Dennis, Mary A. Stallings, Department of Justice, Washington, DC, AUSA, United States Attorney's Office, Chicago, IL, for Plaintiff.

Kevin K. McCormick, Dewald Law Group PC, Arlington Heights, IL, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

HON. JORGE L. ALONSO, United States District Judge

1 Plaintiff, the United States of America, brings this action to collect a tax penalty assessed against Que Te Park, who is now deceased, from his surviving family members or estate. His children, defendants Charles C. Park, James Park, and Nina Park have moved to dismiss the claims against them. The motion to dismiss is granted, with leave to file an amended complaint by November 7, 2017.

BACKGROUND

On June 10, 2010, Que Te Park ("Mr. Park"), then living in Inverness, Illinois, filed an amended Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR") for the 2008 tax year, disclosing for the first time numerous foreign bank accounts in which he held (substantially) more than $10,000. Based on the amended report, the United States government assessed a tax penalty against Mr. Park of nearly $4 million. See 31 U.S.C. § 5314.

According to the allegations of the complaint, Mr. Park died on July 12, 2012. Subsequently, his wife, defendant Jung Joo Park ("Mrs. Park"), informed the Internal Revenue Service that Mr. Park's estate was not probated. The government alleges, however, "upon information and belief," that Mr. Park held assets that included, but were not limited to, "Korean bank accounts," "Korean real property," and "certain other inheritance documents" (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 45, ECF No. 25), and that some or all of these assets were transferred to Mrs. Park and Mr. Park's children, defendants Charles Park, James Park, and Nina Park (hereinafter, "the Park children"), pursuant to South Korean probate proceedings. (See id. ¶¶ 46-48.)

In particular, the government alleges that Mr. Park had previously placed assets in a revocable trust named the Que Te Declaration of Trust ("the Trust"). He settled and notarized the Trust in DuPage County, Illinois, in January 2007. Mr. Park was both the grantor and the original trustee of the Trust. By its own terms, the Trust became irrevocable on Mr. Park's death. The Trust names Mrs. Park as the successor trustee; it also names the Park children as successor co-trustees, but only "[i]n the event [Mrs. Park] is unwilling and unable to act as Successor Trustee" at the time of Mr. Park's death or incapacity. (Id., Ex. 1, Trust, Article Fifth, Section 8, ECF No. 25-1.) Upon Mr. Park's death, the terms of the Trust required the trustee to divide the Trust assets into two separate trusts. First, the trustee is required to set up a "Marital Trust" for the benefit of Mrs. Park. (Id. ¶ 28.) Mrs. Park is empowered, independently of her role as trustee, to distribute any part of the Marital Trust "principal" to any of Mr. Park's "descendants and their respective spouses" or to charity. Second, the trustee is to use the Trust's remaining assets to set up a "Family Trust" for the benefit of Mrs. Park during her lifetime, but, after her death, to be divided and distributed to Mr. Park's descendants. (Id. ¶ 29; id., Ex. 1, Article Fourth).

The government's complaint consists of seven counts: Count I, to reduce the 2008 FBAR civil penalties to judgment; Count II, liability of the Trust for the 2008 FBAR penalties; Count III, for Illinois common-law transferee liability against Mrs. Park and the Park children; Count IV, fiduciary liability against Mrs. Park as trustee of the Trust and de facto representative of Mr. Park's estate; Count V, to set aside fraudulent transfers of Trust assets to Mrs. Park and the Park children; Count VI, to set aside fraudulent transfers of other assets held by

Mr. Park to Mrs. Park and the Park children; and Count VII, for an accounting of transfers of Trust assets and other assets owned by Mr. Park. The Park children move to dismiss the claims against them, which are alleged in Counts III, V, VI and VII. [1]

ANALYSIS

2 "A motion under Rule 12(b)(6) tests whether the complaint states a claim on which relief may be granted." Richards v. Mitcheff, 696 F.3d 635, 637 (7th Cir. 2012). Under Rule 8(a)(2), a complaint must include "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). The short and plain statement under Rule 8(a)(2) must " 'give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.' " Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47 (1957) (ellipsis omitted)).

Under federal notice-pleading standards, a complaint's "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Stated differently, "a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.' " Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "In reviewing the sufficiency of a complaint under the plausibility standard, [courts must] accept the well-pleaded facts in the complaint as true, but [they] 'need[ ] not accept as true legal conclusions, or threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements.' " Alam v. Miller Brewing Co., 709 F.3d 662, 665-66 (7th Cir. 2013) (quoting Brooks v. Ross, 578 F.3d 574, 581 (7th Cir. 2009)).

Additionally, any claims of or including acts of fraud must comply with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b), which requires the pleading party to "state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud." United States ex rel. Presser v. Acacia Mental Health Clinic, LLC, 836 F.3d 770, 775 (7th Cir. 2016). Although fraudulent or deceptive intent "may be alleged generally," Rule 9(b) requires a plaintiff to describe the "circumstances" of the alleged fraudulent activity with "particularity" by including such information as the "the identity of the person who made the misrepresentation, the time, place and content of the misrepresentation, and the method by which the misrepresentation was communicated," Windy City Metal Fabricators & Supply, Inc. v. CIT Tech. Fin. Servs., Inc., 536 F.3d 663, 668 (7th Cir. 2008), or, to put it differently, by providing the "who, what, where, when and how" of the alleged fraudulent conduct. See Bank of Am., Nat'l Ass'n, v. Knight, 725 F.3d 815, 818 (7th Cir. 2013).

The Park children argue that Counts III, V, and VI fail to state a claim; the government's claims are barred by the statute of limitations; Illinois law does not govern the Trust; the fraud counts are not pleaded with particularity; and the government has not stated a claim for accounting.

Some of the Park children's arguments can be dispatched quickly. First, whether the statute of limitations bars a claim is an affirmative defense that the Court resolves on a motion to dismiss only if it is clear on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff's claims are time-barred. In this case, it is not clear on the face of the government's complaint that its claims are time-barred; and in any case, as the government argues without reply from the Park children, " '[i]t is well settled that the United States is not bound by state statutes of limitation ... in enforcing its rights' " in proceedings it institutes to collect taxes, even those involving state fraudulent transfer law. United States v. Hoyt, 524 F. Supp. 2d 638, 641 (D. Md. 2007) (quoting United States v. Summerlin, 310 U.S. 414, 416 (1940)). Second, the Park children argue that Illinois law does not govern the Trust because, by its own terms, the Trust is governed by the law of the jurisdiction where "the Trust property shall ... have its situs for administration," (Trust, Article Ninth, ECF No. 25-1), and to the extent the complaint sheds any light on where Trust property has its "situs for administration," it appears to be in South Korea. This argument is not squarely, fully briefed by the parties, and in any case, it is not clear on the face of the pleadings where the Trust property is held, so the issue cannot be resolved on a motion to dismiss. These arguments for dismissing the Second Amended Complaint are unpersuasive.

3 That leaves the argument that the government has not met its pleading burden. In particular, the Park children argue that the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b) applies to the government's claims against them because they sound in fraud, and, according to the Park children, the government has not met its burden to state the "circumstances constituting fraud" with "particularity."

The government's claims under the Illinois Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act ("IUFTA"), 740 ILCS 160/5, in Counts V and VI must be pleaded with particularity under Rule 9(b). See Gen. Elec. Capital Corp. v. Lease Resolution Corp., 128 F.3d 1074, 1079-80 (7th Cir. 1997). To plead a "constructive fraud" or "fraud in law" claim under the IUFTA, as the government seeks to do in this case, the government must plead the following elements:

> 1) an allegation of jurisdiction, 2) a statement of the date and the conditions under which [the transferor's obligation to the plaintiff arose], 3) a statement that the [transferor] owes the plaintiff the amount, 4) a description of the events surrounding the [transferor's] conveyance of all of his property to the transfer recipient for the purpose of defrauding and for delaying the collection of payment by the plaintiff, and 5) the plaintiff's demand of the court.

Id. Courts in this district have interpreted the fourth element to require the complaint to allege "what (or how much) was transferred, when the transfer was made, how it was made, who made it, who received it, and under what circumstances." See In re Life Fund 5.1 LLC, No. 09 B 32672, 2010 WL 2650024, at *3 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. June 30, 2010); Handler v. Heidenry, No. 11 C 4494, 2012 WL 2396615, at *5 (N.D. Ill. June 25, 2012) (quoting In re Life Fund 5.1); True Line Contracting & Remodeling Servs., Inc. v. Sheraton Peoria Hotel, LLC, No. CV 15-1013, 2015 WL 5179561, at *3 (C.D. Ill. Sept. 4, 2015) (quoting Handler). Other district courts have similarly required plaintiffs purporting to assert claims of fraudulent transfers under other states' versions of the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act or similar laws to make particularized allegations of the circumstances of the allegedly fraudulent transfers. See, e.g., Screen Capital Int'l Corp. v. Library Asset Acquisition Co., 510 B.R. 248, 258-59 (C.D. Cal. 2014); Heartland Payment Sys., Inc. v. Hickory Mist Luxury Cabin Rentals, LLC, No. 3:11-CV-350, 2011 WL 6122371, at *5 (E.D. Tenn. Dec. 8, 2011); Kranz v. Koenig, 240 F.R.D. 453, 456 (D. Minn. 2007); cf. Skyline Potato Co. v. Tan-O-On Mktg., Inc., 879 F. Supp. 2d 1228, 1257-58 (D.N.M. 2012). The government has not come close to describing with particularity the precise circumstances of the alleged transfers in the way that these decisions have required. The complaint contains no particularized description of the events surrounding the conveyance of Mr. Park's assets or the Trust to the Park children; in fact, it makes no particularized allegations of any such conveyance or conveyances at all. Particularized facts concerning "what (or how much) was transferred, when the transfer was made, how it was made, who made it, who received it, and under what circumstances," are largely missing; the government only pleads who received the alleged transfers (the Park children). The government has not met its pleading burden under Rule 9(b) on Counts V and VI.

The government argues that, Rule 9(b) notwithstanding, it has stated a valid claim for transferee liability in Count III under Illinois common law. (See Opp'n Br. at 5-6 (citing Berliant v. C.I.R., 729 F.2d 496, 500 (7th Cir. 1984)) (" 'It is an established doctrine of equity that creditors ... may pursue assets into the hands of distributees, where distribution has been made without discharging their debts.' ") (quoting Union Tr. Co. v. Shoemaker, 101 N.E. 1050, 1053 (Ill. 1913)).) According to the government, that claim need not comply with Rule 9(b). Even if the government is correct in that regard, it still fails to meet its burden under the more liberal pleading standard of Rule 8 because it pleads no details of any particular transfers of assets from Mr. Park or the Trust to the Park children. Indeed, according to the complaint, the government appears to have no basis for alleging any such transfers ever occurred other than "information and belief." (2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 46, 48.) Under such circumstances, the Court is "unable to infer any more than the possibility of misconduct." Simonian v. Edgecraft Corp., No. 10 C 1263, 2010 WL 3781262, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 20, 2010) (citing Iqbal, 558 U.S. at 678 ("Where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.")); see Screen Capital Int'l Corp., 510 B.R. at 259 ("Even under Rule 8, the [complaint] fails to properly allege what—if any—[property] rights ... were transferred ... to or for the benefit of [defendant], and thus what each [party] seeks to recover from [defendant]. Without properly alleging an underlying transfer, [plaintiff] cannot bring a claim for avoidance and recovery of a constructively fraudulent transfer under Rule 8.”). Notably, by the terms of the Trust, it is Mrs. Park who is the primary trustee and beneficiary of the Trust during her lifetime, not the Park children. There is no more than the possibility that assets of Mr. Park or the Trust were transferred to the Park children or that they exercised control over them. In other words, the factual allegations do not “raise a right to relief above the speculative level,” Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, and the government provides nothing more than “[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, [which] do not suffice,” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, to state a claim that can survive a motion to dismiss. For these reasons, the government fails to state a claim for common-law transferee liability against the Park children.

4 The government’s claim for an accounting is similarly inadequate. According to the allegations of the complaint and the arguments in the government’s response brief, the accounting claim against the Park children is premised on the allegations that the Park children received property or assets of Mr. Park or the Trust.[2] (See Opp'n Br. at 13-15, ECF No. 30 (citing 2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 97-98).) As explained above, even assuming that the more liberal Twombly/Iqbal plausibility standard of Rule 8 applies, these allegations are essentially speculative and do not meet the Twombly/Iqbal standard.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court grants the Park children’s motion to dismiss the claims against them [27]. The claims against the Park children should be dismissed without prejudice, with leave to file an amended complaint by November 7, 2017.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 4417826, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-6074, 2018-1 USTC P 50,106

Footnotes

[1] The government correctly states in its opposition brief that the Park children’s motion to dismiss was not timely filed. However, the Park children explain in reply that counsel was confused about whether the government had filed the Second Amended Complaint in lieu of a brief in response to the Park children’s then-pending motion to dismiss an earlier version of the complaint, with the expectation that the Second Amended Complaint mooted the pending motion to dismiss, or whether the government intended to proceed with briefing the issues raised in the pending motion to dismiss. Based on this confusion, the Court excuses the Park children’s untimely motion.

[2] The Court notes that the government has sued the Park children not only individually but also as “Successor Co-Trustees” of the Trust. However, the government apparently does not base its accounting claim against the Park children on their status as such, nor could it, because “[i]f, under the terms of the trust instrument, the successor trustee does not become a trustee until after the death of a predecessor trustee, a court cannot hold him or her liable for an accounting until after the predecessor’s death.” 35 Ill. Law and Prac. Trs. § 125 (citing Landau v. Landau, 101 N.E.2d 103, 107 (Ill. 1951)). Under the terms of the Trust, Mrs. Park was to succeed Mr. Park as trustee, and the Park children did not become “successor co-trustees” upon his death unless Mrs. Park was “unwilling and unable to act as Successor Trustee.” (See 2d Am. Compl., Ex. 1, Trust, Article Fifth, Section 8.) The government apparently recognizes as much in its complaint, stating that the Park children are sued in their capacity as successor co-trustees only “in the event that Mrs. Park has resigned as trustee.” (Id. ¶¶ 9-11.) But the government provides no grounds for any suspicion that she has done so or that, having done so, she has appointed the Park children as her successors (indeed, to the contrary, its claim for breach of fiduciary duty against the trustee of the Trust names only Mrs. Park as a defendant).

End of Document

2013 WL 394701
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
E.D. California.

Nadia ROBERTS, et al., Plaintiffs,
v.
UBS AG, et al., Defendants.

No. CV F 12–0724 LJO SKO.
|
Jan. 30, 2013.

ORDER ON DEFENDANT UBS AG'S F.R.Civ.P. 12 MOTION TO DISMISS (Doc. 26.)

LAWRENCE J. O'NEILL, District Judge.

INTRODUCTION

1 Defendant UBS AG seeks to dismiss as improperly pled and legally barred plaintiffs'[1] fraud, breach of fiduciary duties, malpractice and related claims arising from tax penalties plaintiffs incurred in connection with foreign investments and tax shelters with defendant UBS AG. Plaintiffs filed no timely papers to oppose UBS AG's F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. This Court considered UBS AG's motion to dismiss on the record without a hearing, pursuant to Local Rule 230(c). For the reasons discussed below, this Court DISMISSES plaintiffs' claims subject to the UBS AG's motion to dismiss.

BACKGROUND[2]

Summary

UBS AG is a Swiss corporation and provides global financial services, including banking, securities, trading, brokerage and wealth management services. The FAC also names as defendants four individuals associated with UBS AG, three Swiss business entities, two private Swiss banks, and a Bermuda corporation. The individual plaintiffs are residents of California, Texas, Washington and New York and are former UBS AG clients. The FAC alleges that UBS AG defendants[3] induced plaintiffs "to conceal offshore assets from the U.S. Government using a variety of means, disguises, schemes, tactics, and covers" and "engaged in unlawful trading of U.S. securities" to result in plaintiffs' failure to pay U.S. taxes on their UBS AG investments. The FAC alleges that each plaintiff "faced criminal investigation relating to the shell company structure set up and carried out by Defendants" and "agreed to pay millions of dollars in tax penalties, plus interest, on top of related costs and professional fees." UBS AG challenges the FAC's multiple tort and related claims as lacking sufficient facts and as barred by plaintiffs' own conduct.

IRS Foreign Account And Trust Reporting

Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") Form 1040, Schedule B, Line 7a ("Line 7a") asks: "did you have a financial interest in or signature authority over a financial account (such as a bank account, securities account, or brokerage account located in a foreign country?" Schedule B indicates that if a taxpayer has a foreign account, the taxpayer generally must identify the account's location and complete IRS Form TD F 90–22.1 known as the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR"). FBAR instructions require a taxpayer to file a FBAR if the taxpayer has more than $10,000 in foreign accounts and to disclose maximum account values and financial institutions holding accounts.

UBS AG's Scheme

In 2001, the U.S. Treasury required UBS AG to enter into a Qualified Intermediary ("QI") Agreement to require UBS AG clients to complete Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") forms to identify beneficial account owners believed or known to be U.S. citizens or residents.[4] UBS AG developed a plan "to manipulate its U.S. customers such that UBS would avoid its own compliance with the QI Agreement while also misleading its customers regarding taxes and reporting" in that UBS AG "advised the use of third party trust entities" which "did not comply with its advisement-disclosure-withholding duties under the QI Agreement" and "encouraged inherited offshore accounts to remain in said offshore accounts and concealed the QI Agreement requirements." UBS

AG contracted professional service firms "to create the appearance of legality and independent recommendation and counsel in order to perpetrate their unlawful scheme to avoid the terms of the QI Agreement."

2 UBS AG feigned compliance with the IRS and QI Agreement but "failed to disclose this illegal activity to Plaintiffs or any of its other U.S. clients." UBS AG "schemed to defraud U.S. authorities and solicited, offered, and induced U.S. clients to conceal offshore assets," "anticipated and planned to retaliate against their own clients by creating or positing evidence contrary to the truth should UBS AG clients come forward to the IRS," and "failed to disclose this illegal activity to Plaintiffs."

Execution Of The Scheme As To Plaintiffs

The Roberts

The Roberts are married. In 2004, Sean Roberts ("Mr.Roberts") owned a UBS AG account in the Isle of Mann and UBS AG banker Claude Ullman convinced Mr. Roberts to transfer his account to UBS AG's Swiss location. UBS AG engaged defendant Beda Singenberger ("Mr.Singenberger") to create a third-party trust for Mr. Roberts but neither UBS AG nor Mr. Singenberger "advised plaintiffs of the illegal nature of said third party trust and/or plaintiffs' reporting requirements." UBS AG failed to advise the Roberts of the QI Agreement, that their accounts violated the QI Agreement, and that the Roberts "needed to take steps to advise the IRS and mitigate their damages." In February 2009, UBS AG sent information to the IRS about the Roberts but delayed until November 2009 to advise the Roberts of an amnesty Voluntary Disclosure program.

In June 2011, the Roberts entered into plea agreements to plead guilty to filing a false tax return.

The Gubsers

The Gubsers were married during 1978–2008 and held a Swiss UBS AG account which they allowed to sit and which experienced income growth during 2004–2009. UBS AG never advised the Gubsers that they were subject to the QI Agreement. In December 2010, the Gubsers "realized that they may be subject to prosecution by the IRS for failing to declare a 40–year old account originating in Switzerland." The Gubsers participated in the Voluntary Disclosure program.

Dr. Ginzburg

In 2000, UBS AG banker Gian Gisler ("Mr.Gisler") advised Dr. Ginzburg to change the structure of Dr. Ginzburg's UBS AG funds. UBS AG representatives advised Dr. Ginzburg to close a Liechtenstein-based trust structure in favor of a Hong Kong-based trust, that Dr. Ginzburg "would not have to pay any taxes on any capital gains or dividends until the funds were repatriated" to Dr. Ginzburg's country of future domicile, the United States or Israel, and that he would pay only taxes on possible capital gains and dividends when he repatriated the funds. Dr. Ginzburg was never informed of the QI Agreement, and in November 2008, UBS AG froze his accounts to prevent him to mitigate market losses. UBS AG representatives refused to disclose information about Dr. Ginzburg's accounts and liquidated the stock portfolio at 2009 levels to result in a $1.5 million loss.

In July 2011, Dr. Ginzburg pled guilty to criminal tax fraud.

Mr. Eisenberg

3 Mr. Eisenberg held a UBS AG account in the Grand Caymans and during a vacation there, entered a UBS AG branch to inquire about the account. He was informed that his account was on the "abandoned accounts" list and transferred to Switzerland. Mr. Eisenberg traveled to Switzerland and defendant Hansredi Schumacher ("Mr.Schumacher") advised Mr. Eisenberg to set up a trust. Mr. Eisenberg permitted Mr. Schumacher to set up a Liechtenstein account and was advised "that he would not be required to disclose his account because of the trust formation." In 2010, Mr. Eisenberg discovered that UBS AG double charged fees during the account's life.

UBS AG failed to advise Mr. Eisenberg of the QI Agreement, the need to report his account for taxes, and release by UBS AG of his name to the United States to preclude Mr. Eisenberg to correct defects or seek voluntary disclosure. The IRS prosecuted Mr. Eisenberg who entered into a December 2010 agreement to plead guilty to filing a false tax return and paid $2.5 million penalties on a $65,000 tax bill.

Mr. Chernick

Mr. Chernick succeeded in manufacturing toys with his Shumba corporation. In 2000, UBS AG executive director Phillip Bigger ("Mr.Bigger") recommended to move Mr. Chernick's Cayman Islands account to UBS AG's Hong Kong office, and Mr. Chernick opened up UBS AG Hong Kong accounts. Mr. Chernick was advised to hold U.S. securities in the Hong Kong accounts "without disclosing that Chernick would have to report such holdings to the U.S. or otherwise advising him of the QI Agreement terms." In 2002, defendant Matthias Rickenbach with UBS AG's authorization "caused the setup of a sham entity to hold Shumba and Simba." In 2006, Mr. Bigger caused Mr. Chernick to close his Shumba account at the UBS Hong Kong office and transferred the account's assets, including U.S. securities, to a UBS AG Zurich account. UBS AG failed to inform Mr. Chernick of the QI Agreement requirements to file IRS forms or UBS AG withholding of taxes.

Mr. Chernick entered into a July 2009 agreement to plead guilty to filing a false tax return.

Common Claims

As to all plaintiffs, the FAC alleges that:

1. UBS AG "regularly traded securities on behalf of Plaintiffs" and misrepresented "proper licensure to make each transaction illegally prior to and at the time of each transaction";

2. UBS AG defendants "repeatedly assured Plaintiffs that the management scheme and structure of their investments had been reviewed by UBS AG attorneys and were authorized by and in compliance with U.S. reporting laws"; and

3. UBS AG defendants "regularly met with Plaintiffs" but failed to advise of "the illegality of UBS AG's scheme, any problems related to the tax and investment advice, and/or the likelihood that each Plaintiff would be subject to tax penalties, interest, and criminal investigation as a result of UBS AG's scheme, all the while continuing to manage Plaintiffs' respective funds in accordance with the scheme."

Criminal Prosecution Of UBS AG

4 In November 2008, the United States government filed indictments against UBS AG executives, managers and bankers. On February 18, 2009, UBS AG and the United States government entered into a Deferred Prosecution Agreement ("DPA") by which UBS AG admitted that during 2000–2007, UBS AG "participated in a scheme to defraud the United States and its agency, the IRS by actively assisting or otherwise facilitating a number of United States individual taxpayers in establishing accounts at UBS in a manner designed to conceal the United States taxpayers' ownership or beneficial interest in these accounts." On August 12, 2009, the United States government and UBS AG reached an agreement in principle by which 4,450 UBS AG clients would be revealed.

DISCUSSION

F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) Motion To Dismiss Standards

The FAC alleges 20 tort and related claims which UBS AG contends are precluded by plaintiffs' "own tax fraud" in that all plaintiffs but the Gubsers have pled guilty to criminal tax fraud by knowingly filing false returns and concealing income. UBS AG faults plaintiffs' failure to disclose their foreign accounts on tax returns to render the FAC's claims based on an "implausible premise that UB S somehow caused them to reasonably believe they could legally lie to the IRS, keep secret their foreign accounts from the IRS, and fail to pay taxes."

"When a federal court reviews the sufficiency of a complaint, before the reception of any evidence either by affidavit or admissions, its task is necessarily a limited one. The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheurer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 40 L.Ed.2d 90 (1974); Gilligan v. Jamco Development Corp., 108 F.3d 246,249 (9th Cir.1997). A

F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper where there is either a "lack of a cognizable legal theory" or "the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balisteri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir.1990); Graehling v. Village of Lombard, Ill., 58 F.3d 295, 297 (7th Cir.1995). A F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion "tests the legal sufficiency of a claim." Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir.2001).

In addressing dismissal, a court must: (1) construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff; (2) accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true; and (3) determine whether plaintiff can prove any set of facts to support a claim that would merit relief. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337–338 (9th Cir.1996). Nonetheless, a court is not required "to accept as true allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Sciences Securities Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir.2008) (citation omitted). A court "need not assume the truth of legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations," U.S. ex rel. Chunie v. Ringrose, 788 F.2d 638, 643, n. 2 (9th Cir.1986), and must not "assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated ... laws in ways that have not been alleged." Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S.Ct. 897, 74 L.Ed.2d 723 (1983). A court need not permit an attempt to amend if "it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by an amendment." Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir.2005).

5 A plaintiff is obliged "to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' [which] requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 554,550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1964–65, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007) (internal citations omitted). Moreover, a court "will dismiss any claim that, even when construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, fails to plead sufficiently all required elements of a cause of action." Student Loan Marketing Ass'n v. Hanes, 181 F.R.D. 629, 634 (S.D.Cal.1998). In practice, a complaint "must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 562, 127 S.Ct. at 1969 (quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir.1984)).

In Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937,1949, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009), the U.S. Supreme Court explained:

> ... a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." ... A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.... The plausibility standard is not akin to a "probability requirement," but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. (Citations omitted.)

After discussing Iqbal, the Ninth Circuit summarized: "In sum, for a complaint to survive [dismissal], the non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief ." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 989 (9h Cir.2009) (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. at 1949, 173 L.Ed.2d 868).

The U.S. Supreme Court applies a "two-prong approach" to address dismissal:

> First, the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.... Second, only a complaint that states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss.... Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will ... be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense.... But where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not "show[n]"-"that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 8(a)(2).
>
> In keeping with these principles a court considering a motion to dismiss can choose to begin by identifying pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth. While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. When there are well-pleaded factual > allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.

6 Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. at 1949–1950, 173 L.Ed.2d 868.

A plaintiff suing multiple defendants "must allege the basis of his claim against each defendant to satisfy Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), which requires a short and plain statement of the claim to put defendants on sufficient notice of the allegations against them." Gauvin v. Trombatore, 682 F.Supp. 1067, 1071 (N.D.Cal.1988). "Specific identification of the parties to the activities alleged by the plaintiffs is required in this action to enable the defendant to plead intelligently." Van Dyke Ford, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 399 F.Supp. 277, 284 (D.Wis.1975).

With these standards in mind, this Court turns to UBS AG's challenges the FAC claims.

Fraud

The FAC's (first) fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment and (third) negligent misrepresentation claims allege that to induce plaintiffs to transfer their account investments to UBS AG and to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars in fees, UBS AG and other defendants misrepresented that the formation and form of shell corporations "were permitted by the IRS" and concealed from plaintiffs that "they not only owed taxes on their investments with the IRS but would face criminal investigation for the management structure of their respective accounts." The FAC's (second) constructive fraud claim alleges that UBS AG and other defendants breached duties owed to plaintiffs by forming shell corporations "with the representation that said formations were permitted by the IRS," failing "to report each Plaintiff's information to the IRS or to withhold taxes pursuant to the QI agreement," providing "erroneous tax opinions," and concealing that each plaintiff "would face criminal investigation."

Bar Of Plaintiffs' Own Fraud

UBS AG initially challenges the complaint's fraud claims as barred by plaintiffs' own fraud. UBS AG points to Olenicoff v. UBS AG, 2012 WL 1192911, at *1 (C.D.Cal.2012), where the plaintiff pursued claims against UBS AG after the plaintiff pled guilty to knowingly and willfully failing to disclose off-shore accounts on his tax returns. The fellow district judge in Olenicoff, 2012 WL 1192911, at *1, observed:

> To defend itself, UBS is forced to strenuously insist that its prior guilty plea only admitted to assisting willing clients with tax fraud, not forcing unsuspecting clients into tax evasion. While its argument is ironic, UBS is right. Even assuming that UBS gave [plaintiff] fraudulent tax advice, that makes UBS a co-conspirator, not a defendant in this litigation.

UBS AG argues that plaintiffs must bear responsibility for their own fraud and related actions in absence of FAC allegations that they misinterpreted or did not know of Line 7a or that UBS AG prepared their tax returns, advised them how to answer tax return questions, or represented that plaintiffs could legally deny existence of their UBS AG accounts.

Fraud Elements

UBS AG further challenges the FAC's absence of facts to support fraud elements.

7 The elements of a California fraud claim are: (1) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment or nondisclosure); (2) knowledge of the falsity (or "scienter"); (3) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. Lazar v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.4th 631, 638, 49 Cal.Rptr.2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 (1996). The same elements comprise a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation, except there is no requirement of intent to induce reliance. Caldo v. Owens–Illinois, Inc., 125 Cal.App.4th 513, 519, 23 Cal.Rtpr.3d 1 (2004).

"[T]o establish a cause of action for fraud a plaintiff must plead and prove in full, factually and specifically, all of the elements of the cause of action." Conrad v. Bank of America, 45 Cal.App.4th 133, 156, 53 Cal.Rptr.2d 336

(1996). There must be a showing "that the defendant thereby intended to induce the plaintiff to act to his detriment in reliance upon the false representation" and "that the plaintiff actually and justifiably relied upon the defendant's misrepresentation in acting to his detriment." Conrad, 45 Cal.App.4th at 157, 53 Cal.Rptr.2d 336; see Grant Thornton LLP v. Prospect High Income Fund, 314 S.W.3d 913, 923 (Tex.2010) ("Both fraud and negligent misrepresentation require that the plaintiff show actual and justifiable reliance"); J.A.O. Acquisition Corp. v. Stavitsky, 8 N.Y.3d 144, 148, 831 N.Y.S.2d 364, 863 N.E.2d 585 (N.Y.2007); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Baik, 147 Wash.2d 536, 624, 55 P.3d 619 (Wash.2002). "The absence of any one of these required elements will preclude recovery." Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell, 186 Cal.App.3d 1324, 1332, 231 Cal.Rptr. 355 (1986).

UBS AG faults the FAC's absence of facts to support plaintiffs' actual and justifiable reliance on UBS AG's misrepresentations or omissions. UBS AG argues that fraud claims based on an "omission" theory fail in that Line 7a seeks an unequivocal disclosure ("did you have a financial interest in or signature authority over a financial account ... located in a foreign country?").

UBS AG attacks an affirmatively misrepresented tax-reporting theory in that there is no justifiable reliance if a plaintiff unreasonably fails to conduct an independent inquiry that would have uncovered the truth or disregards known and obvious risks. See Cameron v. Cameron, 88 Cal.App.2d 585, 594, 199 P.2d 443 (1948) ("If [one] becomes aware of facts that tend to arouse his suspicion, or if he has reason to believe that any representations made to him are false or only half true, it is his legal duty to complete his investigation and he has no right to rely on statements of the other contracting party.") UBS AG contends that given clarity of disclosure required by IRS tax forms, plaintiffs could not have justifiably relied on UBS AG's alleged statements suggesting otherwise.

UBS AG points to the absence of allegations that UBS AG informed plaintiffs to deny that they held interests in foreign accounts or not to file Schedule B's and FBARs. UBS AG continues that an account holder is unable to claim that UBS AG caused the account holder's tax fraud when he/she declared under penalty of perjury for years that he/she "had no interest in foreign accounts despite knowing that he or she did."

Particularity Pleading Standard

8 UBS AG faults the FAC's absence of specific allegations to support fraud-based claims.

F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) requires a party to "state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud." [5] In the Ninth Circuit, "claims for fraud and negligent misrepresentation must meet Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirements." Neilson v. Union Bank of California, N.A., 290 F.Supp.2d 1101, 1141 (C.D.Cal.2003). A court may dismiss a claim grounded in fraud when its allegations fail to satisfy F.R.Civ.P. 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1107. [6] A motion to dismiss a claim "grounded in fraud" under F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) for failure to plead with particularity is the "functional equivalent" of a F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1107. As a counter-balance, F.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2) requires from a pleading "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief."

F.R.Civ.P. 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard "is not an invitation to disregard Rule 8's requirement of simplicity, directness, and clarity" and "has among its purposes the avoidance of unnecessary discovery." McHenry v. Renne, 84 F.3d 1172,1178 (9th Cir.1996). F.R.Civ.P 9(b) requires "specific" allegations of fraud "to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Semegen v. Weidner, 780 F.2d 727, 731 (9th Cir.1985). "A pleading is sufficient under Rule 9(b) if it identifies the circumstances constituting fraud so that the defendant can prepare an adequate answer from the allegations." Neubronner v. Milken, 6 F.3d 666, 671–672 (9th Cir.1993) (internal quotations omitted; citing Gottreich v. San Francisco Investment Corp., 552 F.2d 866, 866 (9th Cir.1997)). The Ninth Circuit has explained:

> Rule 9(b) requires particularized allegations of the circumstances constituting fraud. The time, place and content of an alleged misrepresentation may identify the statement or the omission complained of, but these circumstances do not "constitute" fraud. The statement in question must be false to be fraudulent. Accordingly, our cases have consistently required that circumstances indicating falseness be set forth.... [W]e [have] observed > that plaintiff must include statements regarding the time, place, and nature of the alleged fraudulent activities, and that "mere conclusory allegations of fraud are insufficient." ... The plaintiff must set forth what is false or misleading about a statement, and why it is false. In other words, the plaintiff must set forth an explanation as to why the statement or omission complained of was false or misleading....

>
> In certain cases, to be sure, the requisite particularity might be supplied with great simplicity.

In Re Glenfed, Inc. Securities Litigation, 42 F.3d 1541, 1547–1548 (9th Cir.1994) (en banc) (italics in original) superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Marksman Partners, L.P. v. Chantal Pharm. Corp., 927 F.Supp. 1297 (C.D.Cal.1996); see Cooper v. Pickett, 137 F.3d 616, 627 (9th Cir.1997) (fraud allegations must be accompanied by "the who, what, when, where, and how" of the misconduct charged); see Neubronner, 6 F.3d at 672 ("The complaint must specify facts as the times, dates, places, benefits received and other details of the alleged fraudulent activity."); Schreiber Distributing Co. v. Serv–Well Furniture Co., Inc., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (1986) ("the pleader must state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation").

9 In a fraud action against a corporation, a plaintiff must "allege the names of the persons who made the allegedly fraudulent representations, their authority to speak, to whom they spoke, what they said or wrote, and when it was said or written." Tarmann v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2 Cal.App.4th 153, 157, 2 Cal.Rptr.2d 861 (1991).

F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) "does not allow a complaint to merely lump multiple defendants together but 'require[s] plaintiffs to differentiate their allegations when suing more than one defendant ... and inform each defendant separately of the allegations surrounding his alleged participation in the fraud.' " Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764–765 (9th Cir.2007) (quoting Haskin v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 995 F.Supp. 1437, 1439 (M.D.Fla.1998)). In the context of a fraud suit involving multiple defendants, a plaintiff must, at a minimum, "identif[y] the role of [each] defendant[ ] in the alleged fraudulent scheme." Moore v. Kayport Package Express, Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 541 (9th Cir.1989). "To state a claim of fraudulent conduct, which carries substantial reputational costs, plaintiffs must provide each and every defendant with enough information to enable them 'to know what misrepresentations are attributable to them and what fraudulent conduct they are charged with.' " Pegasus Holdings v. Veterinary Centers of America, Inc., 38 F.Supp.2d 1158, 1163 (C.D.Cal.1998) (quoting In re Worlds of Wonder Sec. Litig., 694 F.Supp. 1427, 1433 (N.D.Cal.1988)).

UBS AG argues that FAC's detailed allegations are limited to statements republished from UBS AG 2002, 2004 and 2006 publications and as to those statements, there is no clarity that "plaintiffs were exposed to these statements, or how those plaintiffs were affected."

UBS AG raises valid, unopposed attacks on the FAC's fraud claims. The FAC fails to address plaintiffs' own fraudulent misreporting of taxes and its impact on their fraud claims against UBS AG. The FAC fails to satisfy F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) particularity requirements. The FAC's bulk and verbosity do not equate to specific allegations of fraud attributed to identified defendants. The FAC lumps multiple defendants and offers little clarity as to the description and source of affirmative misrepresentations or concealments. A further FAC failing is the lack of sufficient facts to support reliance elements especially considering the obvious risk of failing to report income to the IRS. The FAC's fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment and negligent misrepresentation claims are subject to dismissal with leave to amend.

Breach Of Fiduciary Duty

The FAC's (six) breach of fiduciary duty and (ninth) professional malpractice claims accuse UBS AG and other defendants of fiduciary breaches by, among other things:

1. Soliciting and manipulating plaintiffs to transfer assets to and maintain accounts with UBS AG;

2. Failing to disclose and comply with the QI Agreement and other disclosure and tax requirements;

10 3. Failing to ensure that plaintiffs' UBS AG transactions complied with law;

4. Advising plaintiffs that their UBS AG transactions were legitimate and complied with tax law;

5. Promoting and selling unregistered and ineffective tax shelters; and

6. Improperly managing plaintiffs' assets.

UBS AG argues that fiduciary-based fraud, negligence and breach claims fail in the absence of an actionable duty to impose on UBS AG. UBS AG contends initially that as a bank, it owed no fiduciary duty to plaintiffs.

Elements

"The elements of a cause of action for negligence are (1) a legal duty to use reasonable care, (2) breach of that duty, and (3) proximate [or legal] cause between the breach and (4) the plaintiff's injury." Mendoza v. City of Los Angeles, 66 Cal.App.4th 1333, 1339, 78 Cal.Rptr.2d 525 (1998) (citation omitted).

"The elements of a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty are: (1) the existence of a fiduciary duty; (2) a breach of the fiduciary duty; and (3) resulting damage. Pellegrini v. Weiss, 165 Cal.App.4th 515, 524, 81 Cal.Rptr.3d 387 (2008).

In Salahutdin v. Valley of California, Inc., 24 Cal.App.4th 555, 562, 29 Cal.Rptr.2d 463 (1994), the California Court of Appeal explained constructive fraud:

> Constructive fraud is a unique species of fraud applicable only to a fiduciary or confidential relationship.... [A]s a general principle constructive fraud comprises any act, omission or concealment involving a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust or confidence which results in damage to another even though the conduct is not otherwise fraudulent. Most acts by an agent in breach of his fiduciary duties constitute constructive fraud. The failure of the fiduciary to disclose a material fact to his principal which might affect the fiduciary's motives or the principal's decision, which is known (or should be known) to the fiduciary, may constitute constructive fraud. Also, a careless misstatement may constitute constructive fraud even though there is no fraudulent intent. (Citation and internal punctuation omitted).

Account Management

UBS AG argues that fiduciary-based claims founded on mismanagement of plaintiffs' accounts fail in the absence of a subject fiduciary duty to impose on UBS AG.

A fiduciary relationship arises "between parties to a transaction wherein one of the parties is ... duty bound to act with the utmost good faith for the benefit of the other party." Herbert v. Lankershim, 9 Cal.2d 409, 483, 71 P.2d 220 (1937). A fiduciary relationship "ordinarily arises where a confidence is reposed by one person in the integrity of another, and in such a relation the party in whom the confidence is reposed, if he voluntarily accepts or assumes to accept the confidence, can take no advantage from his acts relating to the interest of the other party without the latter's knowledge or consent." Herbert, 9 Cal.2d at 483, 71 P.2d 220.

11 Nonetheless "no fiduciary relationship is established merely because 'the parties reposed trust and confidence in each other.' " Girard v. Delta Towers Joint Venture, 20 Cal.App.4th 1741, 1749, 26 Cal.Rptr.2d 102 (1993) (quoting Worldvision Enterprises, Inc. v. American Broadcasting Companies, Inc., 142 Cal.App.3d 589, 595, 191 Cal.Rptr. 148 (1983)). To be charged with a fiduciary obligation, a person must knowingly undertake to act on behalf and for the benefit of another, or must enter into a relationship which imposes that undertaking as a matter of law. City of Hope Nat. Medical Center v. Genentech, Inc., 43 Cal.4th 375, 385, 75 Cal.Rptr.3d 333, 181 P.3d 142 (2008).

"California courts have not extended the 'special relationship' doctrine to include ordinary commercial contractual relationships" Martin v. U–Haul Co. Of Fresno, 204 Cal.App.3d 396, 412, 251 Cal.Rptr. 17 (1988) (citations omitted). The "relationship between a bank and its depositor is not fiduciary in character." Das v. Bank of America, N.A., 186 Cal.App.4th 727, 741, 112

Cal.Rptr.3d 439 (2010). "[U]nder ordinary circumstances the relationship between a bank and its depositor is that of debtor-creditor, and is not a fiduciary one." Lawrence v. Bank of America, 163 Cal.App.3d 431, 437, 209 Cal.Rptr. 541 (1985); see Bennice v. Lakeshore Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 254 A.D.2d 731, 732, 677 N.Y.S.2d 842 (1998) ("Absent the existence of a special relationship of trust and confidence, a bank has no duty to inform a customer or depositor of the tax consequences of a transaction"); Tokarz v. Frontier Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 33 Wash.App. 456, 459, 656 P.2d 1089 (1982); Jockusch v. Towsey, 51 Tex. 129, 131 (1879).

Tax Advice

UBS AG further challenges fiduciary-based claims in the absence of FAC allegations that plaintiffs "yielded control over tax matters to UBS" or delegated "total control over tax reporting to UBS." UBS AG further notes that the FAC does not allege that UBS AG advised plaintiffs "not to resort to other tax accountants."

UBS AG faults "tax adviser" claims a inadequately pled in that the fraud, negligence and fiduciary claims turn on a relationship triggering a duty to disclose, but the QI Agreement is between UBS AG and the IRS, not plaintiffs, and thus generates UBS AG duties to the IRS, not to plaintiffs. UBS AG notes that the QI Agreement requires it to collect information about account holders, not to provide information to account holders. Thomas v. UBS AG, 2012 WL 2396866, at * 5 (N.D.Ill.2012) ("UBS's obligations under the QI Agreement run to the IRS, not the Plaintiffs. Therefore, Plaintiffs' allegation that UBS had a duty to Plaintiffs is not plausible"). UBS AG continues that QI Agreement never altered plaintiffs' disclosure requirements "on the IRS's crystal-clear tax forms."

The FAC lacks facts to support fiduciary-based claims. The FAC reveals a banking-investment or commercial relationship among UBS AG and plaintiffs. Certainly, no fiduciary relationship could arise from arrangements to conceal income and avoid taxes. No facts are apparent to warrant an attempt to amend fiduciary-based claims which are subject to dismissal with prejudice. Nonetheless, facts may exist to attempt to support claims based on general negligence or malpractice to the extent UBS AG owed such duties to plaintiffs. As such, the FAC's general negligence or malpractice based claims are subject to dismissal with leave to amend.

Securities Fraud

12 The FAC's (fourth) securities fraud claim accuses UBS AG and other defendants of violating Section 10(b) of the Securities and Exchange Act, 15 U.S.C. § 78j (b), and its Rule 10b–5, 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b–5. The FAC's (fifth) securities fraud claim accuses UBS AG and other defendants of violation of California Corporations Code sections 25401 ("section 25401") and 25501 ("section 25501") based on misrepresentations and concealments that:

1. UBS AG and/or its third-party affiliates would prepare proper and legal documentation to form IRS-permissible shell corporations;

2. Ownership of UBS AG accounts "would be fully compliant with all U.S. reporting requirements"; and

3. Defendants would report all income and accounts required by the IRS "to ensure each Plaintiff would comply with all U.S. tax reporting requirements."

UBS AG faults the securities fraud claims in absence of FAC allegations of "purchase or sale of any securities by plaintiffs from UBS AG." A federal securities fraud claim requires an untrue statement or omission of material fact "in connection with the purchase or sale of any security." Basic Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224, 231, 108 S.Ct. 978, 99 L.Ed.2d 194 (1988). To support a California securities fraud claim, a plaintiff must allege that there was an "offer to sell a security in this state or buy or offer to buy a security." Goodworth Holdings Inc. v. Suh, 239 F.Supp.2d 947, 962 (N.D.Cal.2002).

UBS AG criticizes the FAC's failure to identify "a single purchase or sale of a security that is connected to the alleged fraudulent statements by UBS AG." UBS AG challenges the FAC's failure "to identify even one security that was purchased or sold through their UBS accounts." To satisfy the "in connection with the purchase or sale of any security" requirement, "the misrepresentation or omission must pertain to the securities themselves; allegations of fraud merely involving securities are not sufficient." Bissell v. Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc., 937 F.Supp. 237, 242 (S.D.N.Y.1996). "[U]nless the alleged fraud concerns the value of the securities bought or sold, or the consideration received in return, such fraud is not 'in connection with' the purchase or sale of a security." Bissell, 937 F.Supp. at 242.

UBS AG further faults absence of allegations of plaintiffs' damage "by any alleged misstatement regarding regulatory licenses" given the there are no claims that plaintiffs "were denied a rightful interest in any securities that UBS offered, or purported to offer, but was not legally able to facilitate." UBS AG notes the absence of facts to connect unspecified licenses to plaintiffs' truthful completion of their tax returns.

Turning to the California securities fraud claim, UBS AG further faults the absence of facts of "privity between the purchaser and seller of the security." Section 25401 "requires plaintiff to demonstrate privity with each defendant." Goodworth Holdings Inc. v. Suh, 239 F.Supp.2d 947, 963 (N.D.Cal.2002). Section 25501 provides that any person who violates section 25401 "shall be liable to the person who purchases a security from him." Apollo Capital Fund, LLC v. Roth Capital Partners, LLC, 158 Cal.App.4th 226, 252–253, 70 Cal.Rptr.3d 199 (2007). "Section 25501 on its face requires privity between the plaintiff and the defendant." Apollo Capital, 158 Cal.App.4th at 253, 70 Cal.Rptr.3d 199; see California Amplifier, Inc. v. RLI Ins. Co., 94 Cal.App.4th 102, 109, 113 Cal.Rptr.2d 915 (2001) (Section 25501 "retain[s] the privity requirement from common law fraud"); Admiralty v. Jones, 677 F.2d 1289,1296 (9th Cir.1982) (under section 25501, "liability was limited to actual sellers" and seller's attorney "was not the literal seller, as required by this section").

13 The FAC's securities fraud claims fail in the absence of facts of sales between UBS AG and plaintiffs. The FAC focuses on alleged exorbitant fees charged by UBS AG but identifies no specific securities transactions involving UBS AG as a party. At best, the FAC hints to fraud involving securities, not pertaining to the securities themselves. No facts are apparent to warrant an attempt to amend securities fraud claims which are subject to dismissal with prejudice.

RICO[7]

The FAC's (seventh) RICO claim alleges UBS AG's and other defendants' violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) ("section 1962(c)") based on predicate acts of:

1. "Embezzlement by the UBS AG Defendants and the third party affiliates who set up improper trusts ... and who further took money from Plaintiffs under false pretenses between 2008 and 2010";

2. "Fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment by ... individuals on behalf of UB S AG ... between 2000 and 2010 relating to fund management, tax legalities, liabilities, and filing requirements, privacy, quality of securities, true price of securities, misappropriation of funds, and true use of assets"; and

3. "Securities fraud ... between 2000 and 2010, including intentional statutory and governmental violations of selling securities without proper licensure, and ignoring nonlicensure of employees and third party securities promoters."

The FAC's (eighth) RICO conspiracy claim alleges UBS AG and other defendants conspired jointly to violate section 1962(c) through a pattern of racketeering and in turn to violate 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d) ("section 1962(d)").

Section 1962(c) and (d) provide:

> (c) It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.
>
> (d) It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsection (a), (b), or (c) of this section.

A violation of § 1962(c) "requires (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. The plaintiff must, of course, allege each of these elements to state a claim." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 87 L.Ed.2d 346 (1985).

Subsection (5) of 18 U.S.C. § 1961("section 1961") defines "pattern of racketeering activity" to require "at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after the effective date of this chapter and the last of which occurred within ten years (excluding any period of imprisonment) after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." Section 1961 "does not so much define a pattern of racketeering activity as state a minimum necessary condition for the existence of such a pattern." H.J., Inc. v. Northwest Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 237, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195 (1989). Section 1961(5) "says of the phrase 'pattern of racketeering activity' only that it 'requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after [October 15, 1970,] and the last of which occurred within ten years (excluding any period of imprisonment) after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity.' It thus places an outer limit on the concept of a pattern of racketeering activity that is broad indeed." H.J., Inc., 492 U.S. at 237, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195. "Section 1961(5) concerns only the minimum number of predicates necessary to establish a pattern; and it assumes that there is something to a RICO pattern beyond simply the number of predicate acts involved." H.J., Inc., 492 U.S. at 238, 109 S.Ct. at 2900 (italics in original).

14 UBS AG faults the FAC's failure to allege "any predicate acts that would form the basis" for the FAC's RICO claims. UBS AG notes that securities fraud fails to support a RICO claim and points to 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c): "no person may rely upon any conduct that would have been actionable as fraud in the purchase or sale of securities to establish a violation of section 1962." "In 1995, Congress amended the RICO statute to eliminate securities fraud as a predicate act upon which to base a RICO claim.... The rule that a plaintiff cannot assert a RICO claim based on predicate acts that sound in securities fraud is applicable even if, as is the case here, the claim is plead as a matter of mail fraud or wire fraud." Swartz v. KPMG, LLC, 401 F.Supp.2d 1146, 1151 (W.D.Wash.2004).

UBS AG argues that a RICO claim based on other fraud as predicate acts fails in the absence of "the particular contents of the alleged fraudulent representations." UBS AG contends that the FAC lacks allegations of UBS AG's embezzlement.

The Ninth Circuit applies F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) particularity requirements to RICO claims under 18 U.S.C. § 1962. Moore v. Kayport Package Exp., Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 541 (9th Cir.1989); Alan Neuman Prods., Inc. v. Albright, 862 F.2d 1388, 1392–93 (9th Cir.1988) ("The allegations of predicate acts in the complaint concerning those elements of RICO are entirely general; no specifics of time, place, or nature of the alleged communications are pleaded. This is a fatal defect under Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b), which requires that circumstances constituting fraud be stated with particularity."); Schreiber Distrib. Co. v. ServWell Furniture Co. ., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir.1986) ("We have interpreted Rule 9(b) to mean that the pleader must state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation.")

"The mere assertion of a RICO claim consequently has an almost inevitable stigmatizing effect on those named as defendants. In fairness to innocent parties, courts should strive to flush out frivolous RICO allegations at an early stage of the litigation." Figueroa Ruiz v. Alegria, 896 F.2d 645, 650 (1st Cir.1990).

"The particularity requirements of Rule 9(b) apply to allegations of mail fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, and wire fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1343, when used as predicate acts for a RICO claim." Murr Plumbing, Inc. v. Scherer Bros. Financial Services Co., 48 F.3d 1066, 1069 (8th Cir.1995).

UBS AG faults the RICO conspiracy claim's absence of "allegations of coordination or organization among UBS AG and other Defendants who are alleged to have 'continued' some sort of scheme during the years after plaintiffs closed their UBS accounts in June 2005."

The FAC's RICO claims fail. Securities fraud fails to serve as a predicate act for a RICO claim. The FAC's RICO claims based on predicate acts of securities fraud are subject to dismissal with prejudice. RICO claims based on other predicate acts fail in absence of particularity to satisfy F.R.Civ.P. 9(b), similar to the FAC's fraud claims. Although the FAC offers little to support a potential RICO claim, out of an abundance of caution, the RICO claims, based on predicate acts other than securities fraud, are dismissed with leave to amend.

Disgorgement

15 The FAC's (tenth) disgorgement claim alleges that UBS AG and other defendants charged for "management" services which "were not customary, but were excessive, especially in light of the alleged scheme" and UBS AG's and other defendants' lacking licenses "to conduct any of the transactions, give advice, sell, and/or invest" plaintiffs' assets." The disgorgement claim seeks "all fees, profits, commissions, received by Defendants either directly from each Plaintiff or from any and all other Defendants and/or third parties, in the preparation of and formation of business entities, and 'salaries' obtained from entities" using plaintiffs' assets.

Disgorgement is an "equitable remedy designed to deprive a wrongdoer of his unjust enrichment." SEC v. First City Fin. Corp. ., 890 F.2d 1215, 1231 (D.C.Cir.1989). UBS AG contends that the FAC is unable to allege a claim for disgorgement, which is a remedy, "not a claim in itself." S.E.C. v. FirstJersey Securities, Inc., 101 F.3d 1450,1478 (2nd Cir.1996). Moorehead v. Deutsche Bank AG, 2011 WL 4496221, at *3, n. 1 (N.D.Ill.2011) ("Defendants correctly argue that 'disgorgement' is a remedy rather than an independent cause of action"); In re Wiand, 2007 WL 963162, at * 15 (M.D.Fla.2007) (disgorgement claim failed "as a matter of law because disgorgement is not an independent cause of action. It may be a remedy for a viable cause of action at common law or, in some circumstances, is provided as a statutory remedy for certain claims").

UBS AG argues that equitable grounds do not support disgorgement in that UBS AG disgorged profits with its DPA settlement with the United States government.

Nothing supports disgorgement as a separate claim to subject the FAC's (tenth) disgorgement claim to dismissal with prejudice.

Civil Conspiracy

The FAC's (eleventh) civil conspiracy claim alleges that UBS AG and other defendants engaged in civil conspiracies to misrepresent to plaintiffs "the true nature of the investment scheme to defraud each Plaintiff into paying unnecessary and excessive fees for a fraudulent product and fraudulent services and to convert assets from each Plaintiff."

UBS AG faults a civil conspiracy claim as not actionable. "[C]ivil conspiracy is not an independent tort." Kidron v. Movie Acquisition Corp., 40 Cal.App.4th 1571, 1581, 47 Cal.Rptr.2d 752 (1995); see Four Bros. Boat Works, Inc. v. Tesoro Petroleum Companies, Inc., 217 S.W.3d 653, 668 (2006) ("There is no independent liability for civil conspiracy"); Hoeffner v. Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, 85 A.D.3d 457, 924 N.Y.S.2d 376, 377 (App.Div.2011) ("it is well settled that New York does not recognize an independent civil tort of conspiracy"). "Conspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration." Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., 7 Cal.4th 503, 510–511, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994) (citing Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co., 24 Cal.3d 773, 784,157 Cal.Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 (1979)). "Standing alone, a conspiracy does no harm and engenders no tort liability. It must be activated by the commission of an actual tort." Applied Equipment, 7 Cal.4th at 511, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454. "The essence of the claim is that it is merely a mechanism for imposing vicarious liability; it is not itself a substantive basis for liability." Berg & Berg Enterprises, LLC v. Sherwood Partners, Inc., 131 Cal.App.4th 802, 823, 32 Cal.Rptr.3d 325 (2005).

16 Nothing supports civil conspiracy as a separate claim to subject the FAC's (eleventh) civil conspiracy claim to dismissal with prejudice.

Accounting

The FAC's (nineteenth) accounting claim alleges that UBS AG and other defendants "have received money, a portion of which is still due to each Plaintiff," but the amount of money due cannot be ascertained and/or verified without an accounting."

UBS AG argues that accounting is not an actionable claim.

An accounting cause of action is equitable and may be sought where the accounts are so complicated that an ordinary legal action demanding a fixed sum is impracticable. Civic Western Corp. v. Zila Industries, Inc., 66 Cal.App.3d 1, 14, 135 Cal.Rptr. 915 (1977). A suit for an accounting will not lie where it appears from the complaint that none is necessary or that there is an adequate remedy at law. Civic Western, 66 Cal.App.3d at 14, 135 Cal.Rptr. 915. An accounting will not be accorded with respect to a sum that a plaintiff seeks to recover and alleges in his complaint to be a sum certain. Civic Western, 66 Cal.App.3d at 14, 135 Cal.Rptr. 915. Moreover, an accounting claim "need only state facts showing the existence of the relationship which requires an accounting and the statement that some balance is due the plaintiff." Brea v. McGlashan, 3 Cal.App.2d 454, 460, 39 P.2d 877 (1934).

"A right to an accounting is derivative; it must be based on other claims." Janis v. California State Lottery Com., 68 Cal.App.4th 824, 833–834, 80 Cal.Rptr.2d 549 (1998). Moreover, as an equitable matter, an accounting frequently "presents a fiduciary relation between the parties in the nature of a trust which brings it especially within equitable remedies." Kritzer v. Lancaster, 96 Cal.App.2d 1, 6, 214 P.2d 407 (1950).

The FAC lacks facts to support an accounting, especially given dismissal of fiduciary-based claims. There are no facts to support complicated accounts, and presumably plaintiffs have the ability to ascertain what they allegedly paid to UBS AG. Nothing suggests that a remedy at law will not address the matters raised by the accounting claim, which is subject to dismissal with prejudice.

Declaratory Relief

The FAC's (twentieth) declaratory relief claim seeks judicial determinations that UBS AG and other defendants are "legally responsible" for interest and penalties assessed by taxing authorities and plaintiffs' professional fees and costs in connection with investigations and audits. The declaratory relief claim further seeks judicial determination that agreements "entered into with Defendants are void and unenforceable."

The Declaratory Judgment Act ("DJA"), 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201, 2202, provides in pertinent part:

> In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction ... any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a final judgment or decree and shall be reviewable as such.

17 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a).

The DJA's operation "is procedural only." Aetna Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240, 57 S.Ct. 461, 463, 81 L.Ed. 617 (1937). "A declaratory judgment is not a theory of recovery." Commercial Union Ins. Co. v. Walbrook Ins. Co., Ltd., 41 F.3d 764, 775 (1st Cir.1994). The DJA "merely offers an additional remedy to litigants." Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Karp, 108 F.3d 17, 21 (2nd Cir.1997) (italics in original). A DJA action requires a district court to "inquire whether there is a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction." American States Ins. Co. v. Kearns, 15 F.3d 142, 143 (9th Cir.1994).

Declaratory relief is appropriate "(1) when the judgment will serve a useful purpose in clarifying and settling the legal relations in issue, and (2) when it will terminate and afford relief from the uncertainty, insecurity, and controversy giving rise to the proceeding." Bilbrey by Bilbrey v. Brown, 738 F.2d 1462, 1470 (9th Cir.1984).

As to a controversy to invoke declaratory relief, the question is whether there is a "substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal rights, or sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment." Maryland Cas. Co. v. Pacific Coal & Oil Co., 312 U.S. 270, 273, 61 S.Ct. 510, 512, 85 L.Ed. 826 (1941). The U.S. Supreme Court has further explained:

> A justiciable controversy is thus distinguished from a difference or dispute of a hypothetical or abstract character; from one that is academic or moot.... The controversy must be definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse legal interests.... It must be a real and substantial controversy admitting of specific relief through a decree of a conclusive character, > as distinguished from an opinion advising what the law would be upon a hypothetical state of facts.

Haworth, 300 U.S. at 240–241, 57 S.Ct. at 464 (citations omitted).

A declaratory relief action "brings to the present a litigable controversy, which otherwise might only be tried in the future." Societe de Conditionnement v. Hunter Eng. Co., Inc., 655 F.2d 938, 943 (9th Cir.1981). As an equitable remedy, declaratory relief is "dependent upon a substantive basis for liability" and has "no separate viability" if all other causes of action are barred. Glue–Fold, Inc. v. Slautterback Corp., 82 Cal.App.4th 1018, 1023, n. 3, 98 Cal.Rptr.2d 661 (2000).

The FAC fails to support a declaratory relief claim given dismissal of other claims subject to UBS AG's motion to dismiss. The FAC fails to substantiate an independent claim for declaratory relief, and such claim is subject to dismissal with leave to amend.

Breach Of Contract

The FAC's (sixteenth) breach of contract claim alleges that plaintiffs "entered into implied, oral and written contracts with Defendants to provide [them] with professionally competent investment advisory and execution services, tax and legal advice and services, and accounting services." The breach of contract claim further alleges that UBS AG and other defendants "breached their contracts by, among other things, providing each Plaintiff with advice, opinions, recommendations, representations, instructions, and services that Defendants either knew or reasonably should have known to be wrong" and charging plaintiffs "fees, costs, and expenses that were not chargeable or agreed to by each Plaintiff."

18 "The standard elements of a claim for breach of contract are: (1) the contract, (2) plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) defendant's breach, and (4) damage to plaintiff therefrom." Wall Street Network, Ltd. v. New York Times Co., 164 Cal.App.4th 1171, 1178, 80 Cal.Rptr.3d 6 (2008). "To form a contract, an 'offer must be sufficiently definite ... that the performance promised is reasonably certain.' " Alexander v.Codemasters Group Limited, 104 Cal.App.4th 129, 141, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d 145. 127 Cal.Rptr.2d 145 (2002).

Essential elements to contract existence are: (1) "[p]arties capable of contracting;" (2) "[t]heir consent;" (3) a "lawful object;" and (4) a "sufficient cause or consideration." Cal. Civ.Code, § 1550.

"A written contract may be pleaded either by its terms —set out verbatim in the complaint or a copy of the contract attached to the complaint and incorporated therein by reference—or by its legal effect. In order to plead a contract by its legal effect, plaintiff must allege the substance of its relevant terms." McKell v. Washington Mutual, Inc., 142 Cal.App.4th 1457, 1489, 49 Cal.Rptr.3d 227 (2006) (internal citations omitted).

UBS AG characterizes the FAC "as too vague and indefinite, and therefore unenforceable, for plaintiff's failure to allege, in nonconclusory language, as required, the essential terms of the parties' purported contract, including the specific provisions of the contract upon which liability is predicated." Sud v. Sud, 211 A.D.2d 423, 621 N.Y.S.2d 37, 38 (App.Div.1995); Bissessur v. Indiana University Bd. of Trustees, 581 F.3d 599, 603 (7th Cir.2009) ("A plaintiff may not escape dismissal on a contract claim, for example, by stating that he had a contract with the defendant, gave the defendant consideration, and the defendant breached the contract. What was the contract? The promises made? The consideration? The nature of the breach?").

UBS AG is correct that the FAC's purported breach of contract claims are vague and conclusory. The FAC fails to identify sufficiently precise contract terms, their breach, who breached them, and how they were breached. The FAC fails to identify sufficiently plaintiffs' consideration to support breach of contract claims to warrant dismissal of the breach of contract claim with leave to amend.

Conversion

The FAC's (seventeenth) conversion claim alleges that UBS AG and other defendants "wrongfully interfered with each Plaintiff's interests in his investment assets by":

1. Charging "thousands of dollars in excessive and unauthorized fees";

2. Creating "unnecessary 'shell' corporations and/or charg[ing] unnecessary transaction fees and referral fees;" and

3. Wrongfully freezing "accounts and otherwise charg[ing] improper 'fees' upon closing each Plaintiff's account and transferring the funds back to each Plaintiff."

"Conversion is the wrongful exercise of dominion over the property of another." Oakdale Village Group v. Fong, 43 Cal.App.4th 539, 543, 50 Cal.Rptr.2d 810 (1996). "To establish conversion, a plaintiff must show: (1) the plaintiff's ownership or right to possession to the property at the time of conversion; (2) the defendant's conversion by a wrongful act; and (3) damages." Oakdale Village Group, 43 Cal.App.4th at 543–544, 50 Cal.Rptr.2d 810. "Money cannot be the subject of a cause of action for conversion unless there is a specific, identifiable sum involved, such as where an agent accepts a sum of money to be paid to another and fails to make the payment." McKell v. Washington Mut., Inc., 142 Cal.App.4th 1457, 1491, 49 Cal.Rptr.3d 227 (2006). "A specific and identified amount of money can form the basis of a conversion claim, but when the money is not identified and not specific, the action is to be considered as one upon contract or for debt and not for conversion." Ross v. U.S. Bank Nat. Ass'n, 542 F.Supp.2d 1014, 1024 (N.D.Cal.2008) (internal quotation omitted).

19 UBS AG faults the absence of FAC allegations that UBS AG retained, controlled or applied to its use property. UBS AG criticizes the FAC's allegation of "excessive fees" charged rather than a specific converted sum.

The FAC lacks sufficient specificity to support a conversion claim. The alleged funds converted are not a specific, identifiable sum to warrant dismissal of the conversion claim with leave to amend.

CONCLUSION AND ORDER

For the reasons discussed above, this Court:

1. DISMISSES with leave to amend the FAC's (first) fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment and (third) negligent misrepresentation claims;

2. DISMISSES with prejudice the FAC's claims arising from an alleged fiduciary relationship among UBS AG and plaintiffs but DISMISSES with leave to amend claims arising from general negligence or malpractice;

3. DISMISSES with prejudice the FAC's (fourth and fifth) securities fraud claims;

4. DISMISSES with prejudice the FAC's (seventh and eighth) RICO claims based on predicate acts of securities fraud but DISMISSES with leave to amend RICO claims based on predicate acts other than securities fraud;

5. DISMISSES with prejudice the FAC's (tenth) disgorgement claim;

6. DISMISSES with prejudice the FAC's (eleventh) civil conspiracy claim;

7. DISMISSES with prejudice the FAC's (nineteenth) accounting claim;

8. DISMISSES with leave to amend the FAC's (twentieth) declaratory relief claim;

9. DISMISSES with leave to amend the FAC's (sixteenth) breach of contract claim;

10. DISMISSES with leave to amend the FAC's (seventeenth) conversion claim;

11. ORDERS plaintiffs, no later than February 21, 2013, to file and serve either: (a) a second amended complaint, excluding claims dismissed with prejudice; or (b) a statement that plaintiffs do not seek to pursue claims in this action; and

12. ORDERS UBS AG, no than March 14, 2013, to file and serve a response to the second amended complaint.

If plaintiffs proceed with this action, this Court ADMONISHES plaintiffs to file a clear, concise second amended complaint to comply with F.R.Civ.P. 8(b)'s requirement to state "a short and plain statement of the claim" and F.R.Civ.P. 8(d)(1)'s requirement that "[e]ach allegation must be simple, concise, and direct." [8] This requirement "applies to good claims as well as bad, and is the basis for dismissal independent of Rule 12(b)(6)." McHenry v. Renne, 84 F.3d 1172, 1179 (9h Cir.1996). "Something labeled a complaint but written more as a press release, prolix in evidentiary detail, yet without simplicity, conciseness and clarity as to whom plaintiffs are suing for what wrongs, fails to perform the essential functions of a complaint." McHenry, 84 F.3d at 1180. "Prolix, confusing complaints ... impose unfair burdens on litigants and judges." McHenry, 84 F.3d at 1179. This Court FURTHER ADMONISHES plaintiffs that failure to file a second amended complaint with requisite simplicity, conciseness and directness will serve as grounds to dismiss its claims. This Court FURTHER ADMONISHES plaintiffs not to attempt to replead or purse claims dismissed with prejudice or for which there are insufficient supporting facts and that this Court will grant plaintiffs no further attempts to plead claims.

20 IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2013 WL 394701

Footnotes

[1] Plaintiffs are Nadia and Sean Roberts (the "Roberts"), Bernhard and Heidi Gubser (the "Gubsers"), Anton Ginzburg, M.D. ("Dr.Ginzburg"), Aurther Joel Eisenberg ("Mr.Eisenberg"), Jeffrey Chernick ("Mr.Chernick") and Mr. Chernick's Liberian corporation Shumba and Hong Kong corporation Simba, and these plaintiffs will be referred to collectively as "plaintiffs."

[2] The factual recitation summarizes plaintiffs' operative First Amended Complaint ("FAC") and is derived from other matters which this Court may consider.

[3] The FAC does not specifically identify the "UB S AG defendants" but they are presumably the 11 identified defendants.

[4] UBS AG notes that the IRS established the QI Program to require financial institutions to identify and withhold tax on U.S. source income paid to foreign bank accounts, including income generated by U.S. securities, real estate and other investments. UBS AG further notes that the QI Agreement "does not create a reporting requirement toward accountholders."

[5] F.R.Civ.P. 9(b)'s particularity requirement applies to state law causes of action: "[W]hile a federal court will examine state law to determine whether the elements of fraud have been pled sufficiently to state a cause of action, the Rule 9(b) requirement that the circumstances of the fraud must be stated with particularity is a federally imposed rule." Vess v. Ciba–Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103 (9th Cir.2003) (quoting Hayduk v. Lanna, 775 F.2d 441, 443 (1st Cir.1995) (italics in original)).

[6] "In some cases, the plaintiff may allege a unified course of fraudulent conduct and rely entirely on that course of conduct as the basis of a claim. In that event, the claim is said to be 'grounded in fraud' or to 'sound in fraud,' and the pleading of that claim as a whole must satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b)." Vess, 317 F.3d at 1103–1104.

[7] RICO refers to the Racketeer and Corrupt Practices Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961, et seq.

[8] This Court contemplated setting a page limit for plaintiffs' second amended complaint. Given dismissal of several claims and this Court's requirements of simplicity, conciseness and clarity, this Court sees no reason why the second amended complaint should exceed 40 pages.

End of Document

709 Fed.Appx. 431
This case was not selected for publication in West's Federal Reporter.
See Fed. Rule of Appellate Procedure 32.1
generally governing citation of judicial decisions issued on or after Jan. 1, 2007.
See also U.S.Ct. of App. 9th Cir. Rule 36-3.
United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff–Appellee,
v.
Stephen KERR and Michael
Quiel, Defendants–Appellants.

No. 15–10393
|
Submitted August 18, 2017 []
San Francisco, California
|
SEPTEMBER 27, 2017

Synopsis

Background: After their convictions of subscription to a false tax return, and willful failure to file reports of foreign bank and financial accounts (FBARs) were affirmed on direct appeal, 595 Fed.Appx. 692, defendants filed motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence. The United States District Court for the District of Arizona, No. 2:11–cr–02385–JAT–1, James A. Teilborg, J., 2015 WL 4275183, denied motion. Defendants appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals held that:

[1] evidence showing the falsity of two trial exhibits was not "newly discovered," as required to support motion for new trial;

[2] evidence of defendants' attorney's fraudulent behavior and undisclosed agreement with Government did not constitute "newly discovered evidence";

[3] defendants' conclusory and speculative assertions were insufficient to support new trial based on knowing introduction of perjured testimony; and

[4] defendants failed to establish Brady violation.

Affirmed.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Arizona, James A. Teilborg, District Judge, Presiding, D.C. No. 2:11–cr–02385–JAT–1

Attorneys and Law Firms

Jeffrey Bender, Gregory Victor Davis, Alexander Patrick Robbins, DOJ—U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, Monica N. Edelstein, USPX—Office of the US Attorney, Phoenix, AZ, for Plaintiff–Appellee.

Michael Kimerer, Esquire, Rhonda Elaine Neff, Esquire, Kimerer & Derrick, PC, Phoenix, AZ, Alan Stuart Richey, Port Hadlock, WA, for Defendants–Appellants.

Before: RAWLINSON and NGUYEN, Circuit Judges, and VANCE, [] District Judge.

MEMORANDUM [*]

Stephen Kerr and Michael Quiel were convicted of willful subscription to a false tax return in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1). Kerr was also convicted of willful failure to file reports of foreign bank and financial accounts (FBARs) in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 5314 and 5322(a). This Court affirmed defendants' convictions on direct appeal. See United States v. Quiel, 595 Fed.Appx. 692 (9th Cir. 2014). Defendants now appeal the district court's denial of their motion for a new trial or, alternatively, for an evidentiary hearing. This motion was based on allegations that (1) defendants' lawyer, Christopher Rusch, had 433 engaged in criminal and fraudulent behavior before, during, and after the trial, in part by blogging and podcasting under the pseudonym "Christian Reeves"; (2) the Government had an undisclosed agreement with Rusch that allowed Rusch to commit illegal acts without fear of prosecution in exchange for his testimony against defendants; and (3) Exhibits 51 and 52, introduced at trial, were forged. Defendants also appeal the district court's denial of their motion to accept a limited remand. We affirm.

[1] 1. We generally review the denial of a new trial motion, made based on newly discovered evidence, for abuse of discretion. United States v. Hinkson, 585 F.3d 1247, 1259

(9th Cir. 2009). In order to obtain a new trial under Rule 33, the defendant must establish that:

> (1) the evidence [is] newly discovered; (2) the failure to discover the evidence sooner [was not] the result of a lack of diligence on the defendant's part; (3) the evidence [is] material to the issues at trial; (4) the evidence [is] neither cumulative nor merely impeaching; and (5) the evidence ... indicate[s] that a new trial would probably result in acquittal.

United States v. Harrington, 410 F.3d 598, 601 (9th Cir. 2005) (quoting United States v. Kulczyk, 931 F.2d 542, 548 (9th Cir. 1991)). As an initial matter, the district court did not err in refusing to consider certain audio recordings, which were introduced to establish Reeves as Rusch's alter ego, because the court presumed the truth of this allegation. Additionally, contrary to defendants' assertions, the court did in fact consider the emails allegedly sent by Rusch. Further, the district court correctly held that evidence showing the falsity of Exhibits 51 and 52 did not satisfy Rule 33 because defendants failed to meet their burden of establishing when this evidence was discovered.

[2] Defendants also argue that the district court erred in finding that evidence relating to Rusch's fraudulent behavior and undisclosed agreement with the Government would be cumulative and merely impeaching. Ordinarily, newly discovered evidence that merely impeaches a witness will not warrant a new trial. See, e.g., United States v. Davis, 960 F.2d 820, 825 (9th Cir. 1992). But impeachment evidence may require a new trial when it "refute[s] an essential element of the government's case," or it is "so powerful that, if it were to be believed by the trier of fact, it could render the witness' testimony totally incredible." Id. At trial, the jury heard testimony that Rusch committed a tax felony, had substantial tax debt, violated his fiduciary duties to his clients, misused his client trust fund account, falsely notarized a document, and violated the ethical rules of the California Bar. We agree with the district court that any additional evidence that Rusch engaged in other fraudulent behavior of the same nature would be cumulative of this impeachment evidence. Relatedly, defendants assert that additional evidence of Rusch's fraudulent behavior negates their mens rea. But this Court has already found that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to find the requisite willfulness, even without Rusch's testimony. See Quiel, 595 Fed.Appx. at 694. The district court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendants' new trial motion under Rule 33.

[3] 2. We review de novo the district court's denial of a new trial motion based on an alleged Napue violation. United States v. Rodriguez, 766 F.3d 970, 980 (9th Cir. 2014). To prevail on a Napue claim, "the defendant must show that (1) the testimony was actually false, (2) the prosecution knew or should have known that the testimony was actually false, and (3) ... the false testimony was material." 434 Id. at 990 (citation omitted). Defendants argue that the Government's failure to disclose Rusch's fraudulent behavior and pseudonym led to the introduction of perjury, and that Exhibits 51 and 52 were false. But defendants fail to show that either Rusch's testimony or the exhibits were actually false, or that the Government knew or should have known of their falsity. Defendants' conclusory and speculative assertions fail to make out a Napue claim. See United States v. Aichele, 941 F.2d 761, 766 (9th Cir. 1991).

[4] 3. We also review the district court's denial of a new trial motion "de novo when the asserted basis for a new trial is a Brady violation." United States v. Pelisamen, 641 F.3d 399, 408 (9th Cir. 2011). "A Brady violation has occurred if: (1) the government willfully or inadvertently suppressed; (2) evidence favorable to the accused; and (3) prejudiced ensued." Id. (citing Strickler v. Greene, 527 U.S. 263, 281–82, 119 S.Ct. 1936, 144 L.Ed.2d 286 (1999)). First, defendants have not produced any evidence suggesting that Exhibits 51 and 52 were forged and have failed to bear their burden "of producing some evidence to support an inference that the government possessed or knew about the Brady material." Id. at 408 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Second, information about Rusch's pseudonym and fraudulent behavior, which the Government allegedly suppressed, is merely cumulative impeachment evidence, and therefore cannot give rise to a Brady violation. See United States v. Kohring, 637 F.3d 895, 902 (9th Cir. 2011). Finally, defendants assert that the Government failed to disclose the existence of a leniency agreement with Rusch. Although the prosecution's failure to disclose an agreement with a coconspirator in exchange for his testimony at trial constitutes suppression under Brady, see Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154–55, 92 S.Ct. 763, 31 L.Ed.2d 104 (1972), defendants merely speculate about the possibility of an undisclosed agreement, see Runningeagle v. Ryan, 686 F.3d 758, 769–70 (9th Cir. 2012). The district court did not err in denying the new trial motion based on alleged Brady violations.

4. This Court reviews a district court's denial of a post-verdict evidentiary hearing for abuse of discretion. United States v. Saya, 247 F.3d 929, 934 (9th Cir. 2001). First, the district court presumed that Rusch used a pseudonym, so there was no need for an evidentiary hearing to establish that. See United States v. Scott, 521 F.2d 1188, 1196 (9th Cir. 1975). Second, considering the conclusory nature of defendants' allegations as to the falsity of Exhibits 51 and 52, the court did not abuse its discretion in declining to hold an evidentiary hearing to establish their falsity. See United States v. Zuno–Arce, 209 F.3d 1095, 1102–03 (9th Cir. 2000), overruled on other grounds by Valerio v. Crawford, 306 F.3d 742 (9th Cir. 2002). Finally, the district court was not obligated to hold an evidentiary hearing to entertain pure speculation about an undisclosed agreement between the Government and Rusch. See United States v. Mincoff, 574 F.3d 1186, 1199–1200 (9th Cir. 2009). Thus, the district court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendants' request for an evidentiary hearing.

5. Because the denial of defendants' motion to accept remand is essentially the denial of a motion for an indicative ruling, the Court reviews it for abuse of discretion. See Jackson v. Allstate Ins. Co., 785 F.3d 1193, 1206 (8th Cir. 2015). Defendants moved the district court to accept remand to consider additional new evidence. None of this new evidence warrants relief under Rule 33, Napue, or Brady. Thus, the district court did not abuse its discretion in 435 denying defendants' motion to accept a limited remand.

AFFIRMED.

James A. Teilborg, District Judge, Presiding
I concur in the result.

All Citations

709 Fed.Appx. 431, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-6066

Footnotes

 The panel unanimously concludes this case is suitable for decision without oral argument. See Fed. R. App. P. 34(a)(2).

 The Honorable Sarah S. Vance, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Louisiana, sitting by designation.

* This disposition is not appropriate for publication and is not precedent except as provided by Ninth Circuit Rule 36–3.

End of Document

2017 WL 3232578
United States District Court, N.D. California.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Lawrence Y. LUI, Defendant.

Case No. 16-cv-00969-JST
|
Signed 07/31/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Cynthia Lewis Stier, United States Attorney's Office, San Francisco, CA, for Plaintiff.

Scott H. Frewing, Robert Craig Hammill, Baker & McKenzie LLP, Palo Alto, CA, Martin Aaron Schainbaum, Martin A. Schainbaum, a Professional Law Corporation, San Francisco, CA, for Defendant.

ORDER GRANTING SUMMONSES IN PART, GRANTING MOTION TO QUASH AND DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS DOCUMENT SUMMONS

Re: ECF Nos. 32, 45, 59, 82

JON S. TIGAR, United States District Judge

1 Before the Court is the United States' Verified Petition to Enforce Internal Revenue Service Summons ("the Petition") against Respondent Lawrence Lui. ECF No. 1. The Court will grant the petition in part and deny it in part.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The Petition arises from an Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") investigation into the tax liabilities of Lawrence Y. Lui ("Lui") and Gorretti L. Lui for the years of 2005 to 2012. ECF No. 1 at ¶ 3. On July 8, 2014, Revenue Agent Meiling Yang, a former Revenue Agent, served Petitioner with a summons related to the alleged tax liabilities. Id. ¶ 7. Agent Yang interviewed Lui pursuant to the summons on August 4, 2014. Id. ¶¶ 9-10. Lui refused to provide testimony, citing his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, as well as other privileges. Id. ¶ 10. On July 29, 2015, Agent Lee served Lui with another summons for documents related to the alleged tax liabilities. Id. ¶ 11. The Government sought to compel the production of documents related to Wealth Grand Limited, a Hong Kong company ("WG"), Netfinity Assets Corporation, a British Virgin Islands company ("Netfinity"), and Jatur Sdn. Bhd., a Malaysian company ("Jatur"). ECF No. 1-3 at 7.

Agent Lee interviewed Lui pursuant to the second summons on August 28, 2015. ECF No. 1 at ¶ 14. Lui provided some responsive documents, but failed to provide all responsive documents or to provide testimony. Id.

Seeking a court order compelling Lui's cooperation with the summons, the Government filed the instant Petition on behalf of the IRS on February 26, 2016. ECF No. 1. On March 15, 2016, this Court found that the Government had established a prima facie case and ordered Lui to show cause as to why he should not be compelled to produce the requested documents and testimony. ECF No. 6. The parties subsequently submitted briefing. ECF Nos. 21-1, 33, 43, 47.[1] The Government also moved to quash Lui's requests for admissions and documents. ECF Nos. 32, 38, 45, 51, 61. Lui moved to dismiss the record summons portion of the Government's complaint. ECF Nos. 59, 61, 62. The Court held a hearing on the order to show cause, as well as the other motions as they relate to the substance of the order to show cause on December 15, 2016. The Court ultimately ordered re-briefing on the order to show cause. ECF No. 73. Lui retained new counsel, ECF Nos. 75, 80, and submitted an Amended Memorandum of Points and Authorities opposing the Governments' summonses. ECF No. 82. The Government filed a new reply. ECF No. 84. Lui filed a sur-reply. ECF No. 88. The Court now considers all of the motions.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

The IRS has authority to examine books and witnesses pursuant to a summons under 26 U.S.C. § 7602(a). "If any person is summoned under the internal revenue laws to appear, to testify, or to produce books, papers, records, or other data, the United States district court for the district in which such person resides or is found shall have jurisdiction by appropriate process to compel such attendance, testimony, or production of books, papers, records, or other data." 26 U.S.C. § 7604.

2 The specific legal procedure governing the court's inquiry is well-established. See United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48 (1964); United States v. Clarke, 134 S. Ct. 2361 (2014). First, the United States must outline its prima facie case. See Crystal v. United States, 172 F.3d 1141 (9th Cir. 1999). To do so, the United States must show that "(1) the investigation will be conducted for a legitimate purpose; (2) the material being sought is relevant to that purpose; (3) the information sought is not already in the IRS's possession; and (4) the IRS complied with all the administrative steps required by the Internal Revenue Code." Id. at 1143-44 (citing Powell, 379 U.S. at 57-58). "The government's burden is a slight one, and may be satisfied by a declaration from the investigating agent that the Powell requirements have been met." United States v. Dynavac, Inc., 6 F.3d 11407, 1414 (9th Cir. 1993). "The burden is minimal because the statute must be read broadly in order to ensure that the enforcement powers of the IRS are not unduly restricted." Crystal, 172 F.3d at 1144 (internal quotation omitted).

Once the Government meets its initial burden, the burden shifts to the respondent. Id. "[T]hose opposing enforcement of a summons ... bear the burden to disprove the actual existence of a valid civil tax determination or collection purpose by the [IRS].... [T]his burden is a heavy one." Id. at 1144 (internal quotation omitted). Established grounds for challenging the summons include demonstrating "failure to satisfy the Powell requirements." United States v. Jose, 131 F.3d 1325, 1328 (9th Cir. 1997) (en banc). Abuse of process, such as bad faith use of the procedure to harass or pressure the taxpayer regarding other disputes, is also recognized as grounds to invalidate the summons. Powell, 379 U.S. at 58. The Government also may not seek enforcement of a summons when it has already decided to recommend the matter for prosecution. See United States v. LaSalle National Bank, 437 U.S. 298, 314 (1978). "[T]he dispositive question in each case is whether the Service is pursuing the authorized purposes in good faith." Crystal, 172 F.3d at 1144-45 (internal quotation omitted).

III. DISCUSSION

This Court previously found that the Government had established a prima facie case under Powell based upon its initial Petition and accompanying Declaration. ECF No. 6 at 1. The Government demonstrated through Agent Lee's declarations and the supporting documents that the investigation's purpose is to seek Lui's testimony and records regarding tax liabilities. ECF No. 1 at ¶ 3. The declarations of Agent Lee and the supporting documents establish that the material sought is relevant to the investigation's purpose. ECF No. 1 at ¶¶ 3, 4, 6, 8, 12. The declarations assert that the IRS does not presently possess the records sought. Id. at ¶ 6. The Government contends there has been no referral to the Department of Justice for criminal prosecution of the matters described in the summons. Id. at ¶ 17. Finally, the Government asserts that it has complied with all administrative steps required, including proper notice and summons. Id. at ¶ 16.

Because the Government has carried its initial burden and established a prima facie case, the burden shifts to Lui to rebut the Government's assertions. Crystal, 172 F.3d at 1144.

A. Lack of Possession as a Defense to Document Summons

The IRS seeks documents related to Lui's interest in foreign entities and bank accounts. ECF No. 84 at 5. The IRS summons is broad in scope. It seeks various agreements, certificates, articles for establishing the entity, by-laws, letters, documents identifying various positions and organizational structures, invoices, bank documents, contracts and other important documents. ECF No. 1-3. Lui argues that he does not possess, control, or have custody of any of these documents. ECF No. 82, 88. The Government contends that Lui had an obligation to retain such documents and has not provided credible evidence as to why they are not — or no longer — in his possession. ECF No. 84.

3 Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 982(c)(1), the IRS may issue a foreign document request ("FDR") to any taxpayer to request foreign-based documentation. "Foreign-based documentation" is "any documentation which is outside the United States and which may be relevant or material to the tax treatment of the examined item." 26 U.S.C. § 982(d). "Congress enacted Section 982 as a pretrial discovery tool 'to discourage taxpayers from delaying or refusing disclosure of certain foreign-based information to the IRS.' " Matter of Int'l Mktg., Ltd. v. United States, No. C-901839-SAW, 1990 WL 138528, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 20, 1990) (citations omitted). Enforcement of a FDR is subject to the same standards as an administrative summons under Powell. See Larue v. United States, No. 3:15-cv-00705-HZ, 2015 WL 9809798, at *2 (D. Or. Dec. 22, 2015).

"An IRS summons imposes a duty to retain possession of summoned documents pending a judicial determination of the enforceability of the summons." United States v. Asay, 614 F.2d 655, 660 (9th Cir. 1980). A party's obligations become fixed when the summons is served. See Couch v. United States, 409 U.S. 322, 329 n. 9, 93 S. Ct. 611, 616 (1973) (citing United States v. Zakutansky, 401 F.2d 68, 72 (7th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1021, 89 S.Ct. 628; United States v. Lyons, 442 F.2d 1144 (1st Cir. 1971)); see also United States v. Darwin Const. Co., Inc., 873 F.2d 750, 755 (4th Cir. 1989) ("When an IRS summons is served, the rights and obligations of the party on whom the summons is served become fixed."). The party resisting enforcement bears the burden of producing credible evidence that he does not possess or control the documents sought.[2] See United States v. Huckaby, 776 F.2d 564, 567-8 (5th Cir. 1985); United States v. Billie, 611 Fed. Appx. 608, 610 (11th Cir. 2015).

It is Lui's burden to establish any affirmative defense. See United States v. Seetapun, 750 F.2d 601, 604 (7th Cir. 1984) (citing United States v. Kis, 658 F.2d 526, 542 (7th Cir. 1981)). Lack of custody or control is one such defense to enforcement of the document summons. United States v. Bright, 596 F.3d 683, 695 (9th Cir. 2010); see also United States v. Rylander, 460 U.S. 752, 757 (1983) (holding that one "appropriate ground" to challenge an IRS summon is the "lack of possession or control of records"). It is unclear exactly > what a taxpayer must show to meet his or her burden of demonstrating a lack of possession, custody, or control of the requested documents. However, the taxpayer's "responsibilities surely go further than a pro forma demand and cursory search for records," or a "conclusory, self-serving affidavit, lacking detailed facts and any supporting evidence."

Larue, 2015 WL 9809798, at *3(quoting Seetapun, 750 F.2d at 605; FTC v. Publ'g Clearing House, Inc., 104 F.3d 1168, 1171 (9th Cir. 1997)). A taxpayer may face contempt sanctions if he cannot produce credible evidence that the documents requested were outside his or her possession or control at the time of the summons. Asay, 614 F.2d at 660.

4 Some Circuit Courts of Appeals "have held that it is within the district court's discretion to simply determine whether the facts show that the taxpayer does, or does not, possess the relevant documents." See United States v. Malhas, No. 15-CV-3932, 2015 WL 6955496, at *4 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 10, 2015) (citing cases). Others have required the party resisting enforcement bear the burden of producing credible evidence of non-possession, operating on a "sliding scale." Id. The Government has suggested that the Court consider the evidence based on this "sliding scale: the more the Government's evidence suggests the defendant possesses the documents at issue, the heavier the defendant's burden to successfully demonstrate that he does not." Malhas, 2015 WL 6955496, at *4. In Malhas, the taxpayer "failed to satisfy his burden regardless of what standard the Court applie[d]." Id. Malhas provided no credible evidence and relied only on his own affidavits and testimony. Id. at *1-2. Meanwhile, the IRS presented a "plethora of documents and records illustrating Malhas' connections with the international banks and the accounts at issue [which] overshadowed Malhas' cursory references to the signatory and asset-transfer documents." Id. at *4. The court held that Malhas failed to overcome his heavy burden because he lacked evidence in comparison to the evidence provided by the government.

The Court adopts the sliding scale test from Malhas, but reaches a different result, because the facts here are markedly different than in Malhas. For one thing, Lui presents far more than his own affidavit to support his argument of non-possession. ECF No. 82 at 21-24. Lui argues he does not have possession of the requested documents because the non-produced records were either beyond his control or no longer existed as of July 29, 2015, the date of the IRS document summons. ECF No. 82 at 14-17, 21-24. On July 26, 2014, Lui resigned as a director of Netfinity and any related records were transferred out of his possession, custody, care and control to the custody of his siblings. ECF No. 82 at 15, citing ECF No. 24-2 at 154; ECF No. 24-6 at 63-71. Lui argues that "[c]oncurrently," the 2002 Trust assets were distributed among Lui's siblings, and "all shares in Netfinity and WG were transferred to Lui's" siblings." Id. Lui contends that "[u]pon distribution of the assets, the 2002 Trust dissolved because it no longer held any assets." ECF No. 82 at 15 (citing ECF No. 23 at 7). Lui presents numerous exhibits that show Lui had limited power over the trust that held Netfinity shares, ECF No. 24-2 at 17-18, 12, 73, 77, 75, 79; ECF No. 22-2 at 3-7; that the interests in Netfinity and WG were transferred to Lui's siblings at their request, ECF No. 24-2 at 38-41, 19, 35, 105,107-112; that the documents sought are now in the possession of Lui's siblings, ECF No. 24-2 at 63-71, 154; ECF No. 22-2 at 3-7; and that Lui was never a beneficial owner, ECF No. 24-2 at 14-16. Moreover, Lui has attached advisory letters from law firms within the foreign jurisdictions, explaining that non-beneficial owners have no legal right to compel production of the documents. ECF No. 21-5 at 3-7. Therefore, Lui argues, he has no enforceable legal right to obtain the records. ECF No. 82 at 15. Lastly, Lui presents evidence that he did not receive a dividend from Galaxy during the audit period, ECF No. 24-2 at 81-82, and asserts he is not the beneficial owner of the Netfinity shares, ECF No. 88 at 4.

The Government offers little direct evidence to the contrary.[3] It primarily relies on a 2005 SEC filing that lists Lui as the owner of Netfinity. ECF No. 33-1. In addition, the Government also asks the Court to consider the suspicious timing of events by which the shares of Netfinity were distributed out of Lui's control and to his siblings, ECF No. 84 at 10, as well as Lui's lack of documentation surrounding the transfer of the Netfinity stock to his siblings. Id. at 8.

5 These circumstances, though suspicious, are insufficient to demonstrate that Lui possesses or has the capacity to obtain the challenged documents. Although Lui may have been on notice of the IRS' investigation into his foreign assets because of the FDR or the testimonial summons in 2014, Lui's duty to retain these documents was not fixed until July 29, 2015, the date of the document summons.[4] The Court finds that the suspicious timing alone is not enough to overcome the plethora of evidence that Lui has offered to show that he did not possess, control, or have custody of the documents at issue which the IRS sought in its July 29, 2015 document summons as of that date. The Court cannot compel Lui to produce documents that he does not have in his possession or control.

Nonetheless, although Lui has succeeded in demonstrating that he does not possess documents directly related to the Netfinity or WG assets, he has not met his burden of showing that he has no documents related to the transfer of those assets. As the Government argues, "[i]t is difficult to believe that such a significant purchase and transfer of stock would be unaccompanied by correspondence or at least emails maintained by the transferor." ECF No. 84 at 8. In the IRS' initial summons, it included "letters of wishes, letters of intent, orders of instructions and other similar documents expressing the founder's or beneficiary's wishes or instructions regarding the entity." ECF No. 1-3 at 7. Lui has not included any emails or other correspondence with regard to the transfer of the Netfinity stock. He has, however, been able to provide declarations from his siblings corroborating the fact that he no longer has access to Netfinity documents. ECF No. 83-1, 83-2, 83-3, 83-4, 83-5, 83-6, 83-7, 83-8, 83-9, 83-10, 83-11. Therefore, Lui is ordered to turn over any additional correspondence or other records in his possession regarding the transfers, or to submit a declaration under penalty of perjury that no such documents exist and that none existed as of July 29, 2015. Such declaration must be filed by August 11, 2017.

B. Defenses to Testimonial Summons

1. 5th Amendment

The Government also challenges Lui's assertion of the Fifth Amendment at his summons interview. A taxpayer may invoke his Fifth Amendment rights in response to an IRS summons when there are "substantial hazards of self-incrimination that are real and appreciable." United States v. Drollinger, 80 F.3d 389, 392 (9th Cir. 1996) (internal quotation omitted). "The defendant must have 'reasonable cause to apprehend [such] danger from a direct answer' to questions posed to him." Id. (quoting United States v. Neff, 615 F.2d 1235, 1239 (9th Cir. 1980)). A taxpayer may invoke the Fifth Amendment when his testimony carries a risk of incrimination and "the penalty he suffered amounted to compulsion." United States v. Antelope, 395 F.3d 1128, 1134 (9th Cir. 2005). The taxpayer may not, however, "convert the privilege from the shield against compulsory self-incrimination which it was intended to be into a sword whereby a claimant asserting the privilege would be freed from adducing proof in support of a burden which would otherwise have been his." US v. Rylander, 460 U.S. 752, 755 (1983). Mere "blanket assertion[s]" of Fifth Amendment rights are insufficient. United States v. Brown, 918 F.2d 82, 84 (9th Cir. 1990).

"In determining whether a real and appreciable danger of incrimination exists, the trial court must examine 'the questions, their setting, and the peculiarities of the case.' " Drollinger, 80 F.3d at 392 (quoting Neff, 615 F.2d at 1240). The process requires a question-by-question or document-by-document review. United States v. Bodwell, 66 F.3d 1000, 1001 (9th Cir. 1995).

6 Here, Lui asserted his Fifth Amendment privilege to almost every question asked of him during his testimony, including "[Did] you take any accounting classes in college?," "Did you take any accounting or tax classes in graduate school?," and "Do you have any education in accounting or tax matters?" ECF No. 11-1 at 41. Answers such as these make it difficult for the Court to conclude that Lui asserted the Fifth Amendment on a question-by-question basis, as the law requires.

Accordingly, because it appeared likely that Lui's assertion of Fifth Amendment privilege was overbroad and that he should be required to answer at least some additional questions, the Court asked the parties to submit further briefing regarding follow-up questions the Government was entitled to ask. See ECF No. 94. The Court now rules as follows on the parties' disputes.

a. General Background Questions

By stipulation of the parties, Lui is ordered to answer the general background questions identified in the parties' joint brief. Id. at 3.

b. Questions Related to Lui's FBAR Obligations and Compliance

The parties dispute whether Lui should answer questions pertaining to his foreign financial accounts, foreign financial account reporting obligations, and his personal knowledge of FBAR and other requirements. Lui properly invoked his rights under the Fifth Amendment to these questions, as he faces a real and substantial risk of criminal incrimination and did not open himself to these questions by the scope of his declaration. See In re Master Key Litig., 507 F.2d 292, 293 (9th Cir. 1974). The Court likewise will not compel any follow-up questions about Lui's interests held in foreign accounts. See ECF No. 94 at 21, 24-25.

c. Questions Related to Lui's Ownership and Reporting of Foreign Entities, Including Galaxy Entertainment Group Limited and Netfinity Assets Corporation

Similarly, the Court finds Lui did not waive his right to invoke the privilege regarding questions 1-19 and 21-44 related to his ownership and reporting of foreign entities. ECF No. 94 at 26-28. The Court finds, however, that Lui waived his Fifth Amendment the privilege with respect to question 20, "Who keeps the books and records of Netfinity Asset Corporation?" as this topic was included in his declaration. See ECF No. 21-3 ¶ 9. The Government may ask Question 20.

d. Lui's June 2016 Declaration

In addition to the testimony identified above, Lui also submitted a declaration to the Court on June 21, 2016. ECF No. 21-3. The declaration sets forth facts related to his siblings' acquisition of the books and records of Netfinity and WG, his attempts to obtain copies of those records, and his retention of the law firms of Baker & McKenzie and Maples & Calder to provide legal opinions concerning his rights and obligations concerning the Netfinity/WG records. The Government seeks to ask Lui questions regarding this declaration; Lui opposes this request.

Paragraph 6 of Lui's declaration provides that "[a]fter diligent search and efforts, I have produced all of the records requested in the record summons that were in my possession, custody, care or control." ECF No. 21-3 ¶ 6. Paragraph 9 states that "[s]ince July 26, 2014 all the records of Netfinity and WG have been in possession, custody, care and control of [Lui's] siblings." Id. ¶ 9. Because the statements made in these two paragraphs are not incriminating, Lui may be questioned or "cross-examined" about his lack of possession or control of the summonsed documents as of the date of the Document Summons. The Government may therefore ask Lui the following questions:

7 (1) Did you possess any summonsed documents as of July 29, 2015 (the service date for the Document Summons)?

(2) Who possessed the Netfinity documents on July 29, 2015?

(3) Where do the individuals that possessed the documents on July 29, 2015 reside?

(4) How did you know that your siblings possessed or controlled the documents on July 29, 2015?

(5) What documents do you possess that evidence your siblings' possession or control of the Netfinity documents?

In Paragraph 10 of his Declaration in support of his opposition to the summons, Lui sets out "an additional demonstration of good faith to try to comply with the record summons." ECF No. 21-3 ¶ 10. He elaborates on his 2015 and 2016 efforts to obtain requested documents after receipt of the July 29, 2015 Document Summons. Lui "did not make any statements about the establishment of a trust in 2002, the establishment of Netfinity, the receipt of funds by Netfinity used to acquire Galaxy shares, Lui's role as a trustee prior to 2015, other foreign entities or accounts, [or] the establishment or incorporation of a trust or foreign entity." ECF No. 94 at 7-8. He did, however, "retain[ ] and obtain[ ] opinions of counsel in Hong Kong and in the British Virgin Islands" to "show that" he had "no legally enforceable right to obtain the summoned records that have not been produced from the companies," and "no valid legal ground to sue to get them." ECF No. 21-3 ¶ 10. The Court agrees with Lui that "merely referencing documents does not create waiver," ECF No. 94 at 9 (citing Rutherford v. PaloVerde Health Care Dist., 2014 WL 12637901 (C.D. Cal. Sep. 23, 2014)), and the government does not provide any persuasive authority supporting the contention that the documents Lui provided to these law firms must be produced.

2. Other Privileges

At his interview, in addition to his Fifth Amendment privilege, Lui asserted the attorney-client privilege in response to 14 questions, the work product doctrine in response to six questions, and the tax practitioner privilege in response to 15 questions.[5] ECF No. 82 at 33. It is not necessary for the Court to rule on these objections, however, because the Court has upheld his assertion of the Fifth Amendment privilege as to the same questions.

C. Challenges to Government's Prima Facie Case

The Court also rules on separate challenges Lui has made to the Government's summons.

1. Verification

Lui argues that the government's initial summons was inadequate because Agent Lee's verification was insufficient. ECF No. 82 at 34. Affidavits must be based on personal knowledge. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(e). Here, Agent Lee's declaration was based on personal knowledge and belief. ECF No. 1 at 5. After Lui challenged the sufficiency of the verification, the Government provided the Court with Agent Lee's affidavit explaining how she attained her personal knowledge. ECF No. 84-1 at 1-3. Lui contends that the declaration is an inadequate solution because it cannot cleanse the deficiency of the initial summons. ECF No. 88 at 6. Agent Lee, however, has testified that she reviewed Lui's file personally and conducted part of the investigation personally. ECF No. 1 at 5. This is not a circumstance in which the complaining officer "clearly showed that [s]he had no personal knowledge of the matters on which his charge was based." United States v. Greenberg, 320 F.2d 467, 471 (9th Cir. 1963). Therefore, the Government's summons does not fail for lack of verification.

2. Relevance

8 Lui argues that the summoned records of Netfinity, WG, and Jatur are not relevant or material to his tax liabilities. ECF No. 82 at 35. "The relevance standard for an IRS summons is different from, and more relaxed than, admissibility standards under the Federal Rules of Evidence. Summoned material is relevant if it might 'throw light' upon the correctness of the return." Schoop v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, No. C 13092230 SI, 2013 WL 5487040, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 2, 2013) (quoting United States v. Arthur Young & Co., 465 U.S. 805, 814 (1984)). "Congress expressly intended for the IRS to obtain materials 'of even potential relevance to an ongoing investigation.' " Id. (emphasis in original).

The Government concedes that Lui has complied with the summons as it pertains to Jatur, and therefore Jatur is not at issue here. ECF No. 82 at 19. With regard to Netfinity and WG, however, the Government contends that Lui's alleged beneficial ownership of Galaxy stock (through Netfinity's ownership) is relevant. ECF No. 84 at 5 ("the audit was expanded to determine if taxpayer was required to report dividend income from the $161 Million Galaxy Entertainment Group's stock held under Netfinity Assets Corporation, BVI.") Lui does not dispute that Netfinity owned 161,066,521 shares of Galaxy stock. Id. Lui, as the 100% owner of Netfinity, was the owner of the Galaxy stock at some point. Id. In order for the IRS to definitively decide whether Luis has any tax obligations as they relate to Netfinity, it requires documents that explain the ownership and management of Netfinity. Id. Lui's transfer of his interest in Netfinity on July 26, 2014, two weeks after the testimony summons and one week before his summons interview, and conflicting information between SEC submissions [6] and Lui's explanation of his role as merely "a trustee," do not adequately establish that he has met his burden of challenging the summoned information as irrelevant. ECF No. 33 at 7-8; ECF No. 21-1 at 21-22. The Court is not persuaded that the IRS will not discover potentially relevant information.

3. Abuse of Process and Bad Faith

Lui also includes a three-sentence argument that the IRS' requests are duplicative and made in bad faith or with the intent to prosecute in the future. ECF No. 82 at 35.

"[T]he dispositive question in each case is whether the Service is pursuing the authorized purposes in good faith." United States v. Anderson, Case No. 14-cv-01932-JST, 2014 WL 6682534, at *2 (N.D. Cal., Nov. 25, 2014) (quoting Crystal, 172 F.3d at 1144-45). "Abuse of process, such as bad faith use of the procedure to harass or pressure the taxpayer regarding other disputes, is also recognized as grounds to invalidate the summons." Id. (citing Powell, 379 U.S. at 58). To raise an inference of bad faith on the government's part, "[t]he taxpayer need only make a showing of facts that give rise to a plausible inference of improper motive." United States v. Clarke, 134 S. Ct. 2361, 2367–68 (2014). In light of the Government's broad discretion to request documents related to its legitimate purpose, Lui has failed to carry his burden of demonstrating the summons is not valid. See Crystal, 172 F.3d at 1141.

9 Moreover, Lui contends that the Government repeatedly asked him questions related to filing requirements so it could criminally prosecute or intimidate him. ECF No. 82 at 35. But "[n]aked allegations of improper purpose are not enough: The taxpayer must offer some credible evidence supporting his charge." United States v. Clarke, 134 S.Ct. at 2367. Lui offers no credible evidence that supports this contention, and the Government stated in its petition that it has not referred any matter to the Department of Justice for prosecution. ECF No. 1 ¶ 17. Lui has not presented evidence that the IRS's statement that it did not have a copy of a previously filed FBAR was intended to mislead Lui or was made in bad faith.

IV. GOVERNMENT'S MOTION TO QUASH

The Government moves to quash the request for admissions filed by Lui pursuant to Rule 36 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the request for production of documents filed by Lui pursuant to Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. ECF Nos. 15, 32, 45. The Court will grant the Government's motions.

"As a general rule, discovery is available in summons enforcement proceedings only in extraordinary situations." United States v. Southern Tanks, Inc., 619 F.2d 54, 56 (10th Cir. 1980) (citing United States v. Fensterwald, 553 F.2d 231 (D.C. Cir. 1977); United States v. Wright Motor Co., 536 F.2d 1090 (5th Cir. 1976)). Occasionally, limited discovery is allowed "in order to examine an agency's institutional posture with respect to possible criminal proceedings." Id. Discovery is "the exception rather than the rule," and whether to permit such discovery is within the Court's "great discretion." Chen Chi Wang v. United States, 757 F.2d 1000, 1004-05 (9th Cir. 1985).

To merit discovery, Lui must make "a substantial preliminary showing that enforcement of the summons would result in an abuse of the court's process" and that "discovery would likely lead to useful, relevant evidence." Roberts v. United States, 364 F.3d 988, 999-1000 (8th Cir. 2004). "The party resisting enforcement" must "do more than allege an improper purpose before discovery is granted." United States v. Church of Scientology of California, 520 F.2d 818, 824 (9th Cir. 1975). "Conclusory allegations carefully tailored to the language of Powell ... that the Service has issued a summons for an improper purpose such as to harass the taxpayer or to put pressure on him to settle a collateral dispute, are easily made." Id. A taxpayer has a right to conduct an examination of IRS officials, but only "when he points to specific facts or circumstances plausibly raising an inference of bad faith." United States v. Clarke, 134 S. Ct. 2361, 2365 (2014).

Because the Court has determined that Lui failed to successfully rebut the Government's prima facie case under Powell, and has raised no credible inference of bad faith, he is not entitled to discovery and the Government's motions to quash are granted.

V. MOTION TO DISMISS

Lui also filed a motion to dismiss the July 8, 2015 document summons because the IRS failed to provide evidence that the documents sought actually existed. ECF No. 59-1 at 6-7. The Court has already found that the Government satisfied its prima facie burden under Powell, and the initial summons need not "prove by positive evidence the existence of the records and their possession by the sumonee." Lawn Builders of New England, 856 F.2d at 392 (1st Cir. 1988). Lui's motion to dismiss is denied.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Government's petition to enforce the IRS' document summons against Lui is granted for any document or records he has in his possession regarding the transfer of any relevant stock. For all other documents, the petition is denied due to Lui's non-possession. The Government's petition to enforce the IRS' testimonial summons is granted in part. Lui is ordered to appear before Revenue Agent Esther Lee, or any other proper officer or employee of the IRS, at such time and place as may be set by Revenue Agent Lee or her designee, and produce the documents and give the testimony as discussed herein.

10 IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 3232578, 120 A.F.T.R.2d 2017-5332, 2017-2 USTC P 50,294

Footnotes

[1] Lui originally moved to strike the Government's reply to his sur-reply on the grounds that it was untimely filed, and the Government responded. ECF Nos. 52, 55, 57. Lui then withdrew his motion to strike. ECF Nos. 89, 90.

[2] Lui has submitted a motion to dismiss in which he argues that the Government must establish that the requested documents exist in order to defend its summons. ECF No. 59 at 1. The Court agrees with those courts that have held it is the summonee's burden to establish non-possession through the presentation of credible evidence. See United States v. Lawn Builders of New England, Inc., 856 F.2d 388, 392 (1st Cir. 1988) ("We have previously rejected the contention that the IRS must prove by positive evidence the existence of the records and their possession by the summonee.") (emphasis in original) (citing cases).

[3] Compare Larue, 2015 WL 9809798, at *3 (relying on IRS' declaration, based on information obtained, that taxpayers "facilitate[d] a scheme whereby [they] set up offshore trusts to improperly avoid U.S. income tax" and petitioners "fail[ed] to present any evidence" that they did "not possess or control the documents at issue" or that they "made any efforts to retrieve the summoned documents from any party.").

[4] The Government argues the relevant summons date was July 8, 2014 because it placed Lui "on notice that the IRS was examining his foreign interests." ECF No. 84 at 8. The obligation to retain documents does not begin until the actual document summons is issued. See Asay, 614 F.2d 660.

[5] Lui asserted the marital communications and adverse spousal testimonial privileges to two questions, but no longer asserts them given that his wife answered the questions at issue in an IRS recorded interview. ECF No. 82 at 33, n. 14.

[6] Lui argues in his sur-reply that the SEC submission was first introduced by the Government's original reply, rather than its original Petition. ECF No. 88 at 3, n 3. Lui cites Smith v. Marsh, 194 F.3d 1045, 1052 (9th Cir. 1999) to support the assertion that this argument is waived. Id. However, Lui was already aware of the SEC submission as he submitted part of it as an exhibit in his own Opposition, ECF No. 27, Ex. 24-2, at 83-85. He also submitted a sur-reply giving him the opportunity to respond to the Government's argument on the merits.

End of Document

187 F.Supp.3d 350
United States District Court, D. Connecticut.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Diane M. GARRITY, Paul G. Garrity, Jr., and Paul M. Sterczala, as fiduciaries of the Estate of Paul G. Garrity, Sr., deceased, Defendants.

No. 3:15-cv-243 (MPS)
|
Signed May 20, 2016

Synopsis
Background: United States brought action against fiduciaries of taxpayer's estate, seeking to collect civil penalty assessed by IRS based on taxpayer's failure to timely report his financial interest in or authority over foreign bank account. Fiduciaries moved to amend scheduling and add proposed counterclaim regarding IRS's alleged disclosure of certain materials to agents not involved in investigation of taxpayer.

[Holding:] The District Court, Michael P. Shea, J., held that estate could not assert claim under statute permitting "such taxpayer" to sue for government agents inspecting or disclosing any of taxpayer's tax return or return information.

Motion denied.

Attorneys and Law Firms

351 Austin L. Furman, U.S. Department of Justice, Christine L. Sciarrino, U.S. Attorney's Office, New Haven, CT, Steven Marcus Dean, Carl Lewis Moore, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Daniel F. Brown, Randall P. Andreozzi, Andreozzi, Bluestein, Weber, Brown, LLP, Clarence, NY, Michael Menapace, Wiggin & Dana, Hartford, CT, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Michael P. Shea, United States District Judge.

Plaintiff, the U.S. Government (the "Government"), brought this action to collect an outstanding civil penalty from the Estate of Paul G. Garrity, Sr. (the "Estate"). (ECF No. 1.) Defendants Diane M. Garrity, Paul G. Garrity, Jr., and Paul M. Sterczala, fiduciaries of the Estate, move to amend the scheduling order in this case to extend the deadline to amend pleadings and allow them to assert a counterclaim. (ECF No. 40.) Because the Court finds that the Estate cannot, under the circumstances of this case, invoke the damages remedy created by Congress for the type of counterclaim it seeks to bring, the Court DENIES Defendants' motion to amend the scheduling order and add their proposed counterclaim.

I. BACKGROUND

On February 20, 2015, the Government filed a complaint seeking to collect an outstanding civil penalty from the Estate. (ECF No. 1 at 1.) Specifically, the Internal Revenue Service (the "IRS") had assessed a penalty against Paul G. Garrity, Sr., "for his failure to timely report his financial interest in, and/or his signatory or other authority over, a foreign bank account for the 2005 calendar year, as required by 31 U.S.C. § 5314 and its implementing regulations." (Id.) Section 5314 requires certain individuals to keep records or file reports on foreign financial agency transactions, and Section 5321 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to impose a civil penalty, known as an FBAR penalty, "on any person who violates, or causes a violation of any provision of section 5314." 31 U.S.C. § 5321(a)(5). Defendants filed their answer and affirmative defenses on April 24, 2015 (ECF No. 9), and the Court entered a scheduling order on June 17, 2015, setting the deadline for filing motions to amend the pleadings for July 24, 2015, and a discovery deadline of June 10, 2016. (ECF No. 20.)

After the July 24 deadline for amending the pleadings passed, Defendants' counsel discovered that certain publicly-available IRS training materials contained information about the IRS's investigation of Paul G. Garrity, Sr. (ECF No. 40 at 1–2.) Specifically, Defendants allege that Dennis Brager of the Brager Tax Law Group submitted a Freedom of Information Act 352 ("FOIA") request to the IRS by letter dated April 3, 2014. (ECF No. 40–2 at 16.) On September 30, 2014, the IRS produced 6,601 pages of documents in response to the FOIA request, including "unredacted PowerPoint slides from an IRS training program" that "included a case study discussing the IRS investigation of Paul G. Garrity, Sr. that was the genesis of the Title 31 and 26 penalties and proposed income tax deficiencies against" Paul G. Garrity, Sr. (the "Case Study Materials"). (Id. at 16–17.) The Brager Tax Law Group posted the Case Study Materials on its website, where Defendants later found it and immediately recognized that it contained Paul G. Garrity, Sr.'s return information. (Id.) On June 29, 2015, Defendants served their First Request for Production of Documents on the Government in this action. (Id.) Defendants argue that the Case Study Materials are responsive to this request, but the Government disagrees, and did not produce the Case Study Materials. (ECF No. 44 at 3 n. 1; ECF No. 40 at 3.)

Defendants have now filed a motion to amend the scheduling order to extend the deadline to amend pleadings and allow them to file an amended answer and assert a counterclaim. (ECF No. 40 at 4.) In their proposed counterclaim, Defendants allege that the Government violated 26 U.S.C. § 6103(a) by disclosing the Case Study Materials to IRS agents not directly concerned with the investigation and the law firm, which disclosed the information to the public through its website. [1] (ECF No. 40–2 at 15–16.) Section 6103(a)(1) provides, in relevant part, that "no officer or employee of the United States ... shall disclose any return or return information obtained by him in any manner in connection with his service as such an officer or an employee or otherwise or under the provisions of this section." Section 7431(a) provides a private right of action for damages against the Government for such unauthorized disclosures.

II. STANDARD

[1] [2] Rule 15(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that "a party may amend its pleading only with the opposing party's written consent or the court's leave. The court should freely give leave when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). Despite this liberal standard, "[a] district court has discretion to deny leave for good reason, including futility, bad faith, undue delay, or undue prejudice to the opposing party." McCarthy v. Dun & Bradstreet Corp., 482 F.3d 184, 200 (2d Cir.2007) (citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S.Ct. 227, 9 L.Ed.2d 222 (1962)). "In this Circuit, it is well settled that an amendment is considered futile if the amended pleading fails to state a claim or would be subject to a motion to dismiss on some other basis." Gilbert, Segall & Young v. Bank of Montreal, 785 F.Supp. 453, 457 (S.D.N.Y.1992) (internal citations omitted).

III. DISCUSSION

[3] [4] The Government argues that Defendants should not be allowed to bring their proposed counterclaim because they lack standing, making the amendment futile. (ECF No. 44 at 4–5.) Although the parties have treated this issue as one involving "standing," recent case law suggests that it is more properly considered as a question of whether the proposed counterclaim would state a claim under the relevant statute, 26 U.S.C. § 7431. "[A] 353 plaintiff must have a cause of action under the applicable statute. This was formerly called 'statutory standing.' " Am. Psychiatric Ass'n v. Anthem Health Plans, Inc., No. 14–3993–CV, 821 F.3d 352, 359, 2016 WL 2772853, at *4 (2d Cir. May 13, 2016). "The Supreme Court has recently clarified, however, that what has been called 'statutory standing' in fact is not a standing issue, but simply a question of whether the particular plaintiff 'has a cause of action under the statute.' " Id. (quoting Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 1377, 1387, 188 L.Ed.2d 392 (2014)). In order to determine whether 26 U.S.C. § 7431(a) provides Defendants with a private right of action under the circumstances of this case, the court must examine the statute and "apply traditional principles of statutory interpretation." Lexmark Int'l, Inc., 134 S.Ct. at 1388.

Section 7431(a) provides:

> If any officer or employee of the United States knowingly, or by reason of negligence, inspects or discloses any return or return information with respect to a taxpayer in violation of any provision of section 6103, such taxpayer may bring a civil action for damages against the United States in a district court of the United States.

26 U.S.C. § 7431(a) (emphasis added).

The plain language of the statute calls for reading "such taxpayer" to refer to the taxpayer whose "return information" has been disclosed, not to anyone else. And if there were any doubt about the meaning of those words, the principle that waivers of sovereign immunity are narrowly construed would call for the same conclusion. "Under settled principles of sovereign immunity, the United States, as sovereign, is immune from suit, save as it consents to be sued. ..." United States v. Dalm, 494 U.S. 596, 608, 110 S.Ct. 1361, 108 L.Ed.2d 548 (1990) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). "A waiver of the Federal Government's sovereign immunity must be unequivocally expressed in statutory text, and will not be implied. Moreover, a waiver of the Government's sovereign immunity will be strictly construed, in terms of its scope, in favor of the sovereign." Lane v. Pena, 518 U.S. 187, 192, 116 S.Ct. 2092, 135 L.Ed.2d 486 (1996) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Other courts have likewise interpreted the phrase "such taxpayer" in Section 7431 as "the taxpayer whose 'return' or 'return information' has been allegedly disclosed." Ruiz Rivera v. I.R.S., 226 F.Supp.2d 345, 349 (D.P.R.2002) aff'd, 93 Fed.Appx. 244 (1st Cir.2004); Clark v. I.R.S., No. CIV. 06–00544SPK–LEK, 2007 WL 1374742, at *1 (D.Haw. Mar. 1, 2007) (taxpayer was estate, and therefore beneficiary of estate could not enforce terms of Section 7431; proper party is estate).

Two neighboring statutes in the Internal Revenue Code, Sections 7432[2] and 7433,[3] similarly permit "such taxpayer" to bring a civil action for damages against the United 354 States. Courts have also interpreted the phrase "such taxpayer" in those statutes as referring only to the "direct taxpayer," i.e., the individual from whom the IRS seeks to collect taxes. See, e.g., Parker v. United States, No. 09CV1394JAH, 2010 WL 3894977, at *3 (S.D.Cal. Sept. 29, 2010) (agreeing with other courts "that only direct taxpayers have standing to sue under § 7432"); Ibraham v. United States, 123 F.Supp.2d 408, 409 (S.D.Ohio 2000) (citing cases holding "that § 7432 provides a cause of action only to the individual against whom the IRS is trying to collect."); Ludtke v. United States, 84 F.Supp.2d 294, 300 (D.Conn.1999) (citing cases holding "that Section 7433 confers jurisdiction only to the taxpayer at whom collection efforts were directed," not third parties).

[5] Given the clear text of the statute and the strict construction of waivers of sovereign immunity, this Court agrees that the private cause of action in Section 7431 is limited to claims brought by taxpayers whose return information has been disclosed. Here, the allegations in the counterclaim make clear that the "taxpayer" whose "return information" was disclosed was Paul G. Garrity, Sr., and not the Estate. Therefore, the plain reading and the one consistent with construing waivers of sovereign immunity narrowly is that the Estate is not "such taxpayer" and may not bring suit.

[6] [7] Defendants contend that the Estate may sue under Section 7431 because the Estate "is a legal continuation of the deceased taxpayer" (ECF No. 45 at 5), but the plain language of the statute does not embrace such a broad class of plaintiffs, which would also sweep in assignees and all other manner of successors-in-interest. Nor does it matter if the right of action under Section 7431 is considered to be a property interest of the type that would ordinarily pass upon death, as the court found in Schachter v. United States, 847 F.Supp. 140 (N.D.Cal.1993). Declining to follow Shapiro v. Smith, 652 F.Supp. 218, 218–19 (S.D.Ohio 1986)—which had held that an older version of Section 7431 was akin to a tort action protecting personal privacy rights and did not survive the taxpayer's death—the Schachter court held that Section 7431 creates "a property interest which should survive death," and allowed the substitution of the estate of a plaintiff who had died after bringing suit. Schachter, 847 F.Supp. at 141. Schachter reasoned that: (1) "all taxpayers, not just individuals, can sue under § 7431, while under tort law a corporation or association has no right to privacy," (2) Section 7431 "provides for 'actual' damages, an indication that property rights were to be taken into account," and (3) allowing a right of survival is consistent with the legislative aim of discouraging "governmental intimidation through disclosure." Id. Even if the Court accepts the reasoning in Schachter that Section 7431 creates a property right, the disclosure of Paul G. Garrity, Sr.'s return information occurred years after Paul G. Garrity, Sr.'s death, according to the allegations in the proposed counterclaim.[4] Thus, Paul G. Garrity, Sr., never had a property right in such a cause of action during his lifetime, and there was, at the time of his death, no such property right to pass to the Estate.[5]

355 Defendants argue that this interpretation of Section 7431 would render superfluous a provision of Section 6103 dealing with the disclosure of tax return information of the deceased. In the case of a deceased individual, Section 6103 provides:

> The return of the decedent shall, upon written request, be open to inspection by or disclosure to—(A) the administrator, executor, or trustee of his estate, and (B) any heir at law, next of kin, or beneficiary under the will, of such decedent, or a donee of property, but only if the Secretary finds that such heir at law, next of kin, beneficiary, or donee has a material interest which will be affected by information contained therein.

26 U.S.C. § 6103(e)(3). Defendants argue that such an exception would be superfluous if Congress did not intend to "impose liability upon the IRS for disclosure of the taxpayer information of decedents or estates." (ECF No. 45 at 4.)

[8] The Court disagrees. Section 6103 is not rendered meaningless simply because Section 7431, an independent statute creating a damages remedy for violations of Section 6103, limits that remedy (and the waiver of sovereign immunity) to the taxpayer whose return information is improperly disclosed. More specifically, construing Section 7431 to foreclose the Estate from suing the Government for disclosure of Paul G. Garrity, Sr.'s tax return information does not make the prohibition on disclosure of a decedent's return information in Section 6103—to which Section 6103(e)(3) creates certain exceptions—a dead letter. That prohibition is independently enforceable by the criminal law and through internal discipline at the IRS. For example, it is a felony punishable by a fine not to exceed $5,000, or imprisonment of not more than five years (or both), "for any officer or employee of the United States or any person described in section 6103(n) (or an officer or employee of any such person), or any former officer or employee, willfully to disclose to any person, except as authorized ... any return or return information (as defined in section 6103(b))." 26 U.S.C. § 7213(a)(1). It is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or imprisonment of not more than one year (or both), for any officer or employee of the U.S. or any person described in sections 6103(l)(18) or 6103(n) (or an officer or employee of any such person) "willfully to inspect, except as authorized in this title, any return or return information [as defined in section 6103(b)]." 26 U.S.C. § 7213A(a), (c). In addition to these criminal penalties, "Congress created the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration, an entity distinct from the IRS, which investigates claims of IRS employee misconduct, in an effort to deter such misconduct." Hudson Valley Black Press v. I.R.S., 409 F.3d 106, 111–12 (2d Cir.2005) (citing 5 U.S.C. App. 3 § 2(B)(ii)). The statute, 5 U.S.C. App. 3 § 7(a), authorizes the Inspector General to "receive and investigate complaints or information from an employee ... concerning the possible existence of an activity constituting a violation of law, rules, or regulations. ..." 5 U.S.C. App. 3 § 7(a). Finally, Section 6103(e), the provision the Estate contends would be rendered superfluous by a plain language reading of Section 7431, is itself independently enforceable by executors or beneficiaries, who may bring lawsuits in federal court to obtain a decedent's tax information pursuant to the FOIA. See e.g., Goldstein v. Internal Revenue Serv., No. 14-CV-02186, 174 F.Supp.3d 38, 47–48, 2016 WL 1180157, at *6 (D.D.C. Mar. 25, 2016) ("to the extent that the IRS denied Plaintiff access to tax returns requested in Items 2, 3, 4, 7, and 10, those denials are actionable under FOIA and therefore are appropriately before this court"). These additional avenues of enforcing the prohibitions and exceptions of Section 6103 356 show that the decedent exception in Section 6103(e) is not superfluous simply because, under the circumstances of this case, the Estate does not have a private cause of action for damages.

[9] Especially given the principle that courts construe waivers of sovereign immunity narrowly, there is no reason to believe that Congress meant the damages remedy in Section 7431 to be coextensive in all cases with the prohibitions in Section 6103. Although Section 7431 refers to "any officer or employee" disclosing "return information" in violation of "any provision of section 6103," it also adds the restriction that the damages action must be brought by the same taxpayer whose information was improperly disclosed. If Congress had wanted Sections 6103 and 7431 to be perfectly coextensive, it could have used broader language in identifying the persons who may sue under Section 7431, such as "any aggrieved person" or "any affected taxpayer." See Allied/Royal Parking L.P. v. United States, 166 F.3d 1000, 1003 (9th Cir.1999) (holding that Section 7433 limits cause of action to "such taxpayers" from whom the IRS is attempting to collect: "Where Congress intends to provide a cause of action for a broad class of plaintiffs, it has used unambiguous language to do so. For example, if a person's property has been wrongfully levied upon to satisfy the tax obligation of another person, the wrongful levy statute provides a cause of action to 'any person (other than the person against whom is assessed the tax out of which such levy arose)' to recover his or her property. 26 U.S.C. § 7426(a)(1)." (emphasis in original)). Because "such taxpayer" does not include the Estate in this case, the Estate has no cause of action for damages for the violation of Section 6103.

Having found that Defendants do not have a cause of action under Section 7431 to bring their proposed counterclaim, the Court does not address the parties' other arguments.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES Defendants' motion to amend the scheduling order and add their proposed counterclaim. (ECF No. 40.) The Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to extend the period for fact discovery for 90 days. (ECF No. 46.) Discovery shall close on September 8, 2016.

By June 3, 2016, Defendants shall file a document —no more than eight pages—detailing exactly what information they seek related to the Case Study Materials, what they expect the documents would show, and how such information is relevant to defending the Government's claim for an FBAR penalty. The Government shall file a response of no more than eight pages by June 17, 2016. There shall be no replies. After receiving the parties' filings, the Court will review them and issue a ruling on whether the Government must produce the Case Study Materials.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

187 F.Supp.3d 350, 117 A.F.T.R.2d 2016-1809

Footnotes

[1] Defendants represent that they "do not seek damages for each of the untold number of third-parties who read, copied, or downloaded the disclosed information from the third-party law firm website or from websites or platforms to which the information may have been transferred or re-posted." (ECF No. 45 at 8–9.)

[2] 26 U.S.C. § 7432(a) provides: "If any officer or employee of the Internal Revenue Service knowingly, or by reason of negligence, fails to release a lien under section 6325 on property of the taxpayer, such taxpayer may bring a civil action for damages against the United States in a district court of the United States." (emphasis added).

[3] 26 U.S.C. § 7433(a) provides: "If, in connection with any collection of Federal tax with respect to a taxpayer, any officer or employee of the Internal Revenue Service recklessly or intentionally, or by reason of negligence, disregards any provision of this title, or any regulation promulgated under this title, such taxpayer may bring a civil action for damages against the United States in a district court of the United States. Except as provided in section 7432, such civil action shall be the exclusive remedy for recovering damages resulting from such actions." (emphasis added).

[4] Paul G. Garrity, Sr. died on February 10, 2008. (ECF No. 40 at 1.)

[5] It is worth noting that, at common law, no right of action for invasion of personal privacy, and thus no property right in such an action, could have accrued to Paul G. Garrity, Sr., after his death. A dead person has no cognizable right of action when his privacy is invaded. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652I, cmt. b. ("In the absence of statute, the action for the invasion of privacy cannot be maintained after the death of the individual whose privacy is invaded.").

End of Document

2016 WL 416516
United States District Court, C.D. California.

UNITED STATES
v.
BUSSELL.

CV 15–02034 SJO (VBKx)
|
Signed January 11, 2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

Thomas Derrick Coker, AUSA-Office of U.S. Attorney, Los Angeles, CA, for United States.

Victor Sherman, Sherman and Sherman PLC, Santa Monica, CA, for Bussell.

PROCEEDINGS (in chambers): ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

[Docket No. 180]

THE HONORABLE S. JAMES OTERO, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

1 This matter is before the Court on Defendant Letantia Bussell's ("Defendant") Motion for Reconsideration of the Order on Motion for Summary Judgment and Judgment on the Pleadings ("Motion"), filed December 15, 2015. On December 21, 2015, Plaintiff United States of America ("Plaintiff") filed an Opposition to Defendant's Motion. Defendant did not file a Reply. Having carefully considered the issues raised, the Court deems the matter appropriate for decision without oral argument and vacates the hearing set for January 25, 2015. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 78. For the reasons set forth below, the Court DENIES the Motion.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background

Defendant was married to John Bussell ("Mr.Bussell") from 1972 until his death in 2002. (Index of Exs. and Decls. in Supp. of Pl.'s Mot. ("Index"), ECF No. 24–1, Ex. 11 ¶ 3.) Defendant is a licensed physician who specializes in dermatology. Bussell v. Comm'r, 130 T.C. 222, 224 (2008). Defendant has maintained a dermatology practice in Beverly Hills, California since 1979. Id. From 1981 through approximately 1995, when Defendant filed for bankruptcy, Defendant conducted her medical practice through various corporations, including Letantia Bussell M.D. Inc. Id.

Before Mr. Bussell and Defendant (collectively, the "Bussells") filed for bankruptcy in 1995, the Bussells restructured Defendant's medical practice to conceal her interest in the practice. (Index, Ex. 21 at IOE_000104–105.) [1] The Bussells funneled Defendant's profits between 1993 and 1995, which totaled $1,149,048, into a non-interest bearing account with Sanwa Bank ("Sanwa Account"). The Bussells maintained control over the Sanwa Account, but the Sanwa Account was under the name of BBL Medical Management, Inc. ("BBL"). (Index, Ex. 21, at IOE_000105.) In January 1996, Defendant transferred the balance of the Sanwa Account to a personal bank account at Swiss Bank Corp. Bussell v. Comm'r, T.C. Memo.2005–77, 2005 WL 775755 at *4 (April 7, 2005). Swiss Bank Corp. later became known as UBS AG. (Index, Ex. 11 ¶ 2.) The Defendant failed to disclose the funds from the Sanwa Account and her interest in the Swiss account in her 1996 tax return. Id.

B. The Subject Account and Defendant's Tax Filings

On January 29, 1997, the Bussells opened a second bank account with Swiss Bank Corp., account no. xxxx3235 (the "Subject Account"). (See Index, Ex. 4; Ex. 11 ¶ 2.) As part of the process of opening the Subject Account, the Bussells signed a Swiss Bank Corp. document naming themselves as the beneficial owners of the account. (See Index, Ex. 4. at IOE_000011.) The Bussells also signed a Swiss Bank Corp. document entitled "General power of attorney" granting Todd John Bussell, their son, signature authority over the Subject Account. (Index, Ex. 4 at IOE_000015.) Defendant also had signature authority over the Subject Account. (Index, Ex. 4 at IOE_000014.)

2 On October 15, 2007, Defendant filed her individual income tax return for the 2006 tax year. (See Index, Ex. 4.) In her 2006 tax return, Defendant did not report the interest income earned from the Subject Account. (Index, Ex. 11 ¶ 6.) Furthermore, Defendant did not file a Treasury Department Form 90–22.1, Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR Form"), disclosing her financial interest in the Subject Account for the 2006 tax year. (Index, Ex. 11 ¶ 6.) During 2006, the Subject Account had a balance that exceeded $10,000. (Index, Ex. 11 ¶ 4.) On December 31, 2006, the Subject Account had a balance of $2,241,027. (Index, Ex. 11 ¶ 5.)

On October 23, 2007, Todd Bussell wrote to UBS AG and asked the bank to liquidate the Subject Account, as well as a second account, and requested that the balances be transferred to two accounts at Finter Bank Zurich. Todd Bussell requested that 50% of the balances be transferred to an account with Wakaduku Foundation as the beneficiary ("Wakaduku Account"), and the other 50% transferred to an account with Valmadera Foundation as the beneficiary ("Valmadera Account"). (Plaintiff's Proposed Statement of Uncontroverted Facts ("PSUF"), ECF No. 23–1, ¶ 16; See also Index, Ex. 5 at IOE 000018.)

Several transfers then occurred between the Subject Account and the other accounts. On November 1, 2007, the Subject Account had zero balance. (Index, Ex. 5 at IOE 000021.) On November 9, 2007, the Subject Account had a closing balance of $2,918,299.28. (Index Ex. 5 at IOE 000021.) Pursuant to Todd Bussell's request, on November 13, 2007, UBS AG made three separate payments to the Wakaduku Account and the Valmadera Account. (Index Ex. 5 at IOE 000022.) By November, 14, 2007, the Subject Account had zero balance again. (Index Ex. 5 at IOE 000022.)

C. History of Legal Proceedings Against the Bussells

On May 3, 2000, an Indictment was filed against the Bussells in the Central District of California. (Index, Ex. 18 at IOE_000074.) On January 31, 2002, a Redacted First Superseding Indictment (the "Indictment") was filed against the Bussells in which the Government brought various counts related to bankruptcy fraud and attempted tax evasion. (PSUF ¶ 3.)

On February 6, 2002, a jury convicted Defendant of the following: (1) one count of violating 18 U.S.C. § 371 (conspiracy to commit an offense against or defraud the United States); (2) two counts of violating 18 U.S.C. § 152(1) (concealment of assets in bankruptcy); (3) two counts of violating 18 U.S.C. § 152(3) (false declaration and statement as to avoid material matters); and (4) one count of violating 26 U.S.C. § 7201 and 18 U.S.C. § 2 (evading payment of income tax). (PSUF ¶ 3.)

After the conviction, on or about April 29, 2002, the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") issued a jeopardy levy with regard to the Bussells' income tax liabilities for 1983, 1984, 1986, and 1987. (Index, Ex. 21, at IOE_000107.) The IRS also approved a jeopardy assessment against the Bussells for the 1996 tax year ("1996 Assessment"). The total amount of the jeopardy levy/assessment was $3.4 million, with $1,283,522 attributable to the 1996 tax year and the remaining $2,116,478 to the 1980s. (Index, Ex. 21, at IOE_000107.) The government explained that it levied a jeopardy assessment in part because:

> [I]n 1996 [Defendant] received $1,149,048 from financial accounts which were previously undisclosed and not reported on [Defendant's] Individual Income Tax Return Form 1040 for this period. These funds were concealed as part of the conspiracy to commit bankruptcy fraud.

(Index, Ex. 21, at IOE_000115.)

On August 23, 2002, Defendant filed a complaint in federal district court seeking review of the 1996 Assessment pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 7429(b). (PSUF ¶ 4.) On December 11, 2002, the Court issued an order granting the Government's motion for summary judgment and denying Defendant's motion for summary judgment. (PSUF ¶ 5.) The Court held that the IRS's jeopardy determination was reasonable because Defendant's criminal history demonstrated that she had failed to report income and engaged in a scheme to hide assets from the IRS in an attempt to defeat the collection of unpaid taxes. (PSUF ¶ 5.)

3 While the jeopardy case was pending, Defendant filed a petition with the United States Tax Court (the "Tax Court") seeking a redetermination of deficiency in the Bussells' 1996 taxes, as well as a redetermination of the civil tax fraud penalty imposed by the IRS pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6663(a). (PSUF ¶ 7.) The Tax Court concluded that the Bussells maintained, and failed to report, two foreign bank accounts in their 1996 tax return, a Swiss account and a "Syntex" bank account. Bussell v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, T.C. Memo.2005–77, 2005 WL 775755 at *4 (April 7, 2005). The Tax Court held that Defendant was liable for the civil fraud penalty imposed pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6663(a), a decision that was affirmed by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. (PSUF ¶ 8.)

D. Procedural History of the Instant Case

On June 5, 2013, the IRS assessed against the Defendant an FBAR penalty in the amount of $1,221,806 ("Assessment") for her alleged willful failure to disclose and report her interest in the Subject Account for the 2006 tax year. (Index, Ex. 1.) On March 19, 2015, the Government initiated the instant action to recover from the Defendant the Assessment and to reduce the Assessment to a judgment against Defendant. (See generally Compl., ECF No. 1; Mot., ECF No. 23.) The Government seeks a judgment ordering Defendant to pay $1,361,694.41, which includes the Assessment, the penalty for failure-to-pay the Assessment, and interest as of January 23, 2015, plus any accruing interest thereafter. (See generally Compl.; Index, Ex. 2.)

On December 8, 2015, this Court granted in part and denied in part the Government's Motion for Summary Judgment, and granted in part and denied in part Defendant's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. The Court ordered the Defendant to pay a penalty amount of $1,120,513. (See generally Order on Mtn. for Summ. J. and J. on the Pleadings ("Summary Judgment Order"), ECF No. 35.) Defendant now brings the instant Motion for Reconsideration.

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Motion for Reconsideration

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b) provides that a Court, upon a motion and just terms, "may relieve a party or its legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding for the following reasons:

> (1) mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect;
>
> (2) newly discovered evidence that, with reasonable diligence, could not have been discovered in time to move for a new trial under Rule 59(b);
>
> (3) fraud (whether previously called intrinsic or extrinsic), misrepresentation, or misconduct by an opposing party;
>
> (4) the judgment is void;
>
> (5) the judgment has been satisfied, released, or discharged; it is based on an earlier judgment that has been reversed or vacated; or applying it prospectively is no longer equitable; or
>
> (6) any other reason that justifies relief."

Fed.R.Civ.P. 60(b). The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has instructed that a "motion for reconsideration should not be granted, absent highly unusual circumstances, unless the district court is presented with newly discovered evidence, committed clear error, or if there is an intervening change in the controlling law." 399 Orange St. Partners v. Arnold, 179 F.3d 656, 665 (9th Cir.1999) (emphasis added) (citation omitted). Further, a motion for reconsideration "may not be used to raise arguments or present evidence for the first time when they could reasonably have been raised earlier in the litigation." Carroll v. Nakatani, 342 F.3d 934, 945 (9th Cir.2003).

Moreover, the Court strictly adheres to Local Rule 7–18, which limits the viable bases for a motion for reconsideration. Local Rule 7–18 provides that a motion for reconsideration "may be made only on the grounds of (a) a material difference in fact or law from that presented to the Court before such decision that in the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have been known to the party moving for reconsideration at the time of such decision, or (b) the emergence of new material facts or a change of law occurring after the time of such decision, or (c) a manifest showing of a failure to consider material facts presented to the Court before such decision." Local Rule 7–18 (emphasis added).

III. DISCUSSION

4 Defendant's Motion does little more than rehash arguments already made in the Motion for Summary Judgment and the Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. Defendant, thus, does not meet the requirements set out in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b) or the Court's Local Rules. Notably, Defendant restates its affirmative defenses based on the Fifth Amendment's Double Jeopardy Clause and the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause. (Mtn. at 5.) The Court addressed these arguments in its Summary Judgment Order. (See Summ. J. Order 8–10.) The Court, in fact, reduced the Government's penalty assessment to comport with the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment. (Summ. J. Order 10–11.) The Court will not revisit this decision and reduce the penalty assessment further.

Defendant goes on to argue that the Court's Summary Judgment Order does not account for the source of the funds in the Subject Account. According to Defendant, the Government's penalty assessment violates the protection against double jeopardy because the funds that Defendant deposited in the Subject Account had been the subject of prior proceedings by the Government. (Mtn. at 5.) The Court addressed this argument in its prior Order. As the Court held, the Bussells had at least two accounts in Switzerland. The Bussells transferred the full balance of the Sanwa Account to “a Swiss account” at Swiss Bank Corp, and the last transfer to this Swiss account was on or about June 11, 1996. Bussell v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo.2005–77, 2005 WL 775755 at *4–5 (April 7, 2005). The Bussells then opened the Subject Account, a second Swiss account, on January 29, 1997. (See Index, Ex. 4.) The funds from the Sanwa Account, which were the subject of prior penalties, could not have been transferred to the Subject Account because the Sanwa Account funds were transferred to the first account in 1996, six months before the Subject Account even existed. Defendant's arguments concerning the penalties assessed on funds from the Sanwa Account are not applicable to the penalties assessed in the instant case.

Defendant responds that “the source of the subject account are not fully accounted for in the Court's conclusion.” (Mtn. at 5.) Defendant, however, has provided no evidence as to the source of the funds in the Subject Account. In order to establish an affirmative defense based on Double Jeopardy, Defendant bears the burden to show that the funds in the Subject Account came from funds that were the subject of prior proceedings. See C.A.R. Transp. Brokerage Co. v. Darden Rests., Inc., 213 F.3d 474, 480 (9th Cir.2000) (“When the party moving for summary judgment would bear the burden of proof at trial, it must come forward with evidence which would entitle it to a directed verdict if the evidence went uncontroverted at trial. In such a case, the moving party has the initial burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of fact on each issue material to its case.” (citations omitted)). Defendant has not carried this burden.

IV. RULING

Based on the foregoing, it is hereby ordered that Defendant's Motion for Reconsideration is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in Fed. Supp., 2016 WL 416516, 117 A.F.T.R.2d 2016-446

Footnotes

[1] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 201, the Court takes judicial notice of Exhibits 18 through 23 of the Index of Exhibits filed concurrently with the Government's Request for Judicial Notice. (See generally Index.) Each of these Exhibits represents a publicly available record or filing, and is therefore not reasonably subject to dispute. See Fed.R.Evid. 201(b)(2).

End of Document

2013 WL 1499341
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
E.D. California.

Nadia ROBERTS, et al., Plaintiffs,
v.
UBS AG, et al., Defendants.

No. CV F 12–0724 LJO SKO.
|
April 11, 2013.

Attorneys and Law Firms

William J. King, The WJK Law Firm, Tustin, CA, for Plaintiffs.

Dean J. Kitchens, Lauren Allyn Eber, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, Los Angeles, CA, for Defendants.

ORDER ON DEFENDANT UBS AG'S F.R.Civ.P. 12 MOTION TO DISMISS (Doc. 38.)

LAWRENCE J. O'NEILL, District Judge.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT TO PARTIES AND COUNSEL

1 Judges in the Eastern District of California carry the heaviest caseload in the nation, and this Court is unable to devote inordinate time and resources to individual cases and matters. This Court cannot address all arguments, evidence and matters raised by parties and addresses only the arguments, evidence and matters necessary to reach the decision in this order given the shortage of district judges and staff. The parties and counsel are encouraged to contact United States Senators Diane Feinstein and Barbara Boxer to address this Court's inability to accommodate the parties and this action. The parties are required to consider, or reconsider, consent to a U.S. Magistrate Judge to conduct all further proceedings in that the Magistrate Judges' availability is far more realistic and accommodating to parties than that of U.S. District Judge Lawrence J. O'Neill who must prioritize criminal and older civil cases.

Civil trials set before Judge O'Neill trail until he becomes available and are subject to suspension mid-trial to accommodate criminal matters. Civil trials are no longer reset to a later date if Judge O'Neill is unavailable on the original date set for trial. If a trial trails, it may proceed with little advance notice, and the parties and counsel may be expected to proceed to trial with less than 24 hours notice. Moreover, this Court's Fresno Division randomly and without advance notice reassigns civil actions to U.S. District Judges throughout the nation to serve as visiting judges. This action is under consideration for such reassignment. In the absence of Magistrate Judge consent, this action is subject to reassignment to a U.S. District Judge from outside the Eastern District of California.

INTRODUCTION

Defendant UBS AG seeks to dismiss as improperly pled and legally barred plaintiffs'[1] fraud, malpractice and related claims arising from tax penalties plaintiffs incurred in connection with foreign investments and tax shelters with defendant UBS AG. Plaintiffs contend that their operative Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") allege facts "to show that Plaintiffs are entitled to relief from UBS AG." This Court considered UBS AG's F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss on the record and VACATES the April 17, 2013 hearing, pursuant to Local Rule 230(g). For the reasons discussed below, this Court DISMISSES the SAC's claims, except limited negligence and conversion claims.

BACKGROUND[2]

Summary

UBS AG is a Swiss corporation, provides banking and investment services, and operates worldwide branches. The SAC also names as defendants four individuals associated with UBS AG, three Swiss business entities, two private Swiss banks, and a Bermuda corporation.[3] The individual plaintiffs are residents of California, Texas, Washington and New York and are former UB S AG clients. The SAC alleges that UBS AG induced plaintiffs to transfer accounts to or to keep accounts with UBS AG and concealed U.S. tax reporting requirements to result in plaintiffs' failure to pay U.S. taxes on their UBS AG foreign investments and consequent penalties. The SAC alleges that each plaintiff "faced criminal investigation relating to the shell company structure set up and carried out by Defendants" and "agreed to pay millions of dollars in tax penalties, plus interest, on top of related costs and professional fees." UBS AG challenges the SAC's multiple tort and related claims as lacking sufficient facts and as barred by plaintiffs' own conduct.

IRS Foreign Account And Trust Reporting

2 Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") Form 1040, Schedule B, Line 7a ("Line 7a") asks: "did you have a financial interest in or signature authority over a financial account (such as a bank account, securities account, or brokerage account) located in a foreign country?" Schedule B indicates that if a taxpayer has a foreign account, the taxpayer generally must identify the account's location and complete IRS Form TD F 90–22.1 known as the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR"). FBAR instructions require a taxpayer to file a FBAR if the taxpayer has more than $10,000 in foreign accounts and to disclose maximum account values and financial institutions holding accounts.

UBS AG's Scheme

In 2001, the U.S. Treasury required UBS AG to enter into a Qualified Intermediary ("QI") Agreement to require UBS AG clients to complete Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") Forms W–8BEN or W–9 to identify beneficial account owners believed or known to be U.S. citizens or residents.[4] According to the SAC, "UB S AG informed the IRS that it would agree to the QI Agreement terms while devising a scheme to avoid doing just that and would conceal from its clients the QI terms pertaining to said clients while failing to provide necessary documentation to keep its clients, including Plaintiffs, in compliance with U.S. Tax Laws."

Execution Of The Scheme As To Plaintiffs

The Roberts

The Roberts are married. In 2004, Sean Roberts ("Mr.Roberts") owned a UBS AG account in the Isle of Mann and UB S AG banker Claude Ullman ("Mr.Ullman") convinced Mr. Roberts to transfer his account to UBS AG's Swiss location. In 2004, Mr. Ullman told Mr. Roberts that Mr. Roberts could set up a third party trust "to keep his money in a confidential account without having to report it on his taxes because the new entity would be the beneficiary." UBS AG hired defendant Beda Singenberger ("Mr.Singenberger") to create a third-party trust for the Roberts but UBS AG, Mr. Ullman and Mr. Singenberger failed to advise the Roberts "of the illegal nature of said third party trust" and of UBS AG's and the Roberts' tax reporting obligations regarding the trust.

In June 2011, the Roberts entered into plea agreements to plead guilty to filing a false tax return.

The Gubsers

The Gubsers were married during 1978–2008 and held a Swiss UBS AG account which they allowed to sit and which grew to $5.5 million. UBS AG banker Gerard Hofmann ("Mr.Hofmann") advised the Gubsers that the account was set up so that the Gubsers would not need to pay taxes or disclose the account until they brought funds into the United States. UBS AG never advised the Gubsers that they were required to file an IRS Form W–8BEN and "intentionally withheld information pertaining to the QI Agreement." In December 2010, the Gubsers "realized that they may be subject to prosecution by the IRS for failing to declare a 40–year old account originating in Switzerland." The Gubsers participated in the Voluntary Disclosure program and "were forced to pay penalties they should not have paid ."

Mr. Ginzburg

3 In 2000, UBS AG banker Gian Gisler ("Mr.Gisler") advised Mr. Ginzburg, a medical professional, to change the structure of Mr. Ginzburg's UBS AG funds. Mr. Gisler, defendant Matthias Rickenbach ("Mr.Rickenbach"), a Swiss citizen, and UBS AG director Daniel Perron ("Mr.Perron") advised Mr. Ginzburg to close a Liechtenstein-based trust structure and to open a Hong Kong-based trust, that Mr. Ginzburg "would not have to pay any taxes on any capital gains or dividends until the funds were repatriated" to Mr. Ginzburg's future domicile, the United States or Israel, and that he would pay only taxes on possible capital gains and dividends when he repatriated the funds. Mr. Ginzburg allowed Mr. Rickenbach to set up the Hong Kong trust, and "his account was invested in U.S. stocks" despite UBS AG's agreement to report income and to withhold taxes. Mr. Ginzburg was never informed of the QI Agreement, and in November 2008, UBS AG froze his accounts to prevent him to mitigate market losses. UBS AG representatives refused to disclose information about Mr. Ginzburg's accounts and without Mr. Ginzburg's authorization, "forcefully liquidated the stock portfolio at 2009 levels" to result in a $1.5 million loss. A $565,000 "sales tax" was "wrongfully withheld without any benefit" to Mr. Ginzburg.

In July 2011, Mr. Ginzburg pled guilty to criminal tax fraud.

Mr. Eisenberg

Mr. Eisenberg held a UBS AG account in the Grand Caymans and during a vacation there, entered a UBS AG branch to inquire about the account. He was informed that his account was on the "abandoned accounts" list and transferred to Switzerland. In 2001, Mr. Eisenberg traveled to Switzerland, and defendant UBS AG regional market manager Hansredi Schumacher ("Mr.Schumacher") advised Mr. Eisenberg to set up a trust account. Mr. Eisenberg permitted Mr. Schumacher to set up a Liechtenstein trust and was advised "that he would legally not be required to disclose his account to the IRS because of the trust formation." In 2010, Mr. Eisenberg discovered that UBS AG double charged fees during the account's life.

UBS AG failed to advise Mr. Eisenberg of release by UBS AG of his name to the United States to preclude Mr. Eisenberg to correct defects or seek voluntary disclosure. Mr. Eisenberg's name was one of the first released to the IRS.

The IRS prosecuted Mr. Eisenberg who entered into a December 2010 agreement to plead guilty to filing a false tax return and paid $2.5 million penalties on a $65,000 tax bill.

Mr. Chernick, Shumba And Simba

Mr. Chernick succeeded in manufacturing toys with his Shumba corporation. In 2000, UBS AG executive director Phillip Bigger ("Mr.Bigger") recommended to move Mr. Chernick's Cayman Islands account to UBS AG's Hong Kong office, and Mr. Chernick opened up UBS AG Hong Kong accounts under Shumba. Mr. Bigger advised Mr. Chernick that Mr. Chernick would legally not be required to report the account on his taxes.

4 In 2001, UBS AG account advisor Juergen Hirsch ("Mr.Hirsch") managed Mr. Chernick's Hong Kong account and advised Mr. Chernick to hold U.S. securities in the Hong Kong accounts "without disclosing that Chernick would have to report such holdings to the U.S. or otherwise advising him of the QI Agreement terms." In 2002, defendant Mr. Rickenbach with UBS AG's authorization "caused the setup of a sham entity to hold Shumba and Simba." In 2006, Mr. Bigger caused Mr. Chernick to close his Shumba account at UBS AG's Hong Kong office and transferred the account's assets, including U.S. securities, to a UBS AG Zurich account. Mr. Bigger failed to inform Mr. Chernick of QI Agreement requirements to file IRS forms or UBS AG withholding of taxes.

Mr. Chernick entered into a July 2009 agreement to plead guilty to filing a false tax return.

Common Allegations

As to all plaintiffs, the SAC alleges that USB AG agents, financial and account advisors, executive directors, and bankers, "under the direction of USB AG":

1. Concealed the QI Agreement and need for UBS AG to withhold taxes or send IRS reporting forms;

2. Failed to include on plaintiffs' statement "tax withholding";

3. Failed to send plaintiffs IRS Forms 1099, W–9 or W–8BEN;

4. Failed to advise plaintiffs "that their accounts were set up in violation of the QI Agreement and U.S. tax codes, and that said plaintiffs needed to take steps to advise the IRS of said third-party trusts";

5. Failed to send an amnesty letter to advise plaintiffs of the option to disclose to the United States their UBS AG accounts through a "Voluntary Disclosure" program;

6. Violated UBS AG protocols and Swiss laws on disclosure of client identities;

7. Were not properly licensed to provide banking services and tax and investment advice and solicited and serviced plaintiffs "in violation of U.S. securities laws"; and

8. Failed to register themselves and offered securities to violate federal law.

Criminal Prosecution Of UBS AG And Plaintiffs

In November 2008, the United States government filed indictments against UBS AG executives, managers and bankers. On February 18, 2009, UBS AG and the United States government entered into a Deferred Prosecution Agreement ("DPA") by which UBS AG admitted that during 2000–2007, UBS AG "participated in a scheme to defraud the United States and its agency, the IRS by actively assisting or otherwise facilitating a number of United States individual taxpayers in establishing accounts at UBS in a manner designed to conceal the United States taxpayers' ownership or beneficial interest in these accounts." On August 12, 2009, the United States government and UBS AG reached an agreement in principle to disclose 4,450 UBS AG clients.

By 2010, the IRS and U.S. Department of Justice had approached each plaintiff and advised that investments since 2001 were subject to taxation. Each plaintiff faced criminal investigation and paid millions of dollars in tax penalties in addition to interest and professional fees.

DISCUSSION

F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) Motion To Dismiss Standards

5 The FAC alleges 15 tort and related claims which UBS AG contends are precluded by plaintiffs' "own tax fraud" in that all plaintiffs but the Gubsers have pled guilty to tax fraud by knowingly filing false tax returns and concealing income. UBS AG holds plaintiffs to "the burden of their own tax fraud" and faults the SAC's failure to plead sufficient facts to support its claims.

"When a federal court reviews the sufficiency of a complaint, before the reception of any evidence either by affidavit or admissions, its task is necessarily a limited one. The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheurer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 40 L.Ed.2d 90 (1974); Gilligan v. Jamco Development Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir.1997). A F.R .Civ.P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper where there is either a "lack of a cognizable legal theory" or "the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balisteri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir.1990); Graehling v. Village of Lombard, Ill., 58 F.3d 295, 297 (7th Cir.1995). A F.R .Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion "tests the legal sufficiency of a claim." Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir.2001).

In addressing dismissal, a court must: (1) construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff; (2) accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true; and (3) determine whether plaintiff can prove any set of facts to support a claim that would merit relief. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337–338 (9th Cir.1996). Nonetheless, a court is not required "to accept as true allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Sciences Securities Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir.2008) (citation omitted). A court "need not assume the truth of legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations," U.S. ex rel. Chunie v. Ringrose, 788 F.2d 638, 643, n. 2 (9th Cir.1986), and must not "assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated ... laws in ways that have not been alleged." Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S.Ct. 897, 74 L.Ed.2d 723 (1983). A court need not permit an attempt to amend if "it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by an amendment." Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir.2005).

A plaintiff is obliged "to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' [which] requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 554,550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1964–65, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007) (internal citations omitted). Moreover, a court "will dismiss any claim that, even when construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, fails to plead sufficiently all required elements of a cause of action." Student Loan Marketing Ass'n v. Hanes, 181 F.R.D. 629, 634 (S.D.Cal.1998). In practice, a complaint "must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 562, 127 S.Ct. at 1969 (quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir.1984)).

6 In Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937,1949, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009), the U.S. Supreme Court explained:

> ... a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." ... A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.... The plausibility standard is not akin to a "probability requirement," but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. (Citations omitted.)

After discussing Iqbal, the Ninth Circuit summarized: "In sum, for a complaint to survive [dismissal], the non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief ." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 989 (9th Cir.2009) (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. at 1949, 173 L.Ed.2d 868).

The U.S. Supreme Court applies a "two-prong approach" to address dismissal:

> First, the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.... Second, only a complaint that states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss.... Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will ... be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense.... But where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not "show[n]"—"that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 8(a)(2).
>
> In keeping with these principles a court considering a motion to dismiss can choose to begin by identifying pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth. While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.

Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. at 1949–1950, 173 L.Ed.2d 868.

A plaintiff suing multiple defendants "must allege the basis of his claim against each defendant to satisfy Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), which requires a short and plain statement of the claim to put defendants on sufficient notice of the allegations against them." Gauvin v. Trombatore, 682 F.Supp. 1067, 1071 (N.D.Cal.1988). "Specific identification of the parties to the activities alleged by the plaintiffs is required in this action to enable the defendant to plead intelligently." Van Dyke Ford, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 399 F.Supp. 277, 284 (D.Wis.1975).

7 With these standards in mind, this Court turns to UBS AG's challenges to the SAC claims.

Fraud

UBS AG seeks dismissal of the SAC's (first) fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment, (second) constructive fraud, and (third) negligent misrepresentation claims as barred by plaintiffs' own fraud and lacking facts to support elements of the fraud claims.

To support the fraud claims, the SAC alleges that the "UBS AG Defendants": [5]

1. Prepared documentation to form shell corporations which was not permissible under the QI Agreement or U.S. tax laws;

2. Represented that plaintiffs need not be named as signatories on accounts to maintain privacy and failed to report each plaintiff's information to the IRS;

3. Created and implemented a scheme that was illegal and not permitted by the QI Agreement;

4. Provided erroneous tax and legal advice and intentionally prepared wrongful and misleading documents and sent them to plaintiffs;

5. Concealed that plaintiffs owed taxes on their investments and faced criminal investigation for the management structure of plaintiffs' account set up by the UBS AG Defendants;

6. Were not licensed and permitted to provide banking services, investment advice, manage funds, and solicit securities transactions to plaintiffs;

7. Formed shell corporations and invested in corporations using plaintiffs' assets without advising plaintiffs; and

8. Manipulated plaintiffs to open or maintain accounts, charged unnecessary fees and converted assets.

Bar Of Plaintiffs' Own Fraud

UBS AG initially challenges the complaint's fraud claims as barred by plaintiffs' own fraud. UBS AG points to Olenicoff v. UBS AG, 2012 WL 1192911, at *1 (C.D.Cal.2012), where the plaintiff pursued claims against UBS AG after the plaintiff pled guilty to knowingly and willfully failing to disclose off-shore accounts on his tax returns. The fellow district judge in Olenicoff, 2012 WL 1192911, at *1, observed:

> To defend itself, UBS is forced to strenuously insist that its prior guilty plea only admitted to assisting willing clients with tax fraud, not forcing unsuspecting clients into tax evasion. While its argument is ironic, UBS is right. Even assuming that UBS gave [plaintiff] fraudulent tax advice, that makes UBS a co-conspirator, not a defendant in this litigation.

In Thomas v. UBS AG, 706 F.3d 846, 850 (7h Cir.2013), the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals addressed fraud claims against UBS AG similar to those here and observed that the "plaintiffs are tax cheats, and it is very odd, to say the least, for tax cheats to seek to recover their penalties ... from the source, in this case, UBS, of the income concealed from the IRS." As to fraud, the Thomas court further explained:

> The plaintiffs also charge fraud: that the bank inveigled them into continuing to invest with it (they had opened their accounts before the bank joined the Qualified Intermediary Program) by concealing its agreement with the IRS and the obligation entailed by the agreement to report tax information about the plaintiffs to the IRS. This is a private-entrapment argument: by letting the plaintiffs think that keeping their money in foreign accounts would enable them to evade federal tax law successfully, UBS caused the plaintiffs to commit tax fraud. That is another frivolous theory of liability. For if it were adopted, not only would everyone have a legally enforceable duty to prevent crimes and other wrongs when he could; a failure to perform the duty would give the criminal or other wrongdoer a right of action against the failed protector.

8 Thomas, 706 F.3d at 853.

UBS AG argues that plaintiffs "must bear the responsibility for their own actions" and "cannot shift blame to UBS" in that plaintiffs failed to disclose and pay taxes on their foreign accounts. See Olenicoff, 2012 WL 1192911, at *1 (plaintiff "may not avoid the consequences of his own plea by getting UBS to indemnify him for his criminal acts”). UBS AG points to the absence of allegations that plaintiffs misinterpreted or did not know of Line 7a.

Unclean Hands

Plaintiffs characterize UBS AG to assert an unclean hands defense which is inapplicable and a matter of factual determination. Plaintiffs argue that the unclean hands doctrine does not apply because it addresses plaintiffs' misconduct “which is unconnected with the matter in litigation” in that UBS AG was not involved in DOJ actions against plaintiffs.

“It is one of the fundamental principles upon which equity jurisprudence is founded, that before a complainant can have a standing in court he must first show that not only has he a good and meritorious cause of action, but he must come into court with clean hands.” Keystone Driller Co. v. General Excavator Co., 290 U.S. 240, 244, 54 S.Ct. 146, 78 L.Ed. 293 (1933).

Plaintiffs fail to establish that the unclean hands doctrine is at issue. UBS AG contends that plaintiffs' own fraud bars their fraud claims. The gist of the fraud claims is that UBS AG caused plaintiffs to commit tax fraud by cajoling plaintiffs into questionable investments and failing to disclose plaintiffs' tax reporting obligations. Plaintiffs' failure to report their foreign accounts is tax fraud to defeat their fraud claims, not unclean hands.

Judicial Estoppel

Plaintiffs further characterize UBS AG to apply judicial estoppel to bar the fraud claims. Plaintiffs contend that their guilty pleas and voluntary disclosures should not be considered to analyze the SAC's claims.

Judicial estoppel “precludes a party from gaining an advantage by taking one position, and then seeking a second advantage by taking an incompatible position.” Rissetto v. Plumbers and Steamfitters Local 343, 94 F.3d 597, 600 (9th Cir.1996). The Ninth Circuit has explained the rationale of judicial estoppel:

> The policies underlying preclusion of inconsistent positions are general considerations of the orderly administration of justice and regard for the dignity of judicial proceedings.... Judicial estoppel is intended to protect against a litigant playing fast and loose with the courts.... Because it is intended to protect the dignity of the judicial process, it is an equitable doctrine invoked by a court at its discretion.

Russell v. Rolfs, 893 F.2d 1033, 1037 (9th Cir.1990), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1260, 111 S.Ct. 2915, 115 L.Ed.2d 1078 (1991).

The U.S. Supreme Court has further explained: “[W]here a party assumes a certain position in a legal proceeding, and succeeds in maintaining that position, he may not thereafter, simply because his interests have changed, assume a contrary position, especially if it be to the prejudice of the party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken by him.” Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U.S. 680, 689, 15 S.Ct. 555, 39 L.Ed. 578 (1895).

9 Similar to the unclean hands doctrine, plaintiffs fail to demonstrate UBS AG's invocation of judicial estoppel. In its reply papers, UBS AG notes it “did not expressly rely on this doctrine.” Plaintiffs' failure to report their foreign accounts is tax fraud to defeat their fraud claims. UBS AG does not rely on plaintiffs' inconsistent positions, especially given that SAC allegations that UBS AG duped plaintiffs to commit tax fraud. Plaintiffs' claims of reliance on UBS AG's advice contradicts their plea agreements that they willfully filed false tax returns.

Plaintiffs' unclean hands and judicial estoppel points equate to unavailing straw men.

Fraud Elements—Justifiable Reliance

UBS AG faults the SAC's failure to support fraud elements, in particular, justifiable reliance. The elements of a California fraud claim are: (1) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment or nondisclosure); (2) knowledge of the falsity (or “scienter”); (3) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. Lazar v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.4th 631, 638, 49 Cal.Rptr.2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 (1996). The same elements comprise a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation, except there is no requirement of intent to induce reliance. Caldo v. Owens–Illinois, Inc., 125 Cal.App.4th 513, 519, 23 Cal . Rtpr.3d 1 (2004).

"[T]o establish a cause of action for fraud a plaintiff must plead and prove in full, factually and specifically, all of the elements of the cause of action." Conrad v. Bank of America, 45 Cal.App.4th 133, 156, 53 Cal.Rptr.2d 336 (1996). There must be a showing "that the defendant thereby intended to induce the plaintiff to act to his detriment in reliance upon the false representation" and "that the plaintiff actually and justifiably relied upon the defendant's misrepresentation in acting to his detriment." Conrad, 45 Cal.App.4th at 157, 53 Cal.Rptr.2d 336; see Grant Thornton LLP v. Prospect High Income Fund, 314 S.W.3d 913, 923 (Tex.2010) ("Both fraud and negligent misrepresentation require that the plaintiff show actual and justifiable reliance"); J.A. O. Acquisition Corp. v. Stavitsky, 8 N.Y.3d 144, 148, 831 N.Y.S.2d 364, 863 N.E.2d 585 (N.Y.2007); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Baik, 147 Wash.2d 536, 624, 55 P.3d 619 (Wash.2002). "The absence of any one of these required elements will preclude recovery." Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell, 186 Cal.App.3d 1324, 1332, 231 Cal.Rptr. 355 (1986).

UBS AG faults the SAC's absence of facts to support plaintiffs' actual and justifiable reliance on UBS AG's misrepresentations or omissions given plaintiffs' obligation to report truthfully their income. UBS AG notes that "Plaintiffs cannot allege reasonable reliance on advice from UBS which caused them to lie on their tax returns." UBS AG argues that fraud claims based on an "omission" theory fail in that Line 7a seeks an unequivocal disclosure ("did you have a financial interest in or signature authority over a financial account ... located in a foreign country?"). See Browning v. C.I.R., 2011 WL 5289636, at *14 (U.S.Tax Ct.2011) ("It is inconceivable that ... petitioner, a college graduate with a successful business background, ... could misinterpret" Line 7a).

10 UBS AG attacks an affirmatively misrepresented tax-reporting theory in that there is no justifiable reliance if a plaintiff unreasonably fails to conduct an independent inquiry that would have uncovered the truth or disregards known and obvious risks. See Cameron v. Cameron, 88 Cal.App.2d 585, 594, 199 P.2d 443 (1948) ("If [one] becomes aware of facts that tend to arouse his suspicion, or if he has reason to believe that any representations made to him are false or only half true, it is his legal duty to complete his investigation and he has no right to rely on statements of the other contracting party."); Mark Patterson, Inc. v. Bowie, 237 A.D.2d 184, 654 N.Y.S.2d 769 (N.Y.App.Div.1997) ("reliance is negated by the fact that plaintiff had independent access to this information"). UBS AG contends that given clarity of disclosure required by IRS tax forms, plaintiffs could not have justifiably relied on UBS AG's alleged statements suggesting otherwise. UBS AG concludes that the simplicity of Line 7a renders inconceivable plaintiffs' misinterpretation, "regardless of what UBS representative told or failed to tell Plaintiffs."

Plaintiffs respond that the fraud claims "extend well beyond" tax advice and point to claims of improperly established shell corporations. Plaintiffs claim they were induced "to invest and rely on UBS's expertise" and give "unfettered control over Plaintiffs' assets." Plaintiffs claim that nothing "suggests that Plaintiffs had any degree of sophistication or expertise over UBS."

Despite plaintiffs' characterizations of alleged fraud, the distilled allegations are that UBS AG made representations to induce plaintiffs to invest in foreign accounts which plaintiffs failed to report. The SAC lacks facts to support actual or justifiable reliance given Line 7a clear disclosure requirements. UBS AG's "purported expertise and knowledge" are insufficient in that the SAC alleges facts to no less than arouse suspicion that plaintiffs needed to address reporting their foreign accounts. The SAC's clear import is that UBS AG provided investing services, not legal or tax advice, to support reliance.

Constructive Fraud

The SAC's (second) constructive fraud claim is premised on "a confidential and fiduciary relationship" among UBS AG and plaintiffs. In Salahutdin v. Valley of California, Inc., 24 Cal.App.4th 555, 562, 29 Cal.Rptr.2d 463 (1994), the California Court of Appeal explained constructive fraud:

> Constructive fraud is a unique species of fraud applicable only to a fiduciary or confidential relationship.... [A]s a > general principle constructive fraud comprises any act, omission or concealment involving a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust or confidence which results in damage to another even though the conduct is not otherwise fraudulent. Most acts by an agent in breach of his fiduciary duties constitute constructive fraud. The failure of the fiduciary to disclose a material fact to his principal which might affect the fiduciary's motives or the principal's decision, which is known (or should be known) to the fiduciary, may constitute constructive fraud. Also, a careless misstatement may constitute constructive fraud even though there is no fraudulent intent. (Citation and internal punctuation omitted).

11 "California courts have not extended the 'special relationship' doctrine to include ordinary commercial contractual relationships." Martin v. U–Haul Co. Of Fresno, 204 Cal.App.3d 396, 412, 251 Cal.Rptr. 17 (1988) (citations omitted). The "relationship between a bank and its depositor is not fiduciary in character." Das v. Bank of America, N.A., 186 Cal.App.4th 727, 741, 112 Cal.Rptr.3d 439 (2010). "[U]nder ordinary circumstances the relationship between a bank and its depositor is that of debtor-creditor, and is not a fiduciary one." Lawrence v. Bank of America, 163 Cal.App.3d 431, 437, 209 Cal.Rptr. 541 (1985); see Thomas, 706 F.3d at 853 (a "bank is not a fiduciary of its depositors. It is merely a debtor"); Bennice v. Lakeshore Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 254 A.D.2d 731, 732, 677 N.Y.S.2d 842 (1998) ("Absent the existence of a special relationship of trust and confidence, a bank has no duty to inform a customer or depositor of the tax consequences of a transaction"); Tokarz v. Frontier Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 33 Wash.App. 456, 459, 656 P.2d 1089 (1982); Jockusch v. Towsey, 51 Tex. 129, 131 (1879).

This Court's prior order noted the absence of "facts to support fiduciary-based claims and dismissed with prejudice "claims arising from an alleged fiduciary relationship among UBS AG and plaintiffs." Based on the parties' stipulation, this Court dismissed the SAC's (fourth) breach of fiduciary duty claim. The complaint lacks facts to support a confidential or fiduciary duty, regardless of dismissal of the breach of fiduciary duty claim. Plaintiffs offer no meaningful opposition to dismissal of the constructive fraud claim. The SAC depicts a banking investment relationship among UBS AG and plaintiffs, not a fiduciary or confidential relationship.

In sum, the SAC fails to support the fraud claims which are subject to dismissal.

Malpractice

The SAC's (seventh) malpractice claim is premised on allegations that defendants:

1. Charged "unreasonable, excessive, and unethical fees";

2. Failed "to disclose and comply with the QI Agreement and other disclosure and tax law requirements";

3. Implemented a scheme to manipulate plaintiffs "into keeping their assets with UBS AG and held by specific trusts";

4. Advised plaintiffs "that the transactions were legitimate, proper, and in accordance with all applicable tax laws, rules, and regulations";

5. Failed to advise plaintiffs that defendants "were not properly licensed to provide banking services, offer investment advice, manage funds and solicit and execute the purchase and sale of securities to and for U.S. citizens";

6. Recommended and assisted plaintiffs "in the formation of unnecessary business entities and incurring unnecessary fees, penalties and criminal investigations";

7. Transferred assets to "shell" entities to create unnecessary fees;

8. Promoted and sold "unregistered and ineffective tax shelters";

12 9. Failed "to ensure that the advised transaction complied with applicable federal rules and regulations";

10. Violated "professional rules of conduct"; and

11. Provided personal and erroneous financial information to third parties.

The SAC's (fourteenth) breach of confidentiality claim alleges that defendants violated Swiss law by "revealing a customer's private information to any third party" to prevent plaintiffs "to apply for voluntary disclosure being afforded by the IRS."

UBS AG faults the absence of facts to support elements of the malpractice and breach of confidentiality claims.

Malpractice Elements

The elements of a malpractice claim are (1) the professional's duty to use such skill, prudence, and diligence as members of his/her profession commonly possess and exercise; (2) breach of that duty; (3) a proximate causal connection between the breach and the resulting injury; and (4) actual loss or damage resulting from the negligence. Coscia v. McKenna & Cuneo, 25 Cal.4th 1194, 1199, 108 Cal.Rptr.2d 471, 25 P.3d 670 (2001). "A key element of any action for professional malpractice is the establishment of a duty by the professional to the claimant. Absent duty there can be no breach and no negligence." Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray, 109 Cal.App.4th 1287, 1294, 135 Cal.Rptr.2d 888 (2003).

Failure To Disclose UBS AG's QI Agreement Requirements

Plaintiffs place on UBS AG "a duty to disclose to its customers the requirement that it either disclose potential confidential information of its customers to the IRS or otherwise withhold a percentage of profits each year."

UBS AG argues that the malpractice claim turns on whether plaintiffs' relationship with UBS AG triggered UBS AG's duty to disclose QI Agreement requirements. UBS AG notes that the QI Agreement requirements ran between UBS AG and the IRS, not plaintiffs, and fail to invoke UBS AG duties to plaintiffs to provide tax advice or IRS disclosure requirements under the QI Agreement. See Thomas v. UBS AG, 2012 WL 2396866, at * 5 (N.D.Ill.2012) ("Plaintiffs' allegation that UBS had a duty to Plaintiffs is not plausible").

UBS AG further faults the absence of facts to support proximate cause of damages arising from UBS AG's failure to disclose UBS AG's QI Agreement requirements. UBS AG points to the following from Thomas, 2012 WL 2396866, at *6:

> With respect to causation, Plaintiffs allege that "UBS's failure to meet the applicable standard of care" caused them to fail to "disclose their UBS Swiss Accounts on their U.S. tax returns." (Id. ¶ 78.) But Plaintiffs fail to allege how UBS's alleged negligence caused Plaintiffs to fail to disclose their foreign accounts on their U.S. tax returns.

The SAC lacks facts that UBS AG's breach of an actionable duty caused plaintiffs damage regarding plaintiffs' tax reporting obligations. The SAC fails to allege facts to invoke UBS AG's duty running from its QI Agreement obligations owed to the IRS. The SAC lacks facts to connect plaintiffs' alleged damages to UBS AG's negligence to induce plaintiffs' failure to report foreign accounts. Plaintiffs' tax penalties arose from their failure to disclose their foreign accounts. Plaintiffs' claims of lost "investment and tax savings opportunities" are unavailing in absence of sufficient supporting facts.

Confidentiality

13 Turning to UBS AG's release of plaintiffs' names to the IRS, UBS AG argues that such alleged breach of confidentiality caused no damages to plaintiffs given plaintiffs' failure to complete truthful tax returns. UBS AG notes that plaintiffs cannot fault UBS AG "for revealing confidential information where the information in question revealed that Plaintiffs were perpetrating knowing frauds on the U.S. government."

Plaintiffs respond that "UBS's breach of its own regulations and Swiss laws, coupled with its failure to timely advise Plaintiffs of the Voluntary Disclosure problem, resulted in greater penalties than the respective Plaintiffs should have suffered."

Plaintiffs fail to support breach of confidentiality claims. The gist of the confidentiality claim is that UBS AG was obligated to decrease plaintiffs' penalties arising from plaintiffs' own tax fraud. Plaintiffs provide neither supporting facts nor law for such notion.

Account Management

Turning from disclosure of tax reporting and plaintiffs' identities, the remainder of the malpractice claim focuses on management of plaintiffs' accounts, for instance, placing plaintiffs in improper accounts or trusts. UBS AG contends that this Court's prior order effectively dismissed such claims. UBS AG is correct that the order dismissed account management claims based on fiduciary breaches. However, the order did not dismiss account management claims under a malpractice or negligence theory and granted leave to amend such claims. UBS AG fails to challenge meaningfully the SAC's amended account management claims based on a malpractice or negligence theory. As such, negligence claims based on account management and related services survive to the extent not based on tax reporting, tax compliance or confidentiality allegations.

RICO[6]

The SAC's (fifth) RICO claim alleges defendants' violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) ("section 1962(c)") based on predicate acts of:

1. Embezzlement and bribery "for setting up illegal and improper trusts";

2. Embezzlement "for false annual billings for 'legal services' not provided and for arbitrarily freezing and then liquidating" Mr. Ginzburg's account, and charging "an unauthorized $565,000 'sales tax' "; and

3. "Fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment ... relating to fund management, tax withholding and/or tax from provision, tax legalities, liabilities, and filing requirements, misappropriation of funds, and true use of assets."

The SAC's (sixth) RICO conspiracy claim alleges that "Defendants unlawfully ... conspired ... to conduct and participate ... in the affairs fo UBS AG and its affiliated professional service providers ... through a pattern of racketeering, all in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d) [("section 1962(d)")]." The section 1962(d) conspiracy claim relies on the same predicate acts as the section 1963(c) claim.

Section 1962(c) and (d) provide:

> 14 (c) It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.
>
> (d) It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsection (a), (b), or (c) of this section.

A violation of § 1962(c) "requires (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. The plaintiff must, of course, allege each of these elements to state a claim." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 87 L.Ed.2d 346 (1985).

Subsection (5) of 18 U.S.C. § 1961 ("section 1961") defines "pattern of racketeering activity" to require "at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after the effective date of this chapter and the last of which occurred within ten years (excluding any period of imprisonment) after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." Section 1961 "does not so much define a pattern of racketeering activity as state a minimum necessary condition for the existence of such a pattern." H.J., Inc. v. Northwest Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 237, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195 (1989). Section 1961(5) "says of the phrase 'pattern of racketeering activity' only that it 'requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after [October 15, 1970,] and the last of which occurred within ten years (excluding any period of imprisonment) after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity.' It thus places an outer limit on the concept of a pattern of racketeering activity that is broad indeed." H.J., Inc., 492 U.S. at 237, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195. "Section 1961(5) concerns only the minimum number of predicates necessary to establish a pattern; and it assumes that there is something to a RICO pattern beyond simply the number of predicate acts involved .” H.J., Inc., 492 U.S. at 238, 109 S.Ct. at 2900 (italics in original).

The Ninth Circuit applies F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) particularity requirements to RICO claims under 18 U.S.C. § 1962. Moore v. Kayport Package Exp., Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 541 (9th Cir.1989); Alan Neuman Prods., Inc. v. Albright, 862 F.2d 1388, 1392–93 (9th Cir.1988) (“The allegations of predicate acts in the complaint concerning those elements of RICO are entirely general; no specifics of time, place, or nature of the alleged communications are pleaded. This is a fatal defect under Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b), which requires that circumstances constituting fraud be stated with particularity.”); Schreiber Distrib. Co. v. ServWell Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir.1986) (“We have interpreted Rule 9(b) to mean that the pleader must state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation.”)

15 “The mere assertion of a RICO claim consequently has an almost inevitable stigmatizing effect on those named as defendants. In fairness to innocent parties, courts should strive to flush out frivolous RICO allegations at an early stage of the litigation.” Figueroa Ruiz v. Alegria, 896 F.2d 645, 650 (1st Cir.1990).

“The particularity requirements of Rule 9(b) apply to allegations of mail fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, and wire fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1343, when used as predicate acts for a RICO claim.” Murr Plumbing, Inc. v. Scherer Bros. Financial Services Co., 48 F.3d 1066, 1069 (8th Cir.1995).

UBS AG faults the SAC's failure to allege “predicate acts as required for their RICO claims.” UBS AG argues that a RICO claim based on fraud or concealment as predicate acts fails in the absence of “the particular contents of the purported fraudulent representations sufficient to constitute a pattern of racketeering activity.” UBS AG contends that embezzlement and bribery allegations fail in the absence of “specific instances of illegal activity” and reliance on vague allegations of illegal and improper trusts.

UBS AG faults the RICO conspiracy claim's absence of “allegations of coordination or organization among UBS AG and other Defendants who are alleged to have ‘continued’ some sort of scheme during the years after Plaintiffs closed their UBS accounts in June 2005.”

Plaintiffs respond that the RICO claims survive based on SAC allegations that UBS AG participated in continued activity to defraud the IRS and customers, to permit bribes and kickbacks, and to charge excessive fees.

The FAC's RICO claims fail in absence of particularity to satisfy F.R.Civ.P. 9(b). The SAC as a whole lacks facts to support embezzlement, bribery and fraud to support RICO claims. The SAC alleges no more than general predicate acts without necessary specifics. The gravity of RICO claims requires the SAC to plead sufficient specificity, and the SAC fails to do so.

Unfair Business Practices

The SAC's (eighth through eleventh) claims allege unfair business practices under California, Texas, New York and Washington statutes based on defendants' embezzlement, securities fraud and fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment “relating to fund management, tax legalities, liabilities, and filing requirements, privacy, quality of securities, true price of securities, and true use assets.”

UBS AG challenges the unfair business practices claims as conclusory and failing to demonstrate harm caused by UBS AG.

California

The SAC's eighth claim proceeds under California's Unfair Competition Law (“UCL”), Cal. Bus. & Prof.Code, § § 17200, et al. “Unfair competition is defined to include ‘unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising.’ ” Blank v. Kirwan, 39 Cal.3d 311, 329, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58 (1985) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 17200). The UCL establishes three varieties of unfair competition—“acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent.” Shvarts v. Budget Group, Inc., 81 Cal.App.4th 1153, 1157, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 722 (2000). An “unlawful business activity” includes anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law. Blank, 39 Cal.3d at 329, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58 (citing People v. McKale, 25 Cal.3d 626, 631–632, 159 Cal.Rptr. 811, 602 P.2d 731 (1979)). “A business practice is ‘unlawful’ if it is 'forbidden by law.' " Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 98 Cal.App.4th 1158, 1169, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 79 (2002) (quoting Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.4th 377, 383, 6 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 826 P.2d 730 (1992)).

16 The UCL prohibits "unlawful" practices "forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made." Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal.App.4th 832, 838, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 548 (1999). The UCL "thus creates an independent action when a business practice violates some other law." Walker, 98 Cal.App.4th at 1169, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 79. According to the California Supreme Court, the UCL "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices independently actionable under the UCL. Farmers Ins., 2 Cal.4th at 383, 6 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 826 P.2d 730.

A fellow district court has explained the borrowing of a violation of law other than the UCL:

> To state a claim for an "unlawful" business practice under the UCL, a plaintiff must assert the violation of any other law. Cel–Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 180, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999) (stating, "By proscribing 'any unlawful' business practice, section 17200 'borrows' violations of other law and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable.") (citation omitted). Where a plaintiff cannot state a claim under the "borrowed" law, she cannot state a UCL claim either. See, e.g., Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 93 Cal.App.4th 700, 718, 113 Cal.Rptr.2d 399 (2001). Here, Plaintiff has predicated her "unlawful" business practices claim on her TILA claim. However, as discussed above, Plaintiff's attempt to state a claim under TILA has failed. Accordingly, Plaintiff has stated no "unlawful" UCL claim.

Rubio v. Capital One Bank, 572 F.Supp.2d 1157, 1168 (C.D.Cal.2008).

"Unfair" under the UCL "means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cal–Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone, 20 Cal.4th 163,187, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548 (1999). A business practice is unfair when it "offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." Podolsky v. First Healthcare Corp., 50 Cal.App.4th 632, 647, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d 89 (1996) (internal quotations and citations omitted). The "unfairness" prong of the UCL "does not give the courts a general license to review the fairness of contracts." Samura v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, 17 Cal.App.4th 1284, 1299 & n. 6, 22 Cal.Rptr.2d 20 (1993).

The "fraudulent" prong under the UCL requires a plaintiff to "show deception to some members of the public, or harm to the public interest," Watson Laboratories, Inc. v. Rhone–Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 178 F.Supp.2d 1099, 1121 (C.D.Ca.2001), or to allege that "members of the public are likely to be deceived," Schnall v. Hertz Corp., 78 Cal.App.4th 1144, 1167, 93 Cal.Rptr.2d 439 (2000); Medical Instrument Development Laboratories v. Alcon Laboratories, 2005 WL 1926673, at *5 (N.D.Cal.2005). A UCL "plaintiff need not show that he or others were actually deceived or confused by the conduct or business practice in question." Schnall, 78 Cal.App.4th at 1167, 93 Cal.Rptr.2d 439.

17 "A plaintiff alleging unfair business practices under these statutes [UCL] must state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal.App.4th 612, 619, 17 Cal.Rptr.2d 708 (1993).

Texas

The SAC's ninth claim proceeds under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act ("Texas Act"), Tex. Bus. & Com.Code, §§ 17.41, et al.

The Texas Act renders unlawful "[f]alse, misleading, or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." Tex. Bus. & Com.Code, § 17.46. Under the Texas Act, a consumer may pursue an action when "a false, misleading, or deceptive act or practice" is "relied on by a consumer to the consumer's detriment" and is an "unconscionable action or course of action." Tex. Bus. & Com.Code, § 17.50(a). The Texas Act defines an "unconscionable action or course of action" as "an act or practice which, to a consumer's detriment, takes advantage of the lack of knowledge, ability, experience, or capacity of the consumer to a grossly unfair degree." Tex. Bus. & Com.Code, § 17.45(5).

New York

The SAC's tenth claim proceeds under New York General Business Law section 349 ("section 349"), which renders unlawful "[d]eceptive acts or practices in the conduct or any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing or any service in this state." "A plaintiff under section 349 must prove three elements: first, that the challenged act or practice was consumer-oriented; second, that it was misleading in a material way; and third, that the plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act." Stutman v. Chemical Bank, 95 N.Y.2d 24, 29, 709 N.Y.S.2d 892, 731 N.E.2d 608 (2000).

Washington

The SAC's eleventh claim proceeds under the Washington Consumer Protection Act ("Washington CPA"), Rev.Code.Wash., § 19.86.020, et al. "[T]o state a claim for relief under the CPA, plaintiffs must allege that acts by defendant were unfair or deceptive, occurred in the course of trade or commerce, affected the public interest, and caused injury to plaintiffs' business or property." Segal Co. (Eastern States), Inc. v. Amazon.Com, 280 F.Supp.2d 1229, 1232 (W.D.Wash.2003).

UBS AG argues that the SAC's conclusory allegations as to unfair business practices (premised on embezzlement, fraudulent concealment and securities fraud) are insufficient and fail to satisfy pleading requirements. UBS AG argues that the SAC lacks details of UBS AG's accomplishment of embezzlement, fraudulent concealment and securities fraud and points to this Court's prior dismissal with prejudice of securities fraud claims.

Plaintiffs respond that the SAC "read as a whole" states claims for unfair business practices given allegations that UBS AG committed fraud, negligence and breach of fiduciary duties, evaded U .S. Treasury rules and regulations, "took advantage of Plaintiffs' lack of knowledge," and "deceived Plaintiffs into believing that their accounts were being handled and that they would receive a benefit."

18 The only surviving claim to support unfair business practices is negligent account management. The gist of the negligent account management claims is that UBS AG created for and placed plaintiffs in investment vehicles which were unsuitable for plaintiffs. Negligent account management sounds in tort, not unlawful business practice, and as discussed below was particular to plaintiffs, not the general public.

Public Harm

UBS AG further challenges the SAC's absence of allegations to support harm to members of the public. See New York Univ. v. Continental Ins. Co., 87 N.Y.2d 308, 320, 639 N.Y.S.2d 283, 662 N.E.2d 763 (1995) (defendant's acts or practices must have a broad impact on consumers at large; private contract disputes unique to the parties do not fall "within the ambit of the statute"); Hangman Ridge Training Stables, Inc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 105 Wash.2d 778, 784, 719 P.2d 531 (1986) (Washington CPA requires "a showing that the public interest would be served by each private plaintiff's lawsuit"). UBS AG notes that unfair business practices statutes are not used to redress plaintiffs' tort and contract claims in that to allow such use would be "an all-purpose substitute for a tort or contract action, something the Legislature never intended." Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1151, 131 Cal.Rptr.2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003).

Plaintiffs respond that under the UCL, a plaintiff "need only show that members of the public are likely to be deceived." Bank of the West v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.4th 1254, 1267, 10 Cal.Rptr.2d 538, 833 P.2d 545 (1992) (internal quotation omitted). Plaintiffs claim that Texas and New York laws require no pleading of public harm. Plaintiffs note that the multiple plaintiffs indicates "this deception was not an isolated incident." Plaintiffs continue that UBS AG's "business practice is injurious to the public interest because it violates Federal RICO laws, injured multiple parties as evidence by the nine Plaintiffs ..., and had the capacity to injury many others."

Plaintiffs attempt to use the unfair business practices laws as a substitute for a tort action. Plaintiffs fails to substantiate such use, given the limited survival of a negligent account management claim. Moreover, the SAC's pleads no facts that the public at large was subject to UBS AG's alleged wrongdoing in that the SAC alleges that UBS AG targeted limited, exclusive wealthy clients with need to avoid large taxes. The unfair business practices claims fail.

Breach Of Contract

The SAC's (twelfth) breach of contract claim alleges that plaintiffs entered into "oral and/or written contracts" to "maintain accounts or open new accounts with UBS AG," which agreed to provide "professionally competent investment and securities advisory and execution services, tax and legal advice and service, and accounting services." The breach of contract claim alleges material breach in that defendants:

19 1. Provided plaintiffs with advice and services "in furtherance of the conduct described above";

2. Charged "fees, costs, and expenses that were not chargeable or agreed to by each Plaintiff";

3. Liquidated Mr. Ginzburg's funds without "properly evaluating the securities held and the negative impacts such an unauthorized liquidation would have";

4. Allowed a $565,000 "sales tax";

5. Caused Mr. Roberts, Mr. Ginzburg and Mr. Chernick "to waste money on ill-conceived and illegal trusts" and on "annual services";

6. Caused creation of a third-party trust without authorization of Mr. Chernick, Simba and Shumba;

7. Failed "to prevent the losses incurred as penalties instead of advising Plaintiffs that the recommended program was in fact illegal ... and that Plaintiffs should report their accounts, and take advantage of the Voluntary Disclosure program"; and

8. Disclosed "each Plaintiff's name to the DOJ prematurely."

UBS AG faults the SAC's absence of facts to support breach of contract elements.

"The standard elements of a claim for breach of contract are: (1) the contract, (2) plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) defendant's breach, and (4) damage to plaintiff therefrom." Wall Street Network, Ltd. v. New York Times Co., 164 Cal.App.4th 1171, 1178, 80 Cal.Rptr.3d 6 (2008). "To form a contract, an 'offer must be sufficiently definite ... that the performance promised is reasonably certain.' " Alexander v.Codemasters Group Limited, 104 Cal.App.4th 129, 141, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d 145. 127 Cal.Rptr.2d 145 (2002).

Essential elements to contract existence are: (1) "[p]arties capable of contracting;" (2) "[t]heir consent;" (3) a "lawful object;" and (4) a "sufficient cause or consideration." Cal. Civ.Code, § 1550.

"A written contract may be pleaded either by its terms —set out verbatim in the complaint or a copy of the contract attached to the complaint and incorporated therein by reference—or by its legal effect. In order to plead a contract by its legal effect, plaintiff must allege the substance of its relevant terms." McKell v. Washington Mutual, Inc., 142 Cal.App.4th 1457, 1489, 49 Cal.Rptr.3d 227 (2006) (internal citations omitted).

UBS AG characterizes the SAC "as too vague and indefinite, and therefore unenforceable, for plaintiff's failure to allege, in nonconclusory language, as required, the essential terms of the parties' purported contract, including the specific provisions of the contract upon which liability is predicated." Sud v. Sud, 211 A.D.2d 423, 621 N.Y.S.2d 37, 38 (App.Div.1995); Bissessur v. Indiana University Bd. of Trustees, 581 F.3d 599, 603 (7th Cir.2009) ("A plaintiff may not escape dismissal on a contract claim, for example, by stating that he had a contract with the defendant, gave the defendant consideration, and the defendant breached the contract. What was the contract? The promises made? The consideration? The nature of the breach?"). UBS AG faults the purported breaches' lack of connection to "specific contractual provisions between any of the plaintiffs and UBS." UBS AG characterizes the breach of contract claim "to assert the same common law breach of duty claims against UBS again."

20 Plaintiffs respond that "a contract existed separately between each of the Plaintiffs and UBS" and breaches included charging fees not agreed to, unauthorized liquidation, and failure to release funds and "to provide professionally competent advice."

UBS AG is correct that the SAC's purported breach of contract claims are vague and conclusory. The FAC fails to identify sufficiently precise contract terms, their breach, who breached them, and how they were breached. The SAC fails to identify sufficiently plaintiffs' consideration to support breach of contract claims. At its essence, the breach of contract claim alleges account management negligence, and plaintiffs are able to pursue such claims and remedies through their limited surviving negligence claim.

Conversion

The SAC's (thirteenth) conversion claim alleges that UBS AG:

1. Charged Mr. Eisenberg "twice the rate he was supposed to be charged as evidenced by some statement charges"; and

2. Converted from Mr. Ginzburg "$565,000 under the guise of 'sales tax' at the time they arbitrarily liquidated his account in 2009."

"Conversion is the wrongful exercise of dominion over the property of another." Oakdale Village Group v. Fong, 43 Cal.App.4th 539, 543, 50 Cal.Rptr.2d 810 (1996). "To establish conversion, a plaintiff must show: (1) the plaintiff's ownership or right to possession to the property at the time of conversion; (2) the defendant's conversion by a wrongful act; and (3) damages." Oakdale Village Group, 43 Cal.App.4th at 543–544, 50 Cal.Rptr.2d 810. "Money cannot be the subject of a cause of action for conversion unless there is a specific, identifiable sum involved, such as where an agent accepts a sum of money to be paid to another and fails to make the payment." McKell v. Washington Mut., Inc., 142 Cal.App.4th 1457, 1491, 49 Cal.Rptr.3d 227 (2006). "A specific and identified amount of money can form the basis of a conversion claim, but when the money is not identified and not specific, the action is to be considered as one upon contract or for debt and not for conversion." Ross v. U.S. Bank Nat. Ass'n, 542 F.Supp.2d 1014, 1024 (N.D.Cal.2008) (internal quotation omitted).

UBS AG notes that the SAC alleges a specific $565,000 sum as to Mr. Ginzburg but fails to allege that UBS AG applied the money for its use or even retained the money. UBS AG faults the absence of SAC allegations to identify as to other plaintiffs a specific sum allegedly converted.

The SAC lacks sufficient specificity to support a conversion claim, except as to Mr. Ginzburg's $565,000. Other alleged funds converted are not a specific, identifiable sum to warrant dismissal of the conversion claim, except as to Mr. Ginzburg's $565,000. Moreover, the conversion claim seeks relief available from the limited account management negligence claim.

Declaratory Relief

The SAC's (fifteen) declaratory relief claim appears to seek this Court's declaration that defendants "are legally responsible" for:

21 1. Interest and/or tax penalties assessed by the IRS;

2. Plaintiffs' professional fees and costs in connection with investigations and audits by tax authorities; and

3. Professional fees and expenses incurred "on account of Defendants' violations of law and other actionable conduct."

UBS AG challenges availability of declaratory relief in the absence of a "substantive claim" alleged in the SAC.

The Declaratory Judgment Act ("DJA"), 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201, 2202, provides in pertinent part:

> In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction ... any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a final judgment or decree and shall be reviewable as such.

28 U.S.C. § 2201(a).

The DJA's operation "is procedural only." Aetna Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240, 57 S.Ct. 461, 463, 81 L.Ed. 617 (1937). "A declaratory judgment is not a theory of recovery." Commercial Union Ins. Co. v. Walbrook Ins. Co., Ltd., 41 F.3d 764, 775 (1st Cir.1994). The DJA "merely offers an additional remedy to litigants." Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Karp, 108 F.3d 17, 21 (2nd Cir.1997) (italics in original). A DJA action requires a district court to "inquire whether there is a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction." American States Ins. Co. v. Kearns, 15 F.3d 142, 143 (9th Cir.1994).

Declaratory relief is appropriate "(1) when the judgment will serve a useful purpose in clarifying and settling the legal relations in issue, and (2) when it will terminate and afford relief from the uncertainty, insecurity, and controversy giving rise to the proceeding." Bilbrey by Bilbrey v. Brown, 738 F.2d 1462, 1470 (9th Cir.1984).

As to a controversy to invoke declaratory relief, the question is whether there is a "substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal rights, or sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment." Maryland Cas. Co. v. Pacific Coal & Oil Co., 312 U.S. 270, 273, 61 S.Ct. 510, 512, 85 L.Ed. 826 (1941). The U.S. Supreme Court has further explained:

> A justiciable controversy is thus distinguished from a difference or dispute of a hypothetical or abstract character; from one that is academic or moot.... The controversy must be definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse legal interests.... It must be a real and substantial controversy admitting of specific relief through a decree of a conclusive character, as distinguished from an opinion advising what the law would be upon a hypothetical state of facts.

Haworth, 300 U.S. at 240–241, 57 S.Ct. at 464 (citations omitted).

A declaratory relief action "brings to the present a litigable controversy, which otherwise might only be tried in the future." Societe de Conditionnement v. Hunter Eng. Co., Inc., 655 F.2d 938, 943 (9th Cir.1981). As an equitable remedy, declaratory relief is "dependent upon a substantive basis for liability" and has "no separate viability" if all other causes of action are barred. Glue–Fold, Inc. v. Slautterback Corp., 82 Cal.App.4th 1018, 1023, n. 3, 98 Cal.Rptr.2d 661 (2000).

22 The SAC fails to support a declaratory relief claim given dismissal of other claims subject to UBS AG's motion to dismiss. The SAC fails to substantiate an independent claim for declaratory relief, and such claim is subject to dismissal, despite survival of the limited negligent account management and conversion claims.

CONCLUSION AND ORDER

For the reasons discussed above, this Court:

1. DISMISSES with prejudice the SAC's (first) fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment, (second) constructive fraud, and (third) negligent misrepresentation claims;

2. DISMISSES with prejudice the SAC's (fifth and sixth) RICO claims;

3. DISMISSES with prejudice the SAC's (seventh) professional malpractice claim to extent based on disclosure of tax reporting requirements and plaintiffs' identities but DENIES dismissal of the professional malpractice claim to the extent based on management of plaintiffs' accounts;

4. DISMISSES with prejudice the SAC's (eighth through eleventh) unfair business law claims;

5. DISMISSES with prejudice the SAC's (twelfth) breach of contract claim;

6. DENIES dismissal of the SAC's (thirteenth) conversion claim as to only Mr. Ginzburg's $565,000 but otherwise DISMISSES the conversion claim with prejudice;

7. DISMISSES with prejudice the SAC's (fourteenth) breach of confidentiality claims;

8. DISMISSES with prejudice the SAC's (fifteenth) declaratory relief claim;

9. ORDERS UBS AG, no later than May 2, 2013, to file an F.R.Civ.P. 7(a)(2) answer to the SAC.

To reiterate, the claims remaining against UBS AG are limited to negligent management of plaintiffs' accounts and conversion of Mr. Ginzburg's $565,000.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2013 WL 1499341

Footnotes

[1] Plaintiffs are Nadia and Sean Roberts (the “Roberts”), Bernhard and Heidi Gubser (the “Gubsers”), Anton Ginzburg (“Mr.Ginzburg”), Arthur Joel Eisenberg (“Mr.Eisenberg”), Jeffrey Chernick (“Mr.Chernick”) and Mr. Chernick's Liberian corporation Shumba and Hong Kong corporation Simba, and all plaintiffs will be referred to collectively as “plaintiffs.”

[2] The factual recitation summarizes the SAC and is derived from other matters which this Court may consider.

[3] These defendants and UBS AG will be referred to collectively as “defendants.”

[4] UBS AG notes that the IRS established the QI Program to require financial institutions to identify and withhold tax on U.S. source income paid to foreign bank accounts, including income generated by U.S. securities, real estate and other investments. UBS AG further notes that the QI Agreement “does not create any obligations in favor of accountholders.”

[5] The “UBS AG Defendants” include UBS AG and most of the10 other defendants named in the SAC.

[6] RICO refers to the Racketeer and Corrupt Practices Act (“RICO”), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961, et seq.

End of Document

730 F.Supp.2d 73
United States District Court,
District of Columbia.

Richard LUBOW, et al., Plaintiffs,
v.
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF STATE, et al., Defendants.

Civil Action No. 10–0510 (JDB).
|
Aug. 10, 2010.

Synopsis

Background: Current or retired member of the State Department's Bureau of Diplomatic Security deployed to Iraq brought action against State Department challenging determination that the owed valid debt on alleged salary overpayments. The parties cross-moved for summary judgment.

[Holding:] The District Court, John D. Bates, J., held that remand was warranted for consideration of effect of pay cap waiver passed by Congress.

Plaintiffs' motion granted in part and remanded.

Attorneys and Law Firms

74 Brigid F. Cech Samole, Elliot H. Scherker, Greenberg Traurig LLP, Miami, FL, Danielle M. Diaz, Joe Robert Reeder, Greenberg Traurig, LLP, Washington, DC, Jonathan C. Chane, Greenberg Traurig, P.A., West Palm Beach, FL, for Plaintiffs.

Marian L. Borum, U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia, Washington, DC, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION & ORDER

JOHN D. BATES, District Judge.

Richard Lubow, Joseph Bopp, David Bennett, Frank Benevento and James Landis, each a current or retired member of the State Department's Bureau of Diplomatic Security, "deploy[ed] to Iraq [as Foreign Service Specialists] in support of State's attempt to establish a diplomatic presence in Iraq, after the fall of Saddam Hussein's regime." Pls.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. ("Pls.' Mem.") [Docket Entry 19], at 1. While deployed, plaintiffs were eligible for both basic pay—compensation for a forty-hour work week—and premium pay—overtime, compensatory time off, and holiday premium pay. See, e.g., Administrative Record of Frank Benevento ("FBAR"), 67–68 (Explanation of Benefits).[1] At issue in this action are alleged salary overpayments made to plaintiffs for their work in Iraq in 2004.

Federal law establishes the aggregate amount of basic pay and premium pay an employee may receive. Under 5 U.S.C. § 5547(a), an employee's aggregate of basic pay plus premium pay for any biweekly pay period cannot exceed the greater of "the maximum rate of basic pay payable for GS–15 (including any applicable locality-based comparability payment)" or "the rate payable for level V of the Executive Schedule." Because a particular employee's basic pay is consistent for each pay period, section 5547(a) establishes a cap on the amount of premium pay that an employee can earn. Nevertheless, where an agency determines that there is an emergency that "involves a direct threat to life or property," the agency may waive the biweekly pay cap and instead apply an annual cap on compensation. 5 U.S.C. § 5547(b)(1).[2] The State Department concluded that the war in Iraq and its aftermath qualified as such an emergency. See, e.g., Administrative Record ("AR"), 29 (Landis Letter Regarding Overpayment) ("The ongoing response to the September 11 terrorist attacks and the war in Iraq have each been deemed to constitute such an emergency."). In such circumstances, an employee's aggregate pay for a calendar year cannot exceed the greater of "the maximum rate of basic pay payable for GS–15 in effect at the end of such calendar year (including any applicable locality- 75 based comparability payment)" or "the rate payable for level V of the Executive Schedule in effect at the end of such calendar year." 5 U.S.C. § 5547(b)(2).[3]

Plaintiffs initially deployed to Iraq in December 2003. At that time, plaintiffs' pay cap was $130,305—the sum of the maximum rate of pay for a GS–15, $113,674, and the applicable locality based comparability payment for the District of Columbia. See, e.g., AR at 84 (June 22, 2005 Landis Board of Contract Appeals Decision). Plaintiffs had a District of Columbia pay cap because, although they were deployed in Iraq, they were on temporary duty status, which requires the State Department to apply the District of Columbia pay cap. See, e.g., AR at 340 (July 28, 2008 Landis Foreign Service Grievance Board Decision). In July 2004, the State Department established the new United States Embassy in Baghdad, and plaintiffs were transferred to a permanent duty assignment in Iraq. See id. This transfer reduced plaintiffs' pay cap to $128,200. See id. at 341. This is so because there are no locality based comparability payments available for overseas locations. See June 22, 2005 Landis Board of Contract Appeals Decision at 84. Accordingly, plaintiffs' pay cap was the $128,200 maximum available under level V of the Executive Schedule, which was greater than the $113,674 maximum available for GS–15. See, e.g., id.

Because of this immediately-effective reduction in plaintiffs' annual pay cap, the State Department advised plaintiffs in November 2004 that their "earnings applicable toward the 2004 premium pay cap have already or could shortly put you above the cap for the current pay year." AR at 316 (Nov. 24, 2004 Email to Richard Lubow). The Department also indicated that "[i]f such payments are made erroneously, the Department is obligated to seek collection of such overpayments." Id. In April 2005, the State Department notified plaintiffs that each of them had been overpaid because each had exceeded his pay cap for 2004. See, e.g., AR at 29 (Apr. 27, 2005 Letter to Landis Regarding Overpayment). The Department therefore requested that plaintiffs repay their debt, but indicated that they had "the right to request either an internal administrative review or a hearing conducted by a non-Department of State official with respect to the existence of the debt, the amount of the debt, or the repayment schedule." Id.

Each plaintiff availed himself of this opportunity. Frank Benevento sought internal review, and Deputy Assistant Secretary of State James Millete concluded that Benevento had been overpaid and therefore owed a valid debt. See FBAR at 25–27 (Aug. 30, 2005 Millete Decision). The remaining plaintiffs, Richard Lubow, Joseph Bopp, David Bennett, and James Landis, sought external review by the General Services Administration's Board of Contract Appeals. In substantively identical decisions, the Board upheld the State Department's determination that plaintiffs had been overpaid. See, e.g., June 22, 2005 Landis Board of Contract Appeals Decision at 89.

76 Each plaintiff then requested that the State Department waive his indebtedness pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5584. See, e.g., AR at 34 (Landis Request for Waiver). That statute permits an agency to waive collection of erroneous payments made to a party, where collection "would be against equity and good conscience and not in the best interest of the United States." 5 U.S.C. § 5584(a). The Department declined to do so. See AR at 404 (Jan. 7, 2010 Opinion of the Foreign Service Grievance Board). The Foreign Service Grievance Board initially overturned a decision by the State Department denying waiver, and remanded the request to the State Department. See id. On remand, the Department once again found waiver inappropriate, and the Board upheld that decision. See id.

Plaintiffs then brought this action. They challenge, as contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 5547 and the Office of Personnel Management's regulations, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Millete's and the Board of Contract Appeals's decisions that they owed a valid debt. And they contend that the Foreign Service Grievance Board acted arbitrarily and abused its discretion in denying their requests for a waiver of indebtedness. Before the Court are the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment on these issues.

[1] The Court will not reach plaintiffs' substantive challenges. Where "an intervening event may affect the validity of the agency action at issue, a remand is generally required." Sierra Club v. Van Antwerp, 560 F.Supp.2d 21, 23 (D.D.C.2008); accord Ethyl Corp. v. Browner, 989 F.2d 522, 524 (D.C.Cir.1993); see also Citizens Against the Pellissippi Parkway Extension, Inc. v. Mineta, 375 F.3d 412, 416 (6th Cir.2004) (it may be "an abuse of discretion to prevent an agency from acting to cure the very legal defects asserted by plaintiffs challenging federal action"); cf. Fl. Power & Light Co. v. Lorion, 470 U.S. 729, 744, 105 S.Ct. 1598, 84 L.Ed.2d 643 (1985) ("If the record before the agency does not support the agency action, if the agency has not considered all relevant factors, or if the reviewing court simply cannot evaluate the challenged agency action on the basis of the record before it, the proper course, except in rare circumstances, is to remand to the agency for additional investigation or explanation."). Here, there is just such an intervening event.

[2] In 2005, Congress passed the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Defense, the Global War on Terror, and Tsunami Relief of 2005 ("Appropriations Act of 2005"), Pub.L. No. 109–13, 119 Stat. 231 (2005). In section 1008 of the Act, Congress permitted federal agencies to waive section 5547's federal pay cap for certain federal employees during calendar year 2005, up to a maximum of $200,000. See Appropriations Act of 2005, 119 Stat. 231, 243 ("During calendar year 2005 ... the head of an Executive agency may waive the limitation, up to $200,000, established in [5 U.S.C. § 5547] for total compensation, including limitations on the aggregate of basic pay and premium pay payable in a calendar year...."). Pursuant to the Act, the State Department waived the "limitation, up to $200,000, on the aggregate of basic pay and premium pay payable in calendar year 2005 for employees working in Iraq and Afghanistan." AR at 184 (Aug. 19, 2005 State Department Cable). And the Department applied this pay cap waiver "to all premium pay earnings payable in calendar year 2005, e.g. for work performed in pay period 25 of 2004 (pay date January 8, 2005)." Id. at 184–85.

By its plain terms, then, the State Department's pay cap waiver applied not just 77 to work done during 2005, but also to work done during pay period 25 of 2004. Yet neither the State Department nor the Board of Contract Appeals considered the effect of this waiver of plaintiffs' purported debts. The Board of Contract Appeals issued its decision confirming the debts of Richard Lubow, Joseph Bopp, David Bennett, and James Landis prior to the State Department's waiver in August 2005. See, e.g., June 22, 2005 Landis Board of Contract Appeals Decision at 84. And although Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Millete issued his decision after the State Department's pay cap waiver took effect, the decision does not discuss the pay cap waiver at all. Perhaps the State Department could conclude that the waiver either affects the fact or the amount of plaintiffs' debts. Perhaps not. But it is not for the Court to conduct "a de novo inquiry into the matter being reviewed and ... reach its own conclusions based on such an inquiry." Fl. Power & Light Co., 470 U.S. at 744, 105 S.Ct. 1598. Rather, because there is no evidence in the record that the State Department considered how the 2005 pay cap waiver affects plaintiffs' debts based on 2004 overpayments, "the proper course ... is to remand to the agency for additional investigation or explanation." Id. [4]

The State Department raises two challenges to plaintiffs' argument that the pay cap waiver requires the Department to recalculate their overpayments. First, it contends that it cannot recompute each plaintiff's entire salary for 2004 pursuant to the waiver because this would be "in direct contravention of the language of the 2005 Premium Pay Cap Waiver as well as Congressional intent in enacting Public Law 109–13." Defs.' Mem. at 25. This may be so, but it is of no moment. Even if the waiver does not apply to all of plaintiffs' 2004 salary, it does apply, by its plain terms, to work performed during pay period 25 of 2004. Hence, the State Department, at the least, must evaluate whether and how the waiver affects any overpayments made to plaintiffs during pay period 25.

Second, the State Department argues that Landis, Bennett, Bopp, and Lubow cannot raise the pay cap waiver issue with this Court. Plaintiffs sought external review of the validity of their debt with the Board of Contract Appeals, but did not seek further administrative review of that decision before the Foreign Service Grievance Board. Nor, according to the State Department, could they. See Defs.' Mem. at 25 (citing 22 U.S.C. § 4139 ("A grievant may not file a grievance with the [Foreign Service Grievance] Board if the grievant has formally requested, prior to filing a grievance, that the matter ... be considered or resolved and relief be provided under another provision of law, regulation or Executive Order.")). And in the State Department's view, because those plaintiffs could not raise the validity of their debt with the Foreign Service Grievance Board, they "cannot challenge the determination of the proper pay cap here" as part of their challenge to the Foreign Service Grievance Board's decision. Defs.' Reply in Supp. of Cross–Mot. for Summ. J. ("Def.'s Reply") [Docket Entry 25], at 7.

But Landis, Bennett, Bopp, and Lubow also separately challenge the validity of 78 the Board of Contract Appeals decision in this action. And it is undisputed that the Board did not consider the Department's pay cap waiver when adjudicating the validity of plaintiffs' debt. The pay cap waiver was an intervening event that may affect the validity of the Board's decision. This is sufficient to require a remand. See Sierra Club, 560 F.Supp.2d at 23. [5] As the Court indicated, this does not mean that plaintiffs will prevail on their argument. But that is a decision that this Court cannot make in the first instance. See Fl. Power & Light Co., 470 U.S. at 744, 105 S.Ct. 1598.

Therefore, upon consideration of the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment, the parties' several memoranda, and the entire record herein, and for the foregoing reasons, it is hereby

ORDERED that plaintiffs' motion is GRANTED in part; and it is further ORDERED that the decisions of Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Millete and the Board of Contract Appeals that plaintiffs owe a valid debt are REMANDED to the State Department and the Board of Contract Appeals, respectively, for additional consideration in light of the Department's August 2005 waiver of the premium pay cap, which the Department has applied to earnings for work performed in pay period 25 of 2004.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

730 F.Supp.2d 73

Footnotes

[1] The State Department has produced the administrative record in several volumes, including separate volumes for materials relating to each plaintiff, and a single, general volume for remaining materials. Many of the records in the various volumes are substantively identical and therefore, where appropriate, the Court has cited to only one of the volumes.

[2] Waiving the biweekly cap permits employees to "work more overtime hours." See Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. ("Defs.' Mem.") [Docket Entry 21], at 2 n. 3.

[3] According to the Office of Personnel Management, which promulgated regulations interpreting section 5547(b), an agency must use the GS–15 or Executive Schedule level V rate "in effect on the last day of the calendar year" to determine an employee's pay cap. 5 C.F.R. § 550.106(c); see also 69 Fed. Reg. 55,941, at 55,941 (Sept. 17, 2004) ("A geographic move to an area with different pay rates can raise or lower an employee's aggregate basic pay and the end-of-year annual cap on premium pay. In turn, a change in aggregate basic pay or the end-of-year cap can change retroactively the date on which an employee reached the annual premium pay cap.").

[4] The record does not indicate, for example, whether, notwithstanding the fact that it was covered by the 2005 pay cap waiver, the State Department included plaintiffs' pay period 25 earnings when calculating plaintiffs' 2004 overpayments. Nor does it show how much money plaintiffs' received in pay period 25 that was in excess of the statutory cap. Such information would be necessary for the Court to evaluate the effect of the pay cap waiver on plaintiffs' debts.

[5] Although quite opaque, the State Department arguably contends in its reply that Landis, Bennett, Bopp, and Lubow simply cannot bring a separate challenge to the Board of Contract Appeals decision in this action. See Def.'s Reply at 7. But to the extent it makes this argument, it offers no support for it. And, in any event, courts may review "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy." 5 U.S.C. § 704. Here, the State Department argues that the Board of Contract Appeals decision was a final agency action. See Def.'s Reply at 7–8.

End of Document

2015 WL 8968785
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
W.D. Missouri, Western Division.

United States of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Verna Cheryl Womack, Defendant.

Case No. 13–00441–01–CR–W–GAF
|
Filed November 25, 2015

Attorneys and Law Firms

Brian Patrick Casey, Daniel Morton Nelson, United States Attorney's Office, Kansas City, MO, for Plaintiff.

Aaron J. Mann, Cynthia L. Cordes, Lyndsey Conrad, Husch Blackwell LLP, Kansas City, MO, Jeffrey B. Jensen, Husch Blackwell LLP, St. Louis, MO, for Defendant.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

SARAH W. HAYS, UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

1 This matter is currently before the Court on Defendant Verna Cheryl Womack's Motion to Dismiss the Indictment Pursuant to Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(b)(3)(B) (docs # 72 and # 73).[1] For the reasons set forth below, it is recommended that this motion be denied.

I. INTRODUCTION

On December 12, 2013, the Grand Jury returned a ten count indictment against Verna Cheryl Womack. The indictment provides in part:

> INTRODUCTION
>
> 1. Beginning in or about 1996, and continuing to the date of this indictment, Defendant VERNA CHERYL WOMACK ... corruptly endeavored, in the Western District of Missouri, and elsewhere, to obstruct and impede the due administration of the internal revenue laws of the United States. As part of her endeavors, WOMACK opened a series of bank accounts and organized a series of nominee companies and trusts in the Cayman Islands to conceal a portion of her income from the IRS. At all times, WOMACK exercised control over the nominee companies and trusts, and they were maintained for her financial benefit. When necessary to maintain her control, WOMACK appointed family members and employees as directors of the nominee companies and trusts, sometimes without their knowledge. As part of her corrupt endeavors, WOMACK repeatedly failed, year after year, to report her financial interests in her nominee companies and trusts to the IRS despite the multiple legal requirements that, as a United States citizen, she do so.
>
> 2. As part of her corrupt endeavors, WOMACK established at least 19 accounts at the Bank of Butterfield and Caledonian Bank in the Cayman Islands in her own name, and in the name of her various nominee companies and trusts. For at least the calendar years 2005 through 2008, WOMACK failed to report her financial interest and signatory authority over all of the financial accounts in the Cayman Islands that she had an interest in or signatory authority over to the IRS despite the multiple legal requirements that, as a United States citizen, she do so.
>
> 3. For the calendar years 2005 through 2008, WOMACK maintained balances of between $40,964.00 and $173,541.08 in one of the Bank of Butterfield accounts, an interest-bearing account that she maintained in her own name. WOMACK had signature authority on that account, and she corresponded in person and via e-mail with the bank concerning disbursements to and from that account. Despite her custody and control of that account, WOMACK repeatedly failed, year after year, to report her financial interests in her Bank of Butterfield interest-bearing account to the IRS despite the multiple legal requirements that, as a United States citizen, she do so.
>
> 2 4. WOMACK's corrupt endeavors to conceal income from the IRS included the use of a nominee company in the Cayman Islands called Lucy Limited, for which she established at least two separate accounts at the Bank of Butterfield. One example of how WOMACK attempted to use Lucy Limited to conceal her income was the March 15, 2008, sale of a portion of her personal wine collection at an auction house in New York, New York. Following the sale, WOMACK personally directed the auction house to wire transfer a total of $1,613,899.89 to a Lucy Limited account at the Bank of Butterfield that WOMACK controlled. WOMACK then employed a number of false and fraudulent business agreements, that appeared to be arm's length transactions but were in fact WOMACK's self-dealing, resulting in wires of those proceeds back to the United States for WOMACK's personal use. She did not disclose her control of Lucy Limited or the existence of its bank account to the IRS, and she did not properly report the income she derived from that sale—at least $851,188.00—on her individual tax return as required by the internal revenue laws of the United States.

5. Further obstructing and impeding the administration of the internal revenue laws of the United States, WOMACK repeatedly lied to employees of the United States about her interests in Cayman Island businesses, trusts and financial accounts. On one occasion, WOMACK lied to two FBI agents, falsely claiming that she did not own any foreign businesses and that those businesses were owned by other investors, when she knew that no other investors existed. On a second occasion, WOMACK repeatedly lied during a sworn deposition to a trial attorney from the United States Department of Justice about her financial interests in the Cayman Islands.

6. The United States alleges that during the period charged in this indictment, WOMACK's schemes to interfere with the administration of the internal revenue laws, including but not limited to her corrupt endeavors using Cayman Island nominees and financial accounts alleged in this indictment, caused a total tax loss in excess of $7,000,000.00.

* * *

COUNT ONE

(Attempts to Interfere with Administration of Internal Revenue Laws)

29. The factual allegations in paragraphs 1 through 28 are incorporated herein by reference.

> 30. Beginning in or about 1996, and continuing to the date of this indictment, in the Western District of Missouri and elsewhere, the defendant did corruptly endeavor to obstruct and impede the due administration of the internal revenue laws of the United States by the following conduct:
>
> [failing to acknowledge any interest in or signature authority over any foreign financial accounts on defendant's U.S. Individual Tax Return, Form 1040, for the calendar years 2005, 2006, 2007 and 2008; failure to file with the IRS a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts, Form TD F 90–22.1 (FBAR) for the calendar years 2005, 2006, 2007 and 2008; and filing an inadequate FBAR for the calendar year 2009]
>
> * * *
>
> 35. In or about March 2008, WOMACK provided a list of her financial accounts to an FBI Special Agent in relation to a separate federal criminal investigation. WOMACK's list of her accounts did not include any of her foreign bank accounts.
>
> 36. On or about March 15, 2008, WOMACK sold and caused to be sold at auction at an auction house in New York, New York, approximately half of the wine stored in the basement of her residence in Mission Hills, Kansas. WOMACK attempted to use her nominee company Lucy Limited and its financial accounts at the Bank of Butterfield to conceal the revenues and profits she derived from the sale of the wine....
>
> * * *
>
>> g. As a result of her efforts to disguise the self-dealing nature of these transactions, WOMACK did not report the income she derived from the sale of the wine on her U.S. Individual Tax Return, Form 1040, for the calendar year 2008.
>
> * * *

39. On or about December 15, 2008, WOMACK was interviewed by two FBI Special Agents. During that interview, WOMACK knowingly made numerous false and fraudulent statements ...

40. At the end of the interview with the two FBI Special Agents that took place on or about December 15, 2008, WOMACK was provided a form that stated both that "[t]he Agents listed below introduced themselves to me and told me that they are conducting a federal criminal investigation regarding bank fraud, wire fraud and/or tax evasion" and that "I have been advised that it is a separate Federal felony to knowingly and willfully make any materially false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or representation during this interview." WOMACK initialed beside both of those statements, signed the form, and dated it 956 am 12/15/08." Later that day, and to conceal her prior false and fraudulent statements to the agents, WOMACK made a handwritten annotation to the form stating "regarding Brandy Wheeler VCW 12/15/08" and caused the annotated form to be transmitted to the agents at their office in Kansas City, Missouri.

3 41. On or about May 19, 2009, in Kansas City, Missouri, WOMACK testified under oath in a deposition by a trial attorney for the United States Department of Justice, Tax Division, regarding a lawsuit under the internal revenue laws of the United States then pending in the Western District of Missouri that sought to enjoin a third party from providing tax advice. During that deposition, WOMACK knowingly made numerous false and fraudulent statements....

* * *

All in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7212(a).

COUNTS TWO through TEN

45. The factual allegations in paragraph 1 through 28 and 31 through 44 are incorporated herein by reference.

46. On or about May 9[sic], 2009, in Kansas City, in the Western District of Missouri, the defendant VERNA CHERYL WOMACK, in a matter within the jurisdiction of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, that is, the United States Department of the Treasury and the United States Department of Justice, did voluntarily and intentionally make the false and fraudulent statements of material fact corresponding to each count below, while knowing those statements to be false and fraudulent at the time she made them....

2 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that she did not know when JoJoDi was started, when she knew that she organized and caused to be organized JoJoDi in or about 1997.

3 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that she did not know why JoJoDi was located in the Cayman Islands, when she knew that she organized and caused to be organized JoJoDi to perform the business function previously performed by MFC without MFC's duties to file United States tax returns.

4 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that she did not know who owned JoJoDi and that it was owned by a group of investors, when she knew that there were no such investors, that JoJoDi was owned by the Emerald Star Trust, that she created and caused to be created that trust, and that she was a secondary enforcer of that trust.

5 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that she did not have an ownership interest in DAR Holding and that she did not know who owned DAR Holding, when she knew that she organized and caused to be organized DAR Holding and that she exercised ownership, custody and control over DAR Holding and its assets.

6 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that she did not know how long DAR Holding had been in existence, when she knew that she organized and caused to be organized DAR Holding in or about 1996.

7 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that she did not own a condominium in the Cayman Islands and only rented one, when she knew that, through the nominee company DAR Holding, she owned and maintained full custody and control over her condominium at The Sovereign, George Town, Grand Cayman, Cayman Islands.

8 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that Lucy Limited was owned by another group of > investors, that she did not have an ownership interest in Lucy Limited, and that she had never invested in Lucy Limited, when she knew that there were no such investors, that she organized and caused to be organized Lucy Limited, and that she exercised ownership, custody and control over Lucy Limited and its assets.

>
> 9 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that Lucy Limited's investors paid her to purchase the wine, manage the wine, and properly contain the wine, when she knew that there were no such investors, that she organized and caused to be organized Lucy Limited, and that she exercised ownership, custody and control over Lucy Limited and its assets.
>
> 4 10 WOMACK falsely and fraudulently stated that Lucy Limited's investors paid her a percentage for managing the auction of the wine, when she knew that there were no such investors, that she organized and caused to be organized Lucy Limited, and that she exercised ownership, custody and control over Lucy Limited and its assets.
>
> All in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(2).

(Indictment (doc # 1))

The statutes under which defendant Womack has been charged, 26 U.S.C. § 7212(a) and 18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(2), provide in part:

> § 7212. Attempts to interfere with administration of internal revenue laws
>
> (a) Corrupt or forcible interference. —Whoever corruptly ... endeavors to ... impede any officer or employee of the United States acting in an official capacity under this title, or in any other way corruptly ... obstructs or impedes, or endeavors to obstruct or impede, the due administration of this title, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both....

26 U.S.C. § 7212(a).

> § 1001. Statement or entries generally
>
> (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, whoever, in any matter within the jurisdiction of the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government of the United States, knowingly and willfully—
>
> * * *
>
> (2) makes any materially false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or representation ...
>
> * * *
>
> shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 5 years ... or both.

18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(2).

II. DISCUSSION

The Sixth Amendment to the Constitution provides that "[i]n all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right ... to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation...." This Constitutional requirement is implemented by Rule 7(c)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure which specifies that "[t]he indictment ... must be a plain, concise, and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged...." An indictment is sufficient if it: (1) contains the essential elements of the offenses charged; (2) fairly informs the defendant of the charges against which he must defend; and (3) enables the defendant to plead an acquittal or conviction in bar of future prosecution for the same offenses. See Hamling v. United States, 418 U.S. 87, 117 (1974); United States v. O'Hagan, 139 F.3d 641, 651 (8th Cir. 1998); United States v. Wessels, 12 F.3d 746, 750 (8th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 831 (1994). The sufficiency of a criminal indictment is determined from its face. There is no summary judgment procedure in criminal cases nor do the rules provide for a pre-trial determination of the sufficiency of the evidence. See United States v. Nabors, 45 F.3d 238, 240 (8th Cir. 1995); United States v. Critzer, 951 F.2d 306, 307 (11th Cir. 1992). Indictments are normally sufficient unless no reasonable construction can be said to charge the offense. See O'Hagan, 139 F.3d at 651; United States v. Fleming, 8 F.3d 1264, 1265 (8th Cir. 1993).

Defendant Womack contends that the indictment must be dismissed because:

> [Count One] fails to state an offense because 26 U.S.C. § 7212(a) can be used only to prosecute corruptly > interfering with administration of Title 26 of the United States Code—that is, the Internal Revenue Code ("IRC")—but the conduct alleged, if true, would only impede administration of the Bank Secrecy Act, not the IRC. Other allegations of "corrupt" conduct are not "corrupt" within the meaning of the statute.

>
> 5 The remaining nine counts of the Indictment (Counts 2 through 10) charge Ms. Womack with making false statements during a deposition conducted by a trial attorney for the U.S. Department of Justice, Tax Division, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(2)....
>
> Each of these Counts fails to state an offense for one or more reasons. First, the undisputed facts establish the literal truth of the statements attributed to Ms. Womack in Counts 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, and 10. In these Counts, the Indictment generally alleges that Ms. Womack falsely told government officials that she had no ownership interest in certain companies in the Cayman Islands, which is true because, as the Indictment itself states, 100% of the issued and outstanding shares of each company is owned by a trust validly organized under Cayman Island law.
>
> Second, the allegedly false statements described in Counts 2 and 6, where the government charges that Ms. Womack falsely stated she could not remember when certain Cayman Island companies were organized, are immaterial as a matter of law because Ms. Womack told the government rough, accurate approximations of the timeframe during which they were organized. These counts thus likewise fail to state an offense.
>
> Third, Counts 9 and 10 are multiplicitous and threaten to violate the Double Jeopardy Clause if not dismissed because they allege the same false statement, and demand the same proof of falsity, as that alleged in Count 8. These counts are thus defective and must be dismissed.

(Motion to Dismiss (docs # 72 and # 73) at 2–3)

A. Count One

26 U.S.C. § 7212(a), the statute under which defendant Womack is charged in Count One provides: "Whoever ... in any ... way corruptly ... obstructs or impedes, or endeavors to obstruct or impede, the due administration of this title, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined ... or imprisoned ... or both." As set forth above, the Introduction section of the Indictment, which is incorporated into Count One, charges in part:

> 1. Beginning in or about 1996, and continuing to the date of this indictment, Defendant VERNA CHERYL WOMACK ... corruptly endeavored, in the Western District of Missouri, and elsewhere, to obstruct and impede the due administration of the internal revenue laws of the United States. As part of her endeavors, WOMACK opened a series of bank accounts and organized a series of nominee companies and trusts in the Cayman Islands to conceal a portion of her income from the IRS.... As part of her corrupt endeavors, WOMACK repeatedly failed, year after year, to report her financial interests in her nominee companies and trusts to the IRS despite the multiple legal requirements that, as a United States citizen, she do so.
>
> 2. As part of her corrupt endeavors, WOMACK established at least 19 accounts at the Bank of Butterfield and Caledonian Bank in the Cayman Islands in her own name, and in the name of her various nominee companies and trusts. For at least the calendar years 2005 through 2008, WOMACK failed to report her financial interest and signatory authority over all of the financial accounts in the Cayman Islands that she had an interest in or signatory authority over to the IRS despite the multiple legal requirements that, as a United States citizen, she do so.
>
> 6 3. For the calendar years 2005 through 2008, WOMACK maintained balances of between $40,964.00 and $173,541.08 in one of the Bank of Butterfield accounts, an interest-bearing account that she maintained in her own name.... Despite her custody and control of that account, WOMACK repeatedly failed, year after year, to report her financial interests in her Bank of Butterfield interest-bearing account to the IRS despite the multiple legal requirements that, as a United States citizen, she do so.
>
> 4. WOMACK's corrupt endeavors to conceal income from the IRS included the use of a nominee company in the Cayman Islands called Lucy Limited, for which she established at least two separate accounts at the Bank of Butterfield.... She did not disclose her control of Lucy Limited or the existence of its bank account to the IRS, and she did not properly report the income she derived from that sale—at least $851,188.00—on her individual > tax return as required by the internal revenue laws of the United States.

>
> 5. Further obstructing and impeding the administration of the internal revenue laws of the United States, WOMACK repeatedly lied to employees of the United States about her interests in Cayman Island businesses, trusts and financial accounts....
>
> 6. The United States alleges that during the period charged in this indictment, WOMACK's schemes to interfere with the administration of the internal revenue laws, including but not limited to her corrupt endeavors using Cayman Island nominees and financial accounts alleged in this indictment, caused a total tax loss in excess of $7,000,000.00.

(Indictment (doc # 1) at 1–3) Count One then provides: "Beginning in or about 1996, and continuing to the date of this indictment, ... the defendant did corruptly endeavor to obstruct and impede the due administration of the internal revenue laws of the United States by the following conduct: [listing of specific conduct which was more generally described in the above Introduction section]." (Id. at 10–18)

The Court finds that Count One of the instant indictment tracks the statutory language of 26 U.S.C. § 7212(a) and contains all the essential elements of a section 7212(a) violation. The Court finds no merit to defendant's argument that she can allegedly lie on her individual tax returns and to government agents by failing to report and/or acknowledge interests in foreign financial accounts and not be said to be impeding administration of the Internal Revenue Code, but rather to be only impeding administration of the Bank Secrecy Act. Nor does the Court find merit in defendant's argument that the indictment does not allege conduct that is " 'corrupt'–that is conduct undertaken in 'an effort to secure an unlawful advantage or benefit.' " (Motion to Dismiss (docs # 72 and 73) at 12) The indictment alleges that defendant's schemes to interfere with the administration of the internal revenue laws caused a tax loss in excess of $7,000.000.00, taxes that allegedly would have been owed by defendant and collected under the Internal Revenue Code, but for defendant's schemes to obstruct and impede.

Defendant's arguments that the alleged conduct was not "corrupt" would require the Court to look outside the indictment and/or make a pre-trial determination of the evidence. Whether the government will introduce sufficient evidence to prove its allegations cannot be resolved prior to the government's presentation of its case to the jury. Count One of the indictment is sufficient.

B. Counts Two Through Ten

7 18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(2), the statute under which defendant Womack is charged in Counts Two through Ten provides: "whoever, in any matter within the jurisdiction of the ... Government of the United States, knowingly and willfully ... makes any materially false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or representation ... shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 5 years ... or both." As set forth above, Counts Two through Ten charge:

> 46. On or about May 9[sic], 2009, in Kansas City, in the Western District of Missouri, the defendant VERNA CHERYL WOMACK, in a matter within the jurisdiction of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, that is, the United States Department of the Treasury and the United States Department of Justice, did voluntarily and intentionally make the false and fraudulent statements of material fact corresponding to each count below, while knowing those statements to be false and fraudulent at the time she made them.

(Indictment (doc # 1) at 19) The context in which the alleged false and fraudulent statements were made was further described in Count One (which paragraph was incorporated into Counts Two through Ten):

> 41. On or about May 19, 2009, in Kansas City, Missouri, WOMACK testified under oath in a deposition by a trial attorney for the United States Department of Justice, Tax Division, regarding a lawsuit under the internal revenue laws of the United States then pending in the Western District of Missouri that sought to enjoin a third party from > providing tax advice. During that deposition, WOMACK knowingly made numerous false and fraudulent statements....

(Indictment (doc # 1) at 15)

To find a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(2), the Eighth Circuit's model jury instructions require that the defendant (1) knowingly and intentionally made the statement; (2) the statement was false or fraudulent; (3) the statement concerned a material fact; (4) the statement was made about a matter within the jurisdiction of a federal agency; and (5) the defendant knew it was untrue when she made the statement. See Eighth Circuit Model Criminal Jury Instruction 6.18.1001B. The Court finds that Counts Two through Ten of the instant indictment track the statutory language of 18 U.S.C. § 1001(a)(2) and contain all the essential elements of a section 1001(a)(2) violation.

The Court finds no merit in defendant's argument that some of defendant's statements are literally true because this argument requires the Court to look outside the indictment and/or make a pre-trial determination of the evidence. Likewise, the Court finds no merit in defendant's argument that some of defendant's statements are immaterial. As set forth by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in United States v. Ferro, 252 F.3d 964, 968 (8th Cir. 2001), "so long as the indictment contains a facially sufficient allegation of materiality, federal criminal procedure does not 'provide for a pre-trial determination of sufficiency of the evidence.' " Finally, the Court finds no merit in defendant's argument that Counts 9 and 10 must be dismissed as multiplicitous because Counts 9 and 10 do not merely allege a repetition of the alleged false statement in Count 8. Rather, Count 9 references defendant's statement that Lucy Limited's investors paid her to purchase, manage and properly contain wine and Count 10 references defendant's statement that Lucy Limited's investors paid her for managing the auction of wine, while Count 8 references only defendant's statement as to the ownership of Lucy Limited. Since Counts 9 and 10 will require proof of facts that Count 8 does not, there is no multiplicity. See United States v. Segall, 833 F.2d 144, 146 (9th Cir. 1987)("each nonidentical false statement made ... may be charged as a separate violation of section 1001.") Whether the government will introduce sufficient evidence to prove its allegations cannot be resolved prior to the government's presentation of its case to the jury. Counts Two through Ten of the indictment are sufficient.

III. CONCLUSION

8 For the foregoing reasons, it is RECOMMENDED that the Court, after making an independent review of the record and applicable law, enter an order denying Defendant Verna Cheryl Womack's Motion to Dismiss the Indictment Pursuant to Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(b)(3)(B) (docs # 72 and # 73).

Counsel are reminded they have fourteen days from the date of receipt of a copy of this Report and Recommendation within which to file and serve objections to same. A failure to file and serve timely objections shall bar an attack on appeal of the factual findings in this Report and Recommendation which are accepted or adopted by the district judge, except on the grounds of plain error or manifest injustice.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.3d, 2015 WL 8968785

Footnotes

[1] Doc # 72 is a redacted version of the motion and doc # 73 is an unredacted version filed under seal. Defendant states she has redacted portions of the motion in accordance with the terms of the Stipulated Protective Order Concerning Subpoenaed Documents and Information (doc # 35) entered by Judge Fenner in United States v. Allen R. Davison, No. 08–00120–CV–W–GAF.

End of Document

2016 WL 7174610
United States Bankruptcy Court,
W.D. Texas, San Antonio Division.

In re: James and Corinne Gandy, Debtors.
United States of America, Plaintiff,
v.
James and Corinne Gandy, Defendants.

CASE NO. 14–53018–CAG
|
ADV. NO. 15–05083–CAG
|
Signed 11/04/2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

Ramona S. Notinger, U.S. Dept. Justice, Tax Div., Dallas, TX, for Plaintiff

H. Anthony Hervol, Law Office of H. Anthony Hervol, San Antonio, TX, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

CRAIG A. GARGOTTA, UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

1 Came on for consideration the above-numbered adversary proceeding and, in particular, Plaintiff's (United States of America "United States" or Internal Revenue Service "IRS") Motion for Summary Judgment filed May 16, 2016 (the "Motion") (ECF[1] No. 16). Defendant Corrine Gandy filed a Response in opposition to the Motion on June 6, 2016 (the "Response") (ECF No. 20). Plaintiff filed its Reply to the Response on June 24, 2016 (the "Reply") (ECF No. 24). The Court has jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334. This matter is a core proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(I) (determination of dischargeability of a debt). Venue is proper under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1408(1) and 1409(a). This matter is referred to this Court under the District Court's Order of Reference. For the reasons stated in this Memorandum Opinion and Order, the Court is of the opinion that Plaintiff's Motion should be GRANTED.

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On October 15, 2015, the United States filed this adversary proceeding asking the Court to determine that James and Corinne Gandy's ("the Gandys") joint $2.8 million federal income tax liability (Form 1040) for tax year 2007 is non-dischargeable, or is an exception to discharge, under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1)(C). James Gandy previously waived his discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)(10) (ECF. No. 11). As such, the United States is seeking a judicial determination that Mrs. Gandy's (hereinafter "Defendant") 2007 tax liability is non-dischargeable.

The United States asserts that Defendant's 2007 tax liability is non-dischargeable due to Defendant's willful attempts to evade or defeat her tax liability. The United States alleges that Defendant took affirmative actions to defeat both the assessment and the collection of her 2007 federal income tax liability by filing a false original 2007 income tax return that omitted over $18 million in taxable income. Further, the United States alleges that Defendant's actions—such as her fraudulent transfers of assets to family members and her extravagant lifestyle with funds that should have been used to pay her federal tax debt—demonstrate a willful attempt to evade the payment of taxes.

The amount of the Gandys' individual income tax liability for 2007 is not in dispute. The Gandys' income tax debt was $2,846,453.45 as of the chapter 7 petition date of December 4, 2014. (Gov. Ex. 8; p. 2). The chapter 7 Trustee ("Trustee") paid the IRS $766,882 on or about October 28, 2015, from the sale of the Gandys' $1 million residence and another $90,800 from the Trustee's sale of the Gandys' airplane. As such, the Gandys' joint 2007 individual income tax liability is roughly $2 million.

PARTIES' CONTENTIONS

The United States contends that there is competent summary judgment evidence for the Court to find that Defendant willfully evaded the payment of her joint 2007 individual income tax liability. The United States argues that there are a number of acts that demonstrate that Defendant evaded paying her taxes by: (1) failing to disclose her ownership interest in her home and an airplane in her bankruptcy schedules; (2) complicity in the fraudulent transfer of her $1.4 million residence to her elderly mother-in-law; (3) transferring money out of joint or personal bank accounts to her mother's bank accounts to shield the funds from discovery while IRS Collections was reviewing her tax returns; (4) omitting income on her original tax return; (5) maintaining offshore bank accounts in which she had unreported income; and (6) purchasing luxury items, such as automobiles, while not paying her 2007 income taxes.

2 Defendant argues that: (1) she did not list her home in her bankruptcy schedules because her mother-in-law owned her former residence and James Gandy's company owned the airplane; (2) she transferred money to her mother's accounts to preserve money and keep James Gandy from spending all of their cash; (3) although she signed her original and amended Form 1040 income tax returns for 2007, she did not understand all of the related documentation or the operation of James Gandy's businesses; (4) the offshore accounts were James Gandy's offshore accounts; and (6) luxury items such as automobiles were leased.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

Summary judgment is appropriate "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986). Bankruptcy Rule 7056 applies Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to adversary proceedings. If summary judgment is appropriate, the Court may resolve the case as a matter of law. Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 323; Blackwell v. Barton, 34 F.3d 298, 301 (5th Cir. 1994). The Fifth Circuit has stated "[t]he standard of review is not merely whether there is a sufficient factual dispute to permit the case to go forward, but whether a rational trier of fact could find for the non-moving party based upon evidence before the court." James v. Sadler, 909 F.2d 834, 837 (5th Cir. 1990) (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586 (1986)).

To the extent that the non-moving party asserts the existence of factual disputes, the evidence offered by the non-moving party to support those factual contentions must be of sufficient quality so that a rational fact finder might, at trial, find in favor of the non-moving party. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 585–87 (non-moving party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to material facts"); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249–50 (1986) ("adverse party's response ... must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial"). If the record "taken as a whole, could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, then there is no genuine issue for trial." LeMaire v. Louisiana, 480 F.3d 383, 390 (5th Cir. 2007). In determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists, the non-moving party must respond to a proper motion for summary judgment with specific facts demonstrating that such genuine issue exists. A genuine issue of material fact is not raised by mere conclusory allegations or bald assertions unsupported by specific facts. Leon Chocron Publcidad Y Editoria, S.A. v. Jymm Swaggart Ministries, 990 F.2d 1253 (5th Cir. 1993).

In an action to determine the dischargeability of a debt, the creditor has the burden of proof under a preponderance of the evidence standard. Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. 279, 286 (1991). "Intertwined with this burden is the basic principle of bankruptcy that exceptions to discharge must be strictly construed against a creditor and liberally construed in favor of a debtor so that the debtor may be afforded a fresh start." FNFS, Ltd. v. Harwood (In re Harwood), 637 F.3d 615, 619 (5th Cir. 2011) (citing Hudson v. Raggio & Raggio, Inc. (In re Hudson), 107 F.3d 355, 356 (5th Cir. 1997)). Therefore, the United States must support its motion with credible evidence—using any of the materials specified in Rule 56(c)—that would entitle it to a directed verdict if not controverted at trial. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 331. Assuming Plaintiff meets its burden and submits a properly supported Motion, Defendant must demonstrate the existence of specific facts constituting a genuine issue of material fact for which a trial is necessary. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248–49. Defendant must produce evidence demonstrating the existence of a triable issue of fact on at least one element of Plaintiff's claim. See Irby v. Bittick, 44 F.3d 949, 953 (11th Cir. 1995).

SUMMARY OF UNDISPUTED FACTS[2]

3 1. In tax year 2007, the Gandys earned over $20 million, but failed to pay their 2007 federal income tax debt on that income. (Gov. Ex. 1, p. 18, lines 18–25; p. 19, lines 1–5). According to IRS Form 906, Closing Agreement on Final Determination Covering Specific Matters ("the Closing Agreement") that the Gandys signed on or about December 5, 2013, the Gandys underreported their taxable income on their original 2007 federal income tax return by $18,822,602. (Gov. Exs. 2 & 3). The Gandys' 2007 amended income tax return (Gov. Ex. 4), dated September 11, 2009, also shows that the Gandys admitted owing the IRS an additional $2,416,541 in tax for unreported income in their original 2007 income tax return. In this amended income tax return, the Gandys disclosed an additional $17,853,586 in adjusted gross income ("AGI") that they did not report in their original 2007 income tax return. (Gov. Ex. 2, p. 1; Gov. Ex. 4, p. 1).

2. In October 2015, the Trustee sold the Gandys' residence at 108 Larry Lee Drive in Kerrville, Texas for $925,000. The Trustee applied $766,882.40 of the sales proceeds to the Gandys' 2007 federal income tax debt held by the IRS, leaving a balance of $2,079,571.05. (Gov. Ex. 8, p. 2; Gov. Exs. 9 & 10). In December 2015, the Trustee sold the Gandys' airplane. On or about December 29, 2015, the United States received a check in the amount of $90,800 from the Trustee, representing the net sales proceeds from the sale of this airplane and leaving a federal income tax balance of $1,988,771.05, or approximately $2 million. (Gov. Ex. 11).

3. In 2006, the Gandys purchased a residence at 108 Larry Lee Drive in Kerrville, Texas for $1.4 million. (Gov. Ex. 13, p. 1). In 2007, Defendant paid off the $1 million mortgage on their residence on Larry Lee Drive. (Gov. Ex. 16, p. 42, lines 15–25; p. 43, lines 1–8).

4. After the IRS filed a federal tax lien against the Gandys on January 23, 2013, the Gandys gave Prem Gandy, Mr. Gandy's elderly mother, a promissory note for $1 million and signed a deed of trust in favor of Prem Gandy that allegedly encumbered the Gandys' residence. The deed of trust was recorded on January 29, 2014, but dated June 1, 2012. (Gov. Ex. 17, p. 5). The Gandys claimed that, in 2012, Prem Gandy foreclosed on the Gandys' residence and became the record owner of the residence. (Gov. Ex. 1, p. 52, lines 5–21; p. 54, lines 1–8).

5. The Gandys did not disclose their airplane in their original Schedules. (Gov. Ex. 5, p. 6). Also after the Gandys became indebted to the IRS, Defendant conveyed her interest in certain Texas real property jointly owned with Liliane Williams, her elderly mother, to Williams in exchange for a $115,009 note receivable. (Gov. Ex. 26, lines 3–20). Further, the Gandys also failed to disclose the note receivable from Liliane Williams to Defendant in their original Schedules. (Gov. Ex. 5, p. 5). On April 30, 2015, the Gandys amended their Schedule B to include this note receivable as an asset. (Gov. Ex. 23, p. 4). The Gandys did not amend their Schedules to claim as an asset their residence on Larry Lee Drive or their airplane, notwithstanding the fact that the Trustee subsequently sold the house and airplane to pay down the Gandys' 2007 tax debt.

6. After the Gandys became indebted to the Internal Revenue Service for their 2007 income tax liability, James Gandy gave his elderly mother Prem Gandy, his brother Hary Gandy and his sister Mona Gandy an interest in two of the Gandys' businesses—Gandy Engineering and Digital Werks. (Gov. Ex. 1, p. 17, lines 2–25; p. 18, lines 1–15; Gov. Ex. 16, p. 48, lines 8–22; Gov. Ex. 25).

7. In April of 2013, Defendant withdrew $170,000 from her bank account and deposited it into a bank account of her mother, Liliane Williams. Defendant, however, she continued to control these funds. (Gov. Ex. 26, p. 144, lines 24–25; p. 145, lines 1–25, p. 146, lines 1–25; p. 147, lines 1–3; Gov. Ex. 30). In her Rule 2004 examination, Defendant admitted to opening a Wells Fargo bank account, depositing $100,000 to purchase a certificate of deposit, and adding Jason and Landon Cross, her two adult sons, to be paid upon her death, without her sons knowledge of the transaction. (Gov. Ex. 26, p. 162, lines 7–25; p.163, lines 1–8).

4 8. After the Gandys became indebted to the IRS for their 2007 income tax, the Gandys established foreign bank accounts in tax-haven countries. The Gandys deposited large sums of money in bank accounts in the United Arab Emirates, Lichtenstein, Switzerland, Lebanon, Belgium, and Canada. The Gandys failed to report income on these accounts to the IRS and failed to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBAR) for these accounts, despite their continued control over those funds. (Gov. Exs. 28 & 29). In the Closing Agreement with the IRS, the Gandys admitted that they "underreported federal income taxes during the period 2003 through 2008 through offshore financial arrangements (including arrangements with foreign banks, financial institutions, corporations, partnerships, trusts, or other entities) ....” (Gov. Ex. 3, p. 1). In her Rule 2004 examination, Defendant admitted wire-transferring large sums of money in and out of some of these foreign bank accounts. (Gov. Ex. 26, p. 82, lines 2–25; p. 83, line 1; p. 84, lines 1–5; p. 85, lines 1–7; Gov. Ex. 32).

9. On or about April 23, 2013, while IRS Collections was pursuing the Gandys, Defendant wrote a check to herself from her USAA bank account in the amount of $170,000 and then deposited these funds into a newly created account in her name at Wells Fargo Bank. (Gov. Ex. 30, p. 144, lines 24–25; p. 145, lines 1–25; p. 146, lines 1–25; p. 147, lines 1–3). In her Rule 2004 examination, Defendant admitted later depositing this money into yet another account in her mother's name to keep it away from her husband, that Defendant continued to control the funds, and that these actions were a “mistake.” (Gov. Ex. 26, p. 145, lines 1–25).

10. In addition, the Gandys purchased a number of planes for their business operations and seven vehicles (two Ferraris, two Porsches, a Mercedes Benz, an Audi and an Aston Martin). (Gov. Ex. 26, p. 46, lines 15–23; p. 47, lines 1–8, p. 56, lines 3–5, 18–24; p. 59, lines 12–15; p. 60, lines 14–23; Gov. Ex. 1, p. 23, lines 24–25; p. 24, lines 1–25; p. 25, lines 1–20, p. 29, lines 18–25, p. 30, lines 1–25, pp. 31–32, p. 33, lines 5–25; p. 34, lines 1–12; p. 36, lines 15–23; p. 38, lines 17–25). Shortly before they filed their chapter 7 bankruptcy case, the Gandys purchased two 2014 Volkswagens for themselves and a 2013 Fiat for one of Mr. Gandy's adult daughters. (Gov. Ex. 5; Gov. Ex. 26, p. 58, lines 7–9).

11. After this bankruptcy case was filed, Defendant purchased Gemini Aviation d/b/a Dugosh, an aircraft repair company where her husband works (Gov. Ex. 34), and failed to disclose it in her answers to the United States' interrogatories. (Gov. Ex. 24).

12. Defendant is fifty-nine years of age. (Corrine Gandy Decl., Ex. A, para. 1).[3] She first started working at the age of sixteen. Id. She grew up in a military family in the United States, living in at least seven different places where her father had been stationed, and joined the U.S. Air Force at the age of twenty, serving one four year term. Id. During that time, she married a military officer and then got out of the Air Force to pursue a degree. Id. She was married seven years and had two children during her first marriage but divorced from her then spouse in 1985, whereupon she took a job at Kelly AFB in San Antonio, starting as a secretary. Id. She worked at Kelly AFB approximately fifteen years. Id.

13. Defendant met James Gandy in approximately 1993–1994, and the two were married in 1997. Id. James was an engineer and inventor who owned a successful printing manufacturing company known as Sign Tech. Id.

14. After the Gandys married, James suggested that Defendant did not need to work and could help out more at the home, as James had three minor children, two of whom came to live with the Gandys within six months of their marriage. Id. Defendant has been a housewife since 1997 and has been entirely dependent upon Mr. Gandy for support for almost twenty years. Id. Defendant has worked a part-time job since the summer of 2013 as a yoga instructor at the Kroc Salvation Army in Kerrville, typically earning between $500–$1000/mo. Id. The Gandys are now separated and going through a divorce,[4] and Defendant states she will be requesting spousal support from James Gandy because she does not have the job skills to now re-enter the workforce and earn a living. Id.

5 15. Since Defendant first started working more than forty years ago, she has always filed her tax returns on time (including extensions James requested during her marriage to him), and alleges that she has always paid her taxes in full and on time, other than the tax assessed on the Amended 2007 return. Id. ¶ 4.

16. In 2007, Mr. Gandy derived all of his income from his position as CEO of a company called Gandinnovations. Id. ¶ 6.

17. Since the early 1990's, a CPA, David Owens, has prepared the Gandy's joint tax returns. Id. ¶ 8. Defendant has met Mr. Owens but has had little contact with him over the entire time period that he has prepared the Gandy's tax returns. Id.

18. The Gandys made voluntary payments on their 2007 tax liability from December 2011, through June 2014, paying a total of $990,145.16. Id. ¶ 11 & Ex. “A–2”.

DISCUSSION

An individual debtor under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code is generally granted a discharge of all debts that arose before the date of the order of relief. 11 U.S.C. § 727(a)&(b). Section 523 of the Bankruptcy Code, however, provides exceptions to such discharge. In particular, 11 U.S.C. § 523 provides, in pertinent part, that:

> (a) A discharge under section 727 ... of this title does not discharge an individual debtor from any debt (1) for a tax ...—(C) with respect to which the debtor made a fraudulent return or willfully attempted in any manner to evade or defeat such tax.

A debtor has willfully attempted to evade or defeat a tax within the meaning of § 523(a)(1)(C) of the Bankruptcy Code where the debtor: (1) has a duty under the law, (2) knew of the duty, and (3) voluntarily and intentionally violated that duty. Bruner v. United States, 55 F.3d 195, 197 (5th Cir. 1995); In re Toti, 24 F.3d 806, 809 (6th Cir. 1994). There is no requirement of an affirmative act or commission. Bruner, 55 F.3d at 200 ("Section 523(a)(1)(C) surely encompasses both acts of commission as well as culpable omissions."); Toti, 24 F.3d at 809. A debtor's actions are willful under § 523(a)(1)(C) if they are done voluntarily, consciously, or knowingly and intentionally. Toti, 24 F.3d at 809 (citation omitted). The phrase "in any manner," is interpreted broadly and regularly includes attempts to evade payment of tax as well as actions to avoid assessment of tax. Bruner, 55 F.3d at 200.

In this case, the first two prongs of the Bruner test are met because the Gandys had previously filed tax returns before and after tax year 2007. See State Farm Life Ins., Co. v. Gutterman, 896 F.2d 116, 119 n.3 (5th Cir. 1990) (holding that the filing of tax returns supports the inference that the defendant knew he had a duty to pay federal income taxes). The third prong, the "willful attempt" standard, contains both a conduct requirement (that the debtor "attempted in any manner to evade or defeat [a] tax") and a mental state requirement (that the attempt was "willful"). United States v. Stanley, 595 Fed.Appx. 314, 317–18 (5th Cir. 2014). The ability to pay is only one factor in the analysis and not the "litmus test" for determining nondischargeability under § 523(a)(1)(C). Grothues v. IRS (In re Grothues), 226 F.3d 334, 339 (5th Cir. 2000). Denying a debtor a discharge of his unpaid federal taxes is appropriate where there is a pattern of the debtor failing to pay taxes by fraudulent transfers and concealment of assets. Bruner, 55 F.3d at 200.

6 Defendant's 2007 joint federal income tax is res judicata. This Court determined Defendant's 2007 tax liability in the Agreed Judgment (Gov. Ex. 8), between the United States and her husband, James Gandy, entered on December 4, 2015. See Matter of James Carroll Teal (United States v. Teal), 16 F.3d 619, 621 (5th Cir. 1994) (per curiam) (finding that a tax court adjudication of tax liability has binding effect). Defendant submitted no summary judgment evidence that contests the amounts of tax, interest, or penalties. By contrast, the United States' motion was supported by competent summary judgment evidence. See IRS Form 4340, Certificates of Assessments and Payments (Gov. Ex. 37), and Declaration of James Ashton (Gov. Ex. 38), with the attached IRS interest update (Ex. C thereto), showing the tax balance due, with interest and penalties thereon, as of June 27, 2016, is $2,143,455.83. The IRS Form 4340 is presumptive proof of the validity of a federal tax assessment. United States v. McCallum, 970 F.2d 66, 71 (5th Cir. 1992) (holding that a certificate of assessment is presumptive proof of the assessment absent controverting evidence).

On or about October 14, 2008, Defendant signed, under penalties of perjury, and filed her joint 2007 federal income (Form 1040) tax return reporting a loss of $1,411,254 (negative adjusted gross income "AGI"), and seeking a refund of $33,524. (Gov. Ex. 2, pp. 1–2).

Notwithstanding Defendant's assertions that she did not understand Mr. Gandy's business operations; that she placed money into accounts with her mother to pay the IRS or preserve business assets; that she was completely dependent on James Gandy for her financial well-being; and that she did not understand the contents of her original and amended 2007 tax returns; certain facts are not in dispute because Defendant signed the following documents:

1. On or about September 11, 2009, Defendant signed, under penalty of perjury, and filed her amended joint 2007 federal income (Form 1040X) tax return. The amended 2007 Form 1040 stated positive AGI of $16,442,332; an increase of $17,853,586 over the AGI she reported in her original (Form 1040) tax return, which disclosed income tax owing in the amount of $2,416,541. (Gov. Ex. 4, p. 1).

2. On or about January 15, 2010, Defendant signed, under penalty of perjury, Disclosures to the IRS Criminal Investigation Division, wherein she admitted: (1) a 50% ownership interest in Sarven Management, Ltd., a Swiss partnership, which had a Swiss bank account; (2) that the highest aggregate value of her offshore accounts/assets in 2003, 2004, 2005, and 2006 was between $100,000 to $1 million; (3) that the estimated total of her unreported income in 2003, 2004, 2005, and 2006 was between $0 and $100,000; (4) that she possibly had unreported income of over $10 million in 2007; and (5) that she may have a financial interest in a Citibank account in her husband's name in Dubai. (Gov. Ex. 29, pp. 1–6).

3. On October 22, 2010, Defendant signed the James Gandy Life Insurance Trust Agreement, which created the James Gandy Life Insurance Trust, the Gandy Family Trust, and the Gandy Marital Trust.

4. On December 5, 2011, Defendant signed a Closing Agreement with the IRS, wherein she admitted that she "underreported federal income taxes during the period 2003 through 2008 through offshore financial arrangements (including arrangements with foreign banks, financial institutions, corporations, partnerships, trusts, or other entities) ...." (Gov. Ex. 3, p. 1). In the same Agreement, Defendant admitted underreporting income, in tax year 2007 in the amount of $18,822,602. On page 2 of the agreement, Defendant agreed to the following statement: "For 2007 a penalty is due under 31 U.S.C. section 5321(a)(5) in the amount of $16,000 for failure to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ('FBAR'), TDF 90–22.1."

Direct proof of a debtor's intent to evade taxes is generally provable by circumstantial evidence and reasonable inferences drawn from the existence of certain fact patterns, otherwise called badges of fraud. In re Binkley, 176 B.R. 260, 265 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1994), aff'd, 242 B.R. 728 (M.D. Fla. 1999) (citing Berzon v. United States, 145 B.R. 247, 250 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1992)); see also 4 Collier on Bankruptcy, ¶ 727.02 (15th ed. 1994) ("a finding of actual intent may be based upon circumstantial evidence or on inferences drawn from a course of conduct").

7 The United States has proven by a preponderance of the evidence that Defendant willfully attempted to evade or defeat the assessment and the collection of her 2007 income tax. See Grogan v. Garner, 498 U.S. at 287–88 (finding that dischargeability complaints may be proven by a preponderance of the evidence). Defendant clearly participated in fraudulent acts to avoid paying her taxes —the understatement of her 2007 income by $18 million; the use of offshore bank accounts in tax-haven countries; the fraudulent concealment of her interest in a $1 million home and other valuable assets in bankruptcy when she had a legal duty to fully and truthfully disclose her assets; and the submission to the IRS of two false financial statements, failing to disclose assets in her Schedules.

The Court agrees with the United States that the evidence demonstrates that Defendant concealed assets with the intent to delay and hinder the United States as a creditor. The attempted concealment of an asset (the Gandys' home) in the name of an insider (her elderly mother-in-law) is a badge of fraud. See Matter of Holloway, 955 F.2d 1008, 1011 (5th Cir. 1992) (finding of an insider is defined by: (1) closeness of the relationship between the parties and (2) whether the transaction was at arm's length). Also, the Gandys controlled the concealed property after it was allegedly transferred to Prem Gandy—they lived in the home and paid all expenses pertaining to the home. The Gandys also concealed an airplane, a vehicle, and an account receivable in order to make it appear that they had no assets with which to satisfy their federal income tax debt.

The bank records attached to the Ashton Declaration (Gov. Ex. 38E) show Defendant made large deposits and withdrawals of funds from January 23, 2009, through September 29, 2014, which are further detailed in the chart submitted herewith as Gov. Ex. 43. These records clearly show that Defendant had the financial ability to pay her tax debt during times when she made exorbitant expenditures and preferred other creditors. Gov. Ex. 43 shows that from January 23, 2009, through September 29, 2014, Defendant had signatory authority over accounts wherein over $13.8 million was deposited and from which $14.7 million was withdrawn. As to some of these accounts, Defendant had sole signatory authority— accounts 2496, 0730, 8529, 5139, 8969, and 8529. Also, Defendant testified in her February 26, 2015, Rule 2004 examination that she was "responsible for the family finances, paying the bills." (Gov. Ex. 44).

Defendant also lived a lavish lifestyle while not paying the $2 million tax debt she admitted she knew existed. For most of the relevant time frame of 2007–2015, Defendant lived in a $1 million mansion, drove luxury vehicles, and jetted around the world to exotic countries. A number of courts have taken similar lavish lifestyles into account in denying discharge under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1)(C). See United States v. Mixon (In re Mixon), No. 07–3257, 2008 WL 2065895 (Bankr. N.D. Tex. May 13, 2008) (Houser, C.J.) (debtors acquired expensive assets in the face of serious financial difficulties, spent money that could have been used to pay their federal taxes on vehicles and leisure activities, and enjoyed assets held in the name of a family member, thereby reducing their collection sources subject to IRS execution); United States v. Acker (in re Acker), No. 09–04165, 2010 WL 3813243 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. Sept. 28, 2010) (Rhoades, C.J.) (debtor had enough income to buy a new house when he could afford to pay his IRS debts, used a request for IRS administrative procedures to delay collection efforts, and hid assets from IRS); Matter of Zuhone, 88 F.3d 469 (7th Cir. 1996) (debtor transferred money and farmland to children); In re Schaeffer, 201 B.R. 282 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1996) (chapter 7 debtor's actions, in conveying marital residence to wife for no consideration to shield wife and assets from IRS, rendered taxes non-dischargeable).

8 In sum, Defendant's 2007 income taxes are non-dischargeable under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1)(C), because Defendant willfully attempted to evade or defeat them in the same manner as in Bruner. See Bruner, 55 F.3d at 200 (debtor's pre-petition pattern of failing to pay their taxes and attempting to hide income and assets constituted a willful attempt to evade or defeat the tax liabilities, thereby warranting excepting their taxes from discharge).

CONCLUSION

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment is hereby GRANTED; and it is further

ORDERED, that the debt Defendant owes to the United States (IRS) is a nondischargeable debt under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(1)(C); and it is further

ORDERED, that the debt is a liquidated debt in the amount of $2,846,453.45, subject to all payments and accrual of statutory interest; and it is further ORDERED, that all other relief not specifically granted herein is DENIED.

IT IS HEREBY ADJUDGED and DECREED that the below described is SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2016 WL 7174610, 118 A.F.T.R.2d 2016-6475

Footnotes

[1] Unless otherwise noted, “ECF” refers to the electronic case filing in this adversary proceeding.

[2] In her Response, Defendant made a number of objections to the United States' summary judgment evidence. Rather than rule on the merits of those objections which generally allege hearsay or lack of foundation, the Court has not considered any evidence that Defendant finds objectionable because the Court can grant summary judgment on the United States' remaining summary judgment evidence that is not in dispute.

[3] The Corrine Gandy Declaration is attached to the Mrs. Gandy's Response to the United States Motion for Summary Judgment.

[4] A petition for divorce was filed on November 9, 2015. There has been no other activity in the case. (Gov. Ex. 39).

End of Document

2014 WL 1028769
United States District Court, N.D. California.

United States of America, Plaintiff,
v.
John C. Hom, Defendant.

No. C 13–03721 WHA
|
Signed March 16, 2014

Attorneys and Law Firms

Jeremy N. Hendon, United States Department of Justice, Washington, DC, Thomas Moore, Thomas M. Newman, United States Attorney's Office, San Francisco, CA, for Plaintiff.

John C. Hom, San Rafael, CA, pro se.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO STRIKE DEFENDANT'S AMENDED ANSWER AND COUNTERCLAIM AND VACATING HEARING

WILLIAM ALSUP, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

1 In this tax-penalty enforcement action, the government is seeking to collect unpaid civil penalty assessments arising from defendant's failure to report his interests in foreign banks or financial accounts. Defendant filed an answer on August 23, 2013 (Dkt. No. 6). Almost four months later, defendant filed an amended answer and asserted a counterclaim—without seeking leave pursuant to Rule 15(a). The counterclaim alleges the government improperly disclosed defendant's tax return information to the Department of Justice in violation of nondisclosure laws in the internal revenue code. The government now moves to strike defendant's amended answer and counterclaim. For the following reasons, the motion to strike defendant's amended answer and counterclaim is GRANTED.

Of some significance, defendant earlier sued the government in a similar action alleging that the IRS made unauthorized disclosures of his tax return information to the Department of the Treasury. That action was dismissed without leave to amend by the undersigned judge in an order dated September 30, 2013, due to futility. John C. Hom, et al. v. United States, No. 13–02243, 2013 U.S. Lexis 142818, at *6 (N.D.Cal.).

ANALYSIS

1. RULE 15.

Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that a party may amend its pleading once as a matter of course within 21 days after serving it, with the opposing party's written consent, or with the court's leave. A party waives a defense of insufficient service by failing to "include it in a responsive pleading or in an amendment allowed by Rule 15(a)(1) as a matter of course." FRCP 12(h)(2).

The government contends that defendant's assertion of his counterclaim almost four months after filing the answer constituted undue delay. In response, defendant contends that he was not properly served with the lawsuit because he "was not living at his residence during the time of the alleged service" and therefore "the clock never started on the original answer" (Opp. 4). Defendant further contends that there is no violation with his bringing a counterclaim because of the two-year statute of limitations for Section 6103 violations (ibid.).

Defendant's arguments are without merit. First, defendant was personally served so his residence at the time of service is irrelevant (Dkt. No. 9). Second, defendant waived the affirmative defense of improper service when he failed to either include it in his original answer or move to raise the defense before filing his answer. Third, irrespective of the statute of limitations, defendant filed his amended answer and counterclaim almost four months after filing his answer. This is well beyond the 21 days allowed as a matter of course under Rule 15(a)(1). Defendant received neither written consent from the government or leave, therefore, defendant's amended answer was not properly filed.

2. ISSUE PRECLUSION.

Even if, however, defendant had properly sought leave to file an amended answer, such leave would be denied because the counterclaim is barred by issue preclusion.

2 Defendant's counterclaim alleges that the government, in violation of 26 U.S.C. 6103, obtained tax return information from the IRS and made unauthorized disclosures to the Department of Justice in connection with a Foreign Bank Account Report ("FBAR") investigation. Defendant is barred from relitigating that issue because it was already decided in the prior case. The September 30 order dismissing the unauthorized disclosure claim specifically stated, "Section 5314 is therefore a related statute under Section 6103 and the disclosures at issue in this action were lawful." Hom, 2013 U.S. Lexis 142818, at *6. The fact that in the prior action defendant addressed the Department of the Treasury and not the Department of Justice has no importance. The named parties in both actions are John C. Hom and the United States, and the asserted counterclaim—unauthorized disclosure of tax return information under Section 6103—is the same claim made by defendant in the prior action. Defendant's counterclaim is thus barred and this order need not reach whether the counterclaim was properly pled.

Accordingly, the government's motion to strike defendant's amended answer and counterclaim is GRANTED. The hearing is VACATED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2014 WL 1028769, 113 A.F.T.R.2d 2014-1426

End of Document

444 F.Supp.2d 385
United States District Court, D. Maryland, Southern Division.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Pradeep SRIVASTAVA, Defendant.

Criminal No. RWT 05–0482.
|
Aug. 4, 2006.

Synopsis
Background: Defendant charged with income tax evasion and false statements on tax returns moved to suppress evidence.

Holdings: The District Court, Titus, J., held that:

[1] warrant did not authorize seizure of defendant's personal and financial non-business papers;

[2] conduct of the agents who executed the warrant was so inappropriate as to warrant the exclusion of all evidence seized;

[3] evidence was not admissible under the inevitable discovery doctrine; and

[4] Internal Revenue Service (IRS) investigation was not an independent source precluding suppression of evidence seized.

Motion granted.

Attorneys and Law Firms

388 Paula M. Junghans, DLA Piper Rudnick Gray Cary U.S. LLP, Washington, DC, for Defendant.

Stuart A. Berman, Office of the United States Attorney, Greenbelt, MD, for Plaintiff.

OPINION

TITUS, District Judge.

On March 20, 2003, Magistrate Judge William Connelly signed three search warrants that authorized the search of Defendant Pradeep Srivastava's home and two medical offices for "financial, business, patient and other records related to" his "business ... which may constitute evidence of violations of Title 18 U.S.C. § 1347," a statute prohibiting health care fraud. Execution of these warrants resulted in the seizure of extensive financial 389 papers, both business and personal, some of which were referred to the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") for investigation. Upon further inquiry, the IRS concluded that Dr. Srivastava had failed to properly file his personal income tax returns for tax years 1998–2000. On October 12, 2005, a grand jury returned an indictment [1] charging Dr. Srivastava with income tax evasion and false statements on tax returns. [2]

On January 21, 2006, Dr. Srivastava filed a Motion for An Evidentiary Hearing Pursuant to Franks v. Delaware and to Suppress Evidence [Paper No. 13], alleging that the search warrant affidavit distorted and omitted material information, misleading Judge Connelly to authorize a warrant "under which sweeping and impermissible general searches of [his] home and offices were conducted." Dr. Srivastava requested that the Court conduct an evidentiary hearing pursuant to Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 155–56, 98 S.Ct. 2674, 57 L.Ed.2d 667 (1978), and suppress the evidence seized in the searches. For reasons stated on the record on March 27, 2006, this Court denied Defendant's request for a Franks hearing. The Court heard further argument and testimony on the remaining issues raised in Dr. Srivastava's Motion to Suppress on June 9, 2006. For the reasons stated below, Dr. Srivastava's Motion to Suppress will be granted.

BACKGROUND

Dr. Srivastava is a cardiologist residing in Potomac, Maryland. At all times relevant to this indictment, he conducted his medical practice through his professional corporation, Pradeep Srivastava, M.D., P.C., a Subchapter S Corporation. He filed Form 1040 U.S. Individual Income Tax Returns jointly with his wife and Form 1120–S U.S. Income Tax Returns for his subchapter S corporation for his medical practice. [3] Dr. Srivastava invested a significant amount of money in the stock market, specifically in stocks and stock options. During the rapidly rising market in technology stocks of the late 1990s, Dr. Srivastava traded in stocks and stock options at a high volume and apparently earned substantial capital gains, with smaller accompanying capital losses.

The investigation that ultimately led to criminal tax charges against Dr. Srivastava initially focused on allegations that he, through his medical practice, was engaged in health care fraud. Special agents from the Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Inspector General ("HHS–OIG"), the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Office of Personnel Management, Office of Inspector General conducted the initial stages of the health care fraud investigation of Dr. Srivastava. On March 20, 2003, Special Agent ("SA") 390 Jason Marrero of HHS–OIG submitted a single affidavit in support of applications for three search warrants to Judge Connelly. The affidavit in support of the warrants included allegations that Dr. Srivastava billed for services not rendered to patients, billed patients for duplicate services, listed inappropriate codes on patient claims, improperly billed patients for incidental services, and/or altered medical records.

Judge Connelly approved all three warrants, two of which applied to Dr. Srivastava's medical offices in Greenbelt and Oxon Hill, and the third of which authorized a search of Dr. Srivastava's residence in Potomac. Each warrant contained identical substantive language that authorized the seizure of ten categories of records, "including but not limited to, financial, business, patient, insurance and other records related to the business of Dr. Pradeep Srivastava, to include Drs. Balnath Bhandary and Felipe Robinson, for the period January 1, 1998 to Present, which may constitute evidence of violations of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1347." [4] (emphasis added) In pertinent part, the warrants specifically authorized the seizure of:

> 2. Financial records, including but not limited to accounting records, tax records, accounts receivable logs and ledgers, banking records, and other records reflecting income and expenditures of the business.
>
> (emphasis added) Agents simultaneously executed these warrants on March 21, 2003.

Agents executing these warrants seized large volumes of information from Dr. Srivastava's offices and his home. [5] Of particular relevance to this case and the instant motion, agents seized from Dr. Srivastava's office copies of facsimile transmission 391 letters directing wire transfers to his bank accounts with the Bank of India. Agents also seized from Dr. Srivastava's residence a facsimile transmission from a brokerage firm that appeared to list stock transactions for 1998, as well as spreadsheets from his financial records that showed capital gains of close to $40 million for tax year 1999.

After the searches were completed, SA Marrero forwarded to the United States Attorney's Office a copy of the Bank of India faxes found at Dr. Srivastava's Greenbelt location. The U.S. Attorney's office subsequently related this information to Supervisory Special Agent ("SSA") Brad Whites of the Wheaton, Maryland office of the IRS. On April 23, 2003, SSA Whites met with IRS Special Agent ("SA") Meredith Louden, and suggested to her that these faxes, which showed monies going to India, suggested a possible "FBAR" violation. [6] Acting upon this information, SA Louden contacted SA Marrero, who apprised her of the agents' discovery of the papers showing substantial wire transfers to India, [7] and informed her that, on the copies of his 1999, 2000, and 2001 personal tax returns found at his residence, Dr. Srivastava had not checked the appropriate block on the Schedules B to acknowledge these foreign accounts. SA Marrero proceeded to fax SA Louden six pages of documents, which included copies of the wire transfers found by the seizing agents. SA Louden subsequently began an investigation into possible FBAR violations, which ultimately led to a formal investigation regarding possible tax fraud committed by the Defendant.

MOTION TO SUPPRESS

[1] Under the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution,

> [t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place > to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

392 U.S. Const. Amend. IV; United States v. Stevenson, 396 F.3d 538, 545 (4th Cir.2005). The so-called "Warrant Clause" of the Fourth Amendment "categorically prohibits the issuance of any warrant except one particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized." Maryland v. Garrison, 480 U.S. 79, 84, 107 S.Ct. 1013, 94 L.Ed.2d 72 (1987)(internal quotations omitted)(emphasis added).

[2] The particularity requirement circumscribes officers' ability to conduct a general search; "by limiting the authorization to search to the specific areas and things for which there is probable cause to search, the requirement ensures that the search will be carefully tailored to its justifications, and will not take on the character of the wide-ranging exploratory searches the Framers intended to prohibit." Id. at 84, 107 S.Ct. 1013. Therefore, the particularity requirement "prevents the seizure of one thing under a warrant describing another," and prevents "a general, exploratory rummaging" into a person's property by leaving nothing to the discretion of executing officers. United States v. Janus Industries, 48 F.3d 1548, 1553–54(10th Cir.1995); see also Marron v. United States, 275 U.S. 192, 196, 48 S.Ct. 74, 72 L.Ed. 231 (1927).

[3] [4] Subject to the exceptions discussed below, evidence seized outside the scope of a warrant must be suppressed. See Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 392–94, 34 S.Ct. 341, 58 L.Ed. 652 (1914)(overruled on other grounds). In those circumstances where officers "grossly exceed the scope of a search warrant in seizing property," a search will be invalidated in its entirety, and all evidence seized will be suppressed. United States v. Uzenski, 434 F.3d 690, 706 (4th Cir.2006). Such "blanket suppression is warranted where the officers engage in a 'fishing expedition for the discovery of incriminating evidence.' " Id.

I. Do the financial documents seized from Dr. Srivastava's residence and offices fall within the scope of the warrant?

[5] Dr. Srivastava asserts that agents exceeded the scope of the warrant in conducting their searches and seizing certain financial documents. Noting that there must be some logical nexus between the items named in the warrant and any unnamed evidence seized during the search, see, e.g., United States v. Gentry, 642 F.2d 385, 387 (10th Cir.1981), Dr. Srivastava asserts that the documents seized that the government now seeks to use against him in its tax prosecution had no nexus to the business records listed in the warrant or to health care fraud. The government's position, taken in its opposition to Dr. Srivastava's motion and again at the evidentiary hearing before the undersigned, is that the warrant authorized agents to seize financial records that either related to the defendant's business or constituted evidence of violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1347.

The government's view of the scope of the warrants is simply untenable. The "Items to be Seized" listed by the warrant were defined as various categories of records "related to the business of Dr. Pradeep Srivastava ... which may constitute evidence of violations of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1347." (emphasis added) As such, agents were not entitled to seize any financial record of any kind, but rather could only seize documents that related to Dr. Srivastava's business and that may show in some way that health care fraud had been committed. This view is further supported by the fact that SA Marrero provided Judge Connelly with an affidavit supporting his suspicions that Dr. Srivastava, through his medical practice, 393 had engaged in health care fraud. These possible violations were the only things for which the government had probable cause to search. Accordingly, the warrants specifically delineated that they authorized the search and seizure of evidence related to this subject matter by specifying in the introduction of the warrant that agents were authorized to seize ten categories of documents "including but not limited to, financial, business, patient, insurance and other records related to the [medical practice] ... which may constitute evidence of violations of ... Section 1347." (emphasis added) Therefore, in order to fall within the scope of the warrant, a financial record not only had to have some relationship to Dr. Srivastava's business, but it also was subject to the requirement that it may constitute evidence that health care fraud had been committed.

This is not an overly-technical view of this warrant.[8] In United States v. Debbi, 244 F.Supp.2d 235 (S.D.N.Y.2003), the District Court for the Southern District of New York reached such a conclusion in a case involving strikingly similar facts. In Debbi, a magistrate judge approved a warrant that authorized the seizure of various treatment records, claim records, financial records, etc., limited to items "in furtherance of: (1) obstruction of justice; (2) the commission of health care fraud and which relate to patients who are covered by Medicare and Medicaid insurance or patients who reside at adult homes." Id. at 236. In executing the warrant, the officers seized "numerous personal files (both electronic 394 and paper), general correspondence, financial records, and records relating to Debbi's private patients, i.e., non-Medicare patients who do not reside in adult homes, not to mention numerous records of Mrs. Debbi." Id. at 236–37 (internal quotations omitted). Evaluating the Defendant's motion to suppress, the court observed > the plain language of a warrant describing, as required by the Fourth Amendment, what is to be searched and seized; and what here saved the otherwise very broad warrant issued by the Magistrate Judge from overbreadth was its explicit command that the items to be seized be limited to evidence of either obstruction of justice or the commission of health care fraud.

[G]ood faith reliance on a Magistrate's determination of probable cause is no basis to ignore

Id. at 237. The court concluded that the materials seized from the Defendant's home, including "personal and religious files, general correspondence, family financial records, private patient records, etc .... plainly fell outside these parameters." Id. Accord United States v. Duong, 156 F.Supp.2d 564, 572 (E.D.Va.2001)(search warrant authorizing evidence relating to robbery plans didn't authorize seizure of personal financial and other papers). So too here, Defendant's brokerage statements, financial spreadsheets, faxes to his CPA, faxes to his bank, and other documents do not in any way relate to the subject matter of the warrant—health care fraud. [9]

[6] The affidavit submitted in support of the warrants in this case detailed suspected health care fraud. This is the only subject for which the police had probable cause to search and seize evidence. Accord Janus Industries, 48 F.3d at 1553–54 (noting that the particularity requirement "ensures that a search is confined in scope to particularly described evidence relating to a specific crime for which there is demonstrated probable cause."). As the court in Debbi suggested, in a case where there is probable cause only to suspect health care fraud, a search warrant lacking this subject matter limitation would run afoul of the Fourth Amendment particularity requirement by allowing the seizure of any business record. See Debbi, 244 F.Supp.2d at 237; see also United States v. Hickey, 16 F.Supp.2d 223, 240 (E.D.N.Y.1998)(in RICO case, the "unstructured mandates" of warrants authorizing officers to "search all of the business records of each of the defendant corporations and to seize any items that constituted evidence of any crime regardless of its nature" were "clearly violative of the Fourth Amendment."); Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 467, 91 S.Ct. 2022, 29 L.Ed.2d 564 (1971) (particularity requirement is designed to prevent "a general exploratory rummaging in person's belongings" by focusing the officer conducting the search on the items that are authorized to be seized at a designated location).

[7] The fact that officers executing the search warrants in this case were faced with many personal records does not excuse them from complying with the restrictions and qualifications listed in the warrant. Other courts have observed that "the wholesale seizure for later detailed examination of records not described in a warrant is significantly more intrusive, and has been characterized as 'the kind of investigatory dragnet that the fourth amendment was designed to prevent.' " United 395 States v. Tamura, 694 F.2d 591, 595 (9th Cir.1982)(citing United States v. Abrams, 615 F.2d 541, 543 (1st Cir.1980)); accord United States v. Shilling, 826 F.2d 1365, 1369 (4th Cir.1987)(acknowledging substantial practical problems presented by task of examining "the mass of [defendant]'s records," but noting that "we cannot easily condone the wholesale removal of filing cabinets and documents not covered by the warrant"). Compare United States v. Sawyer, 799 F.2d 1494, 1509 (11th Cir.1986)(in executing warrant for business records indicating scheme to defraud investors, agents carefully confined the search to scope of warrant; agents were instructed that personal records of individuals and other businesses should not be seized; during the search, agent reviewed items seized and determined a quantity of records not covered by the warrant and left them on the premises; employees were allowed to segregate and remove their personal items; documents seized consisted only of business records likely to reveal a pervasive scheme to defraud investors, as specified in the warrant). [10]

To be abundantly clear, the Court finds that the personal financial documents seized from Dr. Srivastava, including his personal bank accounts, spreadsheets reflecting his stock transactions, 1099 forms, etc., see Footnote 5, neither tended to show violations of the health care fraud statute, nor related to the business of Dr. Srivastava. At least one document arguably may have related to the business of Dr. Srivastava—the fax to the Bank of India that was recovered from Dr. Srivastava's Greenbelt medical office. However, nothing about this document on its face connotes or suggests evidence of health care fraud. The only suggestion offered by the government that this fax fell within the scope of the warrant can be reduced to the argument that someone who commits health care fraud has to put the money someplace, therefore the document could show something related to the crime for which the warrant was sought. This justification is unacceptable, as there is no limiter to this interpretation. Under this view, any receipt, purchase order, bank statement, might be seized because it might show what Dr. Srivastava may have done with his allegedly illicit funds. This Court is unwilling to accept this limitless interpretation, which would allow the seizure of receipts showing the purchase of a family vacation, a motorcycle, even new articles of clothing as "evidence tending to show violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1347."

Additionally, the government's purported explanation that the agents were interested in the Bank of India faxes because they could possibly show "proceeds" of the alleged health care fraud is unavailing. The affidavit swore out facts suggesting that Dr. Srivastava billed for procedures that were not actually performed, engaged in "double billing" (billing separately for two procedures which should be billed under one code), and falsely diagnosed allegedly healthy individuals with certain cardiac 396 conditions that justified unnecessary treatment. There is not a single word in SA Marrero's affidavit relating to what Dr. Srivastava may have done with the monies he received as payment for his procedures, nor does the affidavit discuss how Dr. Srivastava handled his banking. In fact, the affidavit provided no probable cause to search for anything regarding how Dr. Srivastava's personal finances were handled. Furthermore, as counsel for the Defendant noted at the suppression hearing, concerns for proceeds of Dr. Srivastava's alleged crimes would involve money laundering activities, activities distinct from health care fraud, and evidence of which was not authorized by the warrant here.

This Court therefore finds that the seizure of the Bank of India faxes was not authorized by the warrant. While these documents may have legitimately appeared to be records of the business since they were found on the fax machine of one of Dr. Srivastava's medical offices and were sent on business letterhead, nothing about them could be seen as suggesting possible violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1347. Proceeds handling is not a crime that § 1347 describes, and the warrant simply did not authorize agents to seize anything related to money on the hope that it could show evidence of health care fraud.

Under the facts of this case, the government is stuck between the proverbial rock and a hard place. On one hand, if the warrant is read true to all of its terms and limitations, the agents were only allowed to seize records of the business that tended to evidence health care fraud violations—which Dr. Srivastava's personal and financial papers clearly did not. If, on the other hand, this Court were to accept the government's suggestion that the warrant should be read broadly to allow the seizure of virtually any financial document of the Defendant (business or otherwise), the scope of the warrant would become overbroad and violate the particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment. This Court should construe a warrant in the most commonsense way, which limits the search/seizure to business records that tend to show health care fraud was committed. Accord Debbi, 244 F.Supp.2d at 237. This view is not only proper because it is the most sound reading of the warrant, but also because it is the only reading of the warrant that would allow it to be particular enough to avoid problems of overbreadth. Read in this way, the seizure of personal and financial non-business papers of Dr. Srivastava was not authorized by the terms of the warrant, and such evidence therefore must be suppressed unless it is within the scope of one of the exceptions discussed below. [11]

II. Did seizing agents grossly exceed the scope of the warrant?

[8] [9] [10] [11] Even if this Court were to find that some of the documents at issue here were within the scope of the warrant, these documents would be excluded as well 397 because the conduct of the agents who executed this warrant was so inappropriate as to warrant the exclusion of all evidence seized on March 21, 2003. As discussed above, the particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment is designed to "prevent the seizure of one thing under a warrant describing another." Marron, 275 U.S. at 196, 48 S.Ct. 74. The Fourth Amendment also extends to the execution of search warrants, "such that officers cannot 'grossly exceed the scope of the search warrant in seizing property.' " (emphasis in original) Uzenski, 434 F.3d at 706, quoting United States v. Foster, 100 F.3d 846, 849–50 (10th Cir.1996)(internal citations and quotations omitted). "As a general rule, if officers executing a search warrant exceed the scope of the warrant, only the improperly-seized evidence will be suppressed...." United States v. Squillacote, 221 F.3d 542, 556 (4th Cir.2000). However, "[i]n extreme circumstances even properly seized evidence may be excluded when the officers executing the warrant exhibit a flagrant disregard for its terms." Id., citing United States v. Ruhe, 191 F.3d 376, 383 (4th Cir.1999) (internal quotation marks omitted). "When law enforcement officers grossly exceed the scope of a search warrant in seizing property, the particularity requirement is undermined and a valid warrant is transformed into a general warrant thereby requiring suppression of all evidence seized under that warrant." United States v. Medlin, 842 F.2d 1194, 1198–99 (10th Cir.1988)(emphasis added); see also Uzenski, 434 F.3d at 706 ("Blanket suppression is ... appropriate where the warrant application merely serves as a general subterfuge masking the officers' lack of probable cause for a general search ... or where the officers 'flagrantly disregard[ ]' the terms of the warrant.")(emphasis added).

SA Marrero clearly testified at the suppression hearing that he did not consider himself to be bound by the language of the warrant specifying that agents were to seize only evidence which tended to show violations of § 1347 and was a record of Dr. Srivastava's business. When questioned about his view of the warrant, and why he did not consider himself bound by the substantive introductory language that clearly circumscribed the legal scope of the agents' search, SA Marrero provided astonishing testimony in which he indicated that he inserted this boilerplate language merely as a "go by," and that he did not consider it to limit his actions in any way.[12] When asked if it was true that he "didn't give much thought to what this meant" and whether he "just thought it was something some boilerplate that ought to be" in the warrant, SA Marrero agreed "for the most part," stating only that he "knew it was used before so it was appropriate language." Marrero Tr. 39:11–19.

Throughout his testimony, SA Marrero was unequivocal in his belief that he did not consider himself to be limited to seizing business items only, or records that tended to show evidence of violations of the health care fraud statute. In fact, SA Marrero indicated that he intended to seize personal financial records and "didn't intend to limit the financial records to business records." Marrero Tr. 42:1–2. Responding to cross examination inquiring about whether he thought the limiting language of the warrant had any meaning, SA 398 Marrero stated "being here I didn't mean to limit the items to just items relating to the business. Otherwise I would not have included the items in paragraph five that's clearly not related to the business."[13] Marrero Tr. 34:18–21. At the suppression hearing, SA Marrero even went so far as to suggest that the warrant language limiting the search to business records that showed health care fraud was "just an expression," and that "after reading [the warrant] over and over again [he] [still] d[id]n't believe after reading it it limits it to items related to the business." Id. 35:7–10. It is clear that SA Marrero was unequivocal in his belief that the limiting 399 words of the warrant were meaningless to him and that he "did not intend to limit [the search or the warrant] to just business records." Id. 36:1–3.

For SA Marrero, the "go by" may have only existed for consistency's sake or as a mere formality, but for the judge who issued the warrants and for this Court, this language is certainly not meaningless. As discussed above, the subject matter limitation of evidence related to health care fraud and the limitation that financial papers seized be related somehow to the medical practice of Dr. Srivastava were limitations necessary to make the warrant comport with the particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment. Nevertheless, SA Marrero approached, and counseled other agents to approach, the search in a way that authorized the seizure of virtually any document of Dr. Srivastava. Simply stated, his view was "whatever financial records if it has [Dr. Srivastava's] name on it ... the judge gave us the authority to seize financial records [and] we could take it." Marrero Tr. 44:2–4.[14]

SA Marrero's view that he had limitless power to seize virtually anything from Dr. Srivastava's home and business is, at best, troublesome.[15] SA Marrero's expansive view of the warrants and his related approach to the searches, which he imparted to all agents who participated, created a situation where executing agents grossly exceeded the scope of the search warrants. [16] This Court is mindful that it is a 400 rare situation indeed where agents are found to be so excessive in their execution of a search warrant that blanket suppression is warranted, but in light of SA Marrero's alarming testimony, the undersigned finds inexorable the conclusion that this rare remedy is appropriate in this case. Accord United States v. Robinson, 275 F.3d 371, 382 (4th Cir.2001)(blanket suppression appropriate when "searching officers may be said to have flagrantly disregarded the terms of a warrant [by] engag[ing] in 'indiscriminate fishing' for evidence"). This is not a case where "some seized items were not identified in the warrant," or where "agents exceeded the limits of their authority under the warrant based on practicality considerations or mistake." Uzenski, 434 F.3d at 707 (citing Robinson, 275 F.3d at 382 (finding no flagrant disregard where most items seized that were outside scope of warrant were found within items of greater evidentiary value—e.g., a grocery list found within an address book authorized under the warrant)); United States v. Chen, 979 F.2d 714, 718 (9th Cir.1992)(finding no flagrant disregard where agents installed additional surveillance camera based on their mistaken belief that the warrant permitted an extra camera and practicality concerns that the first camera could not capture the entire area).

Authority cited by the government itself supports this proposition. In United States v. Rettig, 589 F.2d 418, 421 (9th Cir.1978), a search warrant authorized the seizure of marijuana and related paraphernalia, as well as documentary evidence containing "indicia of the identity of the residents" of the house to be searched. In executing the warrant, officers seized more than 2,000 documents, including "numerous United States government publications, blank applications for various credit cards, bank brochures, medical and dental records, drug store receipts for a period extending over two years prior to the search, photograph slides, undeveloped film, extensive financial records, credit cards and travel documents." Id. at 421. Observing that "[a]n examination of the books, papers and personal possessions in a suspect's residence is an especially sensitive matter," the court concluded that "the record establishes that the agents did not confine their search in good faith to the objects of the warrant, and that while purporting to execute it, they substantially exceeded any reasonable interpretations of its provisions." Id. at 422–23. So holding, the Rettig court concluded that all evidence seized during the search must be suppressed. Id. at 423. See also Foster, 100 F.3d. at 850; Medlin, 842 F.2d at 1198 (finding flagrant disregard and granting blanket suppression where officers seized 667 items not specified by the warrant).

Unlike many other cases, this Court believes that the facts here provide "probative indicia of flagrant disregard or bad faith," and therefore finds that the agents' seizure of the many items outside the warrant transformed what should have been a particularized search into a general, unrestricted fishing expedition. Uzenski, 434 F.3d at 708. The "rule of excluding all evidence seized in a general search is designed to combat the very mind set displayed by [SA Marrero]. The belief that a search warrant gives an officer free rein to search and seize cannot be tolerated." United States v. Larson, 1995 WL 716786, at *7 (D.Kan. Nov.16, 1995). Condoning SA Marrero's conduct would be "to invite a government official to use a seemingly precise and legal warrant only as a ticket to get into a man's home, and, once inside, to launch forth upon unconfined searches and indiscriminate seizures as if armed with all the unbridled and illegal power of a general warrant." Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 572, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 22 L.Ed.2d 542 (1969)(Stewart, J. concurring). Such an unconfined search and indiscriminate 401 seizure is precisely what happened here. Because this Court concludes that SA Marrero approached the searches of Dr. Srivastava's home and offices in a way that flagrantly exceeded the specific limitations of the warrants, and that the agents grossly exceeded the scope of the warrants in their execution, [17] all evidence seized in the March 21, 2003, searches must be suppressed, unless saved by an applicable exception to the exclusionary rule.

III. Can the illegally seized documents nevertheless be admitted under any exception to the exclusionary rule?

If the evidence taken from Dr. Srivastava's home was not in fact properly seized—either because it was not within the scope of the warrant, or because the searches as a whole were so grossly overbroad as to make all documents seized inadmissible-all fruits derived therefrom must be suppressed. Wong Sun v. United States, 371 U.S. 471, 485–86, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441 (1963). However, in some cases evidence derived from an illegal search may avoid exclusion if it is sufficiently attenuated to dissipate the taint of the initial violation. United States v. Ceccolini, 435 U.S. 268, 274–75, 98 S.Ct. 1054, 55 L.Ed.2d 268 (1978)(declining to adopt a "per se" or "but for" rule making inadmissible any evidence that came to light through a chain of causation beginning with a constitutional violation). As the Supreme Court recently observed in Hudson v. Michigan,

> The exclusionary rule generates "substantial social costs," United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 907, 104 S.Ct. 3405, 82 L.Ed.2d 677 (1984), which sometimes include setting the guilty free and the dangerous at large. We have therefore been "cautio[us] against expanding" it, Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 166, 107 S.Ct. 515, 93 L.Ed.2d 473 (1986), and "have repeatedly emphasized that the rule's 'costly toll' upon truth-seeking and law enforcement objectives presents a high obstacle for those urging [its] application," Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation and Parole v. Scott, 524 U.S. 357, 364–365, 118 S.Ct. 2014, 141 L.Ed.2d 344 (1998) (citation omitted). We have rejected "[i]ndiscriminate application" of the rule, Leon, supra, at 908, 468 U.S. 897, 104 S.Ct. 3405, 82 L.Ed.2d 677, and have held it to be applicable only "where its remedial objectives are thought most efficaciously served," United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 348, 94 S.Ct. 613, 38 L.Ed.2d 561 (1974)-that is, "where its deterrence benefits outweigh its 'substantial social costs,' " Scott, supra, at 363, 524 U.S. 357, 118 S.Ct. 2014, 141 L.Ed.2d 344 (quoting Leon, supra, at 907, 468 U.S. 897, 104 S.Ct. 3405, 82 L.Ed.2d 677).

547 U.S. 586, 126 S.Ct. 2159, 2163, 165 L.Ed.2d 56 (2006). In this case, the government contends that even if the Court finds that agents exceeded the scope of the warrant, such evidence could still be admissible under either the "independent source" or "inevitable discovery" doctrines. Each of these two doctrines will be discussed in turn.

A. Inevitable discovery

[12] [13] [14] Under the inevitable discovery doctrine, information obtained by unlawful 402 means is nonetheless admissible "[i]f the prosecution can establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the information ultimately or inevitably would have been discovered by lawful means." Nix v. Williams, 467 U.S. 431, 444, 104 S.Ct. 2501, 81 L.Ed.2d 377 (1984). "[T]he exception requires the district court to determine, viewing affairs as they existed at the instant before the unlawful search, what would have happened had the unlawful search never happened." United States v. Eng, 997 F.2d 987, 990 (2d Cir.1993) (citations and quotations omitted). Such a finding of "inevitable discovery involves no speculative elements but focuses on demonstrated historical facts capable of ready verification or impeachment." Nix, 467 U.S. at 444–45, 104 S.Ct. 2501.

Although the government initially asserted that the inevitable discovery exception might save the evidence at issue in this case, it conceded at oral argument that such an exception is not applicable here. This concession was wise. Although some may envision a behemoth IRS computer that meticulously checks every person's 1099s against income reported on their returns (1040s), this is simply not the case, as the government now concedes.[18] SA Louden of the IRS testified at the evidentiary hearing that to expect the IRS to automatically notice even extremely large discrepancies would be "giving the IRS too much credit as far as what their capabilities are. No offense on the civil side but, I mean, it's—the program is not perfect. The database is not perfect." Louden Tr. 41:18–21.[19] SA Louden later acknowledged that at the time that she began looking into Dr. Srivastava's affairs, there was a lot of discussion in the IRS about the fact that the audit rate was so low, a fact attributable in part to the fact that "[t]he IRS was short staffed." Louden Tr. 45:7–15.

In light of this, the government cannot point to any historical and demonstrable facts that justify admitting the documents gathered in the IRS investigation pursuant to the inevitable discovery exception. The government does not, and indeed cannot, make the argument that there was any (much less a sufficiently developed) tax evasion investigation in existence prior to the search of Dr. Srivastava's home and office, and that this investigation would have inevitably gleaned the evidence that the government now seeks to offer against him. This is not, therefore, a situation where "the fact making discovery inevitable ... arise[s] from circumstances other than those disclosed by the illegal search itself." United States v. Thomas, 955 F.2d 207, 211 (4th Cir.1992).

Furthermore, it cannot be credibly claimed that the improper seizure of Dr. Srivastava's personal and financial documents "played no real part" in the subsequent IRS investigation and discovery of evidence supporting criminal tax evasion charges. See 403 United States v. Whitehorn, 813 F.2d 646, 649 n. 4

(4th Cir.1987), cert. denied 487 U.S. 1234, 108 S.Ct. 2898, 101 L.Ed.2d 931 ("the premise of the inevitable discovery doctrine is that the illegal search played no real part in discovery of incriminating evidence. Only then, if it can be shown that the taint did not extend to the [subsequent investigation] would the product of the [subsequent investigation] be admissible.") This key limitation, which prevents the government from profiting from its own wrongdoing, is noticeably absent here. The government does not point to any facts supporting the contention that absent the documents seized from Dr. Srivastava's home and business, the IRS would have inevitably investigated him and uncovered all of the evidence at issue. The mere fact that the IRS might have audited Dr. Srivastava at some point in the future is insufficient, as the inevitable discovery doctrine requires proof that the evidence would have, not merely could have, been discovered.[20] Morris, 684 F.Supp. at 416; see also United States v. Ford, 184 F.3d 566, 578 (6th Cir.1999)(rejecting inevitable discovery exception when testimony showed that IRS was not actively investigating defendant's tax records or was otherwise "hot on the trail of the disputed evidence"); Thomas, 955 F.2d at 211 (finding inevitable discovery doctrine did not permit admission of evidence seized after surveillance had been set up following illegal entry into defendant's hotel room; "the bank money found in the illegal search changed the whole nature of the investigation that followed.").

B. Independent Source

[15] [16] The independent source doctrine provides another exception to the exclusionary rule. The Supreme Court has held that merely because evidence is unlawfully acquired, "this does not mean that the facts thus attained become sacred and inaccessible. If knowledge of them is gained from an independent source, they may be proved like any others...." Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States, 251 U.S. 385, 392, 40 S.Ct. 182, 64 L.Ed. 319 (1920). The independent source doctrine rests "upon the policy that, while the government should not profit from its illegal activity, neither should it be placed in a worse position than it would otherwise have occupied." Murray v. United States, 487 U.S. 533, 542, 108 S.Ct. 2529, 101 L.Ed.2d 472 (1988). As the Supreme Court observed in Nix,

> [T]he interest of society in deterring unlawful police conduct and the public interest in having juries receive all probative evidence of a crime are properly balanced by putting the police in the same, not a worse, position than they would have been in if no police error or misconduct had occurred.... When the challenged evidence has an independent source, exclusion of such evidence would put the police in a worse position than they would have been in absent any error or violation.

467 U.S. at 443, 104 S.Ct. 2501. This doctrine saves from exclusion evidence that has been discovered by means "wholly independent of any constitutional violation." Id. Put another way, where agents engage in investigative activity that is later determined to be illegal, evidence is still admissible if discovered through a source independent of the illegality. See Murray, 487 U.S. at 537, 108 S.Ct. 2529.

[17] [18] [19] [20] To evaluate whether the independent source exception applies, the Court must determine "whether, granting establishment of the primary illegality, the 404 evidence to which the instant objection is made has been come at by exploitation of that illegality or instead by means sufficiently distinguishable to be purged of the primary taint."[21] Wong Sun, 371 U.S. at 488, 83 S.Ct. 407. Relevant factors include (1) the time between any illegal action and the later acquisition of evidence, (2) intervening circumstances and (3) the purpose and flagrancy of the official misconduct. Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590, 603–04, 95 S.Ct. 2254, 45 L.Ed.2d 416 (1975); United States v. Seidman, 156 F.3d 542, 548 (4th Cir.1998). Courts must "careful[ly] sift[ ] [through] the unique facts and circumstances" of each case to make a finding with respect to whether the alleged "independent" source is sufficiently attenuated. Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 233, 93 S.Ct. 2041, 36 L.Ed.2d 854, (1973). The ultimate burden of proving admission of tainted evidence rests on the government. Seidman, 156 F.3d at 548 (citing Schneckloth, 412 U.S. at 238, 93 S.Ct. 2041).

1. The development of the allegedly "independent" IRS investigation

[21] As discussed above, agents executing the search of Dr. Srivastava's Greenbelt office came upon faxes confirming the transfer of funds to an account at the Bank of India. Elton Malone, the search warrant team leader at the Greenbelt site, called SA Marrero on his cell phone while Marrero was conducting the search at Dr. Srivastava's Oxon Hill office and informed him that one of the agents located faxes showing transactions overseas involving foreign bank accounts. Marrero Tr. 9:17–22. Agent Malone indicated that the transactions appeared to involve a substantial amount of money, and asked SA Marrero if he was aware of this. SA Marrero informed him that he was not, but would inform the Assistant United States Attorney handling Dr. Srivastava's case; he did so the same day.

On April 23, 2003, the United States Attorneys' Office related this information to SSA Bradley Whites, the IRS agent in charge of the agency's Wheaton, Maryland office. Specifically, the United States Attorneys' Office informed SSA Whites that there was some evidence of significant money going overseas and that it did not appear that the appropriate box on Dr. Srivastava's Schedule B had been checked. Louden Tr. 2:21–3:1. SSA Whites met with SA Louden, related this information, provided her with SA Marrero's name and phone number, and asked her to follow up with Marrero. Louden Tr. 4:21–22. This same day, SA Louden spoke with SA Marrero regarding the faxes showing the transfer of money to the State Bank of India, and later that same day SA Marrero faxed SA Louden these papers. After receiving this information, SA Louden requested information on Dr. Srivastava using the IRS' Integrated Data Retrieval System (“IDRS”), a database that allows the agency to view online tax return information. Louden Tr. 6:13–17. SA Louden also testified that she looked into the treasury enforcement communication system to verify if Dr. Srivastava had disclosed any foreign bank accounts, and observed that he had not. Louden Tr. 8:1–8.

405 SA Louden received Dr. Srivastava's IDRS information on April 25, and certain information on the IDRS summary sheet caught her eye. SA Louden testified that the summary sheet on the IDRS printout normally displays how many dollars in interest income the taxpayer earned, but in this case, the section of the report that displayed income from 1099B activity (stock and bond activity), displayed only stars (“ * * * * * ”) and no numerical data. After consulting with someone more familiar with the IDRS system, SA Louden learned that the stars represented an extremely large number that was too big to print on the summary form. Louden Tr. 9:15–24. To receive further information, on April 25, 2003, SA Louden requested a second round of IDRS so that she could examine the detailed information from Dr. Srivastava's 1099 B forms (which show capital gains). SA Louden testified that she received the 1099 B information relating to the capital gains on June 12, 2003. Louden Tr. 11:25. On July 10, 2003, SA Louden began to do a comparison with the Dr. Srivastava's 1099Bs and his reported tax returns.

On May 19, 2003, the United States Attorneys' Office formally invited the IRS to join the existing grand jury investigation into Dr. Srivastava. Once the tax and health care fraud investigations were joined, SA Louden requested (through the United States Attorneys' Office) that the grand jury issue several subpoenas to banks with whom Dr. Srivastava did business; these were issued on June 2, 2003. She testified that in determining what subpoenas to request, “generally the schedule B is a good place” because it gives accounts; SA Louden also indicated that “in this particular case [she] believe[d] that Jason [Marrero] had faxed [her] over some bank accounts that he had identified from the search warrant evidence.” [22] Louden Tr. 14:10–19.

Three days after these subpoenas were issued, SA Louden traveled on June 5, 2003, with IRS SA Grytzer to meet SA Marrero at the Rockville office of HHS. SA Louden testified that during that meeting, the agents examined evidence that Marrero and his team had recovered from the search of Dr. Srivastava's home and businesses. Specifically, she indicated that she and the other agents “went into a 406 room, and then these boxes were pulled, and [they] basically just looked through the boxes to see kind of what he had and make heads or tails of it.” [23] Louden Tr. 25:1–4. During her review of the documents in SA Marrero's possession, SA Louden examined a fax relating to Dr. Srivastava's Bentley Lawrence accounts. SA Louden testified that this 12 page fax related to the 1998 tax year and showed account transactions and short term capital gains and losses. Louden Tr. 26:12–16. SA Louden further testified that she also reviewed certain spreadsheets in SA Marrero's possession concerning Dr. Srivastava, which contained a record of Dr. Srivastava's financial transactions and “showed few capitol [sic] losses but overall capitol [sic] gains.” Louden Tr. 27:10–15.

Upon finding these documents, SA Louden testified that her "original thoughts were, I have to validate they're accurate so I had to go through each transaction and make sure it was a legitimate transaction .... using the statements." Louden Tr. 27: 25–28:6. Comparing these documents and spreadsheets against Dr. Srivastava's tax returns, SA Louden found what appeared to be over $40 million in unreported capital gain income. Louden Tr. 28:10–11. As her investigation continued, SA Louden met with Dr. Srivastava's CPA and stockbroker to further her tax investigation. SA Louden then spent several months doing capital gains calculations to recalculate the true gains and losses realized by Dr. Srivastava. Louden Tr. 32:24–33:5. Her efforts culminated in the present indictment alleging income tax evasion and the filing of a false income tax return.

2. Application of the independent source doctrine

Considering the factual development of the IRS investigation, the government contends that this Court need not exclude the financial records seized from Dr. Srivastava's home and business. In addressing the factors set forth in Brown, the government asserts that while the IRS investigation was close in time to the execution of the search warrant, it was completely separate and proper. The government explains that:

> days, weeks and months passed between the execution of the warrants and the acquisition of all of the IRS's documentary evidence. There were numerous intervening circumstances, particularly SA Louden's lawful use of IRS investigative resources and grand jury subpoenas. Finally, defendant does not even allege that SA Louden's investigation—the investigation that led to the indictment—involved any official misconduct, let alone intentional or flagrant misconduct. Accordingly, copies of seized documents that were obtained from independent sources during the subsequent IRS investigation should not be suppressed.

As such, the government asserts that notwithstanding any constitutional violations committed in the execution of the warrant, the fruits of the IRS investigation should not be excluded. See United States v. Watson, 950 F.2d 505, 508 (8th Cir.1991)("where a law enforcement officer merely recommends investigation of a particular individual based on suspicions arising serendipitously from an illegal search, the causal connection is sufficiently attenuated so as to purse the later investigation of any taint from the original illegality.").

Dr. Srivastava, on the other hand, suggests that in order to be truly independent of evidence seized during an illegal search, there must be no causal connection between 407 the second source of the contested material and the illegal search. See Segura v. United States, 468 U.S. 796, 815, 104 S.Ct. 3380, 82 L.Ed.2d 599 (1984)(holding that the independent source exception applied because information possessed by the agents before they illegally entered and searched an apartment constituted an independent source for the discovery and seizure of the evidence later challenged). In this case, Dr. Srivastava asserts that the IRS had no knowledge, much less independent knowledge, of Dr. Srivastava's personal financial situation before the HHS agents executed their searches and provided certain items to the IRS. Therefore, he maintains that the tax investigation was not truly "independent."

As is often the case, the truth lies somewhere between these two interpretations. Although the independent source rule can save from suppression evidence that would not have been uncovered "but for" an illegal search (evidence that therefore has some causal connection), the doctrine is not as broad as the government asserts. As this Court, Judge Murray presiding, observed in United States v. Morris, > [w]here courts have applied the independent source doctrine to admit evidence arguably tainted by unlawful police conduct, there has been a showing that the evidence was in fact obtained through an independent source and not through exploitation of the unconstitutional behavior.

684 F.Supp. 412, 416 (D.Md.1988)(emphasis added). This comports with the Supreme Court's view of the independent source doctrine. See e.g., Murray, 487 U.S. at 542, 108 S.Ct. 2529 (holding that evidence seized pursuant to a subsequently issued warrant, although initially discovered during an illegal search, is admissible so long as "the search pursuant to the warrant was in fact a genuinely independent source of the information and tangible evidence at issue").

An examination of cases where evidence has been admitted under the independent source doctrine illustrates the critical point that, to be admissible under this exception, the so-called independent source must retain a critical degree of separation from the tainted source. In Segura, for example, the Supreme Court held that this exception applied because no information obtained during the initial (illegal) entry into the defendant's apartment was needed or used by the agents to secure the warrant under which the disputed evidence was ultimately seized. 468 U.S. at 815, 104 S.Ct. 3380 (1984). The Court concluded that "[t]he illegal entry into the [defendants] home did not contribute in any way to discovery of the evidence ..." because it was "beyond dispute that the information possessed by the agents before they entered the apartment constituted an independent source for the discovery and seizure of evidence now challenged." Id. at 815–16, 104 S.Ct. 3380. (emphasis added). See also United States v. Williams, 400 F.3d 1023, 1025 (7th Cir.2005)(independent source doctrine applied because there was no causal link between the warrantless search of defendant's residence and decision to seek a warrant); United States v. Walton, 56 F.3d 551, 554 (4th Cir.1995)(reasoning that a lengthy prior investigation of the defendant demonstrated the necessary attenuation and independent basis of probable cause to apply the independent source doctrine); United States v. Curtis, 931 F.2d 1011, 1014 (4th Cir.1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 881, 112 S.Ct. 230, 116 L.Ed.2d 186 (1991)(denying motion to suppress because the information used to secure a search warrant was independent of any evidence found during the warrantless search); United States v. Palumbo, 742 F.2d 656, 661 (1st Cir.1984)(valid search warrant based entirely 408 on probable cause learned prior to original, putatively unlawful, entry into defendant's premises), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1114, 105 S.Ct. 799, 83 L.Ed.2d 792 (1985).

[22] These cases suggest that courts apply the independent source doctrine when untainted evidence does, in fact, provide an independent basis for the discovery of evidence. It is therefore essential that there must have been an independent basis for the discovery of challenged evidence, not merely that the information merely had an independent existence. Accord United States v. Brainard, 690 F.2d 1117, 1126 (4th Cir.1982)(list of defendant's clients and employees improperly obtained by SEC investigator admissible because information in list was independently obtained by materials subpoenaed by the grand jury prior to receipt of tainted documents from other investigation); United States v. David, 943 F.Supp. 1403, 1417 (finding agents' decision to further investigate defendant was not prompted by discovery of a firearm in the allegedly unlawful search). This view of the independent source rule protects its integrity and prevents this exception from swallowing the exclusionary rule. [24]

[23] In order to be admissible under the independent source doctrine, the connection between the original illegality and the evidence at issue must be sufficiently attenuated so as to dissipate the taint of the illegal search. See Nardone v. United States, 308 U.S. 338, 341, 60 S.Ct. 266, 84 L.Ed. 307 (1939). Here, the primary taint has not been purged because the evidence procured by SA Louden clearly "has been come at by exploitation of (the primary) illegality." Wong Sun, 371 U.S. at 488, 83 S.Ct. 407. Indeed, the primary illegality was not attenuated, but rather was repeatedly exploited. Only after she received the Bank of India faxes and analyzed those money transfers did SA Louden request the IDRS information on Dr. Srivastava and begin to delve into his tax returns. In fact, SA Marrero specifically informed SA Louden that the boxes on Dr. Srivastava's Schedules B (copies of which SA Marrero seized from his residence) were not checked to reflect his ownership of any foreign bank accounts. This sharing of information is particularly salient in tax cases:

> The unique circumstances of an income tax investigation make a decision to focus intensively of critical importance. As opposed to crimes like assault or robbery, tax evasion is hidden. There are at least hundreds of thousands of tax violators whose criminality has not been revealed. One of the chief problems for the government is to decide how it is going to utilize its limited tax investigation forces. The main hope of a tax > violator is that the Internal Revenue Service will remain unaware of his existence. Once the government begins to concentrate all its enormous resources on a citizen, the chance of its discovering that he has violated the tax laws is greatly multiplied. It is difficult to perceive how the government could receive any more valuable information than the name of a probable tax violator.

United States v. Schipani, 289 F.Supp. 43, 62–63 (E.D.N.Y.1968)(overruled on other grounds). SA Louden exploited the information provided to by SA Marrero by using it to seek IRDS information, and later recover copies of Dr. Srivastava's tax returns and other financial papers. This 409 evidence therefore cannot be considered independent.

The government cites to the Eighth Circuit case of United States v. Watson for the proposition that "where a law enforcement officer merely recommends an investigation of a particular individual based on suspicions arising serendipitously from an illegal search, the causal connection is sufficiently attenuated so as to purge the later investigation of any taint from the original illegality." 950 F.2d 505, 508 (8th Cir.1991). Another district court later recognized, however, that the Watson Court did not explicitly apply the Wong Sun standard. See Larson, 1995 WL 716786 at *8. Larson is factually similar to this case; there, officers reviewed illegally seized documents which revealed that defendant had transacted with numerous financial institutions using various aliases, and discovered the names of several financial instructions dealing with the defendant. Acting on this information, law enforcement visited the financial institutions and subpoenaed their records listing defendant and his aliases; the government later sought to admit this evidence against defendant at trial. Considering this factual development, the Larson court concluded that the evidence was not sufficiently attenuated because "the information in the illegally seized documents was exploited to obtain the financial records for which the government seeks admission." Id. at *9. The government attempted to argue that the financial records were obtained by sufficiently distinguishable means because they were secured through grand jury subpoenas. The court disagreed, noting that at least some of the documents produced to the grand jury were copies of the very documents that were illegally seized. The court concluded that "the government's choice to use the documents produced in response to the grand jury subpoena does not render perforce those documents 'obtained by means sufficiently distinguishable from the prior illegality.' "[25] Id.

Such is the case here. Although the evidence illegally seized from Dr. Srivastava's home and offices subsequently has been obtained through SA Louden's investigation and grand jury subpoenas, this is not sufficiently attenuated to justify its admission. As in Larson, SA Louden exploited the information in the illegally seized documents to obtain the financial records that the government now seeks to admit. It is only because of the exploitation of the information displayed in the Bank of India faxes and taxpayer copies of Dr. Srivastava's tax forms (which were examined by seizing agents) that SA Louden initiated her IDRS request. Furthermore, SA Louden twice admitted at the suppression hearing that she received specific bank names from SA Marrero indicating which financial institutions she should subpoena for further information. See Louden Tr. 14:10–19 (stating that to determine what subpoenas to request the U.S. Attorneys office issue, "in this particular case I believe that Jason [Marrero] had faxed me over some bank accounts that he had identified from the search warrant evidence."); Louden Tr. 16:6–15 ("Some of this information [used to determine what financial institutions to subpoena] came from Jason [Marrero]"). Finally, SA Louden also testified that once her investigation began she actually met with SA Marrero and reviewed the seized documents in HHS custody. In perusing these boxes, SA Louden uncovered a fax regarding capital gains from 1998 and several spreadsheets showing capital gain income 410 which she then utilized to compare against Dr. Srivastava's filed tax returns and uncover discrepancies.

In this case, there is not just an initial taint; instead, the taint here is continuous. In light of this initial and continual taint, the Court is nonplussed by the government's suggestion that because the IRS investigation secured copies of the documents initially seized, the documents need not be suppressed. The financial and tax documents that the government seeks to introduce at trial, even if they are later-acquired copies of the documents illegally seized during the March 20th search, are off limits because they were not obtained by means sufficiently distinguishable from the prior illegality.[26]

Although the government cited United States v. Najjar only parenthetically in its opposition to Dr. Srivastava's motion, it sought to rely primarily on this case at the suppression hearing to support the proposition that the independent source doctrine saves the documents at issue here from exclusion. 300 F.3d 466 (4th Cir.2002). In Najjar, a defendant sought suppression of evidence obtained through two warrants, arguing that much of the evidence used to secure these warrants derived from the execution of an invalid search. Officers investigating a chopshop had conducted a search that was later found to be illegal; those officers shared automobile salvage certificates found during the first illegal search with another law enforcement officer, who began an internal investigation 411 into another officer. These salvage certificates were ultimately dead ends because the investigating officer found no log records or incident reports to trace the certificates to activities of the person under investigation. The investigator then had to regroup and approached his investigation from another angle, broadening his inquiry into other illicit activities similar to those suggested by the illegally seized certificates. In light of these facts, the Najjar court rejected defendant's contention that suppression was necessary merely because "the illegally obtained evidence tended significantly to direct the evidence in question." Id. at 479.

Several critical distinctions emerge between the facts of Najjar and the facts of this case. First, in Najjar, the government did not seek to introduce the illegally seized salvage certificates, but rather sought the admission of other evidence that came to light through later independent investigation. In comparison, here the government seeks to introduce the very evidence that was illegally seized in the first instance. Second, in this case there was no impediment that caused the IRS to reach a dead end and begin a new investigative chain. In Najjar, the court explicitly found that the "investigation was not a simple matter of looking at salvage certificates and obtaining new evidence from their use, rather it was a substantial investigative effort unconnected to the seized documents themselves once [the investigating officer] encountered the impediment at the Maryland State Police barracks." Id. at 479. Here, SA Louden's investigation was "a simple matter of looking at [the Bank of India faxes] and obtaining new evidence from their use." Id. There was no impediment leading to a totally new investigative focus; rather, each piece of evidence was acquired in direct response to analysis of the previous information. All of this is directly traceable, with no attenuation, to the evidence illegally seized.

SA Louden's testimony revealed a third, fatal, factor that by itself completely removes this case from Najjar and the independent source doctrine. She testified that she based her subpoena requests both on Schedule B information she recovered from the IDRS system and on names that SA Marrero provided to her as institutions that would be of interest to her tax investigation. Additionally, nearly two months after her tax investigation commenced, she traveled to an HHS office and met with SA Marrero to review the documents that this Court now holds were illegally seized from Dr. Srivastava. SA Louden perused the documents in SA Marrero's possession, and used spreadsheets and a fax found there to help further flesh out the alleged tax fraud committed by Dr. Srivastava. Using these statements, she discovered an apparent underreporting of $40 million in capital gain income. Louden Tr. 28:6–11. SA Louden's investigation therefore not only started as the fruit of the poisonous tree, but also she returned to the proverbial tree for additional tainted fruit.

Thus, attenuation is not present here because unlike in Najjar, there was further significant contact and interaction between the supposedly "independent" investigation and the tainted source. It is one thing to say that a later investigation is sufficiently independent and attenuated when the illegally seized evidence does not directly generate any information for the "independent" source, and there is no continued contact between the "independent" source and the tainted evidence. It is quite another thing to suggest that so long as another government agency secures the same evidence as the tainted evidence, such evidence need not be excluded, even if the "independent" source continued to interact with the tainted evidence. Application 412 of the independent source doctrine and Najjar is unavailing where the illegally seized evidence is used directly and repeatedly to generate the evidence at issue, and the supposedly independent agent returns to the poisonous tree for yet more helpings of the forbidden fruit. Accord United States v. Pope, at *4 ("Because the traffic stop was fruit and thus contaminated with illegitimacy, the evidence subsequently secured as a result was thus also unlawfully acquired.").

The Court therefore concludes that the IRS investigation is too closely connected to the initial illegal seizure, and is not "so attenuated as to dissipate the taint" of the illegal seizure. Nardone, 308 U.S. at 341, 60 S.Ct. 266. Application of the Brown factors supports this conclusion. Here, as a result of the sharing of financial information seized from Defendant, SA Louden of the IRS was conducting a full blown criminal tax investigation within six weeks (factor one: time between investigations). SA Louden's investigative techniques detailed by the government cannot possibly be considered to be "intervening circumstances" because they were done in direct response to the information received from SA Marrero. Indeed, SA Louden admitted that she based her subpoena requests in part on SA Marrero's suggestions, and even met with him during her investigation to discuss the evidence and review other documents that were impermissibly seized. Investigating agents here therefore did substantially more than in the cases relied upon by the government, in that SA Marrero recommended an investigation, provided the IRS with documents to start such an investigation, provided the IRS with specific account names, and met with the IRS during the course of its investigation (factor two: intervening circumstances). Accord Larson, 1995 WL 716786 at *8 (rejecting application of Watson when information in illegally seized documents was pursued and exploited to obtain financial records that government sought to use against defendant). Although there are no allegations of official misconduct on the part of SA Louden, this absence does not make an otherwise closely-related investigation sufficiently attenuated for the purposes of this exception to the exclusionary rule (factor three: official misconduct).

Because all of the investigative steps taken by the IRS were taken, directly or indirectly, as a result of the illegal search, and because the taint of the illegal seizure was reinforced by the continued interaction between SA Marrero and SA Louden, this Court concludes that all documents generated by the IRS investigation are tainted, not independent, and must be excluded.

CONCLUSION

The exclusionary rule has exacted a mighty toll in this case. Although this Court is troubled by its determination that the motion to suppress should be granted, this conclusion was driven by precedent and compelled by the facts of this case. Although it is no doubt unsettling that Dr. Srivastava may escape criminal accountability because of the blunders of law enforcement, this is the rare and unfortunate case where such a price must be paid. As Justice Clark acknowledged, "In some cases, this will undoubtedly be the result. But ... 'there is another consideration—the imperative of judicial integrity.' The criminal goes free, if he must, but it is the law that sets him free. Nothing can destroy a government more quickly than its failure to observe its own laws, or worse its disregard of the charter of its own existence." Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 659, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081 (1961) (citation omitted). With great disappointment, and for the reasons discussed above, the Court will, by separate order, grant Dr. Srivastava's Motion to Suppress.

*413 ORDER

Upon consideration of the Plaintiff's Motion for An Evidentiary Hearing Pursuant to Franks v. Delaware and to Suppress Evidence [Paper no. 13], the opposition thereto, the arguments presented by counsel at hearings before the undersigned on March 27, 2006, and June 19, 2006, for the reasons stated on the record on March 27, 2006, and for the reasons stated in the accompanying opinion, it is this 4th day of August, 2006, by the United States District Court for the District of Maryland,

ORDERED, that Plaintiff's Motion for an Evidentiary Hearing Pursuant to Franks v. Delaware and to Suppress Evidence [Paper no. 13] is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART; and it is further

ORDERED, that Plaintiff's Motion for an Evidentiary Hearing Pursuant to Franks v. Delaware and to Suppress Evidence [Paper no. 13] is DENIED to the extent it seeks an evidentiary hearing pursuant to Franks v. Delaware; and it is further

ORDERED, that Plaintiff's Motion for an Evidentiary Hearing Pursuant to Franks v. Delaware and to Suppress Evidence [Paper no. 13] is GRANTED to the extent that it seeks the suppression of evidence; and it is further

ORDERED, that all evidence seized by government agents on March 21, 2003, pursuant to three search warrants signed by Magistrate Judge Connelly on March 20, 2003, including but not limited to

1. Spreadsheet detailing options transactions on Bentley–Lawrence ("BL") Account;

2. Spreadsheet detailing stock transactions on BL Account, labeled "Corporate;"

3. Spreadsheet detailing options transactions on Speer Leeds account;

4. Spreadsheet detailing stock transactions;

5. Schedule of realized gains and losses;

6. Form 1099 activity detail for BL account;

7. Form 1099 activity detail for BL account;

8. Form 1099 activity detail for BL account;

9. Fax from CPA requesting information to prepare tax return;

10. Tax reporting statement to support capital gains;

11. Form 1099 activity detail supporting capital gains;

12. Handwritten bank interest and payments statement;

13. Tax reporting statement to support capital gains;

14. Form 1099 activity detail to support capital gains;

15. Fax to CPA detailing BL accounts;

16. Form 1099 activity detail supporting capital gains;

17. Tax reporting statement to support capital gains;

18. Form 1099 activity detail to support capital gains;

19. Tax reporting statement to support capital gains;

20. Fax from CPA requesting items to complete tax return;

21. Handwritten list of dividends and interest from bank accounts;

22. Tax reporting statement to support capital gains;

23. Tax reporting statement to support capital gains;

24. Spreadsheet for capital gains;

414 25. Email from stock broker detailing stock activity; is hereby SUPPRESSED.

All Citations

444 F.Supp.2d 385, 98 A.F.T.R.2d 2006-5932

Footnotes

[1] Count I of the indictment alleges that Dr. Srivastava filed an individual income tax return for 1998 on which Schedule D, Capital Gains and Losses, claimed a short-term capital loss of approximately $(826,591) rather than actual short-term capital gains totaling approximately $779,397.00, and filed an income tax return misstating the amount of taxable income and tax due. Count II of the indictment alleges that Dr. Srivastava filed a tax return in 1999 on which Schedule D, Short Term Capital Gains and Losses, reflected a short-term capital loss of $(990,288.00) rather than the actual short-term capital gain of $41,408,740, and accordingly filed a false income tax return that year reflecting a much diminished taxable income and amount of tax due. Finally, Count III of the indictment alleges that Dr. Srivastava filed an individual income tax return for 2000 that omitted certain short-term capital losses.

[2] The government ultimately chose to proceed with civil enforcement regarding the health care fraud issues.

[3] As required by law, Dr. Srivastava included income from his medical practice professional corporation on his joint individual tax returns.

[4] Section 1347 provides that, "[w]hoever knowingly and willfully executes, or attempts to execute, a scheme or artifice—

(1) to defraud any health care benefit program; or

(2) to obtain, by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, any of the money or property owned by, or under the custody or control of, any health care benefit program, in connection with the delivery of or payment for health care benefits, items, or services, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both. If the violation results in serious bodily injury (as defined in section 1365 of this title), such person shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both; and if the violation results in death, such person shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned for any term of years or for life, or both." 18 U.S.C. § 1347.

5 The government lists 25 financial records it plans to introduce into evidence at trial: (1) spreadsheet detailing options transactions on Bentley–Lawrence ("BL") account; (2) spreadsheet detailing stock transactions on BL account, labeled "corporate"; (3) spreadsheet detailing options transactions on Speer Leeds account; (4) spreadsheet detailing stock transactions; (5) schedule of realized gains and losses; (6) form 1099 activity detail for BL account; (7) form 1099 activity detail for BL account; (8) form 1099 activity detail for BL account; (9) fax from CPA requesting information to prepare tax return; (10) tax reporting statement to support capital gains; (11) form 1099 activity detail supporting capital gains; (12) handwritten bank interest and payments statement; (13) tax reporting statement to support capital gains; (14) form 1099 activity detail to support capital gains; (15) fax to CPA detailing BL accounts; (16) form 1099 activity detail supporting capital gains; (17) tax reporting statement to support capital gains; (18) form 1099 activity detail to support capital gains; (19) tax reporting statement to support capital gains; (20) fax from CPA requesting items to complete tax return; (21) handwritten list of dividends and interest from bank accounts; (22) tax reporting statement to support capital gains; (23) tax reporting statement to support capital gains; (24) spreadsheet for capital gains; (25) email from stock broker detailing stock activity. See Paper No. 14 at 24.

6 "FBAR" stands for Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts Report, a document that is required to be filed with the IRS if: (1) the filer was a U.S. person, defined as a citizen, a resident or a person in and doing business in the United States; (2) the U.S. person had a financial account or accounts that exceeded $10,000 during the calendar year; (3) the financial account was in a foreign country; and (4) the U.S. person had a financial interest in the account or signatory or other authority over the foreign financial account. See IRS Form TD F 90–22.1; 31 C.F.R. 103.

7 SA Louden testified during the suppression hearing that when she spoke with SA Marrero on April 23, 2003, he indicated that when he found the remittance slips to the State Bank of India "he wasn't sure what they meant or how to even read them." Louden Tr. 5:9–10. See also Louden Tr. 47:1–4 ("I mean it was very confusing[,] the HHS agent was not familiar with what a remittance slip looked like. He wasn't even sure if this was in rupees or dollars...."); Louden Tr. 56:11–17 ("They were really unsure of even what it was ... they had never really—I got the impression they had never seen anything like this before and, you know, they were trying to let me know how do you read something like this."). This alleged confusion is somewhat belied by the memorandum prepared by Special Agent Louden for purposes of this hearing, however, as this memorandum indicates that during her April 23rd conservation with SA Marrero, he indicated that after he observed the Bank of India faxes, the Schedule Bs of Dr. Srivastava's 1999, 2000, and 2001 tax returns were consulted, and he noted that Dr. Srivastava failed to check the Schedule B to acknowledge the foreign bank accounts. This Court finds curious the fact that an individual allegedly uneducated and confused about the significance of overseas wire transfers would have the wherewithal to compare the remittance slips against tax forms to see if the taxpayer's Schedules B acknowledged the foreign bank accounts.

8 It is true that courts in some cases courts have allowed the seizure of items not specifically described or delineated in the warrant. Many of these cases involve situations where the warrant(s) authorized the search for and seizure of drugs and/or weapons, and in the course of such searches, officers seized personal papers and effects. See, e.g., United States v. Wardrick, 350 F.3d 446, 453–54 (4th Cir.2003)(search warrant authorized seizure of firearms and related items; seizure of defendant's bills and other papers); Armstrong v. State, 548 S.W.2d 334, 336 (Ct.Crim.App.Tn.1977)(warrant for drugs; seizure of checks, bank documents, personal letters); State v. McGuinn, 268 S.C. 112, 232 S.E.2d 229, 230 (1977)(warrant for marijuana and drugs only; seizure of letters and photographs). In these cases, courts upheld the seizures of the personal documents on the theory that they were relevant in establishing proof of the defendants' residence in the location where contraband was found. See, e.g., Wardrick, 350 F.3d at 453(seizure of a utility bill, refund notice, and operator's license was proper because such items "constitute[d] evidence linking Wardrick to the premises where the illegal firearms were found."); Armstrong, 548 S.W.2d at 336 ("the personal documents were relevant in establishing proof of possession of the premises and ultimately the drugs."); McGuinn, 232 S.E.2d at 230 ("Warden [v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 87 S.Ct. 1642, 18 L.Ed.2d 782 (1967)] requires that there be a nexus between the items seized and some criminal behavior. The letters and photographs helped the police initially establishing who resided at the address ... [and] ... served as evidence of actual residency, which was essential in establishing possession and control of the marijuana.").

In this case, there is no such nexus between the financial documents seized from Dr. Srivastava's home and the items described by the warrant. See Marron, 275 U.S. at 198, 48 S.Ct. 74 (seizure of ledger and bills for gas, electric, etc., held not authorized by warrant to search for intoxicating liquors and articles for their manufacture). There is no suggestion on the government's behalf that the personal documents were seized to prove possession or ownership of the premises, as was the case in the above-mentioned cases. Furthermore, the government fails to illustrate how these personal financial documents in any way relate to the objects sought in the warrant. Compare Gentry, 642 F.2d at 387 (documents describing production of illegal drug seized during search but not listed in warrant had sufficient nexus to warrant, when warrant specifically named the illegal drug as the object of the search). Lacking this nexus, the Defendant's personal financial papers must be excluded as beyond the scope of the warrant. See United States v. Jones, 31 F.3d 1304, 1314 (4th Cir.1994).

9 These items certainly had nothing to do with the facts sworn to in the affidavit and therefore should not have been seized. See id. ("[S]eized evidence arguably falling within the broad language [of the warrant] but unrelated to facts stated in the affidavit must be suppressed.").

10 Even if this Court were sympathetic to the government's assertions that Defendant's business and personal records were commingled, this only gets the government past the first qualification listed in ¶ 2 of the warrant (that the records must relate to the business). As discussed above, the government utterly fails to provide a plausible explanation for how the records seized in any way suggested that they related to or suggested evidence of health care fraud. Furthermore, initial confusion about the relevance of the documents does not justify their subsequent use against Dr. Srivastava when they are in fact outside the terms of the warrant. See United States v. Altiere, III, 2006 WL 515609 (N.D.Ohio March 1, 2006)(while initial seizure of documents not specifically delineated by the warrant may have justified initial seizure for review, the documents are not admissible against the defendant if they are beyond the scope of the warrant).

11 This Court is aware that officers may also seize articles of an incriminating character that they come across while performing a search in a given area pursuant to a valid search warrant. See Uzenski, 434 F.3d at 707. However, the government does not argue, nor can it be contended, that the personal, financial, and other documents seized from Defendant's home were of a readily incriminating nature. See Horton v. California, 496 U.S. 128, 136, 110 S.Ct. 2301, 110 L.Ed.2d 112 (1990)("It is ... an essential predicate to any valid warrantless seizure of incriminating evidence that the officer did not violate the Fourth Amendment in arriving at the place from which the evidence could be plainly viewed. There are, moreover, two additional conditions that must be satisfied to justify the warrantless seizure. First, not only must the item be in plain view; its incriminating character must also be 'immediately apparent.' "); see also United States v. Wells, 98 F.3d 808, 809–10 (4th Cir.1996).

12 Marrero testified "this introductory paragraph I used from—in many of our cases health care cases we use go byes and this introductory paragraph is a paragraph that I received or got from another attachment to—for another health care fraud search warrant. My intention when I wrote this affidavit was to get the items listed in the numbers but as far as the legalese and the wording, I just wanted to stay consistent with what the court generally got and received and reviewed for attachments and search warrants." Marrero Tr. 33:18–34:2.

13 Paragraph five of the warrant authorized the seizure of Dr. Srivastava's passports and visas. SA Marrero's testimony indicated that this is "something that [he] do[es] in pretty much all of [his] investigations" because a passport may show that "he could not have performed [a] service at P.G. hospital because he wasn't there[,] he was overseas," for example. Marrero Tr. 7:15–23. On cross examination, defense counsel probed SA Marrero's logic:

> Q: You thought that [Dr. Srivastava] wasn't billing for [heart catheterization procedures] in a correct manner?
>
> A: I thought he was billing for a service that he wasn't providing.
>
> Q: That had to do with the issue of whether he was invading or getting into both chambers of the heart as opposed to just one, right?
>
> A: That's correct.
>
> Q. But that allegation didn't have to do with him billing for wholly fictitious procedures where he was in India and there was no patient in the hospital.
>
> A: No. That allegation had nothing to do with that.
>
> Q: Right. Okay. And in fact, there was no allegation in the affidavit that had to do with him billing for people on days where he wasn't present.
>
> A: No.
>
> Q: All right. So, your indication that you wanted to get passports or visas because that might be the case was something that you just do as a matter of routine not because it was a specific concern in this case, right?
>
> A: That's correct. I do that in most of my cases.

Marrero Tr. 23:7–24:4

This paragraph of the warrants also authorized the seizure of pictures, and SA Marrero's view on how virtually limitless he saw the warrants' provisions was further borne out in cross examination regarding the authorization to seize photographs.

> Q: You told them what they should look for and what they could take.
>
> A: Correct

* * * * * *

> Q: Pictures [?]

A: That's what I said. I hope I got that right. I thought that pictures were in here. Yes. Yes, it is.

Q: Okay well pictures of what?

A: This goes back to the same thing. If there's a picture of the doctor on a cruise in the Bahamas on a certain day, that's evidence of—and then I have a bill for service in P.G. Hospital that would be evidence that he was or even a picture at another state that would be evidence that he wasn't there on that day.

A: Well, okay but attachment A doesn't say photographs of Dr. Srivastava anywhere else than being in Prince George's County it just says photographs, doesn't it?

Q: That's?

A: That's correct.

Q: Are you telling me that your oral instructions to the agents were you can seize photographs that show Dr. Srivastava in exotic locations if you can figure out where they are and if you can figure out what the date is?

A: I didn't get into that specificity but that was the purpose and intent of putting that in the attachments and the agents should be aware of that.

Marrero Tr. 29:20–31:4.

SA Marrero's attitude towards the seizure of passports, visas, and photographs of Dr. Srivastava further supports this Court's conclusion that he took an extremely broad, inappropriate view of the warrant. In fact, he admitted that with respect to these items that “it wouldn't matter to [him] whether [Dr. Srivastava's] activities were of a family nature or whether his activities were of a business nature.” Marrero Tr. 46:3–8.

14 SA Marrero admitted that he told the agents responsible for executing the three warrants that they could take any financial records, stating “I told them financial records and then I may have—I may have indicated you know tax records or the specific wording that's here, but that's it.” Marrero Tr. 32:17–19. When asked whether he informed agents that they were only to take financial records related to Dr. Srivastava's business, which may constitute evidence of violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1347, SA Marrero indicated that he did not inform the agents of this limitation. Id. at 32:25–33:10.

15 The search inventory log, Marrero Exh. 1, reveals that agents seized items including wallets, papers regarding Dr. Srivastava's summer home, uncashed checks, unopened mail, and information regarding his new house. In fact, several large boxes of personal documents voluntarily returned by SA Marrero shortly after the execution of the search were displayed to the Court by Dr. Srivastava's counsel at the suppression hearing. The returned documents included an invitation to a cultural gala, Dr. Srivastava's “CV S ExtraCare” card, his AAA card, and checks from several bank accounts. See Marrero Tr. 15:2–5.

16 This conclusion is further supported in light of volume of documents eventually returned to Dr. Srivastava. Following the execution of the search warrant, an attorney representing Dr. Srivastava contacted SA Marrero and the United States Attorneys' Office expressing his belief that agents exceeded the scope of the search warrant and seized items that were outside its scope. Beginning on March 24, 2003, SA Marrero began to return documents to Dr. Srivastava; on March 24, SA Marrero returned a wallet with three credit cards, some Indian currency, and a patient chart, and on March 26, SA Marrero returned licensing information, a CV S pharmacy card, a AAA card, and various checks. On April 3, 2003, SA Marrero returned computer hard drives to Dr. Srivastava, and on April 24, 2003, SA Marrero returned “many of the boxes and their contents.” Marrero Tr. 13:7–14:6. The chain of custody log introduced as an Exhibit at the suppression hearing reveals that “Boxes 1, 2, 3, 18, 5, 16, 7, 4, 15, 6, 10, 17 and items from other boxes” were returned. See Marrero Exh. 2. The government's own opposition concedes that “approximately 80 percent of the documents seized from [Dr. Srivastava's] home were returned to him by the investigating agents.” See Paper no. 14 at 24. It is this Court's conclusion that this large-scale return of information seized from Dr. Srivastava further bears out how SA Marrero's cavalier attitude towards the limitations of the warrant caused agents to grossly exceed its scope.

17 SA Marrero's approach taints the execution of all three search warrants. Each warrant contained the same qualifying language and detailed the same items to be seized, and each warrant was supported by a single affidavit detailing allegations of health care fraud. SA Marrero made clear throughout his testimony that he imparted his overly broad view of the warrant to the entire search team, and agreed that he shared his perceptions with the team at the preparatory meeting. See Marrero Tr. 47:5–48:5; Marrero Tr. 53:1–21; Marrero Tr. 74:16–22; see also Footnote 14, supra.

18 Moreover, capital gains from options trading is not reported to the IRS.

19 On cross examination, defense counsel probed the reality of the IRS' ability to verify the submission of all taxpayers:

Q: ... There is something call[ed][the] IDRS matching program. Do you know about that?

A: No. I don't think I know it called matching program if you explain it to me I might say, oh yes.

Q: Let me try. I've had it happen to me. If you get a 1099 from a bank for interest for $100 and it doesn't appear on your tax return, the computer will notice that and spit out a notice to you and say, you know, why isn't this on your tax return? That's the IDRS matching program. [A]re you aware of that?

A: I've never known it to work that efficiently.

Q: Exactly.

Louden Tr. 38:18–39:5.

20 Indeed, SA Louden's testimony indicated that the statute of limitations had already run for several of the tax years at issue.

21 “The exclusionary rule does not require the exclusion of evidence ‘when the causal connection between [the] illegal police conduct and the procurement of [the] evidence is “so attenuated as to dissipate the taint” of the illegal action.’ ” United States v. Liss, 103 F.3d 617, 620 (7th Cir.1997); see also United States v. Najjar, 300 F.3d 466, 477 (4th Cir.2002)(“not all evidence conceivably derived from an illegal search need be suppressed if it is somehow attenuated enough from the violation to dissipate the taint.”). In other words, under the “independent source” doctrine, suppression of physical evidence under the Fourth Amendment does not convey derivative use immunity.

22 This testimony is consistent with her explanation of where the specific account information came from for the individual subpoenas of the financial institutions. SA Louden testified “I can't exactly remember. Some of this information came from Jason [Marrero] I believe who had located some information and I believe what I—when he sent me that fax, I verified it to my Schedule B and said, oh, yes I see there is Bentley Lawrence or National—you know City Corp. And then also the actual 1099 Bs later the—the 1099 Bs actually show the account number on them as well and I can't remember if the 1099 dividends show the account number but they definitely show the bank....” Louden Tr. 16:6–15.

It bears special emphasis, and will be discussed later, that SA Louden twice admitted that some of the information she received regarding what subpoenas to issue was given to her by SA Marrero. While SA Louden indicated that she also relied on Dr. Srivastava's Schedules B of his tax returns to uncover the names of financial institutions she wished to subpoena, this Court notes that some of the financial institutions subpoenaed on June 2, 2003, do not appear to be listed in Dr. Srivastava's Schedules B. Compare Hearing Exhs. Louden 1 and Louden 3 (Dr. Srivastava's 1998 and 1999 Federal Income Tax Returns) with Hearing Exhs. Louden 5–Louden 16 (subpoenas for various financial institutions). This strongly suggests to this Court that SA Marrero did in fact provide additional information that would not have been otherwise known to SA Louden, specifically, the names of financial institutions with which Dr. Srivastava did business, and that this information helped to guide SA Louden's investigation. If this is true, it only further supports this Court's conclusion that the independent source exception does not apply in this case.

23 SA Marrero had previously returned many documents taken during the searches. See Footnote 16, supra.

24 Treatises recognize that “the independent source limitation operates even where there is a de facto causal connection between the proffered evidence and the initial illegality to render the proffered evidence admissible where it is also the product of a concurrent investigative process in no way dependent upon information learned through lawless official acts.” 43 A.L.R.3d 485. (emphasis added)

25 The Larson court ultimately concluded that there was an independent source for the documents, however, because the bank manager conducted his own investigation into defendant and his accounts.

26 It is also problematic for the government's position that where courts have applied the independent source doctrine to admit evidence arguably tainted by unlawful police conduct, they “have emphasized the necessity of showing that the evidence would have been uncovered independently; not merely that it could have been.” Morris, 684 F.Supp. at 416 (evidence supporting conviction would not have been independently or inevitably discovered and should have been suppressed)(emphasis added); see also Wardrick, 350 F.3d. at 451 (applying independent source doctrine where officer “had an earlier, independent source for th[e] information”). Here, Defendant asserts that there is no evidence that the IRS had, could have, or would have initiated a criminal tax investigation of Dr. Srivastava absent information and documents passed on by SA Marrero, and that therefore this exception should not apply. As was the case in Morris, nothing supports a finding that the IRS would have commenced the investigation before it received the financial information that was illegally-obtained. 684 F.Supp. at 415 (no evidence that officers intended to or actually would have searched vehicle where contraband was found before they discovered a pistol in defendant's purse in an unconstitutional search).

In United States v. Guarino, 610 F.Supp. 371 (D.R.I.1984), the government, pursuant to a warrant issued for materials that violated the obscenity laws, seized “all printed material from the [defendant's] offices including records of various companies run by the Defendant ... pension files, [and] personal papers....” Id. at 375. Records of the defendant's various businesses were turned over to the IRS, which, unlike the instant case, had been investigating the defendant prior to the illegal search. Notwithstanding the previously initiated IRS investigation, the Guarino court rejected the government's “general assertion that the ‘natural progression’ of the IRS investigation would have uncovered those business documents” seized in the illegal search because “[t]he record fails to indicate ... that the Government had sufficient knowledge, prior to the search, regarding the various companies apparently controlled by the defendant, to be able to subpoena those particular documents.” Id. at 379–80. Like Guarino, here the subsequently obtained documents were summonsed only after the illegal search; the government's own chronology demonstrates that SA Louden's ‘standard investigative techniques' were dormant until awakened by impermissibly seized evidence. In fact, this case is even more clear cut than Guarino, as in that case the IRS already had begun an investigation into the defendant. As previously discussed, here, no such investigation existed, making the independent source exception even more illusory.

End of Document

2017 WL 4021551
United States District Court, N.D. Indiana, Fort Wayne Division.

James A. SIMON, et al., Plaintiffs,
v.
Special Agent Paul MUSCHELL, et al., Defendants.
James A. Simon, et al., Plaintiffs,
v.
United States of America, Defendant.

CIVIL NO. 1:09cv301 and 1:10cv58
|
Signed 09/13/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Ashley N. Hand, Craig R. Patterson, Beckman Lawson LLP, Fort Wayne, IN, for Plaintiffs.

Sabrina Underwood, US Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Defendants.

OPINION AND ORDER

William C. Lee, Judge

1 This matter is before the court on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, filed by defendants Special Agent Paul Muschell ("SA Muschell"), Special Agent in Charge Alvin Patton ("SAC Patton"), and Special Agent Linda Porter ("SA Porter")(collectively "Special Agents"), on December 17, 2016. The plaintiffs, James A. Simon ("Simon"), individually and as parent and guardian of R.S., and the Estate of Denise J. Simon, filed their response on January 20, 2017. The Special Agents filed their reply on February 6, 2017. For the following reasons, the motion will be granted.

The procedural history of this case is as follows. On November 6, 2007, IRS employees conducted a search, pursuant to a federal search warrant, of the residence belonging to James and Denise Simon, who were suspected of possible violations of the Internal Revenue Code. Complaint at ¶¶ 13, 18, 30, James A. Simon v. Special Agent Paul Muschell, No. 1:09-CV-301 ("Dkt. No. 1") (N.D. Ind. Oct. 29, 2009), Dkt No. 1 ("Complaint"). Simon filed two civil actions challenging the IRS search. The first civil action sought damages from the Special Agents, unnamed IRS employees, and others for alleged violations of the Simons' Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights during the search. Id. at ¶¶ 10, 46-72. The second civil action alleged that the United States was responsible for the officers' alleged negligence during the IRS's tax investigation of the Simons under the Federal Tort Claims Act ("FTCA"). Complaint, James A. Simon v. United States, No. 1:10-CV-058-RL (N.D. Ind. Feb. 19, 2010), FTCA Dkt No 1 ("FTCA Complaint").

In April 2010, while the two civil actions were pending, Simon was indicted by a federal grand jury on twenty-three criminal counts related to the IRS investigation. Indictment at pp. 2-17, United States v. Simon, No. 3:10-CR-56(01) RM (N.D. Ind. April 15, 2010), CR Dkt No. 1 (hereinafter "Indictment"). This Court consolidated the civil actions and stayed the civil proceedings pending resolution of the ongoing criminal case. Opinion and Order at pp. 2, 14, Dkt No 40. On November 9, 2010, after a six-day jury trial, Simon was convicted by a jury of nineteen of the twenty-three felony counts, including filing false federal income tax returns, failing to file foreign bank account and financial account reports, mail fraud, and fraud involving federal financial aid. His conviction was affirmed by the Seventh Circuit on August 15, 2013. Simon has served his sentence.

Simon had filed a Motion to Vacate on November 13, 2014, which was denied on July 5, 2016. Simon appealed the denial of his motion to vacate his criminal sentence on October 24, 2016. The Seventh Circuit denied Simon's request for certificate of appealability on June 7, 2017, stating that there was no showing of denial of constitutional rights.

This Court lifted its stay of the consolidated civil proceedings for the limited purpose of briefing and disposition of the United States' motion to dismiss the FTCA actions. On February 24, 2015, this Court dismissed the FTCA Complaint on the ground that there was no waiver of sovereign immunity under the FTCA where Plaintiffs' claims arose out of the assessment or collection of taxes. See 28 U.S.C. § 2680(c). Opinion and Order at pg.19, Dkt No 51.

2 This Court next lifted the stay of the civil proceedings for the limited purpose of allowing the individually-named Special Agents to file a motion for judgment on the pleadings raising a purely legal issue, the Judgment Bar of 28 U.S.C. § 2676. Opinion and Order, pg. 3 Dkt No. 57. After the Special Agents' motion had been briefed, but before a decision was rendered, this Court granted a stay pending a ruling in Simmons v. Himmelreich. The Supreme Court held on June 6, 2016, that the dismissal of an FTCA claim against the United States does not bar a subsequent action by the claimant against the same federal employees whose acts gave rise to the FTCA claim. Simmons v. Himmelreich, ––– U.S. ––––, 136 S.Ct. 1843, 195 L.Ed.2d 106 (2016). Accordingly, the Special Agents withdrew their motion for judgment on the pleadings (Dkt 70, November 29, 2016).

As the stay of proceedings entered on December 15, 2015 expired with the Supreme Court's final ruling in Himmelreich, the defendants, on December 17, 2016, filed a new Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, which is presently before this Court. The defendants claim that the Plaintiffs fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and that the action is barred by the qualified immunity of the defendants.[1] Finally the Defendants claim that all claims against SAC Patton should be dismissed on the basis that he may not be held liable for damages based solely on the actions of individuals he supervised. Defendants request the dismissal of all of the plaintiffs' claims against defendants Muschell, Patton and Porter.

Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure permits a party to move for judgment on the pleadings on a ground set forth in Rule 12(b) after the complaint and answer have been filed. Northern Indiana Gun & Outdoor Shows v. South Bend, 163 F.3d 449, 452 (7th Cir. 1998). In reviewing a motion made pursuant to Rule 12(c) on the ground of failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, the Court applies the same standard that it applies when reviewing a motion to dismiss made pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Pisciotta v. Old Nat. Bancorp, 499 F.3d 629, 633 (7th Cir. 2007). Consequently, "[a] court will grant a Rule 12(c) motion only when it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff cannot prove any facts to support a claim for relief and the moving party demonstrates that there are no material issues of fact to be resolved." Brunt v. Serv. Employees Int'l Union, 284 F.3d 715, 718–19 (7th Cir. 2002).

In reviewing a 12(c) motion, the Court may consider the contents of the pleadings, including any attached exhibits. Northern Indiana Gun & Outdoor Shows, 163 F.3d at 452. The Court may also take judicial notice of matters of public record, including public court documents, without converting a motion for judgment on the pleadings into a motion for summary judgment. Harrison v. Deere & Co., 533 Fed.Appx. 644, 647 n.3 (7th Cir. 2013); Hallie v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. 2:12-cv-235, 2013 WL 1835708, *1-2 (N.D. Ind. May 1, 2013); Winters v. Illinois State Bd. of Elections, 197 F.Supp.2d 1110, 1113 (N.D. Ill. 2001). "When deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the court must ... decide whether it is plausible that plaintiffs have a valid claim for relief." Diaz-Bernal v. Myers, 758 F.Supp.2d 106, 115-16 (D. Conn. 2010) (citing Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937 (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007)) (" '[The] factual allegations [in the complaint] must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level[.]' ")

3 Although well-pled allegations are assumed true for purposes of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, "allegations [that] are conclusory ... [are] not entitled to be assumed true." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 681, 129 S.Ct. 1937. "The plausibility standard ... obligates the plaintiff to 'provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief' through more than 'labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action.' " Diaz-Bernal, 758 F.Supp.2d at 116 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 127 S.Ct. 1955); see Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679, 129 S.Ct. 1937 ("While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations.").

The basic background facts in this case are supported by the record and are not disputed. Since at least January 2007, the Simons were under investigation by the IRS for possible violations of the Internal Revenue Code. Complaint at ¶ 13; United States v. Simon, 727 F.3d 682, 683-84 (7th Cir. 2013). On November 2, 2007, IRS SA Muschell submitted an Application and Affidavit for Search Warrant[2]. Complaint at ¶¶ 16, 18; Exhibit B to the Motion to Dismiss the FTCA Complaint, Dkt No 46-2, Application and Affidavit for Search Warrant, United States of America v. Search of Residence, No. 1:07-MJ-00048-RBC (N.D. Ind. Nov. 2, 2007), ECF No. 1 (hereinafter "Affidavit"). In the supporting Affidavit, SA Muschell stated that probable cause existed to believe that the Simon residence contained evidence of the following criminal offenses: conspiracy to commit offenses or defraud the United States by violating federal tax laws; willful tax evasion; willful failure to file a federal income tax return; and fraud and false statements. Affidavit, at pp. 17-29. As Plaintiffs admit in the Complaint, SA Muschell "listed in the Affidavit, a number of what he refers to as tax offender characteristics, such as sham transactions; assigned income; shell corporations; concealing income; artificial business losses; and artificial investments...." Complaint, at ¶ 20.15. In fact, SA Muschell stated that it was his belief that "James A. and Denise J. Simon have devised a scheme ... for the purpose of evading and defeating federal income taxes legally owed by James A. and Denise J. Simon." Affidavit, at p. 17.

On November 2, 2007, United States District Judge Theresa L. Springmann found that SA Muschell's affidavit established probable cause, and issued a warrant authorizing the IRS to search the Simon residence. Complaint at ¶ 18; Search Warrant, United States of America v. Search of Residence, No. 1:07-MJ-00048-RBC (N.D. Ind. Nov. 7, 2007), ECF No. 5. On November 6, 2007, IRS personnel, including SAs Muschell and Porter, executed a search of the Simon residence. Complaint at ¶ 30; see also Opinion and Order at pp. 1-3, CR Dkt No 74. SAC Patton was not present during the search at the Simon residence. Answer, ¶ 12, Dkt No 21(office in Chicago); Complaint, passim, Dkt No 1(no reference to SAC Patton's presence at residence).

4 On April 15, 2010, a Grand Jury sitting in South Bend, Indiana, returned twenty-three counts of indictment against Simon, including a count for filing false income tax returns, 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1), failure to file reports of foreign bank and financial accounts ("FBARs"), 31 U.S.C. §§ 5314 & 5322, mail fraud involving private financial aid, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, and fraud involving federal financial aid, 20 U.S.C. § 1097. Indictment at pp. 1-16.

Simon challenged the validity of the search warrant and accompanying affidavit through a motion to suppress. By Opinion and Order dated October 8, 2010, Judge Robert L. Miller, Jr., denied Simon's motion to suppress, except he reserved decision with respect to the reasonableness of the warrant's execution and scheduled a hearing on that issue. Opinion and Order at pg. 34, CR Dkt No 62. Judge Miller noted that Simon's motion to suppress was based on a variety of arguments that are repeated in this civil case, including that, SA Muschell's affidavit contained false and misleading statements of fact and omitted facts that were material to the probable cause finding; the affidavit didn't establish probable cause for the offenses listed; the search warrant lacked sufficient specificity, and resulted in a "general search" of the Simon residence, in violation of the Fourth Amendment; the warrant was unreasonable because it authorized intrusion into the defendant's residence and was issued contrary to guidelines contained in the Internal Revenue Service Manual for search and seizure; and, the warrant was executed in an unreasonable manner (because the agents allegedly exceeded scope of the warrant and seized unauthorized items). Id., pg. 3.

Judge Miller held that the search warrant affidavit "set forth enough facts to lead a responsible person to believe that the search of the residence would produce evidence that Mr. and Mrs. Simon had filed tax returns that were false because they omitted taxable income and that Mr. and Mrs. Simon were required to file 'FBARs' that they hadn't filed." Id., pg. 9. Judge Miller further held that the alleged omissions "weren't material to the probable cause finding." Id., pg. 13. Judge Miller also held that the warrant, with an attachment specifying what types of documents and other evidence could be seized, was sufficiently particularized and not overbroad. Id., pp. 15-16. Finally, Judge Miller determined that even if the agents departed from IRS administrative guidelines in obtaining the warrant and conducting the search, those guidelines did not confer any rights on the target of the search that would render the search unreasonable. Id., pp. 17-18.

Judge Miller then conducted an October 19, 2010 evidentiary hearing to consider Simon's challenges to the reasonableness of the warrant's execution. There, Simon claimed that evidence seized in the November 6, 2007, search should be suppressed because the agents used excessive force by executing the search through eleven armed agents wearing body armor and flak jackets, and conducting the search in the morning when his wife and his minor child were present. In an Opinion and Order dated October 20, 2010, Judge Miller denied the remaining portion of the motion to suppress. Opinion and Order, at pg.5, CR Dkt No 74. Judge Miller found that the agents did not act unreasonably under the Fourth Amendment. He observed that the agents allowed the child to leave for school, and then, at Mrs. Simon's request, waited about an hour for her attorney to arrive, and allowed Mrs. Simon to consult with her attorney during the day and leave the house for lunch. Id., pg. 2. Judge Miller also recognized that the agents obtained consent from Mrs. Simon to remove some computers and computer-related devices and image them elsewhere in order to limit the disruption to the Simon family. Id. Examining the totality of the circumstances and balancing the Simons' need for privacy with the need for the promotion of legitimate governmental interests, Judge Miller held that there was nothing facially unreasonable about the search or the retention of the seized items, and denied the motion to suppress based on the alleged Fourth Amendment violations. Id., pg. 4-5.

5 As noted above, a jury found Simon guilty on 19 of the 23 counts, including filing false federal income tax returns, failing to file foreign bank account and financial account reports, mail fraud, and fraud involving federal financial aid, but excluding several of the mail fraud counts. See Opinion and Order at pp. 1-2, CR Dkt No 139 (Jan. 3, 2011). See also Sentencing Memorandum, CR Dkt No 159 (Mar. 29, 2011); Judgment in a Criminal Case at pp. 3-4, 7, CR Dkt No 160 (Mar. 29, 2011). The Seventh Circuit affirmed the conviction on August 15, 2013. United States v. Simon, 727 F.3d 682 (7th Cir. 2013). Simon failed to petition for a writ of certiorari with the Supreme Court within ninety days, exhausting his direct appeal rights. Simon was released from prison in June, 2016. See Notice of Anticipated Release Date, CR Dkt No 212.

Upon his release from prison, Simon renewed his civil litigation efforts. In his Complaints he has raised three bases for civil damages, all arising out of the search warrant: (1) a claim alleging that the agents acted in violation of the Fourth Amendment in obtaining a search warrant (Complaint, Count 1, ¶¶ 46-54); (2) a claim alleging that the agents violated the Fourth Amendment in the manner by which they executed the search warrant (Complaint, Count 2, ¶¶ 55-64); and (3) a due process claim under the Fourth and Fifth Amendments alleging that the defendants obtained and executed an improper search warrant," (Complaint, Count 3, ¶¶ 65-72). Specifically, plaintiffs allege in Count 1 that: SA Muschell, intentionally or negligently made false and/or misleading statements in the affidavit in support of the request for a search warrant of plaintiffs' home. Id. at ¶ 19; these false and/or misleading statements misled the judge that reviewed the request for a search warrant. Id. at ¶ 27; the affidavit was negligently reviewed and/or approved by SA Muschell and other IRS agents prior to being submitted to the court. Id. at ¶ 22; several government tax offices failed to review the affidavit for completeness and accuracy. Id. at ¶ 23; the defendants improperly, unlawfully, and negligently tendered the request for a search warrant, including SA Muschell's affidavit, when they knew or should have known there was no probable cause to support a search warrant. Id. at ¶ 24; and defendants failed to follow several internal IRS regulations during the acquisition and execution of the search warrant for plaintiffs' home. Id. at ¶ 25.

In Count 2, plaintiffs allege that on November 6, 2007, defendant Muschell and unknown agents searched plaintiffs' residence pursuant to the search warrant. Id. at ¶ 30. At the initiation of the search warrant, only R.S., the Simons' minor daughter, and Denise Simon were at the Simon residence. Id. at ¶ 32. Plaintiff James Simon was not in the United States at that time. Id. Despite the fact that neither James Simon nor Denise Simon owned a gun, several IRS agents executing the search warrant wore bulletproof vests and had their guns visible during the search of plaintiffs' home. Id. at ¶¶ 33-34. The IRS agents executing the search warrant allegedly violated IRS procedures by putting R.S., who was ten years old at the time, in harm's way. Id. at ¶¶ 35-36.

Count 3 contends that during the search, IRS agent Linda Porter made comments to Denise Simon implying violations of law not addressed in the affidavit or warrant, causing emotional stress and harm to Mrs. Simon. Id. at ¶ 37. On November 9, 2007, three days after the execution of the search warrant, Denise Simon committed suicide. Id. at ¶ 40. Several hours before her death, Denise Simon wrote a letter expressing her concern regarding the armed IRS agents coming into her home, her concern for her children's safety after the search, and her distrust of the federal government. Id. at ¶ 41.

6 In support of their motion for judgment on the pleadings, the defendants claim that they are entitled to qualified immunity and that the plaintiffs have failed to allege sufficient factual allegations to state a claim and are barred by collateral estoppel.

"[T]he defense [of qualified immunity] is meant to give government officials a right, not merely to avoid 'standing trial,' but also to avoid the burdens of 'such pretrial matters as discovery.' " Behrens v. Pelletier, 516 U.S. 299, 308, 116 S.Ct. 834, 133 L.Ed.2d 773 (1996); Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 231, 129 S.Ct. 808, 172 L.Ed.2d 565 (2009) ("[Q]ualified immunity is an immunity from suit rather than a mere defense to liability[.]"). For that reason, "qualified immunity questions should be resolved at the earliest possible stage of a litigation." Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 646 (n.6, 107 S.Ct. 3034, 97 L.Ed.2d 523 1987). Qualified immunity therefore may be raised in a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Lanigan v. Vill. of East Hazel Crest, Ill., 110 F.3d 467, 471 (7th Cir. 1997) ("[Q]ualified immunity may be raised in a motion to dismiss, but at that stage, we consider only the facts in the complaint which we are obligated to accept as true."); see also Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 673, 129 S.Ct. 1937 ("[T]he sufficiency of [the] pleadings is ... directly implicated by the qualified immunity defense.").

"[Q]ualified immunity ... shields Government officials 'from liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 672, 129 S.Ct. 1937 (quoting Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818, 102 S.Ct. 2727, 73 L.Ed.2d 396 (1982)). Whether a right is clearly established is a question of law for the court to decide." McGrath v. Gillis, 44 F.3d 567, 570 (7th Cir. 1995). In the context of a motion to dismiss, "qualified immunity protects government officials from liability for civil damages 'unless a plaintiff pleads facts showing (1) that the official violated a statutory or constitutional right, and (2) that the right was 'clearly established' at the time of the challenged conduct.' " Wood v. Moss, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 2056, 2066-67, 188 L.Ed.2d 1039 (2014).

"[U]ntil a particular constitutional right has been stated so that reasonably competent officers would agree on its application to a given set of facts, it has not been clearly established." Henderson v. DeRobertis, 940 F.2d 1055, 1059 (7th Cir. 1991) That is, "a defendant cannot be said to have violated a clearly established right unless the right's contours were sufficiently definite that any reasonable official in the defendant's shoes would have understood that he was violating it." Plumhoff v. Rickard, ––– U.S. ––––, 134 S.Ct. 2012, 2023, 188 L.Ed.2d 1056 (2014). In that regard, the Supreme Court has admonished courts not to "define clearly established law at a high level of generality ... since doing so avoids the crucial question whether the official acted reasonably in the particular circumstances that he or she faced." Id. (internal citation omitted). Indeed, "[q]ualified immunity gives government officials breathing room to make reasonable but mistaken judgments, and protects all but the plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate the law." Ashcroft v. al-Kidd, 563 U.S. 731, 743, 131 S.Ct. 2074, 179 L.Ed.2d 1149 (2011).

With respect to the alleged Fourth Amendment warrant violation related to IRS procedures, the defendants argue that the allegations fail to overcome qualified immunity, as they do not allege the violation of a clearly established Constitutional right. Moreover, the IRS Manual is solely for internal agency use and does not confer any substantive rights on other parties. United States v. Peters, 153 F.3d 445, 452 n.9 (7th Cir. 1998).The Court agrees with the defendants on this point.

7 With respect to the search, the plaintiffs allege that the execution of the search warrant was unreasonable because the Special Agents first failed to take reasonable efforts to determine that the Affidavit was accurate and supported by probable cause and also because the Special Agents used excessive force in executing the warrant.

A search incident to a validly-issued warrant does not violate the Constitution, even when the warrant may contain incorrect information. Maryland v. Garrison, 480 U.S. 79, 84, 107 S.Ct. 1013, 94 L.Ed.2d 72 (1987). As noted, qualified immunity ... shields Government officials 'from liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 672, 129 S.Ct. 1937. That is, "qualified immunity protects government officials from liability for civil damages 'unless a plaintiff pleads facts showing (1) that the official violated a statutory or constitutional right, and (2) that the right was 'clearly established' at the time of the challenged conduct.' " Wood, 134 S.Ct. at 2066-67.

The second prong asks whether the constitutional right that the officer allegedly violated was "clearly established" at the time of the incident such that it would "be clear to a reasonable officer that his conduct was unlawful in the situation he confronted." Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 202, 121 S.Ct. 2151, 150 L.Ed.2d 272 (2001). "Reasonable notice does not require that there be a case 'fundamentally similar' to the present case, and indeed an officer can be on notice that his conduct violates constitutional rights even in novel factual circumstances." Hope v. Peltzer, 536

U.S. 730, 741, 122 S.Ct. 2508, 153 L.Ed.2d 666 (2002); see also Narducci v. Moore, 572 F.3d 313, 318 (7th Cir. 2009) (quoting Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 640, 107 S.Ct. 3034, 97 L.Ed.2d 523 (1987)).

In the present case qualified immunity applies because the conduct alleged would not constitute the violation of clearly established constitutional law. As Judge Miller found, in light of the pre-existing law concerning execution of search warrants, the Special Agents would not have been aware that their actions entering the residence and searching for evidence listed in the search warrant were unlawful on November 6, 2007. They entered with a sufficient number of agents to secure the premises and were wearing clothing that protected them from potential harm. As the Second Circuit recently explained "there is no clearly established right ... to be free from the deployment of a tactical team in general." Terebesi v. Torreso, 764 F.3d 217, 233 (2d Cir. 2014). The agents did not restrain Mrs. Simon, but allowed her to meet with her attorney, go to lunch and have private discussions with her attorney sitting in her car.

Plaintiffs, in their response brief, argue that they have alleged facts in their complaint that necessitate a closer look at the facts and that they should be allowed to conduct discovery and revisit the question of qualified immunity at a later stage. Clearly, plaintiffs misunderstand the nature of the doctrine of qualified immunity. As noted above, qualified immunity provides immunity from suit.

Moreover, as noted in the recent case of Green v. Newport, No. 16-1536, 7th Cir. Aug. 22, 2017, the Supreme Court has instructed that "clearly established law should not be defined at a high level of generality." White v. Pauly, ––– U.S. ––––, 137 S.Ct. 548, 552, 196 L.Ed.2d 463 (2017) (per curiam) (citation and quotation marks omitted). While a case directly on point is not required, "the clearly established law must be 'particularized' to the facts of the case." Id. at 551 (citation omitted). The Court has found that "[s]uch specificity is especially important in the Fourth Amendment context, where ... 'it is sometimes difficult for an officer to determine how the relevant legal doctrine ... will apply to the factual situation the officer confronts.' " Mullenix, 136 S.Ct. at 308 (citation and alterations omitted). In the case at bar, Plaintiffs have failed to present any case, even slightly on point, that would show that the clearly established law indicated that the Special Agents were violating the plaintiffs' constitutional rights. Clearly, the allegations of the complaint simply do not raise a Fourth Amendment violation of which these defendants should have known. Accordingly, defendants are entitled to qualified immunity for their actions in executing the search warrant.

8 Plaintiffs further assert a due process claim arising from the suicide of Denise Simon three days after execution of the search warrant. Plaintiffs allege that "upon information and belief, during the Search, Porter made comments to the decedent that were improper by implying violations of law not specified or addressed in the Affidavit or Warrant causing unnecessary emotional stress and harm to Decedent." Complaint. ¶ 37. Defendants argue that this statement is too vague to pass muster under the specific pleading requirements of Iqbal. This Court agrees that the plaintiffs have failed to allege any facts that set forth the existence of a clear due process violation. The facts plead do not have facial plausibility enabling the court to draw a reasonable inference that the defendants are liable for the alleged misconduct. Plaintiffs do not allege what comments were made or how they caused harm to Denise Simon. Moreover, the defendants are entitled to qualified immunity on this claim because Denise Simon's suicide does not implicate a clearly established constitutional right in 2007. As noted, Plaintiffs have not alleged that one of the defendants took specific actions that directly caused Denise Simon's death. Nor have the plaintiffs pointed to any case law suggesting that there is a clearly constitutional right that was implicated by the alleged misconduct.

Next, the defendants claim that plaintiffs claims are barred by the doctrine of collateral estoppel. Under the doctrine of collateral estoppel or claim preclusion, "once an issue is actually and necessarily determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, that determination is conclusive in subsequent suits based on a different cause of action involving a party to the prior litigation." Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 153, 99 S.Ct. 970, 59 L.Ed.2d 210 (1979). However, collateral estoppel applies only when the party against whom the earlier decision is being asserted had a "full and fair opportunity" to litigate the issue in question. Id.; Parklane Hoisery Co., Inc. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 333-34, 99 S.Ct. 645, 58 L.Ed.2d 552 (1979) (offensive use of collateral estoppel permitted to bar relitigation of whether a proxy statement was materially false and misleading). Collateral estoppel may apply in a Bivens case where the plaintiff had unsuccessfully challenged the same allegedly unconstitutional behavior in a prior criminal case preliminary hearing or motion to suppress. See Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 102, 101 S.Ct. 411, 66 L.Ed.2d 308 (1980)(Issue preclusion applies to bar relitigation of validity of search and seizure in subsequent action brought pursuant to § 1983).

Through a motion to suppress brought by his counsel in his criminal case, Simon fully, but unsuccessfully, litigated the claims that there was no probable cause for issuance of the search warrant and that the execution of the search warrant was unreasonable; therefore he is estopped from challenging those decisions in this case. (Compare Complaint with Motion to Suppress Evidence, CR Dkt No 37; and the Opinion and Order denying motion to suppress in part, CR Dkt No 62; and Opinion and Order, CR Dkt No 74. Denying, after a hearing, the remaining portion of the motion to suppress). Because the allegations of Fourth and Fifth Amendment violations raised in the suppression motion mirrored those raised in this Bivens case and the Court in the criminal case denied the motion to suppress in full, Simon is estopped from challenging those findings in this case. Guenther v. Holmgreen, 738 F.2d 879 (7th Cir. 1984) (determining plaintiff was precluded from relitigating the issue of the validity of his arrest because the state court ruling at his preliminary hearing determined the officers had probable cause to arrest him); Donovan v. Thames, 105 F.3d 291, 297-98 (6th Cir. 1997) (determining suppression hearing did not bar excessive force claim but it did bar relitigation of the validity of arrest because the state court ruling determined the officer had probable cause to arrest plaintiff); Cameron v. Patterson, 2012 WL 1204638, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 10, 2012) (determining that plaintiff was collaterally estopped from pursuing false arrest claim because he had challenged, in his motion to quash arrest and suppress evidence in the state criminal case, whether there was probable cause for the stop); see also Wright and Miller, 18B Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. 3d § 4474 (West 2004 & Supp. 2016).

9 As noted earlier, Simon's request to file a motion to vacate sentence was denied by the Seventh Circuit on July 5, 2016. Thus, Simon's appeals have been exhausted and he is barred from pursuing his claims by reason the doctrine of collateral estoppel. Plaintiffs, however, assert that the claims of James A. Simon as Parent and Guardian of R.S. and the Estate of Denise J. Simon are not barred by the doctrine of collateral estoppel. Plaintiffs claim that these plaintiffs were not parties to the criminal case and had no opportunity to litigate the issue in question.

The law is clear that collateral estoppel may be applied to the claims of third parties who are in privity with a party to the prior litigation, even when the prior action is criminal in nature. Studio Art Theatre v. Evansville, Inc. v. Gann, 76 F.3d 128 (7th Cir. 1996). Where a non-party to a prior action is so closely aligned with the interests of the party to the prior litigation, they may be bound by the ruling from a suppression hearing in the prior litigation. Id. at 131; Allen v. United States, 964 F.Supp.2d 1239 (D. Nev. 2013)(suppression hearing is grounds for collateral estoppel in subsequent Bivens case and non-party to the prior action may be bound); Beets v. County of Los Angeles, 669 F.3d 1038, 1046-47(9th Cir. 2012) (criminal conviction precluded a Section 1983 claim brought by the parents of an individual convicted for resisting arrest); Kray v. City of Tacoma, 2012 WL 2062397 (W.D. Wash 2012) (brother of a man who was criminally convicted was barred from alleging a Section 1983 claim that would undermine the validity of his brother's conviction).

In the present case, the Estate of Denise Simon and minor R.S. seek to hold the Special Agents individually liable for violations of their constitutional rights allegedly arising from the unlawful issuance and execution of a search warrant at their home. Defendants argue that these two plaintiffs are so closely connected with the criminal defendant [3], Mr. Simon, that they are bound by the decision on the motion to suppress. Defendants point out that Mr. Simon had every reason to vigorously litigate the motion to suppress and this Court notes that the record shows that the motion was, in fact, vigourously litigated. Notably, plaintiffs have not cited any case law in support of their assertion that collateral estoppel should not apply. Plaintiffs merely opine that it is "contrary to common sense that collateral estoppel would bar the claims of the Plaintiffs in this case." As the law clearly supports the defendants' position, this court holds that the doctrine of collateral estoppel bars all of the plaintiffs' claims.

Next, the defendants argue that SA Patton must be dismissed from this case for lack of personal involvement. It is well established that "[t]o establish a Bivens claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate the defendant's direct or personal involvement in the actions that are alleged to have caused the constitutional deprivation." Vance v. Rumsfeld, 701 F.3d 193, 203 (7th Cir. 2012); see also Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 677, 129 S.Ct. 1937 ("[E]ach Government official, his or her title notwithstanding, is only liable for his or her own misconduct."). In that regard, "purpose rather than knowledge is required to impose Bivens liability on ... an official charged with violations arising from his or her superintendent responsibilities." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 677, 129 S.Ct. 1937. It has long been held that the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to Bivens cases. Thus to be held individually liable, "a defendant must be 'personally responsible for the deprivation of a constitutional right.' " Sanville v. McCaughtry, 266 F.3d 724, 740 (7th Cir. 2001)(quoting Chavez v. Ill. State Police, 251 F.3d 612, 651 (7th Cir. 2001)) (quotation omitted). Prior to Iqbal, a defendant could "be deemed to have sufficient personal responsibility if he directed the conduct causing the constitutional violation, or if it occurred with his knowledge or consent." Chavez, 251 F.3d at 652. The plaintiffs do not allege that SA Patton had personal responsibility for conducting the search, but allege only that he "had actual knowledge of and acquiescence in Muschell's, Porter's, and Unknown Agents' conduct by adopting and maintaining a practice, custom or policy that contributed to the violation of Plaintiffs' constitutional rights."

10 In their Complaint, Plaintiffs specifically allege that SAC Patton is the Special Agent in Charge of Defendant Paul Muschell. See Complaint ¶¶ 5, 7. In his duties as the Special Agent in Charge, SAC Patton was responsible for Mr. Muschell's training and supervision. See id. at ¶ 7. The Complaint further alleges that as Special Agent in Charge, SAC Patton improperly reviewed and/or approved the Affidavit supporting the request for a search warrant prior to it being submitted to the Court, failed to review said Affidavit for completeness and accuracy, and improperly and unlawfully tendered the Affidavit to the Court, procuring the issuance of the Warrant, when he knew that there was no probable cause for said Warrant. See id. at ¶¶ 22-24. Plaintiffs thus conclude that SAC Patton was directly involved in supervising and training agents in their activities here in the state of Indiana and that SAC Patton's supervision and training of SA Muschell led to the constitutional violations at issue.

However, as noted above, a supervisor may not be liable in a Bivens action for the conduct of those under him unless he intended those actions to occur. Iqbal, 655 U.S. at 677. As the defendants note, there are no allegations in the complaint that SAC Patton intended the other Special Agents to act in a way that would have violated Plaintiffs' constitutional rights. Rather, all the Plaintiffs argue is that SAC Patton had knowledge or acquiesced in unspecified practices, customs and polices because he has adopted and maintained practices, customs and/or polices that contribute to the violations. Complaint at ¶¶ 51, 61, 69. Importantly, none of the factual allegations in the complaint assert that SAC Patton acted in a way that would lead a reasonable fact finder to hold that he intended any violation of Plaintiffs' constitutional rights. Accordingly, this Court must dismiss the claims against SAC Patton on this basis also.

Conclusion

On the basis of the foregoing, the defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings is hereby GRANTED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 4021551, 121 A.F.T.R.2d 2018-374

Footnotes

[1] Defendants also initially argued that plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment claims challenging probable cause to issue the search warrant are barred by Heck v. Humprey, 512 U.S. 477, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 129 L.Ed.2d 383 (1994), However, in their reply brief, the defendants noted that they are not "advancing an argument at this time that a finding that the search warrant was invalid would necessarily imply that James Simon's conviction was unlawful ...". See Copus v. City of Edgerton, 151 F.3d 646, 648 (7th Cir. 1998)(Heck does not bar all Fourth Amendment claims for unlawful search and seizure); Wallace v. City of Chicago, 440 F.3d 421, 427 (7th Cir. 2006)(many search and seizure claims do not render a conviction invalid because of doctrines like independent source and inevitable discovery). As it appears that the defendants have abandoned their Heck argument, this Court will not address it further.

[2] "Documents that a defendant attaches to a motion to dismiss are considered part of the pleadings if they are referred to in the plaintiff's complaint and are central to her claim." Venture Assocs. Corp. v. Zenith Data Sys. Corp., 987 F.2d 429,

431 (7th Cir. 1993); see also PharMerica Chicago, Inc. v. Meisels, 772 F.Supp.2d 938, 947 (N.D. Ill. 2011). Here, the Plaintiffs made numerous references to the Affidavit in the Complaint. See Complaint at ¶¶ 16, 20-24, 26-27, 37, 44-45. In addition, the Affidavit is central to Plaintiffs' claims. Id. at ¶¶ 47-48, 50, 56. Thus, the Affidavit is considered part of the pleadings. This Court takes judicial notice of the Affidavit.

[3] Denise Simon was deceased prior to the issuance of the indictment. However, the Court’s sentencing memorandum found that Denise was a “knowing partner” in the tax fraud scheme. Thus, it is clear that the interests of the Estate are not substantially different from Mr. Simon’s interests.

End of Document

T.C. Memo. 2016-27
United States Tax Court.

Bonnie J. ANGLE, Petitioner
v.
COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Respondent [*]

Docket Nos. 29418–11, 435–12L
|
Filed February 22, 2016

Synopsis
Background: Taxpayer petitioned for review of IRS determinations to deny innocent-spouse relief and proceed with collection by levy and lien. Cases were consolidated and IRS conceded taxpayer's entitlement to innocent-spouse relief. Taxpayer moved for award of reasonable litigation costs. The Tax Court, Laro, J., 2015 WL 2180481, denied motion, then entered decision in innocent-spouse case and dismissed collection case. Taxpayer moved for reconsideration of denial of costs and to vacate decision and dismissal.

Holdings: The Tax Court, Laro, J., held that:

[1] Court of Appeals' opinion constituted intervening change in law warranting Tax Court's reconsideration of its denial of taxpayer's motion for award of prevailing-party litigation costs in innocent-spouse case, but not in collection review case;

[2] IRS's concession of taxpayer's request for innocent-spouse relief did not constitute settlement that precluded taxpayer from obtaining award of litigation costs under qualified offer rule; but

[3] taxpayer's net worth was in excess of $2 million, and thus she was ineligible for award of litigation costs as prevailing party.

Motions granted in part and denied in part.

Attorneys and Law Firms

William E. Taggart, Jr., for petitioner.

Audra M. Dineen, for respondent.

SUPPLEMENTAL MEMORANDUM OPINION

LARO, Judge:

1 Currently before the Court are petitioner's motions under Rule 161 [1] to reconsider our opinion in Angle v. Commissioner (Angle I), T.C. [*2] Memo.2015–92 and under Rule 162 to vacate the decision and the dismissal entered on May 14, 2015, in docket No. 29418–11 and docket No. 435–12L, respectively. In Angle I we held that petitioner is not entitled to recovery of litigation costs under section 7430. The motions were filed timely on June 11, 2015.

On July 15, 2015, during the pendency of the motions, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit—to which these cases would be appealable—reversed and remanded a decision of this Court in Knudsen v. Commissioner (Knudsen II), 793 F.3d 1030 (9th Cir.2015), rev'g and remanding T.C. Memo. 2013–87 (Knudsen I). Petitioner requested leave of the Court to supplement her pending motions because of the developments in the Knudsen case. We granted the request for leave and instructed the parties to file supplemental briefs addressing the following issues: (1) how Knudsen II affects the decision in the cases herein, if at all, and (2) whether petitioner should be considered a "prevailing party" in view of petitioner's prior filings and the Knudsen II decision.

After considering the arguments made by the parties, we will deny the motions to vacate under Rule 162 for both cases. We will deny the motion to [*3] reconsider under Rule 161 for the case at docket No. 435–12L (collection due process (CDP) case). We will grant the motion to reconsider under Rule 161 for the case at docket No. 29418–11 (innocent spouse case), but for the reasons stated below we will not alter the result of our opinion in Angle I.

Background

We incorporate our findings of fact in Angle I and set forth additional facts below for purposes of this opinion.

On April 15, 1996, petitioner and her now deceased husband, Cloyd F. Angle, filed a joint Federal income tax return for 1995. Petitioner's 1995 tax liability has given rise to no fewer than four cases, three of which we described in detail in our opinion in Angle I. [2]

To briefly reiterate the facts, after the Court resolved the initial deficiency case in Estate of Angle v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo.2009–227, and entered the appropriate decision, petitioner initiated two separate actions requesting relief from her 1995 Federal income tax liability pursuant to section 6015 (innocent [*4] spouse case) and seeking redetermination of the results of a collection due process hearing based on the deficiency case (CDP case). After going through the appropriate administrative procedures, petitioner ended up litigating both the innocent spouse case and the CDP case in this Court. On January 11, 2011, after filing the petition in the innocent spouse case but before filing the petition in the CDP case, petitioner sent the IRS Office of Appeals (Appeals) a letter offering to settle the innocent spouse case for $1,000. Because Appeals did not reply to the offer, it lapsed.

2 Both cases were scheduled for trial on October 21, 2013. Meanwhile, on the basis of the new information that petitioner provided, respondent determined that the 1995 return was a valid joint return but petitioner was entitled to relief under section 6015(c). On September 27, 2013, respondent informed petitioner of this determination and faxed draft decision documents reflecting a settlement. On September 28, 2013, petitioner acknowledged receipt of the decision documents but refused to sign them because they did not allow litigation costs.

On October 21, 2013, when these cases were called for trial, the parties informed the Court that respondent conceded the innocent spouse case, but respondent maintained that the CDP case was not resolved or rendered moot by the granting of the section 6015 relief. The Court continued the case until [*5] November 18, 2013, to give the parties an opportunity to resolve the remaining issues.

On November 18, 2013, the parties informed the Court that a resolution with respect to the issue of attorney's fees could not be reached. That same day, the Court issued an order directing petitioner to file a motion for costs under section 7430 by January 17, 2014, and the Court denied respondent's motion for summary judgment in the CDP case as moot.

On May 14, 2015, after considering petitioner's motion for litigation costs and respondent's response, we entered an order and decision in docket No. 2941811 and an order and order of dismissal in docket No. 435–12L, denying the award of litigation costs to petitioner in both cases. On June 11, 2015, petitioner timely filed motions to reconsider our opinion and vacate the decision and the dismissal. During the pendency of the motions we instructed the parties to file supplemental briefs addressing the issues raised by the Court of Appeals in Knudsen II. On October 16, 2015, we instructed petitioner to file supplemental affidavits addressing the issue of her net worth and litigation costs. On November 25, 2015, respondent filed objections to the supplemental affidavits. On December 15, 2015, we granted petitioner's motion for leave to file a response to respondent's [*6] objections. Petitioner filed said response in two memoranda on December 15, 2015, and on December 28, 2015.

Discussion

I. Rule 161 and 162 Motions

[1] [2] [3] [4] The decision to grant a motion to reconsider an opinion or vacate a decision rests within the discretion of the Court. See Vaughn v. Commissioner, 87 T.C. 164, 166–167 (1986); CWT Farms, Inc. v. Commissioner, 79 T.C. 1054, 1057 (1982), aff'd, 755 F.2d 790 (11th Cir.1985). Motions to vacate or reconsider are generally not granted absent a showing of unusual circumstances or substantial error. See Seiffert v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2014–61, at *6 (citing Half Tr. v. Commissioner, 62 T.C. 145, 147 (1974), aff'd on this ground, 510 F.2d, 43, 45 n.1 (1st Cir.1975)); Mitchell v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2013–204, at *7, aff'd, 775 F.3d 1243 (10th Cir.2015); Kun v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2004–273, aff'd, 157 Fed.Appx. 971 (9th Cir. 2005). Motions to reconsider an opinion are generally intended to correct "substantial errors of fact or law and allow [ ] the introduction of newly discovered evidence that the moving party could not have introduced, by the exercise of due diligence, in the prior proceeding." Estate of Quick v. Commissioner, 110 T.C. 440, 441–442

(1998). Motions to vacate a decision are generally not granted absent a showing of unusual circumstances or [*7] substantial error, including mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, newly discovered evidence, fraud, or other reason justifying relief. Seiffert v. Commissioner, at *6–*7 (discussing application of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in the context of motions to vacate a decision).

3 [5] An intervening change in law may also warrant granting a motion to reconsider an opinion or vacate a decision. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2013–204 (regarding a change in conservation easements law interpretation by a Court of Appeals); Alioto v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2008185 (regarding a change in law due to congressional change to section 6015).

[6] Where the Court of Appeals to which an appeal lies has decided an issue that is presently before us, we will follow the decision of that court. Golsen v. Commissioner, 54 T.C. 742, 757 (1970), aff'd, 445 F.2d 985 (10th Cir.1971). The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has recently held that whether a concession by the Commissioner should be treated as a settlement for purposes of section 7430 depends on the facts and circumstances of the case and general principles of contract law. See Knudsen II, 793 F.3d at 1035. When the Commissioner conceded that case because of the change in the internal litigation strategy after it had been submitted fully stipulated for decision, the concession was not a settlement and the taxpayer was entitled to recover litigation costs. Id. [*8] Petitioner argues that the holding in Knudsen II is an intervening change in law that may warrant reconsidering our prior opinion or vacating decisions in these cases. Respondent disagrees.

[7] We relied on the reasoning in Knudsen I, which was later reversed by the Court of Appeals' opinion in Knudsen II, in denying the award of attorney's fees and costs in Angle I. Under Golsen, we follow the holding of the Court of Appeals in Knudsen II because it discusses the same issue that we are dealing with here: whether a unilateral concession by the Commissioner should be treated as a settlement. Thus, Knudsen II represents an intervening change in law and warrants reconsideration of certain portions of our opinion in Angle I.

[8] The discussion of Knudsen I and Knudsen II, however, is relevant to only one of the consolidated cases, the innocent spouse case. Because we found in Angle I that no qualifying offer has been made in the CDP case, Knudsen II does not affect our analysis and conclusions as to the CDP case, and we will deny petitioner's motions to reconsider that part of the opinion in Angle I and to vacate the related decision. [3] Under Golsen, we, however, must consider the issue of [*9] whether the holding in Knudsen II affects, if at all, the innocent spouse case. Thus, we will grant the motion to reconsider our opinion in the innocent spouse case for this limited purpose. For the reasons stated below, granting the motion to reconsider does not alter the result of Angle I.

Because petitioner did not provide us with substantial proof that there are reasons justifying vacating our prior decision such as those enumerated in Seiffert, and our reconsideration of Angle I as related to the innocent spouse case does not lead us to different results, we will deny petitioner's motion to vacate the decision related to the innocent spouse case.

II. Legal Standard for Reasonable Litigation Costs Award

4 [9] Under section 7430(a), a prevailing taxpayer in a court proceeding against the United States may be awarded "reasonable litigation costs incurred in connection with such court proceeding." The decision whether to award attorney's fees under section 7430 is within a trial court's sound discretion. See Pac. Fisheries, Inc. v. United States, 484 F.3d 1103, 1106 n.2 (9th Cir.2007); [*10] Huffman v. Commissioner, 978 F.2d 1139, 1143 (9th Cir.1992), aff'g in part, rev'g in part T.C. Memo. 1991–144.

In order for this Court to award reasonable litigation costs under section 7430, certain requirements must be met. The record must show the following:

(1) The moving party filed a timely motion for reasonable litigation costs. Rule 231(a). We excused petitioner's minor delay in filing the motion for reasonable litigation costs, as discussed in Angle I.

(2) The moving party did not unreasonably protract the court proceedings. Sec. 7430(b)(3).

(3) The moving party exhausted any administrative remedies available to him or her within the IRS. Sec. 7430(b)(1).

(4) The moving party has a net worth that did not exceed $2 million at the time the petition was filed in the case. Sec. 7430(c)(4)(A)(ii).

(5) The moving party is a prevailing party in the Court proceeding. Sec. 7430(a), (c)(4)(A), (B), (E).

(6) The amount of costs claimed is reasonable. Sec. 7430(a), (c)(1).

These six requirements are in the conjunctive; each requirement must be met before this Court may order an award of litigation costs to a taxpayer under section 7430. See Beecroft v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1997–23, slip op. at 11 [*11] (citing Minahan v. Commissioner, 88 T.C. 492, 497 (1987)). Except as provided in section 7430(c)(4)(B), the taxpayer bears the burden of proving that he or she meets each of the requirements of section 7430. Rule 232(e). Failure to meet any of the requirements of section 7430 will preclude an award of costs. Minahan v. Commissioner, 88 T.C. at 497.

Respondent conceded that petitioner complied with requirements set out in items (2) and (3) above. Respondent, however, disagrees that petitioner met the remaining statutory requirements. For the reasons set forth below, we agree that petitioner failed to meet the net worth requirement. Because petitioner failed to meet the net worth requirement, we deny the award of litigation costs related to the innocent spouse case. See id. (stating that failure to meet any of the requirements of section 7430 precludes an award of costs).

III. Prevailing Party Under the Qualifying Offer Rule and Knudsen

A. Qualified Offer in the Innocent Spouse Case

Petitioner argues that she is entitled to recover litigation costs under the qualified offer rule, see sec. 7430(c)(4)(E), and (g), because her January 11, 2011, letter was a qualified offer.

[*12] Section 7430(c)(4)(E)(i) provides:

> A party to a court proceeding * * * shall be treated as the prevailing party if the liability of the taxpayer pursuant to the judgment in the proceeding (determined without regard to interest) is equal to or less than the liability of the taxpayer which would have been so determined if the United States had accepted a qualified offer of the party [as defined] under subsection (g).

[10] Under the qualified offer rule of section 7430(c)(4)(E) and (g), a taxpayer may be deemed to be a prevailing party regardless of whether the taxpayer substantially prevailed in the proceeding or of whether the Commissioner's position in the proceeding was substantially justified. Haas & Assocs. Accountancy Corp. v. Commissioner, 117 T.C. 48, 59 (2001), aff'd, 55 Fed.Appx. 476 (9th Cir. 2003).

5 In Angle I we held that petitioner's January 11, 2011, letter is a qualified offer with respect to the innocent spouse case but no qualified offer has been made in the CDP case. Angle I, at *9–*11. Thus, petitioner may be entitled to reasonable litigation costs incurred in connection with the innocent spouse case if all other requirements for being a prevailing party are satisfied.

B. Settlement Exception to the Qualified Offer Rule and Knudsen

Where the taxpayer makes a qualified offer under section 7430(g), the qualified offer rule does not apply to "any judgment issued pursuant to a [*13] settlement". Sec. 7430(c)(4)(E)(ii)(I); see also sec. 301.7430–7(a), Proced. & Admin. Regs. ("An award of reasonable administrative and litigation costs under the qualified offer rule only includes those costs * * * attributable to the adjustments * * * that were included in the court's judgment other than by reason of settlement.").

[11] Whether a concession constitutes a settlement under section 7430(c)(4)(E)(ii)(I) depends on whether, under the facts of the case, the concession can be construed as a contract to settle between the parties. Knudsen II, 793 F.3d at 1035. In the Ninth Circuit, courts consider timing of the concession as well as the usual elements of a valid contract such as offer, acceptance, and consideration. Id.

In Knudsen II, 793 F.3d at 1035, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that a unilateral concession is not a settlement within the meaning of section 7430 when the Commissioner conceded as a result of a change in internal policies and when there was no evidence of negotiations regarding a settlement. The Commissioner informed the taxpayer that he would concede the case after the case had been submitted fully stipulated but more than a month before the filing deadline for submitting opening briefs in the case. Id. at 1033.

[*14] In another similar case, Estate of Lippitz v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2007–293, this Court has held that when the Commissioner waited to concede the case until after the taxpayer had actively litigated to the point of filing a dispositive motion, the concession was not a settlement. In Estate of Lippitz v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2007–293, the Commissioner denied the taxpayer's right to relief from joint and several liability under section 6015 despite the prior administrative determination that the taxpayer was entitled thereto. After the Commissioner refused the taxpayer's qualified offer, the taxpayer moved for partial summary judgment, prompting the Commissioner to concede that the taxpayer was entitled to the requested relief.

In both Knudsen II and Estate of Lippitz the courts considered the timing of the concession. Knudsen II, 793 F.3d at 1035 (citing Estate of Lippitz v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2007–293). Both courts did not believe that Congress intended to allow the Commissioner to benefit from the settlement exception of section 7430(c)(4)(E) after waiting until just before the resolution of a dispositive motion or the end of a trial to concede a matter. Id. The underlying purpose of the qualified offer rule "is to encourage settlements by imposing litigation costs on the party not willing to settle." Id. (quoting Gladden v. Commissioner, 120 T.C. 446, 450 (2003)).

[12] [*15] Petitioner argues that Knudsen II is an intervening authority warranting a change in the reasoning and conclusions of our prior opinion in Angle I. Petitioner made a qualifying offer for the innocent spouse case at the very beginning of the offer period. Respondent did not accept the offer, and it expired. After that, respondent continued to pursue his litigation strategy and ultimately came to the conclusion that he was ready to concede the innocent spouse case. Similar to the facts in the Knudsen case, less than a month before the scheduled trial date respondent informed petitioner that he intended to concede the innocent spouse case.

6 Respondent attempts to distinguish this case from the Knudsen case on the basis that petitioner made an implicit offer to settle by making herself available for depositions and providing information pursuant to respondent's requests, which respondent accepted by conceding. Respondent argues that, unlike in the Knudsen case, where the concession was based on the institutional-level change of litigation strategy, the concession here was in response to petitioner's providing more information on her case.

We find respondent's argument unpersuasive. The litigation process is inherently adversarial, but it necessarily involves exchange of information between the parties. We are reluctant to hold that whenever a party cooperates in [*16] this process, it is making an offer to settle and loses the right to litigation costs. Respondent's argument suggests that taxpayers can be entitled to litigation costs only when the Commissioner decides to make an institutional change in his policies or abandons a prior litigation strategy. We do not think this is the result intended by Congress.

Respondent also distinguishes the current case from Estate of Lippitz, where the Commissioner chose to litigate the section 6015 relief issue even after the Internal Revenue Service Cincinnati Centralized Innocent Spouse Operations unit (CCISO) recommended that such relief should be granted. This factual distinction would be important if petitioner argued that respondent's position was unjustified at the time the case was commenced. This is not the case here. Petitioner argues only that she is a prevailing party under the qualified offer rule. This rule operates regardless of whether the taxpayer substantially prevailed in the proceeding or of whether the position of the Commissioner in the proceeding was substantially justified. See Haas & Assocs. Accountancy Corp. v. Commissioner, 117 T.C. at 59.

When respondent sent the stipulation documents to petitioner in September 2013, she refused to sign them. In later filings respondent stated that he conceded the issue of innocent spouse relief under section 6015. Moreover, even after the [*17] concession, respondent continued to assert that the CDP case was not moot up until the trial in November 2013.

In terms of contract law analysis, respondent's proposed contract terms-conceding only the innocent spouse case—were rejected by petitioner on September 28, 2013. Petitioner's counteroffer—that respondent should concede both the CDP and the innocent spouse case —was rejected by respondent in his subsequent filings. Under the facts of this case, we conclude that respondent's concession in the innocent spouse case does not constitute a settlement under section 7430(c)(4)(E)(ii)(I). There was no manifestation of mutual assent and exchange of consideration pursuant to a bargain between the parties. Thus, there was no settlement, and petitioner may qualify as the prevailing party with respect to the innocent spouse case under the qualifying offer rule as interpreted in Knudsen II.

IV. Net Worth Requirement

[13] Section 7430(c)(4)(A)(ii) incorporates the net worth requirement of 28 U.S.C. sec. 2412(d)(1)(B) in the definition of a "prevailing party." To meet the net worth requirement, an individual's net worth must not exceed $2 million at the time the petition was filed. Sec. 7430(c)(4)(A)(ii); 28 U.S.C. sec. 2412(d)(1)(B). [*18] Rule 231(b)(5) requires a statement, supported by an affidavit executed by the moving party (and not counsel therefor), that the moving party meets the net worth requirement. If a taxpayer fails to sufficiently establish net worth and the Commissioner challenges whether the taxpayer has met the net worth requirement, the taxpayer must provide additional evidence. Park v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2002–232; see also Estate of Hubberd v. Commissioner, 99 T.C. 335, 341 (1992); Dixson Int'l Serv. Corp. v. Commissioner, 94 T.C. 708, 719 (1990). In Dixson, this Court denied the award of litigation costs when the taxpayers failed to provide adequate proof of their net worth when they were put on notice that the Commissioner had specifically objected to granting the motion for that reason.

7 [14] Petitioner made the required statement and filed a supplemental affidavit providing a list and the values of her assets as of the date she filed the petition in the innocent spouse case. Petitioner stated that her net worth at that time was $1,586,994. Respondent points out that petitioner did not include certain assets in the calculation, including shareholder loans to foreign entities wholly owned by her (Canadian corporations) [4] and cash deposited in foreign bank accounts.

[*19] Respondent argues that if the omitted items are added into the calculation, petitioner fails to meet the net worth requirement. We agree with respondent.

Respondent first raised the issue of net worth in the response to petitioner's motion for reasonable litigation or administrative costs filed on March 20, 2014. Petitioner failed to substantively address the issue of net worth in the pre-Angle I filings. This alone would be sufficient for the Court to deny petitioner's motion under Dixson. Petitioner first addressed the concerns raised by respondent in the first supplement to affidavit of William E. Taggart, Jr., in support of the motion for reasonable litigation or administrative costs filed on November 13, 2015. In his response to that first supplement to affidavit, respondent pointed out that the net worth calculations omitted loans by petitioner to the Canadian corporations totaling $3,508,009.47. [5] Petitioner argues that these loans were worthless at the time the petition in the innocent spouse case was filed because the corporations to which petitioner made loans did not have sufficient assets to repay them. We note [*20] that petitioner did not introduce any evidence that she treated these loans as worthless on her tax returns for 2011 or any prior years.

This Court has previously held that net worth, for purposes of the Equal Access to Justice Act, 28 U.S.C. sec. 2412(d)(2)(B) (1994), as incorporated by section 7430(c)(4)(A)(iii), is determined on the basis of the cost of acquisition under generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) rather than the fair market value of assets. Swanson v. Commissioner, 106 T.C. 76, 96 (1996); see also H.R. Rept. No. 96–1418, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 15 (1980); Am. Pac. Concrete Pipe Co. v. NLRB, 788 F.2d 586, 591 (9th Cir.1986) (holding that generally accepted accounting principles apply in calculation of net worth under 28 U.S.C. sec. 2412(d)(2)(B) and allowing the taking into account of depreciation).

Notes receivable are assets under GAAP. See U.S. GAAP Codification of Accounting Standards, Topics 310. The cost of acquisition of a note receivable exchanged for cash is the amount of cash received in exchange for the note. Id., Topic 310–10–30–2. If the interest on the note is unstated, it is recorded in the books as having value in an amount that reasonably approximates the fair value of the note. Id., Topic 310–10–30–5.

The parties do not argue that petitioner's loans to the Canadian corporations are in fact an investment in equity. Petitioner maintains that the loans are bona [*21] fide business loans. Petitioner also does not argue that the notes were exchanged for goods or services. Thus, we conclude that the notes were exchanged for cash loans from petitioner to the Canadian corporations. Further, because the notes did not state interest or a maturity date, we conclude that they were initially recorded on the books at values that reasonably approximated the fair values of the notes. Because the Canadian corporations did not make any payments on the loans, the values of the notes remained the same at least until the filing of petitioner's petition in the innocent spouse case. Thus, the face values of the loans reported on the Canadian corporations' books represent acquisition values for the notes receivable held by petitioner.

8 We next address petitioner's argument that she did not have to report the loans as assets because they had become worthless by the time she filed the petition in the innocent spouse case. Petitioner argues that the amounts she reported as the values of her interest in the Canadian corporations represent the value of her equity and debt investments combined. Because the corporations did not have sufficient assets to repay the debts to petitioner on demand, she treated these loans as worthless in calculating her net worth. Financial difficulties of a debtor, however, do not always indicate worthlessness of a debt. See Prod. Steel, Inc. v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1979–361. Petitioner did not introduce any [*22] evidence besides corporate financial statements that would give us any basis to conclude that petitioner's loans were indeed worthless and should be disregarded in the computation of petitioner's net worth. Petitioner also did not produce any evidence that she and the debtor corporations treated the loans as worthless for tax or any other purposes for 2011 or prior tax years.[6] To the contrary, in 2011 both Canadian corporations still listed the loans made by petitioner as outstanding.

Thus, we conclude that the costs of acquisition for the notes representing the loans made by petitioner equal the values of the loans reported on the books of the Canadian corporations. Contrary to petitioner's assertion, there is no evidence that the loans were indeed worthless at the time of filing the petition in the innocent spouse case. On the basis of the notes alone, petitioner's net worth far exceeds the $2 million limit set by the Equal Access to Justice Act, 28 U.S.C. sec. 2412(d)(2)(B), as incorporated by section 7430(c)(4)(A)(iii).

[*23] Next, respondent also introduced evidence showing that petitioner had two bank accounts with the Bank of Montreal in 2011. The maximum value of these accounts according to the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBAR) petitioner filed for the 2011 tax year totaled $360,237. We do not express any opinion on whether the maximum value of bank accounts reported on the FBAR fairly represented the amounts in these accounts as of December 23, 2011, the filing date of the petition in the innocent spouse case. We note, however, that this evidence casts serious doubt on the veracity of the information petitioner provided to prove she met the net worth requirements.

Under the circumstances, we find that petitioner's net worth exceeded the $2 million statutory limit. Thus, petitioner's motion for litigation or administrative costs in the innocent spouse case must be denied. See Minahan v. Commissioner, 88 T.C. at 497 (stating that failure to meet any of the requirements of section 7430 precludes an award of costs).

V. Conclusion

In reaching our holdings, we have considered all arguments made, and to the extent not mentioned above, we conclude they are moot, irrelevant, or without merit.

[*24] To reflect the foregoing,

Appropriate orders will be entered.

All Citations

T.C. Memo. 2016-27, 2016 WL 702320, 111 T.C.M. (CCH) 1111, T.C.M. (RIA) 2016-027, 2016 RIA TC Memo 2016-027

Footnotes

[*] This opinion supplements our previously filed opinion Angle v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2015–92.

[1] Unless otherwise indicated, section references are to the Internal Revenue Code in effect at all relevant times, and Rule references are to the Tax Court Rules of Practice and Procedure.

[2] The fourth case pertained to respondent's collection efforts for petitioner and Mr. Angle's excise tax liability under sec. 1491 for 1995. On August 13, 2012, petitioner filed a petition in this Court seeking review of respondent's collection activities, which was assigned docket No. 20240–12L. On September 12, 2013, the Court entered a stipulated decision setting forth the parties' agreement that respondent's determinations regarding the collection of petitioner's excise tax liability would not be sustained.

[3] Petitioner seems to raise the issue that she substantially prevailed for the purposes of sec. 7430(c)(4)(A) for the first time in the reply to response to second supplemental affidavit of William E. Taggart, Jr., filed on December 28, 2015. We note that motions to reconsider or vacate are not an appropriate forum for advancing new legal theories to reach the end result desired by the movant. See Estate of Quick v. Commissioner, 110 T.C. 440, 441–442 (1998). Petitioner's argument is untimely, and thus we will not consider it.

[4] The names of the corporations are 482019 British Columbia LTD and Bonn & Graff LTD.

[5] Financial statements of 482019 British Columbia LTD for 2011 show that petitioner lent the company 3,121,294 Canadian dollars (CAD). Financial statements of Bonn & Graff LTD for 2011 show that petitioner lent the company 455,576 CAD. After converting these amounts to U.S. dollars at the rates specified in the respective financial statements, we arrive at the total of $3,508,009.47.

[6] It is not likely petitioner could have claimed a deduction for worthless securities because the loans did not satisfy the requirements of sec. 165(g)(2)(c) as they were not in registered form and did not have any interest stated. It is also not likely petitioner could have claimed a deduction for worthless debt under sec. 166 because there is no indication she tried to collect on the debts at all. See Brewer v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1992–530.

End of Document

142 F.Supp.3d 37
United States District Court,
District of Columbia.

United States of America Plaintiff,
v.
All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Company, Ltd., Guernsey Branch, Account Number 121128, in the name of Pavlo Lazarenko et al., Defendants in Rem.

Civil Action No. 04–798 (PLF/GMH)
|
Signed 11/03/2015

Synopsis
Background: Government brought civil forfeiture action against assets in various foreign bank accounts of claimant, the former Prime Minister of Ukraine, alleging that the assets were traceable or otherwise related to criminal activity that occurred at least in part in the United States. Government moved to compel production of claimant's tax records and other financial documents.

Holdings: The District Court, G. Michael Harvey, United States Magistrate Judge, held that:

[1] claimant's tax returns were relevant;

[2] statutory prohibition on disclosure of tax returns by government employees does not govern government's attempt to obtain tax returns from private litigants in civil discovery;

[3] claimant's tax returns were not protected from discovery by any common-law qualified privilege; and

[4] claimant's pretrial services records and presentence investigation report were not discoverable.

Motion granted in part and denied in part.

Attorneys and Law Firms

38 Daniel Hocker Claman, Della Grace Sentilles, Hector G. Bladuell, Teresa Carol Turner–Jones, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, Nalina Sombuntham, U.S. Attorney's Office, Miami, FL, for Plaintiff.

Bryant Everett Gardner, Winston & Strawn LLP, Washington, DC, Doron Weinberg, Weinberg & Wilder, San Francisco, CA, for Defendants In Rem.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

G. MICHAEL HARVEY, United States Magistrate Judge

On March 26, 2015, this case was referred to the undersigned for purposes of management of discovery and resolution of any discovery-related disputes. Currently ripe for resolution by the undersigned is plaintiff's motion to compel Claimant Pavel Lazarenko to produce certain tax records and other financial documents. After a thorough review of the parties' briefs and the entire record herein, the Court will grant in part and deny in part plaintiff's motion. [1]

BACKGROUND

The factual background concerning this eleven-year-old in rem asset forfeiture action has been described in multiple opinions by Judge Friedman. See, e.g., 39 United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co., Ltd., 772 F.Supp.2d 191, 194 (D.D.C.2011). [2] This Court will not repeat that lengthy history here. The facts that are pertinent to the adjudication of Claimant's motion are summarized below.

In its First Amended Complaint, the United States seeks the forfeiture of more than $250 million deposited in over twenty bank accounts located in Guernsey, Antigua and Barbuda, Switzerland, Lithuania, and Lichtenstein. First Amended Complaint [Dkt. 20] at ¶¶ 1, 5. The government alleges that the money in those accounts is traceable to a "variety of acts of fraud, extortion, bribery, misappropriation, and/or embezzlement" committed by Claimant, the former Prime Minister of the Ukraine, or by his associates, between 1992 and 1999. Id. at ¶¶ 6, 8, 10. The United States asserts its right to the funds pursuant to federal statutes that provide for the forfeiture to the government of funds traceable, or otherwise related to or involved in, criminal activity that occurred at least in part in the United States. Id. at ¶ 1.

On October 16, 2014, plaintiff propounded several requests for production on Claimant. Mot. at 7. Request No. 28 requested that Claimant:

> Produce all documents and communications relating to personal income tax returns, business tax returns, and Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBARs) filed with or submitted to the United States Government or any State of the United States of America by or on your behalf or any legal entity in which you claim an interest for the years 1992 to date.

Id. Similarly, Request No. 29 requested that Claimant:

> Produce all documents and communications submitted to the Government of the United States of America, any State of the United States of America or any other foreign or domestic government office concerning your income or assets, including but not limited to any financial disclosure documents, tax returns, or other statements of income you have submitted to any government between January 1, 1992 and the present.

Id.

Claimant responded to the government's requests with several general objections, which stated that Claimant objected "to any and all Document Requests to the extent that they are overly broad, seek information that is irrelevant, ... are unduly burdensome, ... are not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence, are oppressive, and are propounded merely to harass or annoy Claimant." Opp. at 2. Further, Claimant objected "to any and all Document Requests to the extent they purport to require the disclosure of material or information that exceeds the scope of discovery permitted under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure" and "to the extent they seek information and documents from before January 1, 1993 or after October 19, 1999." Id.

Claimant also made several specific objections. With respect to Request No. 28, Claimant responded, "Claimant objects to this request to the extent that it requires the production of records subject to 26 U.S.C. § 6103. Claimant is not in possession of any FBAR records." Id. at 8. As to Request No. 29, Claimant responded, > Claimant objects to this request to the extent it is duplicative of Request No. 40 28. Claimant also objects to this request to the extent it seeks confidential information provided to the U.S. Probation Office, Pretrial Services and the IRS. Claimant further objects to the extent that this request requires him to contact the U.S. Courts to obtain records that he does not possess.

>
> The following privileged documents are in Claimant's possession and otherwise not governed by 26 U.S.C. § 6103:

Date	Description
August 2013	Financial Statement to U.S. Probation Office
October 2013	Financial Statement to U.S. Probation Office

*Id.*After unsuccessfully attempting to resolve its dispute with Claimant, plaintiff brought the instant motion. See id. at 8–11.

In its motion, the government makes three arguments. First, it argues that Claimant has waived any objection based on the relevance of the requested records because he did not assert a relevance objection specifically in response to either request. Mot. at 12–13. Second, plaintiff claims that even if relevance was at issue, Claimant's tax records are relevant as to numerous issues, including: (1) whether Claimant can establish an interest in the defendant assets; (2) whether Claimant can offer a legitimate source for the portions of the assets he claims; (3) whether Claimant obtained any claimed assets illegally; and (4) whether forfeiture of the defendant assets is appropriate. Id. at 17–18. Finally, plaintiff contends that section 6103 does not bar discovery here because it governs only government employees who are involved in tax administration, not Claimant. Id. at 14. Plaintiff further argues that no other common-law privilege protects Claimant's tax records from disclosure. Id. at 15.

Claimant opposes the motion, arguing that his tax records are not discoverable. First, Claimant represents that he has no financial records for fiscal years 1992 to 1999 and so he cannot respond to that portion of plaintiff's requests. Opp. at 3. Second, Claimant argues that any records from 2000 to present are not relevant in this action. Id. at 3. As part of this argument, Claimant appears to suggest that his general relevance objections are sufficient to preserve his relevance objections as to the specific requests at issue here. See id. at 2.

On the substance of the requests, Claimant argues that he has no tax records for years 2000 to present except his tax returns, his statements in his criminal case to United States Pretrial Services, and his Presentence Investigation Report. Id. at 3. As to the Pretrial Services records and Presentence Investigation Report, Claimant refuses to produce them because he believes they are confidential under 18 U.S.C. § 3153(c)(2) and Local Rule 32–7 of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. Id. at 4. Further, Claimant argues that any of his tax returns from 2000 to present are irrelevant here because: (1) he does not need them to establish his standing to intervene in this case, id. at 5–8; (2) the fact that he did not file tax returns for certain years is not necessarily evidence of illegality, id. at 10–16; (3) disclosure of such records by the IRS to the government would violate section 6103, id. at 16–18; and (4) Claimant has a qualified, common-law privilege to withhold his tax returns, id. at 8–10. Finally, Claimant contends that section 6103 prohibits disclosure of his tax records 41 to plaintiff in this civil forfeiture action because the statute requires that the records be relevant before they can be released. Id. at 16–17.

In its reply, the government reiterates its argument that Claimant has waived any relevance objections by failing to make them specifically in reference to the requests at issue. Reply at 3–4. Additionally, plaintiff claims that Claimant should be compelled to obtain his Ukrainian tax records from 1992 to 1999 from the relevant Ukrainian authorities for production to plaintiff. Id. at 4–6. Plaintiff further demands that if Claimant has not filed tax returns for the relevant years, he must affirmatively state as much. Id. at 5. Moreover, the government argues that even if Claimant enjoyed a qualified privilege to withhold his tax returns, the government has met its burden to overcome that privilege—namely, by establishing that the records are relevant and are not available from another source. Id. at 6–12. Finally, the government observes that many of Claimant's arguments go to merits of the government's forfeiture claim or Claimant's intervention and not to whether the records at issue meet the low bar required for discovery. Id. at 14–19.

LEGAL STANDARD

[1] [2] [3] It has long been recognized that, "[u]nder the broad sweep of Rule 26(b)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party 'may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved.' " Friedman v. Bache Halsey Stuart Shields, Inc., 738 F.2d 1336, 1348–49 (D.C.Cir.1984) (quoting Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(1)). If a party objects to a request for production of documents under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 34(a)(1), the requesting party may move for an order compelling disclosure of the withheld material. Fed.R.Civ.P. 37(a). The party that brings the motion to compel "bears the initial burden of explaining how the requested information is relevant." Jewish War Veterans of the United States of America, Inc. v. Gates, 506 F.Supp.2d 30, 42 (D.D.C.2007). The burden then shifts to the non-moving party "to explain why discovery should not be permitted." Id. If a party has withheld documents on the grounds that they are privileged, the withholding party "bears the burden of proving the communications are protected." In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263, 1270 (D.C.Cir.1998).

DISCUSSION

Plaintiff has met its burden in establishing that the tax and other financial records requested in Requests for Production Nos. 28 and 29 are discoverable for fiscal years 1992 to 1999. Consistent with the Court's prior orders, the Court finds that plaintiff has also met that burden with respect to records relating to fiscal years 2000 to the present, but only for the limited purpose of discovering information relating to Claimant's standing to intervene in this case. Additionally, the Court finds that 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and common-law protections for tax records do not shield Claimant from the government's discovery requests. Nevertheless, the undersigned will not order Claimant to produce his Pretrial Services records and Presentence Investigation Report from the Northern District of California, as those documents are subject to special statutory and court-imposed protections.

A. Relevance Objections and Waiver

As a threshold matter, the government argues that Claimant has waived any relevance objections to Requests for Production No. 28 and 29. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 34(b)(2)(B) requires a party responding to a request for production to state objections within 30 days of service. Fed.R.Civ.P. 34(b)(2)(A)-(B). Plaintiff 42 claims that Claimant's general, blanket relevance objection, stated at the beginning of his responses, is insufficient under Rule 34 to apply to any specific request made by plaintiff. There may well be merit in plaintiff's suggestion. See DL v. Dist. of Columbia, 251 F.R.D. 38, 43 (D.D.C.2008); Hanwha Azdel, Inc. v. C & D Zodiac, Inc., No. 12–cv–00023, 2013 WL 3660562, at *5 (W.D.Va. July 11, 2013) (relevance objections waived because the party generally objected "to the extent [the request] seeks information that is not relevant"); Sonnino v. Univ. of Kan. Hosp. Auth., Inc., 221 F.R.D. 661, 666–67 (D.Kan.2004) ("This Court has on several occasions 'disapproved [of] the practice of asserting a general objection 'to the extent' it may apply to particular requests for discovery.' ... Thus, this Court has deemed such 'ostensible' objections waived, or declined to consider them as objections.").

[4] Nevertheless, the Court need not determine whether Claimant has waived his relevance objections because the Court finds that the objections fail on the merits. In its prior order of July 20, 2015, the undersigned rejected similar objections by Claimant. See July 20, 2015 Order at 25–29. There, Claimant objected to several interrogatories by plaintiff which requested, inter alia, that Claimant explain the source of funds from which the in rem assets were derived, Claimant's income during fiscal years 1992 to 1999, and the reasons that the sources of funds provided income or assets to Claimant. Id. at 25. Claimant objected that the interrogatories were overbroad. Id. at 26. The undersigned found otherwise, reasoning that the sources of funds from which the in rem assets were derived and the reasons that each source provided those funds to Claimant are issues "at the very heart of the government's case." Id. The undersigned therefore found that "[t]he government is clearly entitled to discover" the information it sought. Id.

Similarly, the undersigned later observed that "Claimant's income and assets during the relevant time period, and the reasons that each source provided the income or assets to him" were discoverable. Id. at 27. The undersigned reasoned that because the government alleged that Claimant amassed huge wealth between 1992 and 1999 while reporting only a miniscule income, the government was entitled to discover the nature and cause of the disparity. Id. Indeed, that disparity, "if proven true, itself [would be] evidence of the illegality the government is seeking to prove in this action." Id. at 28 (citing United States v. $185,000, 455 F.Supp.2d 145, 155 (E.D.N.Y.2006)). Claimant's bare assertion that his income was legitimate was insufficient to resist discovery; instead, the undersigned found that "Claimant's assertion may be tested by the government through discovery." Id. Finally, the undersigned found that the government, based on the allegations in its Amended Complaint, was entitled to discover "the corporate entities and bank accounts Claimant was using" during the time period at issue—1992 to 1999. Id. at 29. However, the undersigned rejected the government's attempt to discover such information for fiscal years 2000 to present. Id.

The undersigned's prior ruling frames the discussion of the instant motion because the issues raised in the prior ruling—i.e., the source and legitimacy of Claimant's income and assets—are also implicated by the requests at issue here. First, as to fiscal years 1992 to 1999, the undersigned, consistent with the Court's prior order, finds that the tax records plaintiff seeks are relevant. As the undersigned has previously held, records relating to the source of Claimant's assets and income during that period lie "at the very heart of the government's case." Id. at 25. Such records are relevant to establishing: 43 (1) whether Claimant's income during the period matches the quantum of assets he claims here, see United States v. $30,670, 403 F.3d 448, 466 (7th Cir.2005); United States v. $174,206, 320 F.3d 658, 662 (6th Cir.2003); (2) whether Claimant can prove that his income sources were legitimate, see United States v. $21,055, 778 F.Supp.2d 1099, 1105 (D.Kan.2011); United States v. Cunningham, 520 Fed.Appx. 413, 415 (6th Cir.2013); and (3) whether Claimant failed to file tax returns at all, a fact which may support forfeiture of the defendant assets, see $174,206, 320 F.3d at 662; Cunningham, 520 Fed.Appx. at 415. At minimum, plaintiff's requests for these records are reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence on these issues. No more is required under the liberal discovery standard embodied in Rule 26. July 21, 2015 Order at 31 ("[D]iscovery may be obtained of any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to a claim or defense or is reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.") (citing Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(1)); Friedman v. Bache Halsey Stuart Shields, Inc., 738 F.2d 1336, 1348–49 (D.C.Cir.1984); Food Lion v. United Food & Commercial Workers Int'l Union, 103 F.3d 1007, 1012 (D.C.Cir.1997).

As noted above, Claimant represents that he has no tax records for fiscal years 1992 to 1999. Opp. at 3. Because the Court compels him to respond to the government's discovery requests at issue here, Claimant must produce any such records in conformity with the requirements of Rule 34. That Rule allows the requesting part to obtain documents which are in the responding party's "possession, custody, or control." Fed.R.Civ.P. 34(a)(1). "With regards to the term 'control,' it has been well established that the test for control is not defined as mere possession, but as the legal right to obtain such documents on demand." Tequila Centinela, S.A. de C.V. v. Bacardi & Co., Ltd., 242 F.R.D. 1, 8 (D.D.C.2007) (citing Alexander v. FBI, 194 F.R.D. 299, 304 (D.D.C.2000)); Tavoulareas v. Piro, 93 F.R.D. 11, 20 (D.D.C.1981); Kifle v. Parks & History Ass'n, No. Civ.A. 98–00048(CKK), 1998 WL 1109117, at *1 (D.D.C. Oct. 15, 1998) (rejecting a party's "attempt to evade their discovery obligations by simply claiming that they do not possess the records sought"); see also 8A Charles A. Wright, Arthur R. Miller, & Richard L. Marcus, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2210 (2d ed. 1994) ("Inspection can be had if the party to whom the request is made has the legal right to obtain the document, even though in fact it has no copy"). Accordingly, the Court will direct that Claimant supplement his responses to the requests at issue here (and, indeed, his responses to all other requests for production in this case) not only with those documents he has in his immediate possession but also with those documents within his "control" as contemplated in Rule 34, including any tax records Claimant can obtain from the United States and Ukraine filed by or on Claimant's behalf or on behalf of any legal entity in which Claimant has an interest.

[5] Second, the Court finds persuasive plaintiff's argument in the instant motion that Claimant's 2000 to present tax records are relevant to the issue of standing. United States v. $290,000, 249 Fed.Appx. 730, 732 (10th Cir.2007); United States v. $38,000, 816 F.2d 1538, 1543–44 n. 12 (11th Cir.1987) (holding that because a forfeiture action is brought against the rem and not the claimant, the claimant bears the burden of proving that "he has a legally cognizable interest in the property that will be injured if the property is forfeited to the government. It is this claim of injury that confers upon the claimant the requisite 'case or controversy' standing to contest the forfeiture"); 44 U.S. v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co., Ltd., 959 F.Supp.2d 81, 95 (D.D.C.2013) ("Establishing standing requires ... that the claimant demonstrate 'a colorable interest in the property, for example, by showing actual possession, control, title, or financial stake.' "). Claimant argues that there is already ample evidence in the record that he has standing. Opp. at 6. Yet, under the broad scope of discovery embodied in Rule 26, the government is permitted to take further discovery on this issue to contest Claimant's evidence. Likewise, although Claimant argues that he was not required to file tax returns during this period in relation to the in rem assets or that he has a good-faith defense to his failure to file, id. at 15–16, such arguments are better addressed on the merits of Claimant's standing, not the scope of discovery.

Nevertheless, the 2000 to present records are relevant only for the limited purpose of adjudicating Claimant's standing, i.e., only to the extent they bear on the question of Claimant's interest in defendant assets. As such, the undersigned will not authorize the government carte blanche to obtain all tax records from 2000 to present responsive to government's Request for Production No. 28. Rather, the undersigned finds relevant only those tax records, filed by or on Claimant's behalf or on behalf of any legal entity in which Claimant has an interest, which evidence an interest in, reflect income from, reflect income traceable to, or mention the defendant in rem assets. [3]

B. Privilege

Claimant's second argument to avoid disclosure of his tax records involves claims of privilege, both statutory and common-law. Neither provides Claimant a sound basis to refuse to respond to plaintiff's requests. Because the scope of each type of privilege is different, they will be treated separately below.

1. Section 6103

Claimant argues that section 6103 prohibits disclosure of his tax records to the government in this case. In his objections to Requests No. 28 and 29, Claimant did not identify any particular subsection of section 6103 which operates to prohibit the disclosure of his tax records. In the government's motion, it argues that subsection (a) does not apply because it controls only disclosure of tax returns by government employees, which of course Claimant is not. Mot. at 15. In his opposition, Claimant relies on a different subsection—subsection (i)—which limits the ability of government attorneys to access tax returns and tax return information. Opp. at 16. Subsection (i) provides, in relevant part:

> (i)(1)(A) Disclosure to Federal officers or employees for administration of Federal laws not relating to tax administration.—Disclosure of returns and return information for use in criminal investigations.—In general.—Except as provided in paragraph (6), any return or return information with respect to any specified taxable period or periods shall, pursuant to and upon the grant of an ex parte order by a Federal district court judge or magistrate under subparagraph (B), be open (but only to the extent necessary as provided in such order) to inspection by, or disclosure to, officers and employees of any Federal agency who are personally and directly engaged in—
>
> (i) preparation for any judicial or administrative proceeding pertaining to the enforcement of a specifically designated Federal criminal statute (not involving tax administration) to which the United 45 States or such agency is or may be a party,
>
> (ii) any investigation which may result in such a proceeding, or
>
> (iii) any Federal grand jury proceeding pertaining to enforcement of such a criminal statute to which the United States or such agency is or may be a party, > solely for the use of such officers and employees in such preparation, investigation, or grand jury proceeding.
>
>
> ...
>
> (4)(A) Returns and taxpayer return information.—Except as provided in subparagraph (C), any return or taxpayer return information obtained under paragraph (1) or (7)(C) may be disclosed in any judicial or administrative proceeding pertaining to enforcement of a specifically designated Federal criminal statute or related civil forfeiture (not involving tax administration) to which the United States or a Federal agency is a party—
>
> (i) if the court finds that such return or taxpayer return information is probative of a matter in issue relevant in establishing the commission of a crime or the guilt or liability of a party, or
>
> (ii) to the extent required by order of the court pursuant to section 3500 of title 18, United States Code, or rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Id. 26 U.S.C. §§ 6103(i)(1)(A), (4)(A).

[6] This Court finds that section 6103 provides no basis for Claimant to avoid discovery requests in this civil case because that section only regulates disclosure of tax returns by the IRS, not private litigants. First, as a matter of text, the statute only purports to prohibit disclosure of tax returns by government employees. See id. § 6103(a). Subsection (i) opens a narrow exception to that rule by permitting disclosure to other government agencies when necessary for investigation and litigation. See id. § 6103(i)(1)(A). Contrary to Claimant's argument, subsection (i) does not govern attempts by the government to obtain tax returns from private litigants in civil discovery. Instead, it only controls attempts by the government to obtain tax returns directly from the IRS.

Second, the Court finds that the weight of case authority similarly holds that section 6103 did not enact a limitation on civil discovery. See Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Collins, 997 F.2d 1230, 1233 (7th Cir.1993) ("[Section 6103] does not block access, through pretrial discovery or otherwise, to copies of tax returns in the possession of litigants; all it prevents is the IRS's sharing tax returns with other government agencies."); United States v. $644,860, No. 05–cv–4055, 2007 WL 1164361, at *1 (C.D.Ill. April 19, 2007) ("[Section 6103] does not apply to the discovery at issue [because] Plaintiff sought the tax returns from the claimants, not from a federal agency, employee, or other person designated by the statute."); United States ex rel. Carthan v. Sheriff, City of New York, 330 F.2d 100, 101 (2d Cir.1964) ("Disclosure by the taxpayer himself of his copies of returns is not an unauthorized disclosure, even though it be made by reason of legal compulsion."); United States v. Art Metal–U.S.A., Inc., 484 F.Supp. 884, 887 (D.N.J.1980) ("Nothing in [section 6103] or in its legislative history can be reasonably regarded as barring any agency of the United States from gaining [tax returns] where relevant to an administrative investigation or to civil discovery."); Stokwitz v. United States, 831 F.2d 893, 896 (9th Cir.1987) ("[T]here is no indication in either the language of section 6103 or its legislative history that Congress intended to enact a general prohibition against public disclosure of tax information."); Heathman v. District Court, 503 F.2d 1032, 1035 (9th Cir.1974) ("[Section 6103] only restricts the dissemination of 46 tax returns by the government and ... does not otherwise make copies of tax returns privileged."); Gutescu v. Carey Intern, Inc., No. 01–4026–CIV, 2003 WL 25589038, at *1 (S.D.Fla. Aug. 29, 2003) ("The argument that sections 6103 and 7213 preclude the Court's power to order tax returns produced pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 26 borders on the frivolous."). Indeed, even the Gattegno decision, which includes a lengthy discussion of the common-law privilege for tax returns, discussed further below, found that section 6103 is "not a valid basis for protection" of tax returns. Gattegno v. Pricewaterhousecoopers, LLP, 205 F.R.D. 70, 71 (D.Conn.2001) (emphasis omitted); see also Zuniga v. Western Apartments, No. CV 13–4637 JFW(JCx), 2014 WL 2599919, at *11 (C.D.Cal. Mar. 25, 2014). Likewise, the court in Art Metal observed that if courts applied section 6103 as broadly as Claimant asks this Court to do here, it "would effectively change the rules of civil discovery." Art Metal, 484 F.Supp. at 887. Claimant cites to no cases holding otherwise, and the undersigned has found no case applying subsection (i) to bar discovery in an ongoing civil case.

One additional issue arose during the briefing of this motion. In its motion, the government requested that this Court order Claimant to sign a release allowing it to obtain his tax records directly from the IRS. Mot. at 24. Claimant opposes signing a release, relying on section 6103. Opp. 16–18. Regardless of the application of that statute, the Court will deny the government's request. The government cites only two cases in which a court ordered a party to sign a release permitting the opposing party to seek tax information directly from the IRS. Kelley v. Billings Clinic, Cv. No. 12–14, 2013 WL 1414442, at *7 (D.Mont. Apr. 8, 2013); Powell v. Merrimack Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 80 F.R.D. 431, 433 (N.D.Ga.1978). In both cases, the party seeking the release had actually requested it in discovery. Here, the government has requested Claimant's tax records, not a release. See supra at 39. As such, the propriety of compelling Claimant to sign such a release is not properly before the Court at this time.[4] Therefore, Claimant must respond to the government's requests but the Court will not, at this time, order him to sign any release enabling the government to obtain his tax records on its own.

2. Common–Law Privilege

[7] In response to plaintiff's motion, Claimant argues that there exists a common-law qualified privilege against the disclosure of his tax returns. Opp. at 8–10. Claimant did not raise this privilege in his actual responses to plaintiff's requests. Claimant identified only section 6103, not any other privilege, common-law or otherwise, in his responses to Requests No. 28 and 29. Neither do his general objections contain any reference to this privilege. As a result, the undersigned finds Claimant's common-law privilege objection waived. 47 Peskoff v. Faber, 244 F.R.D. 54, 64 (D.D.C.2007) (objection to discovery request not raised in response can be considered waived); see also In re Veiga, 746 F.Supp.2d 27, 33–34 (D.D.C.2010) (proponent of a privilege "must adduce competent evidence in support of its claims" and "must offer more than just conclusory statements, generalized assertions, and unsworn averments of its counsel").

In any event, even if the objection was not waived, it is meritless. This Court has recently addressed the same "qualified privilege":

> With respect to income tax returns, courts, including this Court, acknowledge that they are "[']confidential communications between a taxpayer and the government.' " Am. Air Filter Co., Inc., v. Kannapell, No. 85–CV–3566, 1990 WL 137385, at *3 (D.D.C. Sept. 10, 1990) (quoting Fed. Sav. & Loan Ins. Co. v. Krueger, 55 F.R.D. 512, 514 (N.D.Ill.1972)). Accord Nat'l Gas Pipeline Co. of Am. v. Energy Gathering, Inc., 2 F.3d 1397, 1411 (5th Cir.1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1073, 114 S.Ct. 882, 127 L.Ed.2d 77 (1994). In the context of a discovery dispute, however, > the key issue remains one of relevance. In other words, "[w]hile the courts vary in their interpretations of the breadth of the statutory protection [afforded by the tax laws] ... most courts do not recognize the existence of a 'privilege' against disclosure ... rather [the courts] recognize a general federal policy limiting disclosure to appropriate circumstances." Eglin Fed. Credit Union v. Cantor, 91 F.R.D. 414, 416 (N.D.Ga.1981). In order to determine whether disclosure is appropriate, the court must conclude "(1) that the returns are relevant to the subject matter of the action; and (2) that there is a compelling need for the returns because the information contained therein is not readily otherwise obtainable." S.E.C. v. Cymaticolor Corp., 106 F.R.D. 545, 547 (S.D.N.Y.1985).

Robinson v. Duncan, 255 F.R.D. 300, 302 (D.D.C.2009). [5] As discussed in Robinson, although tax returns are not "privileged" in a formal sense, many courts recognize the important privacy and confidentiality concerns raised by their disclosure. Here, however, plaintiff has met its burden to demonstrate the relevance of certain of Claimant's tax records. See supra at 42–43.

Further, those tax records are not readily obtainable from other sources, creating a compelling need for plaintiff to seek them through discovery in this case. Indeed, it is section 6103 which creates this difficulty for the government because it prevents the IRS from disclosing any records to the government directly. 26 U.S.C. § 6103. Claimant's argument that "other evidence of [his] standing exists" misses the mark. Opp. at 10. The relevant question is not whether there is other evidence of Claimant's standing but whether there is other evidence of the information contained within his tax records.

The evidence Claimant points to falls well short of the sort of thorough, detailed information likely presented in his tax records regarding the nature, source, and amount of any income Claimant received from the defendant in rem assets. Although Claimant cites to testimony from various persons that certain assets belonged 48 to Claimant, this evidence does not give a complete picture of all the assets or all of Claimant's income. Moreover, Claimant does not provide this evidence in the form of exhibits to his brief, so the Court is left unable to verify his statements. In short, Claimant has not demonstrated that the information contained in his tax records is readily obtainable from other sources. Accordingly, no common-law privilege grants Claimant the ability to refuse to answer plaintiff's requests.

The undersigned also notes that any confidentiality concerns Claimant has relating to his tax records and tax information are largely assuaged by the existence of a protective order in this case. See Am. Air Filter Co., Inc. v. Kannapell, CIV. A. No. 85–3566, 1990 WL 137385, at *4 (D.D.C. Sept. 10, 1990) ("[T]he traditional privacy concerns are not present in this action [because] the plaintiff has offered to sign a confidentiality stipulation prohibiting disclosure of the returns...."). That protective order gives Claimant discretion to designate as confidential certain documents he produces in discovery. Without determining whether designating his tax returns as confidential is in fact appropriate, the undersigned observes that the protective order is arguably broad enough to permit such a designation.

C. Claimant's Pretrial Services Records and Presentence Investigation Report

[8] Although Claimant's tax records are properly discoverable in this case, Claimant's Pretrial Services records and Presentence Investigation Report, prepared in connection with his criminal prosecution in the Northern District of California, present additional concerns that militate against their disclosure. [6] In his opposition to the instant motion, Claimant argues that 18 U.S.C. § 3153 and California Criminal Local Rule 32–7 protect his Pretrial Services records and Presentence Investigation Report. Opp. at 3. The statute Claimant cites provides that "information obtained in the course of performing pretrial services functions in relation to a particular accused shall be used only for the purposes of a bail determination and shall otherwise be confidential." 18 U.S.C. § 3153(c)(1). Criminal Local Rule 32–7 in the Northern District of California states that "[a] presentence report, probation, supervised release report, violation report and related documents to be offered in a sentencing or violation hearing are confidential records of the Court. Except as otherwise required by Fed.R.Crim.P. 26.2, authorized by statute, federal rule or regulation or unless expressly authorized by order of the Court, such records shall be disclosed only to the Court, court personnel, the defendant, defense counsel and the attorney for the government in connection with sentencing, violation hearings, appeal or collateral review." N.D. Cal.Crim. L.R. 32–7(a).

The undersigned finds that section 3153 protects Claimant's confidential Pretrial Services records from the Northern District of California. Confidential treatment of pretrial services information is intended 49 to "protect [ ] the relationship between the pretrial services officer and the particular defendant. Defendants may be reluctant to cooperate with pretrial services officers unless assured of the confidentiality of the information they reveal to the officers. The courts, in turn, would receive only incomplete information." H.R. Conf. Rep. 97–792, at 8 (1982), reprinted in 1982 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2393, 2394. In the criminal context, the Second Circuit has observed that "a request by a third party for the pretrial services report of a government witness creates a tension between this confidentiality and the government's discovery obligations." United States v. Pena, 227 F.3d 23, 26 (2d Cir.2000). The Second Circuit held that courts should conduct in camera review of such records to determine if any information contained therein should be disclosed pursuant to the government's obligations under Brady, Giglio, and other cases. Id. In perhaps the only civil case applying section 3153, the Ninth Circuit—where the documents at issue here were created—found that even the First Amendment right of access to criminal trials is circumscribed by section 3153. Seattle Times Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for W. Dist. of Washington, 845 F.2d 1513, 1522 (9th Cir.1988). Although the Ninth Circuit's rulings are not binding on this Court, its application of section 3153 to the records of one of its own district courts is persuasive. Because courts closely guard the confidentiality of such records, even in the civil context, the undersigned will not compel Claimant to disclose his Pretrial Services records to plaintiff.

Similarly, although the undersigned doubts that this Court is bound by the local rules of another district court, this Court will not order the production of the presentence investigation report which the Northern District of California's rules seek to keep confidential. It is well-settled that presentence reports are usually highly confidential documents. See Beller v. United States, 221 F.R.D. 674, 679 (D.N.M.2003); United States v. Krause, 78 F.R.D. 203, 204 (E.D.Wis.1978). Presentence reports are therefore normally discoverable only on a showing of special need. U.S. Dep't of Justice v. Julian, 486 U.S. 1, 12, 108 S.Ct. 1606, 100 L.Ed.2d 1 (1988). Plaintiff has not attempted to make such a showing here. Moreover, to the extent plaintiff desires to discover the Presentence Investigation Report, the local rule cited by Claimant permits a request for disclosure to be made to the sentencing judge. See N.D. Cal.Crim. L.R. 32–7(b). If plaintiff truly desires a copy of the report, it should make that request in the Northern District of California.

CONCLUSION

Wherefore, for the foregoing reasons, plaintiff's Motion to Compel Production of Records [Dkt. 429] is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. An Order consistent with this Memorandum Opinion will be filed contemporaneously herewith.

All Citations

142 F.Supp.3d 37, 116 A.F.T.R.2d 2015-6650, 93 Fed.R.Serv.3d 387

Footnotes

[1] The relevant docket entries for purposes of this Memorandum Opinion are: (1) Plaintiff's Motion to Compel Production of Records ("Mot.") [Dkt. 429]; (2) Claimant Pavel Lazarenko's Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion to Compel ("Opp.") [Dkt. 447]; (3) Plaintiff's Reply in Support of Its Motion to Compel ("Reply") [Dkt. 454]; (4) July 20, 2015 Memorandum Opinion [Dkt. 417].

[2] See also United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co, Ltd., 772 F.Supp.2d 205 (D.D.C.2011); United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co. Ltd., 664 F.Supp.2d 97 (D.D.C.2009); United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co., Ltd., 571 F.Supp.2d 1 (D.D.C.2008).

[3] As with the 1992 to 1999 records, Claimant should be mindful of his obligations under Rule 34 when producing these records.

[4] Moreover, crafting an appropriate release in this case would likely be very difficult. Kelley and Powell are far simpler than the instant case. They each involve the tax records of one person with finances exponentially less complex than Claimant's. Kelley, 2013 WL 1414442, at *7; Powell, 80 F.R.D. at 433. Further, each involves requests tailored to a specific, easily identifiable timeframe. Kelley, 2013 WL 1414442, at *7; Powell, 80 F.R.D. at 433. Here, by contrast, a release requiring the IRS to produce records “consistent with this Order” would place a great interpretive burden on the IRS to determine which records should or should not be released. It is a burden which the IRS might well decline to undertake. The better approach is what the Court orders here: that Claimant must obtain his own tax records and produce those relevant portions required by the instant Order. Nevertheless, if the government can craft a release with manageable temporal and topical criteria, the Court can then consider whether to order Claimant to sign it.

[5] Some courts reject this heightened showing required for discovery of tax returns. See, e.g., Jackson v. N'Genuity Enter. Co., No. 09 C 6010, 2010 WL 4928912, at *2 (N.D.Ill. Nov. 29, 2010). Because the undersigned finds that plaintiff has met the higher standard endorsed in Robinson, the undersigned need not decide whether the lower standard is more in line with the text and purpose of Rule 26.

[6] Both plaintiff and Claimant make passing reference to records of the United States Probation Office for the Northern District of California. Mot. at 5; Opp. at 4. Neither party clearly defines what these records are. Claimant argues that he already produced these records, whatever their nature, in discovery during his prosecution. Opp. at 4. In its reply, the government does not challenge this assertion or press any other arguments related to the Probation Office records. Instead, the government only addresses the Pretrial Services records and Presentence Investigation Report. Reply at 19. Because neither party develops the facts or arguments related to Claimant's Probation Office records, the Court declines to rule on their discoverability at this time.

End of Document

741 F.3d 339
United States Court of Appeals,
Second Circuit.

In re GRAND JURY SUBPOENA
DATED FEBRUARY 2, 2012.
United States of America, Movant–Appellee,
v.
John Doe, Respondent–Appellant.

Docket No. 13–403–cv.
|
Argued: Aug. 22, 2013.
|
Decided: Dec. 19, 2013.

Synopsis
Background: United States sought order compelling John Doe respondent to comply with grand jury subpoena for foreign banking records for accounts in which respondent had a financial interest. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Joseph F. Bianco, J., 908 F.Supp.2d 348, granted government's motion to compel and held respondent in contempt but suspended the monetary sanction pending appeal. Respondent appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Wesley, Circuit Judge, held that required records exception to act of production doctrine was applicable.

Affirmed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

341 Robert S. Fink (Caroline Rule, Brian P. Ketcham, on the brief), Kostelanetz & Fink, LLP, New York, NY, for Appellant John Doe.

Alexander P. Robbins (Kathryn Keneally, Assistant Attorney General, Frank P. Cihlar, Chief, Criminal Appeals & Tax Enforcement Policy Section, Gregory Victor Davis, Attorney, Tax Division, United States Department of Justice, on the brief), for Loretta E. Lynch, United States Attorney for the Eastern District of New 342 York, Brooklyn, NY, for Appellee United States America.

Marc L. Greenwald, Cleland B. Welton II, Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, LLP, New York, NY, for Amicus Curiae New York Council of Defense Lawyers.

Before: WINTER, WESLEY, and CARNEY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

WESLEY, Circuit Judge:

John Doe appeals from a contempt order and an order compelling him to comply with a grand jury subpoena entered in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York (Joseph F. Bianco, Judge). With respect to any foreign bank accounts in which Doe has a financial interest, the subpoena seeks records that the Bank Secrecy Act("BSA") requires Doe to maintain. See 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420. Doe resists, asserting that the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination applies to his delivery of the requested documents. The district court held that requiring Doe to produce the subpoenaed documents, over his objections, did not violate Doe's right against self incrimination because the documents were "required records"—records whose creation and preservation serves a legitimate governmental regulatory interest. In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated February 2, 2012, 908 F.Supp.2d 348, 352 (E.D.N.Y.2012). Doe contends both that the "required records" doctrine no longer exists and that, if it does, it does not apply to his case. We are not persuaded and AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

Background

A federal grand jury in the Eastern District of New York issued a subpoena to Doe calling for him to produce records of his foreign bank accounts, including the names of the account holders, the banks, the account numbers, the type of the account, and the maximum value of the account [1] —all information that must by law be reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. 31 C.F.R. §§ 1010.350, 1010.420. Doe did not comply. The government moved to compel Doe to produce the documents and Doe continued to resist. The district court granted the government's motion. Subpoena Dated February 2, 2012, 908 F.Supp.2d 348. Doe still refused to comply, and thereafter the district court entered an order holding Doe in contempt for failure to produce the records. The court imposed a sanction (suspended pending his appeal) of $1,000 per day until he complies.

Discussion

Doe contends that the Fifth Amendment insulates him from a contempt order based on his refusal to comply. He claims that the grand jury's subpoena requires him either to produce documents that might incriminate him or to confirm that he failed to register his foreign bank accounts, 343 which itself could be incriminating. The government counters that while Doe might otherwise have legitimate Fifth Amendment concerns, the subject documents are records required by federal law, and that the government has a legitimate regulatory interest in requiring Doe, and others like him, to maintain records of offshore accounts. Accordingly, the government contends, it is entitled to demand that Doe produce the records. Thus, we are presented with the question of whether the subpoenaed records fall within the aptly named "required records" exception to the Fifth Amendment act of production privilege. We hold that it does.

I. The Act of Production Privilege under the Fifth Amendment

[1] The Fifth Amendment act of production privilege was first articulated in Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (1976). Fisher recognizes that the Fifth Amendment privilege might protect an individual from being required to produce documents, even if the documents' contents are not protected by the privilege, when the witness's simple act of producing the documents could be used against the witness—for example, in those cases when the simple fact that the witness possessed the documents would be incriminating.

In Fisher the Court addressed a consolidated challenge by two clients whose lawyers were compelled to produce their tax records. Accountants had prepared each client's tax records and given them to their respective clients, who in turn gave them to their attorneys for legal advice. 425 U.S. at 394, 96 S.Ct. 1569. The Court held:

> The act of producing evidence in response to a subpoena ... has communicative aspects of its own, wholly aside from the contents of the papers produced. Compliance with the subpoena tacitly concedes the existence of the papers demanded and their possession or control by the taxpayer. It also would indicate the taxpayer's belief that the papers are those described in the subpoena.

Id. at 410, 96 S.Ct. 1569. In Fisher, the only incriminating aspect of the documents was their content, not their existence. Id. at 412, 96 S.Ct. 1569. As a result, the privilege did not apply.

The Fisher Court noted that previously the "proposition that the Fifth Amendment prevents compelled production of documents over objection that such production might incriminate stem[med] from Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746 [(1886)]." 425 U.S. at 405, 96 S.Ct. 1569. However, the Court described Boyd's protections of private papers—heavily dependent on the theory that the privacy interests protected in the Fourth Amendment also figure in Fifth Amendment inquiries—as "a rule searching for a rationale consistent with the proscriptions of the Fifth Amendment against compelling a person to give 'testimony' that incriminates him." Id. at 409 96 S.Ct. 1569. Instead of reaffirming Boyd 's private/public distinction, Fisher articulated a new way of thinking about the Fifth Amendment privilege. [2]

344 Over 24 years after Fisher, the Court articulated a robust act of production privilege in United States v. Hubbell, a wire fraud prosecution stemming from the Whitewater investigation. 530 U.S. 27, 120 S.Ct. 2037, 147 L.Ed.2d 24 (2000). Hubbell resisted initial subpoenas by asserting his Fifth Amendment rights; the government granted him use immunity for the act of production and then indicted him based on the content—rather than the production—of the 13,120 pages of documents that he produced. Id. at 45, 120 S.Ct. 2037. The Court held that the content of the documents could not be used against Hubbell, in light of the testimonial nature of Hubbell's extensive efforts in identifying and producing them. Id. at 43–46, 120 S.Ct. 2037.

> The documents did not magically appear in the prosecutor's office like 'manna from heaven.' They arrived there only after respondent asserted his constitutional privilege, received a grant of immunity, and-under the compulsion of the District Court's order-took the mental and physical steps necessary to provide the prosecutor with an accurate inventory of the many sources of potentially incriminating evidence sought by the subpoena.

Id. at 42, 120 S.Ct. 2037. The Court differentiated Fisher, where "the IRS knew [that the subpoenaed documents] were in the possession of the taxpayers' attorneys." Id. at 44, 120 S.Ct. 2037. In Hubbell, the government had "not shown that it had any prior knowledge of either the existence or the whereabouts of the 13,120 pages of documents ultimately produced by respondent." Id. at 45, 120 S.Ct. 2037. "It was unquestionably necessary for respondent to make extensive use of 'the contents of his own mind' in identifying the hundreds of documents responsive to the requests in the subpoena." Id. at 43, 120 S.Ct. 2037 (quoting Curcio v. United States, 354 U.S. 118, 128, 77 S.Ct. 1145, 1 L.Ed.2d 1225 (1957)). The government was therefore forbidden to use even the contents of the records and the court affirmed the dismissal of the indictment. Id. at 46, 120 S.Ct. 2037.

[2] The privilege has thus evolved since its inception to a broader prophylactic regime that, in certain circumstances, protects individuals from producing documents where they are incriminated by the contents of the documents. See id. As applied, the privilege is practical; it inoculates people from being forced to contribute to their own prosecution while not unduly restricting grand juries' ability to seek the truth. Doe argues—and the government does not meaningfully contest—that absent an exception, the act of production privilege shields Doe from complying with the grand jury's subpoena.

II. The Required Records Doctrine

A. Background

1. Origins and Interpretations

The act of production privilege contains exceptions, and among them is the required records doctrine, first articulated in Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948). The required records exception applies only when the Fifth Amendment privilege would otherwise allow a witness to avoid producing incriminating documents. It abrogates the protection of the privilege for a subset of those documents that must be maintained by law.

Shapiro was a prosecution of a fruit purveyor for illegal pricing under the Emergency Price Control Act during the Second World War. Id. at 3, 335 U.S. 1. 345 Shapiro, the wholesaler, was served with a subpoena in September 1944 for invoices and other business information "required to be kept pursuant to [Section 14 of Maximum Price Regulation 426, 8 Fed.Reg. 9546 (1943)] 271 and 426." Id. at 4–5, 68 S.Ct. 1375. Although the Court acknowledged "that there are limits which the government cannot constitutionally exceed in requiring the keeping of records which may be ... used in prosecuting statutory violations committed by the record-keeper himself," the Court nonetheless compelled un-immunized disclosure of these documents. Id. at 32, 68 S.Ct. 1375.

[3] Subsequently, the Court set forth a three-factor test to determine whether documents are "required records." "[F]irst, the purposes of the United States' inquiry must be essentially regulatory; second, information is to be obtained by requiring the preservation of records of a kind which the regulated party has customarily kept; and third, the records themselves must have assumed 'public aspects' which render them at least analogous to public documents." Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968).

In Grosso 's sister case, the Court applied the three-factor test to find the required records exception inapplicable. Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968). Marchetti asserted his Fifth Amendment privilege in response to a prosecution under a statutory scheme that required illegal gamblers to register and pay an occupational tax. Id. at 41, 88 S.Ct. 697 (1968); see also Grosso, 390 U.S. at 64, 88 S.Ct. 709. Marchetti was not inclined to disclose his illegal gambling for good reason. By maintaining receipts of his illegal gambling successes (or failures) he admitted to a crime. Those who break the law understandably are unlikely to register their misdeeds with the government.

Even assuming that the "United States' principal interest [was] the collection of revenue, and not the punishment of gamblers," the Court found that Shapiro was distinguishable. Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. 697. The records were not "of the same kind as he has customarily kept;"[3] there were no "public aspects ... to the records at issue;" and the records were collected about a group largely or entirely defined by their illegal activities. Id. (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. 709 (deciding the same thing in the context of a gambler's refusal to pay excise taxes and the occupation tax because "[h]ere, as in Marchetti, the statutory obligations are directed almost exclusively to individuals inherently suspect of criminal activities"). Marchetti's refusal to comply with the statute was protected by the Fifth Amendment and not subject to the required records exception. Id. at 60, 88 S.Ct. 697. His conviction was overturned.

2. Interaction with the act of production privilege

Doe and amicus contend that the required records doctrine is no longer valid or that it applies only in exigent circumstances. To support this argument, they point out that Shapiro was a wartime case that drew heavily on the reasoning of Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 6 S.Ct. 524, 29 L.Ed. 746 (1886), which has been either reconfigured or abrogated by the Fisher 346 line of cases. Prior precedents of this Court squarely foreclose this argument.

Courts have consistently applied the required records doctrine and its analytical framework as an exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege, long after the expiration of any exigency. See, e.g., Baltimore City Dep't of Social Servs. v. Bouknight, 493 U.S. 549, 556–559, 110 S.Ct. 900, 107 L.Ed.2d 992 (1990). This Court has twice explicitly rejected the idea that the required records exception has been abrogated by the act of production cases. In re Two Grand Jury Subpoenae Duces Tecum Dated Aug. 21, 1985, 793 F.2d 69, 73 (2d Cir.1986) ("Two Subpoenae "); In re Doe, 711 F.2d 1187, 1192–93 (2d Cir.1983).

A psychiatrist associated with a clinic that freely distributed quaaludes to patients without medical need was required to turn over subpoenaed W–2 and prescription forms along with patient files. In re Doe, 711 F.2d at 1189. Conceding that "even Shapiro recognizes constitutional limits on the government's power to compel record keeping which might circumvent the privilege contained in the Fifth Amendment," we held that "there [wa]s a strong correlation between the purpose of the New York law which require[d] that patient files be kept and that for which their production [wa]s sought." Id. at 1192. Finally, we rejected the argument that the act of production privilege recognized in Fisher shielded the state-required records from disclosure:

> [T]he required records doctrine is an exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege. As such, it necessarily overrides the privilege in instances in which the privilege would otherwise apply. Fisher was not concerned with required records and nothing in its analysis could be construed as weakening the required records exception.

Id. at 1192–93 (emphasis in original, internal citations omitted).

[4] Three years later, an attorney appealed a contempt order entered because of his failure to comply with subpoenas related to contingency fee arrangements with his clients. Two Subpoenae, 793 F.2d at 70. After noting that the fee documents were not covered by the attorney-client privilege, this Court rejected the lawyer's Fifth Amendment argument based in part on the fact "that the subpoenaed retainer agreements and closing statements ... fall within the 'required records' exception to the fifth amendment." Id. at 73. Although the lawyer "claim[ed] that the 'required records' exception to the fifth amendment is no longer valid after the Supreme Court's decision in United States v. Doe, 465 U.S. 605 [104 S.Ct. 1237, 79 L.Ed.2d 552 (1984)]," we noted that "Doe did not involve required records, and [found] nothing in its 'act of production' analysis that c[ould] be construed as weakening the required records exception." Id. (internal citation omitted). We further explained the rationale for the required records exception:

> First, if a person conducts an activity in which record-keeping is required by statute or rule, he may be deemed to have waived his privilege with respect to the act of production—at least in cases in which there is a nexus between the government's production request and the purpose of the record-keeping requirement. Second, because the records must be kept by law, the record-holder 'admits' little in the way of control or authentication by producing them.

Two Subpoenae, 793 F.2d at 73.[4]

[5] Based in part on the Two Subpoenae reasoning, this Court still recognizes 347 the required records exception. In 2008, we applied the exception to information obtained from immigrants from specified countries who had responded to a mandatory registration program following the attacks of September 11, 2001. See Rajah v. Mukasey, 544 F.3d 427, 433, 442 (2d Cir.2008). Information obtained under this program was ultimately used by the government in the immigrants' deportation proceedings. This Court denied the immigrants' attempts to block the use of the records through the Fifth Amendment because "the Fifth Amendment's act of production privilege does not cover records that are required to be kept pursuant to a civil regulatory regime." Id. at 442. The required records exception remains a part of Fifth Amendment jurisprudence.

B. Application of the Required Records Doctrine to the BSA

[6] Applying the Grosso test, several circuits have specifically held that the required records exception applies to cases indistinguishable from the present cases. See United States v. Under Seal, 737 F.3d 330, No. 13–4267, 2013 WL 6511517 (4th Cir. Dec. 13, 2013); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, No. 4–10, 707 F.3d 1262 (11th Cir.2013); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d 428 (5th Cir.2012); In re Special February 2011–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated September 12, 2011, 691 F.3d 903 (7th Cir.2012); In re M.H., 648 F.3d 1067 (9th Cir.2011). For the reasons stated below, we agree with our sister circuits.

1. The "essentially regulatory" test

[7] [8] [9] The first Grosso prong asks whether the record requirement is "essentially regulatory." This precludes Congress from circumventing the Fifth Amendment privilege by enacting comprehensive legislation "directed at a 'selective group inherently suspect of criminal activities.' " Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. 697 (quoting Albertson v. Subversive Activities Control Bd., 382 U.S. 70, 79, 86 S.Ct. 194, 15 L.Ed.2d 165 (1965)). When legislation is not "directed at the public at large" and concerns "an area permeated with criminal statutes," courts are more likely to hold that the required records exception does not apply. Albertson, 382 U.S. at 79, 86 S.Ct. 194. In addition to illegal gambling, courts have declined to apply the required records exception to records regarding marijuana sales, ownership of dangerous firearms, and other "area[s] permeated with criminal statutes," Haynes v. United States, 390 U.S. 85, 99, 88 S.Ct. 722, 19 L.Ed.2d 923 (1968) (internal quotation marks omitted), but have applied the exception in the context of drivers involved in automobile accidents, custodians of state-supervised children, and even various sections of the BSA.

Determining the target population of a statute is frequently difficult. In California v. Byers, 402 U.S. 424, 430, 91 S.Ct. 1535, 29 L.Ed.2d 9 (1971), the Supreme Court examined a California statute in the context of "all persons who drive automobiles in California," despite the statute's facial applicability only to people who have been involved in automobile accidents resulting in damage to property. Id. "Driving an automobile, unlike gambling, is a lawful activity. Moreover, it is not a criminal offense under California law to be a driver 'involved in an accident.' " Id. at 431, 91 S.Ct. 1535.

348 Similarly, this Court upheld a conviction under the BSA for failure to report carrying over $5,000 in cash when leaving the country. United States v. Dichne, 612 F.2d 632, 633 (2d Cir.1979). We noted that the reporting requirement had incriminating potential while also serving legitimate social interests; as a result, "a balance must be struck between the competing interest of the state and the individual when evaluating the constitutionality of a disclosure requirement." Id. at 638 (citing Byers, 402 U.S. at 427, 91 S.Ct. 1535). Because "the transportation of such amounts of currency is by no means an illegal act" in itself, "as such [the statute] cannot be faulted as being aimed at an inherently suspect group." Id. at 639–40. "In each of the Supreme Court cases holding a reporting requirement invalid, the reporting individual was required to reveal to the Government information which would almost necessarily provide the basis for criminal proceedings against him for the very activity that he was required to disclose." Id. at 640. Insofar as transporting large amounts of money across international borders is indicative of other illegal activity, this is still short of requiring reporting from users of marijuana or gamblers, who would be reporting the exact activity for which they would be susceptible for prosecution.

Dichne and other cases concluding that the BSA's purpose is "essentially regulatory" are informative but not dispositive with respect to the provisions at issue here. Our inquiry is not whether the BSA as a whole was motivated by civil or criminal concerns, but rather whether the specific section in question is "essentially regulatory" or directed at " 'an area permeated with criminal statutes.' " Byers, 402 U.S. at 430, 91 S.Ct. 1535 (quoting Albertson, 382 U.S. at 79, 86 S.Ct. 194).

The record keeping regulation at issue here, 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420, targets those engaged in the lawful activity of owning a foreign bank account. "There is nothing inherently illegal about having or being a beneficiary of an offshore foreign bank account." M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074. Doe's protestations notwithstanding, owners of these accounts are not "inherently suspect" and the statute is "essentially regulatory."

Doe's argument that the statute is criminally focused has some force. The BSA declares that its purpose is "to require certain reports or records where they have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings, or in the conduct of intelligence or counterintelligence activities, including analysis, to protect against international terrorism." 31 U.S.C. § 5311. It does list "criminal investigations" first, but this multifaceted statute clearly contributes to civil and intelligence efforts wholly unrelated to any criminal purpose. [5]

349 Although portions of the statute's legislative history support Doe's characterization of the BSA as focused on criminal activity, "[t]he Supreme Court has already considered and rejected these arguments as they relate to the BSA generally." M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074 (citing Cal. Bankers' Ass'n v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 76–77, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 39 L.Ed.2d 812 (1974)). Moreover, "the question is not whether Congress was subjectively concerned about crime when enacting the BSA's recordkeeping and reporting provisions, but rather whether these requirements apply exclusively or almost exclusively to people engaged in criminal activity." Grand Jury Proceedings, No. 4–10, 707 F.3d at 1271; accord Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 434. Looking beyond "Congressional subjective intent"—if there could be such a thing—the BSA has considerable regulatory utility outside of the criminal justice context.

[10] The question becomes whether a statute with mixed criminal and civil purposes can be "essentially regulatory" with respect to the required records exception. We agree with our sister circuits: the fact "[t]hat a statute relates both to criminal law and to civil regulatory matters does not strip the statute of its status as 'essentially regulatory.' " Grand Jury Proceedings, No. 4–10, 707 F.3d at 1270. Because people owning foreign bank accounts are not inherently guilty of criminal activity, the BSA's applicable recordkeeping requirement, designed to facilitate "criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings, or [ ] the conduct of intelligence or counterintelligence activities," 31 U.S.C. § 5311, is still essentially regulatory.

Doe argues that our reliance on Dichne and other cases involving ex post challenges to the validity of statutory reporting requirements are distinguishable from individual assertions of the privilege against self-incrimination. These two categories of challenges are indeed distinct. However, Supreme Court precedent asks us to inquire into the purposes of the regulatory scheme pursuant to which records are required—a necessarily generalized inquiry, and a matter discussed in cases like Dichne, 612 F.2d at 640. Besides, in this case—as in Shapiro itself—the witness asserted the privilege against self-incrimination in response to the subpoena issued. See Shapiro, 335 U.S. at 4–5, 68 S.Ct. 1375. "Shapiro did more than set the constitutional parameters for record-keeping requirements; it determined that the Fifth Amendment is not a barrier to the enforcement of a valid civil regulatory scheme." Special February 2011–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated September 12, 2011, 691 F.3d at 907. The fact that the specific records sought would support a criminal prosecution did not defeat the "essentially regulatory" prong in that case; the analysis does not come out differently here. The BSA's recordkeeping requirement at issue, 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420, is "essentially regulatory" for the purposes of the required records analysis.

2. The "customarily kept" requirement

[11] The second Grosso prong requires that the regulated "information is to be obtained by requiring the preservation of records of a kind which the regulated party has customarily kept." 350 Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. 709.[6] Doe points to no cases in which any court has held that records are not required because they are not "customarily kept."

The records required by 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 are very basic—they "shall contain the name in which each [ ] account is maintained, the number or other designation of such account, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during the reporting period." In determining that the records at issue are "customarily kept," the district court relied in large part on the fact that another section of the BSA requires foreign account holders to report substantially identical information to the IRS. See 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350(a). Doe contends that this reasoning is "tautological" in that it permits Congress to manufacture a "custom" in order to satisfy the required records doctrine by requiring that the records be kept. We need not address whether, in another case, records "customarily kept" only because they are required by law satisfy the prerequisites of the required records doctrine.

Here, the grand jury's subpoena seeks information so basic that the "argument that these records are not 'customarily kept' is a non-starter." Grand Jury Proceedings, No. 4–10, 707 F.3d at 1273. "A bank account's beneficiary necessarily has access to such essential information as the bank's name, the maximum amount held in the account each year, and the account number." M.H., 648 F.3d at 1076. "[C]ommon sense" dictates that beneficiaries keep these records "in part because they need the information to access their foreign bank accounts." Id. The amount of money in the account is relevant to most foreign bank account holders in that many people are regularly forced to assess prospective purchases against the balance of their accounts. Most people check a bank account before making a major purchase; not everyone who holds a foreign bank account could, without a second thought, incur (for example) vast litigation costs in a feckless attempt to avoid paying lawfully-imposed taxes vital to the functioning of the United States without needing to assess whether losing such a challenge would leave them incapable of paying the inevitable hefty sanctions. And even if the account holder is a person of great wealth surely they want to know where that wealth is located.

Doe believes that, despite the basic presumption that bank account owners know the location of their money, some individuals engaged in wrongdoing are advised not to keep even this basic information.[7] But even if those who possess foreign bank accounts for the purposes of avoiding some specific U.S. tax or criminal laws may be less likely to maintain these records, the BSA covers the entire group of foreign bank account holders. We decline to look at the custom of only the miscreants 351 among the larger group of foreign bank account holders.

3. The "public aspects" prong

[12] The third Grosso prong asks whether the required records " 'have assumed 'public aspects' which render them at least analogous to public documents.' " Grand Jury Proceedings, No. 4–10, 707 F.3d at 1273 (quoting Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. 709). The parties dispute the meaning of the "public aspects" test, which—as a vestige of Boyd—may not have the same legal significance as it did in 1948, when the public/private distinction was of paramount importance. Cf. Fisher, 425 U.S. at 400–01, 96 S.Ct. 1569, Samuel A. Alito, Jr., Documents and the Privilege against Self–Incrimination, 48 U. PITT. L.REV.. 27, 36–44 (1986).

Doe urges us to hold that the test requires one of three factors: records have "public aspects" when they "are a direct mainstay of a regulatory scheme that promotes the public welfare," "are vital to a regulatory regime promulgated in response to emergency or other exigent conditions," or "are routinely forwarded to a regulatory or licensing body as a means of protecting the public." Doe Brief at 49–50. Although he cites to authority in support of the proposition that each of these is sufficient to establish "public aspects," we see no evidence that one of these three prongs must be met to conclude that the records have a "public aspect."

[13] "The Government's anxiety to obtain information known to a private individual does not without more render that information public. Nor does it stamp information with a public character that the Government has formalized its demands in the attire of a statute." Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. 697. Marchetti restricts Congress's ability to require records for the purpose of securing access to otherwise-private information. However, "records required to be kept pursuant to valid regulatory programs have a 'public aspect' for purposes of constitutional analysis, and thus are not private papers entitled to the protection of the fourth or fifth amendments." Donovan v. Mehlenbacher, 652 F.2d 228, 231 (2d Cir.1981). "Where personal information is compelled in furtherance of a valid regulatory scheme, as is the case here, that information assumes a public aspect." M.H., 648 F.3d at 1077.

[14] The rule distilled from Donovan and Marchetti is that records required to be created under an otherwise valid regulatory regime necessarily have "public aspects" for purposes of the required records exception to the Fifth Amendment production privilege. A constitutionally infirm statute cannot recharacterize private information as public. However, information that a statute lawfully requires a person to record is legally distinct from information that no statute lawfully requires anyone to record. This distinction is what the "public aspects" prong of the required records doctrine recognizes. The record need not be 'public' in that anyone can examine or copy it at any time; it need only be lawfully required to be kept.

Doe's argument that the exception applies only in areas in which there are already "substantive restrictions" in place is unpersuasive. "If the witness's argument were correct, then Congress would be prohibited from imposing the least regulatory burden necessary; it would instead be required to supplement a reporting or recordkeeping scheme with additional and unnecessary 'substantive restrictions' for the sole purpose of upholding its record keeping and reporting requirements." Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 436. It is enough that Congress could prohibit an activity to permit it to validly require records to be kept; it need not actively 352 prohibit—or otherwise significantly restrict—possession of foreign bank accounts to give force to its recordkeeping requirements.

The BSA is an otherwise-valid regulatory scheme that lawfully requires beneficiaries of foreign bank accounts to retain records containing the basic information about their accounts. 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420. This information, required by lawful statute, has the "public aspects" that make it potentially subject to a grand jury subpoena in a case where a witness could assert the Fifth Amendment privilege to shield more distinctly private information. The "required records" exception to the privilege therefore applies in this case.

* * *

Doe's additional arguments are unpersuasive. Doe asserts that production of records required to be kept may be compelled only when the record keeper sought a related government benefit or license and thus may fairly be said to have deliberately waived her Fifth Amendment privilege with respect to those records by engaging in the regulated activity. He declares that the Fifth Amendment cannot inadvertently be waived, and because (he asserts) beneficiaries of foreign bank accounts are frequently unaware of the BSA's recordkeeping requirements, they cannot be deemed to have waived their Fifth Amendment rights with respect to banking records.

[15] [16] Even if the latter assertion (regarding ignorance of the law's recordkeeping requirements) were true—a proposition that we seriously doubt—this argument fails for two reasons. First, the Supreme Court has strongly hinted that, while a waiver must be voluntary, there is no requirement "of any 'knowing' and 'intelligent' waiver" of Fifth Amendment rights. Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 237 n. 18, 93 S.Ct. 2041, 36 L.Ed.2d 854 (1973). Second, the Fifth Amendment is inapplicable where the testimonial act does not create a related risk of self-incrimination. Because the BSA only criminalizes a knowing and willful failure to engage in the required recordkeeping, an account owner who was truly unaware of the recordkeeping requirement would not incur related criminal sanctions by acknowledging in response to a production order his negligent failure to maintain the required records.[8] 31 U.S.C. § 5322. Thus, for the criminal provisions to apply in the first place, this must be a case where an "individual [ ] enters upon a regulated activity knowing that the maintenance of extensive records available for inspection by the regulatory agency is one of the conditions of engaging in the activity." Smith v. Richert, 35 F.3d 300, 303 (7th Cir.1994).

Finally, Doe's assertion that the government could obtain his records only by granting him immunity relies on the inapplicability of the required records exception; here, production of the required records could be compelled without first offering Doe immunity.

Conclusion

The required records exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination still exists. The BSA's requirements at issue here are "essentially 353 regulatory," the subpoenaed records are "customarily kept," and the records have "public aspects" sufficient to render the exception applicable. Because Doe cannot lawfully excuse his failure to comply with the subpoena, the district court was within its discretion to impose sanctions for his noncompliance.

For the foregoing reasons, the opinion and order of the district court is AFFIRMED.

All Citations

741 F.3d 339

Footnotes

[1] Specifically, the grand jury's subpoena requested production of:

> Any and all records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 (formerly 31 C.F.R. § 103.32) for the past 5 years relating to foreign financial bank, securities, or other financial accounts in a foreign country for which [Doe] had/ha[s] a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over and [is] required by law to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Account (FBAR). The records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 (formerly 31 C.F.R. § 103.32) include records that contain the name in which each such account is maintained, the number or other designation of such account, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during the reporting period.

[2] The precise extent to which Fisher and subsequent cases constituted a repudiation of Boyd and its reasoning is debated, but scholars appear to agree that the Court sought to find similar constitutional protections without relying on Boyd 's analysis. Compare Samuel A. Alito, Jr., Documents and the Privilege against Self–Incrimination, 48 U. PITT. L.REV.. 27, 51 (1986) ("While seeming to reject the entire framework on which Boyd rested, Fisher stopped short of expressly overruling Boyd") with RONALD JAY ALLEN ET AL., COMPREHENSIVE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE 308 (2d ed. 2005) ("The Court continued its reconstruction of Boyd in Fisher v. United States.").

[3] Indeed, it seems plausible that a gambler would not keep any records relating to his gambling activities. The Court needed only to note that the information required was "unrelated to any records which [Marchetti] may have maintained[ ] about his wagering activities." Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 57, 88 S.Ct. 697.

[4] Doe argues that the rationale for the survival of the required records doctrine does not apply in his case. However, we view this argument as relating to the applicability of the exception to his current case. Insofar as his attempt to distinguish Two Subpoenae challenges the continued existence of the required records exception, this argument has been squarely foreclosed by our prior precedents.

[5] Doe points out that the Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) lists the BSA as one of the tools that it uses to pursue its goals of criminal investigation. It is neither surprising nor persuasive that a law enforcement organization uses a multi-purposed statute for law enforcement ends. We assume that insofar as the Central Intelligence Agency uses the BSA, it uses it for intelligence and counter-intelligence purposes, while the Internal Revenue Service uses it for revenue collection purposes. Doe asserts that "[t]he government has never pointed to a 'regulatory' act that FinCEN performs with FBAR [Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Account] data." Doe Brief at 35. However, other agencies also use the data obtained through the challenged reports:

> The Treasury Department shares the information it collects pursuant to the Act's requirements with other agencies —including the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the National Credit Union Administration, and the Office of Thrift Supervision—none of which are empowered to bring criminal prosecutions.

Grand Jury Proceedings, No. 4–10, 707 F.3d at 1271 (quoting Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 434).

[6] Citing Bouknight, the Government urges us to hold that this is no longer a requirement of the required records doctrine. Although Bouknight did not discuss the second Grosso prong, it was an atypical "required records" case that does not dictate our analysis here, as the regulated “evidence” was Bouknight's infant. See 493 U.S. at 556–62, 110 S.Ct. 900. Perhaps the Bouknight Court did not feel it necessary to discuss whether a child is “customarily kept” by his parents. We need not decide this issue for the purposes of this opinion as the “customarily kept” prong is easily met here.

[7] Even if we were to look at only the customs of criminal circles, if a criminal don't have this information, how can he retrieve his ill gotten gains? He must either possess a photographic memory or well-encrypted devices hidden in some offshore location.

[8] Although it is not necessary to our resolution of this case in which Doe has not alleged ignorance of the BSA's recordkeeping requirements, the government's brief acknowledges that “an individual who was unaware that he was engaging in a regulated activity would not be able to establish a risk of self-incrimination in the first place.” Appellee Brief at 38 n. 17.

End of Document

2012 WL 4513653
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, D. Arizona.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Stephen M. KERR; Michael Quiel;
Christopher M. Rusch, Defendants.

No. CR 11–2385–PHX–JAT.
|
Oct. 2, 2012.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Monica B. Edelstein, Timothy J. Stockwell, U.S. Dept of Justice-Tax Division Criminal Enforcement, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

ORDER

JAMES A. TEILBORG, District Judge.

1 Pending before the Court is Defendants Quiel and Kerr's Joint Motion for Production of Special Agent's Report (Doc. 100). The Court now rules on the Motion. [1]

I. BACKGROUND

On December 8, 2011, Stephen Kerr ("Kerr"), Michael Quiel ("Quiel"), and Christopher M. Rusch ("Rusch") (collectively, "Defendants") were indicted for conspiracy to defraud the United States pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 371. Both Kerr and Quiel were charged separately with two counts of willful failure to file Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBARs") in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 5314 and § 5322(a), as well as two counts of willful filing of false returns for tax years 2007 and 2008 in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1). See Doc. 3.

During the course of the investigation of Defendants, Internal Revenue Service Agent Lisa Giovannelli prepared a Special Agent Report (the "Special Agent Report") relating to the investigation. During discovery, the Government produced all documents in the Government's possession "that had been received pursuant to grand jury subpoena [sic], tax returns and Internal Revenue Service documentation, and memoranda of interviews and grand jury transcripts for prospective witnesses." Doc. 101 at 2. The Government did not include, as part of the discovery, the Special Agent Report "or other internal memoranda or reports authored by the investigating agents or attorneys." Doc. 101 at 2. Defendants Quiel and Kerr now move the Court for an order directing the Government to disclose the Special Agent Report.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

"[A] defendant is not entitled to know all the evidence the government intends to produce, but only the theory of the government's case." United States v. Ryland, 806 F.2d 941, 942 (9th Cir.1986) (emphasis in original) (further holding, "[The defendant] is not entitled to know the content of the testimony of each of the government witnesses before trial."). However, Government disclosure of exculpatory evidence is required by Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215 (1963), and disclosure of other information is required by the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500. Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 16 also provides additional discovery rights.

Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 16 provides, in relevant part,

> Except as Rule 16(a)(1) provides otherwise, this rule does not authorize the discovery or inspection of reports, memoranda, or other internal government documents made by an attorney for the government or other government agent in connection with investigating or prosecuting the case. Nor does this rule authorize the discovery or inspection of statements made by prospective government witnesses except as provided in 18 U.S.C. § 3500.

Fed.R.Crim.P. 16(a)(2). Pursuant to the Jenckes Act, 18 U .S.C. § 3500,

> In any criminal prosecution brought by the United States, no statement or report in the possession of the United States which was made by a Government witness or prospective Government witness (other than the defendant) shall be the subject of subpoena, > discovery, or inspection until said witness has testified on direct examination in the trial of the case.

>
> 2 After a witness called by the United States has testified on direct examination, the court shall, on motion of the defendant, order the United States to produce any statement (as hereinafter defined) of the witness in the possession of the United States which relates to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified. If the entire contents of any such statement relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order it to be delivered directly to the defendant for his examination and use.

18 U.S.C.A. § 3500(a)(b).

III. ANALYSIS

Defendants argue that the Special Agent's Report should be disclosed because in "nearly every case the Special Agent's Report contains exculpatory information and/or significant Jencks Act material." (Doc. 100 at 1). Defendants further argue that they need the Special Agent's Report to determine if the Special Agent is a potential witness and "going to trial without notice of the government's method of proof is a violation of due process." (Doc. 100). In the alternative, Defendants request a Bill of Particulars or that the Court conduct an in camera review of the Special Agent's Report.

In Response, the Government argues that, pursuant to Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 16 and the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500, it is not required to disclose the Special Agent's Report unless and until the Special Agent is called to testify on direct examination. Further, the Government acknowledges its obligation to provide disclosure of internal memoranda and reports if they contain Brady material.[2] The Government argues that requiring disclosure of the Special Agent's Report amounts to allowing Defendants to have an unauthorized preview of the Government's theory of the case and the evidence it intends to present in support of that theory. The Government opposes Defendants' alternative request for in camera review because Defendants have not articulated any reasons why the Court should conduct such review or what information the Court would review. Defendants contend that the charges, as outlined in the Indictment, are sufficient to address the Defendants' due process rights.

It is clear that the Government is not required to produce the Special Agent's Report unless the Report contains Brady material or material not otherwise disclosed under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 16(a)(1), until the Special Agent is called to testify on direct examination in the Government's case. As discussed above, Defendants have failed to make any showing that the Government is withholding Brady material from them such that the Court would find an in camera review of the Special Agent's Report necessary.

In their Reply in Support of their Motion to Produce, Defendants argue that statements of Defendants, if any, will be in the Special Agent's Report, and Defendants should not be required to search through the "quagmire of materials" already disclosed to them to determine if any such statements exist. Again, Defendants have failed to show that the Government is withholding any material from them and have failed to cite to any legal authority entitling them to discovery of additional materials that might be more conveniently organized than that already provided to them.

3 The Government asserts that it does not anticipate that Special Agent Giovannelli will be a witness for the Government. Defendants contend that, to avoid a continuance during trial, the Government should be required to produce the Special Agent's Report before trial if the Special Agent is going to testify at trial. The Court agrees.

Accordingly, each party shall file a witness list of all witnesses expected to be called as witnesses at trial on or before February 13, 2013. If Special Agent Giovannelli is listed as a witness on the Government's Witness list, the Government shall disclose Special Agent Giovannelli's Report on or before February 13, 2013.

IV. CONCLUSION

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that Defendants Quiel and Kerr's Joint Motion for Production of Special Agent's Report (Doc. 100) is granted in part and denied in part as forth herein.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that each party shall either (1) file a witness list of all witnesses expected to be called as witnesses at trial on or before February 25, 2013 or (2) submit such witness list to the Chamber's email address[3] with a copy to opposing counsel by February 25, 2013.

IT IS FINALLY ORDERED that, if Special Agent Giovannelli is listed as a witness on the Government's Witness list, the Government shall disclose Special Agent Giovannelli's Report on or before February 25, 2013.

All Citations

Not Reported in F.Supp.2d, 2012 WL 4513653

Footnotes

[1] Because the issues have been fully briefed, the Court denies Defendants' request for oral argument as it would not aid the Court's decisional process. See Partridge v. Reich, 141 F.3d 920, 926 (9th Cir.1998); Lake at Las Vegas Investors Group, Inc. v. Pac. Dev. Malibu Corp., 933 F.2d 724, 729 (9th Cir.1991).

[2] In Reply in Support of its Motion to Produce, Defendants appear to argue that the Government disavowed any obligation to produce Brady and Jencks Act material. The Court disagrees. The Government has acknowledged its disclosure obligations and Defendant has presented no evidence that the Government is failing to comply with those obligations by withholding Brady material from Defendants.

[3] teilborg_chambers@azd.uscourts.gov.

End of Document

824 F.Supp.2d 1295
United States District Court, D. New Mexico.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
Carolynne TILGA and Michael
Chandler, Defendants.

No. CR 09–0865 JB.
|
Nov. 8, 2011.

Synopsis
Background: Defendants who had pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defeat the administration of the tax laws of the United States filed objections to the pre-sentence report.

Holdings: The District Court, James O. Browning, J., held that:

[1] defendant was entitled to claim foreign tax credits against amount of loss from her offense;

[2] offense level enhancement for use of sophisticated means was warranted;

[3] offense level enhancement for use of a special skill was not warranted; and

[4] offense level enhancement for being an organizer, leader, or supervisor was not warranted.

Ordered accordingly.

Attorneys and Law Firms

1297 Joseph M. Giannullo, United Stated Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., and Kenneth J. Gonzales, United States Attorney, Jonathon M. Gerson, Paula G. Burnett, Assistant United States Attorneys, United States Attorney's Office, Albuquerque, NM, for Plaintiff.

Kimberly A. Middlebrooks, Albuquerque, NM, and Roma W. Theus, II, Wellington, FL, for Defendant, Carolynne Tilga.

Erlinda O. Johnson, Law Office of Erlinda Ocampo Johnson, LLC, Albuquerque, NM, for Defendant, Michael Chandler.

Angela L. Owens, St. Petersburg, FL, and Kenneth Gleria, Albuquerque, NM, for Defendant, Helen Geer.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

JAMES O. BROWNING, District Judge.

THIS MATTER comes before the Court on: (i) Defendant Carolynne Tilga's 1298 Memorandum in Aid of Sentencing of Defendant Carolyne Tilga and Limited Objections to Presentence Report, filed October 6, 2011 (Doc. 161) ("Tilga's Sentencing Memo."); (ii) Defendant Michael Chandler's Sentencing Memorandum and Request for a Reasonable Sentence, filed August 23, 2011 (Doc. 154) ("Chandler's Sentencing Memo."); [1] and (iii) Government's Sentencing Memorandum, filed October 8, 2011 (Doc. 162) ("Gov't Sentencing Memo."). The Court held an evidentiary hearing on October 13, 2011. The primary issues are: (i) whether the tax loss calculation should be $23,200.00 or $1,937,273.00 (United States Dollars); (ii) whether Defendants Carolynne Tilga and Michael Chandler used sophisticated means to commit the offense of conviction; (iii) whether Tilga and Chandler used special skills to commit the offense of conviction; (iv) whether Tilga should was an organizer, leader, manager, or supervisor of the criminal activity; (v) whether the Presentence Investigation Report on Carolynne Tilga (disclosed July 26, 2011) ("Tilga PSR") should acknowledge the benefits the United States obtained from the Plea Agreement, filed January 6, 2011 (Doc. 126) ("Tilga Plea Agreement"); and (vi) whether the Tilga PSR should contain explicit recognition that the sentencing guidelines are advisory. [2] The Court accepts the parties' stipulated tax loss calculation, $23,300.00 (USD), and finds that the foreign tax credit may apply post-indictment. The Court also agrees with and accepts the parties' stipulations in the Plea Agreements that neither Tilga nor Chandler's offenses involved a special skill, an aggravating role, or obstruction of justice. The Court will sustain Tilga and Chandler's objections to the PSRs to the extent that the PSRs are contrary to these findings. The Court finds, however, that Tilga and Chandler used sophisticated means, as defined in U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1, and will not adopt the parties' stipulation to the contrary. The Court concludes that Tilga's objections to the PSR's failure to acknowledge the benefits that the Plaintiff United States of America obtained from the Plea Agreement and failure to explicitly recognize the sentencing guidelines' advisory status are moot.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Tilga was born in Bronxville, New York. See Tilga PSR ¶ 51, at 22.[3] She attended Cornell University for her undergraduate 1299 studies in Hotel Administration and graduated in 1982. See Tilga PSR ¶ 67, at 26; Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 6. Tilga received her Master of Business Administration from the Wharton School of Business at the University of Pennsylvania in 1986. See Tilga PSR ¶ 69, at 26; Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 6. In 1997, Tilga moved to Santa Fe, New Mexico. See Tilga PSR ¶ 56, at 23. She has been in a committed relationship with Chandler since 1997, and they have two children. See Tilga PSR ¶ 58, at 24.

Chandler was born in Boston, Massachusetts. See Presentence Investigation Report on Michael Chandler (disclosed July 26, 2011) ("Chandler PSR"). Chandler attended Boston College and Plymouth State University, but did not graduate from either. See Chandler PSR ¶¶ 65–66, at 21. Chandler is a "stay-at-home dad" and works for Taos Ski Academy as ski instructor. See Chandler PSR ¶ 68, at 22.

Tilga and Chandler owned and controlled various businesses, including internet service sites, from 1998 to 2006. See Tilga PSR ¶ 9, at 7. Between 1999 and 2004, Tilga owned and operated an adults-only internet dating service. See Tilga PSR ¶ 17, at 10. Before 2002, Tilga was a partner with two Canadian businessmen, and the internet service sites were located in Canada. See Tilga PSR ¶ 17, at 10; Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 7. Tilga earned income from the Canadian joint venture, in which she owned a 37.5% share, as part of her trade and business between the tax years 1999 and 2004. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 7 n. 16. After 2002, Tilga expanded the company on her own, using webcam[4] sites in addition to the standard internet dating sites with which she was working. See Tilga PSR ¶ 17, at 10.

Tilga was introduced to the Commonwealth Trust Company ("CTC") in 1998.[5] See Tilga PSR ¶ 16, at 9. The CTC was an 1300 organization[6] that taught individuals how to purchase and manage Pure Trust Organizations ("PTOs").[7] See Tilga PSR ¶ 10, at 7. Tilga began purchasing entities from CTC around April 1998. See Tilga PSR ¶ 16, at 9; Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 7. Each of these entities was a "business" that controlled Tilga's internet sites, her homes, and her vehicles. Tilga PSR ¶ 16, at 9. Between 1998 and 2003, Tilga purchased the following entities from CTC: (i) Cabernet Financial, 1998; (ii) Worldwide Communications, 1998; (iii) General Management Services, 1998; (iv) Bressingham Investments, 1998; (v) Astra Management, 1999; (vi) Vantage Global, 2001; (vii) Batavia Guild Group, 2002; (viii) Triad Universal, 2002; (ix) Alsacia Marketing Services, 2002; and (x) Enchantment Property Management, 2003. See Tilga PSR ¶ 16, at 9–10.

Tilga requested that the revenue from her Canadian business be generated to Cabernet Financial, which used an offshore trust account. See Tilga PSR ¶ 18, at 10. Tilga paid no taxes on her share of the revenues received from her Canadian business. See Tilga PSR ¶ 18, at 10; Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 2. Tilga then transferred funds from Cabernet Financial to various other entities purchased from CTC, which were formed to allow Tilga to purchase real estate and vehicles. See Tilga PSR ¶ 18, at 10; Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 2.

An IRS investigation revealed that Tilga and Chandler used the CTC trusts and offshore companies to purchase assets and set up new offshore accounts. See Tilga PSR ¶ 19, at 10. Between 1999 and 2004, Tilga wired nearly $8.7 million (USD) into the United States from her offshore accounts, but her tax returns usually reported less than $75,000.00 (USD) in income per year. See Tilga PSR ¶ 19, at 10. Tilga used those funds to purchase expensive 1301 real estate in New Mexico, Colorado, and Hawaii. See Tilga PSR ¶ 19, at 10–11. Chandler assisted Tilga in wiring money to and from the accounts. See Tilga PSR ¶ 22, at 13; Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 2–3.

For the years 1999 to 2004, Tilga failed to report $5,201,064.00 (USD) in taxable income. See Tilga PSR ¶ 25, at 14. Additionally, neither Tilga nor the vast number of CTC entities that she owned filed tax returns. See Tilga PSR ¶ 26, at 14. Accordingly, the IRS calculated the additional taxes due and owing for those years was $1,937,272.00 (USD). See Tilga PSR ¶ 26, at 15. The United States and Tilga calculated the additional taxes due and owing for those years as a minimum of $1,735,025.00 (USD). See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶¶ 6, 13, at 3, 11; Tilga PSR ¶ 5(f), at 5.

In 2005, the IRS began its investigation of Tilga. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 8. In August 2009, Tilga filed tax returns in the Dominion of Canada for business income earned in each of the years 1999 to 2004. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 4. Tilga provided this information to the IRS in April 2010. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 4. The Canadian Revenue Agency ("CRA") sent Tilga a notice on November 19, 2010, stating that she owed $7,424,514.40 (Canadian Dollars) in taxes on her Canadian income. See Tilga PSR ¶¶ 82–83, at 43; Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 4. On April 15, 2010, Tilga attempted to file a notice of claim with the IRS, stating that she was entitled to a credit on her 1999 taxes for taxes owed to the Canadian government for that year. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 4. The IRS accepted the notice, but did not consider the notice to have been "filed" and did not process it. Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 4.

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

A federal grand jury indicted Tilga and Chandler for a Klien conspiracy[8] to defeat the administration of the tax laws of the United States during the period 1998 to 2006 in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371 and with tax evasion for the years 1999 to 2004 in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7201. See Redacted Indictment, filed April 9, 2009 (Doc. 2) ("Indictment"). In post-Indictment negotiations with the United States, Tilga asserted that the Internal Revenue Code permitted her to file amended United States tax returns claiming foreign tax credits for the years 1999 to 2004, because there is a special ten-year statute of limitations for foreign tax credits. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 3. Tilga argued that, because Canadian taxes are generally higher than United States taxes, the foreign tax credit would wipe out the United States tax deficiency. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 3.

On January 6, 2011, the United States entered into plea agreements with Tilga and Chandler. See Tilga Plea Agreement at 1; Plea Agreement at 1, filed January 6, 2011 (Doc. 128) ("Chandler Plea Agreement"); Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 5. Tilga and Chandler both pled guilty to Count 1302 One of the Indictment, charging a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371—the Klein conspiracy. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 3, at 2; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 3, at 2. Tilga admitted the salient facts alleged in the conspiracy count of the Indictment: (i) that she failed to report income from her various businesses on her tax returns; (ii) that she entered into an agreement with CTC to defraud the United States; and (iii) that she intended to conceal her Canadian source of income and defraud the United States. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 6; Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 8(a)-(h), at 3–7.

In the Plea Agreement, the parties stipulated to the calculation of the amount of tax loss.

> 10. The United States and the Defendant stipulate as follows:
>
> a. For purposes of the advisory United States Sentencing Guidelines, the tax loss for the tax year ending on December 31, 1998, was $23,200.00.
>
> b. The Defendant believes in good faith, relying on the advice of experienced and skilled tax counsel, that she has a foreign tax credit available to her under Title 26, United States Code, Sections 901 and 6511 and applicable regulations, for taxes accrued or actually paid to a foreign country, and that such foreign tax credit would eliminate her liability for federal income taxes in the United States of America for the remaining years of the conspiracy to which she is pleading guilty, that is, the tax years ending on December 31, 1999, through December 31, 2004, inclusive. The Defendant has elected to forego pursuit of the foreign tax credit and instead pay federal income taxes that may be due and owing in the United States of America. The government does not agree with the Defendant concerning the availability and/or applicability of such foreign tax credit on the facts of the present case, as the Defendant has not actually paid the foreign taxes. The government agrees, however, that the Defendant's decision to pay the United States income taxes should not put her in a worse position for purposes of calculating her relevant conduct under the advisory United States Sentencing Guidelines than had she paid the foreign taxes. The > parties accordingly stipulate, for relevant conduct purposes, that the tax loss from the conspiracy to which the Defendant is pleading guilty is limited to the $23,200.00 set out in ¶ 10(a), above.

Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(a)-(b). The Chandler Plea Agreement makes the same stipulation, except that the tax loss is calculated as $23,300.00. See Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(a), at 5.[9]

1303 On August 9, 2011, in compliance with rule 32 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Tilga submitted her objections to the PSR to the United States Probation Office ("USPO"). Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 1. Tilga contemporaneously submitted these objections to the United States Attorney's Office for the District of New Mexico ("USAO"). See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 1 n. 2. Chandler also filed his objections to the PSR on August 9, 2011. See Defendant Michael Chandler's Objection to the Pre–Sentence Report, filed August 9, 2011 (Doc. 152) ("Chandler Objection"). Chandler objects to the first sentence of paragraph 22 of the PSR, which states "Chandler was also known to assist [in] wiring money to and from the accounts." Chandler Objection at 1–2. See Chandler PSR ¶ 22, at 9. Chandler argues that there is no evidence that he wired money to and from accounts. See Chandler Objection at 1–2. The USPO responded to Tilga's objections on August 23, 2011, acquiescing on a few of the objections and rejecting the remainder. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 1.

On August 23, 2011, Chandler filed his sentencing memorandum. See Chandler's Sentencing Memo. at 1. Chandler argues that he merits a sentence of probation based on: (i) his history and characteristics; (ii) that his crime constitutes aberrant behavior; (iii) the restitution he and Tilga have paid; and (iv) his family ties and responsibilities. See Chandler Sentencing Memo. at 1–9. Additionally, Chandler argues that probation would be a reasonable sentence pursuant to the 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) factors. See Chandler Sentencing Memo. at 9–10.

On September 2, 2011, the United States responded to Chandler's objection. See Government's Response to Defendant Michael Chandler's Objection to Pre–Sentence Report, filed September 2, 2011 (Doc. 157) ("Response"). The United States asserts that the PSR does not state that Chandler wired any funds; rather, the PSR states that he assisted in wiring such funds. See Response at 1. The United States also argues that, in his Plea Agreement, Chandler conceded that he assisted in using the offshore bank accounts and wiring funds. See Response at 2; Chandler Plea Agreement at ¶ 7(a), at 3 ("In 1998 or 1999, Carolynne Tilga requested my assistance in using a number of off-shore trusts through which we would move money she earned in Canada to purchase properties in the United States.").

On October 6, 2011, Tilga filed her sentencing memorandum and objections to the PSR. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 1. In her memorandum she raised six objections to: (i) the calculation of tax loss based on any figure other than the $23,200.00 (USD) figure set out in the Plea Agreement; (ii) the suggestion in the PSR that the conspiracy involved "sophisticated means"; (iii) the PSR's failure to acknowledge the advantages the United States obtained from the Plea Agreement; (iv) the PSR's failure to explicitly recognize that the guidelines are advisory; (v) the PSR's failure to recognize that there are 1304 valid bases for a downward variance or downward departure from the guidelines sentencing range; and (vi) the PSR's failure to accord sufficient weight to Tilga's civil liability, liability to the Canadian government, and liability for Foreign Bank and Financial Account Report penalties ("FBAR")[10] when calculating Tilga's ability to pay a fine. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 4. Tilga maintains that she could have "eviscerated the federal income tax evasion charges lodged against her by amending her federal income tax returns before trial, taking the Foreign Tax Credit, and eliminating any tax deficiency." Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 9 (citing 26 U.S.C. §§ 901, 6511; United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d 1148, 1150–51 (11th Cir.1983)). Tilga argues that, because she could have avoided most of the tax loss through the foreign tax credit, the Plea Agreement's tax loss calculation is correct and that the Court should reject "the alternative and speculative tax loss calculations set out in the PSR predicated on a purportedly larger tax loss amount." Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 10. Tilga asserts that her conduct did not involve any special complexity or intricacy, and that the sophisticated means were not of her creation. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 11. Tilga further asserts that under 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), the Court should downwardly depart or vary from the guidelines range to impose a non-custodial sentence. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 12–19. Finally, Tilga argues that whether the Court should impose a fine on Tilga is committed to the Court's discretion. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 20.

On October 8, 2011, the United States filed its sentencing memorandum. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 1. The United States argues that the Court should accept the non-binding stipulated loss amount in this case, because it was the product of lengthy, intensive negotiations between the parties, and the United States' decision to compromise was predicated on a review of its ability to prove a tax deficiency were Tilga to raise her foreign tax credit defense. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 10. The United States asserts that "[i]t is the position of the United States that a taxpayer cannot defeat a tax prosecution by amending her returns post-Indictment," but goes on to state that it calculated the amount of loss in the Plea Agreement only for the losses in 1998 because of "the risk that the tax evasion counts for 1999 to 2004 may have fallen" to the post-Indictment foreign tax credit defense Tilga planned to assert. Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 11, 15. The United States specifically notes that the Plea Agreement avoids "the risk of generating adverse legal precedent with respect to the defendants' proposed use of the foreign tax credit." Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 16. The United States argues that the Court should impose a sentence at the top of the guidelines range on Tilga, because her conduct is "the most egregious conceivable for similarly situated offenders, motivated ... by sheer greed in the face of conspicuous wealth." Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 18. The United States asserts that a departure or variance would be inappropriate, because the facts Tilga presents—that she is a mother and a first-time offender—do not 1305 distinguish her from any other defendant. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 18. Finally, the United States contends that the Court should impose a substantial fine on Tilga. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 19.

The Court held an evidentiary hearing on Thursday, October 13, 2011. Tilga pointed the Court to a recent case from the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d 1086 (10th Cir.2011), which held that a sentencing court may consider unclaimed tax deductions when calculating tax loss. See Transcript of Hearing at 4:14–20 (October 13, 2011) (Theus) ("Tr.").[11] Tilga stated that her argument is based on the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit's decision in United States v. Cruz. See Tr. at 5:17–19 (Theus). The Eleventh Circuit, Tilga asserted, held that, when a defendant has firm tax assessments from a foreign government and attempts to take advantage of the foreign tax credit before trial, there is "a viable basis for dismissal or defeat of the tax evasion charges." Tr. at 6:1–5 (Theus). Tilga further asserted that the foreign tax credit is unique, because a taxpayer has up to ten years to take advantage of the credit. See Tr. at 6:5–7 (Theus).

The United States asserted that the distinction between the defendant in United States v. Cruz and in this case is that the defendant in United States v. Cruz did not address his tax liability under the foreign tax credit before trial while Tilga did. See Tr. at 7:1–12 (Gerson). Under United States v. Cruz, the United States concedes that there is "a colorable argument to be made." Tr. at 7:23–25 (Gerson). The United States clarified, however, that it is not conceding as a matter of law that Tilga may defeat her tax deficiency post-Indictment through the foreign tax credit. See Tr. at 8:1–2 (Gerson). Taking Tilga's argument at face value, the United States contended that Tilga would still be liable for the first year of the conspiracy, 1998, and, therefore, the United States used the tax losses for that year for the purposes of the guideline offense level calculation. See Tr. at 8:3–12 (Gerson).

The Court expressed concern whether it has authority to avoid the legal issue and accept the party's stipulation as to the law. See Tr. at 10:12–17 (Court). The United States responded that it is not stipulating that the law allows Tilga to make a post-Indictment adjustment to her tax liability through the use of the foreign tax credit. See Tr. at 10:18–22 (Gerson). Instead, the United States asserted that it recognizes that Tilga raises a colorable question and that "[w]e were trying to avoid the situation in which a court of the United States held that a defendant could make use of the foreign tax credit in the way that Tilga wished to use it in this case." Tr. at 11:1–4 (Gerson). The United States agreed that the stipulation turned on the parties' reading of United States v. Cruz being correct. See Tr. at 11:7–14 (Court, Gerson).

The Court also observed that, if it either sustains or overrules the objection, the Court will be implicitly deciding whether it agrees with the holding of United States v. Cruz or the parties' construction of that case. See Tr. 12:1–6 (Court). The United States responded that the calculation of the tax deficiency is a mixed question of 1306 law and fact. See Tr. 12:10–12 (Gerson). The United States also repeated that it is not the United States' position that a defendant may make such use of the foreign tax credit. See Tr. 12:24–13:1 (Gerson). It stated that well-developed case law exists supporting the proposition that a taxpayer may not address her tax deficiency post-Indictment. See Tr. at 13:19–14:2 (Gerson). The United States indicated that its concern was that the cases do not address the specific question of "ex-post facto correction of tax returns ... through the use of the foreign tax credit." Tr. at 14:3–5 (Gerson). The United States argued that the USPO and the PSR adopted the stipulated tax loss. See Tr. at 15:21–16:3 (Gerson). The Court pointed out, however, that the USPO used the stipulated tax loss, but recognized its disagreement with that calculation, and the United States agreed that the Court had correctly described the USPO's position. See Tr. at 16:8–22 (Court, Gerson).

The Court also offered Chandler the opportunity to speak on the issue of tax loss. See Tr. at 17:9–11 (Court). Chandler proposed presenting an expert witness that Chandler and Tilga subpoenaed should the Court have concerns about the foreign tax credit. See Tr. at 17:12–18:3–5 (Court, Johnson, Theus). The witness, Jeffrey Rubinger, was proposed as a specialist in international tax law who currently works as an accountant at KPMG and, before his current employment, was a partner at Holland & Knight LLP in its Fort Lauderdale, Florida office. See Tr. at 18:8–11 (Theus). Mr. Rubinger is also an adjunct professor at the University of Miami School of Law and has written on the subject of international tax law. See Tr. at 18:11–15 (Theus). Tilga stated that it would be productive to hear Mr. Rubinger's testimony on the foreign tax credit. See Tr. 20:14–15 (Theus). The United States asked whether the nature of Mr. Rubinger's testimony would be factual or legal, and stated that it would object if his testimony concerned the application of the law. See Tr. at 20:18–23 (Gerson). The Court stated that it would hear Mr. Rubinger's testimony and that if the United States had specific objections, the Court would hear them as they arose. See Tr. at 20:24–21:2 (Court).

Mr. Rubinger testified that, as a partner at Holland & Knight, he provided representational services to Tilga, including analyzing the foreign tax credit issue. See Tr. at 22:11–23 (Theus, Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger stated that, when he looked at the facts of Tilga's case, he understood that the income was from foreign sources, and that he discussed the special rules that apply to the foreign tax credit under the Internal Revenue Code. See Tr. at 23:3–7 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger explained that there is a ten-year statute of limitations to claim a foreign tax credit and that, if the credit is claimed within the ten-year period, it "relates back" to when the tax accrued. Tr. at 23:7–11 (Rubinger). Relating his testimony to Tilga, Mr. Rubinger stated that, if Tilga claimed the foreign tax credit within the statute of limitations for the years 1999 to 2004, she could "eliminate any deficiency for civil and criminal purposes." Tr. at 23:19–24:3 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger asserted that the Canadian government assessed tax liability of $7 million (CAD) in 2010 and that the amount has not been released, discharged, or abated in any way. See Tr. at 24:11–25 (Rubinger, Theus). Mr. Rubinger further asserted that, Title 26 of the Internal Revenue Code requires that foreign tax credits relate back retroactively such that for civil purposes Tilga would have no deficiency. See Tr. at 25:8–14 1307 (Rubinger). He commented that, if there is no civil tax deficiency, then there cannot be a criminal tax deficiency. See Tr. at 25:8–14 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger also referred the Court to Boulware v. United States, 552 U.S. 421, 128 S.Ct. 1168, 170 L.Ed.2d 34 (2008), as support for his position. See Tr. at 25:16–18 (Rubinger).

Chandler's counsel, Erlinda O. Johnson, also questioned Mr. Rubinger concerning the foreign tax credit. See Tr. at 25:24 (Johnson). Mr. Rubinger clarified that there are cases which address a net-operating loss, where taxpayers have a "three year carry back," and that courts have not allowed such losses to eliminate tax deficiencies post-Indictment because the net operating loss does not relate back. Tr. at 26:20–27:6 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger stated that relation back under the foreign tax credit is mandatory and that its purpose is to alleviate double taxation. See Tr. 27:7–19 (Johnson, Rubinger). "When a United States taxpayer is earning income [in] a foreign country [and] the foreign countr[y] taxes the income ... the whole point [of the foreign tax credit] is to not allow the United States to tax the same income." Tr. at 27:13–19 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger went on to explain that "the rules work even though a United States individual taxpayer is typically on a cash method, which means that [their] income is taxable when it's received ... [and] allow[s] individual taxpayers to apply the foreign tax credits on an accrual basis." Tr. at 28:1–9 (Rubinger). "So the Canadian tax credits accrued each [year] when they were owed; despite the fact that they may not have been paid, they were owed to Canada on the accrual method." Tr. at 28:10–12 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger stated that, "whether she paid them or not, under the accrual method of claiming the foreign tax credit she would get a retroactive tax credit." Tr. at 28:16–18 (Rubinger).

The United States then cross-examined Mr. Rubinger. Responding to a question whether any federal court had dismissed an indictment on the grounds that a taxpayer, post-indictment, had paid taxes to a foreign sovereign, Mr. Rubinger agreed that no such federal decision existed. See Tr. 29:8–14 (Gerson, Rubinger). Expanding on his answer, Mr. Rubinger explained that the decision in United States v. Cruz comes very close to this holding, but in that case, the facts were different because the defendant had not filed returns before trial. See Tr. 29:14–23 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger agreed that it would be fair to say that Tilga's defense is predicated on the reasoning of United States v. Cruz, and not on the holding of that case. See Tr. at 29:24–30:2 (Gerson, Rubinger). He asserted that Tilga's defense is based on the Internal Revenue Code, which establishes that the foreign tax credit relates back, and that this retroactivity is what the Eleventh Circuit, in United States v. Cruz, held could preclude criminal liability pre-trial. See Tr. at 30:2–8 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger characterized the holding in United States v. Cruz as accelerating the expiration of the statute of limitations for claiming the foreign tax credit to the period before trial and added that the "case was highly criticized for that analysis." Tr. at 30:13–15 (Rubinger). Mr. Rubinger agreed that, although the Internal Revenue Code says up to ten years, the judicial authority puts the expiration of the statute of limitations earlier if a criminal tax prosecution is implemented. See Tr. at 30:22–31:1 (Gerson, Rubinger).

In Tilga's re-direct, Mr. Rubinger stated that all the returns were prepared and the money was in the trust account ready to be paid before trial such that she was poised to exercise the foreign tax credit before it would expire under United States 1308 v. Cruz. See Tr. at 31:8–11 (Theus, Rubinger). The Court asked the United States to clarify the point of its questions regarding the statute of limitations for the foreign tax credit. See Tr. at 32:2–3 (Court). The United States responded that it was attempting to show that, although the Internal Revenue Code says the period is ten years, courts have not always applied that time period. See Tr. at 32:4–33:15 (Gerson, Rubinger). The United States reiterated that its position has always been that "a taxpayer may not fix the commission of a crime after the crime [has] been completed." Tr. at 33:19–25 (Gerson). The United States admitted that, had it not entered into this stipulation, it would be arguing on the other side of this issue—that the total tax loss should be $1,735,025.00 (USD)—and agreeing with the USPO. See Tr. at 34:7–21 (Court, Gerson). The United States stated that is the United States' legal position in this case that "this is an open question of law which we recognize we would have stood some risk of losing had we gone to trial." Tr. at 34:22–25 (Gerson).

The Court also asked the United States to explain what the criticism of the holding in United States v. Cruz has been. See Tr. at 35:12–15 (Court). The United States responded that it understood that Mr. Rubinger was referencing the position that the Internal Revenue Code is absolute in its position and "when the code says ten years it's ten years," when he referenced criticism. Tr. at 35:17–20 (Gerson). Expanding on this remark, the United States explained that the criticism on the part of tax professionals is that the United States v. Cruz decision violates the Internal Revenue Code. See Tr. at 35:20–21 (Gerson). The United States asserted that "what the court itself said in Cruz [was] that they need to make decisions that are practical and attempt to fit the best interests of the United States over all and [not just] follow[ ] lockstep with the words of the statute." Tr. at 35:21–25 (Gerson). Mr. Rubinger stated that there is no provision in the Internal Revenue Code that allows for the acceleration of the ten-year period for the foreign credit. See Tr. at 38:5–9 (Johnson, Rubinger).

Responding to Tilga's second objection, to the PSR's reference to sophisticated means, the United States asserted that the Plea Agreement stipulated that the sophisticated-means enhancement would not apply to Tilga. See Tr. at 39:3–5 (Gerson). The United States explained that it believed that the sophisticated-means enhancement would apply to CTC, and its officers or employees, but not to a customer of CTC like Tilga. See Tr. at 39:7–13 (Gerson). The Court asked whether Tilga used business entities, wired offshore accounts, and used shell companies to hide her income, and the United States admitted that she had. See Tr. at 40:1–5 (Court, Gerson). The United States said that it agreed to the stipulation, because Tilga was buying a product from another corporation. See Tr. at 40:5–11 (Court, Gerson). In response to the Court's questioning, the United States admitted that PTOs are sophisticated means, and that it was unaware of any reported opinion which drew a distinction between the seller and a customer in terms of sophisticated means. See Tr. at 40:14–41:4 (Court, Gerson).

Tilga also argued that she did not employ sophisticated means to commit tax evasion. Tilga referred the Court to the argument in her sentencing memorandum and stated that the analysis looks not just to the means a defendant employs, but to "the context of the particular offense or 1309 offense[s] being examined." Tr. at 41:8–17 (Theus). Tilga argues that her conduct is "par for the course" for the offense she committed, and asserted that several cases cited in her sentencing memorandum involve foreign entities, foreign bank accounts, and substantial sums of money. Tr. at 41:17–42:2 (Theus). Tilga argued that, to qualify for the sophisticated-means enhancement, the conduct has to be "something beyond what happens in the garden variety type of offense" and that there is "nothing especially sophisticate[d] or complex about this matter." Tr. at 42:13–25 (Theus). Tilga agreed that CTC, in marketing and managing different product for their customers, engaged in sophisticated means, but asserted that there is a difference between those activities and the consumer who buys a product relying on CTC's representation about that product. See Tr. at 43:13–20 (Theus). Tilga also conceded that she had not found any cases supporting the distinction between a customer and a seller using sophisticated means. See Tr. at 43:21–44:6 (Court, Theus). Tilga contended that CTC had lawyers and accountants on staff who made representations to her about the acceptability of their products to the IRS. See Tr. at 44:23–25 (Theus). She asserted that sophisticated means requires "some deliberate or volitional activity on the part of the accused in terms of creation or management of these types of products." Tr. at 45:1–6 (Theus). Tilga maintained that, if the sophisticated-means enhancement applies every time some sophisticated means was used in connection to the offense, then a court could apply the enhancement to virtually any offense that might come before the court. See Tr. at 45:6–9 (Theus).

Chandler also spoke, and supported the United States' position that Tilga did not employ sophisticated means, because she was no more than a customer who bought a product. See Tr. at 45:16–19 (Johnson). Chandler argued that it is the managers and directors of CTC who should have the sophisticated-means enhancement. See Tr. at 45:19–23 (Johnson). Chandler asserted that Tilga was a customer and that CTC sold her a bill of goods with the promise that they were completely legitimate. See Tr. at 45:24–46:1 (Johnson). Because CTC held Tilga's hand throughout the time period that she held the trusts and prided itself on the fact that its employees would serve as trustees, Chandler argued that Tilga's actions do not qualify for the sophisticated-means enhancement. See Tr. at 46:1–6 (Johnson). Chandler further asserted that the customer is not involved in knowing the intricacies of the PTOs that were sold and, therefore, the sophisticated-means enhancement would apply to the individuals who managed the trusts or came up with the idea for the trust. See Tr. at 46:6–11 (Johnson). Conceding that at some point Tilga should have realized that her conduct was criminal, Chandler nonetheless argued that Tilga, when she bought the PTOs, was "basically [given] a handbook and ... led by the hand [to] understand 'this is how you do this and you do this and you do that.' " Tr. at 46:12–24 (Johnson).

Additionally, the Court heard arguments on the stipulation in the Plea Agreement that Tilga was not the organizer, leader, or supervisor of the criminal activity. See Tr. at 48:12–19 (Court). The United States stated that Tilga is substantially less culpable than the people at CTC. See Tr. 48:22–24 (Court, Gerson). Chandler again pointed out, that both he and Tilga were sold a product, and did not start the PTOs. See Tr. at 49:11–14 (Johnson). The Court accepted the stipulation on the role adjustment, 1310 because "when we consider the entire criminal organization, I agree that she's substantially less culpable than the people at Commonwealth." Tr. at 49:16–20 (Court).

The United States also stated that it was the parties' position that neither Tilga nor Chandler "possessed any special skill with respect to tax law or with respect to taxes." Tr. at 50:1–4 (Gerson). It clarified that the United States' argument was not that Tilga does not have skills, because Tilga is highly educated, but that, she did not "victimize[ ] some other person by making use of these special skills." Tr. at 50:5–15 (Court, Gerson). The United States asserted that Tilga has special skills with respect to marketing and collecting fees for services providers, but that she does not have any special skills that relate to taxes or tax liability. See Tr. at 51:2–6 (Gerson). The Court agreed that the enhancement for use of a special skill is inappropriate and accepted the parties' stipulation to that effect. See Tr. at 52:5–13 (Court).

The Court expressed concern whether an obstruction enhancement was appropriate. See Tr. at 52:14–21 (Court). The United States asserted that, had it gone to trial, the United States would have called Grant Simmons, Tilga's former employee, and had him testify that Tilga came to his house and told him that she "was not going to take the fall for this." Tilga PSR ¶ 40, at 21; Tr. at 52:22–25 (Gerson). The United States argued that these actions show consciousness of guilt and "was being uttered to prevent the United States from carrying out an investigation in this case." Tr. at 53:1–8 (Gerson). Tilga stated that no admissible evidence would establish that she intended to obstruct or impede the administration of justice. See Tr. at 53:10–13 (Theus). Additionally, Tilga argued that Simmons would have been aggressively cross-examined and impeached. See Tr. at 53:13–20 (Theus). The United States admitted that, while it would have been able to establish that Tilga said those things to Simmons, it would not have been "able to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that that was reasonably likely to interfere with the investigation." Tr. at 54:22–55:5 (Gerson).

Tilga stated that her objection to the PSR's failure to acknowledge the advantages that the United States received from the Plea Agreement had been addressed and was more appropriate for argument rather than inclusion in the PSR. See Tr. at 57:21–58:3 (Theus). Tilga admitted that her objection is moot to the extent that the information is presently before the Court through her sentencing memorandum. See Tr. at 58:4–7 (Court, Theus). Additionally, Tilga stated that her objection to the PSR's failure to acknowledge the advisory status of the guidelines had been satisfactorily addressed and included in the sentencing memorandum. See Tr. at 58:12–59:2 (Court, Theus).

On October 31, 2011, Chandler's attorney wrote the Court regarding the standard of proof and Sixth Amendment requirements for applying a sentencing enhancement. See Letter from Erlinda Johnson to the Court (dated October 31, 2011), filed October 31, 2011 (Doc. 164) ("Letter"). Chandler requested that the Court accept the stipulations included in paragraph 9(b) of Chandler's Plea Agreement that Chandler's offense did not involve a breach of trust, a special skill, sophisticated means, an aggravating role, or obstruction of justice. See Letter at 1. Chandler focuses his discussion on U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(b)(2)'s sophisticated-means 1311 enhancement. See Letter at 1–2. Chandler points the Court to United States v. Lewis, 93 F.3d 1075 (2d Cir.1996), which applied the sophisticated-means enhancement but acknowledged that the enhancement "targets conduct that is more complex, demonstrates greater intricacy, or demonstrates greater planning than a routine tax-evasion case." Letter at 1–2. Chandler also cites United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d 843 (10th Cir.1995), which reversed the application of the sophisticated-means enhancement where, "[b]y using [several] corporations, Mr. Rice claimed to have paid withholding taxes he did not indeed pay." Letter at 1–2. Chandler argues that the "conduct of the defendants [in this case] was more similar to Mr. Rice's conduct because the defendants herein merely requested, of others, the movement of moneys from one account to a different account." Letter at 2. Chandler also submits that, pursuant to Blakely v. Washington, 542 U.S. 296, 124 S.Ct. 2531, 159 L.Ed.2d 403 (2004) and United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 125 S.Ct. 738, 160 L.Ed.2d 621 (2005), a sentence must be determined solely "by reference to 'facts reflected in the jury verdict or admitted by the defendant,' " and that any other sentencing fact must be proved to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt to a jury. Letter at 2.

LAW REGARDING CALCULATION OF TAX LOSS

[1] The guidelines define "tax loss" for the purpose of sentencing defendants in U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1: "If the offense involved tax evasion or a fraudulent or a false return, statement, or other document, the tax loss is the total amount of loss that was the object of the offense (i.e., the loss that would have resulted had the offense been successfully completed)." U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(c)(1). Under this provision, tax loss "shall be treated as equal to 28% of the unreported gross income ..., unless a more accurate determination of the tax loss can be made." U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(c)(1), Note A. The United States bears the burden of proving the amount of tax loss arising from the defendant's illegal acts, but under the guidelines, "neither the government nor the court has an obligation to calculate the tax loss with certainty or precision." United States v. Sullivan, 255 F.3d 1256, 1263 (10th Cir.2001) (quotation omitted).

1. Tenth Circuit Jurisprudence on Availability of Unclaimed Deductions.

In United States v. Spencer, 178 F.3d 1365 (10th Cir.1999), the Tenth Circuit stated that U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 Note A's "more accurate determination" provision does not allow taxpayers "a second opportunity to claim deductions after having been convicted of tax fraud." 178 F.3d at 1368. The Tenth Circuit explained that, in calculating tax loss for the purpose of sentencing, "we are not computing an individual's tax liability as is done in a traditional audit[, but r]ather we are merely assessing the tax loss resulting from the manner in which the defendant chose to complete his income tax returns." United States v. Spencer, 178 F.3d at 1368. Although the Tenth Circuit in United States v. Spencer discussed the availability of unclaimed deductions when calculating tax loss, the Tenth Circuit ultimately rejected the defendant's tax-loss estimate because it was not supported by a "scintilla of competent evidence." 178 F.3d at 1369.

In United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d 1086 (10th Cir.2011), the Tenth Circuit 1312 again refused to "squarely hold that unclaimed deductions can never be considered by a district court." 654 F.3d at 1094. The Tenth Circuit found that "the plain language of § 2T1.1 does not categorically prevent a court from considering unclaimed deductions in its sentencing analysis." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094. Instead, "§ 2T1.1 directs courts to calculate the tax loss that would have resulted had the offense been successfully completed." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094. Thus, "the 'object of the offense' refers to the 'amount by which [a defendant] underreported and fraudulently stated his tax liability on his return.' " United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094 (quoting United States v. Chavin, 316 F.3d 666, 677 (7th Cir.2002)). Addressing United States v. Spencer, the Tenth Circuit explained that the holding of that case still holds true where "a defendant offers weak support for a tax-loss estimate," because "nothing in the Guidelines requires a sentencing court to engage in the 'nebulous and potentially complex exercise of speculating about unclaimed deductions." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094 (emphasis original) (quoting United States v. Yip, 592 F.3d 1035, 1041 (9th Cir.2010)). The Tenth Circuit held, however, that "nothing in the Guidelines prohibits a sentencing court from considering evidence of unclaimed deductions in analyzing a defendant's estimate of the tax loss suffered by the government." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094–95 (emphasis original). "[A] court may exercise its discretion to consider additional evidence that could guide its findings on the losses to the government relevant to sentencing." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1095. The United States is not supposed to reap windfall gains as a result of tax evasion and cannot assert to have lost revenue it never would have collected had the defendant not evaded his taxes. See United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1095 (citing United States v. Gordon, 291 F.3d 181, 187 (2d Cir.2002)).

In a footnote, however, the Tenth Circuit emphasized that § 2T1.1 "does not permit a defendant to benefit from deductions unrelated to the offense at issue." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1095 n. 9. Thus, "unclaimed deductions for student loan interest or solar energy credits, for example, are not considered because they do not relate to the 'object of the offense' and are not relevant to restitution or guideline calculations for sentencing purposes." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1095 n. 9.

Chief Judge Briscoe wrote an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part in United States v. Hoskins. Chief Judge Briscoe concurred with "the portions of the majority's opinion affirming Hoskins' conviction, the district court's ultimate finding regarding the amount of the tax loss, and the district court's application of the U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(b)(1) enhancement." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1100 (Briscoe, C.J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). She dissented with respect to the portions of the majority opinion "in which the majority takes the unnecessary step in announcing a rule permitting defendants in future cases to offer deductions they did not actually claim in order to establish a 'more accurate determination of the tax loss' under U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(a)." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1100. Chief Judge Briscoe explained that, in her view, the majority opinion's rule on tax loss improperly complicates sentencing in tax cases, improperly characterizes the Tenth Circuit's 1313 holding in United States v. Spencer, and "essentially allows the defendant a 'do over.' " United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1101–02.

2. The Foreign Tax Credit.

26 U.S.C. § 901 provides that a United States taxpayer may claim a tax credit for the amount of any income taxes paid or accrued to any foreign country. See 26 U.S.C. § 901(a)-(b). Subsection (a) specifically notes that "[s]uch choice for any taxable year may be made or changed at any time before the expiration of the period prescribed for making a claim for credit or refund of the tax imposed." 26 U.S.C. § 901(a). Section 904 of Title 26 of the United States Code limits the total amount of credit that a United States taxpayer may take under § 901(a) and provides that

"[t]he total amount of the credit taken under section 901(a) shall not exceed the same proportion of the tax against which such credit is taken which the taxpayer's taxable income from sources without the United States ... bears to his entire taxable income for the same taxable year." 26 U.S.C. § 904(a). Furthermore, 26 U.S.C. § 905 states:

> (B) Taxes subsequently paid.—Any such taxes if subsequently paid—
>
> > (i) shall be taken into account—(I) in the case of taxes deemed paid under section 902 or section 960, for the taxable year in which paid (and no redetermination shall be made under this section by reason of such payment), and (II) in any other case, for the taxable year to which such taxes relate....

26 U.S.C. § 905(c)(2)(B).

In another section of Title 26, Congress provides special rules relating to foreign tax credits. See 26 U.S.C. § 6511(d). 26 U.S.C. § 6511(d)(3)(A) establishes a special statute of limitations with respect to foreign taxes paid or accrued. Subsection (d)(3)(A) provides:

> If the claim for credit or refund relates to an overpayment attributable to any taxes paid or accrued to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States for which credit is allowed against the tax imposed by subtitle A in accordance with the provisions of section 901 or the provisions of any treaty to which the United States is a party, in lieu of the 3–year period of limitation prescribed in subsection (a), the period shall be 10 years from the date prescribed by law for filing the return for the year in which such taxes were actually paid or accrued.

26 U.S.C. § 6511(d)(3)(A).

The Tenth Circuit appears to have addressed the foreign tax credit only in a civil case, Tipton & Kalmbach v. United States, 480 F.2d 1118 (10th Cir.1973). Tipton & Kalmbach v. United States addressed a claim for refunds of federal income taxes paid in 1964 through 1966, and answered questions relating to the determination of where services were performed. See 480 F.2d at 1119, 1121.

The Eleventh Circuit, in United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d 1148, held that a defendant in a tax evasion case could not contend that the foreign tax credit wiped out the United States deficiency, because the foreign tax liability had not been determined before trial. See 698 F.2d at 1152. The Eleventh Circuit explained that, "[i]n the case of the foreign tax credit, the final event which fixes the amount of the credit is the levy of the tax." United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1151 (citing United 1314 States v. Campbell, 351 F.2d 336, 338 (2d Cir.1965)). The Eleventh Circuit noted that, once the liability becomes fixed, it "relates back" to the year in which it was levied. United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1151. In reaching its holding and interpreting 26 U.S.C. § 905, the Eleventh Circuit emphasized that, "we will not be constrained by intricate technicalities which would create a haven for federal tax evasion." United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152. The Eleventh Circuit stated: "When interpreting statutes, we are required to give a practical interpretation which will not produce an absurd result." United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152.

The defendant in United States v. Cruz defended himself at trial on the theory that no tax deficiency existed, because as a citizen of the Dominican Republic, a country which taxes income earned worldwide, his tax liability to it had accrued. See 698 F.2d at 1150. In rejecting this argument on appeal, the Eleventh Circuit commented:

> [U]nder Cruz's interpretation, a taxpayer in his position could wait and pay no tax, either to the United States or the Dominican Republic until the United States authorities became aware of an irregularity in his tax return. Once discovered, he could either pay or immediately admit the foreign tax and claim the retroactive United States tax credit under section 6511(d)(3), as an absolute defense.

United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152. Concerns with fraud and the six-year statute of limitations on 26 U.S.C. § 7201 prosecutions were evident in the Eleventh Circuit's approach to its analysis. See United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152. The defendant did not offer any proof that he had fixed his foreign tax liability before trial. See United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152. The Eleventh Circuit upheld a jury instruction which required that the jury find that "all events have occurred which fix the amount of the tax and determine the liability of the taxpayer to pay it." United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1150.

> The practical effect of this decision means the tax evader can no longer play one government against the other to defeat an evasion prosecution.... It now means that when the government begins a section 7201 prosecution of a taxpayer who claims a foreign tax credit under section 905, the government accelerates that time within which the taxpayer may exercise the right to fix the amount of the foreign tax liability and claim the foreign tax credit.

United States v. Cruz 698 F.2d at 1152.

PROOF OF ENHANCEMENTS UNDER THE GUIDELINES

In Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 120 S.Ct. 2348, 147 L.Ed.2d 435 (2000), the Supreme Court of the United States reaffirmed the principle that it is permissible for sentencing judges "to exercise discretion—taking into consideration various factors relating both to offense and offender—in imposing judgment within the range prescribed by statute." 530 U.S. at 481, 120 S.Ct. 2348. The Supreme Court cautioned, however, that the Constitution limits this discretion and that the Sixth Amendment requires that, "[o]ther than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. at 490, 120 S.Ct. 2348. In Blakely v. Washington, the Supreme 1315 Court elaborated on its holding in Apprendi v. New Jersey, stating that the "statutory maximum for Apprendi purposes is the maximum sentence a judge may impose solely on the basis of the facts reflected in the jury verdict or admitted by the defendant." Blakely v. Washington, 542 U.S. 296, 303, 124 S.Ct. 2531, 159 L.Ed.2d 403 (2004) (emphasis omitted) (internal quotations and citations omitted). In United States v. Booker, the Supreme Court expanded its earlier holdings to apply to sentencing enhancements that exceeded maximum sentences under the sentencing guidelines. See 543 U.S. 220, 239, 125 S.Ct. 738, 160 L.Ed.2d 621 (2005) ("Regardless of whether the legal basis of the accusation is in a statute or in guidelines promulgated by an independent commission, the principles behind the jury trial right are equally applicable.").

The Supreme Court in United States v. Booker found those provisions of the Federal Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 that made the guidelines mandatory, see 18 U.S.C. § 3553(b)(1), or which relied upon the guidelines' mandatory nature, see 18 U.S.C. § 3742(e), incompatible with the Sixth Amendment, see United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. at 245, 125 S.Ct. 738. Accordingly, the Supreme Court in United States v. Booker severed and excised 18 U.S.C. § 3553(b)(1)—the portion of the federal sentencing statute that made it mandatory for courts to sentence within a particular sentencing guideline range—from the remainder of the Act, thus "mak[ing] the Guidelines effectively advisory." United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. at 245, 125 S.Ct. 738. The Supreme Court's holding in United States v. Booker "requires a sentencing court to consider Guideline ranges, but it permits the court to tailor the sentence in light of other statutory concerns as well." United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. at 245–46, 125 S.Ct. 738.

[2] The Supreme Court confirmed that an advisory guidelines system comports with the Sixth Amendment. In Cunningham v. California, 549 U.S. 270, 127 S.Ct. 856, 166 L.Ed.2d 856 (2007), Justice Ginsburg, joined by the other four justices who had been part of the constitutional majority in United States v. Booker and Chief Justice Roberts, noted that, despite disagreement over the most appropriate method to remedy the mandatory Guidelines' constitutional infirmity, all nine justices that took part in the United States v. Booker decision agreed that "the Federal Guidelines would not implicate the Sixth Amendment were they advisory." Cunningham v. California, 549 U.S. at 285, 127 S.Ct. 856. Not only did making the guidelines advisory remedy the Supreme Court's Sixth Amendment concerns, it seems to have alleviated the constitutional concerns regarding the appropriate burden of proof that existed under the mandatory system. A person who is found guilty of a crime beyond a reasonable doubt is exposed to the maximum punishment the statute of conviction allows, rather than the maximum allowed under the Guidelines, and it is therefore constitutional to sentence the guilty defendant any where within the range based on facts proved only by a preponderance of the evidence. See, e.g., Harris v. United States, 536 U.S. 545, 558, 122 S.Ct. 2406, 153 L.Ed.2d 524 (2002) ("Judicial factfinding in the course of selecting a sentence within the authorized range does not implicate the indictment, jury-trial, and reasonable-doubt components of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments.").

In United States v. Magallanez, 408 F.3d 672 (10th Cir.2005), the Tenth Circuit 1316 held that Blakely v. Washington and United States v. Booker had not changed the district court's enhancement-findings analysis. See United States v. Magallanez, 408 F.3d at 684–85. United States v. Magallanez involved plain-error review of a drug sentence in which a jury found the defendant, Magallanez, guilty of conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute and to distribute methamphetamine. See 408 F.3d at 676. As part of its verdict, the jury, through special interrogatory, attributed to the defendant 50–500 grams of methamphetamine; at sentencing, however, the judge—based on testimony of the various amounts that government witnesses indicated they had sold to the defendant—attributed 1200 grams of methamphetamine to the defendant and used that amount to increase his sentence under the guidelines. See United States v. Magallanez, 408 F.3d at 682. The district court's findings increased the defendant's guideline sentencing range from 63 to 78 months to 121 to 151 months. See United States v. Magallanez, 408 F.3d at 682–83. The Tenth Circuit stated that, both before and after Congress' passage of the Sentencing Reform Act, "sentencing courts maintained the power to consider the broad context of a defendant's conduct, even when a court's view of the conduct conflicted with the jury's verdict." United States v. Magallanez, 408 F.3d at 684. Although United States v. Booker made the guidelines "effectively advisory," the Tenth Circuit in United States v. Magallanez reaffirmed that "district courts are still required to consider Guideline ranges, which are determined through application of the preponderance standard, just as they were before." 408 F.3d at 685 (internal citation omitted). In the Tenth Circuit's estimation, "the only difference is that the court has latitude, subject to reasonableness review, to depart from the resulting Guideline ranges." United States v. Magallanez, 408 F.3d at 685. Two years later, in United States v. Hall, 473 F.3d 1295 (10th Cir.2007), the Tenth Circuit confirmed its position in United States v. Magallanez and held that, in the context of sentencing enhancements, "Booker makes clear that judicial fact-finding by a preponderance of the evidence standard is unconstitutional only when it operates to increase a defendant's sentence mandatorily." 473 F.3d at 1312.

LAW REGARDING U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3

U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3, entitled "Abuse of Position of Trust or Use of Special Skill," provides:

> If the defendant abused a position of public or private trust, or used a special skill, in a manner that significantly facilitated the commission or concealment of the offense, increase by 2 levels. This adjustment may not be employed if an abuse of trust or skill is included in the base offense level or specific offense characteristic. If this adjustment is based upon an abuse of a position of trust, it may be employed in addition to an adjustment under § 3B1.1 (Aggravating Role); if this adjustment is based solely on the use of a special skill, it may not be employed in addition to an adjustment under § 3B1.1 (Aggravating Role).

U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3. Application Note 4 defines "Special skill" as "a skill not possessed by members of the general public and usually requiring substantial education, training or licensing. Examples would include pilots, lawyers, doctors, accountants, chemists, and demolition experts." U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3 cmt. n. 4. The United States must satisfy two elements to 1317 meet § 3B1.3: (i) the defendant possessed a special skill or a position of trust; and (ii) the defendant used that skill or abused that position to significantly facilitate the commission or concealment of the offense. See United States v. Burt, 134 F.3d 997, 998–99 (10th Cir.1998).

[3] The Tenth Circuit recognizes that a defendant need "not complete formal educational or licensing requirements in order to possess a special skill." United States v. Hinshaw, 166 F.3d 1222, 1999 WL 9762, at *3 (10th Cir. Jan. 12, 1999) (table) (unpublished opinion). A special skill may also come from experience or from self-teaching. See United States v. Gandy, 36

F.3d 912, 914 (10th Cir.1994). To apply a U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3 enhancement, the skill " 'must be more than the mere ability to commit the offense.' " United States v. Burt, 134 F.3d 997, 999 (10th Cir.1998) (quoting United States v. Young, 932 F.2d 1510, 1513 (D.C.Cir.1991)). Additionally, there must be a "connection between the crime and the Defendant's special knowledge." United States v. Burt, 134 F.3d at 1000.

LAW REGARDING U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(b)(2)

U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 addresses tax evasion specifically and subsection (b)(2) provides that, "[i]f the offense involves sophisticated means, increase by 2 levels. If the resulting offense is less than level 12, increase to level 12." U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(b)(2). Application Note 4 provides that

> For the purposes of subsection (b)(2), "sophisticated means" means especially complex or especially intricate offense conduct pertaining to the execution or concealment of an offense. Conduct such as hiding assets or transactions, or both, through the use of fictitious entities, corporate shells, or offshore financial accounts ordinarily indicates sophisticated means.

U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 cmt. n. 4.

The Tenth Circuit first addressed the tax evasion enhancement for sophisticated means in United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d 843 (10th Cir.1995). In United States v. Rice, the defendant received a "tax refund based on excessive withholding that was never in fact withheld." 52 F.3d at 845. The district court applied the sophisticated-means enhancement, "in part because [the defendant] contested the IRS' ability to require him to produce documents during the civil phase of his case." United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d at 849. The Tenth Circuit held that the defendant's tax evasion scheme was not sophisticated, because it was "the functional equivalent of claiming more in itemized deductions than actually paid." United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d at 849. In so holding, the Tenth Circuit noted that, if the defendant's scheme was sophisticated, then "every fraudulent tax return will fall within that enhancement's rubric." United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d at 849. In United States v. Guidry, 199 F.3d 1150 (10th Cir.1999), the Tenth Circuit found that the district court's application of the sophisticated-means enhancement was appropriate, even though the defendant did not use a sham corporation or offshore bank accounts. See 199 F.3d at 1158. The Tenth Circuit held that using multiple storage units to hold items purchased with embezzled funds had a similar effect and that her case was not simply one of claiming to have paid withholding taxes not paid or not disclosing one's income. See United States v. Guidry, 199 F.3d at 1158 (citing United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d at 849; United States v. Stokes, 998 F.2d 279, 282 (5th Cir.1993)).

1318 The Tenth Circuit has upheld the application of a sophisticated-means enhancement to a defendant who conducted seminars on avoiding tax liability, and "assisted in the preparation of tax returns that were false and fraudulent as to a material matter." United States v. Ambort, 405 F.3d 1109, 1113 (10th Cir.2005). In United States v. Ambort, the Tenth Circuit found that there was ample evidence in the record to support a sophisticated-means enhancement, because the defendant's program was designed to provide a basis that someone could later articulate as to why they were entitled to the tax status they advanced and included discussions about what information should not be included in tax forms to avoid traceability. See 405 F.3d at 1120. Additionally, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has upheld the imposition of a sophisticated—means enhancement where the defendant created and used fictitious trusts to hide assets from the IRS, even though the defendant was not a sophisticated businessman and no offshore trusts were involved. See United States v. Schwartz, 408 Fed.Appx. 868, 870 (6th Cir.2010) (unpublished). The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, in United States v. Minneman, 143 F.3d 274 (7th Cir.1998), held that the use of multiple corporate names and the placement of funds in a trust account both constitute complex efforts to hide income. See 143 F.3d at 283.

LAW REGARDING U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1(a) AGGRAVATING ROLE ENHANCEMENTS

Section 3B1.1 of the Sentencing Guidelines provides for enhancements to a defendant's offense level based on a defendant having played an aggravating role in the offense. Under § 3B1.1(a), "[i]f the defendant was an organizer or leader of a criminal activity that involved five or more participants or was otherwise extensive, increase by 4 levels." Lesser enhancements are specified for defendants who are "managers or supervisors" rather than organizers or leaders, and for defendants involved in smaller-scale criminal conduct. U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1(b)-(c). "A 'participant' is a person who is criminally responsible for the commission of the offense, but need not have been convicted." U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1 cmt. n. 1. "In assessing whether an organization is 'otherwise extensive,' all persons involved during the course of the entire offense are to be considered." U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1 cmt. n. 3. "The [Sentencing] Commission's intent is that this adjustment should increase with both the size of the organization and the degree of the defendant's responsibility." U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1, backg'd.

Among the factors a sentencing court should consider when weighing an aggravating role enhancement are:

> [T]he exercise of decision making authority, the nature of participation in the commission of the offense, the recruitment of accomplices, the claimed right to a larger share of the fruits of the crime, the degree of participation in planning or organizing the offense, the nature and scope of the illegal activity, and the degree of control and authority exercised over others. There can, of course, be more than one person who qualifies as a leader or organizer of a criminal association or conspiracy.

U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1, cmt. n. 4. The Tenth Circuit has "elaborated that '[i]n considering these factors, the sentencing court should remain conscious of the fact that the gravamen of this enhancement is control, organization, and responsibility for 1319 the actions of other individuals because § 3B1.1(a) is an enhancement for organizers or leaders, not for important or essential figures.' " United States v. Sallis, 533 F.3d 1218, 1223 (10th Cir.2008) (quoting United States v. Torres, 53 F.3d 1129, 1142 (10th Cir.1995)). The Tenth Circuit, in the context of conspiracies to distribute illegal drugs, has also > identified several factors which might indicate that a defendant exercised the requisite control over others, including that: other sellers worked for him, were recruited by him, or had their activities controlled by him; "he paid others for their efforts on behalf of the conspiracy;" "he restricted the people to whom other coconspirators could sell their drugs;" and "he controlled the manner of sales, set prices, or claimed the right to a larger share of proceeds." United States v. Anderson, 189 F.3d 1201, 1212 (10th Cir.1999); see also United States v. Massey, 48 F.3d 1560, 1572 (10th Cir.1995) (listing similar factors).

United States v. Sallis, 533 F.3d at 1223. "[A] role as a supplier of drugs to others, standing alone, is not enough," however, to justify a 4–level enhancement under § 3B1.1(a). United States v. Sallis, 533 F.3d at 1223–24 (quotation omitted).

[4] While there is overlap between the activities that would make a defendant a leader and those that would make a defendant an organizer, the two are distinct. "Nothing in the Guidelines requires that an organizer must exercise some direction or control over underlings." United States v. Valdez–Arieta 127 F.3d 1267, 1271 (10th Cir.1997). "As a result, a defendant may be punished as an organizer under § 3B1.1(c)[12] for devising a criminal scheme, providing the wherewithal to accomplish the criminal objective, and coordinating and overseeing the implementation of the conspiracy even though the defendant may not have any hierarchical control over the other participants." United States v. Valdez–Arieta, 127 F.3d at 1272.

LAW REGARDING U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1

U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1 states:

> If (A) the defendant willfully obstructed or impeded, or attempted to obstruct or impede, the administration of justice with respect to the investigation, prosecution, or sentencing of the instant offense of conviction, and (B) the obstructive conduct related to (i) the defendant's offense of conviction and any relevant conduct; or (ii) a closely related > offense, increase the offense level by 2 levels.

The application notes state: "Obstructive conduct that occurred prior to the start of the investigation of the instant offense of conviction may be covered by this guideline if the conduct was purposefully calculated, and likely, to thwart the investigation or prosecution of the offense of conviction." U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1 cmt. n.1.

The application notes to U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1 further state that the conduct that the Sentencing Committee believes warrant the upward adjustment include the following:

> (a) threatening, intimidating, or otherwise unlawfully influencing a co-defendant, 1320 witness, or juror, directly or indirectly, or attempting to do so ... (d) destroying or concealing or directing or procuring another person to destroy or conceal evidence that is material to an official investigation or judicial proceeding (e.g., shredding a document or destroying ledgers upon learning that an official investigation has commenced or is about to commence), or attempting to do so.

U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1, cmt. n. 4(a) & (c). In United States v. Farnsworth, 92 F.3d 1001, 1011 (10th Cir.1996), the Tenth Circuit recognized that an attempt to influence a witness by instructing the witness to lie warrants an enhancement under U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1. See 92 F.3d at 1011. The Tenth Circuit remanded the case to the district court, however, because the district court did not make a specific finding as to the issue, instead doing no more than adopting "the analysis of the Probation Department as accurate and correct." United States v. Farnsworth, 92 F.3d at 1011. In United States v. Yuselew, No. 09–1035, 2010 WL 3834418 (D.N.M. Aug. 5, 2010) (Browning, J.), the Court held that, "to warrant application of the § 3C1.1 enhancement, the defendant must have deliberately—not accidentally, incidentally, or mistakenly—done some act with the specific purpose of thwarting the investigation and prosecution." 2010 WL 3834418, at *12. The Court also held that attempts to obstruct justice may be sufficient if the acts were of a kind that were likely to thwart the investigation and eventual prosecution. See United States v. Yuselew, 2010 WL 3834418, at *13.

ANALYSIS

The Court accepts the parties' stipulated calculation of tax loss, $23,300.00, and finds that the foreign tax credit may apply post-indictment. The Court also agrees with and accepts the parties stipulations in the Plea Agreements that neither Tilga nor Chandler's offenses involved a special skill, an aggravating role, or obstruction of justice. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b), at 5. The Court will sustain Tilga and Chandler's objections to the PSRs to the extent that the PSRs are contrary to these findings. The Court finds, however, that Tilga and Chandler used sophisticated means, as defined under U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1, and will reject the parties' stipulation to the contrary. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b), at 5.

I. THE COURT WILL SUSTAIN THE OBJECTION TO THE PSR'S TAX LOSS CALCULATION.

The PSRs state:

> [T]he corresponding tax loss is $1,937,273. Based on the tax table, more than $1,000,000 but less than $2,500,000, in loss warrants a base offense level of 22. However, pursuant to information contained in the co-defendant's plea agreement, the parties stipulate that the total tax loss was $1,735,025.00, and, for relevant conduct purposes, the tax loss amount from the conspiracy to which the defendant is pleading guilty was $23,300.00. Pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 2T4.1(D) tax loss greater than $12,500 but less than $30,000 results in a base offense level of 12.

Tilga PSR ¶ 38, at 18–19; Chandler PSR ¶ 36, at 15. The Plea Agreements stipulate that "the tax loss from the conspiracy to which the Defendant is pleading guilty was $23,300.00." Chandler Plea Agreement 1321 ¶ 9(a), at 5. See also Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(a), at 7.

Tilga argues that the principle that a court may consider a defendant's unclaimed deductions in its calculation of tax loss, established under United States v. Hoskins, applies with equal force to her case and the foreign tax credit. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 9. Tilga asserts that, under United States v. Cruz, she could have eliminated an essential element of the federal income tax evasion charges because the ten-year statute of limitations for the foreign tax credit had not yet expired at the time she fixed her Canadian tax liability. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 9–10. Tilga contends that the $23,200.00 (USD) tax loss stipulated in the Plea Agreement is the product of a compromise on the foreign tax credit issue and allowed the parties to avoid a lengthy trial as well as secure prompt payment to the United States. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 10.

The United States also asks the Court to use the $23,200.00 (USD) [13] figure as the amount of tax loss and states that the Plea Agreement was specifically designed to avoid a court determination of the applicability of the foreign tax credit. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 10, 16. The United States maintains that its position is that a taxpayer cannot, through post-indictment amendment of her tax returns, defeat a tax prosecution. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 11. It cites United States v. Helmsley, 941 F.2d 71 (2d Cir.1991), which establishes this principle in the context of a taxpayer's election of a depreciation method. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 11 (citing United States v. Helmsley, 941 F.2d at 91). The United States supports, however, Tilga's position and the stipulation in the Plea Agreement, which is contrary to the Department of Justice's official position. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 12–16. The United States maintains that, under United States v. Cruz, there is a colorable argument that a "prosecution for tax evasion accelerates the time for fixing the amount of the foreign tax credit up until the time of trial" and that Tilga positioned herself to take advantage of the foreign tax credit. Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 14–15 (citing United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152). Furthermore, the United States' sentencing memorandum suggests that "in considering the non-binding stipulated tax loss, the Court should consider a recent Tenth Circuit decision holding that a sentencing court does not abuse its discretion in considering well-supported but unclaimed tax deductions when calculating tax loss for the purposes of U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1." Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 16 (citing United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094–95).

At the hearing, Chandler agreed with Tilga and the United States that the tax loss should be $23,300.00 (USD) and offered to present Mr. Rubinger to help educate the Court on the foreign tax credit issue. See Tr. at 17:12–25 (Johnson).

*1322 A. THE COURT WILL DECIDE WHETHER THE FOREIGN TAX CREDIT APPLIED POST–INDICTMENT.

At the hearing, the United States asserted that "[w]e were trying to avoid the situation in which a Court of the United States held that a defendant could make use of the foreign tax credit in the way that Tilga wished to use it in this case." Tr. at 11:2–4 (Gerson). Whether the foreign tax credit applies to effect the calculation of tax loss post-indictment, however, is a legal question. See United States v. Wick, 34 Fed.Appx. 273, 278 (9th Cir.2002) (holding that the application of a carry back to reduce the total tax loss to the government is a question of law). The United States asks the Court to do nothing more than accept the non-binding stipulation as to the calculation of tax loss. See Tr. at 10:23–11:6 (Gerson) ("I'm certainly not asking the Court to make a legal finding that that is the law.").

"It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177, 2 L.Ed. 60 (1803); Prost v. Anderson, 636 F.3d 578, 596 n. 13 (10th Cir.2011) ("This opinion answers the question of law as it must and explains the basis for its result."). In line with Marbury v. Madison, the Tenth Circuit has held that "[i]t is long settled that 'a party's position in a case (even when that party is the United States) does not dictate the meaning of a federal statute.' " Prost v. Anderson, 636 F.3d at 596 n. 13 (citing United States v. Charles, 576 F.3d 1060, 1066 (10th Cir.2009)). Furthermore, "[i]t is one thing to allow parties to forfeit claims, defenses, or lines of argument; it would be quite another to allow parties to stipulate or bind us to application of an incorrect legal standard, contrary to the congressional purpose." Gardner v. Galetka, 568 F.3d 862, 879 (10th Cir.2009). "The meaning of a statute, for example, cannot vary from case to case depending on concessions a party may have made." Snider v. Melindez, 199 F.3d 108, 114 (2d Cir.1999). As the Supreme Court of the United States stated in Swift & Co. v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 243 U.S. 281, 37 S.Ct. 287, 61 L.Ed. 722 (1917):

> The duty of this court, as of every judicial tribunal, is limited to determining rights of persons or of property.... No stipulation of parties or counsel, whether in the case before the court or in any other case, can enlarge the power, or affect the duty, of the court in this regard.

243 U.S. at 290, 37 S.Ct. 287.

Even if the Court were to accept, without comment, the parties' stipulation as to tax loss, it would imply approval of United States v. Cruz, and in the next foreign tax credit case the Court would be confronted with its decision in this case. See Tr. at 14:20–15:20 (Court, Gerson). While the United States may vary its position from case to case, or stipulate to an interpretation contrary to its official position, the Court must try to be as consistent and principled as possible. See Snider v. Melindez, 199 F.3d at 114. The United States admitted that the amount of tax loss depends on an interpretation of the foreign tax credit and United States v. Cruz. See Tr. at 11:7–11:14 (Court, Gerson). Accordingly, rather than simply accept the parties' stipulated tax loss calculation, the Court will decide whether federal law permits defendants to claim the foreign tax credit post-indictment.

B. TILGA MAY CLAIM THE FOREIGN TAX CREDIT POST–INDICTMENT.

[5] On their face, the statutory provisions that establish the foreign tax credit 1323 contain no limitation, other than the ten-year statute of limitation, which would prevent the foreign tax credit's application post-indictment. See 26 U.S.C. §§ 901–909, 6511(d)(3). Section 901(a) specifically provides that the credit "may be made or changed any time before the expiration of the period prescribed for making a claim for credit." 26 U.S.C. § 901(a) (emphasis added). Section 905 states that, if taxes are paid to a foreign government, then they relate back to the taxable year in which they accrued. See 26 U.S.C. § 905(c)(2)(B)(i)(II). Section 6511(d)(3) establishes a ten-year statute of limitations for "filing the return for the year in which such taxes were actually paid or accrued." 26 U.S.C. § 6511(d)(3).

The parties, both in their sentencing memoranda and at the hearing, relied almost exclusively on United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152. Both parties, however, briefly mention United States v. Hoskins, a recent Tenth Circuit decision, which held that a sentencing court may take unclaimed tax deductions into account when calculating the amount of tax loss. See 654 F.3d at 1094–95. In United States v. Hoskins, the Tenth Circuit announced its standard for determining what deductions and credits a sentencing court may use when calculating the United States' tax loss.

United States v. Hoskins establishes that "nothing in the Guidelines prohibits a sentencing court from considering evidence of unclaimed deductions in analyzing a defendant's estimate of the tax loss suffered by the government." 654 F.3d at 1094. Although other United States Courts of Appeals have expressed concerns about allowing defendants to avoid tax evasion prosecution, see United States v. Helmsley, 941 F.2d at 86–87 (through tax depreciation method); United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152 (through the foreign tax credit), the Tenth Circuit expressed no such concerns where a defendant offers "convincing proof" of entitlement to unclaimed deductions, United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094. The Tenth Circuit did not expressly address whether a sentencing court may consider tax credits when calculating the government's tax loss in the body of the opinion. In footnote 9, however, the Tenth Circuit suggests that the same analysis applies to the various credits that a defendant may claim. See United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094 n. 9. Emphasizing that U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 does not permit a defendant to benefit from deductions unrelated to the offense at issue, the Tenth Circuit stated: "Thus, unclaimed deductions for student loan interest or solar energy credits, for example, are not considered because they do not relate to the 'object of the offense.' " United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094 n. 9 (emphasis added). That the Tenth Circuit commented on unrelated deductions and credits being prohibited suggests that related credits would be permissible.[14] Thus, under this analysis, the Court must determine whether 1324 the foreign tax credits that Tilga claims are related to the "object of the offense"—the "loss that would have resulted had the offense been successfully completed." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094 & n. 9 (citing U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1).

Beyond the commentary in footnote 9, the Tenth Circuit does not elaborate on what it is required for a deduction or credit to relate to the "object of the offense." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094 & n. 9. Chief Judge Briscoe expressed concern "why it should matter whether the unclaimed deductions are related to the offense or not." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1103 (Briscoe, C.J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). She dissented with respect to the portions of the majority opinion "in which the majority takes the unnecessary step in announcing a rule permitting defendants in future cases to offer deductions they did not actually claim in order to establish a 'more accurate determination of the tax loss' under U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(a)." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1100. Chief Judge Briscoe explained that, in her view, the majority opinion's rule on tax loss improperly complicates sentencing in tax cases, improperly characterizes the Tenth Circuit's holding in United States v. Spencer, and "essentially allows the defendant a 'do over.' " United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1101–02. Additionally, her opinion noted: "I fail to see how some unclaimed deductions would be related to the offense and some deductions would not be. All the deductions relate to the return." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1103.

The Court finds that the foreign tax credits that Tilga claims in this case are related to the object of this offense. In United States v. Hoskins, the Tenth Circuit appears to require a direct link between the defendant's illegal actions, and the deduction or credit that they are claiming. See 654 F.3d at 1094 n. 9 (majority opinion). Thus, it noted that the district court could have considered evidence of commission payments to escorts, where the defendant was charged with wilfully evading income taxes on income earned from an escort service, but not peripheral expenses unrelated to the escort service. See 654 F.3d at 1094 n. 9. Tilga pled guilty to a Klein conspiracy—a conspiracy to victimize the IRS. See Tilga PSR ¶¶ 1, 3, at 3. The object of her offense was to conceal her Canadian source of income and defraud the United States. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 8(h), at 6–7. Tilga attempted to avoid paying taxes either to the United States or Canada on her Canadian income. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 8(h), at 6–7. In this case, the foreign tax credit would relate to the object of the offense, because it concerns the very funds, the income from Tilga's Canadian business, that Tilga sought to conceal through her conspiracy. The foreign tax credits that Tilga claims, for the years 1999 to 2004, are intimately connected to her Canadian funds, because all of the funds that she concealed from the United States government were also concealed from the Canadian government. When Tilga's Canadian tax liability became fixed at $7,424,514.40 (CAD), she was entitled to a foreign tax credit on those funds, because, for the years 1999 to 2004, the statute of limitations had not yet expired and the tax liability relates back to the year in which the liability was accrued. See 26 U.S.C. §§ 905(c)(2)(B), 6511(d)(3). This credit is more similar to the claimed deduction for commission payments to escorts in United States v. Hoskins than claims for peripheral expenditures or solar panels, because there is a direct connection 1325 between the United States taxes Tilga sought to avoid and her Canadian tax liability for which she seeks the tax credit. See 654 F.3d at 1094 n. 9. Following the analysis that the Tenth Circuit established in United States v. Hoskins and looking at the statutory provisions related to the foreign tax credit, the Court finds that Tilga is entitled to claim foreign tax credits for the years 1999 to 2004 and a tax loss calculation of $23,300.00 (USD), for the year in which the foreign tax credit is unavailable, is accurate.

Furthermore, allowing Tilga to claim the foreign tax credits and finding a tax loss of $23,300.00 would avoid the windfall gains about which the Tenth Circuit expressed concerns in United States v. Hoskins. See 654 F.3d at 1095. Although Tilga agreed to pay the United States taxes rather than the Canadian taxes, the United States would not be entitled to those funds under the foreign tax credit. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 7; Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(b), at 7–8. If Tilga had filed accurate tax returns from 1999 to 2004, then the foreign tax credit would most likely eliminate any tax liability owing to the United States, because the United States and Tilga agree that Canadian taxes are higher. See 26 U.S.C. §§ 901, 905; Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 3; Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 9. Thus, the application of the foreign tax credit in the calculation of tax loss is appropriate, because the United States would never have collected the remaining revenue for the years 1999 to 2004 had Tilga not evaded her taxes. See United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1095 ("Indeed, the government cannot claim to have lost revenue it never would have collected had the defendant not evaded his taxes."). Thus, the loss that would have resulted had the tax evasion been successfully completed would have been only $23,300.00 (USD) for the year 1998, the only year of the conspiracy for which the foreign tax credit is unavailable. See U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1; United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1095.

Although this result appears incongruent with ordinary criminal law practices—a robber does not eliminate his criminal liability when he returns stolen items—the Court recognizes that the foreign tax credit's ten-year statute of limitations and U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 creates a unique set of circumstances in which a defendant may reduce her liability. In United States v. Hoskins, the Tenth Circuit focused on U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1's plain language, which "directs courts to calculate the tax loss that was the 'object of the offense'—'the loss that would have resulted had the offense been completed.' " 654 F.3d at 1094. The Tenth Circuit also examined the language in Note A, which states that the default tax loss is 28% of the unreported gross income, "unless a more accurate determination of the tax loss can be made." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1092. The Tenth Circuit held that this language does not categorically prohibit a court from considering unclaimed deductions or credits, and that such information may be useful to ascertain the actual or intended tax loss suffered. See United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1094–95.

The Court, in determining the applicability of the foreign tax credit, follows the Tenth Circuit's analysis as established in United States v. Hoskins rather than the Eleventh Circuit's holding in United States v. Cruz. The Court's holding is, however, consistent with the holding in United States v. Cruz. The Eleventh Circuit recognized that a defendant may claim a foreign tax credit post-indictment. See United 1326 States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152 ("[T]he jury instruction given by the district court was correct. The instruction required that there be a firmly established taxable amount owed the foreign government and determined by it before the taxpayer would be entitled to a foreign tax credit."). The reasoning in that case, however, started from the premise that a defendant could claim a foreign tax credit at any time within the ten-year statute of limitations, without discussion, and then the Eleventh Circuit created a limitation to that principle when it held that a tax prosecution accelerates the time within which the taxpayer can exercise the right to the credit. See United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1150–52.[15] The Eleventh Circuit drew a line at trial, requiring defendants to claim the foreign tax credit before trial, and used concerns about tax loopholes or fraud to justify such a limitation. See United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152, 1152 n. 2. The Eleventh Circuit also justified accelerating the foreign tax credit's statute of limitations, because there is a six-year statute of limitations on prosecution under § 7201. See United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152; 26 U.S.C. § 6531 (establishing general six-year statute of limitations for tax evasion). "[I]f the United States waits for the ten years allowed by statute for the taxpayer to fix the amount of foreign tax liability, then the six-year statute of limitations on the section 7201 prosecution lapses." United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152. The Court agrees that there is a tension between the two limitations periods and that the foreign tax credit's ten-year statute of limitations allows tax evaders to fix their criminal liability post-indictment, in a way that is unique in the criminal system. The Tenth Circuit has held, however, that the § 7201 "statute of limitations begins to run on the date of the last affirmative act of evasion." United 1327 States v. Anderson, 319 F.3d 1218, 1219 (10th Cir.2003). This rule may alleviate some of the Eleventh Circuit's concerns in United States v. Cruz, because the United States will still be able to prosecute lengthy tax evasion schemes and ensures that, in at least some cases, the difference between the § 7201 statute of limitations and the foreign tax credit statute of limitations will be less than four years. Tilga's case offers a good example, because her tax evasion scheme began in 1998, the last alleged affirmative act of tax evasion was in 2004, and the grand jury indicted her in 2009. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(a)-(b). In 2009, the foreign tax credit's statute of limitations for the first year of the conspiracy, 1998, had expired. Thus, difference in length of the statutes of limitations for prosecution and for the foreign tax credit will not always bar prosecution for the evasive conduct. Additionally, not every foreign tax liability will be sufficient to eliminate a taxpayer's liability to the United States. See 26 U.S.C. § 901; Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 3 (stating that, because Canadian taxes are higher than taxes in the United States, the foreign tax credit eliminates tax liability to the United States for the years 1999–2004).

The Eleventh Circuit opinion offers no principled rationale for drawing the line at trial, rather than at sentencing or some other point in the litigation post-indictment. See United States v. Cruz, 698 F.2d at 1152. The Tenth Circuit in United States v. Hoskins did not discuss whether a defendant must claim a deduction or credit before any point in the tax prosecution. See 654 F.3d at 1092–97. Moreover, it is not a proper task for the Court to rewrite the foreign tax credit's statute of limitations to address the inherent tension between that time frame and § 7201's statute of limitations. See 1–12 Rhoades and Langer, United States Int'l Taxation and Tax Treaties (Matthew Bender & Co.), § 12.03, n. 43 (criticizing the Eleventh Circuit for accelerating the foreign tax credit's statute of limitations period in United States v. Cruz). Although the Internal Revenue Code may not provide all of the safeguards desirable to protect the public interest, the Court is not the body best situated to address this issue—that is a problem for Congress. See United Student Aid Funds, Inc. v. Espinosa, ––U.S. ––, 130 S.Ct. 1367, 1382, 176 L.Ed.2d 158 (2010) ("And to the extent existing sanctions prove inadequate to this task, Congress may enact additional provisions to address the difficulties the United States predicts will follow our decision."); Bd. of Governors of Fed. Reserve Sys. v. Dimension Fin. Corp., 474 U.S. 361, 374, 106 S.Ct. 681, 88 L.Ed.2d 691 (1986) ("If the Bank Holding Company Act falls short of providing safeguards desirable or necessary to protect the public interest, that is a problem for Congress, and not the Board or the courts, to address."). Even if the Court were to adopt the Eleventh Circuit's requirement that a foreign tax credit be fixed before trial and attempt to address the criticisms of that opinion, the Court need not decide whether those limitations apply here because Tilga satisfied the Eleventh Circuit test when she fixed her foreign tax liability before trial. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 14.

Although asking the Court to accept the stipulated tax loss amount, the United States refers the Court to the Department of Justice's position that a "taxpayer cannot defeat a prosecution by amending her returns post-Indictment" and refers the Court to several cases. Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 11 (citing United States v. Helmsley, 941 F.2d 71 (2d Cir.1991); 1328 United States v. Kleifgen, 557 F.2d 1293 (9th Cir.1977); Witte v. Commissioner, 513 F.2d 391 (D.C.Cir.1975); Fowler v. United States, 352 F.2d 100 (8th Cir.1965)). The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in United States v. Helmsley agreed with the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit's decision in Fowler v. United States and held that a taxpayer who has used a particular depreciation method may not defend against an evasion charge on the ground that, under an alternative method, the taxpayer could have claimed additional depreciation. See United States v. Helmsley, 941 F.2d at 86. The United States asserts that its position mirrors the general rule established in the Second Circuit's United States v. Helmsley decision—that a taxpayer may not amend her returns or suggest an alternative means of calculating the taxes owed. The Second Circuit expressed concerns about tax evaders using the tax system to avoid paying the full amount due after authorities discover their scheme, if the Second Circuit did not find post-indictment alterations impermissible. See United States v. Helmsley, 941 F.2d at 86–87. It stated

> The law could hardly be otherwise. If it were, evaders with complicated returns would be allowed to evade taxes on one portion of their return while using a depreciation period that would be the most profitable in the long run if the evasion went undetected. If the evasion were uncovered, then they would need only to recalculate under a shorter depreciation period that would increase deductions for the years in which evasion is charged.

United States v. Helmsley, 941 F.2d at 86–87. The United States cites cases from other circuits for the same proposition. See United States v. Kleifgen, 557 F.2d at 1298 n. 9 ("The Commissioner's consent to a change in accounting methods is required regardless of whether the change is from one proper method to another proper method or from an improper method to a proper one."); Witte v. Commissioner, 513 F.2d at 393–94 (same). None of the cases cited in favor of the Department of Justice's position are from the Tenth Circuit.

While the decisions the United States cites raise important issues about the ability of defendants to avoid tax evasion charges post-indictment, the Tenth Circuit's United States v. Hoskins opinion does not appear to share such concerns. Rather, the Tenth Circuit's concerns focus on whether the government will reap a windfall as a result of tax evasion. See United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1095. The Tenth Circuit's decision in United States v. Hoskins also does not reference the United States v. Helmsley line of cases. The divergence between the two opinions can perhaps be explained by the evolution of U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1's language. Earlier versions of § 2T1.1 "required courts to calculate tax loss based on gross income and prohibited consideration of legitimate but unclaimed deductions." United States v. Hoskins, 654 F.3d at 1096 (emphasis original). The 1991 version, for example, made "irrelevant the issue of whether the taxpayer was entitled to offsetting adjustments that he failed to claim." U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 cmt. n. 4 (1991). Later versions of the guidelines eliminated such language and instructs courts that tax loss "shall be treated as equal to 28% of the unreported income ..., unless a more accurate determination of the tax loss can be made." U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 Note A (emphasis added). The Second Circuit also recognized that later versions of the guidelines "permit[ ] consideration of legitimate but unclaimed deductions." 1329 United States v. Martinez–Rios, 143 F.3d 662, 671 (2d Cir.1998). In the United States v. Martinez–Rios opinion, the Second Circuit does not refer to the United States v. Helmsley opinion. See United States v. Martinez–Rios, 143 F.3d 662. This later decision undercuts the United States' reliance on United States v. Helmsley and provides further support for the Court's decision that defendants may claim the foreign tax credit post-indictment. Thus, the Court applies the reasoning from United States v. Hoskins to Tilga and Chandler's foreign tax credit claim, and determines that, under the law of the Tenth Circuit, Tilga and Chandler may claim the foreign tax credit for all years within the statute of limitations.

[6] The Court finds that the foreign tax credit may be claimed post-indictment and that Tilga has successfully established her Canadian tax liability, such that she could eliminate any tax liability owed to the United States for the years 1999 to 2004. Accordingly, the Court will sustain the objection to the calculation of tax loss based on any figure other than the $23,300.00 (USD) figure established in the Plea Agreements and accept the stipulations in the Plea Agreements. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(b), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(a), at 5. The amount of loss for both Tilga and Chandler is thus $23,300.00 (USD).

II. THE COURT WILL OVERRULE THE OBJECTION TO THE PSR'S REFERENCES TO SOPHISTICATED MEANS.

[7] The PSRs indicate that "the defendant and co-defendant utilized Pure Trust Organizations as business entities, wiring money to offshore accounts, and back to shell companies in an effort to hide the true amount of money earned." Tilga PSR ¶ 38, at 18–19; Chandler PSR ¶ 36, at 15. Based on this conduct, the PSRs maintain that a 2–level sophisticated-means enhancement should apply. See Tilga PSR ¶ 38, at 19; Chandler PSR ¶ 36, at 15. In the Plea Agreements, the parties stipulated that neither defendant used sophisticated-means to commit the offense. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b), at 5. Tilga argues that her conduct did not involve especial complexity or intricacy, see Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 11, and that the enhancement requires that the alleged sophisticated means be "something beyond what happens in the garden variety type of offense," Tr. at 42:13–25 (Theus). Tilga maintains that "tax offenses involving foreign or offshore bank accounts, and conspiracies for the tax offenses involving foreign or offshore bank accounts, inherently involve sophistication." Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 11. Tilga further asserts that, to the extent that sophisticated means were involved in her case, they were not of her creation. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 11. At the hearing, the United States and Chandler argued that Chandler and Tilga's offenses did not use sophisticated means, because Tilga and Chandler only purchased the PTOs—they did not create them. See Tr. at 40:5–11 (Court, Gerson); Tr. at 45:16–19 (Johnson). All parties agree that CTC used sophisticated means when it created the PTOs. See Tr. at 43:13–20 (Theus); Tr. at 39:3–5 (Gerson); Tr. at 45:19–23 (Johnson). Chandler also argued in a supplementary letter that, under Blakely v. Washington and United States v. Booker, "any fact (other than a prior conviction) which is necessary to support a sentence exceeding the maximum authorized by the facts established by a plea of guilty or a jury verdict must be admitted by the defendant or proved to a 1330 jury beyond a reasonable doubt." Letter at 2 (citations omitted).

U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 provides for a 2–level base offense enhancement where the offense involved sophisticated means. See U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(b)(2) ("If the offense involved sophisticated means, increase by 2 levels."). Application Note 4 provides: "For the purposes of subsection (b)(2), 'sophisticated means' means especially complex or especially intricate offense conduct pertaining to the execution or concealment of an offense. Conduct such as hiding assets or transactions, or both, through the use of fictitious entities, corporate shells, or offshore financial accounts ordinarily indicates sophisticated means." U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 cmt. n. 4 (emphasis added).

Chandler and Tilga must admit the facts providing the basis for the sophisticated-means enhancement or the United States must prove them by a preponderance of the evidence. See United States v. Magallanez, 408 F.3d at 685; United States v. Hall, 473 F.3d at 1312. Chandler suggests that the standard should be beyond a reasonable doubt; however, the Tenth Circuit has held that "Booker makes clear that judicial fact-finding by a preponderance of the evidence standard is unconstitutional only when it operates to increase a defendant's sentence mandatorily."

United States v. Hall, 473 F.3d at 1312. The Court believes that it can apply the sophisticated-means enhancement under U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 using only those facts that Tilga and Chandler admitted in the Plea Agreements. Nonetheless, the Court notes that Tilga and Chandler both agreed that "the Court may rely on any of the[ ] facts [included in the Plea Agreement], as well as the facts in the presentence report, to determine [their] sentence[s], including, but not limited to, the advisory guideline offense level." Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 8, at 4. Accord Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 9, at 7.

Tilga originally argued that "tax offenses involving foreign or offshore bank accounts, and conspiracies for the tax offenses involving foreign or offshore bank accounts, inherently involve sophistication," and that Tilga's conduct must be analyzed in context of her class of offense. Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 11. The United States did not address this aspect of Tilga's argument. See Tr. at 39:3–41:6 (Court, Gerson). At the hearing, however, Tilga agreed that CTC's conduct would qualify as sophisticated means. See Tr. at 43:13–20 (Theus) ("No I think Commonwealth Trust Company, in its creation of a number of types of [products], marketing those products, managing those products for their customers ... does engage in sophisticated means."). Thus, Tilga appears to have conceded at the hearing that the use of offshore bank accounts and sham entities constitutes sophisticated means despite her argument to the contrary in her sentencing memorandum. The application note specifically instructs sentencing courts that "fictitious entities, corporate shells, or offshore financial accounts ordinarily indicate[ ] sophisticated means." U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 cmt. n. 4. If the Court followed Tilga's original argument, this portion of Application Note would be devoid of meaning, because Tilga would require the United States to establish that a defendant's conduct was unique for the category of offense. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 11. Thus, for defendants using fictitious entities, corporate shells, or offshore accounts to qualify for the sophisticated-means enhancement, Tilga would require that such means be used in an especially complex or novel manner, and ignore the inherent complexity of those 1331 entities, which is what the Application Note recognizes. See United States v. Ambort, 405 F.3d at 1120 (stating that the sophisticated-means enhancement applies to actions that are "more complex or demonstrate[ ] greater intricacy or planning than a routine tax-evasion case"); United States v. Schwartz, 408 Fed.Appx. at 870 (affirming the sophisticated-means enhancement where the defendant created and used fictitious trusts to hide assets from the IRS, even though the defendant was not a sophisticated businessman); United States v. Minneman, 143 F.3d at 283 (holding that, the use of multiple corporate names and the placement of funds in a trust account both constitute complex efforts to hide income).

Furthermore, the Tenth Circuit defines "garden variety" tax fraud through reference to United States v. Rice, "a case of claiming to have paid withholding taxes not paid," and United States v. Stokes, a case of "not disclosing income to one's accountant." United States v. Wardell, 218 Fed.Appx. 695, 698 (10th Cir.2007) (citing United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d at 849; United States v. Stokes, 998 F.2d at 281–83). The standard does not look to the specific category of tax evasion that the defendant committed to determine whether the sophisticated means enhancement applies; rather the Tenth Circuit instructs courts to determine whether the tax scheme was "more complex or demonstrates greater intricacy or planning than a routine tax evasion case." United States v. Ambort, 405 F.3d at 1113. Other courts have rejected similar arguments. See United States v. O'Doherty, 643 F.3d 209, 220 (7th Cir.2011) ("Although [the defendant] protests that corporations are ubiquitous 'in most modern business transactions' ... their use to impede the discovery of personal income, as they were used here, permits the imposition of the enhancement."); United States v. Maggert, 428 Fed.Appx. 874, 880 (11th Cir.2011) ("To facilitate his tax evasion scheme, Maggert set up two fictitious entities and used them to try and hide his income. Such conduct falls squarely within § 2T1.1's definition of sophisticated means.").

Tilga, Chandler, and the United States all argue that Tilga's conduct does not qualify for the sophisticated-means enhancement, because she did nothing more than purchase a product and, to the extent that sophisticated means were used, they were not of her creation. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 11; Tr. at 40:5–11 (Court, Gerson); Tr. at 45:16–19 (Johnson). The PSRs state that Tilga and Chandler's conduct warrants a 2–level sophisticated means enhancement, because "[i]n this case, the defendant and co-defendant utilized Pure Trust Organizations as business entities, wiring money to offshore accounts, and back to shell companies in an effort to hide the true amount of money earned." Tilga PSR ¶ 38, at 18–19; Chandler PSR ¶ 36, at 15. Neither the United States nor Tilga, either in a sentencing memorandum or at the hearing, directed the Court to any federal court opinion that drew a distinction between a customer who purchases sophisticated means from a corporation and the producers of the sophisticated product. See Tr. at 41:1–4 (Court, Gerson); Tr. at 43:23–44:6 (Court, Theus). The Court, however, located three cases that discuss similar factual situations and U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1(b)(2). The United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, in United States v. Anthony, 545 F.3d 60 (1st Cir.2008)—addressed the same facts as the Court, a customer who purchased trusts and corporations from CTC—and held that there was no error in applying the sophisticated-means 1332 enhancement. See 545 F.3d at 63, 68. In United States v. Firestien, No. 04–331, 2007 WL 174108 (W.D.N.Y. Jan. 19, 2007), the United States District Court for the Western District of New York applied the sophisticated-means enhancement where the defendant established shell corporations under Nevada law and used bank accounts in Costa Rica. See 2007 WL 174108, at *2. The Western District of New York found the enhancement appropriate, notwithstanding the defendant's argument that the Anderson Ark program informed him of the steps to take, because he took affirmative action to set up the shell corporation and utilize the Costa Rican accounts. See United States v. Firestien, 2007 WL 174108, at *2. In United States v. Baxter, No. 04–371–1, 2006 WL 1155872 (N.D.Ill. Apr. 27, 2006), the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois held that a 2–level sophisticated-means enhancement was inappropriate. See 2006 WL 1155872, at *4. In that case, the defendant used that "Aegis system" and "believed in the legality of the advice given by the Aegis instructors and in the legitimacy of the Aegis system." United States v. Baxter, 2006 WL 1155872, at *3. The Northern District of Illinois found that, because the defendant "did not admit[ ] to participating in the Aegis system knowing that it was illegal," her conduct was "certainly ... not as sophisticated as 'using offshore bank accounts, or transactions through corporate shells.' " United States v. Baxter, 2006 WL 1155872, at *4.

Tilga and Chandler's conduct fits squarely within what Application Note 4 contemplates as sophisticated means. The application note states that ordinarily the "use of fictitious entities, corporate shells, or offshore financial accounts" indicate sophisticated means. U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 cmt. n. 4 (emphasis added). There is nothing in the comments or the case law to suggest that a person must create the sophisticated means to qualify for the enhancement. Taxpayers should not be able to avoid a sophisticated-means enhancement because they pay someone else to think of the scheme or means that they then use to defraud the United States. The application note focuses on whether such means were "used," and this limited factual inquiry is the appropriate one. See U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 cmt. n. 4. Tilga and Chandler used "corporate shells" and "offshore accounts." Tilga wired nearly $8.7 million (USD) into the United States from offshore accounts, she transferred funds between nominee entities, and she used the nominee entities to purchase real estate and vehicles. See Tilga PSR ¶¶ 18–19, at 10. In her Plea Agreement, Tilga admits that: (i) she purchased several nominee entities from CTC; (ii) she directed her Canadian businesses to distribute her share of the revenue to one such entity; (iii) the entity then transferred funds to other nominee entities at her direction; (iv) she used those entities to purchase real property, renovate those properties, and purchase vehicles; and (v) she did all this with the intent to conceal her Canadian income source and defraud the United States. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 8(d)-(h), at 4–7. Chandler assisted Tilga in using the offshore trusts to move money, he rented mailboxes in the names of entities that he and Tilga purchased from CTC, and titled an automobile in the name of one of the CTC purchased entities. See Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 7(a)-(e). At the hearing, Tilga asserted that, to qualify for the sophisticated-means enhancement, there must be "some deliberate or volitional activity on the part of the accused in terms of creation or management of these types of products." Tr. at 1333 45:1–6 (Theus) (emphasis added). Tilga and Chandler were more than a passive participants in this scheme. Rather, their conduct indicates that they took affirmative actions to manage the PTOs, shell corporations, and accounts to keep the United States from taxing Tilga's Canadian income. See United States v. Firestien, 2007 WL 174108, at *2. Furthermore, Tilga and Chandler's actions went beyond those of the defendant in United States v. Baxter, because Tilga and Chandler used offshore bank accounts and shell corporations and because Tilga and Chandler admitted that they "entered into an agreement with certain employees of CTC ... with the intent to conceal her Canadian source of income and the intent to defraud the United States." Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 8(h), at 6–7. See also Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 7(b)-(c), at 4; United States v. Baxter, 2006 WL 1155872, at *4. The First Circuit's holding in United States v. Anthony, applying the sophisticated-means enhancement to another CTC customer, also bolsters the Court's conclusion here. See United States v. Anthony, 545 F.3d at 63, 68.

Chandler, in his letter in support of the parties' stipulations, argued that United States v. Lewis and United States v. Rice require that the Court not apply the sophisticated-means enhancement. See Letter at 2. In United States v. Rice, the defendant—Rice—established several S Corporations, which do not have to pay taxes, but must file quarterly statements concerning their employees' withholding. See 52 F.3d at 844–45. Over the course of three years, Rice claimed more money on his individual tax return than had been withheld. See United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d at 845. The Tenth Circuit held that Rice's fraud was "the functional equivalent of claiming more in itemized deductions than actually paid" and reversed the application of the sophisticated-means enhancement, because "[i]f that scheme is sophisticated within the meaning of the guidelines, then every fraudulent tax return will fall within that enhancement's rubric." United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d at 849. Chandler suggests that his conduct was similar to Rice's, because Tilga and Chandler "merely requested, of others, the movement of moneys from one account to a different account." Letter at 2. Tilga and Chandler's conduct, however, goes beyond claiming more in deductions than actually paid, or claiming more withholdings than actually withheld. Tilga and Chandler certainly "requested, of others, the movement of moneys," Letter at 2; they requested that funds for Tilga's Canadian businesses be transferred to one nominal entity, then transferred them to other nominal entities, then used the funds to purchase real estate and vehicles that would not be titled in their names, all to ensure that the IRS never discovered their Canadian income, see Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 7(a)-(e), at 3–4; Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 8(d)-(h), at 4–7. Tilga and Chandler actively attempted to conceal their entire Canadian income; they did not merely falsely report an amount on their tax form. Furthermore, in United States v. Lewis, another case Chandler cites, the Second Circuit stated that "the provision targets conduct that is more complex, demonstrates greater intricacy, or demonstrates greater planning than a routine tax-evasion case." 93 F.3d at 1080. See also Letter at 1–2. Here, even discounting the creation of the PTOs and offshore accounts, Tilga and Chandler admit to taking affirmative steps to transfer money between accounts to conceal their income, to using the offshore trusts for these purposes, to titling their property in the name of nominal entities to avoid detection, and 1334 to taking other steps, i.e. setting up mailboxes, to conceal the true amount of their income. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 8(d)-(h), at 4–7; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 7(a)-(e). Under almost any metric, their use of these items was complex, so complex that Tilga and Chandler attended seminars to learn more. See Tr. at 45:24–25 (Johnson) ("[Y]ou have Tilga who is a customer. She went to one of their seminars ..."); Tr. at 49:9–11 (Johnson) ("[T]hat would be paragraph 40 that the probation officer indicates that Mr. Chandler attended some of the seminars. That is true ..."). Tilga and Chandler's purchases from CTC, purchases of real estate, and attendance at seminars also indicate that a great deal of planning went into how best to conceal their income. Thus, even under the two cases Chandler cites, Tilga and Chandler both qualify for the sophisticated-enhancement.

Tilga and Chandler's offense was far "more complex or demonstrates greater intricacy or planning than a routine tax-evasion case," see United States v. Ambort, 405 F.3d at 1120, and fits well within the range of conduct that the sophisticated-means enhancement targets, see U.S.S.G. § 2T1.1 cmt. n. 4. Consequently, the Court will overrule the objection to the PSR's reference to the sophisticated-means enhancement, and will apply the 2–level enhancement to Tilga and Chandler's base offense levels. The Court will also not accept the parties' stipulations in the Plea Agreements that neither defendant was subject to a sophisticated-means enhancement. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b), at 5.

III. THE COURT WILL SUSTAIN THE OBJECTION TO THE PSR'S REFERENCES TO SPECIAL SKILLS.

Tilga's PSR states that "the defendant attended seminars sponsored by Commonwealth Trust Company and utilized their program to start Pure Trust Organizations.... The knowledge of how to start a PTO and the purpose of a PTO is not a skill commonly possessed by the public." Tilga PSR ¶ 42, at 20. The PSR also references Tilga's Masters of Business Administration degree before concluding that, "[b]ased on this information, a two-level increase should be applied." Tilga PSR ¶ 42, at 20. The PSR on Chandler states that "the defendant attended CTC seminars, became closer than some with founders and managers of the company, and was able to assist his wife and setting up offshore accounts and wiring money to and from the accounts." Chandler PSR ¶ 40, at 16–17. The PSRs maintain that, based on this information, Tilga and Chandler should receive a 2–level special skills enhancement. See Tilga PSR ¶ 42, at 20; Chandler PSR ¶ 40, at 16–17. In the Plea Agreements, the parties stipulated that no special skills enhancement should apply either to Tilga or to Chandler. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b), at 5. The United States asserted that neither Tilga nor Chandler "possessed any special skill with respect to taxes." Tr. at 50:1–4 (Gerson). The United States recognized that Tilga is highly educated, but argued that Tilga did not "victimize[ ] some other person by making use of these special skills." Tr. at 50:5–15 (Court, Gerson).

U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3 provides that "[i]f the defendant abused a position of public or private trust, or used a special skill in a manner that significantly facilitated the commission or concealment of the offense, increase by 2 levels." U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3. Application Note 4 defines "special skill" as "a skill not possessed by members of the general public and usually requiring substantial education, training or licensing." 1335 U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3 cmt. n. 4. To apply a § 3B1.3 enhancement: (i) the defendant must possess a special skill or a position of trust; and (ii) the defendant must use that skill or abuse that position to significantly facilitate the commission or concealment of the offense. See United States v. Burt, 134 F.3d at 998–99.

[8] The PSR seems to suggest that Tilga possessed two sets of special skills that she brought to bear in the commission of her offense: (i) business skills acquired in the course of her education; and (ii) skills related to PTOs acquired during CTC's seminars. See Tilga PSR ¶ 42, at 20. The Court will consider each "special skill" in turn.

Tilga has a bachelor's degree in Hotel Administration from Cornell University and a Masters in Business Administration from the Wharton School of Business. See Tilga PSR ¶¶ 68–69, at 26. The skills she acquired over the course of her education, however, were not tax specific, and related to marketing and collecting fees for services provided. See Tr. at 51:2–6 (Gerson). There is no evidence that Tilga used the business and marketing skills that she acquired during her education to significantly facilitate the concealment of her crime. See United States v. Burt, 134 F.3d at 1000 ("Without the requisite connection between the crime and Defendant's special knowledge, the section 3B1.3 enhancement for use of a special skill cannot be affirmed."). While Tilga has some special education, the Court is not convinced that the special skills that she acquired during that education facilitated the commission of the concealment of the offense.

[9] Tilga attended several CTC seminars and used CTC's program to start PTOs. See Tilga PSR ¶ 42, at 20. Chandler also attended some CTC seminars, but argued that "attending some seminars would not rise to the level of a special skill." Tr. at 49:7–14, 51:14–25 (Johnson). Generally, attending a few seminars would not appear to be comparable to a skill requiring "substantial education, training or licensing." U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3 cmt. 4 (emphasis added). The Tenth Circuit recognizes, however, that a defendant need "not complete formal educational or licensing requirements in order to possess a special skill." United States v. Hinshaw, 1999 WL 9762, at *3. At the hearing, Chandler stated that "CTC held Tilga's hand throughout the time period" and was involved in the administration of Tilga's trusts. Tr. at 46:1–6 (Johnson). Tilga also asserts that she accepted the representations of CTC's sales personnel, lawyers, and accountants, and did no more than purchase CTC products. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 7. CTC conducted seminars on a variety of topics, including the "use of trustee documents, privacy issues, offshore banking, certificate holder issues, how to wire transactions to offshore accounts and where to store documents." Tilga PSR ¶ 15, at 9. While these seminar topics conveyed specialized knowledge, there is no evidence that participants were taught specialized skills not possessed by members of the general public, as § 3B1.3 requires. See U.S.S.G. § 3B1.3 cmt. 4. More likely is that participants walked away from these seminars with a general understanding of the topic, which may be more than what the public knows, but which still does not rise to the level of a specialized skill. Although Tilga and Chandler used sophisticated programs, offshore accounts, and other entities, as discussed above in reference to the sophisticated-means enhancement, there is no evidence that Tilga or Chandler possessed 1336 any special skills related to the creation or operation of the PTOs. Furthermore, even if Tilga or Chandler possessed specialized skills, it does not appear that either used them to commit the crime, because CTC exercised its skills to create the means for their offenses, and Tilga and Chandler followed their program. See Tilga PSR ¶¶ 18–20, at 10–11; United States v. Lee, 296 F.3d 792, 794–95, 799 (9th Cir.2002) (holding that, a defendant did not possess a "special skill" where the defendant copied and pasted "scripts from a legitimate website to create a phony website").

Accordingly, the Court finds that neither Tilga nor Chandler used a special skill to conceal their offense and will accept the parties' stipulations to that effect in the Plea Agreements. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b), at 5.

IV. THE COURT WILL SUSTAIN THE OBJECTION TO THE PSR'S REFERENCES TO AN AGGRAVATING ROLE ADJUSTMENT.

[10] The PSR states that Tilga can be identified as an organizer, leader, manager, or supervisor in the criminal activity, thus warranting a 2–level enhancement. See Tilga PSR ¶ 41, at 20. The PSR asserts that Tilga had her husband, as well as her bookkeeper, open mail accounts for shell companies, so that they would not be associated with her name, and that she used unindicted coconspirators to assist in her attempt to evade paying taxes to the IRS. See Tilga PSR ¶ 41, at 20. In the Plea Agreement, the parties stipulated that Tilga's offense did not involve an aggravating role. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8. At the hearing, the United States and Tilga asserted that she was not an organizer, leader, or supervisor of the criminal activity, because the criminal activity extended to CTC, and the CTC executives were the ones who created the product. See Tr. at 48:12–21 (Court, Gerson, Theus).

Section 3B1.1 of the Sentencing Guidelines provides for enhancements to a defendant's offense level based on a defendant having played an aggravating role in the offense. Under § 3B1.1(a), "[i]f the defendant was an organizer or leader of a criminal activity that involved five or more participants or was otherwise extensive, increase by 4 levels." U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1(a). Lesser enhancements are specified for defendants who are "managers or supervisors" rather than organizers or leaders, and for defendants involved in smaller-scale criminal conduct. U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1(b)-(c). Among the factors a sentencing court should consider when weighing an aggravating role enhancement are:

> [T]he exercise of decision making authority, the nature of participation in the commission of the offense, the recruitment of accomplices, the claimed right to a larger share of the fruits of the crime, the degree of participation in planning or organizing the offense, the nature and scope of the illegal activity, and the degree of control and authority exercised over others. There can, of course, be more than one person who qualifies as a leader or organizer of a criminal association or conspiracy.

U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1 cmt. n. 4. The Tenth Circuit has "elaborated that '[i]n considering these factors, the sentencing court should remain conscious of the fact that the gravamen of this enhancement is control, organization, and responsibility for the actions of other individuals because § 3B1.1(a) is an enhancement for organizers 1337 or leaders, not for important or essential figures.' " United States v. Sallis, 533 F.3d 1218, 1223 (10th Cir.2008) (quoting United States v. Torres, 53 F.3d 1129, 1142 (10th Cir.1995)).

The criminal activity in this case extends beyond Tilga to CTC's executives and employees, who encouraged and created the means for this offense. See Tilga PSR ¶¶ 10–15, at 7–9. Considering the entire criminal organization, Tilga is substantially less culpable than those at CTC. The PSR maintains that Tilga directed the activities of her husband and bookkeeper. Tilga's role, however, is much less culpable than the conduct in other cases where the Tenth Circuit has approved the aggravating role enhancement. See United States v. Cruz Camacho, 137 F.3d 1220, 1225 (10th Cir.1998) (affirming an aggravating role enhancement where the defendant had a leadership role, recruited other members, directed activities, and paid other members of the organization); United States v. Bernaugh, 969 F.2d 858, 863 (10th Cir.1992) (affirming an aggravating role enhancement where the defendant was the moneyman, engaged in negotiations, and took possession of drugs). The nature of Tilga's role was not such that she exercised decision-making authority or control over the criminal enterprise, and the nature of her participation was no more than that of an average participant in the tax evasion scheme that CTC established. Indeed, as a consumer of CTC's products, Tilga appears to be the average participant.

Accordingly, the Court agrees with the parties that an aggravating role enhancement is inappropriate and will sustain the objection to the PSR's references to the applicability of such an enhancement. The Court will also accept the stipulation to that effect in the Plea Agreement. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8.

V. THE COURT WILL OVERRULE THE OBJECTION TO THE PSR'S REFERENCES TO OBSTRUCTION.

The PSR asserts that, but for the Plea Agreement, a obstruction enhancement, pursuant to § 3C1.1, would be appropriate, because during the three years that Tilga employed Simmons she told him that if he were ever asked about Tilga's property, to lie, and because, upon learning of the IRS' investigation, Tilga told Simmons that he was going to pay. See Tilga PSR ¶ 43, at 20–21. The Plea Agreement stipulates that Tilga's offense did not involve obstruction of justice. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8. At the hearing, the United States asserted that it could prove that Tilga said the things the PSR alleges, through the testimony of Simmons, but stated that it believed that the statements showed Tilga's state of guilty conscious, rather than a motive to obstruct. See Tr. at 53:22–54:8 (Gerson). Tilga responded that she could impeach Simmons, and that there is no admissible evidence that Tilga intended to obstruct or impede the administration of justice. See Tr. at 53:10–20 (Theus). The United States conceded that it would not be able to prove obstruction of justice by a preponderance of the evidence. See Tr. at 54:22–55:14 (Court, Gerson).

U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1 states:

> If (A) the defendant willfully obstructed or impeded, or attempted to obstruct or impede, the administration of justice with respect to the investigation, prosecution, or sentencing of the instant offense of conviction, and (B) the obstructive conduct related to (i) the defendant's offense of conviction 1338 and any relevant conduct; or (ii) a closely related offense, increase the offense level by 2 levels.

The application notes state: "Obstructive conduct that occurred prior to the start of the investigation of the instant offense of conviction may be covered by this guideline if the conduct was purposefully calculated, and likely, to thwart the investigation or prosecution of the offense of conviction." U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1 cmt. n.1.

Tilga's alleged conduct, asking a witness to lie, generally falls within the ambit of conduct considered obstructive in § 3C1.1. See United States v. Farnsworth, 92 F.3d at 1011; United States v. Hernandez, 967 F.2d 456, 459 (10th Cir.1992) (finding that the defendant asked another to lie as to his culpability, thereby impeding administration of justice). Tilga's PSR indicates that most of her conduct occurred before the start of the investigation. See Tilga PSR ¶ 43, 20–21. The conduct, therefore, must be "purposefully calculated, and likely, to thwart the investigation or prosecution of the offense of conviction." U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1 cmt. n. 1. The United States conceded, at the hearing, that it would not be able to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that Tilga's conduct was "reasonably likely to interfere with the investigation." Tr. at 55:3–5 (Gerson). The Court agrees that it is unlikely that the false statements of an employee that Tilga did not own property would reasonably interfere with the investigation or thwart prosecution. Any reasonable investigation would question both whether an employee would have personal knowledge of the employer's property ownership and the accuracy of such knowledge. Additionally, the United States conceded that Tilga's statements upon learning of the investigation were an "unpremeditated emotional response on Ms. Tilga's part that showed her state of mind with respect to her knowledge that she was committing tax evasion but not that it was being uttered for the purpose of trying to prevent the United States from carrying out an investigation in this case." Tr. at 53:4–8 (Gerson). The Court finds that Tilga's alleged statements, that she "was not going to take the fall" and that Simmons was "going to pay," Tilga PSR ¶ 43, at 21, are not the kind of statements aimed at obstructing justice. Tilga's alleged statements do not threaten Simmons or otherwise indicate that he should do anything to impede the investigation, which the Court would recognize as obstruction. See United States v. Yuselew, 2010 WL 3834418, at *12–13 (finding the obstruction enhancement applicable where the defendant threatened the only witness with death and attempted to bury evidence).

Because the United States concedes that it could not prove obstruction of justice by a preponderance of the evidence, and because the Court finds that Tilga's alleged statements were not reasonably likely to thwart the investigation or prosecution, the Court concludes that this conduct cannot form the basis of an obstruction-of-justice enhancement. Furthermore, because the United States concedes, and the Court agrees, that Tilga's later statement was not purposefully directed at obstructing justice, the Court concludes that there is no basis for an obstruction-of-justice enhancement pursuant to § 3C1.1. Accordingly, the Court will sustain the objection and accept the stipulation in the Plea Agreement. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8.

VI. THE COURT OVERRULES THE OBJECTIONS TO THE TILGA PSR'S FAILURE TO ACKNOWLEDGE THE PLEA AGREEMENT'S ADVANTAGE TO THE UNITED STATES AND TO RECOGNIZE THE ADVISORY NATURE OF THE GUIDELINES.

Tilga objected to her PSR's failure to explicitly recognize that the guidelines are 1339 advisory and the PSR's failure to acknowledge the advantages that the United States gained from the Plea Agreement. See Tilga's Sentencing Memo. at 4. At the hearing, however, Tilga stated that her objection, to her PSR's failure to acknowledge the advantages that the United States received from the Plea Agreement, had been addressed, because the USPO agreed to reflect that Tilga brought those matters to the Court's attention, and was more appropriate for argument rather than inclusion in the PSR. See Tr. at 57:21–58:3 (Theus). Tilga also admitted that her objection is moot to the extent that the information is presently before the Court through her sentencing memorandum. See Tr. at 58:4–7 (Court, Theus). Additionally, Tilga stated that her objection to her PSR's failure to acknowledge the advisory status of the guidelines had been satisfactorily addressed and included in the sentencing memorandum. See Tr. at 58:12–59:2 (Court, Theus).

Because the USPO satisfactorily addressed these objections, by reflecting that Tilga brought the matter to the Court's attention, and because Tilga concedes that they are not moot, the Court will overrule the objections to her PSR's failure to state that the guidelines are advisory and to her PSR's failure to acknowledge the advantages that the United States' obtained from the Plea Agreement.

IT IS ORDERED that the objections in Defendant Carolynne Tilga's Memorandum in Aid of Sentencing of Defendant Carolyne Tilga and Limited Objection to Presentence Report, filed October 6, 2011 (Doc. 161), are sustained in part and overruled in part. The Court accepts the parties' stipulated tax loss calculation, $23,300.00 (USD), and sustains the objection to the Defendant Carolynne Tilga's Presentence Investigation Report ("Tilga's PSR"), disclosed July 26, 2011, and Defendant Michael Chandler's Presentence Investigation Report ("Chandler's PSR"), disclosed July 26, 2011. The Court also accepts the parties' stipulations in the Defendant Carolynne Tilga's Plea Agreement, filed January 6, 2011 (Doc. 126) and Defendant Michael Chandler's Plea Agreement, filed January 6, 2011 (Doc. 128) ("Chandler Plea Agreement") that neither Tilga nor Chandler's offenses involved a special skill, an aggravating role, or obstruction of justice, and sustains Tilga and Chandler's objections to portions of the PSRs which suggest otherwise. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b), at 5. The Court rejects the parties' stipulation that the offense did not involve sophisticated means, and overrules Tilga and Chandler's objections to her PSRs' references to the enhancement. See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(c), at 8; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(b), at 5. The Court concludes that Tilga's objections to the PSR's failure to acknowledge the benefits that the United States obtained from the Plea Agreement and failure to explicitly recognize that the sentencing guidelines are advisory are moot.

All Citations

824 F.Supp.2d 1295, 108 A.F.T.R.2d 2011-7129, 2011-2 USTC P 50,722

Footnotes

[1] Defendant Michael Chandler also filed Defendant Michael Chandler's Objection to the Pre–Sentence Report on August 9, 2011 (Doc. 152). Because Chandler did not address his objection at the hearing and because the objection is not relevant to the Court's conclusions in this memorandum opinion and order, the Court will not address the objection at this time. If necessary, the Court will address Chandler's objection at the sentencing hearing, and in a subsequent memorandum opinion and order.

2 The Court will not address Tilga's request for a downward variance and/or downward departure, or Tilga's ability to pay a fine. This memorandum and opinion addresses only the objections to the PSR that could impact the calculation of the guideline sentencing range. If necessary, the Court will address Tilga's request for a variance and/or downward departure, and her objection to the PSR's analysis of her ability to a pay a fine, at the sentencing hearing and in a subsequent sentencing memorandum.

3 Tilga did not object to any of the Tilga PSR's factual findings either in her sentencing memorandum or at the hearing. Chandler objected to paragraph 22 of the Chandler PSR in Defendant Michael Chandler's Objection to the Pre–Sentence Report, filed August 31, 2011 (Doc. 156) ("Chandler Objection"). Chandler objects to the Chandler PSR's finding that "Chandler was also known to assist [in] wiring money to and from the account." Chandler Objection at 1–2. Other than this one objection, Chandler did not contest the factual findings of the Chandler PSR either in his Objection, his sentencing memorandum, or at the hearing.

4 A webcam is a video camera that feeds its images in real time to a computer or computer network, often via USB, ethernet, or Wi–Fi. The name, webcam, is derived from their common use as a video camera for the World Wide Web, or internet. Webcams are frequently used to establish video links, permitting personal computers to act as video-phones or video-conference stations. See Webcam, WIKIPEDIA.ORG, http://en.wikipedia. org/wiki/Webcam (last visited October 28, 2011).

5 CTC marketed their services and products as a means of providing privacy and asset protection. See Tilga PSR ¶ 11, at 8. CTC described privacy as "a means to get assets out of your name" and asset protection as "a method to owe more than the asset is worth." Tilga PSR ¶ 11, at 8. The CTC provided clients with documentation from the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") that Pure Trust Organizations ("PTOs") were considered legal, even though they did not have to file income tax returns. Tilga PSR ¶ 11, at 8. When a client purchased a CTC product, such as a Pure Trust Organization, the client would receive the original documents, and CTC would inform the client that the documents should be stored away from the client's personal residence. See Tilga PSR ¶ 13, at 8. This off-site storage occurred because if the IRS were to locate the documents, it would confirm that the PTOs were an alter ego of the client who purchased the product. See Tilga PSR ¶ 13, at 8. The Director of Operations of CTC from 1998 to 2003, Wayne C. Rebuck, knew that the majority of pure trusts sold by CTC were used in an abusive manner, wherein individuals "evaded and defeated taxes." Tilga PSR ¶ 14, at 8–9.

6 Although it is unclear whether the CTC still operates as an organization, the PSR refers to it in the past tense, and it appears that CTC's Director of Operations, Wayne C. Rebuck, has been involved in this and other criminal prosecutions. See Tilga PSR ¶ 15, at 9 ("Rebuck was able to identify Carolynne Tilga and Michael Chandler as individuals who met with representatives from CTC to purchase trusts and foreign companies."); United States v. Anthony, 545 F.3d 60, 63 n. 4 (1st Cir.2008) ("Pursuant to an agreement with the government [Wayne] Rebuck testified at Anthony's trial.").

7 The PSR notes:

> A Pure Trust Organization (PTO) has been defined as a common law contract in trust form. The Pure Trust is a contract at common-law in equity created in trust form. Unlike the Trust, the PTO receives the assets by exchange, meaning there is a full and adequate exchange for the assets. In other words each party gives something and receives something in return, and the agreement has a stipulated duty to perform that all parties must adhere to. The Exchanger exchanges the assets to the Trust for Trust Certificate Units ("TCU's"). The Creator appoints at least two Trustees to manage the trust. The Trustees can appoint a General Manager to oversee the day-to-day business activities of the Trust. The Exchanger has no control over the Trustees, the business of the Trust or the income stream. The Trustees are in total control and the Exchanger has no reversionary interest in the Trust. This entity has the substance of a contract and the form of a trust.

Tilga PSR ¶ 10, at 7–8. The IRS states that the term "pure trust" does not appear in the Internal Revenue Code and that "[w]hatever the name of the arrangement ... the taxation of the entity must comply with the requirements of the Internal Revenue Code." Abusive Trust Tax Evasion Schemes—Special Types of Trusts, INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, http://www.irs. gov/businesses/small/article/0,,id=106553,00.html (last visited October 21, 2011).

8 A conspiracy to defeat the IRS' lawful function and victimize the IRS is known as a Klein conspiracy. See United States v. Adkinson, 158 F.3d 1147, 1154 (11th Cir.1998) (citing United States v. Klein, 247 F.2d 908 (2d Cir.1957)). To show a Klein conspiracy the United States must show not only (i) the requisite act of a failure to properly report income, but also (ii) an agreement between at least two conspirators to impede the IRS' functioning and (iii) knowing participation in such a conspiracy. See United States v. Adkinson, 158 F.3d at 1153; United States v. McKee, 506 F.3d 225, 238 (3d Cir.2007).

9 The parties calculated the tax loss based on the following information: (i) Tilga wired $186,982.50 (USD), income from one of her Canadian businesses, to Tierra del Taos Title Co. for the purchase of a home on September 10, 1998; (ii) Tilga had previously invested $50,000.00 (USD) in Tierra del Taos; and (iii) Tilga had loaned approximately $20,252.00

(USD) to the company. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 15 n. 13. Thus, after deducting the $70,252.00 that Tilga was entitled to recover before being taxed, the remaining income was $116,730.50 (USD). See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 15 n. 13. That income should have been taxed at the then-prevailing long-term capital gain rate of twenty percent. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 15 n. 13. Accordingly, the tax losses were approximately $23,346.10 (USD). See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 15 n. 13. The Tilga Plea Agreement, however, stipulates that the tax loss is $23,200.00 (USD). See Tilga Plea Agreement ¶ 10(a), at 7. Pursuant to U.S.S.G. § 2T4.1(D), all tax losses greater than $12,500.00 but less than $30,000.00 result in a base offense level of 12. See U.S.S.G. § 2T4.1(D); Tilga PSR ¶ 38, at 19. Thus, whether the tax loss is $23,300.00 (USD) or $23,200.00 (USD) does not change the base offense level. The Court will, however, use the more accurate stipulated tax loss, agreed to in the Chandler Plea Agreement—$23,300.00 (USD). See Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(a).

[10] Tax Form TD F 90–22.1, the “Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts,” is known as the “FBAR.” In re M.H., 648 F.3d 1067, 1070 (9th Cir.2011). The United States may seek to enforce civil penalties for failure to report an interest in a foreign bank account, as 31 U.S.C. § 5314 requires. See United States v. Williams, No. 09–437, 2010 WL 2842931, at *1–2 (E.D.Va. Mar. 19, 2010).

[11] The Court's citations to the transcript of the hearing refer to the court reporter's original, unedited version. Any final transcript may contain slightly different page and/or line numbers.

[12] Section 3B1.1(c) applies to leaders, organizers, managers, or supervisors of organizations with less than five persons. The only relevant difference between an organizer under § 3B1.1(a) and an organizer under § 3B1.1(c), it seems, is the size of the organization.

[13] Although the United States asked the Court to accept the tax loss calculation, stipulated to in the Tilga Plea Agreement, of $23,200.00 (USD), the United States' calculations put the tax loss amount at $23,300.00 (USD) and the Chandler Plea Agreement stipulates to a tax loss of $23,300.00. See Gov't Sentencing Memo. at 15 n. 13; Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(a), at 5. Because the United States stressed that Chandler should “be given the benefit of the same stipulated loss amount as to the tax loss,” Chandler Plea Agreement ¶ 9(a), at 5, and because the $23,300.00 (USD) calculation is more accurate, the Court will treat the United States' and Tilga's requests as asking the Court to accept a stipulate tax loss of $23,300.00 (USD).

[14] It is also reasonable to apply United States v. Hoskins to the foreign tax credit, because deductions and credits serve similar purposes—reducing the total tax owed. A tax credit reduces the total amount of taxes that a taxpayer owes to the state or federal government, and may be in recognition of taxes already paid, as a subsidy or to encourage certain behaviors. See Tax Credit, WIKIPEDIA.ORG, http://en. wikipedia.org/wiki/Tax_credit (last visited November 5, 2011). A tax deduction reduces the amount of income subject to tax for various items, especially expenses incurred to produce income. See Tax Deduction, WIKIPEDIA.ORG, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tax_deduction (last visited November 5, 2011).

[15] At the hearing, Mr. Rubinger testified that United States v. Cruz “was highly criticized” for accelerating the expiration of the statute of limitations for claiming the foreign tax credit to the period before trial. Tr. at 30:13–15 (Rubinger). In researching the issue, the Court found only six cases citing United States v. Cruz, none of which engaged in a discussion of this issue, criticizing Eleventh Circuit's conclusion or otherwise. See, e.g., United States v. Williams, 875 F.2d 846, 850 (11th Cir.1989) (citing United States v. Cruz for the elements of a § 7201 conviction and for the principle that the Eleventh Circuit did not condone a taxpayer's “wait and see gamble”). Additionally, the Court has found only two articles that engaged in a substantive discussion about the post-indictment application of the foreign tax credit and whether the Eleventh Circuit decided United States v. Cruz correctly. One is Mr. Rubinger's article in the Journal of Taxation. See J. Rubinger and A. Weinstein, Foreign Tax Credits: Can a Deficiency be Retroactively Wiped Out For Criminal Tax Evasion Purposes?, 112 J. TAX'N 166, 172 (2010) (“While post-indictment actions taken by a taxpayer typically have no effect on the calculation of a deficiency, certain unique aspects of the [foreign tax credits] provisions may yield a different result.”). The other, a leading legal commentator, has gone so far as to say that the Eleventh Circuit “rewrote the law of accrued foreign taxes” when it held that the United States' prosecution of a defendant for tax evasion accelerates the foreign tax credit's statute of limitations. See 1–12 Rhoades and Langer, United States Int'l Taxation and Tax Treaties (Matthew Bender & Co.), § 12.03, n. 43 (“The taxpayer claimed that his tax obligation was fixed and hence properly accruable even though not assessed in his home country. Had the taxpayer not been accused of garnering his wealth from drug peddling his argument may have fallen on more receptive ears. The majority was so convinced, however, that he was going to escape punishment of any sort ... that it rewrote the law of accrued foreign taxes.”). The Court need not, and does not, decide whether the foreign tax credit's statute of limitations should be accelerated before trial—the aspect of the United States v. Cruz decision which these articles criticize.

End of Document

T.C. Memo. 2017-108
United States Tax Court.

James AWAD, Petitioner
v.
COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Respondent

Docket No. 3755–14W
|
Filed June 8, 2017

Synopsis
Background: Applicant petitioned for review of IRS determination to deny his claim for whistleblower award.

[Holding:] The Tax Court, Vasquez, J., held that IRS's collection of proceeds of over $2 million in tax, penalties, and interest was not attributable to the IRS's proceeding with administrative or judicial action on the basis of applicant's information.

Decision for IRS.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Howard W. Gordon, Leticia Vega, and Alyssa L. Razook Wan, for petitioner.

Marianna Lvovsky, Patricia P. Davis, and John T. Arthur, for respondent.

P provided information to the IRS Whistleblower Office (WO) regarding individuals TH and TW's alleged failure to disclose their ownership interests in foreign bank accounts. WO forwarded P's information to the Large Business & International Division (LB & I), which declined to examine TH and TW's returns. TH died while LB & I was considering P's information. Thereafter TW and her adult children filed voluntary disclosures with the Criminal Investigation Division (CID) in which they reported income from a previously undisclosed account at the same foreign bank P had identified.

CID accepted the voluntary disclosures and forwarded them to the Small Business/Self Employed Division (SB/SE) for examination. The SB/SE examination resulted in the assessment of over $2 million in income tax, accuracy-related penalties, and interest against TH and TW, in addition to a title 26 miscellaneous penalty. Although WO forwarded P's information to SB/SE, the revenue agent who conducted the examination denied using it.

[*2] WO also forwarded P's information to SB/SE's Estate and Gift Tax Group (E & G), which had selected TH's estate's estate tax return for examination. The revenue agent who was conducting the examination asserted that P's information was not relevant to his investigation. Thereafter, WO issued a determination denying P's claim for a whistleblower award.

Held: We need not decide the standard of review in this case because we would sustain R's determination under either a de novo or an abuse of discretion standard of review.

Held, further, because the administrative action taken by the IRS against the taxpayers was not based on his information, P is not entitled to a whistleblower award.

MEMORANDUM FINDINGS OF FACT AND OPINION

VASQUEZ, Judge:

1 Pursuant to section 7623(b)(4), petitioner has appealed the Internal Revenue Service's (IRS) denial of his claim for a nondiscretionary [*3] whistleblower award. [1] The issue for decision is whether petitioner is entitled to an award under section 7623(b)(1).

FINDINGS OF FACT

Some of the facts have been stipulated and are so found. The stipulation of facts and the attached exhibits are incorporated by this reference. Petitioner resided in New York when he filed his petition.

Petitioner's Whistleblower Claim

On November 18, 2008, petitioner filed Form 211, Application for Award for Original Information, with the IRS Whistleblower Office (Whistleblower Office). In the Form 211 petitioner implicated taxpayer husband, taxpayer wife, and their three adult children (taxpayer children) (collectively, taxpayers) as owners of undisclosed foreign bank accounts. Petitioner alleged that taxpayer husband was likely transferring millions of untaxed dollars to these accounts. While petitioner provided the name of the bank, he did not list any account numbers or give other identifying information about the alleged accounts. The Whistleblower Office confirmed receipt of the Form 211 and informed petitioner that his claim had been assigned to analyst Nancy Burcham.

[*4] Referral of Whistleblower Information to LB & I

In February 2009 Ms. Burcham forwarded petitioner's information to the IRS Large Business and International Division (LB & I). The matter was assigned to LB & I examiner Alan Hymes.

Mr. Hymes reviewed petitioner's information and, in June 2009, decided to accept the taxpayers' returns as filed. In a written statement to the Whistleblower Office Mr. Hymes wrote: “At this point there is not enough information to determine that this is a good case for the field. * * * [Petitioner] did not provide any documentation to show that the * * * account or accounts exist or that any money was transferred”.

Inexplicably, LB & I allowed several months to pass before returning the case to the Whistleblower Office.[2] The administrative record indicates that Ms. Burcham may not have received Mr. Hymes' written statement until July 2010, over a year after LB & I had made its decision.

The Taxpayers' Voluntary Disclosure

Meanwhile, taxpayer husband died in August 2009. In January 2010 the surviving taxpayers filed voluntary disclosures pertaining to a previously [*5] undisclosed account at the same foreign bank petitioner had identified to the Whistleblower Office.[3] The taxpayers' voluntary disclosures included account information and amended returns reporting previously undisclosed income for tax years 2003 through 2008. CID accepted the taxpayers' voluntary disclosures and forwarded their case file to the IRS Small Business/Self–Employed Division (SB/SE) for examination. The matter was assigned to SB/SE revenue agent (RA) Thomas George. RA George's examination of the taxpayers' voluntary disclosure submission began in July 2010.

Referral of Whistleblower Information to SB/SE

2 After learning that LB & I would not be examining the taxpayers' returns, Ms. Burcham contemplated issuing a rejection letter to petitioner. Before doing so, she performed additional research and discovered that SB/SE was examining [*6] the taxpayers' returns in connection with their voluntary disclosure. Consequently, in September 2010, Ms. Burcham forwarded petitioner's information to SB/SE “to determine if any of * * * [petitioner's] information was used to assist in the exams being opened on the taxpayers.”

After receiving petitioner's information, SB/SE subject matter expert Frank Stamm contacted petitioner and arranged a telephone interview. During the interview petitioner further explained the basis for his allegations against the taxpayers. In an internal memorandum recounting the interview, Mr. Stamm wrote: “While he could not provide account numbers he did provide lists of shares owned in various * * * [foreign] corporations, and properties owned in the US and abroad by the taxpayers.” Mr. Stamm recommended that petitioner's submission “be sent to the field for association with * * * [the taxpayers'] ongoing * * * audits.”

Petitioner's information was forwarded to RA George. Thereafter RA George provided the Whistleblower Office with a written statement indicating that the sole cause of the examination was the taxpayers' voluntary disclosure. He stated: “There has been no indication in the case files that * * * [petitioner's] information initiated the investigation or assisted to gather any offshore accounts.” [*7] In August 2011 taxpayer wife and an SB/SE group manager signed a Form 906, Closing Agreement on Final Determination Covering Specific Matters (closing agreement). The closing agreement, to which taxpayer wife and the estate of taxpayer husband were parties, referenced the 2009 OVDP[4] and stated that the taxpayers' voluntary disclosure was made pursuant to that program. In accordance therewith, taxpayer wife and taxpayer husband's estate agreed to pay a title 26 miscellaneous penalty “in lieu of any other penalties that the * * * [IRS] may impose with respect to the offshore financial arrangements that were the subject of the voluntary disclosure”. Additionally, the IRS adjusted taxpayer husband and taxpayer wife's tax liabilities for 2003 through 2008, assessing taxes, penalties, and interest in excess of $2 million. Having reached an agreement with taxpayer wife and taxpayer husband's estate, RA George did not make any adjustments to the returns of the taxpayer children. The examination of the taxpayers' returns was officially closed in November 2011.

Meanwhile, petitioner's whistleblower claim remained open. In 2012 or 2013 Ms. Burcham left the Whistleblower Office, and petitioner's claim was reassigned to analyst Kenneth Chatham. Mr. Chatham reviewed the claim file and decided to email RA George for clarification regarding whether petitioner's [*8] information had been used during the examination. In a subsequent telephone call RA George stated that he had relied exclusively on information provided by the taxpayers and that he had not used petitioner's information.

Referral of Whistleblower Information to SB/SE Estate and Gift Tax

In August 2013 Mr. Chatham learned that SB/SE's Estate and Gift Tax Group (E & G) had selected taxpayer husband's estate's estate tax return for examination. Mr. Chatham forwarded petitioner's information to E & G.

E & G examiner James Truman did not find petitioner's information to be helpful. Mr. Truman provided the Whistleblower Office with a written statement in which he explained: "The whistleblower claim has nothing to do with the estate tax return, only income tax issues. This estate tax return should never have been classified as a whistleblower case."

Award Determination and Appeal

3 On January 28, 2014, the Whistleblower Office issued a determination letter to petitioner denying his claim for an award. Petitioner timely filed a petition appealing the Whistleblower Office's determination. Petitioner asserts that he is entitled to 15% to 30% of the total amounts collected from: (1) the assessment of additional income tax, accuracy-related penalties, and interest for 2003 through 2008 against taxpayer husband and taxpayer wife; (2) "FBAR penalties" against [*9] taxpayer husband and taxpayer wife; and (3) additional estate tax for which taxpayer wife's estate is liable on account of the inclusion of the foreign bank account in her gross estate. [5]

A trial was held in Miami, Florida. Thereafter both parties filed opening and answering briefs.

OPINION

We decide whether petitioner, a whistleblower, is entitled to a section 7623(b) award after a trial on the merits. Because petitioner failed to prove that the IRS proceeded with administrative or judicial action against the taxpayers on the basis of his information, we hold that he is not.

I. Statutory Framework

The IRS has long had authority to pay discretionary awards to persons, now called "whistleblowers", who provide information leading to the recovery of unpaid taxes. See sec. 7623 (1954). In response to concerns about the management of the discretionary award regime, Congress enacted legislation in 2006 to address perceived problems with the whistleblower program. Tax Relief and Health Care Act of 2006, Pub. L. No. 109–432, div. A, sec. 406, 120 Stat. at 2958 (effective Dec. 20, 2006). The 2006 legislation added to section 7623 a new [*10] subsection (b), which requires the payment of nondiscretionary whistleblower awards in specified circumstances and provides this Court jurisdiction to review IRS determinations regarding such awards. See Cooper v. Commissioner, 135 T.C. 70, 73 (2010).

Section 7623(b)(1) requires payment of an award if the IRS "proceeds with any administrative or judicial action" to collect taxes "based on information brought to the Secretary's attention by an individual". The award amount must be at least 15% and not more than 30% of "the collected proceeds (including penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts) resulting from the action" or settlement thereof. Id. The determination of the amount of the award "shall depend upon the extent to which the individual substantially contributed to such action." [6] Id.

[1] Section 7623(b)(5) defines the scope of claims that are subject to the nondiscretionary award program established in subsection (b). The IRS must pay claims on a nondiscretionary basis only with respect to actions against a taxpayer [*11] whose "gross income exceeds $200,000 for any taxable year subject to such action" and only "if the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute exceed $2,000,000." Sec. 7623(b)(5)(A) and (B). The IRS must raise a failure to satisfy these monetary thresholds as an affirmative defense. See Lippolis v. Commissioner, 143 T.C. 393, 400 (2014).

II. Jurisdiction and Standard of Review

[2] [3] Section 7623(b)(4), captioned "Appeal of award determination", governs our jurisdiction over whistleblower claims. It provides: "Any determination regarding an award under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) may, within 30 days of such determination, be appealed to the Tax Court (and the Tax Court shall have jurisdiction with respect to such matter)." A "determination regarding an award" means a determination as to the amount of an award or a determination to deny an award. Cooper v. Commissioner, 135 T.C. at 75. Thus, this Court has jurisdiction under section 7623(b)(4) where, as here, (1) the IRS makes a determination denying a claim for award under section 7623(b); and (2) a petition invoking our jurisdiction over that matter is timely filed. See Kasper v. Commissioner, 137 T.C. 37, 41 (2011).

4 Neither the text nor the legislative history of section 7623(b)(4) specifies the standard of review that the Court is to apply in reviewing IRS determinations. [*12] Petitioner contends that de novo review is appropriate, while respondent argues for an abuse of discretion standard. We need not resolve this question today since we would sustain respondent's determination under either standard of review. [7] See Golub v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2013–196, at *7.

III. Analysis

Respondent's determinations are presumptively correct, and petitioner bears the burden of proving that those determinations are erroneous. See Rule 142(a); Welch v. Helvering, 290 U.S. 111, 115 (1933).

Section 7623(b) provides: "If the Secretary proceeds with any administrative or judicial action * * * based on information brought to the Secretary's attention by an individual, such individual shall * * * receive as an award at least 15 percent but not more than 30 percent of the collected proceeds * * * resulting from the action (including any related actions) or from any settlement in response to such action." Section 301.7623–2, Proced. & Admin. [*13] Regs., [8] defines terms used in section 7623(b) and the regulations interpreting it. The IRS "proceeds based on information provided by a whistleblower" when, for example, "the IRS initiates a new action, expands the scope of an ongoing action, or continues to pursue an ongoing action, that the IRS would not have initiated, expanded the scope of, or continued to pursue, but for the information provided." Sec. 301.7623–2(b), Proced. & Admin. Regs.

[4] In sum, petitioner's entitlement to an award turns on two issues: first, whether there was a collection of proceeds; and, second, whether that collection was attributable to the IRS' proceeding with administrative or judicial action on the basis of petitioner's information. See Whistleblower One 10683–13W v. Commissioner, 145 T.C. 204, 206 (2015).

A. Collection of Proceeds

Whether there was a collection of proceeds from the taxpayers is not in serious dispute. The parties stipulated that the IRS' adjustment of taxpayer husband and taxpayer wife's tax liabilities for 2003 through 2008 resulted in the [*14] assessment of over $2 million in tax, penalties, and interest. Furthermore, in their closing agreement, taxpayer wife and taxpayer husband's estate agreed to pay, and the IRS agreed to accept, a title 26 miscellaneous penalty for the 2007 tax year "in lieu of any other penalties that the * * * [IRS] may impose with respect to the offshore financial arrangements that were the subject of the voluntary disclosure". Respondent has not claimed that the taxpayers failed to pay these sums. We therefore find that there was a collection of proceeds from the taxpayers.

B. Administrative or Judicial Action

5 [5] Next we must decide whether the collection of the above proceeds was attributable to the IRS' proceeding with administrative or judicial action on the basis of petitioner's information. Our inquiry here turns on whether petitioner's information had any effect on the IRS' examination of the taxpayers' returns.

The record shows that, on three separate occasions, the Whistleblower Office forwarded petitioner's information to other operating divisions of the IRS for further investigation: first, to LB & I in February 2009; then, to SB/SE in September 2010; and finally, to E & G in August 2013. We address each referral in turn.

[*15] 1. LB & I Referral (February 2009)

With respect to the LB & I referral, a representative of that division reviewed petitioner's information and decided not to examine the taxpayers' returns. Nothing in the record indicates that LB & I later changed course. Because LB & I did not proceed with administrative or judicial action against the taxpayers, petitioner is not entitled to an award on the basis of this referral. See Cooper v. Commissioner (Cooper II), 136 T.C. 597, 601 (2011) ("[W]histleblower awards are preconditioned on the Secretary's proceeding with an administrative or judicial action.").

2. SB/SE Referral (September 2010)

Unlike LB & I, SB/SE opted to examine the taxpayers' returns. The parties disagree about whether petitioner's information prompted and/or facilitated the examination. Under respondent's theory of the case, the taxpayers' voluntary disclosure was the sole cause of the examination and resulting adjustments. Respondent contends that there is no evidence that RA George or anyone else at SB/SE used petitioner's information during the examination.

Conversely, petitioner argues that his information prompted the examination of the taxpayers' returns and the adjustments that followed. Under petitioner's theory of the case, the IRS had received his information about the taxpayers' [*16] undisclosed bank accounts before it accepted their voluntary disclosure. By admitting the taxpayers into the OVDP when it was already on notice of the their noncompliance, the IRS disregarded its own rules and procedures.[9] Such disregard, petitioner argues, is evidence that the IRS shepherded the taxpayers into the OVDP in order to avoid paying him an award.[10] Petitioner cites respondent's apparent refusal to provide him with documents concerning the taxpayers' acceptance into the OVDP as evidence of this scheme.

On the basis of the record before us, we disagree with petitioner. In a written statement to the Whistleblower Office, RA George stated that there was no evidence in his case file that petitioner's information had prompted the examination. RA George also confirmed to Mr. Chatham that he did not use petitioner's information during his examination of the taxpayers' voluntary disclosure submission. There is nothing in the record that shows or even suggests otherwise. Also absent from the record is any evidence of a causal connection [*17] between petitioner's whistleblower submission and the taxpayers' decision to come forward to the IRS.[11]

6 [6] Furthermore, the IRS' purported disregard of its own rules in accepting the taxpayers' voluntary disclosure does not support the inference that the IRS used the OVDP as a cover for denying petitioner an award. For one, the rule petitioner primarily relies on is found in the Internal Revenue Manual (IRM). See supra note 9. It is a well-settled principle that the IRM does not have the force of law and is not binding on the IRS. McGaughy v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 2010–183, slip op. at 17; see United States v. Caceres, 440 U.S. 741 (1979); Fargo v. Commissioner, 447 F.3d 706, 713 (9th Cir. 2006), aff'g T.C. Memo. 2004–13. Second, Congress explicitly authorized the IRS to enter into closing agreements like the one it reached with the taxpayers. See sec. 7121 (authorizing the IRS to enter into a written closing agreement "with any person relating to the liability of such person * * * in respect of any internal revenue tax for any taxable period"). Such agreements "may be used for procedural economy, or to prevent a dispute from arising." United States v. Nat'l Steel Corp., 75 F.3d 1146, 1151 (7th Cir. [*18] 1996). We cannot conclude that the exercise of this authority, absent proof of any actual wrongdoing, is evidence of a scheme to deprive petitioner of an award.

Nor can we conclude that respondent's apparent refusal to provide petitioner with certain documents evidences such a scheme. If a party is troubled by another party's response to a discovery request, Rule 72(b)(2) permits the requesting party to file an appropriate motion with the Court. See Whistleblower One 10683–13W v. Commissioner, 145 T.C. at 207 (granting a whistleblower's motion to compel the production of documents and responses to interrogatories). Having proceeded to trial without taking this step, petitioner cannot cite the failure to produce documents as grounds for requesting a negative inference against respondent. Accordingly, petitioner is not entitled to an award on the basis of the referral to SB/SE.

3. E & G Referral (August 2013)

In a written submission to the Whistleblower Office, an E & G examiner stated that petitioner's information "has nothing to do with * * * [taxpayer husband's estates's] estate tax return, only income tax issues" and that "[t]his estate tax return should never have been classified as a whistleblower case." There is no evidence that E & G later changed course. Because E & G did not [*19] initiate, expand the scope of, or continue to pursue its examination of taxpayer husband's estate's estate tax return on account of petitioner's information, petitioner is not entitled to an award on the basis of this referral.

IV. Conclusion

Because the administrative action taken by the IRS against the taxpayers was not based on his information, petitioner is not entitled to a whistleblower award. Accordingly, we sustain respondent's determination.

The Court has considered all of the arguments made by the parties, and to the extent they are not addressed herein, they are considered irrelevant, moot, or without merit.

To reflect the foregoing,

Decision will be entered for respondent.

All Citations

T.C. Memo. 2017-108, 2017 WL 2492008, 113 T.C.M. (CCH) 1485, T.C.M. (RIA) 2017-108, 2017 RIA TC Memo 2017-108

Footnotes

[1] All section references are to the Internal Revenue Code in effect at all relevant times, and all Rule references are to the Tax Court Rules of Practice and Procedure.

[2] In an internal memorandum Ms. Burcham stated: "The entire casefile [sic] was received in the * * * [Whistleblower Office] a considerable time after the signing of * * * [Mr. Hymes' written statement]."

[3] The IRS Criminal Investigation Division (CID) maintains a longstanding practice of voluntary disclosure whereby taxpayers can generally avoid criminal prosecution by disclosing their tax noncompliance to CID timely and completely. See Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Program Frequently Asked Questions and Answers 2014, Q & A–3. In March 2009 the IRS launched the offshore voluntary disclosure program (OVDP), a "counterpart" to this practice under which taxpayers who timely disclosed their ownership of unreported foreign bank accounts were eligible for reduced monetary penalties. See id. The extended deadline for participating in the 2009 OVDP was October 15, 2009. Id. A second OVDP (called the "Offshore Voluntary Disclosure Initiative") was initiated on February 8, 2011, and ran until September 9, 2011. Id. A third, open-ended OVDP began in 2012. Id. Q & A–1. There was no OVDP in effect during 2010.

[4] See supra note 3.

[5] Taxpayer wife died in July 2014.

[6] The IRS may determine a lower percentage award if the whistleblower's information is derived from publicly disclosed allegations (unless such information "was originally provided by" the whistleblower) or if the whistleblower planned and initiated the activities leading to the underpayment of tax. Sec. 7623(b)(2) and (3). The IRS is directed to deny an award altogether if the whistleblower is convicted criminally for planning and initiating such activities. See sec. 7623(b)(3).

[7] At trial we heard testimony from petitioner and Mr. Chatham. Neither party argued that we could not consider this testimony because it was outside the administrative record. Nor did the parties attempt to introduce other evidence outside the administrative record. Accordingly, we need not decide whether our scope of review is limited to the administrative record.

[8] Pursuant to sec. 301.7623–2(f), Proced. & Admin. Regs., the section is effective on August 12, 2014, and applies to information submitted on or after that date and to claims for awards that are open on that date. Respondent concedes that the regulations are not controlling here because the petition was filed before the effective date of the regulations. Nevertheless, we find the above-quoted wording instructive. We express no opinion on the validity of other wording in sec. 301.7623–2(b), Proced. & Admin. Regs., or its applicability in other contexts.

[9] Internal Revenue Manual (IRM) pt. 9.5.11.9(3) (Dec. 2, 2009) states that a voluntary disclosure must be timely. A voluntary disclosure is timely if received before the IRS "has received information from a third party (e.g., informant, other governmental agency, or the media) alerting the IRS to the specific taxpayer's noncompliance." Id. pt. 9.5.11.9(4)(b).

[10] Petitioner also argues that the taxpayers were ineligible for the OVDP because they submitted their voluntary disclosure after the extended deadline for the 2009 OVDP and before the start of the 2011 OVDP.

[11] Accordingly, we need not decide whether the IRS “proceeds with administrative or judicial action” based on a whistleblower's information when: (1) the IRS examines a taxpayer's return in connection with a voluntary disclosure and (2) the disclosure was prompted by the taxpayer's discovery that an informant had named him or her in a whistleblower submission.

End of Document

234 F.Supp.3d 115
United States District Court,
District of Columbia.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff,
v.
ALL ASSETS HELD AT BANK JULIUS,
Baer & Company, Ltd., Guernsey Branch, account number 121128, in the Name of Pavlo Lazarenko et al., Defendants In Rem.

Civil Action No. 04–0798 (PLF)
|
Signed 01/17/2017

Synopsis

Background: Government brought civil forfeiture action against assets in various foreign bank accounts of claimant, who was former prominent Ukranian politician, alleging that the assets were traceable or otherwise related to criminal activity that occurred at least in part in the United States. The District Court, G. Michael Harvey, United States Magistrate Judge, 142 F.Supp.3d 37, granted in part and denied in part government's motion to compel claimant to produce certain financial documents, including tax records. Claimant filed objections.

Holdings: The District Court, Paul L. Friedman, J., held that:

[1] claimant's tax and other financial records from time period after claimant was prominent Ukranian politician were relevant to issue of standing, and thus, were subject to discovery;

[2] claimant's tax and other financial records from 1999 were relevant to issue of forfeitability in addition to issue of standing, and thus, were subject to discovery; and

[3] any public policy concern with respect to disclosure of tax records did not overcome government's compelling need for claimant's tax records, so as to require production of such documents during discovery.

Affirmed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

117 Daniel Hocker Claman, Hector G. Bladuell, Della Grace Sentilles, Teresa Carol Turner–Jones, U.S. Department of Justice, Allison Ickovic, U.S. Department of Justice, Asset Forfeiture and Money Laundering Section, Mara Vanessa Jessica Senn, U.S. Department of Justice, Kleptocracy Initiative, Asset Forfeiture & Money Laundering, Washington, DC, for Plaintiff.

Bryant Everett Gardner, Winston & Strawn LLP, Washington, DC, Doron Weinberg, Weinberg & Wilder, San Francisco, CA, for Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

PAUL L. FRIEDMAN, United States District Judge

On November 3, 2015, Magistrate Judge G. Michael Harvey issued a Memorandum Opinion and Order granting in part and denying in part the United States' motion to compel Claimant Pavel Lazarenko to produce certain financial documents, including tax records, in connection with this in rem proceeding. See United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co., Ltd., 142 F.Supp.3d 37 (D.D.C. 2015) ("All Assets VII"). Claimant Lazarenko filed Objections to Magistrate Judge Harvey's Memorandum Opinion and Order on November 24, 2015. See Dkt. 504. Upon consideration of the parties' papers, the relevant legal authorities, and the entire record in this case, the Court concludes that Magistrate Judge Harvey's decision was not clearly erroneous or contrary to law, and accordingly affirms the decision. [1]

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

This is a civil in rem action in which the United States seeks forfeiture of over $250 million dollars scattered throughout bank accounts located in Antigua, Barbuda, Guernsey, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, and Switzerland. See Am. Compl. ¶ 1. This Court's prior opinions summarize the procedural history of this case, starting with the criminal prosecution of Lazarenko, and continuing through this civil forfeiture proceeding. See, e.g., United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co., Ltd., 571 F.Supp.2d 1, 3–6 (D.D.C. 2008); United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co., Ltd., 959

F.Supp.2d 81, 84–94 (D.D.C. 2013) ("All Assets V"); United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius Baer & Co., Ltd., 307 F.R.D. 249, 250–51 (D.D.C. 2014). In brief, Lazarenko is "a prominent Ukrainian politician who, with the aid of various associates, was 'able to acquire hundreds of millions of United States dollars through a variety of acts of fraud, extortion, bribery, misappropriation 118 and/or embezzlement' committed during the 1990s." All Assets V, 959 F.Supp.2d at 85 (quoting Am. Compl. ¶¶ 1, 10).

As relevant to Lazarenko's present objections, the United States during discovery submitted requests for production of financial and tax records relating to Lazarenko's asserted interest in the in rem assets. Mot. at 7. At issue here are request Nos. 28 and 29, which read as follows:

> 28. Produce all documents and communications relating to personal income tax returns, business tax returns, and Reports of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBARs) filed with or submitted to the United States Government or any State of the United States of America by or on your behalf or any legal entity in which you claim an interest for the years 1992 to date.
>
> 29. Produce all documents and communications submitted to the Government of the United States of America, any State of the United States of America or any other foreign or domestic government office concerning your income or assets, including but not limited to any financial disclosure documents, tax returns, or other statements of income you have submitted to any government between January 1, 1992 and the present.

Mot. at 7.

Lazarenko responded by generally objecting to "any and all Document Requests to the extent that they are overly broad, seek information that is irrelevant, will be inadmissible at trial, are unduly burdensome, or are not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." Opp. at 2. He also made the specific objections that his tax records were privileged under the confidentiality provisions of 26 U.S.C. § 6103, and that he did not possess any foreign bank account records. Id. The parties could not resolve the discovery dispute and the United States moved to compel. Lazarenko opposed the motion, arguing that the requested tax and financial records are not discoverable because: (1) he does not have tax and other financial records from 1992 to 1999; and (2) such records from 2000 to the present are not relevant. Opp. at 3.

Magistrate Judge Harvey found that Lazarenko's tax and other financial records from 1992 to 1999 records are relevant to both forfeitability and Lazarenko's standing, and thus discoverable. All Assets VII, 142 F.Supp.3d at 42–43. He concluded that those records are relevant to forfeitability because they might establish: "(1) whether Claimant's income during the period matches the quantum of assets he claims here; (2) whether Claimant can prove that his income sources were legitimate; and (3) whether Claimant failed to file tax returns at all, a fact which may support forfeiture of the defendant assets." Id. (internal citations omitted). Magistrate Judge Harvey also found that Lazarenko's records from 2000 to the present day are relevant only to Lazarenko's standing. Id. at 44. While there may already be evidence in the record demonstrating Lazarenko's "interest" in the in rem assets in this case, Magistrate Judge Harvey explained that "the broad scope of discovery embodied in Rule 26" of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure permits the government "to take further discovery on this issue to contest [Lazarenko's] evidence" concerning his interest. Id.[2] Accordingly, Magistrate 119 Judge Harvey granted Lazarenko's motion in part and denied it in part. Lazarenko subsequently filed the Objections currently before the Court.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

[1] [2] [3] [4] [5] A party may seek review of a magistrate judge's decision in a discovery dispute by filing an objection pursuant to Rule 72 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. A magistrate judge's determination in a non-dispositive matter such as a discovery dispute is entitled to "great deference," and the Court will set it aside only if it is "clearly erroneous or contrary to law." FED. R. CIV. P 72(a); see also LOC. CIV. R. 72.2(c); Beale v. District of Columbia, 545 F.Supp.2d 8, 13 (D.D.C. 2008). The district court reviews objections to the magistrate judge's factual findings or discretionary decisions for clear error. American Center for Civil Justice v. Ambush, 794 F.Supp.2d 123, 129 (D.D.C. 2011). Under this standard, the Court will affirm the magistrate judge's factual findings or discretionary decisions unless the court "is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." Neuder v. Batelle Pacific Northwest Nat. Laboratory, 194 F.R.D. 289, 292 (D.D.C. 2000) (quoting United States v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 365, 68 S.Ct. 525, 92 L.Ed. 746 (1948)). By contrast, the "contrary to law" standard requires the Court to review the magistrate judge's legal conclusions de novo. American Center for Civil Justice v. Ambush, 794 F.Supp.2d at 129.

III. DISCUSSION

The Court concludes that Magistrate Judge Harvey correctly articulated the applicable legal principles and that his decision was not clearly erroneous. As an initial matter, Lazarenko does not object to Magistrate Judge Harvey's decisions that (1) none of Lazarenko's tax and financial records were privileged, and (2) those records from 1992 to 1999 are relevant to the issues of forfeitability and standing, and thus discoverable. Nor does he object to Magistrate Judge Harvey's decision respecting his Pretrial Services records and Presentence Investigation Report from his criminal case.

Lazarenko's first objection is that Magistrate Judge Harvey erred in compelling production of his tax and other financial records from 2000 to present day because (1) his standing (and, particularly, his "ownership") is not in dispute, Obj. at 9, and (2) "public policy concerns strongly counsel against production" of tax records. Id. at 11–12. He claims that "the government's arguments would necessitate a series of fact-intensive mini-trials on this threshold issue of standing in every civil forfeiture case." Id. at 1–2. In support, Lazarenko cites the complaint, the testimony of government agents, and the testimony of non-government witnesses to show that he has sufficiently established standing based on undisputed facts. Id. at 7–8. Lazarenko's second objection is that Magistrate Judge Harvey erred in grouping Lazarenko's 1999 tax return with tax years 1992 to 1998 instead of with tax years 2000 to the present, because Lazarenko was not a public official in 1999. Id. at 11.

A. Records from 2000 to Present Day

[6] "Civil forfeiture actions are governed by the procedures set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 983 and the Supplemental Rules for Admiralty or Maritime Claims and Asset Forfeiture Actions ('Supplemental Rules'), a subset of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure." All Assets V, 959 F.Supp.2d at 91. When contesting the forfeiture 120 of assets in an in rem proceeding, the Supplemental Rules dictate that a claimant must "assert [ ] an interest" in "specific property" that is named as a defendant. SUPP. R. G(5)(a)(i)(A); see 18 U.S.C. § 983(a)(4)(A) ("[A]ny person claiming an interest in the seized property may file a claim asserting such person's interest in the property [.]"). The Supplemental Rules clarify that such an "interest" includes "actual possession, control, title, or financial stake." All Assets V, 959 F.Supp.2d at 95. "The Court has previously explained that in order to assert such an 'interest,' a claimant must demonstrate Article III standing in addition to the separate, though partly overlapping, requirements of statutory standing." United States v. All Assets Held at Bank Julius, Baer & Co., Ltd., 228 F.Supp.3d 118, 122, 2017 WL 65554, at *2 (D.D.C. Jan. 6, 2017) (internal quotation marks omitted).

[7] There is little doubt that Lazarenko's tax or other financial records from 2000 to the present day may contain relevant evidence about Lazarenko's interest, or lack thereof, in the in rem assets. The scope of a discovery request under Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is quite broad, requiring only that the party's request be reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. See Food Lion v. United Food & Commercial Workers Int'l Union, 103 F.3d 1007, 1012 (D.C. Cir. 1997). Magistrate Judge Harvey therefore did not clearly err when he found Lazarenko's tax or other financial records from 2000 to the present day to be relevant, discoverable evidence on the issue of standing, and granted the United States' motion to compel Lazarenko to produce them.

B. Records from 1999

Lazarenko further objects that his tax and other financial records from 1999 should be included in the group of records from 2000 to the present day and not 1992 to 1998 because Lazarenko's tenure as a public official in Ukraine ended in 1998. Obj. at 11. This is important because Magistrate Judge Harvey found records from 1992 to 1999 relevant to both forfeitability and standing, but found records from 2000 to the present day relevant only to standing. All Assets VII, 142 F.Supp.3d at 42–43.

[8] The Court finds that Magistrate Judge Harvey did not clearly err in determining that Lazarenko's tax and other financial records from 1999 are relevant to forfeitability. The United States in its amended complaint alleges that events related to Lazarenko's criminal activities took place in 1999, such as transporting the proceeds of his criminal activities into United States financial institutions, see Am. Compl. ¶¶ 12–13 [Dkt. 20], and concealing proceeds from illegal activities, id. ¶¶ 55–56. The United States in its amended complaint also identifies several specific financial transactions that took place in 1999. Id. ¶¶ 92, 100, 111–13. These allegations support a finding that Lazarenko's 1999 tax and financial records may include information relevant to forfeitability.

C. Public Policy Concerns

[9] [10] "In order to determine whether disclosure" of tax records "is appropriate, the court must conclude (1) that the returns are relevant to the subject matter of the action; and (2) that there is a compelling need for the returns because the information contained therein is not readily [or] otherwise obtainable." Robinson v. Duncan, 255 F.R.D. 300, 302 (D.D.C. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court has already determined that Lazarenko's tax records are relevant. See supra at 119–20. Lazarenko does not argue here that his tax and financial records are privileged, 121 but instead argues that "public policy concerns strongly counsel against the production of Mr. Lazarenko's post–1999 tax records." Obj. at 11. At base, Lazarenko's argument is that "there is no compelling need to produce these [tax] records because standing is not in dispute." Id. at 12.

Magistrate Judge Harvey correctly observed that 26 U.S.C. § 6103 prevents the Internal Revenue Service "from disclosing any records to the government directly." All Assets VII, 142 F.Supp.3d at 47. As such, ordering Lazarenko to disclose his tax records to the United States is the only way for the United States to discover "thorough" and "detailed information ... regarding the nature, source, and amount of any income [Lazarenko] received from the defendant in rem assets." Id. The Court also notes that the protective order in this case, see Dkt. 393, mitigates Lazarenko's confidentiality concerns. See, e.g., Stokwitz v. United States, 831 F.2d 893, 897 (9th Cir. 1987) ("The confidentiality of tax information may also be preserved in civil proceedings through protective orders."); In re Heritage Bond Litigation, 2004 WL 1970058, *5 n.12 (C.D. Cal.) ("Any privacy concerns [the parties] have in their bank records and related financial statements are adequately protected by the protective order, and are not sufficient to prevent production in this matter."); CEH, Inc. v. FV "Seafarer", 153 F.R.D. 491, 499 (D.R.I. 1994) ("While a party does have an interest in nondisclosure and confidentiality of its financial records, this interest can be adequately protected by a protective order."). The Court therefore finds that Magistrate Judge Harvey did not clearly err in finding that the United States has a compelling need for Lazarenko's tax records, and that Lazarenko therefore must produce them.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is hereby ORDERED that claimant Pavel Lazarenko's objections [Dkt. 504] are OVERRULED; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that the Court AFFIRMS Magistrate Judge Harvey's Memorandum Opinion [Dkt. 490] and Order [Dkt. 491]; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that claimant Pavel Lazarenko respond on or before February 20, 2017, to the United States Requests for Production Nos. 28 and 29 with: (1) all relevant records from 1992 to 1999 within his control, including any tax records Lazarenko can obtain from the United States and Ukraine filed by or on Lazarenko's behalf or on behalf of any legal entity in which Lazarenko has an interest; and (2) all records from 2000 to present within his control, including any tax records Lazarenko can obtain from the United States and Ukraine filed by or on Lazarenko's behalf or on behalf of any legal entity in which Lazarenko has an interest, which evidence an interest in, reflect income from, reflect income traceable to, or mention the defendant in rem assets.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

234 F.Supp.3d 115

Footnotes

[1] The documents reviewed by the Court in resolving the pending motion include the following: United States' motion to compel production of records ("Mot.") [Dkt. 429]; claimant Pavel Lazarenko's opposition to plaintiff's motion to compel ("Opp.") [Dkt. 447]; United States' reply in support of its motion to compel ("Reply") [Dkt. 454]; Lazarenko's objection to the magistrate judge's order on plaintiff's motion to compel production of tax records from 1999 to the present ("Obj.") [Dkt. 504]; United States' response to Lazarenko's objection to the magistrate judge's order on plaintiff's motion to compel Lazarenko's production of records ("Response") [Dkt. 549]; and Lazarenko's reply in further support of his objection ("Reply") [Dkt. 565].

[2] Magistrate Judge Harvey held that none of Lazarenko's tax and financial records were privileged. All Assets VII, 142 F.Supp.3d at 44–48. Nonetheless, he also held that 18 U.S.C. § 3153 and the local rules of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California prevented him from issuing an order compelling Lazarenko to produce his Pretrial Services records and Presentence Investigation Report from his criminal case. Id. at 48–49. Lazarenko does not object to either of these holdings.

End of Document

2016 WL 7647635
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
E.D. Pennsylvania.

United States of America
v.
Dmitrij Harder

Crim. No. 15-1
|
Filed 04/18/2016

Attorneys and Law Firms

Adam L. Small, Leo R. Tsao, Jason Dean Linder, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, Michelle Morgan, U.S. Attorney's Office, Philadelphia, PA, for United States of America.

Ian M. Comisky, Blank Rome, LLP, Stephen Lacheen, Lacheen Dixon Wittels & Greenberg LLP, Matthew David Lee, Blank Rome Comisky & McCauley LLP, Philadelphia, PA, for Dmitrij Harder.

ORDER

Paul S. Diamond, District Judge

1 The grand jury has charged Defendant Dmitrij Harder with conspiracy to violate the Foreign Corrupt Practices and Travel Acts, substantive violations of the FCPA and Travel Act, conspiracy to commit international money laundering, substantive violations of the international money laundering statute, and aiding and abetting. (Doc. No. 1, Cts. 1-14); 18 U.S.C. § 371; 15 U.S.C. § 78dd-2; 18 U.S.C. § 1952; 18 U.S.C. § 1956(h), (a)(2)(A); 18 U.S.C. § 2. On December 15, 2015, the grand jury returned a Superseding Indictment with the same counts and several wording changes. (Doc. No. 62.)

The Government alleges that from 2007 to 2009, Defendant conspired to pay and conceal some $3.5 million in bribes to Tatjana Sanderson, the sister of European Bank of Reconstruction and Development officer Andrej Ryjenko. These payments, which Defendant funneled through Chestnut Consulting Group (his company), were intended to obtain EBRD business and favorable EBRD treatment for two of Defendant's Russian clients: Irkustsk Oil and Gas Company and Vostok Energy.

On October 16, 2015, Defendant filed a Motion to Suppress statements he made to the authorities after he flew into New York's Kennedy Airport from overseas. (Doc. No. 38.) On December 10, 2015, I conducted a suppression hearing. (Doc. No. 74.)

On March 1, 2016, Defendant filed a second Motion to Suppress, this time asking me to exclude from trial emails obtained from Google and 1&1 pursuant to October 15, 2010 search warrants. (Doc. No. 79.) The Government has responded. (Doc. No. 102.) I held a suppression hearing on March 21, 2016. (Doc. No. 116, Suppress. Hr'g Tr.) On March 29, 2016, Defendant submitted a Supplement in Support of his Motion, which included a Declaration from Stephanie C. Chomentowski, an attorney for Defendant. (Doc. No. 118, Ex. A.)

At the conclusion of the March 21 hearing, I announced that I would deny the Defendant's Motion respecting his statements at JFK and issue findings and conclusions. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 12(d). Those issued on April 15, 2016. (Doc No. 123.) At this same hearing, I also announced my tentative decision to deny the instant Email Suppression Motion, subject to reviewing Defendant's supplemental submission. Having reviewed the submission, I will deny Defendant's Motion.

I. Factual Findings

During the March 21 hearing, the Government called FBI Special Agent Vickie Humphreys, whose testimony I credit. I find that the Government has proven the following facts by a preponderance of the evidence. Fed. R. Crim. P. 12(d); United States v. Lowe, 791 F.3d 424, 432 n.4 (3d Cir. 2015).

In October 2010, in connection with its investigation of Defendant, the Government prepared search warrants directed at two internet service providers—Google and 1&1 Internet— pursuant to the Stored Communications Act (enacted as Title II of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act). See 18 U.S.C. § 2703(a)-(c); (Doc. No. 116, Suppress. Hr'g Tr. at 8-9.). FBI Special Agent Stephen R. Gray signed the supporting affidavits, relying on, inter alia, witness statements, bank records, emails, and related documents to make out probable cause. Gray also relied on information obtained from the FBI's February 2010 interview of Defendant at JFK Airport (during which it learned Defendant's company email account: dharder@chestnut-consulting.com).

2 On October 15, 2010, then Magistrate Judge Restrepo approved the two search warrant applications. (Tr. at 8.) Additionally, on the Government's Motion, Judge Restrepo sealed the supporting affidavits. Each warrant also had an "Attachment A," listing "Property to Be Searched." Attachment A to the Google Warrant listed the "Property to Be Searched" as information associated with the email accounts dmitrij.harder@gmail.com (Defendant's email address) and aryjenko@gmail.com (Ryjenko's email address). (Doc. No. 79 at Ex. A, Attach. A.) Attachment A to the 1&1 warrant listed the "Property to Be Searched" as information associated with Defendant's company email account dharder@chestnut-consulting.com. (Id. at Ex. B, Attach. A.)

Each warrant also had an "Attachment B," listing "Items to be Seized." Attachment B provided that any seized item "constitute[ ] fruits, evidence and instrumentalities of violations of 15 U.S.C. § 78dd-1 et seq. (Foreign Corrupt Practices Act), 18 U.S.C. § 1343 (Wire Fraud), 18 U.S.C. § 1957 (Money Laundering), 18 U.S.C. § 371 (Conspiracy), 18 U.S.C. § 1001 (False Statements), and 31 U.S.C. § 5314 (FBAR)," involving Dmitrij Harder, Andrey Ryjenko, Tatjana Sanderson (the Subjects) since February 1, 2007 ...." (Doc. No. 79, Exs. A, B, Attachs. B.) In Attachment B, the Government further limited the seizure to information pertaining to the following seven matters:

1) Communications between the Subjects;

2) Communications between the Subjects and employees of Chestnut Consulting Group, Inc. or Dmitrij Harder;

3) Communications between the Subjects and EBRD employees;

4) Communications between the Subjects and officers, employees, or agents of several enumerated Russian energy companies;

5) Communications between the Subjects and financial institutions at which the Subjects banked during the course of the scheme;

6) Communications relating to payments to or from the Subjects to facilitate the scheme; and

7) Records relating to who created, used, or communicated with the account or identifier, including records about their identities and whereabouts.

(Doc. No. 79, Exs. A, B, Attachs. B.)

Special Agent Humphreys served the Google warrant by fax on October 15, 2010 and served the 1&1 Warrant in person on October 18, 2010. (Tr. at 9.) Within some ten days of receipt, both companies had complied with the warrants and produced the entirety of the requested email accounts. (Id.) Defendant alleges that the Google emails spanned 2006 to 2010, and that 1&1 emails spanned 2007 to 2010. (Doc. No. 79 at 7.) The Google production included thirteen emails or attachments between Defendant and his counsel, Stephen Lacheen. (Id.; Doc. No. 118, Ex. A at 2.) It also included 631 emails between Defendant and his former attorney, Sergei Bespalov, of which Defendant alleges "approximately two dozen" constituted attorney client communications. (Id.) Although the Google production apparently also included four emails between Defendant and another former attorney, Dmitrij Filippov, Defendant does not claim privilege respecting these emails. Finally, the Google production included emails between Ryjenko and his counsel. (Doc. No. 79 at 7.) Taken together, the search warrants yielded some 11,919 records (emails and attachments). (Doc. No. 118-1, Decl. at 1.)

On October 28, 2010, the FBI shared the search warrant returns with the City of London Police, which was also investigating Ryjenko and Sanderson. (Doc. No. 102 at 4; Tr. at 9.) The FBI kept a copy of the search warrant returns but did not review them. (Tr. at 11.) Shortly after, a City of London Police detective informed the FBI that he had seen the header of an email containing potentially privileged information and then stopped reading. (Doc. No. 102 at 4, Tr. at 10.) In response, the Government instituted a segregation and filter process to ensure that its review of the seized documents conformed to the warrant's requirements and did not otherwise violate attorney-client privilege. (Doc. No. 102 at 4; Tr. at 9-10.)

3 To further this objective, on December 14, 2010, the FBI submitted a request to a computer forensics laboratory to segregate potentially privileged emails. (Id.) The laboratory returned non-privileged emails to the FBI in February 2011. (Id.) Accordingly, the FBI Agents' subsequent (and only) review of the warrant returns was limited to non-privileged documents. (Tr. at 12-13.)

Once the FBI received the screened returns, Agent Humphreys conducted targeted searches for documents "between or among Mr. Harder, Mr. Ryjenko, and Ms. Sanderson and ... certain key points of the investigation where deals were being solidified, [and] payments were anticipated coming to Chestnut Consulting." (Tr. at 13.) The Government's review of the seized communications thus required it to "identify and seize the more limited set of documents that constitute evidence of crimes within the scope of Attachment B." (Doc. No. 102 at 12.) Additionally, Agent Humphreys limited her review to communications occurring after February 1, 2007. (Tr. at 13.) Once she completed her initial targeted review, Agent Humphreys did not again look at the documents. (Id. at 14.)

To date, the Government has produced all the search warrant returns to Defendant. (Id.) On September 14, 2015, Defendant's Counsel contacted both Google and 1&1 requesting information pertaining to their responses to the warrants, including a request for: 1) the physical location of seized data, and 2) an explanation for why they did not notify Defendant of the seizure. (Doc. No. 79, Ex. D.) Neither Google nor 1&1 responded.

Defendant now moves to suppress the documents the Government obtained from Google and 1&1. (Doc. No. 79.)

II. Legal Standard

The Government must show by a preponderance of the evidence the reasonableness of each individual act constituting a Fourth Amendment search and seizure. See United States v. Ritter, 416 F.3d 256, 261 (3d Cir. 2005).

A magistrate judge's initial probable cause determination is entitled to "great deference." Id.; United States v. Conley, 4 F.3d 1200, 1205 (3d Cir. 1993) ("[T]he duty of a reviewing court is simply to ensure that the magistrate had a substantial basis for ... conclud[ing] that probable cause existed.") (citing Illinois v. Gates, 393 U.S. 410, 419 (1969) (internal citations omitted)). Additionally, "the exclusionary rule does not necessarily apply every time a Fourth Amendment violation occurs." United States v. Wright, 625 Fed.Appx. 99, 102 (3d Cir. 2015). Rather, suppression is appropriate only where police behavior is "deliberate, reckless, or grossly negligent." Id.; see also Herring v. United States, 555 U.S. 135, 140 (2009) ("[Suppression] has always been our last resort, not our first impulse.") (further citations omitted).

III. Conclusions of Law

Defendant argues that the search warrants were impermissibly overbroad, and that as a result, the Government seized information outside the warrant's scope, including privileged emails. Defendant also argues that the warrants were deficient because: 1) they lacked probable cause; 2) Judge Restrepo lacked authority to approve them; and 3) the Government failed to comply with notification requirements. I do not agree.

a. Scope and Overbreadth

A valid search warrant "must contain, either on its face or by attachment, a sufficiently particular description of what is to be seized." Bartholomew v. Pennsylvania, 221 F.3d 425, 429 (3d Cir. 2000). As it did here, the Government often shows particularity by attaching to the warrant the list of items to be seized. See United States v. Wright, 493 Fed.Appx. 265, 267 (3d Cir. 2012) ("It is common for applicants to fill in these sections by writing, "See ATTACHMENT A" or "See ATTACHMENT B." Attachment A is normally a description of the property to be searched, and Attachment B is normally a listing of the items to be searched for or seized."). The Third Circuit has acknowledged that during the execution of a sufficiently particular warrant, it is "certain that some innocuous documents will be examined, at least cursorily, in order to determine whether they are, in fact, among those papers authorized to be seized." United States v. Stabile, 633 F.3d 219, 234 (3d Cir. 2011) (citations omitted). As such, a cursory examination of non-responsive documents during the execution of a valid warrant does not violate the Fourth Amendment. Id.

4 Here, in Attachment B to each warrant, the Government detailed precisely the items to be seized, including only those documents relating to, inter alia, the alleged EBRD bribery and money laundering schemes. The warrants further required that any seized emails involve the Subjects and pertain to seven enumerated categories. (Doc. No. 79, Exs. A & B, Attachs. B (identifying relevant communications and records.).) Both warrants also included a temporal limitation on the emails to be seized: from February 1, 2007 forward. These requirements more than suffice to identify the relevant period, constrain the reviewing agents' discretion, and limit the warrants' scope.

Defendant nonetheless argues that the warrants were deficient because they lacked "search protocols." He relies on a suggestion in a concurring Ninth Circuit opinion that warrant applications for electronic seizures include search protocols to prevent investigating agents from "examining or retaining any data other than that for which probable cause is shown." United States v. Comprehensive Drug Testing, Inc., 621 F.3d 1162, 1179 (9th Cir. 2010) (Kozinski, C.J., concurring). The en banc majority in Comprehensive Drug Testing did not impose such a requirement, however. Indeed, courts that have addressed the issue—including the Third Circuit—have not followed Judge Kozinski's suggestion. See, e.g., Stabile, 633 F.3d at 234 (permitting the seizure and subsequent off-site search of six hard drives pursuant to a search warrant lacking an ex ante search protocol); United States v. Brooks, 427 F.3d 1246, 1251 (10th Cir. 2005) (search warrant need not "contain a particularized computer search strategy"); United States v. McNamara-Harvey, No. CRIM.A. 10-219, 2010 WL 3928529, at *4 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 5, 2010) (rejecting Defendant's overbreadth argument based on Comprehensive Drug Testing); United States v. Bowen, 689 F. Supp. 2d 675, 681 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) ("[W]e join ... several other federal courts in holding that the Fourth Amendment does not require a search warrant to specify computer search methodology."), aff'd sub nom., United States v. Ingram, 490 Fed.Appx. 363 (2d Cir. 2012); United States v. Fumo, No. CRIM.A. 06-319, 2007 WL 3232112, at *6 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 30, 2007) ("[S]earch protocols and keywords do not mark the outer bounds of a lawful search; to the contrary, because of the nature of computer files, the government may legally open and briefly examine each file when searching a computer pursuant to a valid warrant."). Defendant's reliance on Comprehensive Drug Testing is thus unpersuasive.

Defendant next argues that the warrants were facially invalid because the Government did not provide the underlying sealed affidavits to Google or 1&1. (Doc. No. 102.) I disagree. The Government was not required to provide the sealed affidavits to Google and 1&1 because neither company was required to conduct a detailed search of the seized accounts. Rather, the Third Circuit and sister circuits have repeatedly upheld the two-step process the Government employed here for executing search warrants for electronically stored information.

In Stabile, for instance, the Third Circuit approved the Government's off-site search of six seized hard drives because the "practical realities of computer investigations preclude on-site searches." 633 F.3d at 234. The Stabile Court recognized that electronic-based searches—which are "time consuming and require trained forensic investigators"—necessarily cannot be "rushed by a cursory on-site search." Id. The Third Circuit thus found reasonable the Government's initial seizure of large amounts of potentially non-responsive data, followed by a subsequent off-site filtering and search of those data. Id. Plainly, the Stabile Court's approval of this two-step process applies not only to the seizure of physical electronics (e.g., computers and hard drives) but also to that of electronic data (e.g., email accounts); see also Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(e)(2)(B) (permitting a "later review of the media or information [including electronically stored information] consistent with the warrant").

5 Because the seizure of electronic data necessarily requires two steps—the internet service provider produces all potentially responsive data, and an independent technician then segregates and reviews that data to ensure warrant compliance—any failure to provide Google and 1&1 with the underlying affidavits did not violate the Fourth Amendment. In these circumstances, providing the affidavits to the providers would have been pointless. See, e.g., United States v. Bach, 310 F.3d 1063, 1065-66 (8th Cir. 2002) ("According to Yahoo!, when executing warrants, technicians do not selectively choose or review the contents of the named account ... Yahoo!'s execution of the search warrant in this case did not violate [Defendant's] Fourth Amendment rights); United States v. Grimmett, 439 F.3d 1263, 1270 (10th Cir. 2006); United States v. Evers, 669 F.3d 645, 652 (6th Cir. 2012); United States v. Scully, 108 F. Supp. 3d 59, 95 (E.D.N.Y. 2015) ("[E]very case of which we are aware that has entertained a suppression motion relating to the search of an email account has upheld the Government's ability to obtain the entire contents of the email account to determine which particular emails come within the search warrant."); In the Matter of a Warrant for All Content & Other Info. Associated with the Email Account xxxxxxx gmail.com Maintained at Premises Controlled

By Google, Inc., 33 F. Supp. 3d 386, 395 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) ("Google Warrant") ("Not surprisingly, courts have routinely rejected arguments made in the course of suppression motions that a warrant should have required a third party to conduct searches of electronic information."). In sum, the warrants' execution was thus proper and reasonable.

Finally, relying on United States v. Ganias, Defendant argues that the Government's retention of all seized emails (privileged or otherwise) warrants suppression. 755 F.3d 125 (2d Cir. 2014); (Doc. No. 79 at 20-22). In Ganias, the Second Circuit held that the Government's seizure and retention for two and a half years of Defendant's personal records, which were plainly outside the warrant's scope, violated the Fourth Amendment when the Government used the warrant returns to develop probable cause in an unrelated investigation. Id. at 141.

Here, the circumstances are wholly dissimilar. Agent Humphreys testified that she has not re-reviewed the search warrant returns since her initial 2011 review. (Tr. at 14.) Rather, the Government has retained the returns for proper purposes including, inter alia, authentication. (Doc. No. 102 at 19); see, e.g., Scully, 108 F. Supp. 3d at 101 ("[T]he Government states that any such emails are being retained for authentication purposes only and will not be used in future criminal investigations. Accordingly, consistent with Ganias, suppression is not an appropriate remedy for the alleged improper retention."); see also Google Warrant, 33 F. Supp. 3d at 398 ("[W]e recognize that the Government has a need to retain materials as an investigation unfolds for the purpose of retrieving material that is authorized by the warrant"). Ganias thus provides no support for the result Defendant urges.

The warrants were thus sufficiently particular and were not overbroad. Accordingly, I will deny suppression on these grounds.

b. Privilege

Defendant argues that the Government's failure to provide the sealed affidavits to Google and 1&1 impermissibly resulted in the production of privileged information. Defendant thus requests a "hearing into who had access to the privileged communications" and the appointment of a special master for document review because "it appears that the FBI and not the DOJ reviewed" the purportedly tainted documents. (Doc. No. 79 at 19-20.) I will deny these requests, which appear intended to delay Defendant's trial needlessly.

Defendant apparently does not understand that the FBI is part of the Department of Justice. His suggestion that there was something improper about the FBI review of this material thus makes no sense. In any event, as I have discussed, the Government has adequately described its extensive efforts—including the establishment of an independent forensics filter team—to segregate potentially privileged information. (Doc. No. 102 at 4, n.1.) Moreover, Agent Humphreys testified credibly that no agent at the DOJ reviewed the search warrant returns before they were screened for potentially privileged communications. (Tr. at 12.) I am thus satisfied that the Government employed proper procedures to exclude emails that were privileged or otherwise outside the warrants' scope, including emails between Defendant and Mr. Lacheen or Mr. Filippov. See, e.g., In re Search of Elec. Commc'ns in the Account of chakafattah gmail.com at Internet Serv. Provider Google, Inc., 802 F.3d 516, 530 (3d Cir. 2015) (approving of a similar privilege review procedure).

6 Nor has Defendant shown that he entitled to suppression based on the Government's purported review of privileged communications, including approximately "two dozen" emails between Defendant and his former attorney, Sergei Bespalov. (Doc. No. 118 at 2.) Although Defendant perfunctorily suggests that the Government seized voluminous privileged information, he has made no showing that the Government actually reviewed these communications, much less did so deliberately or in bad faith. (Doc. No. 118 at 2); cf. United States v. Voigt, 89 F.3d 1050, 1066 (3d Cir. 1996) (an intrusion into the attorney-client relationship, standing alone, is not per se prejudicial; a claim of outrageous government conduct premised on intrusion into attorney-client relationship is cognizable only if the defendant can show deliberate action causing actual and substantial prejudice); see also United States v. Trombetta, No. CR 13-227-01, 2015 WL 7289407, at *2 (W.D. Pa. Nov. 16, 2015). Quite to the contrary, Agent Humphreys credibly testified that she may have reviewed "one or two" emails between Defendant and Bespalov (which did not appear privileged), and that the Government went to great lengths to ensure proper segregation of potentially privileged material. (Tr. at 20.)

Assuming, arguendo, the Government viewed even a few privileged communications, this de minimis "intrusion" does not warrant the wholesale suppression of the approximately 11,919 records at issue. As Agent Humphreys explained, the Government subpoenaed Chestnut Consulting Group (Defendant's company), seeking documents respecting the EBRD investigation. (Id.) In response and without asserting privilege, Chestnut disclosed responsive emails between Defendant and Bespalov that Agent Humphreys also reviewed. (Tr. at 20); see Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Republic of Philippines, 951 F.2d 1414, 1429 (3d Cir. 1991) (disclosures in response to DOJ subpoena waived attorney-client privilege). Moreover, Bespalov testified during the grand jury proceedings as to, inter alia, his communications with Defendant, and I anticipate that Bespalov will testify at trial. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 745 F.3d 681, 690 (3d Cir.) (upholding ruling requiring Bespalov to testify before the grand jury based on an application of the crime-fraud exception to attorney-client privilege), cert. denied sub nom., Corp. & Client v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 510 (2014); see In re Grand Jury Subpoena, No. 10-127, 2013 WL 228115 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 18, 2013). In these circumstances, it is apparent that the Government would have inevitably learned of any information it purportedly viewed in emails between Defendant and Bespalov, thus vitiating any prejudice to Defendant. Accordingly, the drastic remedy of suppression is not required. See, e.g., Voigt, 89 F.3d at 1066; United States v. Squillacote, 221 F.3d 542, 556-560 (4th Cir. 2000) ("Appellants complain only about the manner by which the government executed the warrant, a complaint that is inadequate to justify the severe remedy of blanket suppression ... [W]e do not believe that suppression of any evidence derived from the privileged conversations would be proper in this case, given that the privilege is a testimonial or evidentiary one, and not constitutionally-based.")

Finally, to the extent Defendant asks me to suppress any fruits of the Government's review of the privileged emails, I decline to do. See United States v. Marashi, 913 F.2d 724, 731 n.11 (9th Cir. 1990) ("[N]o court has ever applied the [fruit of the poisonous trees] theory to any evidentiary privilege and ... we have indicated we would not be the first to do so.") (emphasis in original); cf. Nickel v. Hannigan, 97 F.3d 403, 409 (10th Cir. 1996) (refusing to suppress fruits of a seized privileged communication); United States v. Lefkowitz, 618 F.2d 1313, 1318 n. 8 (9th Cir. 1980) ("Because we reject ... [Defendant's] argument that the marital privileges are somehow constitutionally grounded in, among other locations, the Fourth Amendment, we doubt that a secondary source of information obtained through information protected by the confidential marital communications privilege would in any way be 'tainted.' ").

7 Defendant is thus not entitled to suppression on this ground.

c. Probable Cause

Defendant argues that the warrants lacked probable cause "in the first instance." (Doc. No. 79 at 1, 17.) Defendant also argues that the affidavits supporting the warrant applications were based on purportedly illegally obtained information, namely the alleged custodial interrogation of Defendant at JFK Airport. (Id. at 18.) Defendant thus requests a "taint hearing" to determine whether the Government relied on illegally obtained information in its search warrant applications. (Doc. No. 79 at 10, 18.) I will deny Defendant's request.

In his supporting affidavits, Agent Gray detailed extensive probable cause that Defendant participated in, inter alia, complex bribery and money laundering schemes. The affidavits relied on, inter alia: a whistleblower report that Defendant bribed Ryjenko; banking records reflecting bribes; contracts between Defendant and its clients for "success fees"; interviews suggesting that neither Defendant nor Sanderson provided the bona fide consulting services they claimed to have provided; and an EBRD report finding that Defendant bribed Ryjenko. Agent Gray's affidavits thus amply made out probable cause, even without considering Defendant's statements during the JFK interview.

In any event, Defendant's argument respecting the JFK interview mistakenly assumes that the interview was illegal. I have already rejected this argument. (Doc. No. 123.) Accordingly, because the Airport interview was proper, the Government did not improperly rely on it in establishing probable cause for the email search warrants.

Finally, assuming, arguendo, the Airport interview was improper under the Fifth Amendment, Defendant is still not entitled to suppression of its physical fruits. See United States v. Patane, 542 U.S. 630, 634 (2004) (plurality opinion) (a failure to provide Miranda warnings does not require suppression of the physical fruits of the suspect's unwarned but voluntary statements); see also United States v. Latz, 162 Fed.Appx. 113, 118 (3d Cir. 2005) (same); United States v. DeSumma, 272 F.3d 176, 180–81 (3d Cir. 2001) (same). Accordingly, even assuming*, arguendo*, the JFK interview was improper (which it was not), Defendant has still not shown that I must suppress the fruits of that interview.

d. The Magistrate Judge's Authority

Defendant argues that Judge Restrepo impermissibly issued warrants to be executed in another district. (Doc. No. 79 at 23-24.) Defendant argues that this violated Rule 41, requiring the Government to obtain search warrants in the district where the items will be seized. Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(b)(1) ("A magistrate judge with authority in the district ... has authority to issue a warrant to search for and seize a person or property located within the district."). I disagree.

Defendant ignores the SCA's plain language, authorizing a court to issue search warrants for electronic communications provided the issuing court has jurisdiction over the offense under investigation. 18 U.S.C. § 2703(a); see United States v. Noyes, No. 1:08-CR-55-SJM-1, 2010 WL 5139859, at *9 n.9 (W.D. Pa. Dec. 8, 2010). This Court certainly had jurisdiction over this offense based on Defendant's alleged criminal conduct in this District.

8 Defendant also ignores extensive case law permitting out-of-district electronic search warrants pursuant to the SCA. See, e.g., United States v. Bansal, 663 F.3d 634, 662 (3d Cir. 2011) ("[Defendant] contends that Rule 41(b), which limits a Magistrate Judge's jurisdiction to the District in which he or she sits, trumps § 2703(a). We, along with other courts to consider the question, reject that contention."); United States v. Berkos, 543 F.3d 392, 398 (7th Cir. 2008) ("Rule 41(b) deals with substantive judicial authority—not procedure—and thus does not apply to § 2703(a)."); Scully, 108 F. Supp. 3d at 83 ("[Section] 2703(a) authorizes electronic search warrants by a federal magistrate judge that extend outside his or her district ... the plain terms of Section 2703, considered with Rule 41, dictate this result."). Rule 41 thus provides no ground for suppression.

e. Notification

Defendant argues that the Government failed to inform him that it had seized his emails and so violated Rule 41. (Doc. No. 79 at 22-23.) He further argues that because it did not obtain a court order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 2705, the Government impermissibly directed Google and 1&1 to withhold notification of the Government's seizure. Again, I disagree.

The Government is not required to inform a defendant when it seizes his emails pursuant to the SCA. See 18 U.S.C. § 2703 (law enforcement may require disclosure of electronic communications "without required notice to the subscriber or customer, if [it] obtains a warrant issued ... by a court of competent jurisdiction."); see also Bansal, 663 F.3d at 662-63 ("The plain text of Rule 41... requires notice only "to the person from whom, or from whose premises, the property was taken."). Indeed, the Third Circuit has explicitly rejected that notice is necessary when the Government provides the internet service provider with a copy of the warrant, as it did here. See id. ("Because [Defendant] does not deny that the warrant was provided to the internet service providers upon whom the search warrants were executed, we conclude that notice was properly made in this case."); see also In re U.S., 665 F. Supp. 2d 1210, 1221 (D. Or. 2009) ("In this third party context, the Fourth Amendment notice requirement is satisfied when a valid warrant is obtained and served on the holder of the property to be seized, the ISP.").

Defendant next argues without factual basis that because the Government failed to obtain a protective order barring Google and 1&1 from disclosing the seizures, it could not properly direct the providers to withhold notice of the seizures. Apart from supposition, Defendant has offered no evidence suggesting that the Government so instructed Google and 1&1. Indeed, the warrants do not mention any such instruction. Moreover, Agent Humphreys testified credibly that the FBI did not instruct either Google or 1&1 to withhold notice to Defendant. (Tr. at 9.) Defendant has thus not shown that the Government acted improperly concerning notification.

f. Standing

Finally, to the extent that Defendant seeks suppression of Ryjenko's emails, he lacks standing to do so. See United States v. Stearn, 597 F.3d 540, 551 (3d Cir. 2010) ("To invoke the Fourth Amendment's exclusionary rule, a defendant must demonstrate that his own Fourth Amendment rights were violated by the challenged search or seizure." (citation omitted)). Defendant has not shown that he has a reasonable expectation of privacy in Ryjenko's emails. Accordingly, Defendant is not entitled to suppression of the Google production relating to aryjenko@gmail.com.

IV. Conclusion

The Government has shown that the Google and 1&1 warrants comported with the Fourth Amendment. Moreover, the Government's application for and execution of the warrants fully complied with the law governing electronic seizures. Accordingly, I will deny Defendant's Motion.

9 AND NOW, this 18th day of April, 2016, upon consideration of Defendant's Motion to Suppress (Doc. No. 79), the Government's Opposition (Doc. No. 102), and all related submissions, and after a suppression hearing, it is hereby ORDERED that Defendant's Motion to Suppress Emails Obtained from Google and 1&1 Internet is DENIED.

AND IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2016 WL 7647635

End of Document

737 F.3d 330
United States Court of Appeals,
Fourth Circuit.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff–Appellee,
v.
UNDER SEAL, Defendant–Appellant.

No. 13–4267.
|
Argued: Oct. 29, 2013.
|
Decided: Dec. 13, 2013.

Synopsis
Background: Taxpayers, who were targets of a grand jury investigation seeking to determine whether they used secret Swiss bank accounts to conceal assets and income from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and the Treasury Department, appealed order of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Alexandria, Leonie M. Brinkema, J., holding them in civil contempt for refusing to comply with grand jury subpoenas requesting that they produce certain foreign bank account records that they were required to keep pursuant to Treasury Department regulations governing offshore banking.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Agee, Circuit Judge, held that records required to be maintained under the Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) fell within the required records doctrine, and therefore were outside the scope of the Fifth Amendment privilege.

Affirmed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

331 ARGUED: Caroline Rule, Kostelanetz & Fink, LLP, New York, NY, for Appellant. Elissa Hart–Mahan, United States Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., for Appellee. ON BRIEF: Robert Steven Fink, Juliet Leah Fink, Kostelanetz & Fink, LLP, New York, New York; David G. Barger, Greenberg Traurig, LLP, McLean, VA, for Appellant. Neil H. MacBride, United States Attorney, Office of the United States Attorney, Alexandria, VA; Kathryn Keneally, Assistant Attorney General, Frank P. Cihlar, Chief, Criminal Appeals & Tax Enforcement Policy Section, Gregory Victor Davis, Tax Division, United States Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., for Appellee.

Before KING, GREGORY, and AGEE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

Affirmed by published opinion. Judge AGEE wrote the opinion, in which Judge KING and Judge GREGORY joined.

AGEE, Circuit Judge:

John and Jane Doe (the "Does") appeal the district court's order holding them in civil contempt for refusing to comply with grand jury subpoenas. The Does contend that the district court erred in finding that the required records doctrine overrode their Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and required production of certain foreign bank records. For the reasons that follow, we affirm the judgment of the district court.

332 I.

The underlying facts in this case are undisputed. The Does are the targets of a grand jury investigation in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia seeking to determine whether they used secret Swiss bank accounts to conceal assets and income from the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") and the Treasury Department. The grand jury received evidence that on June 2, 2008, John Doe opened an account at the Swiss investment bank Clariden Leu (now Credit Suisse AG) in the name of [Redacted Corporation]. He was the beneficial owner of the account, which was valued in excess of $2.3 million at the close of 2008. The account was managed by the Swiss firm Beck Verwaltungen AG. When John Doe closed this account in January 2009, he transferred $1.5 million to Beck Verwaltungen AG's account at a different Swiss private bank, Bank Sarasin.

On May 18, 2012, the Does were served grand jury subpoenas requesting that they produce certain foreign bank account records that they were required to keep pursuant to Treasury Department regulations governing offshore banking. The subpoenas demanded production of > [a]ny and all records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 (formerly 31 C.F.R. § 103.32) for the past five (5) years relating to foreign financial bank, securities, or other financial accounts in a foreign country for which you had/have a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over and are required by law to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Account (FBAR). The records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 (formerly 31 C.F.R. § 103.32) include records that contain the name in which each such account is maintained, the number or other designation of such account, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during the reporting period.

(J.A. 10.) The Does timely moved to quash the subpoenas, citing their Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. The Government opposed the motion, arguing that under the required records doctrine, the privilege does not apply to financial records that the Does were required by law to retain.

After hearing argument, the district court denied the Does' motion to quash, finding that the required records doctrine overrode their Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, and ordered them to comply with the subpoenas. The Does refused to comply, and pursuant to a stipulation by the parties, the district court held the Does in civil contempt. [1]

The Does now appeal, and we have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

II.

A.

[1] We review the district court's denial of a motion to quash a subpoena for an abuse of discretion. [2] In re Grand Jury Subpoena: John Doe, No. 05GJ1318, 584 F.3d 175, 182 (4th Cir.2009). But "[i]nsofar as the district court's determination was based upon interpretations of law, ... 333 we review those conclusions de novo." In re Grand Jury Subpoena (T–112), 597 F.3d 189, 195 (4th Cir.2010).

B.

The Bank Secrecy Act (the "BSA" or the "Act"), 31 U.S.C. §§ 5311–25, regulates offshore banking and contains a number of recordkeeping and inspection provisions. Among the purposes of the BSA is "to require certain reports or records where they have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings." 31 U.S.C. § 5311. Section 241(a) of the Act instructs the Treasury Secretary to "require a resident or citizen of the United States ... to keep records, file reports, or keep records and file reports, when the resident, citizen, or person makes a transaction ... with a foreign financial agency." Id. § 5314(a). In furtherance of that statutory directive, the Treasury Secretary implemented regulations that require (1) U.S. citizens and residents to disclose their foreign bank accounts, see 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350, and (2) that the records for such accounts "be retained by each person having a financial interest in or signature or other authority over any such account" for at least five years and be kept "at all times available for inspection as authorized by law," id. § 1010.420. These recordkeeping regulations were in effect at all times relevant to this case.

III.

The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that "[n]o person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." U.S. Const. amend. V. The Supreme Court has held that the privilege against self-incrimination bars the government from "compelling a person to give 'testimony' that incriminates him." Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 409, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (1976). Because "the privilege protects a person only against being incriminated by his own compelled testimonial communications," the Court has determined that it does not shield production of private papers voluntarily prepared or prepared by a third party. Id. at 409, 96 S.Ct. 1569.

The Does contend that the required records doctrine—which, if it applies, renders the Fifth Amendment privilege inapplicable—does not apply here and that the district court erred in finding otherwise. Essentially, the Does argue that "[w]here documents are required to be kept and then produced, they are arguably compelled." In re M.H., 648 F.3d 1067, 1071 (9th Cir.2011) (emphasis in original). The Supreme Court, however, has held that the privilege against self-incrimination does not bar the government from imposing recordkeeping and inspection requirements as part of a valid regulatory scheme. See Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 17, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948) (noting that the nature of documents and the capacity in which they are held may indicate that "the custodian has voluntarily assumed a duty which overrides his claim of privilege").

In Shapiro, the Court required a wholesaler of fruit and produce to turn over certain records he was obliged to keep and maintain for examination pursuant to the Emergency Price Control Act ("EPCA"), which was enacted during World War II to prevent inflation and price gouging. Id. at 4–11, 68 S.Ct. 1375. The Court determined that the EPCA represented a valid exercise of Congress' regulatory authority and that the recordkeeping provisions of the EPCA were essential to the administration of the statute's objectives. Id. at 31–32, 68 S.Ct. 1375. Further, the Court reasoned that this "required records doctrine" 334 applies "not only to public documents in public offices, but also to records required by law to be kept in order that there may be suitable information of transactions which are the appropriate subjects of governmental regulation, and the enforcement of restrictions validly established." Id. at 17, 68 S.Ct. 1375 (emphasis omitted).

[2] The Court revisited its decision in Shapiro twenty years later in Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968) and Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968). In holding that the required records doctrine was inapplicable to the circumstances before it in both cases, the Court articulated three requirements—derived from Shapiro 's holding—for determining the applicability of the required records doctrine. As summarized in Grosso, those requirements are: (1) the purposes of the United States' inquiry must be essentially regulatory; (2) information is to be obtained by requiring the preservation of records of a kind which the regulated party has customarily kept; and (3) the records themselves must have assumed public aspects which render them at least analogous to a public document. 390 U.S. at 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709.

[3] This Court has recognized that the foregoing three principles announced in Grosso define the required records doctrine, see, e.g., United States v. Webb, 398 F.2d 553, 556 (4th Cir.1968) (recognizing required records doctrine in context of regulation of interstate trucking), but has yet to address the applicability of the doctrine in the context of foreign bank records. We do so now and join the consensus of the courts of appeals to have considered the issue that the required records doctrine applies in concluding that records required to be maintained under the BSA fall within the required records doctrine.[3] We further conclude that all three requirements of the doctrine are met in this case.

A.

In order to fall under the required records doctrine, the purpose of the recordkeeping must be "essentially regulatory." Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. 709. We have held that a recordkeeping requirement is "essentially regulatory" if it is "imposed in an essentially noncriminal and regulatory area of inquiry and [is] not directed to a selective group inherently suspect of criminal activity." Webb, 398 F.2d at 556 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The Does argue that, for several reasons, the BSA's recordkeeping provision is criminal in nature, rather than regulatory. They contend that unlike truly regulatory schemes, such as those that condition employment or licensure on the retention of certain records, the BSA's purpose is prosecutorial—i.e., to grant law enforcement access to otherwise unavailable evidence of foreign financial transactions. The Does cite language referring to criminal investigation as one of the BSA's aims in the statute's declaration of purpose, legislative history, and descriptions on the IRS website, to support their position that the BSA's recordkeeping requirements prohibitively operate in a criminal area of inquiry against those suspected of tax fraud. Implicit in the Does' argument is that because the BSA lists first among its purposes the gathering of information that has “a high degree of usefulness in criminal 335 ... investigations,” 31 U.S.C. § 5311, the Act's chief purpose is to fight crime.

These same arguments failed to persuade the other appellate courts which have considered the issue, and do not persuade us either. See, e.g., In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1073–74 (noting and rejecting party's citations to language in the BSA and the IRS website); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 434–35 (same).

The Supreme Court has observed that a statute which includes a criminal law purpose in addition to civil regulatory matters does not strip the statute of its status as “essentially regulatory.” See Cal. Bankers Ass'n v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 77, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 39 L.Ed.2d 812 (1974) (“[T]hat a legislative enactment manifests a concern for the enforcement of the criminal law does not cast any generalized pall of constitutional suspicion over it.”). Notwithstanding their own argument, the Does acknowledge that the BSA has purposes unrelated to criminal investigation. The plain language of the BSA verifies its concomitant tax, regulatory, and counterterrorism purposes in addition to its law enforcement goals. See 31 U.S.C. § 5311 (requiring records to be kept “where they have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings, or in the conduct of intelligence or counterintelligence activities, including analysis, to protect against international terrorism” (emphasis added)). Elaborating on the non-criminal purposes of the BSA, the relevant House Report acknowledges that the Act's recordkeeping and reporting requirements “aid duly constituted authorities in lawful investigations” but also underscores that the requirements “facilitate the supervision of financial institutions properly subject to federal supervision” and “provide for the collection of statistics necessary for the formulation of monetary and economic policy.” H.R.Rep. No. 91–975 (1970), reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4394, 4405. Consequently, the Treasury Department shares the information it collects pursuant to the requirements of the BSA with other agencies—including the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the National Credit Union Administration, and the Office of Thrift Supervision—none of which are empowered to bring criminal prosecutions. See 31 U.S.C. § 5319; 31 C.F.R. § 1010.950(a)(b).

Further, the Supreme Court has noted, in discussing “the recordkeeping and reporting requirements of the [BSA],” that “Congress seems to have been equally concerned with civil liability which might go undetected by reason of transactions of the type required to be recorded or reported.” Shultz, 416 U.S. at 76, 94 S.Ct. 1494. Indeed, the BSA's comprehensive statutory scheme contains recordkeeping requirements that carry both civil and criminal penalties. See 31 U.S.C. §§ 5321, 5322 (individual's failure to report or retain required records of foreign bank accounts does not give rise to criminal liability unless that failure is proven “willful”). [4]

Additionally, the BSA's recordkeeping requirements broadly cover all those who maintain foreign bank accounts, rather then a particular subgroup. The Ninth Circuit has explained:

> There is nothing inherently illegal about having or being a beneficiary of an offshore foreign banking account. According to the Government, § 1010.420 applies to “hundreds of 336 thousands of foreign bank accounts-over half a million in 2009.” Nothing about having a foreign bank account on its own suggests a person is engaged in illegal activity. The fact distinguishes this case from Marchetti and Grosso, where the activity being regulated—gambling—was almost universally illegal, so that paying a tax on gambling wagers necessarily implicated a person in criminal activity. Admitting to having a foreign bank account carries no such risk. That the information contained in the required record may ultimately lead to criminal charges does not convert an essentially regulatory regulation into a criminal one.

In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074–75.

Moreover, § 1010.420 has a reporting requirement. The regulation mandates that the required records “shall be kept at all times available for inspection as authorized by law.” 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420. The Supreme Court has indicated that “no meaningful difference” exists “between an obligation to maintain records for inspection, and such an obligation supplemented by a requirement that those records be filed periodically with officers of the United States." Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 56 n. 14, 88 S.Ct. 697.

Because the BSA's recordkeeping requirements serve purposes unrelated to criminal law enforcement and the provisions do not apply exclusively to those engaged in criminal activity, we find that those requirements are "essentially regulatory." Accordingly, we conclude that the first prong of the required records doctrine is satisfied.

B.

The records must also be "of a kind which the regulated party has customarily kept." Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. 709. We find this prong of the required records doctrine to be easily satisfied here. The records sought are of the same type that the Does must report annually to the IRS pursuant to the regulation of offshore banking: the name, number, and type of account(s), the name and address of the bank where an account is held, and the maximum value of the account during the reporting period. See 31 C.F.R. §§ 1010.350, 1010.420.

Furthermore, the records sought are also of the same type that a reasonable account holder, foreign or domestic, would keep in order to access his or her account. See In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1076 (reasoning that foreign account holders routinely retain basic foreign bank records if only to access their own accounts). The Does argue that individuals are unlikely to keep account records for the five years required under 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420, given the three-year statute of limitations for civil tax adjustments, and because foreign banks are notorious for failing to provide customers with records. This argument fails, however, given the clear language in § 1010.420 that requires the retention of the account information that has been subpoenaed.[5] Because it is the failure to maintain such records that can be probative of criminal activity, rather than the contents of the records, foreign account holders can reasonably be expected to follow the law governing their choice to engage in offshore banking.

Accordingly, we conclude that the records sought are of a kind "customarily 337 kept" and the second prong of the required records doctrine is satisfied.

C.

Finally, "the records [sought] must have assumed 'public aspects' which render them at least analogous to public documents." Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. 709. Two courts of appeals have held that "if the government's purpose in imposing the regulatory scheme is essentially regulatory, then it necessarily has some 'public aspects' " sufficient to satisfy the third prong of the required records doctrine. In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1076 (citing Shapiro, 335 U.S. at 33, 68 S.Ct. 1375); accord Donovan v. Mehlenbacher, 652 F.2d 228, 231 (2d Cir.1981). For purposes of this case, we agree.

Drawing a distinction between entities and individuals who publicly engage in business with the public and those who privately open a foreign bank account, the Does contend that there is "nothing public about the unlicensed private activity of owning a foreign bank account." (Appellant's Br. 49.) The Does argue that the subpoenaed records are private, personal financial records which are unrelated to legitimate regulatory goals.

This argument by the Does misapprehends this prong of the required records doctrine by conflating "public aspects" and "public access." Although the Does argue that substantive regulations designed to protect the public from harm and open to public access may imbue otherwise private documents with public aspects, it does not follow that public aspects exist only under these circumstances. That the records sought are typically considered private does not bar them from possessing the requisite public aspects. See In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1077 ("[T]hat the information sought is traditionally private and personal as opposed to business-related does not automatically implicate the Fifth Amendment."); In re Kenny, 715 F.2d 51, 52–54 (2d Cir.1983) (reasoning that subpoenaed medical records possessed sufficient "public aspects" to satisfy the third prong of the required records doctrine). As discussed above, the Treasury Department shares the information it collects pursuant to the Act's recordkeeping and reporting requirements with a number of other agencies. See 31 U.S.C. § 5319; 31 C.F.R. § 1010.950(a)-(b). This data sharing is designed to serve important public purposes, including the formation of economic, monetary, and regulatory policy, any of which are more than sufficient to imbue otherwise private foreign bank account records with "public aspects." See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 436.

Finally, the Does contend that a requirement to retain records begets a more attenuated relationship with the government than a requirement to report their contents, such that documents maintained under a mere recordkeeping requirement have insufficient "public aspects." The Supreme Court, however, has squarely rejected this proposition. See Marchetti, 390 U.S. at 56 n. 14, 88 S.Ct. 697 ("We perceive no meaningful difference between an obligation to maintain records for inspection, and such an obligation supplemented by a requirement that those records be filed periodically with officers of the United States."). We therefore conclude that the records in question have "public aspects" sufficient to satisfy the third prong of the required records doctrine.

IV.

Because we find that the records sought in the grand jury subpoenas meet all the requirements of the required records doctrine, the Fifth Amendment privilege is inapplicable, and the Does may not invoke 338 it to shield themselves from the subpoenas' commands. As the Does' Fifth Amendment privilege is not implicated, we need not address their request for immunity. Accordingly, the judgment of the district court is

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

737 F.3d 330, 112 A.F.T.R.2d 2013-7316

Footnotes

[1] The district court stayed the execution of the contempt order until this Court adjudicates the Does' appeal.

[2] Although the Does formally appeal the district court's order holding them in civil contempt, the underlying basis of the contempt order is the court's denial of their motion to quash the grand jury subpoenas.

[3] See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d 428, 433–34 (5th Cir.2012); In re Special Feb. 2011–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated Sept. 12, 2011, 691 F.3d 903, 909 (7th Cir.2012); In re M.H., 648 F.3d at 1073; In re Doe, 711 F.2d 1187, 1191 (2d Cir.1983).

[4] 31 U.S.C. § 5321 permits the Secretary of Treasury to commence civil actions to recover monetary penalties for various violations of the BSA.

[5] We also find the Does' five-year argument dubious in view of 26 U.S.C. § 6501(e), which contains a six-year statute of limitations for many taxpayers and fosters a generally accepted accounting practice to advise taxpayers to keep their pertinent records until the § 6501(e) period has expired.

End of Document

908 F.Supp.2d 348
United States District Court,
E.D. New York.

In re GRAND JURY SUBPOENA
DATED FEBRUARY 2, 2012.
United States of America, Movant
v.
John Doe, Respondent.

No. 12–cv–00553 (JFB).
|
Dec. 10, 2012.

Synopsis
Background: United States sought order compelling John Doe respondent to comply with grand jury subpoena for foreign banking records.

Holdings: The District Court, Joseph F. Bianco, J., held that:

[1] there was no evidence to support respondent's claim that government was already in possession of records requested in grand jury subpoena, or that it issued the subpoena for purposes of preparing for trial, and

[2] foreign bank records were subject to the required records exception to the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination.

So ordered.

Attorneys and Law Firms

350 Loretta Lynch, U.S. Attorney, Eastern District of New York, Central Islip, NY, Jeffrey B. Bender and Mark W. Kotila, Trial Attorneys, Northern Criminal Enforcement Section Tax Division, U.S. Department of Justice, for Movant.

Brian P. Ketcham, Kostelanetz & Fink, LLP, New York, NY, for Respondent.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

JOSEPH F. BIANCO, District Judge:

The United States of America (the "government") seeks an order compelling John Doe ("respondent") to comply with a grand jury subpoena dated February 2, 2012 (the "Subpoena"). Respondent opposes the government's motion on two grounds: (1) the government already possesses the records sought by the Subpoena and is improperly using the grand jury's subpoena power to prepare for trial; and (2) compelling compliance with the Subpoena would violate respondent's Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. For the reasons set forth on the record on November 20, 2012 and provided in detail herein, the Court orders respondent to comply with the Subpoena.

Specifically, the Court finds that no evidence supports the conclusion that the government is already in possession of the requested documents or that the government has issued the Subpoena for purposes of preparing for trial. Additionally, the Court holds that the requested documents fall within the required records exception and, thus, are outside the scope of respondent's Fifth Amendment privilege.

I. BACKGROUND

As part of its investigation, the grand jury in the Eastern District of New York issued a subpoena to respondent that sought the production of foreign bank records that account holders are required by law to keep and maintain for a period of five years. In particular, the Subpoena sought the following foreign bank account records:

> Any and all records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 (formerly 31 C.F.R. § 103.32) for the past 5 years relating to foreign financial bank, securities, or other financial accounts in a foreign country for which you had/ have a financial interest in, or signature or other authority over and are required by law to file a Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Account (FBAR). The records required to be maintained pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420

> (formerly 31 C.F.R. § 103.32) include records that contain the name in which each such account is maintained, the number or other designation of such account, the name and address of the foreign bank or other person with whom such account is maintained, the type of such account, and the maximum value of each such account during the reporting period.

The government served respondent with the Subpoena on February 8, 2012, and the Subpoena required compliance by February 23, 2012. Respondent has failed to respond to the Subpoena. On August 17, 2012, the government moved to compel respondent's compliance with the Subpoena. On September 27, 2012, respondent filed his opposition to the government's motion. On October 9, 2012, the government filed its reply. The Court heard oral argument on November 20, 2012 and, following the argument, issued an oral decision 351 granting the government's motion to compel.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Issuance of Subpoena

Respondent argues that the government's motion to compel should be denied because (1) the government already possesses the records sought by the subpoena, and (2) the government may not use the grand jury to prepare for trial. For the reasons set forth below, the Court concludes that these arguments have no merit.

[1] As a threshold matter, although courts must ensure that the grand jury process is not being abused by the government, it is not the role of the courts to micromanage the government's presentation of evidence to the grand jury. See, e.g., United States v. Kleen Laundry & Cleaners, Inc., 381 F.Supp. 519, 521–22 (E.D.N.Y.1974) ("It is now the United States Attorney who gathers the evidence for later presentation to the grand jury.... So broad is his role in practice that courts are loath to review prosecutorial actions."). Having carefully reviewed the submissions, the Court finds no evidence of abuse of the grand jury process by the government in any way.

[2] First, respondent's argument that the government already possesses the information requested by the Subpoena is based upon sheer speculation and is denied by the government. (See Gov't Reply Mem. of Law at 2) ("The respondent's argument begins with the false premise that the government already possesses the records sought by the Subpoena."); (id.) ("The respondent ... has no basis for his contention that the government 'already possesses the documents sought by the subpoena.' " (quoting Resp't's Mem. of Law in Opp'n at 3)). Although the government attached to its motion to compel a selection of documents from one foreign bank account with dates spanning from 1992 to August 2008, those documents are hardly (on their face) co-extensive with the scope of the Subpoena. Specifically, the Subpoena required the production of documents for a five-year period prior to February 2012. Thus, the government's selection does not contain any documents for the majority of the five-year period covered by the Subpoena. Moreover, there are no documents from other foreign banks at which the respondent, unbeknownst to the government, may have had accounts. In other words, it is self-evident that the government would have no way of ensuring that all such records from all foreign bank accounts—for which respondent has a financial interest, or is a signatory, or has authority over—have been uncovered unless respondent complies with the Subpoena. In short, there is no reason to believe that the government already possesses all documents sought by the Subpoena. Additionally, the fact that the government has some of respondent's foreign bank records clearly does not preclude it from seeking all such relevant foreign bank records. See, e.g., United States v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1, 13, 93 S.Ct. 764, 35 L.Ed.2d 67 (1973) ("The grand jury may well find it desirable to call numerous witnesses in the course of an investigation. It does not follow that each witness may resist a subpoena on the ground that too many witnesses have been called.").

Respondent seeks to counter this proposition by citing to Application of Linen Supply Cos., 15 F.R.D. 115, 119 (S.D.N.Y.1953). However, that decision is clearly distinguishable. In that case, the court held that the recipients of a grand jury subpoena did not need to provide the originals of documents for which the government already possessed copies. Id. at 119. Here, the grand jury has not received any 352 documents from respondent and, thus, it cannot be determined that the grand jury will have access to all potentially responsive documents. Accordingly, the above-referenced case is inapposite to the instant situation.

[3] Respondent's second argument, that the grand jury is being used by the government to prepare for trial, is similarly unavailing. This argument is a legal non-starter in the instant case because the grand jury has not returned an indictment. Stated differently, the concern that the government is abusing the grand jury by preparing for trial only arises after the grand jury has returned an indictment. See, e.g., United States v. Leung, 40 F.3d 577, 581 (2d Cir.1994) ("It is, of course, improper for the Government to use the grand jury for the sole or dominant purpose of preparing for trial under a pending indictment." (emphasis added)); see also United States v. Ohle, 678 F.Supp.2d 215, 233 (S.D.N.Y.2010) (same); United States v. Bin Laden, 116 F.Supp.2d 489 (S.D.N.Y.2000) (citing cases). Here, there are no pending charges that have been returned by the grand jury; moreover, there is no trial. In short, no evidence supports the conclusion that the government has issued the Subpoena for the sole or dominant purpose of preparing for a trial, particularly when no charges have yet been brought. For this reason, respondent's argument does not provide a basis to deprive the government, and the grand jury, of these potentially relevant documents.

B. The Fifth Amendment and the Required Records Exception

[4] Respondent next argues that, if this Court were to compel compliance with the Subpoena, respondent's rights under the Fifth Amendment would be violated. Respondent additionally asserts that the required records exception is not applicable. For the following reasons, the Court disagrees with respondent's argument and concludes that the required records exception overrides any Fifth Amendment privilege.

1. Legal Standard

[5] The Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination is well-established. See U.S. Const. amend. V ("No person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."). Its protections are triggered "when the accused is compelled to make a [t]estimonial [c]ommunication that is incriminating." Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 408, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 48 L.Ed.2d 39 (1976); see also United States v. Hubbell, 530 U.S. 27, 34, 120 S.Ct. 2037, 147 L.Ed.2d 24 (2000). Courts have interpreted what constitutes a "testimonial communication" broadly. In Fisher, the Supreme Court stated that "[t]he act of producing evidence in response to a subpoena ... has communicative aspects of its own, wholly aside from the contents of the papers produced." 425 U.S. at 410, 96 S.Ct. 1569; see also United States v. Doe, 465 U.S. 605, 612, 104 S.Ct. 1237, 79 L.Ed.2d 552 (1984) ("A government subpoena compels the holder of the document to perform an act that may have testimonial aspects and an incriminating effect."). For instance, by complying with a subpoena, the subpoena recipient may "tacitly concede[ ] the existence of the papers demanded and their possession or control," as well as his or her "belief that the papers are those described in the subpoena." Fisher, 425 U.S. at 410, 96 S.Ct. 1569. The question thus becomes whether the "tacit averments" made through the production of the requested materials are both " 'testimonial' and 'incriminating' for purposes of applying the Fifth Amendment." Id.; see also In re Three Grand 353 Jury Subpoenas Duces Tecum Dated January 29, 1999, 191 F.3d 173, 178 (2d Cir.1999) ("[I]t is now settled that an individual may claim an act of production privilege to decline to produce documents, the contents of which are not privileged, where the act of production is, itself, (1) compelled, (2) testimonial, and (3) incriminating."). The answer to this question will often turn on the particular facts and circumstances of a given case. See Fisher, 425 U.S. at 410, 96 S.Ct. 1569.

[6] Although the Fifth Amendment guards an individual from self-incrimination by barring the government from "compelling a person to give 'testimony' that incriminates him," id. at 409, 96 S.Ct. 1569, its protective shield is not all-encompassing. The Supreme Court has made clear that the privilege against self-incrimination does not prevent the government from imposing record-keeping and inspection requirements as part of a valid regulatory scheme. See Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 32–33, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787 (1948). Generally referred to as the required records exception, the government may mandate the retention or inspection of records as "to public documents in public offices, [and] also [as] to records required by law to be kept in order that there may be suitable information of transactions which are the appropriate subjects of governmental regulation, and the enforcement of restrictions validly established." Id. at 17, 68 S.Ct. 1375 (quoting Wilson v. United States, 221 U.S.

361, 380, 31 S.Ct. 538, 55 L.Ed. 771 (1911)) (no internal quotation marks).

[7] The rationale underlying the required records exception is "twofold." In re Two Grand Jury Subpoenae Duces Tecum, 793 F.2d 69, 73 (2d Cir.1986). First, participation in an activity that, by law or statute, mandates record-keeping may be deemed a waiver of the act of production privilege, "at least in cases in which there is a nexus between the government's production request and the purpose of the record-keeping requirement." Id. Second, because such record-keeping is done pursuant to legal mandate (as opposed to an individual's voluntary choice), "the recordholder 'admits' little in the way of control or authentication by producing them." Id. (quoting In re Grand Jury Subpoena Served Upon Underhill, 781 F.2d 64, 65 (6th Cir.1986)); cf. In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H., 648 F.3d 1067, 1071–72 (9th Cir.2011) (stating that "where documents are voluntarily created and kept, compelling their disclosure does not implicate the privilege against self-incrimination," but "[w]here documents are required to be kept and then produced, they are arguably compelled," and further noting that "the privilege does not extend to records required to be kept as a result of an individual's voluntary participation in a regulated activity").

[8] In order for documents "[t]o constitute 'required records' [they] must satisfy a three-part test," commonly referred to as the Grosso test, first set forth in the Supreme Court's Grosso v. United States decision: "(1) the requirement that [records] be kept must be essentially regulatory, (2) the records must be of a kind which the regulated party has customarily kept, and (3) the records themselves must have assumed 'public aspects' which render them analogous to public documents." In re Doe, 711 F.2d 1187, 1191 (2d Cir.1983) (citing Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 67–68, 88 S.Ct. 709, 19 L.Ed.2d 906 (1968)); see also Rajah v. Mukasey, 544 F.3d 427, 442 (2d Cir.2008) (stating "the Fifth Amendment's act of production privilege does not cover records that are required to be kept pursuant to a civil regulatory regime").

354 The record-keeping regulation that is at the center of this dispute is the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act of 1970, Pub.L. 91–508, 84 Stat. 1118 (1970), generally referred to as the Bank Secrecy Act ("BSA"). The purpose of this regulation is "to require certain reports or records where they have a high degree of usefulness in criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations or proceedings." 31 U.S.C. § 5311. Section 241(a) of the Act provides that the "Secretary of the Treasury shall require a resident or citizen of the United States or a person in, and doing business in, the United States, to keep records, file reports, or keep records and file reports, when the resident, citizen, or person makes a transaction or maintains a relation for any person with a foreign financial agency." Id. § 5314(a). Pursuant to this instruction, the Secretary of the Treasury has implemented regulations that require U.S. citizens and residents to disclose their foreign bank accounts, see 31 C.F.R. § 1010.350; such regulations also mandate that "each person having a financial interest in or signature or other authority over any such account" retain such records for at least five years, making them "available for inspection as authorized by law," id. § 1010.420.

This Court has previously held that foreign bank records that are required to be maintained under the BSA, pursuant to 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420, 31 U.S.C. § 5311 et seq., fall within the required records exception to the act of production privilege under the Fifth Amendment. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated September 9, 2011, No. 2:11–mc–00747–JFB (E.D.N.Y. Dec. 30, 2011). That analysis, incorporated below, applies with equal force to the Subpoena at issue in this case. At the time of the Court's prior decision, the Second Circuit had not yet decided the issue; other courts, however, including the Ninth Circuit and several district courts, had reached the same conclusion. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H., 648 F.3d 1067 (9th Cir.2011); In re Grand Jury Subpoena No. 10–04–400, No. GJ 10–4 (D.Az. May 18, 2011) (annexed to government's motion papers); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas dated January 3, 2011, No. FGJ 10–403–073 (S.D.Fl. Mar. 4, 2011) (annexed to government's motion papers). Moreover, since this Court's decision in December 2011, both the Fifth and Seventh Circuits have reached the same conclusion. See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d 428 (5th Cir.2012); In re Special February 2011–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated September 12, 2011, 691 F.3d 903 (7th Cir.2012). The Court finds the analysis contained in the above-referenced cases, although not binding, to be persuasive. [1]

For the reasons set forth below, the Court concludes that the government has met its burden of proving that the foreign financial account documents sought from respondent, which the BSA requires respondent to maintain, satisfy the three Grosso requirements.

Accordingly, the required records exception applies, and the documents fall outside the purview of the Fifth Amendment.

a. "Essentially Regulatory"

The first prong of the Grosso test requires that the statutory scheme giving rise to the record-keeping requirement be "essentially regulatory" and not criminal in nature. In United States v. Dichne, the Second Circuit held that a similar record-keeping requirement of the BSA did not violate the Fifth Amendment's privilege 355 against self-incrimination. 612 F.2d 632, 638–41 (2d Cir.1979).

The provision at issue in Dichne required anyone exporting or importing monetary instruments worth more than $5,000 (now $10,000) to file a report with the Secretary of the Treasury. See 31 U.S.C. 1101. The Second Circuit noted that because "the transportation of such amounts of currency is by no means an illegal act, the District Court was correct in its finding that the reporting requirement was not addressed to a highly selective group inherently suspect of criminal activities." Dichne, 612 F.2d at 639 (internal quotation marks omitted). The court therefore held that "[i]n view of the lack of a direct linkage between the required disclosure and the potential criminal activity, and in view of the fact that the statute is not directed at an inherently suspect group, we conclude that the reporting requirement does not present such a substantial risk of incrimination so as to outweigh the governmental interest in requiring such a disclosure." Id. at 641 (internal quotation marks omitted). Consequently, the statute did not violate the Fifth Amendment's privilege against self-incrimination. Id.; see also United States v. Sturman, 951 F.2d 1466, 1487 (6th Cir.1991) ("The Bank Secrecy Act applies to all persons making foreign deposits, most of whom do so with legally obtained funds. The requirement is imposed in the banking regulatory field which is not infused with criminal statutes. In addition, the disclosures do not subject the defendant to a real danger of self-incrimination since the source of the funds is not disclosed.... Thus, the defendant has failed to show that the Bank Secrecy Act violated any individual right [that] ... Grosso seek to protect.").

Likewise, the provision at issue here, 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420, applies to hundreds of thousands of foreign bank accounts.[2] "There is nothing inherently illegal about having or being a beneficiary of an offshore foreign banking account." In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H., 648 F.3d at 1074. Because the record-keeping requirements of 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 do not target inherently illegal activity, the provision is essentially regulatory in nature.[3] See In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 435 (holding that "[b]ecause the BSA's record-keeping requirements serve purposes unrelated to criminal law enforcement and because the provisions do not exclusively target people engaged in criminal activity, we conclude that the requirements are 'essentially regulatory,' satisfying the [required records exception]'s first prong"); In re Special February 2011–1 Grand Jury Subpoena Dated September 12, 2011, 691 F.3d at 909 (finding first prong of Grosso test met); In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H., 648 F.3d at 1075 (holding that records kept under 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 were "essentially regulatory" because the information sought was "not inherently criminal," and therefore, "being required to provide that information would generally not establish a significant link in a chain of evidence tending to prove guilt."); In re Grand Jury Subpoena No. 10–04–400, No. GJ 10–04 (D.Ariz. May 18, 2011) (stating reporting requirements of 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 are "essentially regulatory" 356 because they are "directed to the public at large and are intended to advance the important public purposes inherent in the regulatory tax scheme"); In re Grand Jury Subpoenas dated January 3, 2011, No. FGJ 10–403–073 (S.D.Fla. Mar. 4, 2011) (stating "record-keeping and reporting requirements of the BSA have consistently been determined to be regulatory, and not criminal, in nature").

For these reasons, the Court concludes that the requested foreign financial records satisfy the first prong of the Grosso test and are "essentially regulatory" in nature.

b. "Customarily Kept"

Grosso's second prong asks whether the records are typically kept in connection with the regulated activity. The Ninth Circuit has held that the information required to be kept by 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 is "basic account information that bank customers would customarily keep, in part because they must report it to the IRS every year as part of the IRS's regulation of offshore banking, and in part because they need the information to access their foreign bank accounts." In re Grand Jury Investigation

M.H., 648 F.3d at 1076. The Fifth Circuit has concluded similarly, stating that records are "customarily kept" in satisfaction of the required records exception's second prong where they "are of the same type that the witness must report annually to the IRS pursuant to the IRS's regulation of offshore banking: the name, number, and type of account(s), the name and address of the bank where an account is held, and the maximum value of the account during the reporting period." In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 435; see also In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H., 648 F.3d at 1075 (holding in a nearly identical case that second prong of required records doctrine met). This Court agrees. Accordingly, the records the Subpoena seeks are of a kind "customarily kept" by respondent, thereby satisfying the second prong of the Grosso test.

c. "Public Aspects"

[9] The third Grosso factor requires that the requested records "have assumed 'public aspects' which render them at least analogous to public documents." Grosso, 390 U.S. at 68, 88 S.Ct. 709. Respondent asserts that an individual's personal financial records do not possess sufficient public aspects to satisfy this prong of the test. (Resp't's Mem. of Law in Opp'n at 22.) Generally, the fact "that the information sought is traditionally private and personal as opposed to business-related does not automatically implicate the Fifth Amendment." In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 436; see also In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H., 648 F.3d at 1077. However, the Ninth Circuit accurately noted that "[w]here personal information is compelled in furtherance of a valid regulatory scheme, as is the case here, that information assumes a public aspect." In re Grand Jury Investigation M.H., 648 F.3d at 1077.

Additionally, the fact that 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 requires foreign bank-account holders to simply keep records, but not to file those records with the government, does not extinguish the public aspects of the records. Id. Indeed, the Supreme Court has acknowledged that there is no distinction between those records required to be kept by law and those regularly or "easily accessed" by the government. See Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39, 56 n. 14, 88 S.Ct. 697, 19 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968) ("We perceive no meaningful difference between an obligation to maintain records for inspection, and such an obligation supplemented by a requirement that those records be filed periodically with officers of the United States."). Thus, the Court finds that the record-keeping requirements 357 of 31 C.F.R. § 1010.420 have "public aspects," satisfying the third and final prong of the Grosso test. See In re Special February 2011–1 Grand Jury Subpoena, 691 F.3d at 909 (concluding that respondent could not resist a subpoena on Fifth Amendment grounds because the requested records met the three prongs of the required records exception). [4]

In sum, because all three prongs of the Grosso test are met, the required records exception is applicable, and the Fifth Amendment's safeguards are not available to respondent in this instance.

C. Availability of Records From Foreign Banks

The Court briefly addresses respondent's argument that the government in this case could have sought to obtain the requested documents by means of foreign request, specifically, via such foreign treaties as "the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act, new and/or updated bilateral tax treaties permitting the expanded exchange of tax information, Mutual Legal Assistance Treaties, Tax Information Exchange Agreements, and Simultaneous Criminal Investigation Programs." Resp't's Mem. of Law in Opp'n at 8. At oral argument, the government explained the impracticalities of such a process, emphasizing in particular the length of time generally associated with such requests, as well as the government's lack of information throughout the entire request process to the foreign government. [5] As the government accurately noted, Congress enacted the BSA so as to ameliorate the difficulties and challenges associated with obtaining records by means of a foreign treaty. The Court agrees with the government and finds no reason as to why a significantly longer process, with uncertain results, should have to be used in the instant case. There is no requirement that the government only subpoena foreign bank records from an individual as a last resort when other efforts to obtain such documents from the foreign bank have been exhausted. Such a rule has no basis in the law and could significantly delay criminal investigations. Accordingly, the Court rejects that argument by respondent.

III. CONCLUSION

Having carefully reviewed the respondent's arguments, the Court finds respondent's 358 position unpersuasive. The Court rejects, due to lack of evidentiary support, respondent's contention that the government already possesses all documents sought by the Subpoena. The Court likewise rejects respondent's argument, also on grounds of insufficient evidence and the fact that there are no pending charges, that the government here issued the Subpoena for the sole or dominant purpose of preparing for a trial. The Court continues to hold that the record-keeping provision of the BSA meets the three requirements for the required records exception set forth in Grosso. Thus, the records sought by the Subpoena are "required records" exempt from the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Because the required records exception applies, respondent must comply with the Subpoena.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

908 F.Supp.2d 348

Footnotes

[1] The language of the Subpoena in this case is identical in all material respects to those contained in the above-referenced cases.

[2] See Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration, "New Legislation Could Affect Filers of the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts, but Potential Issues are Being Addressed," Ref. # 2010–30–125 (Sept. 29, 2010) at 7, available at http://www.treasury. gov/tigta/auditreports/2010reports/201030125fr.pdf.

[3] Indeed, the plaintiff's arguments to attempt to show otherwise are similar to those considered and rejected by the Fifth Circuit in In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 434–35.

[4] The Court also rejects respondent's argument that the required records exception is only triggered where there is some level of licensure or heightened government regulation at issue. (See Resp't's Mem. of Law in Opp'n at 8) (stating "the required records exception to the act of production privilege stems from exigent circumstances not present in the regulatory scheme issued under the [BSA]"). The Court agrees with the government's position, stated at oral argument, that it is up to Congress to determinate the appropriate level of regulation that should accompany a required records mandate. The Court likewise notes that the Fifth Circuit held similarly in its most recent decision, stating "adopting a rule that the legitimacy of a record-keeping requirement depends on Congress first enacting substantive restrictions would lead to absurd results." In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d at 436.

[5] The government offered several examples at oral argument of factors that would hinder the government's ability to obtain records through foreign request. These examples include, but are not limited to, the transmission and translation of the government's request to the appropriate foreign entity; that entity's seeking of the records from the appropriate bank; a foreign court's consideration of whether such records may in fact be produced; the corresponding appeal period applicable to any such determination; and the government's lack of any notification as to the status of its request following its initial transmittal, including lack of notification as to any judicial decisions issued or ongoing appeals concerning production of the documents. Each and all of these factors might significantly lengthen the record request process that the BSA sought to improve.

End of Document

2017 WL 4174931
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court,
S.D. New York.

UNITED STATES of America,
v.
Stefan BUCK, Defendant.

13 Cr. 0282 (VM)
|
Signed 08/28/2017

Attorneys and Law Firms

Daniel Walter Levy, David Benton Massey, Jason Harris Cowley, U.S. Attorney's Office, New York, NY, for United States of America.

Marc Antony Agnifilo, Brafman & Associates, P.C., New York, NY, for Defendant.

DECISION AND ORDER

Victor Marrero, U.S.D.J.

1 Defendant Stefan Buck ("Buck") moves to dismiss the one-count indictment filed by the Government on April 16, 2013 (the "Indictment") charging him with conspiracy to defraud the United States in violation of 18 U.S.C. Section 371 ("Section 371"). ("Motion," Dkt. No. 59.) Having reviewed the parties' submissions and for the reasons set forth below, the Motion is DENIED.

I. BACKGROUND [1]

A. ALLEGATIONS

Buck is a citizen and resident of Switzerland. On or about June 2007, Buck began working as a client-facing relationship manager at Swiss Bank No. 1, also known as Bank Frey. Soon thereafter, in around December 2007, Buck became the head of Bank Frey's private banking and, in or about December 2012, was named to the institution's three-person executive board.

On April 16, 2013, the Government filed the Indictment charging Buck and one co-defendant, Edgar Paltzer ("Paltzer," together with Buck, "Defendants"), with defrauding the United States in connection with actions taken during the course of their employment at Swiss Bank No. 1. The Government alleges that, from about 2007 to 2012, [2] Buck participated in a scheme with Paltzer and United States taxpayers to evade tax obligations by creating, maintaining and/or managing undeclared bank accounts held at Swiss Bank No. 1—accounts not disclosed to the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS")—and enabling United States taxpayers to submit false and fraudulent income tax returns.

The Indictment outlines numerous allegations against Paltzer and Buck regarding six clients ("Client 1" through "Client 6"), all of whom were holders of undeclared accounts. The Government alleges that Buck committed at least two overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy: (1) sending checks to Arizona for Client 4 drawn on a corresponding bank account located at another Swiss bank, Wegelin, in the United States, and (2) opening a new undeclared account at Swiss Bank No. 1 for Client 5.

2 In addition, the Indictment alleges that, during the relevant period, Buck: (1) met and emailed with Client 3 prior to Paltzer opening several undeclared accounts; (2) advised Client 4 and his wife regarding steps to take "in order to avoid the IRS discovering the account" including, among other things, that "Client 4 and his wife should not conduct any transfers in or out of the account in U.S. dollars, because such transfers would 'clear' in the United States and were therefore detectable" (Indictment ¶ 65.b); (3) advised Client 4 and his wife, with respect to the account-opening documents, "to mark 'no' as to whether they required a tax statement" and "leave the section of the account-opening documents dealing with 'tax status' blank" (id. ¶ 65.c); (4) created and used the code word "PV" with Client 4 to refer to account statements, in case Client 4 wanted Buck to send account statements to the United States (id. ¶ 66); (5) told Client 4's wife, after learning Client 4 and his wife received a subpoena for documents and testimony in relation to an investigation of Wegelin, that if he had "sent wire transfers, rather than checks[,] Client 4's undeclared account would not have been detected" (id. ¶¶ 72-73); (6) advised Clients 5 and 6 that Swiss Bank No. 1 "was a private Swiss Bank with no connection to the United States and that Swiss Bank No. 1 was not bound to make any sort of disclosure to U.S. authorities[,]" after Clients 5 and 6 were referred to Buck when Swiss Bank No. 7 decided to close all accounts held by United States taxpayers (id. ¶ 77; see also id. at ¶ 82-83); and (7) told Client 6 that he did not have to enter a voluntary disclosure program with the IRS regarding his undisclosed accounts, because the Bank's president was a lawyer who knew the rules and "the rules did not apply to Client 6's account" (id. ¶ 85).

Moreover, the Government alleges that, for all or part of the relevant period, Clients 3, 4, 5, and 6 did not disclose their Swiss Bank No. 1 accounts to the IRS in their income tax returns Forms 1040 or file the required Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts ("FBAR").

The Government contends that Buck committed these acts in furtherance of a conspiracy to defraud the United States, namely the IRS. Specifically, the Government contends that it was a part and an object of the conspiracy, of which the Government alleges Buck was a part, to (1) willfully and knowingly attempt to evade or defeat United States income tax obligations, in violation of 27 U.S.C. Section 7201 (see Indictment ¶ 89), and (2) willfully and knowingly prepare tax returns, statements, and other documents made under penalties of perjury that Buck and his co-conspirators "did not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter," in violation of 26 U.S.C. Section 7206(1) (Indictment ¶ 90).

B. MOTION TO DISMISS THE INDICTMENT

Buck argues that the Indictment should be dismissed for the following reasons: (1) the "defraud the United States" object of the conspiracy offense is unconstitutionally vague; (2) the charged conspiracy does not apply extraterritorially; (3) application of the conspiracy offense would conflict with Swiss Bank-Client confidentiality laws; (4) Fifth Amendment Due Process principles preclude the prosecution of Buck; and (5) fundamental fairness requires that this matter be dismissed, because numerous non-prosecution agreements were reached with Swiss bankers involved in conduct equal to or worse than Buck's.

In particular, Buck argues that the "defraud the United States" object of the conspiracy is overly broad; that "such broad language must be limited to 'plainly and unmistakably' criminal conduct"; and that Buck's "conduct was not 'plainly and unmistakably' within the purview of the defraud provision." (Memorandum at 23 (citing Skilling v. United States, 561 U.S. 358, 364, 130 S.Ct. 2896, 177 L.Ed.2d 619 (2010) and United States v. Gradwell, 243 U.S. 476, 485, 37 S.Ct. 407, 61 L.Ed. 857 (1917).) In support, Buck cites several Supreme Court cases involving Section 371 and argues that "[t]he crux of these decisions is that ... conspiratorial liability is limited to those conspirators who themselves lie to, or engage in purposely deceptive conduct toward, the U.S. or an agency such as the IRS[,]" and that the Indictment does not allege that Buck engaged in the requisite conduct. (Id.)

Buck further argues that, because his conduct took place entirely in Switzerland, in order for the charged conspiracy offense to apply to his conduct, "this Court would have to find that Congress specifically intended it to apply to extraterritorial conduct." (Id. at 26 (citing Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., 569 U.S. 108, 133 S.Ct. 1659, 185 L.Ed.2d 671 (2013) and Morrison v. National Australia Bank Ltd., 561 U.S. 247, 130 S.Ct. 2869, 177 L.Ed.2d 535 (2010)).) Buck maintains that Congress did not so intend with respect to the tax evasion provision (26 U.S.C. Section 7201), the false declaration provision (26 U.S.C. Section 7206), or Section 371. Moreover, with respect to Section 371, Buck further argues that conspiracy to defraud the United States "is a common law crime, created by the courts rather than by Congress[,]" in which case Congress could not confer such extraterritorial reach on a statute it did not create. (Memorandum at 29 (quoting United States v. Coplan, 703 F.3d 46, 61 (2d Cir. 2012)).)

3 Buck also asserts that any extraterritorial application of Section 371 would conflict with Swiss bank secrecy law. Buck contends that the Government's allegations show that "Buck did nothing more than what every Swiss banker did under the law of bank secrecy" by "inform[ing his] U.S. customers that he was not legally permitted to disclose their account at the bank." (Memorandum at 31.) Buck argues that, if he had disclosed the name of any account holder, such disclosure would have constituted a crime in Switzerland. (See id.) Buck contends that the application of Section 371 to his conduct would, therefore, create a conflict between Swiss and United States law, and that longstanding canons of statutory interpretation require that the statute be interpreted to avoid such a conflict. (See id. (citing Murray v. Schooner Charming Betsy, 6 U.S. 64, 2 Cranch 64, 2 L.Ed. 208 (1804) (Marshall, C.J.)).) Accordingly, Buck concludes, this Court should "narrowly interpret the scope of the charged conspiracy to preclude application to Swiss bankers such as Buck." (Memorandum at 31.)

Buck argues that, even if this Court finds that Section 371 applies extraterritorially, his prosecution should nonetheless be precluded on Fifth Amendment Due Process grounds, namely, that "Buck lacked fair notice that his particular conduct was unlawful in the United States ... [and] that there is an insufficient constitutional nexus between Buck's conduct and the [United States] given the facts alleged in the Indictment." (Id. at 32.) Buck maintains that he had no notice because his conduct was legal in Switzerland and because there is "no decision upholding the Government's theory of conspiracy." (Id.) Moreover, Buck claims that there is an insufficient constitutional nexus because (1) he provided "banking services from an office in Zurich, Switzerland"; (2) "he had no presence in the U.S.... [and] did not market his services to U.S. customers"; (3) "he did not provide affirmative tax advice to U.S. persons"; and (4) "he did not lie to or deceive the IRS [.]" (Id. at 33.)

Finally, Buck contends that fundamental fairness requires dismissal of this case. Because non-prosecution agreements were reached with over eighty Swiss banks that admitted they knowingly provided services to United States customers seeking to evade United States tax authorities and Buck's alleged conduct was less willful or directed than that of persons who were given the benefit of non-prosecution agreements, Buck argues that this case must be dismissed. (Id. at 33-37.)

In opposition, the Government asserts that (1) Buck's vagueness challenge is premature and unsupported by the factual allegations contained in the Indictment; (2) the charged conspiracy is not extraterritorial, though all of the objects charged would have extraterritorial application; (3) application of the charged conspiracy does not conflict with Swiss law; (4) application of the charged conspiracy does not violate Due Process; and (5) fundamental fairness does not require dismissal of this case.

The Government contends that the vagueness challenge is premature, because in challenges not implicating First Amendment rights, a statute "is assessed for vagueness only 'as applied,' i.e.[,] in light of the specific facts of the case at hand and not with regard to the statute's facial validity." (Opposition at 7 (quoting United States v. Rybicki, 354 F.3d 124, 129 (2d Cir. 2003)).) Accordingly, the Government argues that the merits of such a challenge cannot be assessed without evaluating the facts of the case, which cannot be done at this stage in a criminal proceeding. (See Opposition at 8.)

Nonetheless, the Government notes that the Second Circuit has held that "the conspiracy to defraud prong of [Section 371] 'not only includes the cheating of the Government out of property or money, but also the means to interfere with or obstruct one of its lawful governmental functions by deceit, craft or trickery, or at least by means that are dishonest.' " (Id. (quoting United States v. Klein, 247 F.2d 908, 916 (2d Cir. 1957)).) The government maintains that it has met this requirement by alleging that Buck "caus[ed] others to make 'false statement[s]' on their tax returns"; " 'provid[ed] ideas or means by which a U.S. taxpayer could evade the IRS' "; and "engaged in 'affirmative [acts] to actively aid, or conspire with, U.S. taxpayers [.]' " (Opposition at 9 (quoting and citing Indictment ¶¶ 14(f)-(g), 62, 65(b), 66, 70, 74, 79, 82, 85, 86).)

4 The Government further argues that Buck and his co-conspirators committed several overt acts on United States soil that provide a sufficient domestic nexus to avoid the question of extraterritoriality. (See Opposition at 9-11.) Nonetheless, the Government contends that Section 371 would be applied extraterritorially here because the "presumption against extraterritoriality does not apply to a certain class of criminal statutes—ones that are 'not logically dependent on their locality,' but 'are enacted because of the right of the government to defend itself against obstruction, or fraud wherever perpetrated[.]' " (Id. at 11 (quoting United States v. Bowman, 260 U.S. 94, 98, 43 S.Ct. 39, 67 L.Ed. 149 (1922)).) Thus, because "[s]tatutes prohibiting crimes against the United States government may be applied extraterritorially even in the absence of 'clear evidence' that Congress so intended[,]" and the objects of the conspiracy alleged here were directed at the United States Government, specifically the IRS, the Government maintains that Section 371 applies extraterritorially here. (Opposition at 12 (emphasis in original)(quoting United States v. Vilar, 729 F.3d 62, 73 (2d Cir. 2013)).)

The Government also argues that Buck has constructed a false conflict of laws. The Government notes that "Swiss laws that require Buck to maintain the confidentiality of clients' information did not require him to support tax evasion in his role as a banker." (Opposition at 15.) The Government argues that "[t]here would only be a tension between Swiss and U.S. law if it were the case that Swiss law required its bankers to aid U.S. clients in avoiding their tax obligations," but Swiss law does not so require. (Id. (emphasis in original).) However, the Government contends that, even if such a conflict existed, international law would permit the prosecution in accordance with (1) the objective territorial principle, which permits "jurisdiction over conduct committed outside the state that has, or is intended to have, a substantial effect within its borders" and (2) the protective principle, which permits "criminal jurisdiction ... over acts committed outside the state that harm the state's interest." (Opposition at 15-16 (citing United States v. Yousef, 327 F.3d 56 (2d Cir. 2003)).)

The Government further argues that Buck's Fifth Amendment Due Process challenges are without merit. Regarding notice, the Government asserts that, "[g]iven his frequent contact with American clients, it is difficult to imagine that Buck was ignorant of basic U.S. tax laws or was unaware that other banks engaging in similar criminal conduct were being investigated by U.S. authorities." (Opposition at 17.) In addition, the Government notes that Buck "served as the head of private banking at [Swiss Bank No. 1 and] is alleged ... to have routinely opened accounts at Bank Frey for U.S. clients fleeing other Swiss banks" at around the same time that several well-known Swiss banks were being openly investigated by United States authorities. (Id. at 18.) The Government argues these circumstances are sufficient for Buck to have been given fair warning of the scope of the United States tax laws. (Id. at 17 (citing United States v. Al Kassar, 660 F.3d 108 (2d Cir. 2011)).)

Moreover, regarding constitutional nexus, the Government contends that "[g]iven the government's strong incentive to enforce its tax laws all around the globe, 'it cannot be argued seriously that the defendant['s] conduct was so unrelated to American interests as to render [his] prosecution in the United States arbitrary or fundamentally unfair.' " (Opposition at 19-20 (quoting United States v. Yousef, 327 F.3d 56, 111 (2d Cir. 2003)).)

Finally, in response to Buck's claim that the Indictment must be dismissed because other Swiss bankers have entered into non-prosecution agreements, the Government argues that this argument lacks legal basis. (See Opposition at 21.) Moreover, the Government notes that Buck is "far from the only Swiss person to be charged with conspiring with others to hide money from the IRS. Numerous Swiss bankers and asset managers have been indicted for this conduct[,]" and, accordingly, it is not fundamentally unfair to proceed with Buck's prosecution. (Id.)

5 Buck argues in his reply that because the Indictment does not allege "that Buck lied, counseled another to lie, or provided false and misleading information to a U.S. taxing authority, this Indictment is unconstitutionally vague." ("Reply," Dkt. No. 64, at 7 (citing United States v. Coplan, 703 F.3d 46 (2d Cir. 2012)).)

The Reply also disputes the Government's contention that certain statements by Buck alleged in the Indictment were intended for the purposes of tax-avoidance, and argues that those statements are too ambiguous to support such inference. (See id. at 3-5.) Buck notes that several of the statements mentioned in the Indictment were "truthful statement[s] ... not indicative of criminal conduct." (Id. at 6.) Buck states that these factual concerns highlight that the Indictment fails to show willfulness, which "under the tax laws requires a voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty." (Id. at 5 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted).) Buck argues that these principles "apply to a court's review of the sufficiency of an indictment." (Reply at 6 (citing United States v. Pirro, 212 F.3d 86 (2d Cir. 2000)).)

Buck further argues that the viability of case law cited by the Government in support of extraterritoriality is doubtful. Namely, Buck contends that Morrison, 561 U.S. 247, 130 S.Ct. 2869, 177 L.Ed.2d 535 (2010), and RJR Nabisco, Inc. v. European Cmty., ––– U.S. ––––, 136 S.Ct. 2090, 195 L.Ed.2d 476 (2016), cast a shadow of doubt over Bowman, 260 U.S. 94, 43 S.Ct. 39, 67 L.Ed. 149 (1922), and stand for the proposition that " '[a]bsent clearly expressed congressional intent to the contrary, federal laws will be construed to have only domestic application[.]' " (Id. at 8 (quoting RJR Nabisco, 136 S.Ct. at 2100).)

Finally, Buck disputes the Government's contentions and reiterates his positions regarding conflict of laws, due process, and fundamental fairness. Buck notes in particular that the Government's reliance on United States v. Al Kassar, 660 F.3d 108 (2d Cir. 2011), and United States v. Bin Laden, 92 F.Supp.2d 189 (S.D.N.Y. 2000), is misguided and does not support the proposition that

Buck was on notice of potential prosecution. (See id. at 9.) Lastly, Buck closes with a new argument, namely that, to the extent the Court may find any ambiguity in the applicable criminal statutes as applied here, the Court should interpret that ambiguity in favor of Buck, as permitted by the rule of lenity. (See id. at 10.)

II. LEGAL STANDARD

On a pretrial motion to dismiss an indictment pursuant to Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the Court takes the allegations in the indictment as true. See United States v. Goldberg, 756 F.2d 949, 950 (2d Cir. 1985). In addition, "[a]n indictment must be read to include facts which are necessarily implied by the specific allegations made." United States v. Stavroulakis, 952 F.2d 686, 693 (2d Cir. 1992).

Under the applicable standard, the Court does not consider the sufficiency of the evidence at this early stage in the proceedings, but rather focuses on the legal sufficiency of the indictment itself without looking any further. See United States v. Alfonso, 143 F.3d 772, 776-77 (2d Cir. 1998). Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides that the indictment "must be a plain, concise, and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged." Fed. R. Crim. P. 7(c).

6 "[A]n indictment is sufficient if it, first, contains the elements of the offense charged and fairly informs a defendant of the charge against which he must defend, and, second, enables him to plead an acquittal or conviction in bar of future prosecutions for the same offense." Hamling v. United States, 418 U.S. 87, 117, 94 S.Ct. 2887, 41 L.Ed.2d 590 (1974); see also United States v. D'Amelio, 683 F.3d 412, 418 (2d Cir. 2012) (holding that the "core of criminality" of an offense about which a defendant must be on notice "involves the essence of a crime, in general terms ... [and] the particulars of how a defendant effected the crime falls [sic] outside that purview.") Thus, "an indictment need do little more than to track the language of the statute charged and state the time and place (in approximate terms) of the alleged crime." Alfonso, 143 F.3d at 776 (quoting Stavroulakis, 952 F.2d at 693).

III. DISCUSSION

Upon review of the parties' respective submissions on Buck's Motion and relevant law, the Court is not persuaded that the Indictment should be dismissed.

Buck argues that the "defraud the United States" object of the conspiracy is unconstitutionally vague and "must be limited to 'plainly and unmistakably' criminal conduct[,]" and, moreover, that Buck's "conduct was not 'plainly and unmistakably' within the purview of the defraud provision." (Memorandum at 23.) However, evaluating Section 371 as applied and taking the allegations in the Indictment as true, as the Court must at this stage, a conspiracy with United States taxpayers to avoid reporting overseas bank accounts and evade income tax obligations would plainly and unmistakably defraud the IRS, and thus the United States, of money to which the Government is entitled. See United States v. Rosengarten, 857 F.2d 76, 79 (2d Cir. 1988) ("A conspiracy to frustrate or obstruct the IRS's function of ascertaining and collecting income taxes falls clearly within the ban of section 371."); Klein, 247 F.2d at 916 (finding that Section 371 "not only includes the cheating of the Government out of property or money, but also means to interfere with or obstruct one of its lawful governmental functions by deceit, craft or trickery, or at least by means that are dishonest") (internal quotation marks omitted). Buck's arguments on this point ultimately amount to challenging the truth of the allegations or his lack of intent to defraud. Such contentions raise questions of fact that are more appropriately addressed at trial and constitute insufficient bases to dismiss the Indictment.

Moreover, the cases on which Buck relies on this point do not support his argument. First, Hammerschmidt and Gradwell are inapposite. See Hammerschmidt v. United States, 265 U.S. 182, 44 S.Ct. 511, 68 L.Ed. 968 (1924) (holding that advocating for disobeying the Selective Service Act was insufficient to support a conviction for conspiracy to defraud the United States); United States v. Gradwell, 243 U.S. 476, 478, 37 S.Ct. 407, 61 L.Ed. 857 (1917) (holding that engaging in a scheme arranging for unqualified voters to vote at all or more than once was not "plainly and unmistakably" prohibited by the statute). Next, in the tax fraud context, Buck argues that United States v. Klein, 247 F.2d 908 (2d Cir. 1957), is distinguishable from the instant case because the attorneys in that case lied "directly to Treasury officials in order to falsely minimize a client's tax obligation" and, accordingly, does not support the broad applicability of the defraud provision in this case. In a similar vein, Buck relies on United States v. Coplan, 703 F.3d 46 (2d Cir. 2012), in which the Second Circuit reversed the conspiracy convictions of two defendants due to "insufficient evidence that they had lied, coached another to lie, or otherwise provided misleading information about a tax shelter at issue." (Memorandum at 25.) But these cases are unavailing under the circumstances presented here. The Indictment need not allege that Buck lied directly to a United States Treasury official or IRS agent in order to sufficiently allege a violation of Section 371. See, e.g., Rosengarten, 857 F.2d at 79. Moreover, Coplan invalidated the defendants' convictions, not the sufficiency of the indictment.

7 Regarding extraterritoriality, it is possible that the alleged transactions involving checks Buck or co-conspirators sent to Arizona are sufficient to show a domestic connection, in which case Section 371 need not be applied extraterritorially to reach Buck's conduct in this case. See United States v. Zarrab, No. 15 Cr. 867, 2016 WL 6820737 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 17, 2016) (finding sufficient domestic connection where a defendant "caused an international wire transfer from the U.A.E. to [a] Canadian company in the amount of approximately $953,289, which was processed by a United States bank").

Regardless of whether there is a domestic connection, however, the Court finds that Section 371 has extraterritorial application in this case insofar as "[s]tatutes prohibiting crimes against the United States government may be applied extraterritorially even in the absence of 'clear evidence' that Congress so intended[.]" Vilar, 729 F.3d at 73. Here, the alleged conspiracy is directed at an agency of the United States, namely the IRS, and thus as warranted by Vilar, Section 371 may be applied extraterritorially.

The Court is not convinced that Kiobel, Morrison, or RJR Nabisco compel a different result. All three of those cases involved civil suits brought by private parties, and thus did not encompass fraud against the United States government. Kiobel concerned a lawsuit brought by Nigerian nationals residing in the United States against Dutch, British, and Nigerian corporations, pursuant to the Alien Tort Statute ("ATS"), alleging unlawful conduct that occurred in Nigeria. There, the Supreme Court held that Congress had not expressly provided for the ATS to apply extraterritorially and, therefore, Plaintiffs did not overcome the presumption against extraterritoriality. 569 U.S. 108, 133 S.Ct. 1659, 185 L.Ed.2d 671. Morrison was a putative class action brought by foreign investors against an Australian bank, claiming violations of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934. 561 U.S. at 251-53, 130 S.Ct. 2869. While the Supreme Court held in Morrison that "[w]hen a statute gives no clear indication of an extraterritorial application, it has none[,]" that proposition was stated in the context of a private civil action. Id. at 255, 130 S.Ct. 2869. Likewise, RJR Nabisco involved a civil action under the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") brought by the European Community, acting on behalf of its member states, against RJR Nabisco, a cigarette manufacturer. 136 S.Ct. at 2098. In that case, the Supreme Court held that RICO does apply extraterritorially, but that the statute's private right of action "does not overcome the presumption against extraterritorially" and thus "[a] private RICO plaintiff ... must allege and prove a domestic injury to its business or property." Id. at 2095 (emphasis in original omitted).

Relevant here, all three of these cases are silent with respect to the application of extraterritoriality in the context of criminal prosecution. Indeed, none of the decisions refers to Bowman or calls the holding of that case into question, as Buck contends. Thus, the Court finds that Kiobel, Morrison, and RJR Nabisco have no bearing on criminal actions brought by the United States Government to prosecute criminal offenses committed abroad that defraud the United States.

The Court is also not convinced that this case, as Buck contends, presents a conflict between Swiss and United States laws. While Buck states that the conflict exists because the Swiss law of bank secrecy requires that he not disclose the name of any account holder, even in the context of a criminal prosecution, the Indictment does not allege that Buck violated Section 371 because he failed to disclose the names of his clients to the IRS. Rather, the Indictment charges that Buck made many statements and took several actions in furtherance of a conspiracy to evade the obligations of United States taxpayers, including by, assisting United States taxpayers in the nondisclosure of their own accounts, in filing untruthful tax documents, or in failing to file required tax documents altogether.

8 Buck argues that any "[c]riminal liability for Swiss bankers must be fact-intensive and based on the particular actions committed by the particular person. It cannot be the case that all Swiss bankers are guilty of conspiring to commit U.S. tax evasion merely because they opened and managed accounts for U.S. beneficial owners[.]" (Memorandum at 35.) Buck may be right on this score, but his argument misses the point. The Indictment does not charge all Swiss bankers and it does not allege that Buck merely opened and managed traditional Swiss bank accounts for United States taxpayers. As the Government notes, it "has not sought to 'criminalize a broad array of conduct encompassing all activities engaged in by Swiss bankers[,]' but rather has brought a case against a specific Swiss banker—Buck—based on his [alleged] conduct [.]" (Opposition at 3.)

Specifically relating to Buck, the Indictment charges he made numerous statements to clients regarding whether they should or should not report their accounts; sent checks to the United States; and allegedly told clients facing subpoenas that wire-transfers would have prevented accounts from being detected, among other things. The Indictment further alleges that Buck's statements and actions in this regard were willful or knowing. (See Indictment ¶¶ 89-90.) Whether these accusations are true or what intent underlay Buck's statements and actions are precisely the kinds of evidentiary questions that should be evaluated by a jury, and not by this Court as a pre-trial matter.

Regarding Buck's Fifth Amendment Due Process claims, the Court finds that Buck received adequate notice of the possibility of prosecution and that there is a sufficient constitutional link to the United States and United States interests involving Buck and the criminal conduct he is charged with having engaged in outside of this country. Buck argues that he did not receive notice because he "did not market his services to U.S. customers"; "provide affirmative tax advice to U.S. persons"; or "lie to or deceive the IRS[.]" (Memorandum at 33.) But, the Indictment alleges that several Swiss Bank No. 1 clients were referred to Buck by other Swiss banks that were closing all accounts of United States taxpayers, and that Buck and Swiss Bank No. 1 readily accepted their business. Moreover, while Buck disputes the intent behind his statements informing clients regarding whether or not they must disclose the accounts to United States authorities or file appropriate tax forms, the Indictment's allegations, taken as true, are sufficient to give Buck notice of charges of unlawful conduct. Any factual disputes Buck may have in this connection are better addressed to a jury.

Furthermore, while the Indictment does not allege that Buck personally lied to or directly deceived the IRS, it does allege that Buck made statements to co-conspirator clients as to how detection of accounts could have been avoided, and discouraged them from voluntarily disclosing their accounts. Again, while these accusations have not been proven at this stage, the allegations are sufficient, and, if true, would have provided Buck appropriate notice in general terms about the essence of the crime of which he is accused. See D'Amelio, 683 F.3d at 418 (2d Cir. 2012) (finding a defendant must be on notice of "the essence of a crime, in general terms" but that "the particulars of how a defendant effected the crime falls [sic] outside that purview").

Regarding the constitutional connection to the United States in this case, the Second Circuit has adopted the standard used by the Ninth Circuit for determining "the extent to which the Due Process Clause limits the United States' assertion of jurisdiction over criminal conduct committed outside our borders." Yousef, 327 F.3d at 111. That standard requires "that '[i]n order to apply extraterritorially a federal criminal statute to a defendant consistently with due process, there must be a sufficient nexus between the defendant and the United States, so that such application would not be arbitrary or fundamentally unfair.' " Id. (quoting United States v. Davis, 905 F.2d 245, 248-49 (9th Cir. 1990)). The Court agrees with the Government that, given the United States' significant interest in enforcing its tax laws against taxpayers not only in the United States but also abroad, Buck's alleged conduct is not "so unrelated to American interests as to render [his] prosecution in the United States arbitrary or fundamentally unfair." Yousef, 327 F.3d at 111.

9 Finally, the Court finds Buck's arguments that fundamental fairness and the rule of lenity require dismissal of the Indictment unavailing.

Accordingly, the Court holds that the Indictment is legally sufficient and declines to dismiss it at this stage.

IV. ORDER

For the reasons set forth above, it is hereby ORDERED that the motion (Docket No. 59) of defendant Stefan Buck to dismiss the underlying indictment is DENIED.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2017 WL 4174931

Footnotes

[1] The factual summary that follows derives from the Indictment, and the following documents, including any documents or exhibits attached thereto or referenced therein: the Memorandum of Law in Support of the Motion to Dismiss the Indictment ("Memorandum in Support," Dkt. No. 60); the Government's Memorandum of Law in Opposition ("Opposition," Dkt. No. 62); and the Reply in Support of the Motion for Dismissal ("Reply," Dkt. No. 64). Except where specifically referenced, no further citation to these sources will be made.

[2] The Indictment states that the Defendants participated in the conspiracy "[f]rom at least in or about 2000 through in or about at least 2012[.]" (Indictment ¶ 13.) However, the Indictment also states Buck began working at Swiss Bank No. 1 "[s]tarting in or about June 2007[.]" (Id. ¶ 6.) To the extent the former statement is intended to encompass the entire extent of the conspiracy involving either Paltzer or Buck or both, the Court considers only 2007 to 2012 as the relevant period regarding Buck's alleged role in the conspiracy.

End of Document

498 Fed.Appx. 284
This case was not selected for publication in the Federal Reporter.
Not for Publication in West's Federal Reporter.
See Fed. Rule of Appellate Procedure 32.1
generally governing citation of judicial decisions issued on or after Jan. 1, 2007. See also Fourth Circuit Rule 32.1 (Find CTA4 Rule 32.1)
United States Court of Appeals,
Fourth Circuit.

Joseph B. WILLIAMS, III, Petitioner–Appellant,
v.
COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Respondent–Appellee.

No. 11–1804.
|
Argued: Sept. 19, 2012.
|
Decided: Dec. 4, 2012.

Synopsis
Background: Taxpayer petitioned for a redetermination of income tax deficiencies and fraud and accuracy-related penalties arising from his failure to report investment income and consulting fees and his disallowed charitable deductions for gifts of art. The Tax Court, David D. Gustafson, J., 2011 WL 1518581, entered an order upholding notice of deficiency, and taxpayer appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Urbanski, District Judge, held that:

[1] taxpayer's guilty plea to criminal tax evasion collaterally estopped him from denying his liability for civil tax fraud penalties;

[2] income generated by taxpayer's consulting services was attributable to taxpayer individually; and

[3] taxpayer's charitable deduction was limited to his basis in art he donated.

Affirmed.

285 Appeal from the United States Tax Court. (Tax Ct. No. 2202–08).

Attorneys and Law Firms

ARGUED: David Harold Dickieson, Schertler & Onorato, LLP, Washington, D.C., for Appellant. Damon William Taaffe, United States Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., for Appellee. ON BRIEF: Pamela Satterfield, Schertler & Onorato, LLP, Washington, D.C., for Appellant. ON BRIEF: Tamara W. Ashford, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, Robert W. Metzler, United States Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., for Appellee.

Before WILKINSON and THACKER, Circuit Judges, and MICHAEL F. URBANSKI, United States District Judge for the Western District of Virginia, sitting by designation.

Opinion

Affirmed by unpublished opinion. Judge URBANSKI wrote the opinion, in which Judge WILKINSON and Judge THACKER joined.

Unpublished opinions are not binding precedent in this circuit.

URBANSKI, District Judge:

*1 Joseph B. Williams, III, challenges the notice of tax deficiency issued to him by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for tax years 1993 through 2000. The Tax Court upheld the Commissioner's notice of deficiency. Williams now appeals.

Williams argues that the Tax Court erred in three ways: (1) by holding Williams' guilty plea to criminal tax evasion collaterally estops him from denying liability for civil fraud penalties for tax years 1993 through 2000; (2) by attributing income generated by Williams' consulting services to Williams individually instead of to the foreign corporation he formed; and (3) by disallowing certain charitable deductions taken by Williams for art donations made to two universities over the course of three years. Finding each of Williams' arguments to be without merit, we affirm.

I.

A.

Williams worked for Mobil Oil Corporation from 1973 until his retirement in 1998. In the 1990s, he was tasked with developing strategic business relationships in Russia and former Soviet republics. In 1993, separate and apart from his work with Mobil, Williams began providing consulting and other services concerning pipeline-related contracts to foreign governments. Alika Smekhova, a Russian actress and celebrity, arranged introductions and provided interpretation services for Williams in connection with his consulting work. That same year, Williams formed ALQI Holdings, Inc. ("ALQI"), a British Virgin Islands corporation. Williams was the sole owner, operational director, and officer of ALQI. Neither Williams nor Smekhova had a written employment contract with ALQI.

Two accounts were opened in ALQI's name at a Swiss bank, Banque Indosuez ("the ALQI accounts"). Williams had 286 complete authority over the ALQI accounts. The bank provided Williams with use of its office space, as well as a Swiss mobile telephone and credit card that were issued and billed in Williams' name. All monies deposited into the ALQI accounts between 1993 and 2000 were received for Williams' oil and pipeline-related consulting services. There are no consulting agreements documenting the services rendered. Williams did not use the ALQI name in his dealings with third parties and did not maintain corporate accounting records.

Smekhova was paid a stipend of $5,000 to $10,000 per month from the ALQI accounts, but Williams did not pay himself a salary or commission. Funds were transferred from the ALQI accounts at Williams' direction, however, and were used to pay credit cards and other bills reflecting Williams' personal expenses, such as a $30,000 shopping spree in Paris and a family ski vacation. Williams also made gifts to family and friends from these accounts, including over $41,000 in payments to his former secretary and a $15,000 gift to the wife of Williams' deceased father.

More than $7 million in consulting fees were deposited into the Swiss accounts during the relevant period and over $1.1 million in interest, dividends and capital gains was earned on these deposits. Williams did not report any of the consulting fee or investment income on his individual tax returns for tax years 1993 through 2000, nor did he disclose the existence of ALQI or its Swiss accounts.

*2 In 2000, at the request of the United States government, the Swiss government froze the ALQI accounts. Subsequently, Williams disclosed his ownership interest in ALQI and the existence of the ALQI accounts on his 2001 tax return.[1] In 2003, Williams amended his 1999 and 2000 tax returns[2] to report the investment income earned on the funds in the ALQI accounts, and he paid the additional tax due. Williams did not include as income on either his original or amended returns the corpus of the accounts.

In 2003, Williams was charged in a two-count superseding criminal information with conspiracy to defraud the government, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371, and tax evasion, in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7201. On June 12, 2003, Williams entered a guilty plea to both counts. The court accepted the guilty plea, sentenced Williams to 46 months' incarceration, and ordered him to pay $3,512,000 in restitution. Williams was released from federal custody on May 21, 2006.

B.

In 1996, Williams signed an Art Purchase Agreement in which he purportedly committed to purchasing at a discount from Abbey Art Consultants, Inc. ("Abbey Art") certain works of art that, at Williams' direction, were to be donated at fair market value to charitable institutions. The Agreement recited that Williams "desire[d] to purchase" $72,000 worth of art, but did not identify specific pieces of art, and provided that the purchase price would not exceed 24% of the appraised fair market value of the art. The Agreement 287 required Williams to pay only $3,600 upon signing; the balance of the purchase price was to be paid on or before such time as the art was donated to charity.

Abbey Art was to facilitate all aspects of the art donation and incur all expense, including paperwork, appraisal, packaging, shipping, and storage costs. The Agreement provided that Abbey Art would arrange for the donation "after the required holding period of one (1) year." While Williams could request a donation be made to a certain charitable institution, Abbey Art ultimately had the discretion to choose the donee. If Abbey Art was unable to facilitate the art donation for any reason, the Agreement required Abbey Art to refund Williams' payments. Additionally, Abbey Art's sole remedy under the Agreement for Williams' non-payment was to retain payments already received and retake possession of the art.[3] In the event of a reduction in the fair market value of the art, Abbey Art agreed to pay Williams an amount equal to “the percentage of the dollars paid for each dollar the fair market value of the Art has been reduced.” Finally, the Agreement provided that it was the entire agreement between the parties and that it was to be interpreted under New York law.

In December 1997, Abbey Art, at Williams' direction, donated certain pieces of art with an appraised fair market value of $425,625 to Drexel University. Williams received an invoice from Abbey Art in the amount of $98,400, representing a purchase price of $102,000 (approximately 24% of the appraised fair market value of the art) less Williams' $3,600 deposit. Williams paid Abbey Art $98,400 before the end of 1997 and on his federal income tax return for that year, Williams claimed a charitable contribution deduction of $425,625.

*3 In December 1999, Williams wrote Abbey Art requesting that a gift of art be made on his behalf to Florida International University for the current tax year. Williams enclosed with this letter a check in the amount of $57,500. Certain pieces of art with an appraised value of $250,525 were donated at Williams' request prior to the end of the year. On his 1999 federal tax return, Williams claimed the full fair market value of the art as a charitable contribution deduction.

In 1999, Williams paid Abbey Art $4,600, and in October 2000, Abbey Art arranged a gift of additional artwork with an appraised value of $98,900 to Drexel University. Williams paid Abbey Art the balance due on this donation, $17,158, on December 8, 2000. Williams again claimed the fair market value of the donated art as a charitable contribution deduction on his 2000 federal income tax return.

C.

On October 29, 2007, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued a notice of tax deficiency to Williams. The Commissioner found the consulting fees deposited into the ALQI accounts between 1993 and 2000, as well as the investment income earned on those funds, to be taxable income to Williams and assessed civil fraud penalties for each of the eight years he failed to report this income on his tax returns. The Commissioner also determined that Williams was only entitled to charitable contribution deductions in the amount of his basis in the art donated through Abbey Art, because Williams had not owned the art for at least one year prior to the 288 donations. The Commissioner assessed accuracy-related penalties on the underpayments resulting from the disallowed charitable deductions.

Williams challenged the notice of deficiency by filing a petition in the Tax Court. The Tax Court granted partial summary judgment in favor of the Commissioner, holding Williams was collaterally estopped from denying that he had committed civil tax fraud during each of the years 1993 through 2000. Williams v. Comm'r, No. 2202–08, 2009 WL 1033354 (U.S.Tax Ct. Apr. 16, 2009). Following a bench trial, the Tax Court found that the consulting fee and investment income deposited into the ALQI accounts between 1993 and 2000 was attributable to Williams individually. The Tax Court further held that Williams was not entitled to a charitable contribution deduction in the amount of the fair market value of the donated art because Williams did not hold the art for more than one year before donating it. Accordingly, the Tax Court upheld the Commissioner's notice of deficiency and assessment of civil tax fraud and accuracy-related penalties. Williams v. Comm'r, No. 2202–08, 2011 WL 1518581 (U.S.Tax Ct. Apr. 21, 2011). This appeal followed.

We review the Tax Court's decision applying the same standard of review as we would to a civil bench trial in the United States district court. Waterman v. Comm'r, 179 F.3d 123, 126 (4th Cir.1999). Questions of law and statutory interpretation are reviewed de novo and findings of fact for clear error. Id. The grant of the Commissioner's motion for partial summary judgment on the collateral estoppel issue is reviewed de novo. Henson v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 61 F.3d 270, 274 (4th Cir.1995). The Commissioner's notice of deficiency is presumed to be correct, and the taxpayer bears the burden of proving it wrong. McHan v. Comm'r, 558 F.3d 326, 332 (4th Cir.2009); see also Welch v. Helvering, 290 U.S. 111, 115, 54 S.Ct. 8, 78 L.Ed. 212 (1933).

II.

*4 [1] Williams first argues on appeal that the Tax Court erred in holding that his guilty plea to criminal tax evasion in violation of 26 U.S.C. § 7201 collaterally estops him from denying his liability for civil tax fraud penalties under 26 U.S.C. § 6663 for the years 1993 through 2000.[4]

The doctrine of collateral estoppel applies "where (1) the 'identical issue' (2) was actually litigated (3) and was 'critical and necessary' to a(4) 'final and valid' judgment (5) resulting from a prior proceeding in which the party against whom the doctrine is asserted had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue." McHan, 558 F.3d at 331 (quoting Collins v. Pond Creek Mining Co., 468 F.3d 213, 217 (4th Cir.2006) (citation and quotation marks omitted)). "[O]nce an issue is actually and necessarily determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, that determination is conclusive in subsequent suits based on a different cause of action involving a party to the prior litigation." Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 153, 99 S.Ct. 970, 59 L.Ed.2d 210 (1979).

A taxpayer is collaterally estopped from denying civil tax fraud when convicted for criminal tax evasion under 26 U.S.C. § 7201 for the same taxable year. 289 Moore v. United States, 360 F.2d 353, 355 (4th Cir.1966); DiLeo v. Comm'r, 96 T.C. 858, 885–86 (1991), aff'd, 959 F.2d 16 (2d Cir.1992); see generally United States v. Wight, 839 F.2d 193, 196 (4th Cir.1988) ("The doctrine of collateral estoppel may apply to issues litigated in a criminal case which a party seeks to relitigate in a subsequent civil proceeding."). "[W]hile the criminal evasion statute does not explicitly require a finding of fraud, the case-by-case process of construction of the civil and criminal tax provisions has demonstrated that their constituent elements are identical." Moore, 360 F.2d at 356.

A.

[2] Williams argues that the Tax Court misinterpreted the terms of his guilty plea in barring him from denying civil tax fraud liability for the years 1993 through 2000. Williams contends that he did not plead guilty to tax evasion, but rather to evasion of payment of taxes, the elements of which are not dependent upon any specific tax year.[5] As such, Williams argues that he is not collaterally estopped from denying civil tax fraud for the entire eight year period set forth in the notice of deficiency, or for any particular year therein.

We reject this argument because, in addition to lacking merit, it has been waived. Williams failed to raise this argument before the Tax Court. Ordinarily, we will not consider an issue raised for the first time on appeal except in limited circumstances, Nat'l Wildlife Fed'n v. Hanson, 859 F.2d 313, 318 (4th Cir.1988), and this rule is applied equally by courts of appeals reviewing Tax Court decisions, Karpa v. Comm'r, 909 F.2d 784, 788 (4th Cir.1990) (citing Grauvogel v. Comm'r, 768 F.2d 1087, 1090 (9th Cir.1985)). Williams has not suggested any reason why we should depart from our ordinary rule in this case, and we see no reason to do so.

B.

*5 Williams also takes issue with the Tax Court's finding that his conviction for tax evasion collaterally estops him from denying civil fraud for each year from 1993 through 2000. Williams disputes that he pled guilty to tax evasion for each and every one of these years. The record, however, proves fatal to this claim. The plain language of the superseding criminal information charges Williams with tax evasion for each year from 1993 through 2000:

> From in or about 1993, through in or about April 2001, ... J. BRYAN WILLIAMS, the defendant, unlawfully, willfully and knowingly did attempt to evade and defeat a substantial part of the income tax due and owing by J. BRYAN WILLIAMS ... for the calendar years 1993 through 2000, by various means, including, among others by (a) arranging for approximately $7.98 million in payments which were income to Williams to be made into the secret Alqi accounts in Switzerland he controlled; and (b) preparing and causing to be prepared, signing and causing to be signed, and filing > and causing to be filed, false and fraudulent U.S. Individual Income Tax Returns, Forms 1040, for the calendar years 1993 through 2000, on 290 which he failed to disclose his interest in the secret Alqi bank accounts in Switzerland, and on which, in the years set forth below, he failed to report the approximate amounts of income set forth below, and upon which income there was a substantial additional tax due and owing to the United States of America:

Calendar Year	Approximate Amount of Income
1993	$1,029,518.72
1994	$ 752,479.52
1995	$ 998,723.14
1996	$3,917,762.57
1997	$1,670,891.49
1998	$ 133,371.90
1999	$ 109,167.59
2000	$ 256,234.64

(Title 26, United States Code, Section 7201).

Williams pled guilty to this tax evasion count, as well as to conspiracy to defraud the government in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371. Pursuant to a written plea agreement, Williams agreed to "file accurate amended personal tax returns for the calendar years 1993 through 2000" and "pay past taxes due and owing to the [IRS] by him for calendar years 1993 through 2000, including any applicable penalties."

Additionally, Williams admitted during his allocution at his guilty plea hearing that he knew the funds deposited into the ALQI accounts were taxable to him. Williams acknowledged that for "the calendar year tax returns for #93 through 2000, [he] chose not to report the income to [the IRS] in order to evade the substantial taxes owed thereon, until [he] filed [his] 2001 tax return." Williams continued: "I therefore believe that I am guilty of evading the payment of taxes for the tax years 1993 through 2000." As the Tax Court observed, there is no question that Williams pled guilty to and was convicted of tax evasion for each of the eight calendar years 1993 through 2000.

Williams insists he made clear to the district court that he was pleading to a narrower statement of facts concerning tax evasion than those contained in the superseding information. The record proves otherwise. At the plea hearing, Williams' counsel told the district judge:

> *6 [W]e're not adopting or accepting the facts as stated in the conspiracy count, which I think is the recitation of what was in the original indictment in this case. What we have agreed is that Mr. Williams would plead guilty to conspiracy counts, but based upon the factual allocution, which he has given to the Court.

This statement plainly refers to the conspiracy count, not to the tax evasion count. Williams pled guilty to both conspiracy and tax evasion. While he raised a concern at the plea hearing about the factual allegations surrounding the conspiracy count, Williams did not deny any fact or allegation concerning tax evasion, nor raise any issue whatsoever with respect to that count. On the contrary, Williams expressly admitted to facts that demonstrate his tax evasion scheme continued from 1993 until the time he filed his 2001 tax return, as charged in the information.

C.

Williams' final contention with respect to collateral estoppel is that he did not have a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue previously, because at the time he entered his guilty plea, neither the Commissioner nor Williams had analyzed the actual tax implications arising from the ALQI accounts and the amount of deficiencies 291 for each tax year.[6] Thus, argues Williams, the fraud penalties were not actually and necessarily decided by the court in his criminal case.

Williams confuses the issues. It matters not whether civil fraud penalties and interest had been calculated as of the date of his guilty plea or sentencing.[7] These determinations are not required to secure a criminal conviction for tax evasion. What matters for purposes of collateral estoppel is that Williams was indeed convicted of evasion for the years in question. As we held in Moore, that conviction "supplies the basis for a finding of fraud in [a] civil proceeding to determine tax liability." 360 F.2d at 355 (citing Tomlinson v. Lefkowitz, 334 F.2d 262 (5th Cir.1964)).

Williams pled guilty to a tax evasion scheme that continued from 1993 until 2000. In so doing, Williams admitted that he committed tax fraud in each of those eight years. In light of his guilty plea and allocution, Williams cannot now deny liability for civil tax fraud penalties for the years in question. We find the Tax Court correctly applied the doctrine of collateral estoppel in this case.

III.

[3] Williams next argues that the Tax Court erred in finding him individually liable for tax on the consulting fee income deposited into the ALQI accounts between 1993 and 2000. Williams asserts that ALQI was a legitimate business for which he performed consulting work and contends that he acted on the company's behalf when he earned the consulting fees at issue. We are not persuaded.

"The principle that income is taxed to the one who earns it is basic to our system of income taxation." Haag v. Comm'r, 88 T.C. 604, 610 (1987), aff'd, 855 F.2d 855 (8th Cir.1988) (unpublished table decision); 292 see also Lucas v. Earl, 281 U.S. 111, 50 S.Ct. 241, 74 L.Ed. 731 (1930). For income to be taxable to a corporation: (1) the service-performer must be an employee of the corporation whom the corporation has the right to direct or control in some meaningful sense; and (2) there must exist between the corporation and the person a contract or similar indicium recognizing the corporation's controlling position. Haag, 88 T.C. at 611 (citing Johnson v. Comm'r, 78 T.C. 882, 891 (1982)). No such employer-employee relationship exists here.

*7 Williams testified that he had no written employment agreement and received no regular salary or commission payments from ALQI. He stipulated that he was the sole operational director and officer of ALQI and the only person with authority to act on the company's behalf in its business activities. Williams had exclusive signature authority over the ALQI accounts from 1993 through 2000 and was the sole person from whom Banque Indosuez would accept instructions with respect to those accounts. There is simply no indication that ALQI wielded any form of control over Williams as an employee.

Beyond that, the evidence strongly suggests that Williams did not act on behalf of ALQI when he earned the income in question and merely used ALQI as a bank account. Apart from Williams' testimony, there is no evidence that Williams' consulting clients even knew ALQI existed. There are no consulting agreements, notes or other records that reflect ALQI's business dealings. In fact, there are no ALQI business records at all for the period at issue, except for bank records maintained by Banque Indosuez and a single balance sheet and profit and loss statement dated June 30, 2000. Williams' accountant, Donald Williamson, testified that while he reviewed voluminous bank records and incorporation documents in the course of his work, he did not see any general ledgers, profit and loss statements or balance sheets for ALQI, nor did he see any consulting contracts. Williamson testified that he relied on the representations of Williams and Williams' counsel that ALQI earned the consulting fees in question, and he took those representations at face value.

In an effort to legitimize ALQI's operations, Williams points to ALQI's use of Banque Indosuez's office space, its Swiss cell phone and credit card, as well as the fact that clients deposited consulting fees directly into the ALQI accounts. Williams insists that ALQI employed Smekhova to arrange, attend and translate at meetings conducted for ALQI business, and that ALQI, not Williams, paid her for her services. But Smekhova, like Williams, had no written employment agreement with ALQI. As the Tax Court noted, "[t]he fact that Mr. Williams' business and personal expenses were paid out of these same Swiss bank accounts does not prove that his clients contracted with ALQI or that ALQI was anything other than the receptacle into which Mr. Williams diverted his consulting income." Williams, 2011 WL 1518581, at *14.

Williams argues that because ALQI is not a "sham" corporation—and the Tax Court assumed that it is not—it must follow that the consulting fee income is taxable to ALQI. But Williams' reasoning is flawed. As the Tax Court persuasively explained, whether ALQI is a legitimate business entity is irrelevant; ALQI simply did not earn the income at issue. [8] Id.; see 293 Haag, 88 T.C. at 611 ("A finding that the [corporation] is not a sham does not preclude application of the assignment of income doctrine because a taxpayer can assign income to a corporation with real and substantial businesses to avoid tax liability.").

*8 Moreover, Williams cannot rise above his own admissions at his guilty plea hearing that the "purpose of the [ALQI] accounts was to hold funds and income [he] received from foreign sources during the years 1993 to 2000." Williams further acknowledged that he "knew that most of the funds deposited into the A[LQI] accounts, and all of the interest income were taxable income to [him]," but admitted he "chose not to report the income to the Internal Revenue Service in order to evade the substantial taxes owed thereon."

The Commissioner's determinations of income are entitled to a presumption of correctness, and the taxpayer bears the burden of proving them wrong. McHan v. Comm'r, 558 F.3d 326, 332 (4th Cir.2009). "The IRS is not given free rein, however: the taxpayer can rebut the presumption of correctness by proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the IRS's income determination is arbitrary or erroneous." Id. Williams has not rebutted the presumption in this case. For these reasons, we find that Williams is liable for tax on the corpus of the ALQI accounts, in addition to the passive income earned on those funds. [9]

IV.

[4] Williams' final argument on appeal is that the Tax Court erred in limiting his charitable contribution deductions to his basis in the art donated through Abbey Art, rather than allowing deduction of the art's fair market value. Williams contends that the Tax Court erroneously found the Art Purchase Agreement to be an option contract, ignoring both the mutual understanding of the parties and the plain language of the Agreement. For the reasons that follow, we find Williams' arguments unavailing.

A.

Generally, a deduction is allowed for any charitable contribution for which payment is made within the taxable year. 26 U.S.C. § 170(a)(1). The deduction is allowable, however, only if the contribution is "verified under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary." Id. When a contribution involves property other than money, the amount of the charitable contribution is the fair market value of the property at the time the donation is made. 26 C.F.R. § 1.170A–1(c)(1). This rule is modified in situations involving donations of appreciated 294 property. In those circumstances, the amount of any charitable contribution is reduced by the amount of gain that would not have qualified as long-term capital gain if the property had been sold by the taxpayer at its fair market value, determined as of the time of the contribution. 26 U.S.C. § 170(e)(1)(A). In other words, section 170(e)(1)(A) permits the deduction of long-term capital gain appreciation but if the property is not long-term capital gain property, the charitable contribution deduction is limited to the taxpayer's basis at the time of the contribution. Long-term capital gain is defined as gain from the sale or exchange of a capital asset [10] held for more than one year. 26 U.S.C. § 1222(3). The taxpayer bears the burden of proving he is entitled to a charitable deduction in the amount of the fair market value of the donated property. See INDOPCO, Inc. v. Comm'r, 503 U.S. 79, 84, 112 S.Ct. 1039, 117 L.Ed.2d 226 (1992).

B.

*9 The issue to be resolved is whether Williams held the art in question for more than one year before donating it. "In common understanding to hold property is to own it. In order to own or hold one must acquire. The date of acquisition is, then, that from which to compute the duration of ownership or the length of holding." McFeely v. Comm'r, 296 U.S. 102, 107, 56 S.Ct. 54, 80 L.Ed. 83 (1935). Williams argues that he acquired the art when he executed the Art Purchase Agreement in December 1996. The Commissioner asserts that Williams did not acquire the art until he paid for it, which in each case was within a year of the donation.

In determining the date of acquisition of property:

> [N]o hard-and-fast rules of thumb can be used, and no single factor is controlling. "Ownership of property is not a single indivisible concept but a collection or bundle of rights with respect to the property;" consequently, we must examine the transaction in its entirety. The date of the passage of legal title is not the sole criteria; the date on which "the benefits and burdens or the incidents of ownership of the property" were passed must also be considered, and the legal consequence of particular contract provisions must be examined in the light of the applicable State law.

Hoven v. Comm'r, 56 T.C. 50, 55 (1971) (internal citations omitted).

The Tax Court did not look to state law in resolving this issue, however, and the Commissioner insists that state law has no applicability here. Both the Commissioner and the Tax Court cite United States v. Heller, 866 F.2d 1336, 1341 (11th Cir.1989), for the proposition that "federal tax law disregards transactions lacking an economic purpose which are undertaken only to generate a tax savings. Federal tax law is concerned with the economic substance of the transaction under scrutiny and not the form by which it is masked." Indeed, the Fifth Circuit has recognized that "[t]he application and interpretation of the Internal Revenue Code is a matter of federal law. The form of a document and its effect under state law are therefore not controlling in these federal determinations." Deshotels v. United States, 450 F.2d 961, 964 (5th Cir.1972). The Fifth Circuit found it appropriate to look to Louisiana law in Deshotels, however, in order to understand the agreement at the heart of the parties' dispute. Id. Williams argues we should do the same here and look to New York law [11] in interpreting the Art 295 Purchase Agreement, and he cites to our decision in Volvo Cars of North America, LLC v. United States, 571 F.3d 373 (4th Cir.2009), in support of that contention.

In that case, Volvo had written-off excess inventory that it purportedly sold to a warehouser pursuant to the terms of a 1983 contract, thereby reducing its taxable income for the 1983 tax year. The IRS found these were not bona fide sales because Volvo retained control over the inventory even after it was transferred. Volvo brought suit seeking a refund of the tax paid due to the disallowed write-offs, and the jury returned a verdict in Volvo's favor. The district court entered judgment notwithstanding the verdict as to transfers of inventory made prior to execution of the 1983 contract, finding as a matter of law that the contract did not address inventory previously transferred to the warehouser. Volvo appealed. In determining whether the 1983 contract covered inventory previously transferred, we looked to state law "because 'in the application of a federal revenue act, state law controls in determining the nature of the legal interest which the taxpayer had in the property.' " Id. at 378 (citing United States v. Nat'l Bank of Commerce, 472 U.S. 713, 722, 105 S.Ct. 2919, 86 L.Ed.2d 565 (1985)). As the Supreme Court stated in National Bank, "[t]his follows from the fact that the federal statute 'creates no property rights but merely attaches consequences, federally defined, to rights created under state law.' " 472 U.S. at 722, 105 S.Ct. 2919 (quoting United States v. Bess, 357 U.S. 51, 55, 78 S.Ct. 1054, 2 L.Ed.2d 1135 (1958)).

*10 To be sure, the economic substance of the transaction is the primary concern in the instant case. We need not accept that the parties contracted for the sale of art simply because their signatures appear on a document entitled "Art Purchase Agreement." Even if we look to state law to help determine the nature of the legal interest conveyed by the Agreement, as Williams urges us to do, we remain convinced that the Tax Court correctly determined that Williams' charitable contribution deduction is limited to his basis in the donated art.

C.

The Tax Court examined the rights, duties and obligations the parties assumed when they executed the Art Purchase Agreement and concluded that by signing the Agreement and paying $3,600 up front, Williams purchased an option to buy art. Under New York law, "whether an agreement is a binding contract or an option is to be determined like any other issue of contract interpretation from all four corners of the agreement." Interactive Prop. Corp. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 114 Misc.2d 255, 450 N.Y.S.2d 1001, 1002 (1982). Although a "contract for sale" can encompass both a present sale of goods and a contract to sell goods at a future time, a "sale" requires the passing of title from the seller to the buyer for a price, N.Y. U.C.C. Law § 2–106, and "[t]itle to goods cannot pass under a contract for sale prior to their identification to the contract," id. at § 2–401(1). Indeed, "title passes to the buyer at the time and place at which the seller completes his performance with reference to the physical delivery of the goods ... even though a document of title is to be delivered at a different time or place...." Id. at § 2–401(2).

An option contract, on the other hand, "is an agreement to hold an offer open; it confers upon the optionee, for consideration paid, the right to purchase at a later 296 date." Kaplan v. Lippman, 75 N.Y.2d 320, 324, 552 N.Y.S.2d 903, 552 N.E.2d 151 (1990). "[U]ntil the optionee gives notice of his intent to exercise the option, the optionee is free to accept or reject the terms of the option." Id. at 325, 552 N.Y.S.2d 903, 552 N.E.2d 151. The contract ripens into a fully enforceable bilateral contract once the optionee gives notice of his intent to exercise the option in accordance with the agreement. Id.

The following leads us to believe the Tax Court correctly concluded that the Art Purchase Agreement is not a contract for sale that triggered the holding period required for long-term capital gain.[12]

1.

Title to the art did not pass upon execution of the Agreement in 1996, and delivery was not made. In fact, the art in question was not even identified in the Agreement. Rather, "[t]he specific items purchased by the Client [were to] be described in written appraisals" and given to Williams once he received physical possession of the art or donated it to a charitable institution. This could not occur, pursuant to the Agreement's terms, until Williams paid the balance of the purchase price. While he asserts art was segregated for him in Abbey Art's warehouse, Williams does not have an inventory of this segregated art, nor did he ever visit the warehouse to view it.

2.

*11 The Agreement provides that $3,600, five percent of the total agreed purchase price of the art ($72,000), was to be paid up front and would be held in escrow pending satisfaction of the Agreement's provisions. The balance of the purchase price was due at the time Williams received physical possession of the art or when it was donated, an act which was to occur in the future but at no specified time.

Aside from the initial $3,600 payment, Williams had no obligation to perform under the contract. Williams was not required to follow through with the purchase, and Abbey Art had no right to require specific performance of the full balance of the purchase price. Its sole remedy for Williams' non-payment was to retain as liquidated damages any monies that Williams had paid towards the purchase of the art and to reclaim ownership over it.

Indeed, Abbey Art bore all of the expense and all of the risk in this transaction. It was responsible for selecting and paying the appraiser, packaging and shipping the art, and completing all the necessary paperwork. Even in storing the art, Abbey Art bore the risk of loss. See N.Y. U.C.C. Law § 2–509. Moreover, if the fair market value of the art fell below what was reflected in the appraisal, reducing the tax benefit to Williams, Abbey Art was required to refund Williams the percentage of his dollars paid for each dollar in reduction of the fair market value.

3.

The Agreement provides that the total purchase price of the art would not exceed 24% of the cumulative appraised fair market value of the art purchased.[13] The purchase price set forth in the agreement is 297 $72,000, which is 24% of $300,000. Thus, the Agreement contemplates $300,000 worth of art would be purchased. Yet the fair market value of the first art donation Williams made ($425,625) far exceeded that amount. Arguably, even if title did pass for $300,000 worth of art upon execution of the Agreement in 1996, it still would not account for the extra $125,000 worth of art donated to Drexel University in 1997, the $250,525 worth of art donated to Florida International University in 1999, and the $98,900 worth of art donated to Drexel in 2000.

D.

In sum, the 1996 Art Purchase Agreement was not a contract for sale. Therefore, Williams' holding period for purposes of the long-term gain calculation did not begin until he paid for and acquired a present interest in the art. In each instance, this occurred less than one year from the date of his donation. Williams paid for the December 1997 donation to Drexel University in December 1997. He paid for the December 1999 donation to Florida International University in December 1999. And he paid for the October 2000 donation to Drexel in full in December of that same year. For these reasons, we find the Tax Court did not err in concluding that Williams' charitable contribution deduction is limited to his basis in the art.

V.

Because Williams has not met his burden of proving the Commissioner's notice of deficiency is erroneous, we affirm.

*12 AFFIRMED.

All Citations

498 Fed.Appx. 284, 2012 WL 6014572, 110 A.F.T.R.2d 2012-6904, 2012-2 USTC P 50,706

Footnotes

[1] Earlier this year we determined that Williams willfully violated 31 U.S.C. § 5314(a) by failing to file for tax year 2000 the form TDF 90–22.1 (“FBAR”), on which he was required to disclose his interest in the ALQI accounts. United States v. Williams, No. 10–2230, 2012 WL 2948569 (4th Cir. July 20, 2012).

[2] Amended returns for 1993 through 1998 were prepared but were never filed.

[3] A term of the Agreement requiring specific performance of the unpaid portion of the purchase price was crossed out and initialed by Williams and his wife who, while a signatory to this Agreement, is not a party to this case.

[4] Generally, the Commissioner must assess a deficiency within three years of the filing of the tax return from which the deficiency stems. 26 U.S.C. § 6501(a). If a deficiency is determined in the case of a false or fraudulent return with the intent to evade tax, however, the Commissioner can assess such a deficiency at any time. Id. at § 6501(c)(1). The Commissioner bears the burden of proving civil tax fraud. 26 U.S.C. § 7454(a).

[5] Section § 7201 “includes the offense of willfully attempting to evade or defeat the assessment of a tax as well as the offense of willfully attempting to evade or defeat the payment of a tax.” Sansone v. United States, 380 U.S. 343, 354, 85 S.Ct. 1004, 13 L.Ed.2d 882 (1965). As the Third Circuit in United States v. McGill, 964 F.2d 222, 230 (1992), explained, the willful filing of a false return satisfies the elements of evasion of assessment. Such cases are far more common than evasion of payment cases, which are rare and generally require an affirmative act that occurs after any filing, such as placing assets in the name of others or causing debts to be paid through and in the name of others. Id.

[6] Any suggestion that Williams' conviction following a guilty plea, rather than a trial, renders collateral estoppel inapplicable misses the mark. “[T]here is no difference between a judgment of conviction based upon a guilty plea and a judgment rendered after a trial on the merits,” for purposes of applying the doctrine of collateral estoppel, as the conclusive effect is the same. Blohm v. Comm'r, 994 F.2d 1542, 1554 (11th Cir.1993).

Moreover, Williams' reliance on United States v. International Building Co., 345 U.S. 502, 505–06, 73 S.Ct. 807, 97 L.Ed. 1182 (1953), is misplaced. Williams claims International Building stands for the proposition that collateral estoppel is not appropriate when the decision of a prior court is the result of compromise or negotiation rather than a full review of the facts. But International Building involved “a pro forma acceptance by the Tax Court of an agreement between the parties to settle their controversy for reasons undisclosed.” Id. at 505, 73 S.Ct. 807. Indeed, in International Building, the Commissioner agreed to withdraw his proofs of claim for tax deficiencies filed in International Building's bankruptcy proceeding, upon a stipulation that the withdrawal was “ ‘without prejudice’ and did not constitute a determination of or prejudice the rights of the United States to any taxes with respect to any year other than those involved in the claim.” Id.

at 503, 73 S.Ct. 807. The parties filed stipulations in the pending Tax Court proceedings that there was no tax liability for the years 1933, 1938, and 1939, and the Tax Court entered formal decisions to that effect. No factual findings were made, no briefs were filed, and no hearings were held. The Supreme Court held that while the Tax Court's decisions were res judicata with respect to tax claims for 1933, 1938, and 1939, they did not collaterally estop the Commissioner from assessing deficiencies for the years 1943, 1944, and 1945. Id. at 505, 73 S.Ct. 807. International Building is plainly distinguishable from the instant case.

7 Moreover, the record makes clear it was Williams' counsel who advocated for proceeding with the guilty plea and sentencing hearings before a sum certain in penalties and interest had been calculated. Williams cannot now argue that he was rushed into pleading guilty before a final figure had been determined.

8 Williams argues Moline Properties, Inc. v. Comm'r, 319 U.S. 436, 63 S.Ct. 1132, 87 L.Ed. 1499 (1943), supports his position, but his argument falls short. In that case, petitioner Moline Properties claimed that gain on sales of its real property should be treated, and therefore taxed, as the gain of its sole stockholder, and that its corporate existence should be ignored as fictitious. Notwithstanding the fact that Moline "kept no books and maintained no bank account during its existence," the Supreme Court held that it was a separate entity with a tax identity distinct from its stockholder. In reaching this conclusion, the Court noted the fact that the stockholder exercised negligible control over the entity, that Moline mortgaged and sold portions of its property, and that Moline entered into its own business venture by leasing part of its property and collecting rental income. Id. at 440, 63 S.Ct. 1132. On the contrary, in the instant case, Williams exercised exclusive and complete control over ALQI, and there is no evidence that ALQI carried on any business activity apart from serving as Williams' bank account.

9 Given this holding, we see no reason to address Williams' challenge to the validity of the Controlled Foreign Corporation regulations, as this argument only becomes relevant if the consulting fee income were attributable to ALQI.

10 The art in question qualifies as a capital asset pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 1221(a).

11 The parties do not dispute that if state law is to be invoked in the context of this analysis, New York law applies per the terms of the Agreement.

12 We note that paragraph 12 of the Agreement provides that it is "the entire agreement between the respective parties hereto and there are no other provisions, obligations, representations, oral or otherwise, of any nature whatsoever."

13 It goes without saying that the appreciation guaranteed to Williams by virtue of this Agreement is suspect, to say the least. The Commissioner has not challenged the valuation of the art, however, and that issue is not before us.

End of Document

T.C. Memo. 2011-89
United States Tax Court.

Joseph B. WILLIAMS, III, Petitioner
v.
COMMISSIONER of INTERNAL REVENUE, Respondent.

No. 2202–08.
|
April 21, 2011.

Synopsis
Background: Taxpayer petitioned for redetermination of income tax deficiencies and fraud and accuracy–related penalties for several tax years, arising from IRS decision that taxpayer was liable for tax on services and investment income and that taxpayer's deductions for art contributions were limited to his basis in that art.

Holdings: The Tax Court, Gustafson, J., held that:

[1] taxpayer, and not corporation, was responsible for paying tax on consulting fee income;

[2] taxpayer's conviction for tax evasion satisfied IRS's burden of proving fraud and estopped taxpayer from denying fraud;

[3] taxpayer owned art for less than one year, precluding entitlement to long–term capital gain treatment on any gain when he sold or donated art; and

[4] imposition of accuracy–related penalty for negligence was warranted.

Decision for IRS.

1 In 1993 P established a British Virgin Islands (BVI) corporation, A, and placed the shares in a BVI trust of which he was the sole beneficiary. P opened accounts in the name of A with a bank in Switzerland. P provided consulting, negotiation, and other services to companies and governments, and his clients transferred money into A's accounts to pay for those services. P did not report any of this income on any U.S. Federal income tax return for 1993 through 2000, except that in 2003 he amended his 1999 and 2000 individual income tax returns to report investment income earned on the amounts in the Swiss bank accounts. P did not include the payments for services in income on any of those original or amended returns. Also in 2003 P pleaded guilty to one count of tax evasion for all 8 years from 1993 through 2000 and to one count of conspiracy to defraud the IRS for those same years.

In 1996 P signed an agreement purporting to commit to purchasing works of art. The seller, S, ostensibly agreed to hold the art for 1 year before donating it on P's behalf to charity and promised that the art would cost P no more than 24 percent of the final appraised value of the art. S donated works of art on P's behalf in 1997, 1999, and 2000; P paid for the art close in time to the donations (within a year of each donation); and he claimed charitable contribution deductions for the full value determined in appraisals that S arranged.

By a notice of deficiency issued in 2007, R determined deficiencies in P's original returns for all 8 years, determining that P is liable for tax on the services and investment income deposited into A's accounts and allowing P deductions for the contributions of art only to the extent of P's basis in the art. R determined fraud penalties related to the unreported income deposited in A's Swiss bank accounts and also determined accuracy-related penalties on the disallowed portions of P's charitable contribution deductions.

Held: P is liable for tax on the net amounts deposited into A's accounts in each year, and P is liable for the fraud penalties on the underpayments resulting from this unreported income.

Held, further, P is entitled to charitable contribution deductions only in the amount of his basis in the art contributed, and he is liable for the accuracy-related penalties on the underpayments resulting from the disallowed deductions.

Attorneys and Law Firms

David H. Dickieson, for petitioner.

John C. McDougal, for respondent.

MEMORANDUM FINDINGS OF FACT AND OPINION

GUSTAFSON, Judge:

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) issued to petitioner Joseph B. Williams III a notice of deficiency pursuant to section 6212,[1] showing the IRS's determination of the following deficiencies and penalties for tax years 1993 through 2000:

		Penalties
Year	Deficiency	Sec. 6663	Sec. 6662
1993	$417,652	$313,038.00	—
1994	304,740	226,206.75	—
1995	417,354	313,015.50	—
1996	1,572,673	1,179,504.75	—
1997	809,620	511,143.00	$25,619.20
1998	52,733	39,549.75	—
1999	113,049	33,395.25	13,704.40
2000	120,391	74,093.25	4,320.00

2 Mr. Williams brings this case pursuant to section 6213(a), asking this Court to redetermine those deficiencies and penalties.[2]

The issues for decision are:[3]

1. Whether Mr. Williams is individually liable for Federal income tax on the payments made to ALQI Holdings, Ltd. (ALQI), during each year in issue; or whether he is individually liable only for tax on the investment income earned during each year (on funds held and invested by ALQI), pursuant to sections 951(a) and 954(c). We hold that his liability is not limited to tax on the investment income paid to ALQI each year; rather, he is liable for tax on the entire net amount deposited into the ALQI accounts during each year in issue.

2. Whether section 6663 civil fraud penalties apply to the underpayments resulting from the unreported income from ALQI. We hold that the fact of Mr. Williams's fraud is established by his criminal conviction, that he is collaterally estopped from denying that fraud, see supra note 3, and that he did not establish that any portion of his underpayment attributable to the unreported ALQI income is not attributable to fraud.

3. Whether Mr. Williams is entitled to charitable contribution deductions for his contributions of art in the amounts claimed—i.e., the appraised values of the art—or whether his deductions are limited by section 170(e) to his basis in the art donated. We hold that his deductions are limited to his basis in the art.

4. Whether Mr. Williams is liable for accuracy-related penalties on the underpayments resulting from his deducting the appraised value of the donated art rather than his basis in the art. We hold that he is liable for the accuracy-related penalties.

FINDINGS OF FACT

The parties stipulated some of the facts, and we incorporate the stipulation of facts by this reference. The record also includes the stipulated exhibits, the testimony offered at trial, and the exhibits admitted at trial. When he filed his petition, Mr. Williams resided in Virginia.

Oil-related activities and Swiss bank accounts

Mr. Williams earned his undergraduate degree from the University of North Carolina and his law degree from New York University School of Law. He began working in the corporate legal department of Mobil Oil Corp. (Mobil) around 1973. Mr. Williams worked for Mobil in Saudi Arabia from 1979 to 1985, and while there he met Jean–Jaques Bovay, a banker representing Banque Indosuez, a bank in Switzerland. [4] He continued working for Mobil until 1998. In the 1990s Mobil tasked Mr. Williams with developing strategic business relationships in Russia and some of the former Soviet republics, including Azerbaijan, Turkmenistan, and Kazakhstan. When he retired from Mobil in 1998, Mr. Williams held the position of general manager for strategic business development and government crude, in which he bought and sold crude oil internationally on behalf of Mobil, and he assisted with the negotiation and closing of major business deals for Mobil.

3 At Mr. Williams's request, in 1993 Mr. Bovay arranged for the formation of ALQI in the British Virgin Islands. The Swiss bank formed ALQI as a British Virgin Islands International Business Company, authorized to conduct business anywhere except the British Virgin Islands.

The record is unclear as to whether Mr. Williams directly owned the shares of ALQI or whether the shares were held in a British Virgin Islands trust of which Mr. Williams was the sole beneficiary. The Swiss bank used Overseas Management Trust (B.V.I.), Ltd., to form ALQI, and Overseas Management appointed Saturn Corporate Services, Inc. (Panama), as the sole director of ALQI. Saturn authorized the Swiss bank to establish accounts in ALQI's name. Saturn operated as Mr. Williams's nominee, and Mr. Williams was the only operational director and officer of ALQI; only he had authority to act on behalf of ALQI, and only he could instruct the Swiss bank with respect to the ALQI accounts. The documents submitted to the Swiss bank to open the ALQI accounts identify Mr. Williams as the only beneficial owner of all assets deposited into ALQI's accounts. Whether Mr. Williams owned ALQI directly or as the sole beneficiary of a trust, we find that he directly or indirectly owned and controlled all the shares of ALQI stock.

The Swiss bank also provided Mr. Williams and ALQI with a Swiss mobile telephone, credit cards, and the use of office space at the bank for business meetings. The credit cards and mobile telephone were issued and billed in Mr. Williams's name.

Mr. Williams did not maintain formal books of account recording income and expenses related to his international consulting and services activity. However, the Swiss bank maintained records of deposits, transfers, and payments involving the ALQI accounts. Mr. Williams instructed the Swiss bank to draw on those accounts to pay the mobile telephone bills, the credit card bills, and various other bills, and to transfer funds at his direction. The transfers included several $10,000 and $20,000 transfers from the Swiss bank to a branch of the same bank in London, to be held for pickup by Mr. Williams. The payments included payments totaling $41,409.44 to a former Mobil secretary who had worked for Mr. Williams. A $15,000 gift to the to the wife of Mr. Williams's deceased father was also paid for from the ALQI accounts. Some of the credit card charges ALQI paid reflect Mr. Williams's vacationing with his children and a nearly $30,000 shopping spree in Paris, France. The instructions Mr. Williams sent to Mr. Bovay consistently refer to the Swiss bank account(s) as “my account”; when requesting transfers or payments from these accounts, Mr. Williams did not refer to them as ALQI's accounts or as corporate accounts. We find that Mr. Williams paid personal, family, and living expenses and made gifts to family and friends from the ALQI accounts.

Beginning in 1993 Mr. Williams found business opportunities separate from his work for Mobil, and he pursued those opportunities and earned fees for his consulting and negotiation services. One particular project he facilitated, on behalf of the Khazakhstan Government, was the building of a new pipeline from the Tengiz oil field in Kazakhstan through Russia to the Black Sea. Mr. Williams admits that none of his clients had written agreements with ALQI. He did not correspond or deal with his clients using the ALQI name. He performed services for these clients in his individual capacity and not on behalf of ALQI.

4 Alika Smekhova, a Russian actress, singer, and celebrity, worked as a consultant with Mr. Williams, translating at meetings and helping arrange introductions and appointments with Russian government officials.

Beginning in 1996 Mr. Williams paid Ms. Smekhova a stipend of $5,000 to $10,000 per month from the ALQI accounts, and he also paid for her shopping in Paris. Mr. Williams did not pay himself a salary or commissions from ALQI, and he retained most of the amounts deposited into the ALQI accounts in the Swiss bank accounts; but, as noted, he made gifts and paid some personal expenses from the ALQI accounts.

ALQI had no written employment or other contracts with Mr. Williams or Ms. Smekhova, and neither of them was an employee of ALQI. ALQI did not have any staff and had no ability to perform oil- and pipeline-related consulting services without Mr. Williams's providing those services directly; and although Ms. Smekhova rendered services to Mr. Williams, she did not render services to Mr. Williams's clients on his or ALQI's behalf.

All amounts deposited into the ALQI accounts during 1993 through 2000 were received for services that Mr. Williams rendered to third parties, generally in connection with the negotiation of oil- and pipeline-related contracts. Ms. Smekhova facilitated Mr. Williams's provision of services by translating and making introductions. The ALQI accounts received approximately $8 million in deposits between 1993 and 2000. Between 1993 and 2000, deposits (payments for services) and earnings (interest, dividends, and capital gains) in the ALQI accounts included the following: [5]

Year	Deposits	Earnings	Total
1993	$993,837	$35,754	$1,029,591
1994	693,699	58,781	752,480
1995	887,964	110,759	998,723
1996	3,752,879	164,884	3,917,763
1997	1,344,637	326,254	1,670,891
1998	41,248	92,124	133,372
1999	——	109,168	109,168
2000	——	256,235	256,235
Total	7,714,264	1,153,959	8,868,223

Reporting ALQI's income on Mr. Williams's tax returns

On his Federal income tax returns for 1993 through 2000, Mr. Williams did not report any of the services income deposited into the ALQI accounts, nor did he report any of the interest, dividends, or capital gain income earned on those deposits. He did not inform his return preparer of the accounts in the Swiss bank or of his interest in ALQI, nor did he discuss with his return preparer whether he was required to report income from ALQI for the years in issue.

On November 14, 2000, at the request of the United States Government, the Government of Switzerland froze the ALQI accounts. Mr. Williams disclosed his ownership interest in ALQI and the existence of the Swiss bank accounts on his Federal income tax return for 2001, which he filed in 2002—after the Swiss authorities froze the accounts. [6]

In 2003 Mr. Williams filed amended Federal income tax returns for 1999 and 2000. Mr. Williams also had prepared and entered into evidence amended returns for 1993 through 1998. Mr. Williams's counsel provided unsigned copies of these returns to the IRS agents during the examination. These unsigned amended returns were not filed with the IRS.

5 On these unfiled amended returns, Mr. Williams reported additional income (representing ALQI's capital gains, dividends, and interest), and he reported net increases in income as follows:

Year	Inte rest	Dividends	Short-term capital gains	Long-term capital gains	Total earnings	Increased income
1993	$8,722	$135	–0–	$26,608	$35,465	$35,466
1994	30,590	9,379	22,718	1,952	64,639	64,639
1995	101,783	2,093	2,184	3,777	109,837	109,837
1996	135,492	8	19,961	3,659	159,120	159,120
1997	207,981	–0–	102,004	–0–	309,985	309,985
1998	19,933	42	5,920	–0–	25,895	25,895
1999	53,199	101	39,879	67,495	160,674	160,674
2000	190,249	80	995	708,626	899,950	[1] 751,848

Mr. Williams's amended returns included Form 5471, Information Return of U.S. Persons With Respect To Certain Foreign Corporations, and on Schedule C, Income Statement, of those forms he reported income, earnings, and deductions as follows, which he attributed to ALQI:

Year	Gross receipts or sales	Passive income (earnings)	Deductions	Net income
1993	$1,467,092	$35,754	$12,123	$1,490,723
1994	725,000	58,781	20,097	763,684
1995	940,000	110,759	8,753	1,042,007
1996	3,681,000	164,884	134,442	3,711,442
1997	1,473,000	326,254	89,718	1,709,536
1998	25,000	92,124	83,386	33,738
1999	–0–	255,023	94,349	160,674
2000	–0–	899,951	–0–	899,951

The net change to his own income that Mr. Williams reported on these amended returns did not include any of the gross receipts he listed for ALQI on Forms 5471, and the 2000 Form 5471 does not shed any light upon the discrepancy noted above with respect to increased income reported for 2000. On the amended returns Mr. Williams included in income only the passive income earned on the deposits and investments in ALQI's accounts at the Swiss bank; none of these amended returns includes in Mr. Williams's income any of the services income transferred or deposited into the ALQI accounts.

As noted, Mr. Williams prepared but did not file amended returns for 1993 through 1998, even though each showed additional income and additional taxes owed. However, his amended returns for 1999 and 2000, which he did file, reported additional tax due of $40,462 and $203,148, respectively, and Mr. Williams paid those additional amounts. [7]

Criminal prosecution

On April 14, 2003, the Department of Justice filed a two-count superseding criminal information charging Mr. Williams with one count of conspiracy to defraud the United States and the IRS and one count of tax evasion for the period from 1993 through 2000. On June 12, 2003, Mr. Williams pleaded guilty to conspiring to defraud the United States and the IRS and to evading taxes for each year from 1993 through 2000.

6 In connection with entering his guilty plea, Mr. Williams allocuted as follows:

> In 1993, with the assistance of a banker at Bank Indosuez, I opened two bank accounts in the name of a corporation ALQI Holdings, Ltd. ALQI was created at that time as a British Virgin Islands Corporation. The purpose of that account was to hold funds and income I received from foreign sources during the years 1993 to 2000. [Emphasis added.]
>
> Between 1993 and 2000, more than seven million dollars was deposited in the ALQI accounts and more than $800,000 in income was earned on those deposits.
>
> I knew that most of the funds deposited into the ALQI accounts and all the interest income were taxable income to me. However, [on] the calendar year tax returns for #93 through 2000, I chose not to report the income to my—to the Internal Revenue Service in order to evade the substantial taxes owed thereon, until I filed my 2001 tax return. [Emphasis added.]
>
> I also knew that I had the obligation to report to the IRS and/or the Department of the Treasury the existence of the Swiss accounts, but for the calendar year tax returns 1993 through 2000, I chose not to in order to assist in hiding my true income from the IRS and evade taxes thereon, until I filed my 2001 tax return.
>
> Some of the payments I received in the ALQI accounts, including a two million payment I received in 1996, were paid to me by people, organizations or governments with whom I did business on Mobil's behalf while I[was] an employee of Mobil Oil. I did not disclose these business relationships to Mobil Oil, although I understood I had an obligation to do so.
>
> I suspect people, organizations, governments paying the money to me were not notifying Mobil Oil of the payments. None of the people, organizations or governments who made payments into my ALQI accounts provided any tax reporting documents to me or to the IRS.
>
> Similarly Bank Indosuez provided me with no tax reporting documents for the interest and other income earned within the ALQI accounts.
>
> Over the course of several years I came to expect that the people with whom I dealt with regularly regarding the payments into the ALQI accounts would not provide tax reporting information to the United States government regarding these transactions, thus allowing me to evade taxes on the payments received.
>
> I knew what I was doing was wrong and unlawful. I, therefore, believe that I am guilty of evading the payment of taxes for the tax years 1993 through 2000. I also believe that I acted in concert with others to create a mechanism, the ALQI accounts, which I intended to allow me to escape detection by the IRS. Therefore, I am-I believe that I'm guilty of conspiring with the people would [sic] whom I dealt regarding the ALQI accounts to defraud the United States of taxes which I owed.

The judge of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York accepted Mr. Williams's allocution and plea and sentenced him to 46 months' incarceration. Mr. Williams and the Government stipulated that the readily provable tax loss the United States suffered as a result of Mr. Williams's tax evasion was at least $3.512 million, and they expected the District Court to order restitution in that amount. The District Court ordered Mr. Williams to pay the entire balance in the ALQI accounts to the Clerk of the Court, with $3.512 million of that amount paid to the IRS as restitution and the balance held by the clerk pending resolution of the amounts Mr. Williams owes the IRS for 1993 through 2000.

7 The Swiss bank transferred a total of $7,943,051.33 to the District Court in November 2003, and the clerk credited $3.512 million to the IRS on January 7, 2004. The IRS has held that amount pending the resolution of this case. The clerk has held the balance of the funds pending the final determination of Mr. Williams's liability for the years in issue, including interest and penalties.

The Department of Corrections released Mr. Williams on May 21, 2006.

Charitable contributions

Sometime in the summer of 1996, Mr. Williams began speaking with personnel of Abbey Art Consultants, Inc. (Abbey), a corporation in New York City, about buying art at a discount and donating it at full fair market value to charitable institutions.

On December 10, 1996, Mr. Williams signed an agreement with Abbey [8] which refers to Mr. Williams as "Client" and provides, in relevant part:

> 1. Client desires to purchase from Abbey the monetary quantity of Art specified in Paragraph 2 below. The specific items purchased by the Client will be described in written appraisals prepared by a qualified appraiser selected by Abbey. The appraisal(s) will be submitted to the Client when the Client receives physical possession of the Art or when the Art is donated to a charitable institution.
>
> 2. The total purchase price or consideration for the Art shall be $72,000.00 provided, however, that the total purchase price shall not exceed twenty-four (24%) percent of the cumulative appraised fair market value of the Art purchased herein, as determined by the qualified appraiser selected by Abbey.
>
> 3. The purchase price shall be paid to Abbey in the following manner:
>
>> a) ten (5%) [sic] percent of the total purchase price $3,600.00 shall be paid by check at the signing of this agreement. * * * Said monies shall be held in an escrow account pending satisfaction of the provisions contained in this Agreement.
>>
>> b) the balance of the price shall be paid by good check on or before the time when client receives physical possession of the Art or when the Art is delivered to and accepted [by the] charitable institution where the art is being donated. In the event that Abbey is unable to facilitate the donation of the Art, client may request physical possession of the Art or, monies previously paid, in which case Abbey shall immediately comply with such request.

5. Within thirty (30) days after the Client has paid to Abbey the deposit payment of the purchase price, the Client shall notify Abbey of the Client's wishes with regard to the dispensation [sic] of the Art. Client may elect one of the following:

> a) to take physical possession of the Art, in which case Abbey will package and ship the Art to the Client at Abbey's expense, provided that full payment has been received, or > b) to retain Abbey as its agent to facilitate the donation of the Art to a charitable institution(s), in which case Abbey at its sole cost and expense will arrange the donation and handle all the requisite paperwork needed to consummate the desired donation, including the packaging and shipping of the Art to the charitable institution(s) after the required holding period of one (1) year.
>

8 6. In the event Client fails to make any payment required herein for the purchase of the Art at any time prior to the time Client executes a Bill of Sale transferring ownership of the Art to a charitable institution, Abbey's sole remedy shall be to retain as liquidated damages all previous payments Client has made toward the purchase of the Art and, in addition, to reclaim ownership of the Art. * * * [9]

7. In the event Client elects to donate the Art to a charitable institution(s), upon such election Client may list three charitable institutions Client wishes to be the possible donees. Abbey will endeavor to facilitate the donation to one of the specified institutions; provided, however, that if Abbey in its sole opinion determines that a donation to the requested institution(s) is not practical, Abbey may without prior notice to Client, facilitate the donation of the Art to qualifying charitable institution(s) chosen by Abbey.

8. If at any time after the donation of the Art to qualifying charitable institution(s) any governmental body or panel makes a final determination that the cumulative fair market value of the Art herein purchased is less than the value which is reflected in the Appraisal(s), and, as a result of such determination, the tax benefit to the Client resulting from such donation is reduced, Abbey, within thirty (30) days of the submission to Abbey by the Client of written documentation evidencing the adjudicated reduction of > the original fair market value of the Art, shall pay to the Client in cash or by check an amount of monies equal to the percentage of the dollars paid for each dollar the fair market value of the Art has been reduced; provided however, that before doing so Abbey reserves the right to lawfully challenge any such reduction.

>
> 9. This agreement shall be interpreted under the laws of the State of New York.
>
> 12. This Agreement contains the entire agreement between the respective parties hereto and there are no other provisions, obligations, representations, oral or otherwise, of any nature whatsoever.

Thus, under this agreement—

- Mr. Williams expressed interest in paying $72,000 for art, but he committed only to pay $3,600—the deposit paid with the agreement.

- Abbey promised to provide a qualified appraiser and to provide art with a purchase price of no more than 24 percent of the appraised fair market value.

- Mr. Williams was not selecting specific pieces; rather, Abbey agreed that when Mr. Williams took possession of art or when it was donated to charity, Abbey would identify and describe that art in an appraisal.

- Abbey agreed to bear all the expense—including paperwork, appraisal, packing and shipping costs—of donating the art to charity, and to refund all of Mr. Williams's payments if it was unable to facilitate the donation.

- Abbey agreed that its sole remedy for Mr. Williams's non-payment would be to retain any payments already received and to retake possession of the art. (I.e., Abbey could not force Mr. Williams to perform, and the only risk Mr. Williams bore for non-performance was the loss of his deposit.)

9 • Although Mr. Williams could propose donees, Abbey retained discretion to select the donee.

- Abbey agreed to share the risk of inflated appraised values by promising a pro-rata refund of the discounted purchase price.

1997 Contribution

In November and December of 1997 (i.e., almost a year after the date of the agreement between Abbey and Mr. Williams), Abbey arranged for appraisals of three different sets of art, and Mr. Williams introduced at trial the following appraisals, reciting the following fair market values:

Appraisal date	Appraiser	Value of art
November 17, 1997	Shari Cavin	$34,800
November 23, 1997	Lawrence Roseman	18,150
December 1997	Kenneth Jay Linsner	372,675
Total		425,625

On December 23, 1997, Mr. Williams signed a deed of gift to Drexel University, and a representative of Drexel University signed the deed to accept the gift on December 29, 1997. The deed provides a very brief description of the art described in the November and December 1997 appraisals, and it recites a total appraised value of $425,625—i.e., an amount greater than the $300,000 contemplated in the agreement. [10] The record includes no evidence as to when Abbey first acquired the art appraised in late 1997.

The record includes a letter from Abbey to Mr. Williams, dated December 29, 1997, reporting that Abbey had delivered his donation to Drexel. The letter included an undated invoice that recites a purchase date of December 10, 1996 (i.e., the date of the agreement), a description of “art objects as attached”, appraised value of $425,000, and purchase price of $102,000. The invoice lists a $3,600 deposit, and indicates a balance due of $98,400 (an amount obviously greater than the $72,000 required in the agreement, but consistent with the invoice purchase price of $102,000 and also consistent with the discount promised in the agreement; $102,000 is 24 percent of the $425,000 appraised value). The December 29, 2007, letter asks Mr. Williams to remit $98,400 in the enclosed envelope and instructs him to date and tender his check in 1997, "the year of the donation". Finally, the letter promises that early in 1998 Abbey would send Mr. Williams the original appraisals and the required IRS forms signed by the appraisers and Drexel. Mr. Williams paid Abbey $98,400 before the end of 1997. (It would appear that at this point the agreement had been more than fulfilled, but Mr. Williams and Abbey behaved otherwise in 1999 and 2000, as we show below.)

On his 1997 Federal income tax return, Mr. Williams claimed deductions for the following charitable contributions:

Item	Amount
Gifts by cash or check	$2,000
Gifts other than by cash or check	425,625
Total	427,625

Mr. Williams's return preparer informed him that so long as he had a 1–year holding period and appropriate appraisals of the art, his charitable contribution deduction should not pose a problem.

1999 contribution

10 Mr. Williams wrote Abbey on December 17, 1999, stating:

> I have just returned from a trip to London and would like your assistance once again to complete another gift of art. As I am sure you remember, in December 1996, I purchased from Abbey Art approximately $800,000 plus [[[[11] of appraised value art and antiquities originating from South America, South East Asia, Haiti and North Africa. As you also know, I gifted in [1997] [12] $425,000 in appraised value of art and antiquities to Drexel University in Philadelphia, Pa. with your assistance. The remaining art has in the meantime been stored with you in your wharehouse [sic]. I would now like to gift approximately $250,000.00 of the remaining art to Florida International University in Miami for the Tax Year 1999 and ask your assistance in completing this gift ASAP. I also ask you to continue to wharehouse [sic] the remaining art that I previously purchased.
>
> I hereby enclose a check in the amount of $57,500 made out to Abbey Art which I understand should cover the expenses of the shipping, packing, warehousing, updated appraisals and any other expenses related to the gift of this art to FIU. I would appreciate an itemized list of these expenses once you have completed the delivery of the gift.

Mr. Williams signed the letter and included a check for $57,500.

In December 1999 Abbey arranged for appraisals of two different sets of art, and Mr. Williams introduced at trial the following appraisals, reciting the following fair market values:

Appraisal date	Appraiser	Value of art
December 3, 1999	Shari Cavin	$15,100
December 12, 1999	Jane Werner–Aye	235,425
Total		250,525

The record does not explain why the December 1999 appraisals both predate Mr. Williams's December 17, 1999, letter instructing Abbey to facilitate a donation for 1999. The record includes no evidence as to when Abbey first acquired the art appraised in late 1999.

On December 21, 1999, Mr. Williams signed a deed of gift reciting his donation of art appraised at $250,525 to the art museum at Florida International University, and a representative of the museum at the university signed the deed to certify receipt and acceptance of the donation on December 23, 1999.

Mr. Williams claimed a charitable contribution deduction for the following contributions for 1999:

Item	Amount
Gifts by cash or check	$3,874
Gifts other than by cash or check	250,825
Total	254,699

The non-cash charitable contribution for 2000 includes $300 for clothing that Mr. Williams reported donating to charity.

2000 contribution

With two separate checks, Mr. Williams paid Abbey $4,600 and $17,158 toward a 2000 contribution of art. Other than the already fulfilled December 1996 agreement, the record does not include any agreement pursuant to which Mr. Williams might have made these payments, and he does not allege that there was another written agreement.

11 In November 2000 Abbey arranged the appraisal of another set of art, and at trial Mr. Williams introduced the following appraisal, reciting the following fair market value:

Appraisal date	Appraiser	Value of art
November 16, 2000	Jane Werner–Aye	$98,900

Mr. Williams introduced a deed of gift reciting his gift of $98,900 of art to Drexel University in December 2000. His signature is dated December 15, 2000, and a representative of the university appears to have signed the document on December 24, 2000. The record includes no evidence as to when Abbey first acquired the art appraised in late 1999.

Mr. Williams claimed a deduction for the following charitable contributions for 2000:

Item	Amount
Gifts by cash or check	$1,135
Gifts other than by cash or check	102,825
Total	103,960

The non-cash charitable contributions for 2000 include $500 for clothing and $3,425 for a BMW automobile Mr. Williams reported donating to charity.

On December 9, 2000, Abbey sent Mr. Williams a letter that stated:

> I am writing to remind you that we still have art and antiquities held in a segregated manner in our warehouse located in New York City from 1997. We thank you for your recent $1,000 check for storage etc. Sometime in the first half of 2001 we will send you an itemized bill and a description of your objects which > remain. Based upon our last inventory we believe that you still have over $200,000 worth of appraised items.

>
> In the event you wish to gift objects in 2001, we would be pleased to work with you in this regard.

We find that Mr. Williams paid the following amounts and that his costs represent the following percentages of the appraised values of the art he donated:

Payment date	1997 gift	1999 gift	2000 gift	Percent of appraised value
12/10/1996	$3,600
12/26/1997	98,400
Total	102,000			23.96
12/21/1999		$57,500		22.95
03/17/2000			$4,600
Illegible			17,158
Total			21,758	22.00

Notice of deficiency

During Mr. Williams's incarceration, the IRS examined his returns for the years in issue. The IRS issued the notice of deficiency for 1993 through 2000 on October 29, 2007. The issues now before us for decision were addressed as follows in the notice of deficiency:

Unreported foreign income

The IRS determined that the amounts deposited into the ALQI accounts (not only the earnings on deposits and investments held at the Swiss bank but also the consulting fees paid for services rendered, net of allowable expenses) were includable taxable income to Mr. Williams during the year of deposit, that he failed to report that income on his returns, and that pursuant to section 6663, the civil fraud penalty applies to all of that omitted income. [13]

12 In the notice of deficiency, the IRS stated:

> The amount shown on your return as a deduction for charitable contributions is not allowable in full because it has not been established that the total amount was paid during the tax year or that the unallowable items met the requirements of Section 170 of the Internal Revenue Code. As a result, your contributions deduction is decreased in tax year 1997, 1999, and 2000.

The IRS disallowed the amounts shown below and determined accuracy-related penalties under section 6662 on the underpayments resulting from the disallowed charitable contribution deductions: [14]

Disallowed charitable contribution deductions

Year	Claimed	Allowed	Disallowed	Accuracy-related penalty
1997	$427,625	$104,150	$323,475	$25,619.20
1999	254,699	61,796	192,903	13,704.40
2000	103,960	26,818	77,142	4,320.00

Trial

At trial in Washington, D.C., on September 28, 2009, Mr. Williams testified, and he called as a witness Mr. Donald Williamson, the C.P .A. whom Mr. Williams's lawyers retained in 2002 to assist in the preparation of tax returns reporting Mr. Williams's ownership interest and income from ALQI. Mr. Williams did not call any representative from Abbey or anyone affiliated with ALQI or involved with his consulting activities, nor did he call the return preparer who prepared his original Federal income tax returns for 1993 through 2000.

OPINION

[1] [2] The Commissioner's deficiency determinations are generally presumed correct, and Mr. Williams, as the petitioner in this case, has the burden of establishing that the deficiencies determined in the notice of deficiency are erroneous. See Rule 142(a). Similarly, Mr. Williams bears the burden of proving he is entitled to any disallowed deductions that would reduce his deficiency. See INDOPCO, Inc. v. Commissioner, 503 U.S. 79, 84, 112 S.Ct. 1039, 117 L.Ed.2d 226 (1992). [15]

[3] [4] Conversely, the Commissioner has the burden of proof with respect to the issue of fraud with intent to evade tax, and that burden of proof must be carried by clear and convincing evidence. Sec. 7454(a); Rule 142(b). Section 6663(b) provides that a determination that any portion of an underpayment is attributable to fraud results in the entire underpayment's being treated as attributable to fraud, except any portion the taxpayer proves is not so attributable.

I. Consulting fee income

A. The parties' contentions

Mr. Williams contends that his amended returns properly report his income from the Swiss bank accounts he opened in 1993 and maintained throughout the years in issue. He maintains that he is liable for tax only on the investment earnings realized during those years on the amounts deposited and invested in the ALQI accounts; and he maintains that because he is liable for tax only on that omitted passive income, he is therefore liable for the civil fraud penalty only as to the deficiencies resulting from the omission of that passive income. Mr. Williams concedes that sections 951(a) and 954(c) require that he include in income each year the earnings on deposits and investments in the Swiss bank accounts.

13 The IRS agrees, of course, that the passive income earned on the ALQI accounts is taxable to Mr. Williams in each year earned. However, the IRS also contends that the consulting fee income—i.e., the corpus of the ALQI accounts—is taxable to Mr. Williams—because it was his income and not ALQI's, or, in the alternative, because of ALQI's status as a controlled foreign corporation. The IRS contends that even if the consulting income is properly attributable to ALQI, it is taxable to Mr. Williams pursuant to sections 951(a) and 954(c) because Mr. Williams was a related person to ALQI; that to the extent ALQI performed any services, ALQI performed those services "for or on behalf of" Mr. Williams as that concept is defined in 26 C.F.R. section 1.954–4(b)(1)(iv), Income Tax Regs.; and that but for Mr. Williams's substantial assistance, ALQI could not have performed any of those services.

Mr. Williams counters that he is not liable for tax on the consulting fees paid into the ALQI accounts until those amounts were distributed to him (which did not occur during the years in issue) because (1) ALQI is a legitimate corporation and ALQI provided the services, (2) the income from those services is not foreign base company services income under section 954(e), and (3) section 1.954–4(b)(1)(iv), Income Tax Regs., is invalid.

The IRS defends section 1.954–4(b)(1)(iv) as a valid interpretive regulation. As a result, the IRS contends that all the services income paid to ALQI during the years in issue is foreign base company services income and that income, net of allowable expenses, see supra note 5, is taxable to Mr. Williams in the year it was deposited into the ALQI accounts.

The IRS further contends that because Mr. Williams evaded tax both on the investment income earned on the ALQI deposits and on the services income deposited into the ALQI accounts during the years in issue, he is liable for civil fraud penalties on the entire underpayment resulting from the investment income and the services income he omitted in 1993 through 2000. As discussed, supra note 3, Mr. Williams's conviction estops him from denying his liability for civil fraud. This entire underpayment is deemed attributable to fraud and subject to the 75–percent penalty unless he proves some part of the underpayment is not attributable to fraud. See sec. 6663(a) and (b).

B. Discussion

We have found that the consulting fees deposited into ALQI's accounts were in fact the income of Mr. Williams, funneled through ALQI's bank accounts only in order to (unsuccessfully) evade tax. During his allocution for his guilty plea, Mr. Williams admitted that the purpose of opening the ALQI accounts "was to hold funds and income I received " and that "most of the funds deposited into the ALQI accounts and all the interest income were taxable to me ", [16] that he made this admission. (Emphasis added.) He had no employment contract with ALQI and reported no wages from ALQI; and the consulting clients did not have agreements with ALQI and did not even have any awareness of ALQI. Apart from his own general testimony, he presented no evidence that any client even knew that ALQI existed. The clients were Mr. Williams's clients, and their payments were for him.

14 It is apparently true that Mr. Williams and his banker directed his earnings to an ALQI account, but that fact does not excuse him from liability for tax on his earnings. His use of ALQI was, at most, an impermissible assignment of income. See Lucas v. Earl, 281 U.S. 111, 50 S.Ct. 241, 74 L.Ed. 731 (1930); Vercio v. Commissioner, 73 T.C. 1246, 1253, 1980 WL 3859 (1980) ("income must be taxed to the one that earns it").

[5] Mr. Williams resists this conclusion by arguing that the IRS has not established that ALQI was a sham, and by pointing out that the tax law respects the existence of corporations. See Moline Props., Inc. v. Commissioner, 319 U.S. 436, 63 S.Ct. 1132, 87 L.Ed. 1499 (1943). A corporation is by definition a fictitious legal person, but Mr. Williams is right that we honor this legal fiction. Thus, when a corporation enters into a contract and becomes entitled to compensation under the contract, we understand that it is the corporation (and not its owners or principals) that is the party to the contract and that is entitled to receive (and is obliged to pay tax on) the income generated by that contract.

[6] However, Mr. Williams misses the mark when he resists a "sham" contention that the IRS did not make and did not need to make. We assume that ALQI is a real corporation and would be the taxpayer responsible for any income that it earns. That assumption is unhelpful here to Mr. Williams, because ALQI simply did not earn the income at issue. The difficulty that Mr. Williams's position meets is not that ALQI is treated as a sham but that ALQI was not a party to the consulting agreements that produced the income. We would respect ALQI as a fictitious legal person, but we do not assume the existence of factually fictitious agreements between ALQI and Mr. Williams's clients. This is not an instance in which we sham a corporation, or invoke substance over form, in order to deem an individual taxpayer to be the actual recipient of money nominally earned by a corporation; rather, in this instance ALQI can be assumed to have its own valid, legal existence, but we are missing both the substance and the form of consulting agreements that involve ALQI. Mr. Williams earned consulting fees from his clients, and ALQI's only role was to be a conduit for Mr. Williams's earnings (to evade tax).

Mr. Williams's contention that Ms. Smekhova and his Swiss bankers also provided valuable services is misplaced. We assume that they provided assistance to Mr. Williams's consulting activity, but there is no evidence that they provided any services to Mr. Williams's clients, nor any evidence that ALQI contracted with the bankers or Ms. Smekhova to provide those services on ALQI's behalf. Mr. Williams provided all the consulting services to his clients, and he directed his clients to deposit his compensation into Swiss bank accounts that belonged to ALQI. The fact that Mr. Williams's business and personal expenses were paid out of these same Swiss bank accounts does not prove that his clients contracted with ALQI or that ALQI was anything other than the receptacle into which Mr. Williams diverted his consulting income. We therefore hold Mr. Williams liable for the consulting fee income deposited into the ALQI accounts.

15 That being the case, we need not reach the IRS's alternative argument—i.e., that even if the income was earned by ALQI, Mr. Williams owed tax on it pursuant to the controlled foreign corporation provisions of subchapter F of the Code. Resolving that alternative theory would require us to address issues (such as Mr. Williams's challenge to the validity of the regulation) that we need not reach in order to decide the case.

II. Civil fraud penalty

[7] Mr. Williams concedes that he is liable for tax on the ALQI investment income he omitted, and we have found that he is also liable for tax on the net services income. His conviction for tax evasion for 1993 through 2000 satisfies the IRS's burden of proving fraud and estops him from denying the fact that he committed tax fraud in those same years. Mr. Williams is liable for the civil fraud penalty except to the extent that he proves part of the underpayment was not attributable to fraud. See sec. 6663(a) and (b).

Mr. Williams has not shown that his failure to report any of the ALQI income was not attributable to fraud. Therefore, the civil fraud penalty applies to the entire underpayment related to his omitted consulting fee and investment income for each year from 1993 through 2000.

III. Charitable contribution deductions

A. The parties' contentions

Mr. Williams contends that he signed the art purchase agreement with Abbey in December 1996, that he obligated himself in that agreement (and oral agreements that preceded his signing the agreement) to purchase all the art he donated in 1997, 1999, and 2000, that Abbey segregated art appraised at approximately $800,000 in its warehouse in 1996 on the basis of the 1996 agreement, that he owned all of that art as of December 1996, and that he is entitled to charitable contribution deductions for the appraised values of the art as claimed on his 1997, 1999, and 2000 returns.

Mr. Williams further contends that his return preparer approved his deducting the appraised fair market values, provided that he held the art for more than 1 year and the art was properly appraised; and he argues that therefore, even if he is not entitled to the charitable contribution deductions in full, he is not liable for any accuracy-related penalties.

The IRS does not challenge the fact that Mr. Williams and Abbey signed the agreement, that Mr. Williams made the payments he alleges, that Abbey made the gifts on Mr. Williams's behalf, that the recipients of the gifts were qualified charities, that the appraisers' valuations were reasonable, or that Mr. Williams complied with the procedures for substantiating and reporting the charitable contribution deductions. However, the IRS contends that Mr. Williams did not own the specific art he donated for more than a year before the dates of his gifts of that art and that therefore section 170(e) limits Mr. Williams's donation to his basis in the art, rather than the fair market values of the art.

16 The IRS further contends that Mr. Williams is liable for accuracy-related penalties for the underpayments resulting from the disallowed portions of his charitable contribution deductions.

B. Statutory framework

Section 170(a)(1) generally allows a deduction for any charitable contribution made during the tax year, but the deduction is allowable only if the contribution is verified under regulations provided by the Secretary. A charitable contribution includes a contribution or gift to or for the use of a government organization for public purposes or to a charitable organization. Sec. 170(c).

Generally, the amount of the charitable contribution is the fair market value of the contributed property at the time of donation. 26 C.F.R. sec. 1.170A–1(a), (c)(1), Income Tax Regs.

In some situations involving the donation of appreciated property, the general rule for determining the amount of a charitable contribution is modified. Section 170(e)(1)(A) provides:

> SEC. 170(e). Certain Contributions of Ordinary Income and Capital Gain Property.—
>
> > (1) General rule.—The amount of any charitable contribution of property otherwise taken into account under this section shall be reduced by * * *
> >
> > (A) the amount of gain which would not have been long-term capital gain if the property contributed had been sold by the taxpayer at its fair market value (determined at the time of such contribution) * * *.

Thus, the effect of section 170(e)(1)(A) is to permit the deduction of long—term capital gain appreciation but, when the contributed property is not long-term capital gain property, to limit the deduction to the taxpayer's basis at the time of contribution. See Lary v. United States, 787 F.2d 1538, 1540 (11th Cir.1986).

Section 1221(a) defines capital assets, and the art at issue qualified as a capital asset in Mr. Williams's hands. Section 1222(3) defines long-term capital gain as “gain from the sale or exchange of a capital asset held for more than 1 year”. It follows that when a taxpayer donates appreciated art that he held for 1 year or less, the amount of the deduction must be determined with regard to section 170(e)(1)(A); i.e., the deduction is limited to the taxpayer's basis, rather than the art's (higher) fair market value.

C. Discussion

[8] As noted, the IRS challenges only Mr. Williams's claim that he owned the art for more than a year before the donation. Mr. Williams alleges that he committed to purchasing art from Abbey, and he argues that his holding period for the art began in December 1996 when he and Abbey executed the agreement.

[9] "Federal tax law is concerned with the economic substance of the transaction under scrutiny and not the form by which it is masked." United States v. Heller, 866 F.2d 1336, 1341 (11th Cir.1989). Accordingly, although the parties titled the agreement "Art Purchase Agreement", we will consider the rights, duties, and obligations the parties actually assumed when they executed the agreement—whatever its title.

17 The agreement clearly states that Mr. Williams paid $3,600 to Abbey and that Abbey would hold that amount in escrow to apply against the $72,000 purchase price. Paragraph 6 of the agreement discusses Abbey's rights in the event Mr. Williams failed to pay amounts owed to Abbey. If he failed to pay before he executed a bill of sale transferring art to a charity, the agreement provides (also in paragraph 6) that Abbey's sole remedy was "to retain as liquidated damages all previous payments Client has made toward the purchase of the Art and, in addition, to reclaim ownership of the Art." [17] The draft agreement originally provided that, in the event that Mr. Williams failed to pay Abbey after he executed documents transferring art to a charity, Abbey could require specific performance, i.e., payment. However, Mr. Williams crossed out that sentence, and Abbey thus accepted the agreement without any explicit right to force Mr. Williams's payment. [18]

Because Mr. Williams had the power unilaterally to decide whether to pay the remainder of the $72,000 purchase price and execute a bill of sale, in effect his $3,600 payment purchased an option to buy art—with the full option price applied to the price of the art.

[10] An option normally provides a person a right to sell or to purchase " 'at a fixed price within a limited period of time but imposes no obligation on the person to do so' ". See Elrod v. Commissioner, 87 T.C. 1046, 1067, 1986 WL 22052 (1986) (quoting Koch v. Commissioner, 67 T.C. at 82). "Options have been characterized as unilateral contracts because one party to the contract is obligated to perform, while the other party may decide whether or not to exercise his rights under the contract." Fed. Home Loan Mortg. Corp. v. Commissioner, 125 T.C. 248, 259, 2005 WL 3110640 (2005). Although the agreement placed no time restriction on Mr. Williams's right to purchase the art, it also imposed no binding commitment on him to follow through with the purchase.

[11] In contrast to an option agreement, "a contract of sale contains mutual and reciprocal obligations, the seller being obligated to sell and the purchaser being obligated to buy." Koch v. Commissioner, 67 T.C. at 82. The agreement at issue obligated Abbey to sell, but it did not obligate Mr. Williams to buy; thus, all he purchased in December 1996 was a contractual right to require Abbey to perform and to apply his $3,600 option payment against the $72,000 total purchase price recited in the agreement. Even without a time limit on Mr. Williams's right to require performance, in substance the agreement was an option to purchase art, regardless of the title the parties gave to their agreement.

Mr. Williams's holding period for the art he had the option either to buy or not to buy did not begin until he exercised the option, committed himself to paying for the art, and acquired a present interest in the art. See Crane v. Commissioner, 45 T.C. 397, 404, 1966 WL 1309 (1966), affd. 368 F.2d 800 (1st Cir.1966). In each instance, this occurred within less than a year of his donations.

18 Mr. Williams testified that oral discussions he had with Abbey before signing the agreement did obligate him to purchase roughly $800,000 of appraised art and that he intended that the initial commitment described in the agreement—$72,000 total payment to purchase art with roughly $300,000 of appraised value—would cover his 1997 donations, while he would pay additional amounts to donate the remaining art in subsequent years. He did not explain how any such oral agreement could have survived paragraph 12 of the agreement he and Abbey had executed, which stated that the agreement contains the entire agreement between him and Abbey. He also did not explain why Abbey would segregate $800,000 worth of art on the basis of his signing an agreement that required him to make a $3,600 deposit and pay the remainder of the $72,000 total purchase price if and only if he chose to proceed. Nor did he explain how an agreement for $300,000 of appraised-value art came to be an agreement for $800,000 of appraised-value art.

Mr. Williams testified that he asked Abbey to put together a collection of the kind of art he appreciated and that he believed Abbey had a large quantity of such art which Abbey would segregate and hold for his donation program. Although he claims that he believed that Abbey segregated almost $1 million of art in its warehouse someplace in New York City, he did not have and did not even profess actual personal knowledge of the timing of Abbey's acquisition of the art. He never requested or received an inventory of the items segregated on his behalf, and he never visited the warehouse to inspect the art purportedly purchased and set aside for his contribution program. [19]

Moreover, while it is clear from the age of the art listed in the appraisals that the pieces certainly existed long before their dates of donation, there is no evidence, aside from hearsay [20] and Mr. Williams's testimony, which is not competent on the point, that even Abbey owned any of this art before the dates of appraisals.

The evidence does not show that Mr. Williams owned the art as of the date of the initial agreement with Abbey in 1996 or at any other time earlier than a year before the donations. We find that Mr. Williams acquired a present interest in the art only when he agreed to pay Abbey for each batch of appraised art, and this occurred within less than a year of each donation. Thus, we agree with the IRS that because Mr. Williams owned the art for less than one year, he would not have been entitled to long-term capital gain treatment on any gain on the art if he had sold it, and therefore section 170(e)(1) limits his charitable contribution deduction to his basis in the art.

IV. Accuracy-related penalty

[12] The IRS determined that Mr. Williams is liable for accuracy-related penalties for the overstated charitable contribution deductions. The Commissioner bears the burden of producing sufficient evidence showing the imposition of a penalty is appropriate. Once the Commissioner meets this burden, the taxpayer must produce persuasive evidence that the Commissioner's determination is incorrect. Rule 142(a); Higbee v. Commissioner, 116 T.C. 438, 446–447, 2001 WL 617230 (2001).

A. Negligence

19 Section 6662(a) and (b)(1) imposes an accuracy-related penalty equal to 20 percent of the portion of an underpayment that is attributable to the taxpayer's negligence or disregard of rules or regulations. [21] Section 6662(c) provides that “the term ‘negligence’ includes any failure to make a reasonable attempt to comply with the provisions of this title, and the term ‘disregard’ includes any careless, reckless, or intentional disregard.” 26 C.F .R. section 1.6662–3(b)(1)(ii), Income Tax Regs., provides that negligence is strongly indicated where a “taxpayer fails to make a reasonable attempt to ascertain the correctness of a deduction, credit or exclusion on a return which would seem to a reasonable and prudent person to be ‘too good to be true’ under the circumstances”. Negligence connotes a lack of due care or a failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would do under the circumstances. See Allen v. Commissioner, 92 T.C. 1, 12, 1989 WL 147 (1989), affd. 925 F.2d 348 (9th Cir.1991). “[C]ourts have found that a taxpayer is negligent if he puts his faith in a scheme that, on its face, offers improbably high tax advantages, without obtaining an objective, independent opinion on its validity.” Barlow v. Commissioner, 301 F.3d 714, 723 (6th Cir.2002), affg. T.C. Memo.2000–339.

[13] Commencing a holding period for hundreds of thousands of dollars of art donated in 1997, 1999, and 2000 by making a modest deposit in 1996 on an agreement that allowed Mr. Williams unfettered flexibility to chose whether or not to actually buy and donate any art at all was too good to be true. This manufactured tax benefit was enough to alert a reasonable and prudent person that additional scrutiny was required. Mr. Williams did not seek independent advice to verify the propriety of his Abbey agreement or the validity of the anticipated tax benefits. Accordingly, the negligence penalty applies.

B. Defenses

A taxpayer who is otherwise liable for the accuracy-related penalty may avoid the liability if he successfully invokes one of three other provisions: Section 6662(d)(2)(B) provides that an understatement may be reduced, first, where the taxpayer had substantial authority for his treatment of any item giving rise to the understatement or, second, where the relevant facts affecting the item's treatment are adequately disclosed and the taxpayer had a reasonable basis for his treatment of that item. Third, section 6664(c)(1) provides that, if the taxpayer shows that there was reasonable cause for a portion of an underpayment and that he acted in good faith with respect to such portion, no accuracy-related penalty shall be imposed with respect to that portion. Whether the taxpayer acted with reasonable cause and in good faith depends on the pertinent facts and circumstances, including his efforts to assess his proper tax liability, his knowledge and experience, and the extent to which he relied on the advice of a tax professional. 26 C.F.R. sec. 1.6664–4(b)(1), Income Tax Regs.

1. Substantial authority

20 Mr. Williams did not claim that he relied upon substantial authority holding that an option to purchase art with guaranteed appreciation would commence his holding period.

2. Disclosure and reasonable basis for treatment

[14] The IRS does not dispute that Mr. Williams followed the procedural requirements for claiming the deductions for his charitable contribution deductions, and the IRS does not challenge the verification he provided with his returns. However, considering the contingent nature of Mr. Williams's obligation to purchase art from Abbey and the issue that raises about when he actually began to hold the art, we find that Mr. Williams's returns did not include sufficient facts to provide the IRS with actual or constructive knowledge of the potential controversy involved with Mr. Williams's deducting the entire appraised value of the art he donated. The adequate disclosure exception does not apply.

3. Reasonable cause and good faith

Where reasonable cause existed and the taxpayer acted in good faith, section 6664(c)(1) provides a defense to the section 6662 penalty. Generally, the most important factor is the extent of the taxpayer's effort to assess the proper tax liability. 26 C.F.R. sec. 1.6664–4(b)(1), Income Tax Regs.

[15] [16] For purposes of section 6664(c), a taxpayer may be able to demonstrate reasonable cause and good faith (and thereby escape the accuracy-related penalty of section 6662) by showing his reliance on professional advice. See sec. 1.6664–4(b)(1), Income Tax Regs. However, reliance on professional advice is not an absolute defense to the section 6662(a) penalty. Freytag v. Commissioner, 89 T.C. 849, 888, 1987 WL 45307 (1987), affd. 904 F.2d 1011 (5th Cir.1990), affd. 501 U.S. 868, 111 S.Ct. 2631, 115 L.Ed.2d 764 (1991). A taxpayer asserting reliance on professional advice must prove: (1) that his adviser was a competent professional with sufficient expertise to justify reliance; (2) that the taxpayer provided the adviser necessary and accurate information; and (3) that the taxpayer actually relied in good faith on the adviser's judgment. See Neonatology Associates, P.A. v. Commissioner, 115 T.C. 43, 99, 2000 WL 1048512 (2000), affd. 299 F.3d 221 (3d Cir.2002).

[17] Mr. Williams testified that his return preparer advised him that, given appropriate appraisals and a 1–year holding period, his charitable contribution deductions "shouldn't be an issue". The record includes no evidence on the return preparer's qualifications nor on what information Mr. Williams gave his return preparer in order to obtain his approval of the deduction. Mr. Williams did not testify whether he provided a copy of the agreement, explained to the preparer the contingent nature of his obligation to purchase, or admitted his lack of knowledge of whether Abbey actually owned the art more than a year before his contributions.

Mr. Williams testified that he believed Abbey's appraisals were legitimate, that the promised appreciation of the art resulted from Abbey's economies of scale from bulk purchases, and that his return preparer approved the deductions. We need not decide—though we doubt—whether Mr. Williams honestly held these beliefs; it is enough that he failed to demonstrate that he provided a competent tax professional all the information about his deal with Abbey and that he actually relied upon an objective professional's advice rather than his perception of the deal or Abbey's representation of the tax deductions it could manufacture for him.

21 The reasonable cause exception does not apply.

Mr. Williams is therefore liable for the accuracy-related penalty on the underpayments resulting from the disallowed charitable contribution deductions for 1997, 1999, and 2000.

V. Conclusion

Mr. Williams is liable for tax in each year on the investment income earned in the ALQI accounts because, as the parties have agreed, that income is foreign personal holding company income, pursuant to section 954(a)(1). He is also liable for tax in each year on the net consulting income paid into the ALQI accounts because that income was his own. Moreover, Mr. Williams is liable for the civil fraud penalty under section 6663(a) on the entire underpayment resulting from his unreported ALQI income (both investment income and consulting income) for each year in issue.

Mr. Williams is not entitled to charitable contribution deductions in excess of those the IRS allowed, and he is liable for the accuracy-related penalties under section 6662(a) and (b)(1) on the underpayments resulting from the disallowed charitable contribution deductions.

To reflect the foregoing,

An appropriate order and decision will be entered.

All Citations

T.C. Memo. 2011-89, 2011 WL 1518581, 101 T.C.M. (CCH) 1408, T.C.M. (RIA) 2011-089, 2011 RIA TC Memo 2011-089

Footnotes

[1] The record does not explain why the increased income reported on the amended return for 2000 was less than the earnings reported on the amended return. On this and subsequent tables, we do not correct discrepancies that apparently result from rounding.

[1] Unless otherwise indicated, all citations of sections refer to the Internal Revenue Code (Code, 26 U.S.C.) in effect for the years in issue, and all citations of Rules refer to the Tax Court Rules of Practice and Procedure.

[2] Although Mr. Williams and his wife filed joint Federal income tax returns for 1993 through 2000, the IRS determined that section 6015(c) applies to Meredith Williams and that she is not liable for the deficiencies determined for any of those years.

[3] In earlier opinions in this case, we held that this Court lacks jurisdiction to redetermine Mr. Williams's income tax liability for 2001, his liability for unassessed interest, and his liability for penalties for failing to file Forms TD F 90–22.1, Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBARs), Williams v. Commissioner, 131 T.C. 54, 2008 WL 4443057 (2008); and we held that Mr. Williams's conviction for tax evasion under section 7201 for 1993 through 2000 collaterally estops him for each of those years from denying that for each of these years there was an underpayment of his income tax attributable to civil fraud for purposes of the statute of limitations and the section 6663(a) fraud penalty, Williams v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo.2009–81.

[4] Credit Agricole Group acquired Banque Indosuez in 1996 and changed its name to Credit Agricole Indosuez. For convenience, we will refer to the bank Mr. Williams used in Switzerland as the Swiss bank.

[5] The parties stipulated that the deposits and earnings listed are “net of all expenses”. Mr. Williams does not allege deductible business expenses beyond any to which the parties stipulated. We accept the parties' stipulation (correcting errors of arithmetic) and refer to the net income or amounts deposited without analyzing any deductions to which the parties have agreed.

[6] The record does not reflect what ALQI income Mr. Williams reported on his 2001 return (services income, investment income, both, or neither). The 2001 tax year is not before us in this case. See supra note 3.

[7] The IRS disputes that the amended returns for 1999 and 2000 correctly reported the appropriate method of taxing ALQI's income.

[8] Mrs. Williams also signed the agreement. However, she is not a party to this case. See supra note 2.

[9] Paragraph 6 of the agreement included the following sentence, which was crossed out by hand and initialed:

> All payments owing by Client after Client's execution of the Bill of Sale shall be subject to Abbey's right to require specific performance of Client with respect to Clients [sic] obligation to pay Abbey the full balance

[10] The agreement recited a total purchase price of $72,000 and stated that the purchase price shall not exceed 24 percent of the cumulative appraised fair market value of the art. ($72,000/24 percent) = $300,000.

[11] The record does not show any basis for this “$800,000 plus” figure. The agreement between Abbey and Mr. Williams provided for art with a total value of $300,000.

[12] On the photocopy of the December 17, 1999, letter introduced into evidence, the last digit of the year Mr. Williams references is illegible, but we infer that he refers to 1997. of the purchase price.

13 The notice of deficiency appears to determine deficiencies relative to the original returns Mr. Williams filed for 1999 and 2000, not the amended returns he filed in 2003 for 1999 and 2000. We presume that the IRS is holding the payments made with Mr. Williams's amended 1999 and 2000 returns as advance payments against his liabilities—along with the $3,512,000 restitution payment.

Moreover, certain adjustments in the notice of deficiency result from mechanical application of limitations based on Mr. Williams's adjusted gross income for each year. These include a reduction in allowed exemptions for 1993 and limitations in itemized deductions. These adjustments are computational and do not require further analysis.

14 The amounts the IRS allowed include not only the amounts Mr. Williams paid for the art he donated through Abbey but also the amounts he claimed for other non-cash charitable contributions.

15 Under certain circumstances the burden of proof can shift to the Commissioner with respect to factual disputes, pursuant to section 7491(a). However, Mr. Williams does not contend that the burden has shifted, and the record does not suggest any basis for such a shift. For example, Mr. Williams has not demonstrated compliance with the requirements of section 7491(a)(2)—specifically, substantiating items and maintaining required records.

16 Respondent contends that Mr. Williams's guilty plea collaterally estops him from denying that the consulting income is taxable to him. However, we have held that, even after the application of collateral estoppel, “the amounts of the deficiencies of tax and penalties for 1993 through 2000, and the issue of accuracy-related penalties, remain for trial”, Williams v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo.2009–81, slip op. at 21 (emphasis in original), since that would require addressing subordinate issues as to which collateral estoppel does not clearly apply. We therefore treat Mr. Williams's allocution testimony not as something that estops his contentions but as evidence. It is, however, weighty evidence that he was not able to plausibly contradict at trial.

17 From the documents in the record acknowledging the charities' receipt of the art, it appears that Abbey delivered art on loan to charities to hold until Mr. Williams signed and Abbey delivered the bill of sale or deed of gift. Abbey appears to have processed the final paperwork only after receiving Mr. Williams's payments for the art.

18 Considering that Abbey controlled the paperwork, including the bill of sale or deed of gift, Abbey remained in a position to reclaim any art delivered on loan to a charity if Mr. Williams had defaulted on payment after Abbey delivered the art to a charity. But Mr. Williams was not obligated to proceed.

19 Mr. Williams also claimed that he believed the appraisals Abbey obtained were valid and accurate and that the 416–percent jump in value legitimately resulted from Abbey's purchasing the art oversees in third-world countries and in bulk. Abbey's guaranteed appreciation is suspect; and if the art is available at such deep discounts, the appraisals—purporting to represent prices a willing buyer and willing seller would negotiate—are also suspect. However, as the IRS is not challenging valuation, we need not decide these questions.

20 Mr. Williams introduced a December 9, 2000, letter from Abbey asserting that Abbey still had items “held in a segregated manner in our warehouse located in New York City from 1997”, promising to send a description of those remaining objects, and estimating the appraised value of the objects at over $200,000. If offered to prove the quoted fact, the letter is inadmissible hearsay, see Fed.R.Evid. 801(c), 802, and Mr. Williams did not offer into evidence any actual business records substantiating Abbey's holdings or any description of any segregated art, nor did he call any representative of Abbey to testify. Moreover, Mr. Williams did not reconcile Abbey's letter's reference to art segregated “from 1997” with his assertion that Abbey segregated all $800,000 of appraised-value art in 1996. We are entitled to infer from Mr. Williams's failure to offer evidence proving purchase in 1996 and segregation thereafter that probative evidence about the time of purchase and segregation would have been unfavorable to Mr. Williams's case. See Wichita Terminal Elevator Co. v. Commissioner, 6 T.C. 1158, 1165, 1946 WL 298 (1946), affd. 162 F.2d 513 (10th Cir.1947).

21 The accuracy-related penalty is also imposed on the portion of an underpayment attributable to a “substantial understatement of income tax.” Sec. 6662(b)(2). By definition, an understatement of income tax for an individual is substantial if it exceeds the greater of $5,000 or 10 percent of the tax required to be shown on the return. Sec. 6662(d)(1)(A).

The understatements of income tax resulting from the disallowed charitable contribution deductions and the amounts of tax required to be shown on the returns follow:

	1997	1999	2000
Understatement of tax attributable to overstated charitable contribution	$128,096	$68,522	$21,600
Tax required to be shown	1,537,542	366,424	252,159

Although each understatement exceeds $5,000, only the understatement for 1999 is greater than 10 percent of the tax required to be shown on the return, and thus there is a substantial understatement for 1999 only. We need address the substantial understatement accuracy-related penalty only to the extent we determine Mr. Williams is not liable for the negligence accuracy-related penalty under section 6662(b)(1).

End of Document